"If any person shall keep a dog without having in force a licence granted under this Act authorising him so to do, or shall keep a greater number of dogs than he shall be licenced to keep, he shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of £5."

Bernard Campion for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

DARLING, J.—In this case the respondent had been convicted of keeping a dog on Mar. 28, 1917, without a licence, and he was afterwards summoned for keeping the same dog on May 30, 1917, without a licence. On the hearing of the second summons the magistrates were of opinion that, as the respondent had already been convicted of keeping a dog without a licence for the year 1917, he could not again be convicted of the offence during the same year, and they dismissed the summons. The magistrates appear to have been misled by s. 33 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, which provides:

"Where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more Acts, or both under an Act and at common law, whether any such Act was passed before or after the commencement of this Act, the offender shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those Acts or at common law, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence."

The second summons was not an attempt to punish the respondent twice for the same offence. It is true that, if he had taken out a licence, it would have been good till Dec. 31, 1917, but he had no licence on Mar. 28 and equally he had no licence on May 30, and in each case the offence was keeping the dog without a licence on the particular day in respect of which he was summoned. The offence on May 30 was not the same offence as the offence on Mar. 28, though it was an offence of the same kind. They were two different offences. The fact that a person has been convicted of assaulting a man on Jan. 1 would be no defence to a summons for assaulting the same man on June 1, for the second offence is not the same as the first. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the Case remitted to the justices with direction to convict.

AVORY, J.—I am of the same opinion. The mistake of the magistrates was in thinking that the respondent had already been convicted of the same offence. He had not been convicted of the same offence. He had been convicted on Apr. 18 of keeping the dog on Mar. 28 without a licence. On June 6 he was charged with a different offence, namely, keeping the dog on May 30 without a licence, and there was no ground for saying that he had already been convicted of that offence.

SANKEY, J.—I agree. The justices made the mistake of thinking that a conviction is a licence.

Case remitted.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., for J. H. Goold, Chelmsford.

[Reported by J. F. WALKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A WATTS, WATTS & CO., LTD. v. MITSUI & CO., LTD.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Finlay, L.C., Earl Loreburn, Lord Dunedin, Lord Parker of Waddington and Lord Sumner), February 12, 13, 15, March 16, 1917]

B [Reported [1917] A.C. 227; 86 L.J.K.B. 873; 116 L.T. 353; 33 T.L.R. 262; 61 Sol. Jo. 382; 13 Asp. M.L.C. 580; 22 Com. Cas. 242]

Shipping—Charterparty—Exception clause—Restraint of princes—Need for restraint to be existing fact and not mere apprehension—Consideration of facts of each case—Failure to provide ship—Damages—Measure—Value of cargo at destination less cost to charterers and cost of insurance during voyage.

C To constitute a restraint of princes within an exceptions clause in a charterparty the restraint must be an existing fact and not a mere apprehension. But it has never been held that a ship must continue her voyage till physical force is actually exercised. The precise imminence of peril which would make the restraint a present fact as contrasted with a future fear cannot be fixed by definition. The circumstances of each particular case must be considered.

D The reasonable apprehension of a prudent man and the inutility of doing something which cannot lead to any good result are considerations material in deciding at what distance of time or over what area an existing restraint of princes may be deemed to be operative so as to restrain, but they are not restraints in themselves.

E By a charterparty dated June 5, 1914, charterers chartered a vessel from shipowners to proceed to M. in September, 1914, and there to load and carry to Japan a cargo of sulphate of ammonia which the charterers had bought. The charterparty excepted "arrests and restraints of princes." On Aug. 4, 1914, war broke out between Great Britain and Germany and the shipowners refused to provide a ship in accordance with the charterparty on the ground that there was reasonable apprehension that if they did so, the ship would be seized by the King's enemies. The charterers were, therefore, compelled to repudiate their contract with their sellers, and paid them £4,500 for so doing. In an action by the charterers against the shipowners for damages for breach of charter,

F Held: (i) the mere apprehension of seizure was insufficient to justify the shipowners' failure to supply a steamer; (ii) as damages for the breach of the charter the charterers were entitled to the value of the cargo at the port of destination at the date on which it would have arrived there if a ship had been supplied, less the price which would have been payable by the charterers to their sellers for the goods and the cost of insuring them against marine and war perils during the voyage, but not to the £4,500 paid to the sellers because of the repudiation of the contract of sale since that transaction was res inter alios acta and the damage was too remote.

H Decision of Court of Appeal, [1916] 2 K.B. 826, reversed.

I Notes. Considered: The Svorono (1917), 33 T.L.R. 415; Widnes Foundry (1925), Ltd. v. Cellulose Acetate Silk Co., [1931] 2 K.B. 393; Atlantic Maritime Co., Inc. v. Gibbon, [1953] 2 All E.R. 1086. Referred to: Russian Bank for Foreign Trade v. Excess Insurance Co., [1918] 2 K.B. 123; Monte Video Gas and Dry Dock Co. v. Clin Line Steamers, Ltd. (1921), 37 T.L.R. 866; Nissho Co. v. Livanos (1941), 57 T.L.R. 400.

As to the exception of restraints of princes and damages for failure to provide ship under a charterparty, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 319-322, 461, 462, 561-563; and for cases see 41 DIGEST 407 et seq., 450-452, 554-557.

Cases referred to:

(1) Radocanichi v. Milburn (1886), 18 Q.B.D. 67; 56 L.J.Q.B. 202; 56 L.T. 594; 35 W.R. 241; 3 T.L.R. 115; 6 Asp.M.L.C. 100, C.A.; 41 Digest 555, 3816.

- (2) Wall v. Rederiakt. Luggude, [1915] 3 K.B. 66; 84 L.J.K.B. 1663; 114 L.T. 286; 31 T.L.R. 487; 13 Asp.M.L.C. 271; 21 Com. Cas. 132; 41 Digest 348, 1971. A
- (3) Atkinson v. Ritchie (1809), 10 East, 530; 103 E.R. 877; 41 Digest 464, 2955.
- (4) Gicpel v. Smith (1872), L.R. 7 Q.B. 404; 41 L.J.Q.B. 153; 26 L.T. 361; 20 W.R. 332; 1 Asp.M.L.C. 268; 41 Digest 411, 2558.
- (5) Nobel's Explosives Co. v. Jenkins & Co., [1896] 2 Q.B. 326; 65 L.J.Q.B. 638; 75 L.T. 163; 12 T.L.R. 522; 8 Asp.M.L.C. 181; 1 Com. Cas. 436; 41 Digest 521, 3501. B
- (6) Robinson v. Harman (1848), 1 Exch. 850; 18 L.J.Ex. 202; 13 L.T.O.S. 141; 154 E.R. 363; 17 Digest (Repl.) 81, 33.
- (7) Hadley v. Barendale (1854), 9 Exch. 341; 23 L.J.Ex. 179; 23 L.T.O.S. 69; 18 Jur. 358; 2 W.R. 302; 2 C.L.R. 517; 156 E.R. 145; 17 Digest (Repl.) 91, 99. C
- (8) Ströms Bruks Aktie Bolag v. Hutchison, [1905] A.C. 515; 74 L.J.P.C. 130; 93 L.T. 562; 21 T.L.R. 718; 10 Asp.M.L.C. 138; 11 Com. Cas. 13, H.L.; 41 Digest 451, 2826.
- (9) Embiricos v. Sydney Reid & Co., [1914] 3 K.B. 45; 83 L.J.K.B. 1348; 111 L.T. 291; 30 T.L.R. 451; 12 Asp.M.L.C. 513; 19 Com. Cas. 263; 41 Digest 409, 2548. D
- (10) Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. New Garage and Motor Co., [1915] A.C. 79; 83 L.J.K.B. 1574; 111 L.T. 862; 30 T.L.R. 625, H.L.; 17 Digest (Repl.) 149, 491.

Appeal by the defendants from an order of the Court of Appeal.

The facts and arguments appear from their Lordships' opinions. E

Leck, K.C., and Raeburn for the appellants.

Greer, K.C., and R. A. Wright for the respondents.

The House took time for consideration.

Mar. 16, 1917. The following opinions were read.

LORD FINLAY, L.C.—The appellants are shipowners who entered into a charterparty dated June 5, 1914, with the respondents, the charterers, by which it was provided that a steamer, the name of which was to be declared, should proceed to Mariopol on the Sea of Azov, and having there taken on board a cargo of sulphate of ammonia should carry it to Japan for delivery there. By cl. 7 the charterers had the option of cancelling the charter if the vessel was not ready to load by Sept. 20, 1914. By cl. 12 there was an exception for the arrests and restraints of princes. Clause 13 was as follows: F

"Penalty for non-performance of this agreement proved damages not exceeding the estimated amount of freight."

The respondents had, in April, 1914, purchased from the Coppee company in Russia 3,500 tons of sulphate of ammonia, and if the steamship had arrived the goods so purchased would have been shipped by it for Japan. At the beginning of August war broke out between Germany and Great Britain, Russia, and France. Turkey did not enter into the war until November, 1914. On Sept. 1 the respondents through their brokers requested that the name of the steamer should be declared. On the same day the appellants replied that the charterparty must be considered cancelled. The reason given was that the British government had prohibited steamers from going into the Black Sea to load, but in fact there had been no such prohibition. The Dardanelles were closed to navigation after sunset on Sept. 26. G

The action was brought by the charterers for damages for not providing a steamer according to the charterparty. The defence was that on the reasonable apprehension of Turkey becoming involved in the European war, and of the Dardanelles being thereupon closed, the shipowners were justified by reason of the exception of arrests and restraints of princes in not sending a vessel to load. The action was H

I

- A tried by BAILHACHE, J., in the Commercial Court. He decided: (i) That there was no justification for the breach. (ii) That even if the steamship had arrived by the cancelling date (Sept. 20) she could not have loaded and got to the Dardanelles before they were closed. (iii) That if the steamship had been provided at Mariopol the charterers could have insured the goods for Japan, and that they had lost the chance of doing so owing to the shipowners' default. (iv) That, no other charter-party being procurable, the charterers were entitled to £3,800, being the amount of profit which they would have insured on the voyage to Japan. The learned judge arrived at this amount by taking the difference between the price at which the charterers had purchased the goods under the contract of April, 1914, and the market price in Japan in November, 1914, the date at which the goods might have been expected to arrive, but by a lapse no allowance was made for the premium which the respondents would have had to pay on the insurance. A claim for £4,500 which the charterers had paid to their sellers (the Coppee company) to have their contract of purchase cancelled was disallowed as being too remote. Both sides appealed to the Court of Appeal; the shipowners on the ground that they ought to have been held not liable, and the charterers on the ground that they ought to have been allowed the sum of £4,500 which they had paid to their sellers. The Court of Appeal disallowed the claim for £4,500, agreeing in this with BAILHACHE, J., and, while holding the shipowners liable in damages, varied the order of BAILHACHE, J., by directing a reference to ascertain the amount of the damages, declaring that the measure of damages was the difference between the price which the goods would have realised if they had been sold in Japan at the end of November, 1914, and the cost price of the goods at the port of loading at the current price at the nearest available date to Sept. 10, 1914, in addition to freight, insurance premiums for war risks, and brokerage. The effect of the decision of the Court of Appeal was that while the damages would be reduced by the allowance for the amount of the premium, they might have been largely increased if it proved to be the case that the cost price at Mariopol at the time of the breach was less than the price under the contract of April, 1914. The shipowners appealed to this House; there was no cross-appeal in respect of the £4,500 disallowed by both courts below.

In my opinion, the contention of the appellants that they could justify the failure to provide a steamship on the ground of the exception for restraint of princes was not made good. There was not, in fact, any restraint of princes to prevent the passage of the steamship through the Dardanelles and to Mariopol until the closing of the Dardanelles on the evening of Sept. 26. On Sept. 1, 1914, there was a reasonable apprehension that the Dardanelles might be closed, but such an apprehension does not constitute a restraint of princes. To bring the case within the exception there must be an actual restraint in existence, and in the present case there was nothing to prevent the steamship from passing the Dardanelles and arriving at the port of loading by the cancelling date (Sept. 20). It is quite true that her going there, so far as the actual voyage to Japan was concerned, would have been useless, as the Dardanelles were closed before she could have got out, but if the vessel had arrived at Mariopol the charterers might have insured against war risks. I confess I have some doubt whether the respondents might not have abandoned the adventure instead of having to insure at a heavy premium, but having regard to what passed at the trial, as stated to us by counsel on both sides, I think we must deal with the case on the footing that the insurance against war risks would have been effected. The only controversy between the parties on this point appears to have been whether such an insurance was practicable. It was proved by the one witness called that the insurance could have been effected. There was no contradiction, and I think that the courts below were right in holding that the loss of insurance may be recovered. I do not think that the opportunity of effecting an insurance can be regarded as too remote to constitute an element of damage.

As regards the amount of the damages, the basis adopted by BAILHACHE, J.—correcting, of course, the mistake as to the non-allowance of the premium—was, in my opinion, correct. It was strenuously argued by the respondents that as the £4,500 paid by the respondents to their sellers had been disallowed as too remote, the contract of April must be disregarded for all purposes, and the loss ascertained on the difference between the market price at the port of loading at the date of the breach, and what would have been the market price in Japan on arrival. It would follow, on the assumption that the cost price at Mariopol had fallen by the time of the breach to a point below the price under the contract of April, that the damages recoverable would be correspondingly increased. In my opinion, the respondents' contention on this point fails. It is quite clear and indeed was not disputed that if the steamship had arrived at Mariopol the sulphate of ammonia which the respondents had contracted to purchase under the contract of April would have been the goods shipped, and this, of course, involved taking delivery of these goods, and paying for them to the seller. If the respondents having so shipped the goods had started the steamship upon a voyage to Japan insuring against war risks the adventure would have been frustrated by the closing of the Dardanelles, and this should have constituted a constructive total loss. The respondents would have recovered on the insurance the value of the goods as at the time of their expected arrival in Japan, but they would ex hypothesi have had to pay the price for the goods under the contract of April, and the difference between these two amounts would have represented their profit after deduction of premium, &c. This seems to me to exclude any inquiry as to a possible lower market value at Mariopol at the time of the breach.

Rodocanachi v. Milburn (1) has, in my opinion, no application. That was a case in which the goods had been lost on the voyage by the fault of the ship, and it was held that the damages could not be reduced by reference to a contract for sale at a price below the market price at the date when they ought to have been delivered. The claim of the respondents to enhance the damages by reference to a supposed fall in the market at Mariopol at the time of the breach appears to me also to fall upon another ground. There was no evidence that there was any market at Mariopol for such goods, or that they could be obtained from any person, other than the Coppee company (the respondents' vendors), and there is no evidence of any fall in the cost price of such goods at the time of the breach. It is indeed probable that the price may have fallen after exit from the Black Sea had been barred by the closing of the Dardanelles on Sept. 26. The Court of Appeal ought not, in my opinion, to have directed an inquiry as to damages on a basis for which no foundation had been laid by the evidence at the trial. I agree with the construction put in the courts below on cl. 13—the penalty clause. If this clause had appeared for the first time, I think it might have been construed as imposing a limitation on the damages to be recovered, but the penalty clause is an old one with a settled meaning, and the intention, if it existed, to make so fundamental a change in its effect as is suggested ought to have been much more clearly shown in order to bind the other party to the contract. In my opinion, the judgments of BAILHACHE, J., in the present and in Wall v. Rederiaktiebolaget Luggude (2) on this point were right. In my opinion the respondents are entitled to £3,800, less the cost of insurance, &c. BAILHACHE, J., took the premium to be 6 per cent., and on this basis the amount will be £800. I think that the respondents should have costs in the Commercial Court and in the Court of Appeal, but that there should be no costs of the appeal to this House. I am authorised to say that LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON concurs in the opinion I have just read.

EARL LOREBURN.—I need not recapitulate the facts of this case. In my opinion there was no restraint of princes on Sept. 1 when the shipowners declared their intention of not carrying out their contract. There was an available force at hand in the Dardanelles, and if the situation had been so menacing that a man of sound judgment would think it foolhardiness to proceed with the voyage I should have regarded that as in fact a restraint of princes. It is true that mere apprehension will not suffice, but on the other hand it has never been held that a ship

A must continue her voyage till physical force is actually exercised. I agree, however, with LORD DUNEDIN's expression that "It would be useless to try and fix by definition the precise imminence of peril which would make the restraint a present fact as contrasted with a future fear."

B No form of words is likely to cover automatically all contingencies. In the present case the lists of ships that went through the Dardanelles to and fro during the material days, which were furnished to us during the argument, though not printed in the book, show that there was no restraint of princes when the voyage was abandoned. I cannot agree with the learned counsel for the appellants that we are to judge merely by the event. The decision must be made at the time by those concerned.

C If this be so, the sole remaining question relates to the measure of damages. What the plaintiffs claim was the sum they had to pay as compensation to the sellers of the cargo which they had bought in order to load it on the ship, but were disabled from loading because the defendants failed to provide the ship. Now this would not be the measure of damage in the absence of any notice to the shipowner. It is unnecessary to quote authority for this familiar rule. After the case had been heard on this footing the learned judge allowed an adjournment to hear evidence on another footing altogether. The plaintiffs then argued that if this ship had entered the Black Sea and reached the port of loading on Sept. 20 (the last day allowable under the contract and the earliest day on which she could have arrived) they could have loaded her with the cargo intended. They also said that they could and would have insured the cargo against war risks, and that, though she would have been captured by the Turks on her way down through the Dardanelles, they would have recovered from the underwriters. The evidence on this case was very meagre, and indeed unsatisfactory, but it was uncontradicted. We are therefore bound to take it that this cargo could and would have been insured against war risks at a premium of 6 per cent. They would have done so, F we must assume, because a sensible man of business would so act, and they were deprived of their opportunity of so doing. In these circumstances I think it is legitimate to recognise this as an element in damages. A man of business in such a position would naturally load the cargo and insure against war risks if he could, even if the premium swallowed up nearly all the profits of his voyage, because he would thereby be free from any liability which might fall upon him for not himself taking delivery from his sellers, or if he himself had already taken delivery he would not be left with the goods on his hands in a port to which access might soon be made impossible by war. In short, I think the charterers are entitled to say to the shipowners: "You broke your contract in not sending your ship to the port of loading. If you had sent her we could have loaded her with a cargo which we had ready. True, it would never have reached its destination by reason of the war, but we should have insured against war risks, as any practical man would do, and we could have done so at 6 per cent premium. Pay us what we have lost by your default. It is the avowed value at port of destination, less the actual price we paid at port of loading and the expenses, and less also the premium we had to pay for insuring against war risks." That sum leaves £800 as the damages.

I LORD DUNEDIN.—In terms of the contract contained in the charterparty of June 5, 1914, the appellants were bound to send a steamer to Mariopol, on the Sea of Azov, not to arrive before Sept. 1 and the contract cancellable if it arrived after Sept. 20, 1914, to receive a cargo of 3,500 tons of sulphate of ammonia to be carried to Japan via the Suez Canal. On Sept. 1, 1914, the appellants informed the respondents that they considered the contract as cancelled. On the 2nd the respondents in a letter to the appellants refused to accept that proposition and called on them to proceed with the contract and give the name of the steamer which they proposed to send to Mariopol. The appellants persisted in their attitude, and no steamer was sent. The present action is to recover damages for this alleged breach of contract.

The first question that arises is whether there was a breach of contract. The non-fulfilment is admitted, but the appellants say that under the circumstances that is excused under one of the exceptions in the charterparty-- namely, restraint of princes. On Aug. 1, 1914, Germany had declared war against Russia and had begun hostile action against France, and on the night of the 4th Great Britain declared war against Germany. There was, however, at this time no activity on Germany's part in the Black Sea or in the passage from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean, or in the Levant. Turkey was a neutral. Restraint of princes, to fall within the words of the exception, must be an existing fact and not a mere apprehension. This was held long ago by LORD ELLENBOROUGH in Atkinson v. Ritchie (3). The more recent cases cited by the appellants, such as Giepel v. Smith (4) and Nobel's Explosives Co. v. Jenkins & Co. (5) do not in any way touch that proposition. They only show that it may be possible to invoke the exception when a reasonable man in face of an existing restraint may consider that the restraint, though it does not affect him at the moment, will do so if he continue the adventure. It would be useless to try to fix by definition the precise imminence of peril which would make the restraint a present fact as contrasted with a future fear. The circumstances in each particular case must be considered. In the present case, while there was natural and great apprehension on Sept. 1, and while the decision of the British government immediately after to exclude Black Sea voyages from the benefits of the government insurance scheme might well deter British subjects from sending their ships to the Black Sea, yet it is clearly proved by the production of lists of ships which after that date, and up to Sept. 26, passed inwards and outwards through the Dardanelles that there was no such restraint as would have actually prevented the appellants presenting a ship at Mariopol before or by the appointed date of Sept. 20. I agree on this matter with the conclusion arrived at by the Courts below.

Breach of contract being ascertained, damages are due. What happened subsequently, so far as material, was as follows. The respondents attempted, but without success, to secure another ship at Mariopol. On Sept. 26 the Dardanelles were finally closed and have never been open since. On Nov. 5 Great Britain declared war against Turkey. The respondents had by a contract of date Apr. 23, 1914, secured a cargo of sulphate of ammonia from a company, Coppee Co., Ltd., registered in England but trading in Russia at Mariopol. Under the contract the sulphate was to be accepted by the buyers not later than the end of October, but the respondents asked and obtained a prolongation of the period to the end of November. In November the respondents, who had been sounding the Coppee company as to terms for cancelling the contract, finally intimated that they did not propose to accept delivery. A lengthened correspondence ensued as to what damages were to be paid, and the matter was finally settled in July, 1915, upon the respondents paying the Coppee company £4,500 with certain costs of an inchoate arbitration.

The respondents in the case as raised set forth the breach of contract by the appellants and their own consequent inability to accept delivery of the sulphate, and claimed as damages the said sum of £4,500, together with such a sum as would represent their loss of profit on the venture, said loss to be arrived at by taking the difference between what the sulphate would have fetched if sold in Japan in November, and the sum they would have had to pay for it at Mariopol under the contract. They went to trial, and the respondents contented themselves with proving the charterparty, the failure of the appellants to send a ship, and their own inability to procure another ship, the facts as to the contract and the payment they had made to the Coppee company, and the facts as to the position at the Dardanelles and the Black Sea in August and September. The evidence of the appellants was directed to the sole point of showing that there was such danger as at Sept. 1 as justified them in refusing to send a ship. The evidence

- A being closed and counsel having addressed the court, the learned judge seems to have expressed an opinion that the restraint of princes was not, in his view, made out in fact, and that in law the liability of the respondents to the seller under the contract was as regards the appellants res inter alios acta and too remote to be taken as the measure of damages as against them. He also seems to have indicated that in his view, the Dardanelles having been finally shut on Sept. 26,
- B the voyage could not have been made at all, as the ship, even if sent by the due date, could not after loading have re-passed the Dardanelles. At the same time he indicated that it might have been possible for the respondents, if the ship had been at Mariopol, to have insured the cargo for safe arrival, and in so doing to have valued the goods at arrival value in Japan. He, accordingly, without amendment of the pleadings, allowed a continuation of the cause to a future day for further
- C evidence on that point. This evidence was subsequently led, and thereafter the learned judge gave his judgment. He found first, as already stated, as to the restraint of princes; second, as a fact that, the Dardanelles having been finally closed on Sept. 26, the ship, even if sent, could not have made out the voyage; and third, as a mixed question of fact and law, that the respondents, had the ship been duly sent to Mariopol, could and would as reasonable men have effected an
- D insurance against loss, including war risks, on the arrived value of the goods in Japan. On this third finding he repeated his view as to the payment under the contract between the respondents and the Russian sellers not being the measure of damages as against the appellants; but he found due as damages the sum of £3,800, being the difference between the proved value of the cargo as it would have sold in Japan, which he assumed covered by insurance, and the sum payable
- E for the sulphate of ammonia if the respondents had shipped the intended cargo, which would have given them an insurable subject. Both parties appealed to the Court of Appeal. The learned judges there affirmed all the findings of the trial judge in fact and law, but on the third finding they came to a different conclusion. While affirming the view that the damages paid under the contract could not be
- F taken as the measure between the respondents and appellants, they decided that the proper way of arriving at the damage was to take the arrived value of the goods, which, like the trial judge, they held could be covered by insurance, and then to find the loss which the respondents suffered by comparing that sum with the cost of buying a cargo at Mariopol on or about Sept. 10, 1914, plus freight, insurance premium for war risk, and brokerage. They referred it to the official referee to determine this sum.
- G The general rules for assessment of damages for breach of contract have been often stated, but nowhere more succinctly than by PARKE, B., in Robinson v. Harman (6) (1 Exch. at p. 855):

"Where a party sustains a loss by reason of a breach of contract he is so far as money can do it, to be placed in the same situation with respect to damages as if the contract had been performed."

- H The matter was further elucidated in Hadley v. Baxendale (7). What would have been the position of the respondents if the ship had been duly sent to Mariopol? They would have been able to ship their cargo. But what then? Once it is found as a fact that the final closing of the Dardanelles on the 26th would have prevented the ship after loading from reaching the Mediterranean it is obvious that the
- I intended voyage could not have been performed. The appellants argued that, that being so, damages should be merely nominal, the true cause of the failure of the adventure being, not their breach of contract, but the facts of war. I agree with the learned judges in the courts below that that does not conclude the matter, but that one must next inquire what would a reasonable man have done in the supposed position. As a matter of ordinary common sense he would have insured his cargo against sea and war risks, and the possibility of so doing was, I think, rightly affirmed by the trial judge upon the evidence led. The result arrived at by him after this seems to me right, subject to correction of what is an obvious inadvertence—though it must be admitted an inadvertence which makes a great difference in the pecuniary result. I refer to the omission to deduct from the sum receivable under the insurance the amount of the insurance premium. This premium has been proved—not very satisfactorily, but I think sufficiently—to be calculable at 6 per cent.

This method of assessing the damage was, as already stated, altered by the Court of Appeal. I am not satisfied that the view taken by the learned judges of the Court of Appeal is correct. The respondents' counsel sought to support it by citing Rodocanachi v. Milburn (1), a case which, although not binding on your Lordships, was, I apprehend, rightly decided, and is indeed in consonance with the case in this House of Ströms Bruks Aktie Bolag v. Hutchison (8). In that case the plaintiffs chartered a ship to bring cotton from Alexandria to the United Kingdom. The goods were lost by the fault of the shipowner. It was held that the damages due to the plaintiffs were the value of the goods at market price in the United Kingdom at the date at which the goods ought to have arrived, and that it made no difference that the plaintiffs had sold the goods "to arrive" at a figure less than that market price. It does not appear to me that the present case is in the same position. In that case the plaintiff, owing to the breach of contract, was actually left without his goods, and he was therefore entitled to be presented with the sum which it would have cost him to get other goods of the same quality and quantity. Whether, having the goods, he sold them to someone else at a profit or a loss was a matter with which the shipowner had no concern, and the fact of the sale being antecedent to the possession made no difference. In this case the respondents were not without goods; they had no ship to put them in owing to the breach of contract. But the failure of the venture was due, not to the breach of the contract, but to the war. In order to estimate the damage an ideal situation has to be created—namely, the idea that the respondents having got the ship would have insured the arrival of the goods in Japan against all risks, and the respondents are given credit for the arrived value of the cargo intended to be shipped. But then I think we must take the ideal situation as it would have existed in fact; that they would have shipped the cargo they intended to ship—that is to say, the sulphate of ammonia acquired under the contract; and that, therefore, their only real loss is the difference between the price they would actually have had to pay for the cargo and the arrived value of the cargo under deduction of the insurance premiums. Taking it the other way, and assuming there had been a fall in the market, then, inasmuch as the venture was, in truth, frustrated not by the breach of contract but by the war, you really come to throw on the back of the shipowner the loss in value of the goods which was truly due to the war.

Besides this there is, in my view, something else which ought to prevent judgment passing in terms of the order of the Court of Appeal. The respondents here entered court with a claim based entirely on their own payment to the Russian seller, and they made no other case. After the case was really concluded the learned judge intimated that he could not accept their view, and indicating the point as to insurance he allowed an adjournment for further evidence. The respondents had then the opportunity of making out any case they could as to insurance. They did so by proving the possibility of insuring against war risks at a premium of 6 per cent. up to at least the middle of September, and by proving what would have been the selling value of sulphate of ammonia in Japan in November. They proved nothing as to the state of the market at Mariopol in mid-September, nor indicated in any way that the price would have been less than the price they had agreed to pay under the contract. It is true that there are some references to the market for sulphate of ammonia having fallen, but they are of the most vague description. They are not the subject of direct testimony, but are all, such as they are, contained in the negotiations in correspondence between the respondents and the Coppee company as to the amount of damages to be charged against the respondents for having broken the contract of sale.

A correspondence which, strictly speaking, is not evidence at all in regard to statements made in it as against the appellants.

The earliest and, indeed, the only reference which is at all direct is in a letter of Sept. 17 from the Coppee company to the respondents, in which, with reference to a verbal communication made by the respondents that they were not ready to accept delivery of the sulphate, and would like to know what would be the terms for cancellation, the Coppee company point out that the sulphate is all lying ready to be delivered, and that if it is not taken at the stipulated time they will have to arrange either to build or to hire a store in order to prevent deterioration of the sulphate during the cold weather. They add: "In addition the market price has diminished, and we should have to take into consideration the probability whether the price would further diminish during the period the sulphate is in store." That means, of course, till the spring. On Nov. 6 they write again: "We went into the question of the fall of price in sulphate, and so far as we are able to estimate any future loss in this respect and for the storage," &c. Actual figures are not approached till January, 1915, when the fall in price is quoted at £2 3s. 9d. per ton. But by this time the war with Turkey was well established and the Black Sea was absolutely sealed for exit to the Mediterranean. It is obvious that the price at that time reflects no light on the price in mid-September, 1914, at a time when both in fact and ex hypothesi of the present calculation the sea was still open and a voyage from Mariopol to Japan was insurable. This exhausts the references to be found in their correspondence. There is one piece of direct testimony given by the respondents' own manager which, so far as it goes, tends the other way. He says that in July, 1915, it was rumoured that the price of sulphate in Russia was very high. He also says that there is no market price for sulphate of ammonia in Russia, except the prices advertised by Coppee & Co. There is not a shred of evidence that Coppee & Co. would have supplied sulphate in mid-September at a reduced price. This being so, it seems to me that there is no justification for allowing a new and fresh inquiry to make a new case. I am aware that the Commercial Court is not bound by the stricter rules of pleading which obtain in the ordinary courts. But I cannot think it would be right at this time to start a new case as has been done by the Court of Appeal in the order complained of. The respondents have already had two cases adjudicated. It is not right, in my opinion, that they should now be allowed to embark on a third without having proved the fact which forms the foundation of it, basing the hope on the strength of casual references in a correspondence with other parties that something may turn up which will allow of a larger computation of the damages due.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the appeal should be allowed and that the respondent should be found entitled to the sum of £800, being the sum allowed by BAILHACHE, J., minus the premium calculated at 6 per cent. This view makes the discussion as to the limitation of liability under the penalty clause of no practical importance. But I wish to say that, had it been necessary to decide the point, I should have only wished to express my approval of the admirable judgment of BAILHACHE, J., in Wall v. Rederiaktiebolaget Luggude (2).

LORD SUMNER.—Restraint of princes is, I think, no excuse for the appellants' breach of charterparty in not sending a steamer to load at Mariopol. No such restraint even existed, still less operated to restrain them, when they intimated their intention of not sending any steamer, or at any time thereafter till the Dardanelles were closed on Sept. 26, 1914. They do not so contend, nor that the ambiguous and arbitrary conduct of the Porte before that date amounted to restraint. The words "restraint of princes" do not, in my opinion, extend to the apprehension of restraint. Such is neither the meaning of the words nor the sense of the clause. No decided case has gone so far, and the language of LORD ELLENBOROUGH in Alkinson v. Ritchie (3) is authority to the contrary, though, as the ship there could have loaded a full cargo before any embargo was imposed, the case on the facts is distinguishable. The exceptions clause contemplates matters which cause a breach or prevent performance of the charter. The reasonable apprehension of a prudent man and the inutility of doing something which cannot lead to any good result are considerations material in deciding at what distance of time or over what area an existing restraint of princes may be deemed to be operative so as to restrain, but restraints in themselves they are not. The appellants admit that apprehension alone will not suffice, and say that the shipowner must take the risk of his fears being justified by the event. This argument converts a provision stipulating the effects of the operation of certain clauses into a speculation upon the chances of their coming into operation. To some of the excepted matters—for example, fire, explosions, or collisions—such a contention is obviously unfitted. In any case its application would lead to the interpolation of a period of suspense during which neither party could be certain of his rights until the course of events determined the speculation in one way or the other. As SCRUTTON, J., well observes in Embiricos v. Sidney Reid & Co. (9) ([1914] 3 K.B. at p. 54):

“Commercial men must not be asked to wait till the end of a long delay to find out from what in fact happens whether they are bound by a contract or not.”

Such a construction would unsettle the foundation of the contract as a matter of business, which is that the ship shall proceed upon a named voyage, unless prevented by named causes. Here, as the facts stood, the shipowners, by refusing to send a ship to Mariopol, evinced such an intention not to perform their bargain as justified the charterers in treating it as an offer of repudiation and in accepting it as such.

I have no doubt that cl. 13 is a penalty clause and immaterial in the present case. To read it otherwise is to ignore the first word “penalty”. True the use of that word is not decisive; but it is not impossible to read the residue of the clause as defining a mode of calculating a mere penal sum, and to read it as a limitation of the right to recover proved damages seems to me to produce an absurd result in business. Whatever the value of the cargo or the extent of the injury to it, the shipowner’s liability in respect of it would be limited to the estimated amount of the freight, however that estimate is to be made. If the cargo owner is uninsured, he stands to lose large sums for the ship’s default. If he is insured he upsets the ordinary course of insurance business by depriving his underwriter of a valuable right of recourse and must suffer for this in one way or another. Nothing could be less like a “genuine covenanted pre-estimate of damage”: Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. New Garage and Motor Co. (10) [1915] A.C. at p. 86, per LORD DUNEDIN. The whole matter has been fully and, if I may say so, admirably discussed by BAILHACHE, J., in the recent case of Wall v. Rederikttiebolaget Luggude (2). Your Lordships decided the point in Ströms Bruks Aktie Bolag v. Hutchison (8) upon a somewhat similar clause, and I think that the present case cannot really be distinguished. My only difficulty is to understand why such a provision should be inserted at all.

I should be loth to hold that, if insurance of the war risk was feasible, proof that the charterers would have insured it was really needed. As is admitted, to insure the cargo against marine risks would be the ordinary thing to do, and it would have been obviously imprudent in a merchant to stand his own insurer of the war risk of such an adventure. I should have thought it would be within the legitimate inferences of fact to be drawn from the known circumstances of this case to find that a war-risk policy would be effected, but, as it is, the point need not be decided. What passed between the solicitors to the parties before the adjourned hearing in effect dispensed the plaintiffs from calling any witness on the point, almost formal as that witness would have been. The evidence called was very brief, but it sufficiently supports a finding that the whole line would have been covered. If so, no further inquiry on the point is needed. In effect, the breach of

A charterparty caused the plaintiffs to lose the chance of shipping and dispatching an insured cargo and of recovering on the policy when the cargo was lost, as it would have been actually and constructively, in consequence of the outbreak of war with Turkey. The legal presumption must be that the amount to be insured would be such as would indemnify the plaintiffs for their actual loss and pecuniary damage. This will accordingly eliminate the factor of war and bring the case within the ordinary rules as to damages for breach of contracts of carriage by sea.

B On the measure of damages a point of considerable nicety was discussed, but, in my opinion, it is not really raised by the evidence. The principle of measuring damages for breach of a contract for the sale of merchandise by a ruling market price at a given date is not always equally applicable to contracts of charterparty. Nor do I think that the canon expressed by LORD DAVEY in Ströms Bruks Aktie Bolag v. Hutchison (8) is in point in the present case. There the charterers were themselves producers of the intended cargo, and could have loaded the ship from their own factory if she had arrived to load. Their claim arose because the shipowner's breach of contract prevented them from delivering the cargo at the port of discharge as they had contracted to do. Naturally, in measuring their loss, the cost of replacing it was a factor to be compared with the value of an equivalent quantity never shipped at all. In the present case there is no evidence that there was any market or even any market price for sulphate of ammonia at Mariopol about Sept. 10, 1914. There is no evidence that the charterers could have bought a cargo of it there or then, so as to load it on the arrival of the defendants' ship. Such evidence as there is shows that, if there was any sulphate of ammonia except the cargo in question, it all belonged to the firm from whom the charterers had contracted to buy it. If so, the charterers would have held to their bargain if the price had risen, and the vendors if it had not. A good deal can be said for the argument that, if this bargain is to be disregarded as too remote (which is admitted) so far as the plaintiffs claimed to recover the damages paid for its non-fulfilment, then, too, it should be disregarded for all purposes connected with the present case, and that the position is truly an inversion of that in Rodocanachi v. Milburn (1). "The value is to be taken independently of any circumstances peculiar to the plaintiff." This argument, however, is based on a supposition of fact as to the existence of a market price at Mariopol, which on the evidence fails. I think that in the main the appeal succeeds, and I concur in the motion proposed by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack.

Solicitors: Holman, Fenwick & Willan; Waltons & Co.

[Reported by W. E. REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

RICHARDS v. JOHN PAYNE & CO.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Rowlatt, J.), June 21, 1916]

[Reported 86 L.J.K.B. 937; 115 L.T. 225; 13 Asp.M.L.C. 446]

Arbitration—Submission—Disputes “as to meaning and intentions of the charter” to be referred to arbitration—Jurisdiction of arbitrator—Power to determine facts and apply provisions of contract to them—Power to award damages for breach of contract.

The plaintiff let to the defendants a tug under a charterparty which provided that the hire was to be paid in advance, and in default of payment the plaintiff was to be at liberty to withdraw the tug. The charter also provided that any disputes as to “the meaning and intentions of the charter” should be referred to arbitration. A dispute having arisen in which the plaintiff alleged that the defendants were in arrears with payments of hire, recourse was had to arbitration. The arbitrator found that the defendants were in arrear as alleged, and ordered them to deliver up the tug to the plaintiff. The defendants contested the jurisdiction of the arbitrator to determine whether payment of hire was in arrears or not so as to give rise to the clause for re-delivery.

Held: the words “meaning and intentions of the charter” did not mean that only questions of construction as to the rights of the parties arising under the charterparty should be referred to arbitration; they gave the arbitrator power to determine the facts which had arisen and to apply the provisions of the charter to those facts; but they did not entitle him to award damages.

Notes. As to meaning and effect of particular terms, see 2 HALSURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 13, 14; and for cases see 2 DIGEST (Repl.) 456 et seq.

Action tried by ROWLATT, J., in the Commercial Court.

A charterparty under which the plaintiff let a tug to the defendants provided that the hire was to be paid in advance with punctuality and regularity, and that, in default of payment, the plaintiff was to be at liberty to withdraw the tug. The charterparty also provided that “should any differences arise between the owner and the charterers as to the meaning and intentions of the charter, the same should be referred to arbitration.”

Disputes having arisen in which (inter alia) the plaintiff alleged that the defendants were in arrear with payments of hire, recourse was had to arbitration. The arbitrators in due course published an award in which they found that the defendants were in arrear as regarded the payment of hire and ordered the delivery up by them of the tug. The plaintiff subsequently brought this action on the award. The defendants contended that under the agreement to refer the arbitrators had no power to make the award which they had made. They argued that the reference of disputes as to the meanings and intentions of the charter “meant a submission to the arbitrators of questions as to the construction of the charter involving the rights of the parties under that document,” and nothing more.

R. A. Wright for the plaintiff.

C. R. Dunlop for the defendants.

ROWLATT, J. In this case the plaintiff sues for the delivery up of a tug and for damages for its detention, founding his claim for delivery up upon an award made under a clause in the charterparty. He claimed before the arbitrators that the charter had come to an end. The award determined that the plaintiff had a right to withdraw the tug from the service of the charterers on Feb. 4, 1916, and that it is made under the submission which provides that, should any difference arise between the owner and the charterers as to the meaning and intentions of the charter, the same should be referred to arbitration. The phrase “meanings and

A intentions" is a very curious one, but it falls to be construed in these proceedings. What the owner said was that there had been default in payment of the hire, and that by the charterparty he was thereby entitled to withdraw the tug. It is said that this arbitration clause referring to the meanings and intentions of the charter only submits to arbitration the question of construction as to the rights of the parties arising upon the words of the charterparty, and does not include any
B application of the conditions of the charterparty to the facts which have arisen and given rise to the dispute. In other words, that the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to determine whether the hire was in arrear or not, so as to give rise to the clause for re-delivery. I do not think the words are clear or satisfactory, but upon the whole I think that that is too narrow a construction. I think that "meanings and intentions of the charter" include the application of it to the facts
C which have arisen, and not merely the construction of it as a piece of paper, and that, of course, involves the determination of what facts have arisen. It has not been treated, and I do not think it can be treated, as entitling the arbitrators to go on and give damages. That really is enough to determine the main point in the case.

I think the plaintiff has two other points on which he can win. When you
D come to the letters I think it is clear that the parties interpreted this clause in the way I have interpreted it, and appointed their arbitrators to proceed upon it in the sense which I have given to it. The matter appears in a few letters as follows. In December the plaintiff, thinking he had a right, altogether apart from the question of non-payment of hire, to determine the charter by fourteen days' notice, gave fourteen days' notice. That was not accepted by the charterers, who
E said the charterparty was not so determinable at the owner's instance. But when it came to Feb. 4 the owner, then alleging that hire was in arrear, telegraphed demanding immediate re-delivery of the tug by reason of the breach of cl. 7 by non-payment of hire. He wrote confirming on the same day, saying that he should proceed under the arbitration clause if re-delivery was refused, and would claim damages. On the next day he writes returning the cheque which had been sent
F to him, and re-affirming his intention to submit the matter in dispute to arbitration, saying he would let the other side know his arbitrator in due course, and suggesting that it would be better to have one arbitrator than two, as provided in the charter. The matter he is speaking of there seems to me quite clearly the matter last raised—namely, the claim for re-delivery on the ground of non-payment of hire. On Feb. 7 there is an answer from the charterers' solicitor, saying: "We see no reason
G why the terms of the charterparty should be deviated from." That refers to the only proposal to deviate from the terms of the arbitration clause—namely, the proposal to substitute one arbitrator for two. On Feb. 18 the plaintiff's solicitors write back declining, and saying they will proceed to arbitration, and will claim damages as from Jan. 11—meaning damages as from the date applicable to the fourteen days' notice given in December—and in the alternative Feb. 4, when
H re-delivery of the tug was claimed. Thus there were being put forward two cases of non-delivery and two claims for damages. In these circumstances it seems to me that the parties have construed the matter and have referred both these claims to the arbitrators. They have not agreed, of course, to the arbitrators assessing damages for them, for they have no jurisdiction, but it seems to me that they have agreed that both the claims for re-delivery shall be arbitrated upon with such
I consequences as shall properly follow. Therefore, it seems to me that on that ground also the award can be supported.

Then it is said that the award is not good because it is silent as to the claim for non-delivery upon the fourteen days' notice given in December. It is true that arbitrators must decide all matters submitted to them, but I think counsel for the plaintiff's answer to that argument is correct when he says they really have decided it. If you ask for re-delivery and for damages based on an early date and also on a later date, and as here the award is made on the later date, I think that is sufficient. Therefore, I think the award is good, and that the plaintiff succeeds.

With regard to the hire, that might be paid at the option of the owner monthly or weekly in advance. Nothing seems to have been said about that particularly, but something had to be paid in advance, and accounts were stated and money paid up to Jan. 18, 1916. On Jan. 10 a cheque was sent on by defendants for £90, four weeks' hire, and that took matters up to Jan. 29. Therefore, on Jan. 29, something more had to be paid, but nothing at all was paid, and there seems to be no answer to the claim that unless the money was paid on Jan. 29 the owner was entitled to re-delivery of the tug. These clauses must be strictly applied. The owners of a tug have no sort of security for their money. They cannot distrain like the lessor of a house, and the only security they have, if money is not paid when due, is to have the tug back again. It is also argued that after all the money was not really due till Feb. 4, but I do not think that will do. There was said to be a question of some $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. commission on the charterparty, but the fact was they were treating the hire as a separate matter, and if there was going to be an account between the parties, that should have been put to the plaintiff. But the parties have gone on treating the hire as becoming due on Jan. 29, and therefore I think the arbitrators have taken a reasonable and business-like view when they said there was default made on the part of the defendants on Jan. 29. Therefore I hold that plaintiff must recover.

In regard to the question of damages counsel for the defendants said he was ignorant as to the value of tugs. I do not know if he really meant that, but he was right when he said the matter of the value of the tug had not been brought strictly to his notice in the case. I think the plaintiff is entitled to the value of the tug as from Feb. 4, always allowing for the fact that this tug seems to have been "out of health" now and then, and was for some days off running. That must be allowed for, but I cannot possibly decide the question of figures, and I cannot adjourn the case, which would not be fair to others. In the same way, I cannot try the amount of repairs and commission claimed by defendants against the plaintiff. What I think is that if the parties cannot agree as to the figures they ought to find someone to settle it for them, and in default of that there will be liberty to apply. I shall therefore give judgment for the plaintiff with costs, with a reference as to damages and for an account of all claims between the parties.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Solicitors: Botterell & Roche, for W. Cox, Swansea; Holman, Birdwood & Co., for Edward Gerrish, Harris & Co., Bristol.

[Reported by L. C. THOMAS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GORDON HOTELS, LTD. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. GORDON HOTELS, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Ridley, Bray and Avory, JJ.), April 4, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 27; 85 L.J.K.B. 1042; 114 L.T. 1126;
 80 J.P. 266; 32 T.L.R. 423; 14 L.G.R. 647; 25 Cox, C.C. 402]

Shop—"Shop"—Hotel—Primary business to provide residence and board—Restaurant or grill-room—Provision of meals for non-residents—"Shop assistant"—Waiter—Cook—Kitchen cleaner.

An hotel, the primary business of which is to provide residence and board for visitors, is not a "shop" within the Shops Acts, and waiters employed therein are not "shop assistants."

So held by RIDLEY and BRAY, JJ., AVORY, J., dubitante.

Held, by all the members of the court: a restaurant or grill-room which caters entirely or mainly for persons non-resident in the building in which the restaurant or grill-room is situated is a "shop" within the meaning of the Shops Acts, and persons employed in connection therewith, e.g., cooks and persons employed to clean the kitchen and departments immediately connected with it and to clean and maintain culinary implements, are "shop assistants" within the Acts, but not a kitchen clerk who merely orders supplies required for the kitchen and checks them on delivery.

Notes. Distinguished: Rutherford v. Trust Houses (1925), J.P.Jo. 682. Followed: George Hotel (Colchester), Ltd. v. Ball, [1938] 3 All E.R. 790. Referred to: Simmonds Acroccessories (Western), Ltd. v. Pontypridd Area Assessment Committee, [1944] 1 All E.R. 264.

As to the law relating to shop hours, see 17 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 194 et seq.; and for cases see 24 DIGEST (Repl.) 1107 et seq. For Shops Act, 1950, see 29 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 186.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Savoy Hotel Co. v. L.C.C., [1900] 1 Q.B. 665; 69 L.J.Q.B. 274; 82 L.T. 56; 64 J.P. 262; 48 W.R. 351; 16 T.L.R. 148; 44 Sol. Jo. 212; 19 Cox, C.C. 437, D.C.; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1107, 518.
- (2) Melluish v. L.C.C., [1914] 3 K.B. 325; 83 L.J.K.B. 1165; 111 L.T. 539; 78 J.P. 441; 30 T.L.R. 527; 12 L.G.R. 1086; 24 Cox, C.C. 353, D.C.; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1107, 521.
- (3) Prance v. L.C.C., [1915] 1 K.B. 688; 84 L.J.K.B. 623; 112 L.T. 820; 79 J.P. 242; 31 T.L.R. 128; 13 L.G.R. 382; sub nom. France v. L.C.C., 24 Cox, C.C. 684, D.C.; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1108, 532.

Cases Stated by a metropolitan magistrate.

In the first case five informations were preferred on behalf of the respondents, the London County Council, against the appellants, the Gordon Hotels, Ltd., for that they, the appellants, had failed to comply with the provisions of s. 1 (1) of the Shops Act, 1912 [see now s. 1 (1) of the Shops Act, 1950], in respect of five persons named Groves, Chippett, Kendall, Gedge, and Perham, in that each of the said persons did not during the week ending April 24, 1915, on one weekday in such week cease to be employed about the business of a shop after half-past one o'clock in the afternoon.

Upon the hearing of the informations it was proved or admitted that the appellants were at all times material the proprietors and occupiers of the First Avenue Hotel, High Holborn, a fully licensed hotel. The business of the hotel consisted practically of two parts—that is, that of receiving guests for longer or shorter periods, for whose accommodation the usual public rooms found in a first-class hotel were provided, including a large dining-room. The dining-room was used almost entirely by visitors resident in the hotel, but was open to non-resident visitors as well, and was so advertised by circulars and pamphlets issued to the public by the appellants. There was also attached to the hotel and carried on under the same licence, so far as the supply of intoxicating liquors was concerned, a grill-room, which was open to and used by visitors, both resident and non-resident, as a dining-room, luncheon-room, and grill-room, together with luncheon buffets. Part of the premises was used as a kitchen, which, with the departments immediately connected therewith, was situated in the basement. This kitchen was used for the purposes of the hotel as a whole, and in it was prepared and cooked food for all parts of the licensed premises in bulk and without reference to the particular portion of the premises in which the viands were to be consumed by visitors to the premises. The hotel dining-room, grill-room, luncheon-room, and buffets were situated on the ground floor and entirely unconnected with the kitchen, except by ways to which the visitors had no access or by food lifts. Groves was a clerk in the kitchen, who acted under the instructions of the chef, and he had the general control of obtaining and preparing provisions for the hotel at large. It was his duty to order supplies required, and to check them on delivery at the premises, and occasionally to leave the premises to procure any particular article. None of his duties required him to be in any of the rooms used by the visitors to the hotel. Chippett was what was known as a larder cook, and he chopped up meat of various kinds for use in the hotel generally. Kendall was a working cook, who cooked for all departments of the hotel. Gedge was a kitchen porter, whose duties consisted in sweeping the kitchen, looking after some fires, obtaining provisions from the larder, cleaning fish, and occasionally taking cooked food to the food lifts connected with either the hotel dining-rooms or the other dining-room, luncheon-room, or buffets. Perham was a knifeman, and he was employed in cleaning knives for use in any part of the premises. None of the four men, Chippett, Kendall, Gedge, and Perham, had any duties in or attended in any of the public rooms of the hotel. During the week ending April 24, 1915, these five men were employed in their ordinary duties each weekday after 1.30 p.m.; but they, in common with all other servants of the hotel, were given hours off duty suitable to the necessities of carrying on the hotel, and whole holidays from time to time. They were all adults and were entirely satisfied with the conditions of their employment.

On behalf of the appellants it was contended (a) that the duties of each of the five persons did not bring them into contact with and were not directly connected with the visitors to the hotel; (b) that their duties were in relation to the whole business of the hotel; (c) that persons resident in the hotel, in connection with whose requirements part of the duties of the five persons was performed, were not customers in the shop, and that the hotel portion of the premises in which persons resided was not a "shop" within the meaning of the Shops Act, 1912; (d) that in so far as the duties of the five persons were performed in relation to persons not resident in the hotel they were engaged in such duties in the portion of the hotel which was not a part of a "shop" within the meaning of the statute; and (e) that there was no evidence upon which in law the magistrate could hold that the five persons were "shop assistants" within the meaning of the statute. The learned magistrate before whom the informations were heard was of opinion that the kitchen, without which the business of the restaurant could not be carried on, was a part of the restaurant, and, therefore, a part of the shop, and that the five persons named were wholly or mainly employed in a shop in connection with the serving of customers. He, therefore, convicted the appellants in respect of each of the five informations subject to the stated case.

In the second case, on May 21, 1915, the appellants, the London County Council, preferred four informations against the respondents, the Gordon Hotels, Ltd., for that they, the respondents, did unlawfully fail to comply with the provisions of s. 1 (1) of the Shops Act, 1912, in respect of four of their employees—namely, Eaton, Clark, Bunyan, and Chidwick. Eaton was employed by the respondents as a waiter in the smoking-room lounge. Clark, Bunyan, and Chidwick were employed by the respondents as waiters in the dining-room. The learned magistrate stated

A that whether a residential hotel was or was not a "shop" within the meaning of the Shops Act, 1912, he was not satisfied that the four men were wholly or mainly engaged in serving non-residents. He held, therefore, that they were not "shop assistants" within the meaning of the Act and dismissed the informations.

By the Shops Act, 1912 [see now Shops Act, 1950, s. 1 (1)], it was provided :

B "Section 1 (1). On at least one weekday in each week a shop assistant shall not be employed about the business of a shop after half-past one o'clock in the afternoon. Provided that this provision shall not apply to the week preceding a bank holiday if the shop assistant is not employed on the bank holiday, and if on one weekday in the following week in addition to the bank holiday the employment of the shop assistant ceases not later than half-past one o'clock in the afternoon. . . . Section 19 (1) [see s. 74 of Act of 1950].
C In this Act the expression "shop" includes any premises where any retail trade or business is carried on . . . the expression "shop assistant" means any person wholly or mainly employed in a shop in connection with the serving of customers or the receipt of orders or the dispatch of goods."

Macmorran, K.C., and Bodkin for the Gordon Hotels, Ltd.

D Travers Humphreys for the London County Council.

E RIDLEY, J.—In these two cases informations were preferred by the London County Council against the Gordon Hotels, Ltd., the proprietors and occupiers of the First Avenue Hotel, Holborn, under the Shops Act, 1912, for failing to arrange for nine of their employees to have a half-holiday in a certain week in accordance with the provisions of that Act. In the result the learned magistrate before whom the informations came found that five of the persons in question were shop assistants within the meaning of the Act and convicted the Gordon Hotels, Ltd., while as to the other four persons he found that they were not shop assistants, and, therefore, dismissed the summonses in respect of them. Two Cases have now been stated for the opinion of the court, and the question which has to be decided in each of them is whether these employees are or are not shop assistants within the meaning of the Act of 1912.

F The whole of these nine persons were employed in various capacities about the hotel. It appears that the hotel possesses a grill-room which is used by both residents and non-residents, to which there is access from the hotel, but which is, so far as its use is concerned, distinct from the rest of the hotel, the latter being an hotel in the ordinary sense of the word, and providing the usual lodging accommodation. In that portion of the premises which may be called the hotel proper there is a dining-room and there is also a smoking-room, and one of the questions raised here is whether the waiters who are engaged to serve in these rooms are shop assistants. With regard to the dining-room and the smoking-room the learned magistrate has found that they were almost entirely used by the residents of the hotel—although open to non-residents—and that, therefore, the four waiters who were employed in these rooms were not "wholly or mainly employed in a shop in connection with the serving of customers," and so were not shop assistants. The learned magistrate did not decide whether the residential part of an hotel could properly be called a shop within the Act in respect of the sale therein of refreshments to non-residents. It was, however, unnecessary for him to do so in the face of his other findings. But it is necessary to consider this point as it has been referred to in the course of the argument.

I Speaking for myself, I cannot think that an hotel, the primary business of which is to provide residence for visitors, can be regarded in any sense as a shop within the meaning of the Shops Act, 1912. There can be no doubt that it was the intention of the legislature to deal in the Act with retail establishments, and an hotel cannot be regarded as a retail establishment. The Act does undoubtedly refer to places where intoxicating liquors are sold, but only where their sale is the only business done. It can never have been intended that the term should apply to a place where the main business was not the sale of intoxicating liquors, but the carrying on of a legitimate hotel business. We have been referred to Savoy Hotel Co. v. L.C.C. (1), in which it was held that the Savoy Hotel came within the definition of a "shop" in the Shop Hours Act, 1892. It is to be noticed, however, that the language of the definition section of the Act of 1892 is different from that of the definition section of the Act of 1912, and I do not think that there is anything in the decision of the case to compel us to hold that an hotel is a shop merely because it is a licensed house. As regards the four waiters, therefore, I think that the learned magistrate was right in his decision that these men were not shop assistants, and the appeal of the London County Council, as far as they are concerned, will be dismissed.

As to the other five servants, who were employed in the hotel kitchen, where food was prepared for consumption in the grill-room as well as in the hotel, the learned magistrate has held that these men were shop assistants, although they were not directly employed in serving customers. There is a finding that they were mainly employed in serving customers, within the principles laid down in Melluish v. L.C.C. (2) and Prance v. L.C.C. (3), and as the restaurant or grill-room is undoubtedly a shop, I think that the learned magistrate was right in convicting the Gordon Hotels, Ltd., as regards all these five men, with the exception of Groves. I think that it is for the tribunal of fact to say whether anything is done in connection with the serving of customers, and, if there is any evidence to permit of such a finding, we ought not to interfere with it. It is not possible to state exactly in what "serving of customers" consists. When considering these words in Prance v. L.C.C. (3), ROWLATT, J., said ([1915] 1 K.B. at p. 695):

"I incline to the opinion that it is a matter of degree, on which one has to be guided by common sense, and not really a question of law. Someone has to decide the question of degree, and I think that the tribunal of fact really ought to decide that, provided it does not go hopelessly wrong in the sense of deciding without any evidence in support of the decision."

There was evidence that four of the five were engaged in the preparation of food, but in the case of Groves there was no such evidence. The nature of his work is set out in the Case Stated. It was his business to obtain supplies, but he had nothing whatever to do with the preparation of the food which was served to the customers. In his case, therefore, I do not think that there was evidence upon which the learned magistrate could arrive at his decision. That being so, the conviction as far as Groves is concerned must be reversed, but as far as the other four are concerned I am not prepared to differ from the decision of the learned magistrate. I only desire to add that I fully appreciate the difficulty which exists when the court is confronted with the problem of deciding whether a particular person is or is not engaged in connection with the serving of customers within the meaning of the Act, and so does or does not fall within the definition of a shop assistant.

BRAY, J.—I agree. The first of these two appeals, that of the Gordon Hotels, Ltd., relates to five persons employed by the company at the First Avenue Hotel, and, with the exception of the man Groves, I think that the case is entirely covered by the decisions in Melluish v. L.C.C. (2) and Prance v. L.C.C. (3). I should not be prepared without further consideration to say that I agreed with everything that was said in the judgments in those two cases, but when it is borne in mind that judgments were delivered by five judges I think that we ought to follow them.

The four persons in addition to Groves were Chippett, Kendall, Gedge, and Perham. As to the first three of these four I think that they are covered by the decision in Melluish v. L.C.C. (2). I cannot distinguish them from the case of the kitchen-maid which was dealt with in that decision. They were all engaged in preparing the food which was to be supplied to the customers, and with regard to them I am of opinion that the decision of the learned magistrate was right. As A regards the fourth man, Perham, we are equally bound by the decision in Prance v. L.C.C. (3). In that case five operations were performed by a potman who was employed in a public-house, namely, putting up tables, cleaning knives, polishing measures, collecting glasses, and cleaning and tidying the premises. The court came to the conclusion that all these operations were the ordinary work of shop assistants, and, therefore, we are bound to say that Perham was a shop assistant.

B The case of Groves is, however, distinguishable. In Melluish v. L.C.C. (2) AVORY, J., said ([1914] 3 K.B. at p. 327):

"I agree that it would not be possible to hold that every person employed in any capacity on premises where a retail business is carried on is employed in connection with the serving of customers. I think there must be a direct connection with the serving of customers and not a remote and indirect connection."

C

I think that the work of Groves was something entirely apart from the serving of customers. He did nothing towards preparing the rooms, the food, or the utensils. He only ordered supplies and checked them on delivery. The first appeal therefore succeeds with regard to Groves and fails with regard to the four others. As to

D the second appeal, it is true that the dining-room and the smoking-room were places where non-residents might be served, but the learned magistrate has found that those rooms were part of the hotel proper. It was contended on behalf of the London County Council that the hotel is a shop within the meaning of the Act. In my opinion, it is not. The Act of 1912 deals with shop assistants who are employed in connection with the serving of customers. The people who stay in

E an hotel are not customers; they are guests or visitors. And since the residents or visitors at an hotel are not customers, there is no "serving of customers" in the sense in which that phrase is used in the Act. The four waiters, therefore, were not shop assistants, and the second appeal must be dismissed.

F

AVORY, J.—I agree with the judgments which have been delivered, though I must confess that I have had some doubt as to two points. In the case of the first appeal I think that we are bound by the decisions in Melluish v. L.C.C. (2) and Prance v. L.C.C. (3), as far as four of the five men are concerned, and therefore that the appeal must be dismissed as to them, except in the case of Groves. One of the doubts which I have felt is in respect of Perham, and, if it had not been for the judgment in Prance v. L.C.C. (3), I should have been prepared to hold that Perham was not a shop assistant within the Act. If I had been at liberty to do so,

G I should have said that Perham's employment was in remote and indirect connection with the serving of customers, but, in view of the decision in the case I have just mentioned, it is clear that Perham is just as much within the Act as the potman was in Prance's Case (3). I need not go into details as to Groves' employment. I think that it was of a character too remote to make him a person

H employed in connection with the serving of customers. I do not see how his position can be distinguished from that of a manager of an establishment whose business is to bring in food.

I

The second appeal has reference to the employment of waiters in a portion of the premises used almost exclusively by residents in the hotel, and the question for our determination is whether these waiters are shop assistants within the meaning of the Act. And here it is that my second doubt arises, a doubt which is much greater than the former. I confess that I find it exceedingly difficult for me to agree with that part of the judgments which have been delivered as to whether an hotel is a shop. We have been pressed by counsel for the London County Council with the decision in Savoy Hotel Co. v. L.C.C. (1) in which it was held that the Savoy Hotel, which is very far from being a public-house in the popular sense of that word, was a "shop" in accordance with the definition of a shop contained in s. 9 of the Shop Hours Act, 1892. If one applies the decision in that case to the present one, it seems to me to be by no means easy to hold that some part of the First Avenue Hotel is not a shop within the meaning of the Act of 1912, and I can foresee great difficulties in the administration of the provisions of the Shops Act if it is left to the magistrate in each case to ascertain and to determine which part of an hotel is a shop and which part is not. But I am not disposed to differ from the result at which the rest of the court has arrived—namely, that the appeal in this case should be dismissed, especially, as has been pointed out, because the learned magistrate, without coming to any final decision whether the First Avenue Hotel was or was not a shop, was of opinion that there was no evidence which satisfied him that these four waiters were wholly or mainly employed in serving non-residents. I am prepared to assent to the statement that residents in an hotel are not customers in a shop. That is sufficient for my holding that the waiters were not shop assistants within s. 19 of the Act of 1912, and on that ground I am of opinion that this second appeal should be dismissed.

Solicitors: Stanley, Woodhouse & Hedderwick; E. Tanner.

[Reported by J. A. SLATER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NYE v. NIBLETT AND OTHERS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Darling, Avory and Sankey, JJ.), October 26, 1917]

[Reported [1918] 1 K.B. 23; 87 L.J.K.B. 590; 82 J.P. 57;
16 L.G.R. 57; 26 Cox, C.C. 113]

Animal—Malicious killing or wounding—Proof that animal “ordinarily kept for any domestic purpose”—Need of evidence of ownership—Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict., c. 97), s. 41.

By s. 41 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, any person who unlawfully and maliciously kills, maims or wounds any animal “ordinarily kept in a state of confinement or for any domestic purpose” is liable to a penalty. In a prosecution under this section it is not necessary to prove that any particular animal is kept for such a purpose. It is sufficient to prove that the class of animal is ordinarily so kept, e.g., a cat, and evidence of ownership is not required to obtain a conviction.

Notes. As to killing or maiming animals, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 660; and for cases see 2 DIGEST (Repl.) 396 et seq. For the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, see 5 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 750.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Miles v. Hutchings, [1903] 2 K.B. 714; 72 L.J.K.B. 775; 89 L.T. 420; 52 W.R. 284; 20 Cox, C.C. 555; 2 Digest (Repl.) 398, 687.
- (2) Smith v. Williams (1892), 56 J.P. 840; 9 T.L.R. 9; 37 Sol. Jo. 11; 2 Digest (Repl.) 399, 690.

Also referred to in argument:

R. v. Parry (1900), 85 L.Jo. 456; 2 Digest (Repl.) 397, 668.

Case Stated by justices for the county of Wilts sitting at Malmesbury.

An information was prepared on May 23, 1917, by the appellant, Henry Nye, an inspector in the employ of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 41, against the respondents, Godfrey Niblett, Alec Neal, and Victor Neal, for that they, the respondents, on May 11, 1917, at Sherston, in the said county, did unlawfully and maliciously kill certain animals, to wit two cats, the property of William Smith and Charles Curtis respectively, the same not being cattle, but being either the subject of larceny at common law or ordinarily kept for a domestic purpose.

A Upon the hearing of the information evidence was given of a statement made to the police by the respondent Alec Neale. The statement was as follows:

B "Between seven and eight o'clock on Friday evening last, May 11, 1917, I and my brother Victor Neal and Godfrey Niblett went to Vancellettes Farm, Willesley, and there saw a white cat in a hedge. All three of us threw stones at it, which made it run into the barn sixty or seventy yards away. We then all went into the barn. Niblett and myself followed into the barn, leaving my brother outside, and instead of seeing a white cat we saw a black one. My brother then came into the barn and said, 'I've been and killed the white cat.' The black cat then came towards us and we chased it out and round the barn and through the other door of the barn, when it went among some sacks of wheat. It came out from there and went into some straw, and Niblett went after it with a hurdle rail and tried to strike the cat, but couldn't. I picked up the prong and stuck it into the cat; one tine entered the animal's neck. The cat lay down on the straw, and I picked it up with the prong and gave the cat to Niblett. While on the prong it was screaming, and my brother struck it on the head with the rail that Niblett first had, and killed the cat with it."

D The justices asked the appellant if he had evidence of ownership to which he replied that his instructions were that it was not necessary for the owner to take proceedings and anyone could do so. No evidence was called on behalf of the prosecution to prove the ownership of the cats or to show that they were being kept for domestic purposes. The justices were of opinion that upon the true construction of s. 41 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, they were not entitled to convict the respondents without evidence as to the ownership of the cats at the time of the alleged offence and without evidence that the cats in question were at the time being kept for domestic purposes, and they were of opinion that there was in law no evidence before them either as to such ownership or as to the said cats being so kept, and they therefore dismissed the information.

E By the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 41:

F "Whoever shall unlawfully and maliciously kill, maim, or wound any dog, bird, beast, or other animal, not being cattle, but being either the subject of larceny at common law, or being ordinarily kept in a state of confinement or for any domestic purpose, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace,"

G be liable to a penalty.

Stuart Bevan for the appellant.

The respondents did not appear.

H DARLING, J.—In this case I think that the appeal should be allowed. The respondents were charged with killing two cats in circumstances of great cruelty, the charge being brought under s. 41 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861. The magistrates declined to convict because they were of opinion that they were not entitled to convict without evidence of the ownership of the cats and without evidence that they were being kept for domestic purposes. In that the magistrates were wrong. I construe the section as meaning that a person commits the offence if he unlawfully and maliciously kills an animal, not being cattle, and not being the subject of larceny and common law, provided that it is an animal ordinarily kept in confinement or for a domestic purpose. If a person kills such an animal unlawfully and maliciously and the animal belongs to a class which is ordinarily kept in confinement or for a domestic purpose, the offence is committed. It need not be proved who owned the particular animal nor that the particular animal was kept in confinement or used for a domestic purpose. There was no evidence that these cats were individually wild cats or that they belonged to the class of wild cats. I think therefore that these cats were animals of the class ordinarily kept in confinement or for a domestic purpose, and the section applies. In the case of such an animal as a cat it is not necessary to prove that it is ordinarily kept in confinement or for a domestic purpose. But the section seems to me to have a further meaning. It protects an animal which does not belong to a class ordinarily kept in confinement or for a domestic purpose, provided that the particular animal was ordinarily so kept. That view is confirmed by s. 21 of the Larceny Act, 1861, which provides that

"Whosoever shall steal any bird, beast, or other animal ordinarily kept in a state of confinement or for any domestic purpose, not being the subject of larceny at common law, or shall wilfully kill any such bird, beast, or animal, with intent to steal the same or any part thereof," shall be liable to a penalty. If someone had partridges or pheasants, which are not the subject of larceny at common law and are not ordinarily kept in confinement or for a domestic purpose, and if a person stole one of them which was actually kept in confinement or for a domestic purpose, the case would come within the Larceny Act, 1861, and by parity of reasoning the animal would be entitled to the protection given by s. 41 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861. Anyone who stole that animal would clearly be guilty of larceny, and anyone who maliciously killed it would commit an offence against the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, and as it was always kept in confinement or for a domestic purpose it would be no defence that it did not belong to a class ordinarily so kept. If the animal belongs to a class ordinarily so kept, there is an offence. If it belongs to a class not ordinarily so kept, but is in the specific instance ordinarily so kept, there is likewise an offence. A case which has some bearing on this is Miles v. Hutchings (1). The headnote of that case is as follows ([1903] 2 K.B. 714):

"An information under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, was laid against the appellant, a gamekeeper, for unlawfully and maliciously killing a dog; the dog was at the time near an aviary in which pheasants, the property of the appellant's master, were confined for breeding purposes. Held, that the test of the appellant's liability under the section was whether he acted under the bona fide belief that what he was doing was necessary for the protection of his master's property, and that it was the only way in which the property could be protected."

That decision gives an answer to a case that might be put. Suppose one were dealing with an animal which belonged to a class ordinarily kept in confinement or for a domestic purpose, but which was itself not so kept, as, for example, a wild cat, not a cat of the genus that has never been tamed, but a cat which had a domestic parentage and had relapsed into savagery, a person who killed it would be protected by the qualifying words "unlawfully and maliciously" if the killing of it was necessary for the protection of property or because it was trespassing, for in that case he would not kill it unlawfully. That view is confirmed by Smith v. Williams (2), of which the headnote is as follows (56 J.P. 840):

"S., the occupier of land sown with seed, shot two domestic fowls of W. which were trespassing, having got through the fence. S. had previously warned W. that unless the fowls were kept off he should kill them. Held, that S. could not be convicted under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, s. 41, of unlawfully killing the fowl."

The application of that case plainly appears from the argument. Counsel for the appellant argued that the appellant was exercising his rights as occupier of the land in getting rid of the trespasses of animals, and that, whatever other remedies the owner of the animals trespassing might have, this proceeding for maliciously killing was not one of them. The court upheld that argument, though they did so with regret. There is therefore really no inconvenience in deciding this case as we are doing. A person may still kill animals such as those in question providing that he does not do so unlawfully and maliciously. It is not unlawful and malicious to kill them if they are trespassing, even though they are animals

A ordinarily kept in confinement or for a domestic purpose, whether because they belong to a class ordinarily so kept or because individually they are ordinarily so kept.

B AVORY, J.—I agree that the justices took a wrong view, but I confine my judgment to the facts of this case, although I do not dissent as to the general purview of the statute. The justices refused to convict on the ground that there was no evidence as to ownership and no evidence that the animals were being ordinarily kept in a state of confinement or for a domestic purpose. Neither of those conditions is necessary to satisfy the statute. As to these particular animals I prefer to base my judgment on this, that cats belong to a genus or class ordinarily kept for a domestic purpose. That is the usual description of cats. "Domestic cat" is a well-known expression. It is not necessary to prove that the particular cats were at the time being kept for a domestic purpose, although, in my opinion, there was in this case evidence from which the justices might have inferred that these particular cats were being kept for a domestic purpose. I agree that there was no need for evidence of ownership, and I think that probably the justices only meant that if there had been evidence of ownership it would have been evidence that these particular cats were being kept for a domestic purpose. The case will be remitted to the justices to determine whether the respondents unlawfully and maliciously killed these particular cats.

SANKEY, J.—I agree that the case must be sent back to the justices.

Appeal allowed and Case remitted.

Solicitor: S. G. Polhill.

[Reported by J. F. WALKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

F R. v. HOME SECRETARY. Ex Parte DUC DE CHATEAU THIERRY

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Pickford and Bankes, L.JJ.), February 28, March 16, 1917]

G [Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 922; 86 L.J.K.B. 923; 116 L.T. 226; 81 J.P. 125; 33 T.L.R. 264; 61 Sol. Jo. 367; 15 L.G.R. 351]

Alien—Deportation—Power of Home Secretary to make order—Absolute discretion—Power to order deportation to particular country.

H A Secretary of State is not required to justify in a court of law his reasons for making an order for the deportation of an alien. The power given to the Secretary of State is quite unqualified. His discretion is absolute. The only ground on which, it would appear, a deportation order could be quashed by the court would be if it were disputed that the person sought to be deported was an alien and it was not proved that he was.

I Per PICKFORD, L.J.: Even if an attempt were made to carry out a deportation order by illegal means the order would not be invalidated, though the person the subject of the order might have some other remedy.

The Secretary of State has no power to order the deportation of an alien to a particular country, but he may, if, in his judgment, it is proper to do so, on making a deportation order cause the alien to be placed on board a ship and detained on board that ship until the ship finally leaves the United Kingdom. By the selection of a ship the destination of the alien can be effectively controlled and he may be compelled to disembark in the country to which the government wish him to go.

Notes. The Aliens Orders mentioned in the judgments have been replaced by the Aliens Order, 1953, for which see 2 HALSBURY'S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS. A

Considered: R. v. Chiswick Police Station Superintendent, [1918] 1 K.B. 578. Applied: R. v. Governor of Brixton Prison, and Secretary of State for Home Affairs, Ex parte Pawel Sliwa, [1952] 1 All E.R. 187. Referred to: R. v. Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and Secretary of State for the Colonies, Ex parte Greenberg, [1947] 2 All E.R. 550. B

As to deportation of aliens, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 520-523; and for cases see 2 DIGEST 190-195. For Aliens Restriction Acts, 1914 and 1919, see 1 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 691, 693.

Case referred to:

- (1) A.-G. for Canada v. Cain, [1906] A.C. 542; 75 L.J.P.C. 81; 95 L.T. 314; 22 T.L.R. 757, P.C.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 180, 99. C

Also referred to in argument:

- Re Adam* (1837), 1 Moo.P.C.C. 460; 12 E.R. 889, P.C.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 196, 170. R. v. Governor of Brixton Prison, Ex parte Sarno, [1916] 2 K.B. 742; 86 L.J.K.B. 62; 115 L.T. 608; 30 J.P. 389; 32 T.L.R. 717; 14 L.G.R. 1060; 2 Digest (Repl.) 191, 143. D

Appeal by the Home Secretary from an order of the Divisional Court making absolute a rule nisi for the quashing of an order for the deportation of the Duc de Chateau Thierry, the respondent to the present appeal.

The facts appear in the judgment of SWINFEN EADY, L.J.

The Attorney-General (Sir Frederick Smith, K.C.), Roche, K.C., and Branson for the Home Secretary. E

Rawlinson, K.C., and Barrington-Ward for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

Mar. 16, 1917. The following judgments were read.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—This is the appeal of the Home Secretary against an order of the King's Bench Division, which made absolute a rule for a certiorari to quash a deportation order. This deportation order is dated Nov. 3, 1916, and thereby in pursuance of the powers conferred by the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914, and art. 12 of the Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916 [see now art. 20 of Aliens Order, 1953], the Home Secretary ordered that Leon Joseph Armand Derais, alias Leon Armand Joseph de Rois-Bouillon, alias Duke of Chateau Thierry, an alien, should be deported from the United Kingdom. F

The alien in question, the respondent to this appeal, was born at Havre, in the Republic of France, in 1875. About February, 1905, he left France and proceeded to Belgium, and early in 1907 he came to England, where he has since resided. That he is an alien is not disputed. In July last inquiry was made at the request of the French government as to the failure of the respondent (who is a Frenchman, within military age whether reckoned according to the French or the British standard) to discharge his military duties. The respondent claimed to be a political refugee, and inquiry was made of the French authorities to ascertain whether his claim was justified. These authorities dispute that he is a political refugee; they state that his return to France is sought in connection with his "irregular military situation," and for no other cause, and that he is not known to the French police for any other offence. An assurance has been given by the French government that the respondent, if returned to France, would be treated as a military absentee and not as liable to prosecution for any other offence. The respondent also alleges that he is medically unfit for military service. Two opportunities have been afforded him to satisfy the French authorities here in this respect, but he has declined to do so. Although he may be unfit for combatant service, he has made several attempts to obtain a commission in the British army. G

A and, moreover, states in his affidavit that he is about to be appointed managing director of a new company; it is quite consistent with the evidence that he may be fit, not for a combatant position, but for certain kinds of military service, and may be able to render valuable assistance to the military authorities of his country. I am of opinion that the respondent has failed to establish that he is a political refugee, or that he is medically unfit to render to his native country any military service whatever.

B But, whether this be so or not, these considerations ought not to affect the judgment in the present case. These are matters to be brought before the Home Secretary when he is considering whether or not to make a deportation order, and they are matters which may properly affect his discretion, but his power to make a deportation order is not dependent in any way upon the absence of these or any similar circumstances. By art. 12 (1) of the Aliens Restriction Order, 1916, a C Secretary of State may order the deportation of any alien. The respondent is an alien, and a Secretary of State has made an order for his deportation. It should, however, be stated that the Attorney-General on behalf of the government expressly stated that the executive had no intention whatever of taking advantage of their powers over aliens to deport. It will be remembered that under the Aliens Act, D 1905 [repealed by Aliens Restriction (Amendment) Act, 1919], which confers power to prevent the landing in this country of undesirable immigrants, an exception is made in favour of an immigrant who proves that he is seeking admission to this country to avoid prosecution on political grounds or for an offence of a political character. Again, with regard to the expulsion of undesirable aliens, the same statute confers power on the Secretary of State to make (under certain E specified circumstances) an expulsion order requiring an alien to leave the United Kingdom within a time fixed by the order. Such order may be made upon the happening of the events respectively mentioned in s. 3 of the Act, but s. 3 (1) (b) (ii) excludes from liability to expulsion such an alien as is there mentioned, who has been sentenced in a foreign country for a crime which is an offence of a political character. This statute gives effect to the policy of this country in affording F shelter and protection to political refugees. The language of this statute is in marked contrast with the language of the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914. The latter Act contains none of the safeguards of the former Act, but in a time of great national danger confers wide powers upon a Secretary of State, leaving the exercise of those powers to his discretion, and for the proper exercise of which he is responsible to Parliament and the country.

G It is urged by the respondent that the executive government claims and intends to exercise over him, by virtue of the Act and order, an authority not thereby conferred. The government claim, not merely a right to deport the alien, but to select the country or place to which he is to be deported. The Divisional Court held that there was not any power under the statute or in the regulations to order the deportation of an alien to any particular country; that they must look behind H the order; and, if the object and intention of the executive in making the order was to deport the alien to a particular foreign country, they must treat this matter as if the order did in effect state that the alien was to be deported to France. So regarding it, the court made absolute the rule for a certiorari to quash it. I am unable to follow this reasoning. If it were intended to do something illegal under a valid order, that would be good ground for restraining and preventing the illegal I act, but not for quashing a valid order. A Secretary of State is not required to justify in a court of law his reasons for making a deportation order in the case of an alien. In the event of it being disputed that the subject of a deportation order is an alien, the matter must be determined by the court, and, unless it be proved that the person is an alien, the order must be quashed as made without jurisdiction, but I am not aware of any other ground upon which such an order can be quashed. Under these circumstances, the respondent being an alien, I am of opinion that the order of the King's Bench Division for the quashing of the deportation order was erroneous.

In strictness, this is sufficient to dispose of the appeal, but the Attorney-General stated that it was intended to convey the respondent to France, but that, before doing so, the government wished to give him every opportunity of testing in a court of law whether they had that power or not, and that they were holding their hands in the meantime. Whether a Secretary of State has this authority or not depends upon the true construction of the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914, and the Orders in Council made thereunder. This statute was passed the day after the commencement of the war between this country and Germany. It empowers His Majesty, by Order in Council, to impose restrictions on aliens at any time when a state of war exists between His Majesty and any foreign Power, or when it appears that an occasion of imminent national danger or great emergency has arisen. It enacts that provision may be made by the Order in Council for various specified matters. [HIS LORDSHIP read s. 1 (1) (b), (c), (h), (i) and (k), and continued:] I am of opinion that para. (e) alone does not extend to authorise an Order in Council for the deportation of aliens to any particular place, but merely to provide for their deportation from the United Kingdom, and the form of order adopted in the present case was the proper form of order—namely, that the respondent, “an alien, shall be deported from the United Kingdom.” The deportation order, however, compels the alien to leave the United Kingdom, which he can only do by embarking on a vessel, and paras. (b), (h), (i) and (k) of s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1914 authorise provisions in the Order in Council, whereby restrictions, conditions, and obligations may be imposed which effectively control the deported alien's subsequent movements. The Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916, embodies the various Orders in Council made under the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914. Article 12 regulates the deportation of aliens. In my opinion, cl. 1 and cl. 2 of art. 12 are independent of each other, and the contention is not well founded that cl. 2 only becomes operative if and when an alien, ordered to be deported, omits to leave the United Kingdom after being allowed a reasonable time to do so. Where a Secretary of State makes a deportation order, he may (if, in his judgment, it is a proper case so to do) leave the alien at large, and free to leave the kingdom, upon complying with the other provisions of the order. If the alien fails to do so, he incurs the penalties provided by s. 1 (2) of the Act. On the other hand, a Secretary of State may (if, in his judgment, it is proper so to do), immediately upon making a deportation order, cause the alien to be detained and placed on board a ship, and detained on board that ship until the ship finally leaves the United Kingdom, when his right to detain the alien any longer ceases [see art. 21 of Aliens Order, 1953]. It is essential to give due effect to this provision that the Secretary of State should select and determine the ship upon which the alien is to be placed, and by thus selecting the ship the destination of the alien can be effectively controlled.

The conclusion at which I arrive is, that although the executive government has no power to order a deported alien to go to any particular place, yet by the authority given it to detain the alien and place him on board a ship, which I construe as meaning a ship which the government select, and detain him there until the ship finally leaves the United Kingdom, the result will be that the alien will be deported to the country to which that ship shall directly sail. After the ship finally leaves the United Kingdom the government cannot any longer detain him, but in most cases there would be practical difficulty in the alien leaving the ship before she makes the port to which she is bound. The appeal should be allowed and the order of the Divisional Court reversed, and the rule for a certiorari should be discharged.

PICKFORD, L.J.—The respondent in this appeal obtained a rule nisi to remove into the High Court of Justice, for the purpose of being quashed, an order made by the Secretary of State for the Home Department. The rule was made absolute by the King's Bench Division, and the Secretary of State now appeals against that

A decision. The respondent is a French subject of military age, who has been resident in this country for several years. He alleges that he left France in circumstances which constitute him a political refugee, and that he is medically unfit for military service. We were informed that there exists an agreement between this country and France by which this country undertakes to return to France subjects of that country who are of military age and liable to military
B service, and that it was by reason of that agreement that the Secretary of State made this order. It was also stated to us by the Attorney-General that it was the intention of the executive to return the respondent to France, and to require him not only to leave this country, but to return to his own.

C The order on the face of it, however, is only an order that the respondent be deported, and if that be a valid order it cannot be quashed. Even if an attempt were made to carry it out by illegal means, the order would not be invalidated, though I do not say that in such a case there would be no remedy. The question, therefore, is whether the order is validly made under the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914, and the regulations made under that Act. The principal clauses relating to this matter are s. 1 (1) (c) of the Act and art. 12 of the regulations. I think the D order is a perfectly good order. The power given to the Secretary of State is quite unqualified. If the person ordered to be deported be in fact an alien, the Secretary of State has an absolute discretion to order him to be deported, and I do not think that discretion can be questioned in a court of law. Assuming, therefore, that the respondent proved that he was a political refugee and unfit for military service, such facts would not affect the validity of the order, but would only be matters to E be considered by the Secretary of State as affecting the exercise of his discretion.

It may be noticed that the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914, contains no provisions as to political refugees similar to those in the Aliens Act, 1905, but it was stated by the Attorney-General that the British government has no intention of enforcing the provisions of this Act of 1914 against such refugees. The order was, therefore, F in my opinion, made by the Secretary of State in due exercise of his powers under the Act and regulations and cannot be quashed.

But the Attorney-General asked us to decide whether the Act and regulations give the Secretary of State power to order the deportation of an alien to a destination specified by him. If that means whether an order could be made under the powers of s. 1 (1) (c) and the regulations made under it to deport the G alien to a specified place, I do not think it could. The power is merely to order deportation, and I do not agree that the meaning of the word "deport" involves carrying to a destination. It is, I think, quite satisfied by obliging the alien to go out of this country, leaving the destination to which he goes undetermined. I think the Divisional Court took the Attorney-General's submission as an agreement to treat the order as though for the purposes of this case it contained a direction
H to deport to a particular place, and, therefore, treated it as made in that form and so quashed it, but I cannot find any agreement that it should be so treated, and, therefore, I think it should not be quashed. The order is made under art. 12 which contains two subsections which I think are independent—that is, I do not think that sub-s. (2) only comes into force in case of failure to comply with I sub-s. (1). The Secretary of State has two courses open to him. If he considers it safe to leave the alien at large, he may rest himself only on sub-s. (1), and then, it seems to me, the alien is at liberty to choose his ship and his destination. If, on the other hand, he considers it right that the alien should not be left at large, he may act under sub-s. (2) and detain him as therein provided. I think the wording of that subsection requires that the Secretary of State should have the choice of the ship upon which the alien is placed. When on board he remains in legal custody until the ship finally leaves the United Kingdom, and then the custody of and right to detain the alien ceases. It is quite possible that the result of action under this provision may be that the deportee from the force of circumstances may be compelled to disembark in the country to which the government wish him to go. This question does not, however, arise upon the facts now before us, nor do the other points raised as to the practical effect of other of these regulations, and those made under the Defence of the Realm Act.

BANKES, L.J. The Aliens Restriction Act, 1914, was passed, as its title implies, to enable His Majesty in time of war or imminent national danger or great emergency by Order in Council to impose restrictions on aliens, and to make such provisions as appear necessary or expedient for carrying such restrictions into effect. It received the Royal Assent on Aug. 5 of that year. [His LORDSHIP read s. 1 (1) and (2) of the Act, and continued:] The first Aliens Restriction Order made under the statute is dated Aug. 5, 1914. This order was subsequently revoked and the order of Sept. 9, 1914, was substituted for it. In each of these orders art. 12 is the one which deals with the deportation of aliens. The change of language in sub-s. (2) is significant. The first order ran:

"Where an alien is ordered to be deported under this order, he may, whilst awaiting the departure of the ship, be detained."

The substituted order runs:

"Where an alien is ordered to be deported under this order, he may, until he can in the opinion of the Secretary of State be conveniently conveyed to and placed on board a ship about to leave the United Kingdom," be detained. The order of Sept. 9 has in its turn been revoked, and the order now in force is that of November, 1916, in which the language of art. 12 of the order of Sept. 9 is reproduced without any alteration material for consideration in this appeal. Article 12 (1) is quite general in its language, and it appears to me to offer no difficulties of construction. It applies to all aliens, whether alien enemies or alien friends. It confers upon the Secretary of State an unlimited discretion. He may order the deportation of any alien. It is impossible for any court of law to interfere with the exercise of that discretion, whether he exercises it because he considers the presence of an alien in this country undesirable on account of his character or antecedents, or because he considers it undesirable that he should remain in this country when his services are required in time of war by an allied country of which he is either a subject or a citizen. On Nov. 3, 1916, an order was made for the deportation of the respondent. It purports to be made by the then Secretary of State for the Home Department, under the powers of the Act of 1914 and art. 12 of the order of 1916. It orders that the respondent, under the name therein given, "an alien," shall be deported from the United Kingdom. It is plain from the terms of the order that the Secretary of State in making the order was purporting to act under the powers conferred upon him by the Act and order mentioned in it, and under those powers only. It is immaterial, therefore, in my opinion, to consider what the inherent prerogative of the Crown may be in reference to the deportation of any person from the realm, or to consider whether the particular point which was discussed in the argument before this court is covered either by the passage from BLACKSTONE which was cited, or by the judgment in A.-G. for Canada v. Cain (1).

The only question directly raised by this appeal is whether the order of the Divisional Court quashing the order of deportation can be supported. In my opinion, it cannot. The respondent does not dispute that he is an alien—an alien friend, it is true, but none the less within the meaning of art. 12 of the order of 1916 an alien. The respondent has filed a long affidavit in which he sets up matters which may be material for the consideration of the Secretary of State in exercising his discretion, but which are wholly immaterial for our consideration when considering his jurisdiction. Upon the contents of the affidavit I will only

A make this one observation—namely, that the respondent appears to treat a fitness for military service and a fitness for combatant service as being the same thing, which they obviously are not. I see no ground whatever for saying that the deportation order was not properly and validly made.

B Strictly speaking, that ought to be an end of the case, but the court below was asked and this court is asked to express an opinion upon the contention put forward by the Attorney-General, that under art. 12 of the Aliens Restriction Order a Secretary of State has the right and the power not only to deport a person from this country, but to deport such person to some particular place or country. This proposition is stated in very wide terms, and covers not only the end to be attained, but the means of attaining it. In my opinion, that proposition is too widely stated, and the Divisional Court were quite right in refusing to accept it. The powers of

C the Secretary of State are clearly defined by the article, and they do not, in my opinion, justify the contention put forward by the Attorney-General in the very wide terms in which he formulated it. The first subsection of art. 12 deals with the making of the deportation order and with that alone. If the deportee leaves the country upon the making of the order, and before the Secretary of State takes further action, there is an end of the matter. What is to happen if the order is

D not complied with must be found elsewhere than in the first subsection. If it is intended to punish the individual for not complying with the order, the necessary machinery is to be found in s. 1 (2) of the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914. If it is intended to compel the individual to comply with the order, the necessary machinery is to be found in sub-s. (2) of art. 12. This subsection enables the Secretary of State to direct the detention of any person against whom an order

E of detention has been made from the moment the order is made until the ship upon which the deportee is placed "finally leaves the United Kingdom." Whenever that moment arrives the legal custody of the deportee ceases, and he is free to make such use of his liberty as he can. In the present case no information is given to the court as to the precise terms of any direction given by the Secretary of State under sub-s. (2) of art. 12. All we are told is that on Dec. 29, 1916, a

F letter was written from the Home Office to the respondent's solicitor informing him that the Secretary of State had instructed the Commissioner of Police to enforce the deportation order on Jan. 3 then next, and that at the request of the respondent's solicitor any proceedings under such direction were suspended pending these proceedings. Under these circumstances I am not prepared to express any opinion as to the legality or otherwise of the next step which the Secretary of State

G may be proposing to take, and I think it extremely undesirable that the court should be asked in questions of this importance to express an opinion upon a hypothetical state of facts. Having regard, however, to the fact that the Divisional Court dealt with this case in the way they did, I give it as my opinion that, having

H regard to the passport and permit regulations contained in reg. 14c of the Regulations for the Defence of the Realm and in art. 8 of the Aliens Restriction Order, 1916, and to the power of imposing restrictions and conditions upon aliens about to embark conferred by the Act of 1914, under which sub-s. (2) of art. 12 may be said to fall [see Aliens Order, 1953, arts. 1 to 12], the Secretary of State has the power to select the vessel on which the deportee is to be placed; but sub-s. (2) of art. 12 in terms provides that, assuming he has that power, the legal custody of the deportee comes to an end directly that vessel finally leaves the United Kingdom.

I It may well be that the deportee will be unable to leave the vessel until it arrives at its destination, and the result of the action of the Secretary of State may consequently be that the deportee will, from the necessities of the case, be obliged to disembark in the country to which it was desired that he should go, but this is not an absolute necessary consequence of the deportation order and the consequent direction of the Secretary of State made under sub-s. (2) of art. 12. The Divisional Court were apparently asked to give a decision upon the contention of the Attorney-General, and, as I have already stated, I think that they were right in refusing to accept it in its entirety, but I cannot agree with the reasons for their decision or with their conclusion that, because they could not accept the Attorney-General's contention to the null, the deportation order should be quashed. In my opinion, the appeal succeeds.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Treasury Solicitor; H. Percy Becher.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ROBERTS v. ROBERTS AND TEMPLE

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Hill, J.), April 20, 30, 1917]

[Reported 117 L.T. 157; 33 T.L.R. 333; 61 Sol. Jo. 492]

Divorce—Adultery—Condonation—Intercourse by husband with wife with knowledge of her adultery—Intercourse induced by wife's false representation.

The fact that a husband has intercourse with his wife with knowledge that she has committed adultery is not conclusive, although it is very strong, evidence of condonation of the adultery. Where the husband is induced to have intercourse by the wife's fraudulent misrepresentation there is no condonation of the adultery.

On August 10, 1916, the husband to whom the wife had confessed committing adultery expressed his willingness to forgive the wife provided that she was not pregnant by reason of the adultery. On the same day the wife falsely assured the husband that she was not so pregnant and in consequence the husband expressed forgiveness and that night had intercourse with the wife. On a petition by the husband for divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery, Held: on the facts there was no condonation by the husband of the wife's adultery and the husband was entitled to a decree nisi of divorce.

Notes. As to the duty of the court on the presentation of a petition for divorce, see now s. 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, which contains similar provisions to those in ss. 29, 30, 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857.

Considered: Cramp v. Cramp and Freeman, [1920] All E.R.Rep. 164. Referred to: Mummery v. Mummery, [1942] 1 All E.R. 553; Henderson v. Henderson and Crellin, [1944] 1 All E.R. 44; Tilley v. Tilley, [1948] 2 All E.R. 1113; Maslin v. Maslin, [1952] 1 All E.R. 477; Perry v. Perry, [1952] 1 All E.R. 1076; Benton v. Benton, [1957] 3 All E.R. 544.

As to condonation, see 12 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 302 et seq.; and for cases see 27 DIGEST (Repl.) 396 et seq. For the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, s. 4, see 29 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 394.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Beeby v. Beeby (1799), 1 Hag. Ecc. 789; 1 Hag. Con. 142, n.; 162 E.R. 755; 27 Digest (Repl.) 399, 3280.
- (2) Bernstein v. Bernstein, [1893] P. 292; 69 L.T. 513; sub nom. Bernstein v. Bernstein, Turner and Sampson, 63 L.J.P. 3; 9 T.L.R. 639; 37 Sol. Jo. 730; 6 R. 609, C.A.; 27 Digest (Repl.) 403, 3320.

Also referred to in argument:

- Moss v. Moss*, [1897] P. 263; 66 L.J.P. 154; 77 L.T. 220; 45 W.R. 635; 13 T.L.R. 459; 27 Digest (Repl.) 36, 131.
- Ellis v. Ellis and Smith* (1865), 4 Sw. & Tr. 154; 34 L.J.P.M. & A. 100; 13 L.T. 211; 11 Jur.N.S. 610; 13 W.R. 964; 164 E.R. 1475; 27 Digest (Repl.) 402, 3315.

- A R. v. Clarence (1888), 22 Q.B.D. 23; 58 L.J.M.C. 10; 59 L.T. 780; 53 J.P. 149; 37 W.R. 166; 5 T.L.R. 61; 16 Cox, C.C. 511, C.C.R.; 15 Digest (Repl.) 986, 9646.

Petition by the husband for divorce, dated Oct. 28, 1916, on the ground of the wife's adultery with the co-respondent. The facts appear in the judgment.

- B Bayford for the husband.
D. Cotes-Preedy (with him B. O'Malley) for the wife.
The co-respondent did not appear.

Cur. adv. vult.

- C April 30, 1917. HILL, J.—The husband petitions for divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery in June, 1916, with the co-respondent, a man named Temple, said to be a soldier in the Australian Expeditionary Force. The co-respondent did not enter an appearance. The wife put in an answer denying the adultery and pleading condonation. At the hearing the adultery was not denied. The evidence for the husband established beyond all doubt that the wife and the co-respondent stayed together as man and wife, occupying the same bedroom, from a Sunday till the following Saturday in June, 1916, in lodgings which the co-respondent had taken at a house in Sheerness. According to the wife's confession there had been adultery before this, during one night in a London hotel. I find the adultery alleged in the petition proved. Was it condoned?

- E Counsel who appeared for the wife did not put her into the box, but relied upon the admitted facts of the husband's case, and submitted that there was such condonation of the adultery charged as was an absolute bar to the husband's right to a dissolution of the marriage on the ground of that adultery. Now, there is no question that, after the adultery charged and after a confession by the wife of adultery with the co-respondent, the husband did tell his wife he forgave her and had intercourse with her at the Charing Cross Hotel. Counsel for the wife says that is conclusive; the husband, with knowledge of adultery with the co-respondent, forgave his wife and slept with her. Counsel for the husband says that in the circumstances of this case there was no real forgiveness, but only the appearance of forgiveness, and that the husband, having been tricked into forgiveness and cohabitation for one night by lies told to him by the wife in order to induce him to forgive her and spend the night with her, cannot properly be held to have condoned the adultery.

- G The parties were married in 1913 and at the outbreak of war were living at Caversham. There was one child born in 1914. In August, 1914, the husband left for France on service as an officer in the Army Service Corps; and except for occasional leaves which he spent in England, and for the occasions in July and August, 1916, hereafter mentioned, was absent on service until September, 1916, when he returned home invalided. The wife in the spring of 1915 went to live at H Weston-super-Mare; early in June, 1916, she left there and after spending a night with the co-respondent at an hotel in London, went to Sheerness and lived with the co-respondent as man and wife, in lodgings at a house in Invicta Road, from a Sunday till the following Saturday. Three weeks later the wife went back to Sheerness and lived for a time at a house in Unity Street. While at Weston the I wife wrote to the husband a letter undated, but with the postmark of June 22, in which, after saying she "had heard a whisper that father is writing to you," she said: "I went to Sheerness to stay for a week with an old girl pal of mine, who is just married recently and expecting to become a mother." Except for the words "I went to Sheerness," that was a lie. When the wife left Weston the second time, the husband, in order to learn where she was, stopped payment through his bankers of her allowance, and that produced a letter from the wife, written from No. 11, Unity Street, Sheerness, which was followed by another letter, dated July 19, 1916, in which the wife says:

"I have thought long past of the unhappy relations existing between us, and which are quite the reverse of what they should be as between man and wife. I have therefore very definitely arrived at the conclusion that it will be the best for us both if you arrange to divorce me at once. I must be free, as I cannot possibly continue in this false position. I have met a man of whom I am certain I love him and he does me, and, moreover, intends to marry me as soon as it can be legally arranged."

The husband says the marriage had been a happy one, and that there is no truth in the allegation of unhappy relations. I have no reason to doubt his word. On receiving this letter the husband wrote on July 22 saying it was a great shock and asking specific questions: "Are you living with this man now?" "Have you lived with him at all?" "Are you expecting a baby?" "What is his name?" The husband then got leave, returned to England on July 26, went to Sheerness, did not find his wife, but, from information he received, traced her to London to No. 27, St. George's Square. There was a man named Valency there, also a soldier. The wife and Valency said that Valency was the man referred to in the letter, but said no misconduct had taken place between them. The wife agreed to have no further communication with Valency, and the husband took her away. The husband and wife spent two nights in London. The husband then went to Weston, and the wife went to Woolwich, where she had obtained a place in the canteen. There is no charge in the petition of adultery with Valency. The husband being ill got an extension of leave, and was due to leave for France on Aug. 11. While he was at Weston he received information which led him on Aug. 10 to advertise as to where Mr. and Mrs. Temple stayed in June at Sheerness, and to write to the wife saying he had heard her name coupled with a man named Temple. He also received letters from the wife. In one of Aug. 4 she said, "I am coming to London to see you off, and I wish to spend the evening and night of the last day you are on leave with you." The husband arranged to meet the wife, and on Aug. 10 they met at Charing Cross Station. The wife said she had something very important to say. They went to Hampstead Heath. The wife said that she had misconducted herself with Temple, that it was more or less under compulsion, that at an hotel in London it arose from her missing a train and Temple taking a room for her, and taking it in their names as man and wife; and that at Sheerness it had happened once only at her girl friend's house, when Temple called, and the girl friend was upstairs. Pressed by the husband on the question whether she was pregnant as the result of the adultery, the wife positively denied it, and said Temple had taken precautions against such a result. I find the following facts: (i) The wife was in fact on Aug. 10, 1916, pregnant of a child which was born on Mar. 14, 1917. (ii) The husband was not the father of that child, which was a nine months' child and was conceived in June, 1916, when the husband was in France, and was not the result of the intercourse of the husband and wife either at the end of July or on Aug. 10, 1916. (iii) On and for some weeks before Aug. 10, 1916, the wife knew she was pregnant. (iv) The husband was willing to forgive the wife the adultery to which she had confessed, provided the wife was not by reason of the adultery with child, and was not willing to forgive her if she was with child. (v) The husband asked the wife whether she was, by reason of her adultery, with child, and asked in such a way as to make it clear to the wife that his willingness to forgive depended upon her not being with child. (vi) The wife asserted positively that she was not with child, knowing that such assertion was false. (vii) The wife so lied in order to induce the husband to forgive her. (viii) The husband, believing the wife's assertion, and in consequence of that belief, expressed his forgiveness and slept with his wife the same night. (ix) The husband left for France on Aug. 11, 1916, and first heard of his wife's pregnancy after his return invalided in September, 1916. (x) The husband filed his petition on Oct. 28, 1916.

A In these circumstances it is said that there is an absolute bar to the dissolution of the marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery; that the adultery had been condoned by forgiveness, made complete by the resumption of marital intercourse; and that, the adultery complained of having been condoned, it is immaterial how the forgiveness was induced. I do not agree that I am driven to that result in the present case. The first observation I desire to make is that, in my view, the
B fact that the husband has had intercourse with a delinquent wife is not absolutely conclusive and does not entirely shut out the inquiry whether there has been that forgiveness and blotting out of the offence which amounts to condonation. Condonation is a question of fact. It may be express; it may be implied. The fact that a husband has had intercourse with a wife known to be delinquent is very strong evidence of complete forgiveness of the known offence, for, as LORD STOWELL
C said in Beeby v. Beeby (1) (1 Hag. Ecc. at p. 793), "it is to be presumed he would not take her to his bed again unless he had forgiven her." But if to an express forgiveness it be an answer to say that it was obtained by fraud of one of the parties, that answer must equally be open to a forgiveness implied from the fact of cohabitation. If fraud inducing the forgiveness is irrelevant in the one case, it must be irrelevant in the other. I hold, therefore, that the question I have
D to ask myself is this: To the apparent forgiveness proved—apparent both by words and the act of intercourse—is it an answer to say that the whole of that forgiveness was obtained by the fraudulent misrepresentations made by the wife for the purpose of obtaining that forgiveness? It was so obtained—without the fraud it never would have been obtained. The fraud was in reference to matters which the husband had shown to the wife to be material to the question whether he should blot out her offence. The wife knowing that, and knowing that she was lying,
E lied in order to induce him to blot out her offence. I have been referred to a number of cases and especially to the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Bernstein v. Bernstein (2). Counsel could not refer me to any authority in which the point before me had been directly decided. The conclusion of law at which I have arrived is that, upon the facts as I have found them, there was no real condonation
F —there was an appearance but not the reality of forgiveness. The offence appeared to be, but was not in fact blotted out. The husband was cheated by the wife into his words and acts of Aug. 10, 1916. To permit the wife to rely upon these words and acts in answer to this petition would be to enable her to escape from the consequences of her own misconduct by means of her own fraud. I therefore hold that the answer is not made out, and I pronounce a decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage, with the custody to the husband of the child of the marriage.

Solicitors: Darley, Cumberland & Co.; T. Duerdin Dutton & Co.

[Reported by D. COTES-PREEDY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re SAILLARD. PRATT v. GAMBLE

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Bankes and Warrington, L.J.J.), July 18, 19, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 Ch. 401; 86 L.J.Ch. 749; 117 L.T. 545]

Income Tax—Annuity “free of all duties”—Liability to deduction of tax.

By his will the testator directed that £200 per annum “free of all duties” should be paid out of the income of his trust estate to any trustee who should be a solicitor for his trouble in acting as trustee.

Held: income tax was not covered by the words “free of all duties,” and, therefore, the annuity was payable subject to the deduction of tax.

Decision of NEVILLE, J., [1917] 2 Ch. 140, affirmed.

Notes. Applied: Re Loveless, Farrer v. Loveless, [1918-19] All E.R. Rep. 403. Considered: Re Shrewsbury Estate Acts, Countess of Shrewsbury v. Earl of Shrewsbury, [1923] All E.R.Rep. 666. Referred to: Re Crosse, Oldham v. Crosse, [1920] 1 Ch. 240; Re Wells' Will Trusts, Public Trustee v. Wells, [1940] 2 All E.R. 68; Re Hirst, Public Trustee v. Hirst, [1941] 3 All E.R. 466; Re Skinner, Milbourne v. Skinner, [1942] 1 All E.R. 32.

As to the effect of particular expressions as indicating that an annuity is free of tax, see 32 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 573, para. 987; and for cases see 39 DIGEST 166 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Bannerman's Estate, Bannerman v. Young (1882), 21 Ch.D. 105; 51 L.J.Ch. 449; 39 Digest 167, 583.
- (2) Turner v. Mullineux (1861), 1 John. & H. 334; 70 E.R. 775; 39 Digest 167, 579.

Also referred to in argument:

- Wall v. Wall* (1847), 15 Sim. 513; 16 L.J.Ch. 305; 11 Jur. 403; 60 E.R. 718; 39 Digest 166, 574.

Appeal from a decision of NEVILLE, J. ([1917] 2 Ch. 140).

By his will, dated Dec. 2, 1915, the testator, Philip F. R. Saillard, appointed his wife, Emily, his daughter Emily Pratt, Algernon Edward Sydney, solicitor, and his partner, Henry Gilbert Cubitt, executors and trustees, and, after bequeathing certain specific legacies and numerous annuities “free of all duties,” directed his trustees to hold his real and personal estate on the trusts therein declared. Clause 25 of the will provided as follows:

“In addition to the ordinary power of indemnity and right to reimbursement given by law to trustees I direct that there shall be paid a sum of two hundred pounds per annum free of all duties to the said Algernon Edward Sydney or any other trustee of this my will who shall be a solicitor as from my death out of the income for the time being of the trust premises for and in respect of his trouble in acting as a trustee of this my will so long as he shall continue to act as such trustee. And also in addition that the said Algernon Edward Sydney and every other trustee of this my will who shall be a solicitor may act as solicitor to my estate and shall be entitled to charge and shall be paid all usual professional or other charges for any business done by him or his firm in the premises whether in the ordinary course of his profession or not and although not of a nature requiring the employment of a solicitor in the same manner as if he had not been an executor or trustee of this my will or any codicil hereto and for the time which he shall necessarily or properly employ in the execution of his duties as an executor or trustee.”

By a codicil made on Dec. 21, 1915, to his will, the testator provided that if Algernon Edward Sydney should die in his lifetime, or renounce probate, or decline

A to act as trustee, John Gamble, solicitor, should be appointed an executor or trustee in his place.

The testator died on Feb. 15, 1916, and his will with the codicil thereto was proved on May 2, 1916, by the plaintiffs Emily Pratt and Henry Gilbert Cubitt and the defendant John Gamble, the executors. Algernon Edward Sydney survived the testator, and by an instrument dated Mar. 1, 1916, renounced probate of the will and codicil, and by an instrument dated Mar. 6, 1916, Emily Saillard, the widow of the testator, also renounced probate. On Feb. 15, 1917, the plaintiffs, as two of the trustees of the will, signed a cheque for £150 in favour of the defendant, John Gamble, purporting to be the amount payable to him under the direction contained in cl. 25 of the will for the year which ended on that day, being £200 less income tax. John Gamble objected to the deduction made for income tax, and it was then arranged that he should accept the £150 as a payment on account of the £200, and be paid the balance if and when it was ascertained that such deduction for income tax ought not to have been made. The plaintiffs took out a summons on Mar. 16, 1917, to determine whether any and if so what income tax should be deducted on payment of the sum of £200, payable on Feb. 15, 1917, to John Gamble out of the income for the time being of the trust estate for and in respect of his trouble in acting as a trustee of the will during the year which ended on that day. The summons was adjourned into court, and came on to be heard on June 5, 1917, before NEVILLE, J., who held that the £200 a year was given subject to income tax. John Gamble now appealed from that decision.

J. F. Carr for the defendant, John Gamble.

R. Wright Taylor for the infants entitled to the residuary estate.

E Owen Thompson for the trustees other than John Gamble.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J., read cl. 25 of the will, referred to the codicil and the citation of probate, and continued: The question raised by this appeal is whether Mr. Gamble takes the annual sum of £200 free of income tax. In other words, whether the gift comprised in the will is a gift not only of the sum of £200 per annum, but of a sum equal to the income tax on the amount, so that he may receive £200 per annum, the income tax in respect of that annuity being paid out of the estate. NEVILLE, J., has decided that Mr. Gamble must bear his own income tax, and it is against that decision that the present appeal is brought. It was no doubt at one time thought that a testator could not by will give interests that would be free of income tax, and it was thought that a disposition of that sort would be contrary to the provisions of the Income Tax Acts. That notion has now been held to be entirely erroneous, and it is simply a matter of construction of the will whether the testator has given the annuity together with a sum equal to the income tax to the annuitant so that the annuitant may receive the annuity free of income tax, or whether he has simply given an annuity and left the annuitant to bear his own income tax. That is entirely a question of construction. In Re Banner-
 H man's Estate, Bannerman v. Young (1), HALL, V.-C., said (21 Ch.D. at p. 108):

"The rule was after all this [and he deduces this rule as the result of the authorities to which he refers]—Whether or not an annuity should be free from any deduction for income tax must depend upon the meaning of the words used by the testator, i.e., if upon the true construction of the words the court considered that it was intended by the testator that the annuitant should have the specified annuity without the tax being first deducted, there was no rule of law to prevent effect being given to that intention. The question, therefore, in every case is one of construction of the language of the will."

I Numerous cases have been decided upon words in wills as to what and what is not sufficient to pass an annuity free of income tax. It has been decided that if the annuity is directed to be payable without any deduction whatever, or if the words were a clear yearly sum free from all deductions and abatement whatsoever, such a gift in those terms is not sufficient to give to the legatee also the income tax, but he must bear his own income tax. On the other hand, it has been determined more than once that if a testator uses language in his will which shows that when he uses the word "deductions" he intends to include income tax as a deduction, then the gift will be free of income tax. For example, in Turner v. Mullineux (2), where there was a gift to a widow of an annuity out of rents and profits free from income tax or any other deduction, so that the testator showed that he treated, for the purpose of his will, income tax as a deduction, and in the latter part of the will there were gifts to daughters of other annuities free from all deductions, and it was held that all the annuities were free from income tax. That was because the testator had shown on the face of the will that the meaning he attached to the word "deductions" in his will extended to and included income tax.

In the present case we have the words "free of all duties." In my opinion, that expression does not extend to and include income tax. What the testator gives to the annuitant is this annual sum free of all duties in the sense and meaning of all death duties—that is to say, all duties that are payable by reason of this beneficial disposition that he makes of some part of his property. But the annuitant taking an annuity free of all duties is not entitled to claim also the income tax upon it. He must pay his own income tax. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the judgment of the court below was right and the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree.

WARRINGTON, L.J.—I also agree. The question is purely one of construction as to what is meant in this will of the testator by the gift of an annuity "free of all duties." That is all we have to determine. The testator uses the same expression wherever he desires to make a bequest of whatsoever nature free from duties. He gives in the early part of his will many legacies, all of which are given "free of all duties." There can be no question as to what is meant there. But in cl. 5, for example, he gives a number of annuities "free of all duties." If the present appellant is right, all those annuities are payable free of income tax. It does not rest there, because in the trusts of the proceeds of sale and conversion of his residuary estate he directs that the trustees are to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts—and the legacies bequeathed by this my will or any codicil hereto, and make provision for the payment of any annuity so bequeathed, and pay the debts on any legacies or annuities bequeathed by this my will or by any codicil free of duties—how can the trustees out of the proceeds of sale and conversion pay the income tax on these annuities? It is quite impossible. I need not read the many places in which he uses the same expression. I only point out that in dealing with the proceeds of the residue he directs annuities to be paid to his wife and to his children, in every case using the same expression—"free of all duties." We have to construe this expression as used in this will; and, when a testator, sitting down to make his will, gives a legacy, whether it is a legacy of a capital sum or an annual sum, and says it is to be "free of all duties," what does he mean? He only means those duties which, if he did not use that expression, would be payable because it is a gift by will. With all respect, it seems to me idle to point out that in the Income Tax Acts it is described as a "duty." Of course, it is a duty in a sense; so is the customs duty and taxes imposed on imports. The question which we have to determine is what the ordinary testator means by "duties." Can it be supposed for a moment that an ordinary person ever speaks of income tax as income duty? For these reasons, it seems to me that, on the construction of this will, it is perfectly plain that what the testator meant by the word "duties" is what I have said—namely, those duties that would otherwise be payable because the gift is one by will.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: J. Gamble; Nye, Moreton & Clowes.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

MAINE SPINNING CO. v. SUTCLIFFE & CO.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Bailhache, J.), December 13, 1917]

[Reported 87 L.J.K.B. 382; 118 L.T. 351; 34 T.L.R. 154]

B Sale of Goods—Contract—F.o.b. contract—Place of delivery—Condition that delivery to be made on board ship for benefit of both parties to contract—One party to contract not entitled to waive condition without consent of other party.

C By a contract made in January, 1915, sellers in England sold to buyers, a company in America, 100,000 pounds of wool subject to removal of the war-time embargo on the export of wool then existing, and on the term "delivery Liverpool." The embargo having been lifted, the sellers, though not obliged to do so, agreed to get the licences then necessary to export wool to America, but, although they did their best to obtain the licences for the whole amount of wool, they succeeded in getting an export licence for only 25,000 pounds. To meet this difficulty the buyers offered to take delivery of the goods at the railhead at Liverpool before the goods were put on board ship, but the sellers insisted on making delivery on board, and in consequence they were able to deliver only the 25,000 pounds for which there was an export licence. In an action by the buyers for damages for breach of contract to deliver 100,000 pounds of wool, the trial judge found that, on the true construction of the contract, "delivery Liverpool" meant delivery f.o.b. Liverpool.

E Held: the condition in an f.o.b. contract that the place of delivery is on board ship was included for the benefit of both parties to the contract and not solely for the benefit of the buyer, and so the condition could not be waived by one party without the consent of the other; in the present case, therefore, the sellers were entitled to insist on making delivery on board ship and the buyers were bound to accept delivery there; and since the sellers were excused from delivering the 75,000 pounds by the failure to get a licence, the action failed.

F Notes. Referred to: Wilson v. Wright, [1937] 4 All E.R. 371; Fibrosa Société Anonyme v. Fairbairn Lawson Combe Barbour, Ltd., [1941] 2 All E.R. 300.

As to shipment under an f.o.b. contract, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 177, para. 304. For cases on the place of delivery, see 39 DIGEST 546.

G Cases referred to:

- (1) Sailing Ship Blairmore Co., Ltd. v. Macredie, [1898] A.C. 593; 79 L.T. 217; 14 T.L.R. 513; 8 Asp.M.L.C. 429; 3 Com. Cas. 241; 24 R. 893; sub nom. The Blairmore, 67 L.J.P.C. 96, H.L.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 340, 2636.
- (2) Wackerbath v. Masson (1812), 3 Camp. 270; 170 E.R. 1378, N.P.; 39 Digest 555, 1631.

H Action in the Commercial List tried by BAILHACHE, J.

The plaintiffs claimed damages for breach of contract to deliver 100,000 lb. of merino wool sold by the defendants, who were wool merchants in Halifax, England. The plaintiffs, the Maine Spinning Co., were manufacturers carrying on business in Boston, Massachusetts, U.S.A. Of the 100,000 lb. of wool sold, 25,000 lb. and no more were delivered. The plaintiffs sued in respect of the balance of 75,000 lb. The sale note was in these terms:

"Sold to Messrs. the Maine Spinning Co., 185, Summer Street, Boston, Mass., 100,000 lb. of merino wool at 27½d. per lb. This order is taken subject to the embargo being removed and your affidavits being accepted. Terms: Sixty days. London bank credit Bradford. Conditioning house certificate. Duty unpaid. Delivery Liverpool, England, 15,000 lb. weekly, commencing March."

The plaintiffs appointed the defendants their agents for getting licences for the export of wool to America. At the time the contract was made there was a general prohibition of the export of wool in existence, and this was known to both parties. But the British Government had so far removed the embargo as to allow shipments to approved persons under licences. The defendants proposed to take steps to get licences, and they got a licence for 25,000 lb., but failed to get any further licence. The plaintiffs, in consequence of the difficulty with regard to licences, undertook to accept delivery at Liverpool before the goods were put on board ship.

Schwabe, K.C., and F. T. Barrington-Ward for the plaintiffs.

Le Quesne (R. A. Wright, K.C., with him) for the defendants.

BAILHACHE, J., referred to the terms of the contract and continued: The contract, it is to be observed, is subject to the embargo being removed, and that requires a little explanation, although not very much turns upon it in this particular case. There was existing at this time an embargo against the exportation of wool from this country, which at first had been absolute; but by the beginning of 1915, according to the evidence of an experienced gentleman in the trade, Mr. Francis Willey, the embargo had been lifted in that licences were being freely given to exporters in this country to export, particularly to the United States of America. Under the contract, inasmuch as the wool was for export, and delivery was at Liverpool, it clearly lay upon the plaintiffs to procure the licences required for the export of their wool, but by some arrangement, not appearing clearly in the letters which no doubt was due to business convenience rather than to any agreement between the parties inasmuch as the defendants were in this country and the plaintiffs were in America, the defendants in fact took steps to get these licences although they were under no obligation to do so. At first I was under the impression that one part of the case was that the defendants, in having undertaken this duty, were slack in the matter of getting these licences, and, have not done their best to procure them. But it appears that this is not a point which is relied upon; it is a point which could not be relied upon by reason of certain admissions which were made upon an interlocutory application during the course of the proceedings. It being the fact, therefore, according to Mr. Willey, that licences were still necessary, and it not being now contended that the defendants did not do their best to obtain the licences, the fact that they failed to obtain licences is a sufficient answer to their failure to make deliveries under this contract subject to one point, which is the point on which counsel for the plaintiffs has fought the case.

Counsel for the plaintiffs calls attention to the fact that the contract provides for, "delivery Liverpool," and he says that his clients, the plaintiffs, were always ready and willing to take delivery in Liverpool, and, inasmuch as they were ready and willing to take delivery in Liverpool, whether they could get the goods to the United States or not was a matter for them and did not concern the defendants who were bound to hand over the goods in Liverpool. Delivery in Liverpool is to some extent ambiguous. When one considers that the wool was being bought for export to the plaintiffs it is easy to come to the conclusion that "delivery Liverpool" did not mean "delivery on rail Liverpool," but meant delivery in the way in which goods are delivered in Liverpool when they are delivered for export at Liverpool, that is to say, "delivery f.o.b. Liverpool," and if there is any ambiguity in "delivery Liverpool" I think I am fully entitled to look at the cables and letters which passed between the parties at the time the arrangement was made. Without those cables and letters I should have come to the conclusion that the true construction of the words "delivery Liverpool" meant "delivery f.o.b. Liverpool." If I look at the cables and letters leading up to and immediately after this contract,

A they state in the most express terms that the price was 27½d. a pound, and that the contract was f.o.b. Liverpool. Counsel for the plaintiffs, although he contests that, says, even if that be so, it is open to one of the parties to the contract—the B plaintiffs in this case—to waive “f.o.b. Liverpool” and to take delivery of these goods short of Liverpool, or at Liverpool off rail instead of on board ship. He might have taken delivery at Bradford, the place where the goods were being C prepared and combed for fulfilment of this contract, but in my opinion that is a mistaken view of the law. It is quite true, of course, that where a condition in a contract is wholly for the benefit of, and entirely for the benefit of, one of the parties to the contract, such a condition may be waived by the person for whose benefit, entirely and solely, it was inserted in the contract; but where one of the terms of the contract is the mode of delivery, it is not a condition which the other party may waive, but it is a part of the contract which has to be fulfilled by the D seller making delivery at that particular place and the buyer receiving delivery there, and it is not a condition which is entirely for the benefit of either party to the contract, and neither party can waive it without the consent of the other.
Of course, if they both agreed to waive it there is an end of the matter, but either party is entitled to insist upon making or receiving delivery in strict accordance with the terms of the contract.

The best statement I know of the law in this respect is contained in a very short sentence in a judgment of LORD WATSON in his speech in the House of Lords in Sailing Ship Blairmore Co., Ltd. v. Macredie (1) ([1898] A.C. at p. 607). That E case was a different case from this. The sailing ship Blairmore had gone to the bottom of the sea, and she was insured against a total loss. It would have cost a great deal more than she was worth to bring her up to the surface and repair her, but if she had been brought to the surface she was not so far damaged but that the repairs would have come to considerably less than she was worth. If, therefore, she could have been got up to the surface without expense to the owner, she could have been repaired at a sum which would not have left her a constructive total loss, and in that case the underwriters would not be liable. The underwriters F therefore subscribed between themselves a sufficient sum of money to raise the ship, and, having got her to the surface, said to the owners: “There is the ship.
Go and repair her. We have got her to the surface, and she can be repaired at an expense very much less than her value when repaired. She is no longer a constructive total loss, and we are no longer liable to pay on our policy.” It was G held that the underwriters were not entitled to defeat their contract by spending a considerable sum of money in raising the Blairmore from the bottom of the sea, and what LORD WATSON says is this:

“The rule of law applicable to contracts is that neither of the parties can by his own act or default defeat the obligations which he has undertaken to fulfil.”

H That is the rule of law which I must apply in this case. I have instanced Sailing Ship Blairmore Co., Ltd. v. Macredie (1), which is a case not at all analogous to this; but counsel for the defendants has referred me to Wackerbath v. Masson (2).
The headnote is this:

I “Where, in a contract for the sale of sugar, there is the following term, ‘free on board a foreign ship,’ the seller is not bound to deliver it into the hands of the purchaser, or to transfer it into his name in the books of the warehouse where it lies, but only to put it on board a foreign ship, which it is the duty of the purchaser to name.”

That is a decision of LORD ELLENBOROUGH as long ago as 1812. I was not aware of that decision; but I was quite prepared without it, applying the rule laid down by LORD WATSON, to say that in this case the plaintiffs were not entitled to demand delivery of this wool anywhere but on board ship at Liverpool. This being my view of the law, and that being the only point left in this case, my judgment is for the defendants with costs.

Judgment for defendants.

Solicitors: Paines, Blythe & Hurtable; Whitfield, Byrne & Dean, for Hirst, Whitley & Akeroyd, Halifax.

[Reported by T. W. MORGAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

HARRISONS AND CROSSFIELD, LTD. v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Rowlatt, J.), July 6, 9, 12, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 755; 86 L.J.K.B. 1461; 33 T.L.R. 517; 61 Sol. Jo. 647]

Carriage of Goods—Contract—Ratification—Goods obtained dishonestly by employee—Conviction of employee for larceny—Possession of goods laid in employer.

The plaintiffs, tea merchants, had notified the defendants that they wished them to call for a parcel of tea which they wished conveyed to consignees. The defendants had in their employment a carman, B., who called at the plaintiffs' premises, wearing the defendants' uniform and with one of the defendants' vans, and obtained possession of the tea, which he then converted to his own use and disposed of. Subsequently, the defendants prosecuted B. to conviction for stealing the tea, and in that prosecution the defendants laid the property in the tea in themselves. On a claim by the plaintiffs against the defendants for the value of the tea,

Held: in prosecuting B. and laying the possession of the tea in themselves the defendants affirmed their possession, but only to the minimum extent required to satisfy the law of larceny, and in so doing they ratified, not the possession which B. obtained, namely, possession under a contract of carriage, but a bare bailment; on that footing they could not be made liable for non-delivery of the tea, but only for negligence or default on the part of a servant acting in the course of his employment, of which there was no evidence; and, therefore, the plaintiffs' claim failed.

Notes. As to ratification of a contract of agency, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 173-181; and for cases see 1 DIGEST (Repl.) 453 et seq.

Case referred to:

(1) Scarf v. Jardine (1882), 7 App. Cas. 345; 51 L.J.Q.B. 612; 47 L.T. 258; 30 W.R. 893, H.L.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 669, 5178.

Also referred to in argument:

Brook v. Hook (1871), L.R. 6 Exch. 89; 40 L.J.Ex. 50; 24 L.T. 34; 19 W.R. 508; 1 Digest (Repl.) 454, 1056.

M'Kenzie v. British Linen Co. (1881), 6 App. Cas. 82; 44 L.T. 431; 29 W.R. 477, H.L.; 1 Digest (Repl.) 454, 1057.

Action in the Commercial List tried by ROWLATT, J., without a jury. The facts appear in the judgments.

George Wallace, K.C., and A. F. Wootten for the plaintiffs.

Eustace Hills and St. John Hutchinson for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

A July 12, 1917. ROWLATT, J., read the following judgment. The plaintiffs claim from the defendants the value of a parcel of tea on the footing that the tea was delivered by Messrs. Buchanan, the plaintiffs' agents, to the defendants for carriage and has been lost by them. The tea was, in fact, obtained from Messrs. Buchanan by one Bailey by fraud without the authority of the defendants. Bailey on Dec. 21, 1915, took a horse and van belonging to the defendants, put on the defendants' uniform, and collected the tea from Messrs. Buchanan's warehouse. B Messrs. Buchanan gave the tea to Bailey for carriage (as they believed) by the defendants. The plaintiffs, some ten days or so previously, had sent to the defendants a consignment note including these goods, and Bailey called in pretended pursuance of this note. His action was, however, wholly fraudulent, his intention, which he succeeded in carrying out, always being to convert the tea to his own use.

C In those circumstances, apart from anything else, there could be no liability on the part of the defendants. It is said, however, that the defendants have made themselves liable by what they afterwards did. After the goods had been disposed of by Bailey the defendants prosecuted him for larceny of the goods, and in that prosecution the property in the goods was laid in the defendants. This, it is said, is an adoption of the possession by the defendants while the goods were in fact D in Bailey's hands, and constitutes a ratification of his action in obtaining the goods from the plaintiffs. This is the point in the case.

E It was contended by counsel for the defendants that no one can ratify a criminal act, but I do not think that in this case we are involved in the discussion of that question. It may be that a person cannot ratify an act when the ratification involves the adoption of a criminal element in it, but here it is not argued that the defendants adopted the fraud, only the possession. Supposing that the defendants had found Bailey in the possession of the goods and had taken them from him and carried them towards their destination as desired by the plaintiffs, they would have ratified his action in obtaining them and carried out honestly the mandate which he intended dishonestly to disregard. Would there have been any reason why they should not? I am at a loss to see any. Therefore, I am of F opinion that there is no ground for the argument that the defendants could not ratify the action of Bailey in obtaining these goods. The question is whether they did.

Ratification does not rest upon estoppel. It need not be communicated to the party alleging it. Ratification is a unilateral act of the will—namely, the approval after the event of the assumption of an authority which did not exist at the time. G It may be expressed in words or implied from or involved in acts. It is implied from or involved in acts when you cannot logically analyse the act without imputing such approval to the party, whether his mind in fact approved or disapproved or wholly disregarded the question. In the present case it cannot be suggested that the defendants after the goods were disposed of in fact approved of the assumption by Bailey of authority to collect them from the plaintiffs. What is H contended is that their action in his prosecution necessarily involved such approval. Counsel for the defendants contended that nothing that they did was relevant in any sense, that the barest possession is sufficient to sustain a charge of larceny, and that all that they did was to affirm that the goods were in their van. I think that they did affirm that the goods were in their possession—in what character I will consider in a moment—but it seems to me they did affirm their possession, I and this in a very unequivocal way, for they called upon the criminal law to punish Bailey on the footing of such possession for a crime which was different from his crime in fraudulently taking the goods from the plaintiffs' possession. Whether Bailey could have objected in the prosecution that they could not change the form of his guilt by an election ex post facto I do not pause to inquire, but for the purpose of determining whether they adopted the possession I think their action is as conclusive against them as the civil action taken by parties put to an election of a different kind referred to by LORD BLACKBURN in Scarfe v. Jardine (1) (7 App. Cas. at p. 361).

But now arises the vital question: In what character did they adopt the possession? Counsel for the plaintiffs treated it as necessarily following that they adopted the possession which Bailey obtained, namely, possession under a contract of carriage. But this, I think, is not so. It is essential to note with complete accuracy exactly what they did, and this was to take up the position that Bailey's possession after he obtained the goods and immediately before he disposed of them was their possession—no more. Supposing that they had actually found Bailey in possession of these goods, they might have called upon him as their servant or as purporting to act as such to give them up to them. In doing this they might have adopted his possession, but not necessarily the contract for carriage which he had purported to make. They might merely have taken them in order to send them back to the owners, repudiating the contract. Again, finding Bailey in possession, they might have ordered him to take the goods back to the owners. They would have made his possession their own, but would not have made themselves carriers of the goods. These considerations suffice, in my judgment, to show that the position taken in the prosecution does not involve the ratification of the contract of carriage. The argument is in the last degree technical, and must be conclusive in every stage. It fails because possession in the circumstances can be affirmed without affirming possession as carriers. All that the defendants necessarily ratified was a bare bailment. On this footing they cannot be made liable merely for non-delivery, but only for negligence or for some default on the part of a servant acting in the course of his employment. There is nothing of this sort. It must depend on the facts. Ratification has no bearing here. Its operation is exhausted when it is determined that Bailey's possession is to be regarded in law as the defendants' possession to the minimum extent required to satisfy the law of larceny. It does not put Bailey in the position of acting in the course of his employment when he feloniously made away with the goods, nor does it create for legal purposes a fictitious state of facts revealing negligence where there was none. These considerations may seem subtle, but the argument itself is unreal. There might be a shorter answer to it, but, taking it as put forward, I think it fails on analysis. The action must be dismissed, with costs.

Solicitors: E. F. Turner & Sons; M. C. Tait.

[Reported by T. W. MORGAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

MUNICIPAL MUTUAL INSURANCE, LTD. v. PONTEFRAC'T CORPORATION

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Sankey, J.), February 8, 9, 12, 28, 1917]

B

[Reported 116 L.T. 671; 33 T.L.R. 234; 15 L.G.R. 299]

Corporation—Powers—Insurance of public buildings insured by local authority—Duration of policy—Reasonableness—Actuarial position of insurers—Onus on corporation to prove unsoundness—Obligation of insured to renew.

C

An agreement made by a public corporation is not to be judged by the event, if, on the face of it, it is not entirely improvident or unreasonable, or foreign and unnecessary for the express or implied purpose of the corporation, or detrimental to the public welfare. It will not be held to be ultra vires merely because the bargain contained in it turns out to be a bad one for the corporation.

New Windsor Corpn. v. Stovell (1) (1886), 27 Ch.D. 665, applied.

D

The plaintiff company was started in 1902 with the primary object of affording a cheaper rate of insurance for public buildings than the rate then in force. The system of insurance was largely carried out by re-insurance treaties. When they accepted a risk the plaintiffs never retained more than a certain amount on their own account, but distributed the remainder of the risk with a group of underwriters at Lloyd's, and still further with another group of underwriters at Lloyd's they insured against the aggregate of losses exceeding a certain amount. From time to time the plaintiffs altered the companies with whom they re-insured their risks, and their scheme met with considerable success. By an agreement dated Dec. 2, 1904, the defendant corporation effected an insurance with the plaintiffs. The agreement contained schedules in which property insured could from time to time be entered, and there was a provision that it should last for five years. On June 24, 1908, a continuation agreement was entered into under which the defendants agreed to insure all the properties mentioned in the first agreement for a period of five years from the expiration of the fifth year after the last entry of any insurance in any of the schedules. In other words, the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants might last ten years, because if, when the end of the fifth year was approaching, further property was entered in a schedule, the whole of the properties were insurable for five years thereafter.

E

F

G

Held: (i) the agreement was not ultra vires the corporation as being for an unreasonable period or otherwise; (ii) inasmuch as the plaintiffs, the re-insuring companies and Lloyd's underwriters had never failed to meet their obligations, and for thirteen years the defendants and hundreds of other corporations in a like position had insured with the plaintiffs, the onus was on the defendants to show that the plaintiffs' scheme and the re-insurance companies were actuarially unsound, and this they had failed to do.

H

I

Notes. As to limitation of powers of corporations, see 9 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 62 et seq.; and for cases see 13 DIGEST (Repl.) 269 et seq. As to duration of a policy and conditions obliging the assured to renew, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 242, 248; and for cases see 29 DIGEST 410.

Case referred to:

(1) New Windsor Corpn. v. Stovell (1884), 27 Ch.D. 665; 54 L.J.Ch. 113; 51 L.T. 626; 33 W.R. 223; 13 Digest (Repl.) 272, 963.

Action in the Commercial List tried before SANKEY, J., without a jury.

The plaintiffs claimed from the defendant corporation a sum of £77 16s. 1d., being premiums due from the defendants under certain policies of insurance whereby the defendants insured certain of the public buildings in their area. A

The facts of the case appear in the headnote and judgment.

A. Adair Roche, K.C., and R. A. Kyffin for the plaintiffs.

A. Macmorran, K.C., and E. H. Tindal Atkinson for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult. B

Feb. 28, 1917. SANKEY, J., read the following judgment. In this case the Municipal Mutual Insurance, Ltd., are the plaintiffs, and the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Pontefract are the defendants. The plaintiffs' claim is for premiums due from the defendants under certain policies of insurance whereby the defendants insured certain of the public buildings in their area. The defendants resist the claim upon a number of technical grounds which I will deal with later, but their main contentions are two: (i) that the agreement between them and the plaintiffs was so unreasonable as to be ultra vires the corporation; and (ii) that it was an implied term that the plaintiff company should be and should continue sound from an actuarial point of view, and that this implied condition has not been fulfilled. The plaintiffs in their reply, while denying these allegations, contend that they disclose no defence in law to their claim. C D

The history of the plaintiff company is as follows. As far back as 1902 certain gentlemen in the municipal and insurance world considered that the rates under which some large insurance companies were willing to cover public buildings were too high. They conducted inquiries and went into statistics covering a period of twenty years, and found, so they allege, that the ordinary rate of insurance was 1s. 6d. per cent., but that the loss ratio was only 5d. per cent. The reason was said to be that public buildings in themselves were not a hazardous risk, and that what was called the moral element, namely, the risk of such premises being fraudulently set on fire, was probably entirely absent. The Municipal Mutual Insurance, Ltd., was, therefore, started in the year 1902 with the primary object of giving a cheaper rate of insurance for public buildings. The company was limited by guarantee, but the policy-holders were to elect managers and managing trustees; they were to pay substantially what was called the tariff rate, i.e., the rate of 1s. 6d. per cent., charged by a number of large companies, but were to get periodical distributions which could be set off against premiums and so reduce the latter. To attain this end it was necessary to have five-yearly contracts with the assured. The system of insurance was largely carried out by re-insurance treaties and may be described briefly as follows: The plaintiffs themselves when they accepted a risk never retained more than a certain amount on their own account, and they distributed the remainder up to a certain maximum in each case over a number of re-insurance companies. In this particular case some nine re-insurance companies were referred to who had re-insurance treaties with the plaintiffs. Over and above these re-insurance treaties the plaintiffs re-insured the greater portion of the risk which they themselves retained with a group of underwriters at Lloyd's, and still further with another group of underwriters at Lloyd's they insured against the aggregate of losses exceeding a certain amount. No criticism was passed by the defendants upon the underwriters who subscribed the Lloyd's policies, but it was said that the policies themselves were not satisfactory because of the small amount insured by them and because of the fact that they are terminable on a somewhat short notice. With regard to the re-insuring companies the plaintiffs from time to time considered and altered the companies with whom they re-insured their risks. It is not necessary to go fully either into the names of these companies or their resources for the purposes of my judgment. The scheme of the plaintiffs met with considerable success. There are now 500 public authorities who are insured in the plaintiff company, including eleven metropolitan councils, fifteen county boroughs, ten county councils, eight cities, six rural councils, eighty-five urban councils, forty-five non-county boroughs, twenty-six Scottish boroughs, E F G H I

A and a very large number of guardian and education authorities. The defendants effected their first insurance with the plaintiffs on Dec. 2, 1904, by an agreement of that date. The agreement contained schedules in which property insured could from time to time be entered, and there was a provision that it should last five years. Later on, on June 24, 1908, a continuation agreement was entered into under which the defendants agreed to insure all the properties mentioned in the first agreement for a period of five years from the expiration of the fifth year after the last entry of any insurance in any of the schedules. In other words, the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants might last ten years, because if, when the end of the fifth year was approaching, further property was entered in a schedule the whole of the properties were insurable for five years thereafter. The defendants were quite content, as were many hundreds of other public bodies, to continue this method of insurance for a period of eleven or twelve years, but in August, 1916, they refused to pay any further premiums, with the consequence that a writ was issued against them claiming the sum of £77 16s. 1d., to which they have set up the defences above indicated. Before dealing with them it is necessary to consider how the law stands. I was referred to BRICE ON ULTRA VIRES (3rd Edn.), pp. 170, 599, where such cases as bear on the subject are collected, and in my opinion the law is as follows: An agreement made by a public corporation is not to be judged by the event. If on the face of it it is not entirely improvident or unreasonable, or foreign to and unnecessary for the express or implied purposes of the corporation, or detrimental to the public welfare, it will not be held to be ultra vires merely because the bargain contained in it turns out to be a bad one for the corporation: New Windsor Corpn. v. Stowell (1). At the same time, I conceive that a court would not declare the contract to be ultra vires unless satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt by those who desire to impeach it that it was a contract into which the corporation could not or ought not to have entered. It would be impossible for business to be conducted if, as a consequence of there being elected on a public body new members whose views honestly and decidedly differed from those of their predecessors, contracts made by those predecessors were disregarded and sought to be set aside on some ground of personal, and possibly prejudiced, opinion.

I will now deal with the points in order. The first is that the contract was ultra vires. This point is to a great measure covered by the next one, but counsel for the defendants drew especial attention under the heading to the term of the agreement, which, he argued, was so long as to bind the defendants for an unreasonable period. I think this is a fallacy. If the effect of the agreement were to compel the defendants to insure their property for all time it would be ultra vires, but there is no obligation upon the defendants to insure new property with the plaintiffs, and if they do not insure new property the agreement cannot last for more than five years from the date of the last entry. Further, if the defendants desire to insure new property with the plaintiffs, there is no obligation upon them to do so by placing such property in a schedule of the present agreements so as to extend it for five years longer. They can place it in an entirely new policy. In my opinion, this agreement cannot be said to be ultra vires on the score of time.

I now pass to the second point, which is the real defence to the action. The chief points made for the defence were four in number. It is said (i) that certain of the figures in the plaintiffs' balance-sheet were open to criticism; (ii) that the position of the re-insuring companies was unsound; (iii) that it was bad finance to distribute profits in reduction of premiums; and (iv) that although the system of the plaintiffs was quite right in taking into account the small character of the risk involved, it failed to appreciate the fact that a loss when it did occur might be a very heavy one, and, if such a loss did occur, the plaintiffs might not be in a position to meet it. A number of experts were called by the defendants upon these questions. Mr. Keen, their leading witness, went so far as to commit himself to the following statement, after criticising the plaintiffs' scheme:

"I have no hesitation in saying that a local authority with knowledge of the facts to which I have referred would be acting absolutely contrary to its duty to its ratepayers if it took out a policy with the plaintiff company. I would go further and say that when the facts as to the company's financial stability came to its knowledge, it would be acting contrary to its duty if it allowed the insurance to rest simply upon such a policy."

This looks to me equivalent to asserting that the defendants have either not taken the trouble to consider whether they have got a proper insurance society behind them, or, if they have done so, have neglected their duty in insuring with the plaintiffs. I am not surprised under those circumstances to find that nobody from Pontefract was called on behalf of the defence. A number of Mr. Keen's other statements appear to me to be made without hesitation, and I cannot accept any such sweeping accusation as that made by him when I recollect the large number of public authorities who are insured in the plaintiff company, including many of the largest cities and towns both in England and Scotland, and some of the most important English county boroughs and councils. In fact, if I may be allowed to criticise the evidence given by the defendants as a whole, it seems to me that, with the exception of Mr. Schooling, it was somewhat of a partisan character. Mr. Schooling, who gave his evidence with great moderation, said that, so far as the plaintiffs were concerned, he had no fault to find with their own accounts or with the way they managed their business. He said that the plaintiffs, so far as their own accounts were concerned, had done very well, that in proportion to their premium income they were distinctly strong, and that the managers had looked after their own company's financial stability in quite a satisfactory fashion. The conclusion of the whole matter, according to Mr. Schooling, was that the position of the plaintiffs might be all right, but it might not, and that the plaintiffs were a small society who left too much to chance. He admitted that the plaintiffs always paid their losses, had increased their true funds, and that the result was a striking one.

In the chaos of calculations with which the defence gradually became involved, one sought for some test of stability in the plaintiff company itself. Figures were given as to such a test, and it appeared to be agreed that the plaintiffs' own accounts satisfied it. For example, it was admitted by Mr. Schooling that the claim ratio of the plaintiff company was low and the reserves good. The reserve funds for the last year were 235 per cent. of the net premium income. In the nine average British companies the claim ratio is 53.1 per cent., and in the plaintiff company it is only 24.4 per cent. So far, therefore, as the plaintiffs' own share is concerned, nothing can be said against their finance except that the funds are small. Mr. Keen said that the stability of the plaintiffs depended upon the stability of its re-insuring companies and those companies were unsound. They were nine in number, all non-tariff ones, and a great deal of evidence was directed to a discussion of their balance-sheets. It is to be remarked that these criticisms were founded upon the balance-sheets for one year only, namely, 1913. The amount they put by to reserve, the ratio of their premium losses, and a number of other matters were discussed, and, so far as Mr. Keen was concerned, with very few exceptions he had no good word to say for any of them. On the other hand, I had the evidence of a Mr. Swains, who has been an insurance broker for thirty-three years, and who knew all of the plaintiffs' re-insuring companies. He said that they were entirely solvent and quite good for their liabilities. Many of them have considerable funds, some of them uncalled capital, although it is true that parts of these funds may have to be allocated to risks other than fire. I do not think it would be right of me to pass judgment on all these re-insurance companies in this action, nor is this a fitting occasion for fighting the battle of tariff and non-tariff companies, who are not parties to this action and have had no adequate opportunity of replying to the criticisms levelled against them. All I know is (i) that the plaintiffs have never failed to meet their obligations; (ii) that

- A the plaintiffs' re-insuring companies have never failed to meet their obligations; and (iii) that Lloyd's underwriters have never failed to meet their obligations. Further than that, year in and year out for thirteen years the defendants and hundreds of other corporations in a like position have insured with the plaintiffs. The onus is on the defendants to satisfy me that the plaintiffs' scheme and the re-insuring companies are actuarially unsound, and they have entirely failed to do so. I do not propose to express any opinion upon tariff and non-tariff companies, or to discuss further the comments made by the defendants' witnesses on the point of distributions made to reduce premiums. As at present advised, I am of opinion that the difference between them and the plaintiffs is a matter of opinion. The one thing that did impress me in the defendants' evidence was the allegation that the plaintiffs might not be able, not that they would not be able, to meet the event of a very heavy loss. I do not, however, think that the omission in the scheme, if it is an omission, to provide for a contingency so remote and so opposed to the twenty years' experience which was collected before the plaintiff company started, and the thirteen years' experience which has accumulated since, is such as to oblige me to say that an insurance with the plaintiffs is ultra vires a public body.
- B
- C
- D I have not to give an opinion whether it is desirable for a corporation to insure with the plaintiffs. If I had, it would be necessary to devote more anxious and careful consideration to the weighty words of Mr. Schooling. What I have got to decide is whether an insurance with the plaintiff company effected and continued by certain members of the defendant corporation is so improvident and unreasonable as to entitle their successors to say that they will no longer be bound by the bargain. The evidence given by the defendants falls far short of the standard necessary to satisfy me of so serious an accusation. With regard to the technical points, three remain: It was said that, having regard to the terms of the policy, there is no consideration for the insurance. I think that is quite wrong. The consideration for the insurance was the entering into the agreement and the mutual promises to pay premiums and indemnity against loss. Then it was said
- E
- F that certain property in Love Lane contained in the fourteenth schedule was not included in the policy, because it had not been entered in the schedule with the consent of the defendants. There are two copies of this policy; one is kept by the plaintiffs and another by the defendants. In my view, having regard to the correspondence between the parties, Love Lane, which was included in the schedule kept by the plaintiffs, was so included with the consent of the defendants, and is therefore insured. The last point was that certain properties in parts 2, 3,
- G
- 4, and 5 of the first schedule were not insured, because they were not initialled in the copy of the policy kept by the defendants. They were, in fact, so initialled in the copy kept by the plaintiffs, and this, I think, satisfies the contract. In the result the defence fails. Under the circumstances it is not necessary to decide the point whether the topics I have just been considering are relevant to this
- H inquiry. It seemed to me to be more satisfactory, as the names of the re-insuring companies had been referred to in the defence, to hear the matter out, but the fact of my having done so must not be taken to indicate that the defences raised were good in law. I am glad to be able to express a clear opinion that the defendants did not insure with the plaintiffs without knowing what they were about, or in neglect or in excess of their public duty, but my judgment must be against them, and with costs.

Judgment for plaintiffs.

Solicitors: H. S. Holt; Baker & Sons.

[Reported by T. W. MORGAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

MOODY v. COX AND ANOTHER

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Warrington and Scrutton, L.JJ.),
March 14, 15, 16, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 Ch. 71; 86 L.J.Ch. 424; 116 L.T. 740;
61 Sol. Jo. 398]

Solicitor—Duty to client—Sale of property by solicitor to client—Duty to disclose to client all material facts—Solicitor selling as trustee.

A solicitor who sells his own property to a client must deal with the client with the utmost good faith and must give the client all that reasonable advice and information which he would have given him if the sale had been by a third person and he (the solicitor) had not been personally interested. He must so act that no industry on his part could have got the client a better bargain. He must make the most ample disclosure to the client of all the facts known to him relating to the matter of the sale. A solicitor selling to or buying from a client is bound to disclose everything which is material or may be material to the judgment of his client before the transaction is completed.

This duty does not depend on undue influence. The existence of the duty to disclose is quite consistent with the absence of undue influence.

A solicitor who sells to a client property, not on his own behalf, but as a trustee, is under the same duty. He cannot be excused on the ground that the purchaser, being aware that he was selling as a trustee, would know that he was under an obligation to get the best price for his cestui que trust and that his duty to the beneficiaries would prevent him disclosing material facts which had come to his knowledge in the capacity of trustee.

Equity—Principles affecting equitable relief—"Clean hands"—Denial of relief—Need for improper conduct to have necessary and essential relation to relief sought.

For a plaintiff to be denied equitable relief—e.g., rescission of a contract—on the ground that he has not "clean hands" the defendant must show that the plaintiff's improper conduct had a necessary and essential relation to the contract in question.

Accordingly, where the plaintiff sought rescission of a contract for the purchase of property by him on the ground of the non-disclosure to him by the vendor of facts which the vendor was under a fiduciary duty to disclose, and it appeared that during the negotiations for the contract the plaintiff had given the defendant bribes to facilitate the progress of the negotiations,

Held: as the bribes had no immediate relation to the rescission of the contract, which was sought on a ground not affected by them, the improper conduct of the plaintiff did not disentitle him to an order for rescission.

Notes. Considered: Goody v. Baring, [1956] 2 All E.R. 11.

As to transactions between solicitor and client, see 31 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 116 et seq.; and for cases see 42 DIGEST 57, 58, 76 et seq. As to principles affecting relief in equity, see ibid., 3rd Edn., vol. 14, p. 523 et seq.; and for cases see 20 DIGEST 235 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Gibson v. Jeyes (1801), 6 Ves. 266; 31 E.R. 1044, L.C.; 42 Digest 80, 724.
- (2) Davies v. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co. (1878), 8 Ch.D. 469; 38 L.T. 478; 26 W.R. 794; sub nom. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co. v. Davies, Davies v. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co., 47 L.J.Ch. 511; 42 Digest 76, 675.
- (3) Holman v. Lloynes (1854), 4 De G.M. & G. 270; 2 Eq. Rep. 715; 23 L.J.Ch. 529; 22 L.T.O.S. 296; 18 Jur. 839; 2 W.R. 205; 43 E.R. 510, L.C. & L.J.; 42 Digest 83, 745.

- A (4) Dering v. Earl of Winchelsea (1787), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 318; 29 E.R. 1184; sub nom. Deering v. Earl of Winchelsea, 2 Bos. & P. 270; 20 Digest 249, 136.
- (5) Tate v. Williamson (1866), 2 Ch. App. 55; 15 L.T. 549; 15 W.R. 321, L.C.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 393, 3135.
- B (6) Wood v. Downes (1811), 18 Ves. 120; 34 E.R. 263, L.C.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 125, 777.

Appeal by the defendants from an order made by YOUNGER, J., in an action for the rescission of a contract for the sale of land.

The facts are stated in the judgments.

C Hohler, K.C., and Copping (for C. A. Bennett, serving with His Majesty's forces) for the defendant Cox.

J. B. Matthews, K.C., and F. K. Archer for the defendant Hatt.

Henry Terrell, K.C., and J. E. Harmer for the plaintiff.

D LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—This case at first sight struck me as one of great difficulty and considerable nicety. But, having listened to the very full and able arguments of counsel in the case, I have now satisfied myself that the decision of the learned judge in the court below was perfectly right, and that this appeal ought to be dismissed.

E The defendants in this case are a solicitor, Mr. Hatt, and his managing clerk, Mr. Cox. Mr. Cox has been managing clerk in a very responsible position, because he has had the de facto management of the business at Reading. Mr. Hatt, I gather, confined himself to Oxford. The plaintiff, Mr. Moody, was a man of some experience of the world. He had been a sailor, and then he engaged in speculations in connection with a patent, which proved very successful. He was anxious to do something with regard to picture palaces, and I assume in favour of the defendants what I believe to be the truth, that Mr. Moody is a man of the world and of very considerable business capacity. Mr. Moody was minded to acquire a public-house at Reading called the Marquis of Granby. That was a house tied to Messrs. Wethered. The tenant held under a lease containing the tie, and the freeholders were the trustees of one Lee's estate, those trustees being at all material dates Mr. Hatt and Mr. Cox. Negotiations started early in January, 1915. There were two transactions into which I do not propose to go in detail. The first proposal was a lease of the Marquis of Granby and yard. That was modified shortly afterwards—on Feb. 8—by a contract by which, instead of taking a lease, the plaintiff

F should buy a part of the property, but not all the cottage property going with the Marquis of Granby. There was a third proposal, which resulted in a contract dated April 17, under which Mr. Moody agreed to buy the whole of the property for a considerable sum of money.

G

H When I speak of the defendants I am not drawing any distinction between Mr. Hatt and Mr. Cox. In all these transactions the defendants, or if you like to say the defendant Mr. Hatt, the solicitor, acting mainly through his managing clerk, Mr. Cox, acted as solicitor for Mr. Moody. They accepted that position; they made charges against him in respect of that position. They have attempted in reference to the second contract to make charges according to the statutory scale of charges which could only be justified on the footing that Mr. Hatt was entitled

I to a negotiating fee for both the vendors and the purchaser. It seems to me to require a great deal of courage to argue that the relation of solicitor and client did not exist, at least up till the abandonment of the No. 2 contract on April 17. After the entries which we have seen in Mr. Hatt's own books, it seems to me impossible to doubt that from some time in January—I care not what precise date it was—until April 17, the relation of solicitor and client existed between the parties. Then it is said with regard to the contract to which this action relates, the contract of April 17, although the defendants stood in a fiduciary position towards Mr. Moody up to the morning of April 17, it may be ten o'clock or it may be twelve o'clock, but a moment of time came on that day when a new relation was entered into in respect of which the defendants were not in a fiduciary relation. That, again, seems to me to be an absolutely impossible contention. A relation such as that of solicitor and client continues unless and until it is proved definitely and distinctly that it has been put an end to. Is that proof existing here? The evidence of Mr. Cox is quite plain. There is a passage in the notes of the evidence where he said :

"After the contract of Feb. 8 was signed we acted as his solicitors. He said, 'You know all about it; I want you to act for me.'"

I do not accept every statement that Mr. Cox made in the witness-box, but I do accept that statement, because I think that it is consistent, and only consistent, with documents prepared at the time and the entries in the ledger and private books, and I have no hesitation in saying that the relationship was carried on and extended in respect of the third contract as well as the first and second contracts, and the matter must be considered precisely as it would be if the relation of solicitor and client had been admitted to exist.

What is the duty of a solicitor standing in this fiduciary relation towards his client? If he, the solicitor, desires to buy or sell the property—I care not which way it is, for the obligations would be just the same in their nature if it were a sale to the client or a sale to the solicitor—I know of no better authority to settle the principles applicable to the case than LORD ELDON's judgment in Gibson v. Jeyes (1), where he said this (6 Ves. at p. 278) :

"If [the solicitor] will mix up with the character of attorney that of vendor he shall if the propriety of the contract comes in question, manifest that he has given [the client] all that reasonable advice against himself that he would have given her against a third person."

There are more passages to the same effect in that judgment than the one that I have read. Thus, there is another passage (ibid. at p. 271) :

"But, from the general danger, the court must hold that, if the attorney does mix himself with the character of vendor, he must show to demonstration, for that must not be left in doubt, that no industry he was bound to exert would have got a better bargain."

The relief in a case of this kind does not depend upon undue influence. That is not the ground on which I base my present judgment. There may be cases in which undue influence is proved as a fact, but the principle to decide this case upon in my view is this. An attorney selling to a client or buying from a client is bound to disclose everything that is material or may be material to the judgment of his client before the transaction is completed. The duty to disclose is quite consistent with the absence of undue influence, and that is all that seems to me to be involved here. Counsel for Mr. Cox said that the solicitor here had not any undue influence over the client, who was an independent man of business and would not have looked to him for advice on the propriety of the transaction, and, therefore, there is no liability. The answer is I expect that the liability does not depend upon undue influence. I adopt the judgment of FRY, J., in Davies v. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co. (2) (8 Ch.D. at p. 474) :

"If there be a pre-existing relationship between the parties, such as that of . . . solicitor and client . . . , then if the parties can contract at all they can only contract after the most ample disclosure of everything by . . . the solicitor" [to the client].

That being the principle, it is quite apparent to my mind that that disclosure never was made in the present case. The third contract included more property than the contracts before. As to that fresh property which was brought in there was no disclosure of the fact that valuations had been made and obtained by the vendors, showing that the value of this property was in the opinion of the valuer

A much less than the plaintiff was contracting to give for it. One of those valuations was very shortly before this transaction. The defendants had a valuation on Feb. 15, 1915. They were then advised that the value of the house and cottage property was much less than the plaintiff had agreed to give for it. That valuation was not disclosed until the defendant, Mr. Cox, was in the box at the trial, and this seems to me to be exactly and precisely a case in which the solicitor cannot
B uphold the transaction without showing that he has given full disclosure of every fact which could be material.

But I do not like to leave it there. Mr. Cox's own evidence is that he told the plaintiff at the interview on April 17 that the cottages were worth the figure mentioned in the contract. He had in his possession the valuation taken about six weeks before, and he said in the box that he knew that the cottages were not
C worth the figure which he stated they were. That which I can call nothing else but a lie being mentioned to the purchaser as it was on the very day when this third contract was entered into, it seems to me to be quite hopeless to contend that there was a disclosure of that which, having regard to the relationship between the parties, was bound to be disclosed. There was an earlier valuation—a valuation taken for the purposes of probate, and probate valuations, one knows as a matter
D of common knowledge, are not apt to be too high; they generally are too low. But Mr. Cox knew, he said, that the property was not even of the value for the probate valuation.

In these circumstances, unless there be a difference established on the ground which I will not mention, it seems to me that the case is, when one gets to the bottom of it, almost unarguable in favour of the plaintiff. But it is said that this
E is not a case to which the doctrine of Gibson v. Jeyes (1) or Holman v. Loynes (3) or any of those cases ought to be applied, because the solicitors here were not dealing with their own property. It is contended that it was not a case in which their interest was one way and their duty pointed in another, but that they owed a duty to the beneficiaries, and that their duty to the beneficiaries was to get as much as they could for the property. Their duty to the purchaser, it is argued,
F who knew that they were selling as trustees, could not involve any obligation to disclose to him the valuations which they had obtained in their character of trustees for the beneficiaries. I think that that is quite a mistaken view of the matter. A person may have a duty on one side and an interest on another. A solicitor who puts himself in that position takes upon himself a grievous responsibility. A solicitor may have a duty on one side and a duty on the other—namely, a duty to
G his client as solicitor on the one side, and a duty to his beneficiaries on the other. But if he chooses to put himself in that position it does not lie in his mouth to say to the client that he has not discharged that which the law says it is his duty towards his client, because he owes a duty to the beneficiaries on the other side. The answer is that if a solicitor gets himself into that position it is his own fault. He ought to make it quite clear and inform his client of his conflicting duties, and
H either obtain from that client an agreement that he shall not perform his duty as to disclosure, or say—which would be much better—that he cannot accept the business. I think that it would be the worst thing to say that a solicitor can escape from the obligations imposed upon him as solicitor of full disclosure to his client if he can prove that it was not a case of duty on one side and interest on the other, but a case of duties on both sides, and, therefore, impossible to perform.
I I do not desire to draw any distinction between the simple case where the solicitor has a client and is selling his own property to him and a case like the present where he has a client and as trustee is selling trust property to that client. I think, therefore, on this ground the arguments adduced on behalf of the defendants will not prevail.

There is only one other matter to which I need refer. It is a painful aspect of this case. Mr. Cox, who was managing clerk for Mr. Hatt and who, I am surprised to hear, is still in that position, accepted two bribes from the plaintiff of £100 each. His counsel admitted that they were bribes and called them bribes. It cannot be disputed that Mr. Cox is accountable for those bribes to the beneficiaries of whose estate he was trustee. The duty as to those two sums of £100 has not been discharged yet by Mr. Cox according to the evidence. I trust and hope that that omission may soon be rectified. What was the consequence of those bribes? The beneficiaries might have declined to stand by the contract, and might have said that the bribes vitiate the whole transaction. But they are not bound to say that. They may say that the contract which was obtained by reason of these bribes is such an advantageous contract for them that they will waive their right to object to the transaction, and, accordingly, that they do not object to it. Then it is said that, that being so, the plaintiff, Mr. Moody, who himself gave the bribes—though I think he was not the more guilty party of the two—cannot obtain any equitable relief in respect of the contract, and in equitable relief is included rescission of the contract. I ask myself what principle is there that can compel the court to say that it will not rescind the contract which has been obtained quite apart from the objection of bribes, which objection has been waived by the other party who does not desire to raise it. It strikes me as a little short of shocking that we should be in this position. The beneficiaries do not repudiate the contract. They have a considerable deposit in respect of the property, and they seriously suggest that, even assuming that the plaintiff has a good right to rescind the contract on the ground of non-disclosure to him by the solicitor, or would have but for the bribes, we ought to allow this deposit to remain in the pockets of the trustees, and to refuse to give any relief to the plaintiff in respect of it. The relief which is sought for is in no way owing to the bribes. It is something quite independent thereof, and that is in a certain sense an irrelevant circumstance to consider in this connection. For these reasons, without attempting to go through the numerous authorities which have been called to our attention, I hold, both upon the facts and upon the law, that the decision of the learned judge in the court below was perfectly right, and that these two appeals must be dismissed with costs.

WARRINGTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The action is brought by the plaintiff for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that a certain agreement of April 17, 1915, for the purchase by him from the defendants Cox and Hatt of certain freehold property at Reading is not binding on the plaintiff, and to have that agreement rescinded and the deposit paid under it returned. The learned judge in the court below has determined the question involved in favour of the plaintiff, and has ordered the contract to be rescinded on the ground that the defendant Hatt, for whom the defendant Cox was acting as managing clerk, was at the time when the agreement was entered into the solicitor for the plaintiff, and being his solicitor, was under an obligation to disclose all material facts in his knowledge relating to the matters in question, and that he failed to make that disclosure, and so failed to do his duty to the plaintiff.

With regard to the law, I think that there can be no doubt that if, as Lord Eldon said in Gibson v. Jeyes (1) 16 Ves. at p. 278, a solicitor will mix his character of vendor with that of solicitor to the purchaser, he must be bound to do towards the purchaser what he would have done towards any other client, and use as much diligence and as much care and be under the same obligation as to disclosure as he would have been towards any other client. In fact there exists, owing to the position of the solicitor towards his client, a fiduciary relationship which imposes upon him the obligation, not only of observing the utmost good faith in dealing with his client, but of giving to the client such advice and such information as he would have given if he had not been personally, in his other capacity, interested in the matters arising between them.

I turn to the facts. The defendants Cox and Hatt were the two trustees of the will of one Lee. Hatt was a solicitor practising at Reading and Oxford. Cox was his managing clerk at Reading, and had practically the entire control of the Reading office, and when I speak of Hatt and his relationship to his client, the plaintiff Moody, I mean and include the personal relationship of Cox, because Cox

A was acting on Hatt's behalf, and Hatt had very little personally to do with the matter. As trustees of the will of Lee the defendants were entitled to a freehold public-house called the Marquis of Granby, a yard and an outbuilding adjoining it, and four cottages also adjoining—all at Reading. The Marquis of Granby, the yard, and the outbuilding were at the time in lease to Messrs. Wethered, the brewers, of Marlow, and the tenant there was a man named Harvey, the house being, as between Wethereds and Harvey, a "tied" house. The plaintiff, Moody, B had been living at Reading for some years, and he was minded in 1914, or the early part of 1915, to start a cinema theatre there, and he was struck with the admirable situation, from his point of view, of the Marquis of Granby and the land and cottages adjoining. Accordingly, he approached Messrs. Wethered, and he was told by them that the freeholders were Hatt and Cox as trustees of Lee's will. He C went to Hatt, and in the first instance he arranged that he would take a building lease of the yard and the site of the outbuilding belonging to the Marquis of Granby, and would on that ground build a cinema theatre. Of course, it was necessary to arrange with Wethereds and with Harvey, the lessee, who was the actual tenant. Accordingly arrangements were opened with them and it was ultimately decided that their rent should be reduced by £65, that Messrs. Wethereds and Harvey D would surrender the yard and outbuilding, and that Moody would take a lease of that ground from the trustees. That was carried out to the extent that an agreement was prepared, to which Wethereds, Harvey, the two trustees, and Moody were all parties, and plans were prepared also by Moody for the erection of the theatre. So far as the preparation of the agreement was concerned and the other matters connected with it, I am satisfied that Hatt acted as solicitor for Moody. E One of the difficulties that arose in connection with this matter was that the licensing justices had to be applied to, and in that matter there is no doubt that Hatt acted as solicitor for Moody. Of course, Hatt could not make an application to the licensing justices in his own name. He would have to make it in the name of Harvey or Wethereds or the trustees. However that may be, he acted unquestionably as solicitor for Moody.

F It was found that the licensing justices would not give their permission to do what was desired. Then Moody suggested that he should purchase the yard and the site of the outbuilding and two of the cottages, and an agreement was made between Moody and the two trustees for that purpose. Under that agreement Moody agreed to purchase the yard and outbuilding and the two cottages for £2,000. That was on Feb. 8, 1915. I think that there can be no doubt whatever that Hatt G was asked to act and did act as solicitor for Moody in that transaction. That is a loose way of stating it, because one must define to some extent what the transaction was. The books which we have seen to-day enable me to do it. In Hatt's books Moody is charged in March with costs "Re sale to von"—which at that time meant the sale of Feb. 8, 1915—"£90." The only possible way of explaining that charge is that Hatt treated himself as acting for the vendors in the negotiations H and in deducing the title and completing the conveyance—the scale fees for which on a purchase price of £2,000 would amount to £45—and that he also treated himself as acting for the purchaser in the same transaction, the scale fees for deducing the title and for conveyance and for negotiation amounting together to £45. There is no other explanation possible. It is perfectly true that, acting both for the vendors and the purchaser, Hatt had no right to charge so much, I because he ought to have charged only half the fee in one of the two cases. But that is quite immaterial for the present discussion. The point is that he treated himself as acting as solicitor for Moody not only in carrying the sale into effect, but in negotiating the sale. So far, then, he acted, in my opinion, quite clearly as a solicitor for Moody.

The business connected with that transaction went on until April 17, 1915, on which day it had been expected that the sale would be completed. But by then Moody had found that the site was not a satisfactory site; he wanted more ground, and, accordingly, he proposed to buy two more cottages. On April 17 the final bargain, which is the one with which we have to deal, what one may call the culminating point in the transaction, was made. That was a bargain that Moody should purchase the whole property, the public-house, the yard and outbuilding, and the four cottages, for £8,400. That being concluded, Moody asked Hatt to continue, and he did continue, to act as Moody's solicitor, as he had acted before. It being quite plain that the relationship of solicitor and client operated up to April 17, I ask myself this: Has the solicitor established, as in such a case it is essential for him to establish, if he wishes to be excused the liability attaching to him as a solicitor, that that relationship had determined? It is perfectly ridiculous to assert any such claim. When Moody went to the office that morning Hatt was his solicitor. When he left the office after the business was concluded Hatt was his solicitor. It is suggested that the relationship determined at some time while he was there in the office negotiating about this further purchase. No such case can be made out.

On those facts, then, I come to the conclusion that at the time when this contract was made the relationship of solicitor and client subsisted as between Hatt and Moody, and that as a matter of law there was an obligation upon Hatt to disclose to Moody all material facts in his knowledge. Did he perform that duty? Unquestionably not. Cox told us, this with regard to the cottages: "I said the cottages were worth £225 each; I knew they were not worth it because I had been advised that they were worth a great deal less." With regard to the Marquis of Granby, he said that he did not disclose a probate valuation, which, it is hardly necessary to say, was much less than the price to be given by Moody; that he knew that since the valuation had been made the property had much depreciated in value; and that, nevertheless, he told Moody that they were insisting on £7,500, because the property was worth it. The valuation which showed that the cottages were worth far less than the £225 which he asserted they were worth in his negotiations with the plaintiff, had only been made on Feb. 15. The matter does not rest there. There was a certain sum of £61, which, I think, was the contribution to the fund for compensating brewers and publicans for houses shut up by the justices, and there was a question whether that sum was payable by the brewers or by the freeholders. It has been decided, I think in the Court of Appeal, that it was payable by the brewers. Accordingly Wethereds' rent had been paid in full. But that decision was pending in the House of Lords, and Cox knew that unless that decision should result in affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal, the rent would be reduced by the £61. Notwithstanding that he led Moody to remain under the impression that the full rent payable in respect of this house would be £300, and in fact on his own showing the purchase price eventually agreed to be given by Moody was calculated on that footing. Under those circumstances how can it possibly be said that he, the solicitor acting for Moody, had made that disclosure of material facts which it was necessary for him to make or that he had given to Moody such benefit as he would have had if he had been advised by an independent solicitor knowing the facts which were known to Hatt? The case seems to me to be so far unarguable.

But it is said that on the facts of this particular case, Hatt is not under the obligation which would be imposed upon him in an ordinary case, because Moody knew that Hatt was trustee for other persons and knew, therefore, that he had a duty to perform to those other persons, which I suppose was to obtain the best price that could be reasonably obtained, and that he knew, therefore, that he would not disclose anything material which he knew, if it might be disadvantageous to his cestuis que trust, the other persons for whom he was acting. In my opinion, that is wholly irrelevant. It offers no answer at all. I will assume that Moody knew that it was Hatt's duty to do his best for his cestuis que trust, but he did not know that there were any facts, the disclosure of which would reduce or tend to reduce the purchase price to be required. How could he possibly know that he was not to expect that Hatt would do his duty to him? It seems to me that Hatt has placed himself in a position in which he may possibly or he might possibly

A have been open to attack by his cestuis que trust if he had done his duty to Moody. But that is no answer when Moody comes and says: "You have not done your duty to me."

I will say but very few words indeed about the point with regard to the two bribes. On Feb. 8, on the occasion of the making of the £2,000 contract, and on April 17, on the occasion of the larger contract, Moody paid Cox the sum of £100; what for it is somewhat difficult to see. It is called "emolument," But I think it is more properly called "a bribe." It was, I suppose, really to grease the wheels and induce Cox to get the matter through with ease and expedition. With regard to the second of the two transactions it seems to have had some connection with the obtaining of a mortgage for the unpaid part of the purchase money. But whatever it was it was a bribe. The result of that was, it is argued, that Moody could not have insisted on the performance of that contract because it would have been obtained by improper payment made to the trustees who were acting on behalf of the cestuis que trust. He might also have had to account for this money, and to pay it over again to the cestuis que trust, and so also Cox, who received it, would have to account for it, and the cestuis que trust could, if they had pleased, have rescinded the contract. But the vendors, who were acting for their beneficiaries, do not choose to repudiate the contract; they claim specific performance of it by counterclaim, and it seems to me that when they withdrew that right to repudiate the contract they placed the parties in the same position as they would have been if the matter had not been tainted with this giving and taking of a bribe. To use, not the exact words, but the substance of what was said in Dering v. Earl of Winchelsea (4) (1 Cox, Eq. Cas. at pp. 319, 320), in order to prevent a man coming for relief in connection with a transaction so tainted, he must show that the taint has a necessary and essential relation to the contract which is sued upon, and it is not enough to say in general that the man is not coming with clean hands when the relief he seeks is not on the contract which was obtained by fraud, but is to get rid of the contract on a ground which exists quite independently of the fact that a bribe has been given and received. In my opinion, that point also fails, and the judgment of the learned judge in the court below was right, and these two appeals must be dismissed.

SCRUTTON, L.J.—I should have contented myself with agreeing with the judgment which has just been delivered, but for the circumstance that I think the principles that have been discussed go very much further than the facts of this particular case, and are of considerable importance to the public and to the profession of solicitors.

Before I consider that which is the material part of the case, I will mention, in order to put that matter on one side, the question of the two bribes. Mr. Moody gave and Mr. Cox took two sums of £100. Those sums are described by Mr. Moody on his counterfoil as "emolument." They were given by Mr. Moody to Mr. Cox, as the managing clerk of the solicitor that he was negotiating with and a trustee from whom he was buying the property, for the purpose of influencing his performance of the contract. Counsel have, as their duty was, endeavoured to argue as to the morality or justifiableness of those payments. I think that there should be no mistake about it that the court considers them bribes of the most objectionable character. It was said and argued with great vigour, and to the extent of reducing it into a formal proposition in writing, which was read to the court, that the fact that Mr. Moody had given those bribes prevents him from getting any relief in a court of equity. The first consequence of his having offered those bribes is that the other side might have rescinded the contract. But they were not bound to rescind the contract. They had the right to say that they were very satisfied with the contract, that it was a very good one for them, and that they affirmed it. The proposition put forward by counsel for Mr. Hatt is this: "It is no matter that the contract has been affirmed by the vendors. The purchaser still can claim no relief of any equitable character in regard to that contract because he gave bribes in respect of it. If there is a mistake in the contract he cannot rectify it, and if he desires to rescind the contract he cannot rescind it, for that is equitable relief." With some doubt the vendors' counsel said: "We do not think the purchaser can get an injunction to have the contract performed, though the other side have affirmed it, because an injunction may be an equitable remedy." When one asks on what principle this is supposed to be based, one receives in answer the somewhat poetical maxim that anyone coming to ask for equity must come with clean hands. I think the expression "clean hands" is used more often in the text-books than it is in the judgments in the reported cases, though it is occasionally used in the judgments. But I was very much surprised to hear that once a contract had been affirmed by the person who had a primary right to do so, and once it was established that it was not an illegal contract, the courts of equity would be so scrupulous that they would refuse any relief not connected at all with the bribes. I am glad to find that that is not the case, because I think it is quite clear that the passage in Dering v. Earl of Winchelsea (4) (1 Cox, Eq. Cas. at pp. 319, 320), which has been referred to, shows that equity will not apply the principle about "clean hands" unless the depravity, the dirt in question on the hands, has an immediate and necessary relation to the equity sued for. In the present case the bribes have no immediate relation to rescission of the contract on a ground not in any way affected by the bribes. Therefore, that point appears to me to fail, and one comes to the merits of the case.

First of all, as to the law. Generally when you have made a legal contract and correctly expressed it in writing, and it has not been obtained by any misstatement of fact, innocent or fraudulent, the contract stands, and the fact that one party or the other knows facts about which he says nothing, which make the contract an unprofitable one to the other party, is of no legal importance. But there are certain relations and certain contracts in which a higher duty is imposed upon the parties, and they must not only tell the truth, but they must tell the whole truth so far as it is material, and they must not only not misrepresent by words, but they must not misrepresent by silence if they know of something that is material. Some of those cases depend on the relationship between the parties, and, generally speaking, are cases where the relation is such that there is confidence reposed by one party and influence exercised by the other. In that class of relation of parties you may get the duty, first of all, that the party who has influence must make a full disclosure of everything that he knows material to the contract; and, secondly, that the party who has the influence must not make a contract with the party over whom he has the influence unless he can satisfy the court that that contract is an advantageous one to the other party. The second class of case is one not depending on the relation of the parties, but depending on the nature of the contract, and a typical case of that kind is the contract of insurance where, to an underwriter who knows nothing, comes a man who wants to be insured and knows everything. On the latter is imposed the duty of telling the underwriter all that he knows, so that the underwriter may fix the premium.

In the first class of the relation of the parties, that of solicitor and client is one of the obviously and constantly recognised examples. If a man who is in the position of solicitor to a client, so that the client has presumably confidence in him and the solicitor has presumably influence over the client, desires to contract with his client, he must make a full disclosure of every material fact that he knows, and must take upon himself the burden of satisfying the court that the contract is one of full advantage to his client. LORD ELDON, in the passage which has been referred to in Gibson v. Jeyes (1), said (6 Ves. at p. 278):

"This clear duty results from the rule of this court, and throws upon him the whole onus of the case: that, if he will mix with the character of attorney that of vendor, he shall if the propriety of the contract comes into question, manifest that he has given [the client] all that reasonable advice against

A himself that he would have given her against a third person. It is asked, Where is the rule to be found? I answer, in that great rule of the court that he who bargains in matter of advantage with a person placing confidence in him is bound to show that a reasonable use has been made of the confidence; a rule applying to trustees, attorneys, or anyone else."

B It has been expressed in more general form by LORD CHELMSFORD in Tate v. Williamson (5) thus (2 Ch. App. at p. 61):

C "Wherever two persons stand in such a relation that, while it continues, confidence is necessarily reposed by one, and the influence which naturally grows out of that confidence is possessed by the other, and this confidence is abused, or the influence is exerted to obtain an advantage at the expense of the confiding party, the person so availing himself of his position will not be permitted to retain the advantage, although the transaction could not have been impeached if no such confidential relation had existed."

D This is rested on confidence by the client and corresponding influence by the solicitor. Two questions will arise in cases of solicitor and client: first, as to the relationship of solicitor and client which will create this obligation; and, secondly, as to the nature of the obligation created. Where the relation of solicitor and client is in the very transaction attacked, it will, in my view, be almost, if not quite, impossible to avoid the obligation, and an independent solicitor should be employed by the client. It is called "putting him at arm's length." It might perhaps also be effected by a very clear declaration of the position, a declaration by the vendor: "Mind, I am going to get the highest price I can; be on your guard." It is inconsistent with the obligation upon him as solicitor to protect the interests of his client. It might be followed by a statement: "Subject to this, I will put in legal form the terms on which we agree." But the position would have to be made very clear to relieve the solicitor of obligations far exceeding those of an ordinary vendor, and it is a position to be avoided. More difficult questions arise when the employment as solicitor is in other matters more or less numerous or recent, and the transaction in question is a separate transaction, in which the solicitor does not act as such. TURNER, L.J., in Holman v. Loynes (3), after examining the cases which were said to limit the duty of a solicitor, said (4 De G.M. & G. at p. 283):

G "The very ground of the rule which requires attorneys purchasing from their clients, and not advising them with reference to the purchase, to prove that the confidential relation has been determined or the client put at arm's length is the influence which arises from the position of the attorneys; and I much doubt whether the confidential relation can be said to be determined at all whilst the influence derived from it can reasonably be supposed to remain. Gifts from clients to their attorneys can be maintained only when not only the relation has ceased, but the influence may rationally be supposed to have ceased also. That was laid down by LORD ELDON in Wood v. Downes (6), and I see no reason why the rule, which applies to gifts, should not equally in this respect apply to purchases. It is true that the rules of the court against gifts are absolute, and that against purchases they are modified; but this is a question, not upon the extent of the rules, but upon the circumstances under which they are to be brought into operation, and in that respect I see no difference between the cases of gifts and purchases."

I The relation may then be an actual relation of solicitor and client in the transaction impugned, or such an antecedent relation as gives rise to the influence by the solicitor and confidence by the client, the effect of which has not ceased at the time of the transaction impugned. It usually arises where the relation of solicitor precedes that of vendor.

What are the facts in this case if that is the law? About the middle of January Mr. Moody was negotiating with the trustees according to the entry in Mr. Hatt's bill. Mr. Moody was told that he would have to pay the costs of negotiation. I do not think that that by itself is enough to make the relation of solicitor and client. But then on Feb. 8 the same term was put in the contract. We had Mr. Cox's own statement of what happened. I am not taking Mr. Cox as a witness to whom implicit credit should be attached, but this statement tells against him: "After the contract of Feb. 8 was signed we acted as solicitors. Mr. Moody said, 'You know all about it; I want you to act for me.' " Once a solicitor is in that position, and the purchaser has said to him: "You know all about it; I want you to act for me," and he accepts the position, it will be very difficult for him to escape from the fullest obligations attaching to a solicitor to make full disclosure, and not to contract with his client unless he can satisfy the court that the contract is for the client's benefit. From that date, Feb. 8, and from the time when Mr. Cox gives that account of the relation, it seems to me the full duty to disclose was on Mr. Hatt. How did he perform it? Again, I take Mr. Cox's own evidence. Part of the subject-matter of the contract was some cottages. Mr. Cox had a valuation made within a month or two months previously valuing those cottages at £160 a cottage. He sold them to Mr. Moody at £225 a cottage. He did not tell Mr. Moody of the valuation, and more he states: "I did say the cottages were worth £225; I knew they were not worth it because I had been advised they were worth a good deal less. I knew the value of the Marquis of Granby had depreciated since the probate valuation; I did not tell him the amount of the probate valuation." A man who says that admits in the plainest terms that he is not fulfilling the duty which lies upon him as a solicitor acting for a client.

But it is said that he could not disclose the information consistently with his duty to his other clients, the cestuis que trust. It may be that a solicitor who tries to act for both parties puts himself in such a position that he must be liable to one or the other, whatever he does. The case has been put of a solicitor acting for vendor and purchaser, who knows of a flaw in the title by reason of his acting for the vendor, and who, if he discloses that flaw in the title which he knows as acting for the vendor, may be liable to an action by his vendor, and, if he does not disclose the flaw in the title, may be liable to an action by the purchaser for not doing his duty as solicitor for him. It will be his fault for mixing himself up with a transaction in which he has two entirely inconsistent interests, and solicitors who try to act for both vendors and purchasers must appreciate that they run a very serious risk of liability to one or the other owing to the duties and obligations which such curious relation puts upon them. The law being what I have stated, and having Mr. Cox's own evidence, it seems to me clearly that Mr. Hatt, his employer, has not complied through him with the obligations which rest upon a solicitor. He has not disclosed to Mr. Moody things that he should have disclosed, and he has made actual misrepresentations material to the contract. On these two grounds it appears to me that the judgment of YOUNGER, J., is thoroughly justified, and that the two appeals must be dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

Solicitors: P. F. Walker; Stanley Evans & Co.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

AGDESHMAN v. HUNT

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Viscount Reading, C.J., Darling and Avory, JJ.), June 25, 1917]

B

[Reported 86 L.J.K.B. 1334; 117 L.T. 406; 81 J.P. 251;
15 L.G.R. 620; 26 Cox, C.C. 16]

Alien—Registration—Particulars to be supplied—False particulars—British subject—Mistake in registration card—Offence—"Any person"—Aliens Restriction Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 12), s. 1—Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916 (S.R. & O. 1916 No. 122), art. 27 (2).

C

The Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916, art. 27 (2), applies to British subjects as well as to aliens, and, therefore, a British subject can be convicted of the offence of giving false particulars under that article.

Notes. The Aliens Restriction Act, 1914, s. 1, has been amended by the British Nationality Act, 1948, s. 3 (3). The Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916, has been revoked. See now the Aliens Order, 1953 (S.I. 1953 No. 1671), art. 25.

D

As to registration of aliens, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 516 et seq.; and for cases see 2 DIGEST (Repl.) 181 et seq. For the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914, s. 1, see 1 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 691. For the Aliens Order, 1953, art. 25, see 2 HALSBURY'S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS.

Case Stated by a metropolitan magistrate.

E

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at the Thames Police Court on April 20, 1917, the respondent, Alfred Hunt, an inspector of police, preferred an information against the appellant, David Agdeshman, charging that on Mar. 26, 1917, at No. 21A, Commercial Street, Whitechapel, he unlawfully furnished to the respondent, whilst the latter was acting in his capacity as a registration officer under the Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916, false particulars with respect to the appellant's nationality. The following facts were proved or admitted.

F

The appellant was born at Bessarabia, Russia, on Mar. 24, 1899. The appellant's father, Philip Agdeshman, on Apr. 4, 1913, applied for and obtained a certificate of naturalisation as a British subject, and the appellant was the person referred to in the certificate as "David, aged fourteen years." In August, 1915, the appellant, on a form signed by him in pursuance of the National Registration Act, 1915, described himself as "Russian, naturalised British."

G

A registration card was issued to the appellant in pursuance of the National Registration Act, 1915, and by mistake he was described on the card as "Russian." On Mar. 26, 1917, the appellant applied to the respondent to be registered under the Aliens Registration Act, 1914, and art. 19 of the Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916. On this application, the appellant, among other statements of a personal character, made a statement that he was of Russian nationality, whereas, in view of the facts set out above and by virtue of s. 10 (5) of the Naturalisation Act, 1870, he was in truth a person who is deemed to be a naturalised British subject. On Apr. 1, 1917, the respondent, having seen the naturalisation certificate, asked the appellant why he, knowing that he was a British subject, tried to register himself as a Russian.

H

I

The appellant then produced his national registration card. The respondent informed the appellant that he had seen his (the appellant's) original registration form, on which he described himself as "Russian, naturalised British." The appellant stated that because he was nearly eighteen he had gone to a solicitor in order to obtain exemption from military service and had shown his national registration card, and that the solicitor told him that the authorities thought that he was a Russian, and he should go and register with the police and this would be enough. The appellant further stated that, when he reached the age of twenty-one, he could be what he liked, and until then he was going to be a Russian.

On behalf of the appellant it was contended (a) that a mis-statement as to nationality was not a "false particular" within the Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916, art. 27 (2), and that nationality, being partly a question of law, was not a matter as to which a "false particular" could be furnished; and (b) that art. 27 (2) did not make it an offence for a person who was not an alien to furnish false particulars to a registration officer, and if it purported to do so, it was to that extent ultra vires. The learned magistrate was of opinion that, nationality being one of the matters referred to in art. 19 (1) (a) of the order and set out in Sched. IV thereto in a list headed "Particulars to be furnished on Registration," a false statement as to nationality was a false particular within art. 27 (2). He was further of opinion that the statement of a false particular to a registration officer by a person who was not an alien came within art. 27 (2), and that s. 1 (1) (k) of the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914, empowered the making of such a regulation applying to persons who were not aliens, inasmuch as it was necessary and expedient, with a view to the safety of the realm, that, if a register of aliens was to be kept, it should be accurate. The learned magistrate found as facts that, at the time when the appellant furnished the false particulars to the respondent, he knew that he was a British subject, and that the appellant only adopted the mistake made on his national registration card and tried to register as a Russian in order to obtain exemption from military service. The learned magistrate, therefore, convicted the appellant and sentenced him to three months' imprisonment in the second division. The appellant now appealed.

Section 10 (5) of the Naturalisation Act, 1870, now repealed, provides :

"Where the father or the mother, being a widow, has obtained a certificate of naturalisation in the United Kingdom, every child of such father or mother who during infancy has become resident with such father or mother in any part of the United Kingdom shall be deemed to be a naturalised British subject."

Section 1 of the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914, provides :

"(1) His Majesty may at any time when a state of war exists between His Majesty and any foreign power, or when it appears that an occasion of imminent national danger or emergency has arisen, by Order in Council impose restrictions on aliens, and provision may be made by the order . . . (k) for any other matters which appear necessary or expedient with a view to the safety of the realm."

By the Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916, it is provided :

"19 (1). An alien, wherever resident, shall comply with the following requirements as to registration :—(a) he shall as soon as may be furnish to the registration officer of the registration district in which he is resident particulars as to the matters set out in the first part of the fourth schedule to this order. . . . [The particulars include nationality and birthplace.]"

"27 (2). If any person furnishes or causes to be furnished to a registration officer any false particulars, or, with a view to obtaining any permit or permission under this order, makes or causes to be made any false statement or false representation, he shall be deemed to have acted in contravention of this order."

"28. If any person aids or abets any person in any contravention of this order, or knowingly harbours any person whom he knows or has reasonable ground for supposing to have acted in contravention of this order, he shall be deemed himself to have acted in contravention of this order."

Cor-Sinclair and Hynes for the appellant.

Lamb for the respondent.

VISCOUNT READING, C.J.—In my opinion, the learned magistrate came to a correct determination in this case. According to the Case Stated, he arrived

- A at his decision on two grounds—namely, that the appellant furnished false particulars when applying for registration under the Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916, and that he knowingly gave these false particulars in order to obtain exemption from military service. It is not necessary to deal with the question of the false particulars at any length. It could not be seriously argued by anyone that there was no mis-statement of the particulars required under art. 27 (2). The
- B question of nationality may not always be one which can be easily determined. But in this case there was no doubt at all. The appellant knew what his nationality was. He was born in Russia, and he became a naturalised British subject when his father took out his certificate of naturalisation in 1913. The learned magistrate has found that he wilfully gave false particulars, and that he did so with the purpose of evading military service. There was abundant evidence on which the
- C learned magistrate could arrive at that decision, and, indeed, I do not see how it can be questioned in any way.

- But another point has been raised, a point of law, and it is based on the construction of the language of art. 27 (2) of the Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916, which was made under the powers conferred by the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914. The contention put forward on behalf of the appellant is that the words
- D of the article do not apply in his case because he has been declared to be a naturalised British subject, and the Act of 1914 and the order of 1916 only refer to aliens. It is clear that the words of art. 27 (2) are wide enough to apply to British subjects as well as to aliens in a general way, and, prima facie, there is no reason why we should not give to the words their natural and ordinary meaning. That is admitted on behalf of the appellant, but it is contended that the scope
- E of the Act and the order is directed against aliens, and that, where they are intended to apply to British subjects, specific language is used for the purpose of including British subjects. In my opinion, that contention is ill-founded. It is true that the Act was passed for the purpose of dealing with aliens and of imposing restrictions on them, but it was also intended to make such provisions as are necessary for the purpose of carrying those restrictions into effect. One has only
- F to examine the Act to see how wide are the powers conferred to make restrictions by Order in Council. They are contained in s. 1 (1) of the Act, and para. (k) of that subsection shows that practically any regulation may be made which appears necessary or expedient with a view to the safety of the realm. The statute was drafted in very wide language, and this was essential so as to prevent any evasion of the powers which were conferred by the legislature on the King in Council.
- G As I have said, the argument put forward on behalf of the appellant is that art. 27 (2) is not intended to apply to British subjects, because a British subject would be aiding and abetting, and would come within art. 28. I do not think that that argument is sound. There is at the outset a difficulty in the way of accepting it, because the opening language of the two articles—27 and 28—is the same, and, if the appellant's contention was correct, it would be necessary to say that the words
- H "any person" in art. 28 are wide enough to cover a British subject, whilst in art. 27 they are not. I do not think that that can be so. Again, if the argument was right, it would be open to a British subject to furnish false particulars about an alien, and to say, when challenged, that he was not liable to be punished as he was a British subject, though if he aided and abetted an alien to give false particulars he would commit an offence under art. 28. I am quite satisfied in my
- I own mind as to the construction to be placed on these articles, and I think that the learned magistrate was right in his decision. The appeal will be dismissed.

DARLING, J.—I agree. The appellant was born a Russian subject, but became a British subject by naturalisation. There is no doubt about that part of the case. But, owing to a mistake that was made when his registration card was issued to him, in which he was stated to be a Russian, he was able to represent himself as a Russian if he wished to do so. That was in 1915. But then there came the Military Service Acts, 1916, and the appellant clearly saw that, if he was a British subject, he would become liable to military service under these Acts as soon as he reached the specified age. There can be no doubt that it was with the object of evading military service that he took advantage of the mistake in his registration card and applied for registration as an alien under the Aliens Restriction (Consolidation) Order, 1916. He then described himself as a Russian, and so gave false particulars as to his nationality, which was a contravention of the provisions of the order. The learned magistrate was, therefore, quite right in convicting him. A AVORY, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Albin Hunt; Wontner & Sons.

[Reported by J. A. SLATER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.] B

COLBOURNE AND ANOTHER v. LAWRENCE D

[King's Bench Division (Darling, Avory and Sankey, JJ.), October 18, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 857; 87 L.J.K.B. 219; 117 L.T. 666;
82 J.P. 6; 26 Cox, C.C. 92; 14 Asp.M.L.C. 168]

Shipping—Seaman—Desertion—Failure of master to enter statement of wages due to seaman "left behind"—Merchant Shipping Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 48), s. 28 (1) (a), (10). E

A seaman deserted his ship in a foreign port, leaving nothing on board. There was no information whether, before the ship left the port, he sailed in another vessel. The ship's master was charged under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, s. 28, with failing to enter in the official log-book as soon as might be a statement of the amount due as wages to the seaman when he was left behind. F

Held: the words "left behind" in s. 28 (1) (a) of the Act of 1906 included a deserter as to whose whereabouts the master of the ship might be uncertain, and, therefore, the master was guilty of the offence charged.

Notes. As to a seaman's wages, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 216 et seq.; and for cases see 41 DIGEST 224 et seq. For the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, s. 28, see 28 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 794. G

Case referred to:

(1) Deacon v. Quayle, Neale v. Wilson, [1912] 1 K.B. 445; 81 L.J.K.B. 409; 106 L.T. 269; 76 J.P. 79; 12 Asp.M.L.C. 125, D.C.; 41 Digest 232, 720. H

Case Stated by justices for the city of Bristol.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Bristol on Sept. 18, 1916, the appellant, an agent for the Solicitor to the Board of Trade, preferred an information against the respondent, Henry Lawrence, master of the British ship Invermay, charging that he unlawfully failed to enter in the official log-book of the ship, as soon as might be, a statement of the amount due to A. W. Grass, a seaman belonging to the ship and left behind out of the British Isles, on account of wages at the time when he was left behind, such omission being alleged to be an offence under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, s. 28 (1) (a) and (10). The appellant Colbourne was the superintendent of the mercantile marine, an officer of the Board of Trade at the port of Bristol, and the proper officer referred to in s. 28 of the above Act. The following facts were proved: The ship Invermay was a British sailing ship registered at the port of Aberdeen, and, at the material times, the respondent was her master. By articles of agreement opened at the port of Dublin I

- A on Feb. 5, 1915, for the voyage which commenced at that port on Feb. 12, 1915, the seaman was engaged amongst others as a member of the crew of the sailing ship for a voyage not exceeding three years' duration to any ports or places within the limits of 75 degrees N. and 60 degrees S. latitude, commencing at Dublin and proceeding thence to New York and/or any other ports within the above limits, trading in any rotation, and to end at such port in the United Kingdom or Continent of Europe (within home trade limits) as might be required by the master.
- B The articles and the official log for the voyage were put in evidence. A. W. Grass, who signed the articles on Feb. 5, 1915, deserted the ship at New York on May 25, 1915, and did not rejoin the ship during the voyage. The ship arrived at Bristol on Aug. 19, 1916, and on Aug. 21, 1916, the respondent delivered the agreement, account of crew, and official log-book to the superintendent of mercantile marine.
- C The official log contained an entry recording the desertion of the seaman, and it was proved that he was in fact a deserter and took away all his effects when deserting the ship, and these facts were reported to the British consul at the port of desertion. The official log contained no statement of the amount due to the seaman on account of wages at the time when he deserted the ship, but the respondent's seamen's wages account book (which he delivered to the superintendent) contained particulars as to the balance of wages. Although there had previously been cases in Bristol in which masters had not made such entries in the official log no proceedings had previously been taken.
- D

- It was contended for the appellants that a seaman, who deserted his ship at a port out of the British Isles and was not brought away from such port by such ship, was a seaman "left behind" out of the British Isles within s. 28 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, and that the failure of the respondent to enter in the official log-book a statement of the wages due to the seaman at the time when the ship sailed without him on board constituted an offence under the section. It was contended for the respondent that the provisions of the Act being penal it must be construed strictly, and that a deserting seaman who had joined another vessel and had left the port where the desertion took place whilst the vessel still remained in port could not be described as a seaman "left behind." A seaman who had been entered in the ship's articles as a deserter was not left behind within the true interpretation of the section. There was no evidence that the seaman had been left behind. It was not the practice of masters to treat deserters who were believed to have deserted for the purpose of joining other ships as men who had been "left behind," and these words had in practice been interpreted as applying to men who had (a) been unable to join in consequence of accident, illness, misadventure, or the like; (b) been punished for some offence and remained in prison or under restraint.
- E
- F
- G

- Evidence in support of these points was given by the respondent and by two masters called on his behalf, and it was proved that the vessel had remained in port at least several days after the desertion, and that the strong probability was that the seaman had joined another vessel and gone to sea and possibly had either returned to England or was on his way before the Invermay had left the port in which the desertion took place.
- H

The justices dismissed the information and the appellants now appealed.

By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, s. 28:

- I
- "(1) If a seaman belonging to any British ship is left behind out of the British Islands, the master of the ship shall subject to the provisions of this section—(a) as soon as may be, enter in the official log-book a statement of the effects left on board by the seaman and of the amount due to the seaman on account of wages at the time when he was left behind, . . . (10) If the master of the ship fails without reasonable cause to comply with this section, he shall (without prejudice to any other liability) for each offence be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds . . ."

The Solicitor-General (Sir Gordon Hewart, K.C.) (G. A. H. Branson with him) A for the appellants.

Inskip, K.C. (A. T. Miller with him) for the respondent.

DARLING, J.—This case turns entirely on the meaning to be given to a very few words in s. 28 (1) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906. [His LORDSHIP read the subsection and continued:] The man who is said to have been left behind was a seaman who deserted in a foreign port and left nothing on board the ship, and, although it is absolutely uncertain, it may be that, before the ship left the port, he had sailed from it in another vessel. We have no information about that. It is contended by counsel for the appellants that the man comes within the words "left behind," and that the amount due to him for wages should have been entered in the log-book. If the section went no further I should agree with counsel for the respondent, and I should think that the ordinary commonplace meaning was to be given to the words "left behind," and that, if the seaman left the ship, and if it was not known that he had gone off in another ship, it would be improper to describe him as a seaman left behind. But the subsection goes on to say, in para. (b), that the master, on the termination of the voyage, shall furnish certain accounts, including any expenses caused "by the absence of the seaman in cases where the absence is due to desertion, neglect to join his ship, or any other conduct constituting an offence under s. 221 of the principal Act."

If, therefore, a seaman has deserted, the master is bound to give some account of him, and para. (b) provides that he shall do so at the termination of the voyage and in a particular form. But it all comes under the words "if a seaman is left behind," and I think that, although the master would clearly not be obliged to make those entries in the log-book if the section stopped at the end of para. (a), yet when one reads para. (b) one sees that the legislature used the words "left behind" to cover something more than being left on the shore when the ship actually sails away. The legislature apparently observed that something had been omitted, and by arrière pensée they inserted these words as to the cause of the seaman's absence. In the case of a deserter, with regard to whom it is not known where he has gone, the mere fact that he has deserted makes it very difficult to know whether he is staying on shore or whether he has left on another ship. I think that the words "left behind" include a deserter as to whose whereabouts the master may be quite uncertain. So to hold does not impose any burden on the master. The appeal must be allowed, but, as there is no moral blame on the appellant and the offence is a technical one, it will be without costs.

AYORY, J.—There is no finding of fact in this case, and there is no evidence, that the seaman did in fact join another vessel and go to sea before the ship from which he had deserted left the port in which the desertion took place. There is, therefore, no foundation for the contention put forward by counsel for the respondent that the seaman had not been left behind. The Case has not been stated for the purpose of a decision on that question of fact, but it has been argued on the assumption that this seaman had gone to sea before the ship from which he deserted left the port. On that assumption, the question is whether he can properly be described as having been left behind out of the British Islands within s. 28 (1) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906. It is important to observe the words "out of the British Islands" in that subsection. The magistrates have made the mistake of construing the words in the Act without having regard to the general tenor and object of the whole section in which they occur. It is true that, if you construe the words "left behind" by themselves, you would not speak of a man following another as leaving him behind. But it is reasonable to hold that the words merely mean that the master, when he leaves the port, must, as soon as may be, enter in the official log-book the required particulars with regard to any seaman whom he has not brought away with him; in other words, who has A been left behind. It is immaterial whether the seaman is still standing on the quay or has gone to prison or has in fact joined another ship. As was pointed out in Deacon v. Quayle (1), the whole purpose is to carry out the objects of s. 221 and s. 232 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and, when you look at the purpose of those sections, it supports the view of counsel for the appellant that the words "left behind" include a deserter, whether he remains in the port at the time when his ship sails, or whether he has joined another ship and has, perhaps, sailed in her. The appeal succeeds, and the Case must be remitted to the justices to be dealt with.

SANKEY, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

C Solicitors: Solicitor to the Board of Trade; Ford & Ford, for Wansbrough, Robinson, Tayler & Taylor, Bristol.

[Reported by J. F. WALKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

D

MEGUERDITCHIAN v. LIGHTBOUND AND OTHERS

E [COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady and Bankes, L.JJ., and Bray, J.), March 28, 29, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 298; 86 L.J.K.B. 889; 116 L.T. 790;
61 Sol. Jo. 416; [1917] H.B.R. 176]

Solicitor—Lien—Extent of lien—Expenses incurred on instructions of client against whom lien claimed—Recovery of property through negotiation.

F A solicitor's lien extends only to his charges and expenses incurred on the instructions of the actual client against whom the lien is claimed, and the property over which the lien is sought must have been recovered or preserved as the result of some sort of legal proceedings and not merely of negotiations between parties.

G Accordingly, where one Z. instructed his solicitors to recover certain documents from one B., and after the solicitors had incurred expenses and earned costs in attempting to recover the documents Z. became bankrupt, whereupon his trustee in bankruptcy instructed the solicitors to recover the documents, which they succeeded in doing by negotiation,

H Held: the solicitors had no lien, as against the trustee in bankruptcy, on the documents recovered by negotiation for the costs incurred on the instructions of Z.

Notes. As to a solicitor's lien, see 31 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 238 et seq.; and for cases see 42 DIGEST 259 et seq.

Case referred to:

(1) Shaw v. Neale (1858), 6 H.L.Cas. 581; 27 L.J.Ch. 444; 31 L.T.O.S. 190; 4 Jur.N.S. 695; 6 W.R. 635; 10 E.R. 1422, H.L.; 42 Digest 317, 3528.

I

Also referred to in argument:

Re Meter Cabs, Ltd., [1911] 2 Ch. 557; 81 L.J.Ch. 82; 105 L.T. 572; 56 Sol. Jo. 36; 19 Mans. 92; 42 Digest 278, 3120.

Ormerod v. Tate (1801), 1 East, 464; 102 E.R. 179; 42 Digest 282, 3169.

Re Born, Curnock v. Born, [1900] 2 Ch. 433; 69 L.J.Ch. 669; 83 L.T. 51; 49 W.R. 23; 44 Sol. Jo. 611; 42 Digest 299, 3327.

Ross v. Burton (1889), 42 Ch.D. 190; 58 L.J.Ch. 442; 60 L.T. 630; 54 J.P. 85; 38 W.R. 71; 42 Digest 282, 3166.

Re Moss (1866), L.R. 2 Eq. 345; 35 Beav. 526; 35 L.J.Ch. 554; 14 L.T. 536; 12 A Jur.N.S. 557; 14 W.R. 814; 55 E.R. 1000; 42 Digest 305, 3393.

Re Faithfull, Re London, Brighton and South Coast Rail. Co. (1868), L.R. 6 Eq.
325; 18 L.T. 502; 42 Digest 259, 2927.

Appeal by the defendants from an order of ROWLATT, J., made in an action tried by him without a jury.

The facts are stated in the judgment of SWINFEN EADY, L.J. B

Leslie Scott, K.C., and L. F. C. Darby for the defendants.

Ernest Pollock, K.C., and Eustace Hills, for the plaintiff, were not called on to argue.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—This is an appeal from an order of ROWLATT, J. The action was one in which the surviving syndic or trustee in bankruptcy of George C Constantine Zervudachi sued the defendants, Messrs. Lightbound, Owen, and MacIver, who are solicitors, to obtain the return of certain documents. The defendants had received the documents and had possession of them, and did not claim any interest beyond a lien. They conceded that the documents belonged to the plaintiffs. The question between the parties was whether the defendants D had a legal right to detain the documents by reason of their having a lien upon them. There was a small lien, I think, for £26 or £29, about which there was no dispute, but the defendants claimed a lien for a substantial bill of costs. The question in the action was: Had the defendants that lien?

The circumstances under which the action was brought were these. Zervudachi, who lived in Egypt, had acquired by purchase a concession granted by the Sultan E of Turkey in respect of certain asphalt mines at or near Lattaquie, on the coast of Northern Syria. There was, as I gather, not only a concession of the mines, but also a concession enabling a ropeway or aerial railway to be made from the mines to the coast. Zervudachi had entered into an agreement in writing dated Sept. 24, 1907, under which one Bergheim was to render services in connection with the concessions, and especially with reference to the flotation of a company to build a railway, to obtain shipping facilities, and otherwise to develop the F property the subject of the concession. Bergheim was to have a considerable commission as remuneration for carrying out the matters referred to in that agreement. Before the date of the agreement Zervudachi had arranged with one Shakour Pasha to have an interest in the concession, and in a letter dated July 26, 1906, which Zervudachi had written to Shakour Pasha, he mentions that he has paid the vendor of the concession, Gilchrist, the original concessionnaire, £35,000 G for the concession rights, and then says:

"In order to have the small working capital necessary to meet the first requirements of this enterprise, and whilst other resolutions are being taken,
I have decided to bring the first capital for this work to £50,000. Your participation being of 30 per cent., it follows that the part which you will have to H pay is increased to £15,000 which sum you will be good enough to pay me at your earliest convenience. Thus it is with your knowledge and agreement
I have given, under certain conditions, an option to participate up to the extent of 20 per cent. to the Neuchatel Asphalt Co., Ltd., of London."

Shakour Pasha, or a company with which he is identified, paid the £15,000 to Zervudachi, and the parties were then interested as follows: Zervudachi thirty-five I fiftieths, and Shakour Pasha fifteen fiftieths, subject to negotiations then on foot to admit other persons to different interests. That was the position when in the next year, 1907, Zervudachi made the agreement with Bergheim to which I have already referred. Then time went on, and Zervudachi complained that Bergheim did not fulfil his obligations under the agreement. Ultimately Zervudachi took proceedings against Bergheim in the courts in Egypt, and obtained there judgment by default against him for, I think, £15,000. It did not appear that there were any assets of Bergheim in Egypt that could be made available to satisfy the

A judgment, or that Zervudachi could obtain anything more by further proceedings in Egypt, and accordingly in the next year, 1910, Zervudachi instructed the defendants to take proceedings in England, where Zervudachi was, to enforce the Egyptian judgment in the first instance. The defendants looked into the matter. There was very voluminous correspondence, and no doubt they incurred substantial costs in the matter, and their view was that, instead of suing in England upon the Egyptian judgment, the proper course would be to bring an action in England against Bergheim in respect of their original cause of action to obtain back the concessions with which Bergheim had been entrusted on entering into the agreement, and to obtain damages from Bergheim for his default in not implementing his obligations under the agreement. It then became apparent that Shakour Pasha had an interest in the property, and it was considered that he ought to be consulted before the proceedings were brought. There was an interview with M. Nassif, who represented Shakour Pasha, with regard to his being made aware of the proceedings that were contemplated and consenting to or approving such proceedings being taken. The matter was one of considerable complication, and it was then considered that the better plan would be for the defendants to send to Egypt a member of their firm to take proofs and statements of the witnesses and see exactly what evidence would be required and what facts could be proved. Mr. McIver, a member of the defendant firm, went out to Egypt and spent some time there in investigating the cause of action, taking proofs of witnesses, and so on, and generally attending to the case. Among others he had an interview with Shakour Pasha in Egypt and obtained a statement from him. He then returned, and with the material in their possession the defendants had an interview with Bergheim's solicitors on May 10, 1911, that is recorded in the bill of costs: Attending Norton, Rose & Co. [who represented Bergheim], conferring fully as to whether anything could be done with a view to simplify the question in dispute, when they informed us that Mr. Bergheim was willing to withdraw all claims against you [Zervudachi] if you were prepared to do likewise, but, in the event of your pressing your claim, he would give as much trouble as possible. We informed them that it was not worth our while submitting their offer. The matter went on. There was communication with representatives of Zervudachi, and in August a writ was threatened. On Aug. 28 the defendants wrote to Norton, Rose & Co. that the matter was receiving their attention, and they would probably be in a position to issue a writ before the close of the vacation, and they took counsel's opinion as to the legal position. Then it appears that Zervudachi got into financial trouble. Proceedings were taken in Egypt, there was an adjudication of bankruptcy, and ultimately he was arrested and died, I think, by his own hand. Bergheim went abroad, met with an accident, and he too died.

Then the position was this. The original parties, Zervudachi and Bergheim, were both dead. The defendants communicated with the syndics who were the representatives in bankruptcy of Zervudachi, and after a little time Norton, Rose & Co. were instructed to represent Bergheim's executors. Then the syndics looked into the matter, and ultimately, in February, 1912, they instructed the defendants to take proceedings against Bergheim or his representatives to recover £100,000 alleged damages for failure to perform his obligations under the agreement. There was further communication between the defendants and Norton, Rose & Co., from which it appeared that Bergheim or his representatives had then raised their terms. They were no longer prepared to give up the documents on equal terms as they were in May, 1911. It may be that the fact of the failure and death of Zervudachi had changed the position. They asked in the first instance for a sum, I think, of over £600, being the balance which Bergheim alleged was due to him in respect of expenditure and work done with reference to the concession. There were some negotiations, and ultimately it was arranged that £300 should be paid, with the result that the syndics agreed to pay to Bergheim's executors £300 in exchange for Bergheim's executors surrendering all the documents they had, the documents of value, of course, being the original asphalt concessions. Those were obtained.

Then the defendants, giving particulars of their costs, claimed to have a lien against the syndies on the documents so obtained from Bergheim's executors for all their costs in connection with the matter—that is to say, they claimed a lien in respect of the bulk of the costs which had been incurred on the instructions of Zervudachi and in respect of a comparatively small sum which was costs incurred since the syndies instructed the defendants. With regard to the latter costs no question arises. Those costs were paid, and the sole question is: Have the defendants a lien in respect of the costs incurred on the instructions of Zervudachi?

While the defendants were acting for Zervudachi and before the bankruptcy a large number of papers came into their possession, mostly correspondence, but very voluminous, running into hundreds and thousands of folios. No question arises with regard to any of those documents. No doubt the defendants would have a lien on documents which came into their possession while they were acting for Zervudachi and before his bankruptcy, and, no doubt, they would continue to have a lien upon them notwithstanding his bankruptcy, but no question arises with regard to any of those documents in this action. They are not documents of any value for the purpose of realisation; they are not documents out of which any money can be obtained. The other documents are the valuable ones, and I refer to them shortly as "concessions." Those were obtained after the bankruptcy and after the defendants had been instructed by the syndies to obtain them, and they were handed to the defendants as solicitors for the syndies.

The case on behalf of the defendants is put in two ways. It is first said that there was a partnership between Shakour Pasha and Zervudachi, that the defendants were retained as solicitors by the partners, and that both partners are liable in solido for the costs, and that the defendants have a lien against the partnership for all their costs. I am satisfied that the defendants' first point fails, and that there was no partnership. It was an equitable co-ownership possibly, but not a partnership, and certainly there was nothing that could put Shakour Pasha in a position of personal responsibility for those costs. There was an interview between the defendants and Shakour Pasha in which Shakour Pasha recognised that ultimately he might have to bear 30 per cent. of the costs, but it was not, I think, suggested to him then that he was personally liable for the whole of the costs. In my judgment the defendants have failed to establish any partnership with Shakour Pasha, and certainly any joint retainer under which Zervudachi had power to pledge the credit of Shakour Pasha by instructing the solicitors on their joint account to bring the action.

The other part of the case is this. There being no dispute with regard to the lien for such costs as the defendants incurred on the syndies' instructions, it is said that because the syndies instructed the defendants to take proceedings against Bergheim to obtain the concessions they must be deemed to have accepted and taken on the benefit of the negotiations which had previously been conducted by the defendants as solicitors for Zervudachi, and that the lien for costs of the defendants extended to the whole of the costs incurred by Zervudachi, and that is said although at the date of the bankruptcy of Zervudachi, these deeds (the concessions) remained with Bergheim, there was no possession by the defendants. It is said the effect of the syndies instructing the defendants was, notwithstanding the bankruptcy, to confer a lien on the defendants as soon as they obtained the documents in respect of all the past costs incurred by Zervudachi. It was attempted to establish that claim by analogy to cases where there are proceedings in court, or proceedings in an arbitration, or proceedings to establish a claim, and where after the proceedings have continued for some time on a bankruptcy there has been a change of interest, and the trustee, or representative of the bankrupt intervenes and takes up the litigation at the point at which the bankrupt had left it. In my opinion, there is no analogy at all between proceedings of that kind and the lien that it has been held that a solicitor can acquire under those circumstances. There is no analogy whatever between that class of case and a case

A where there are no proceedings, but merely negotiations with regard to a matter and correspondence taking place between the solicitors on either side. Although counsel for the defendants claimed that under such circumstances the solicitors would obtain a lien, yet he was quite unable to produce any authority whatever in support of the proposition. Case after case which he referred to were cases in which there was an action, or a suit, or proceedings of some kind. In one case B it was an administration suit in which the solicitors had maintained the claim of the client to share in a fund in court, but they were all cases with regard to proceedings, and not a single case was cited in which such a lien as is alleged to exist had ever been shown to exist. In my opinion the grounds upon which the learned judge below proceeded were right. The court has gone a considerable extent to uphold a solicitor's lien and to endeavour to see that a solicitor, having earned C costs, should, so far as the practice of the court extends, be paid. After the case in the House of Lords, to which counsel for the defendants referred, of Shaw v. Neale (1), where it was held that the solicitor had no lien or charge on real estate the Solicitors Act, 1860, was passed under which a charging order can be obtained in certain circumstances on property recovered or preserved. But that refers again only to litigation, and under the circumstances in this case no such charging order D could be obtained. In my opinion, the judgment below was right, and the claim sought to be established in these proceedings is not well founded, and the appeal fails.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree. One can quite understand that Messrs. Lightbound, Owen, and McIver feel that in this case the owners of the concessions, whoever E they are, are indirectly deriving a very considerable benefit from the work which they did and the expenses to which they were put on the instructions of Zervudachi before his bankruptcy; but although one would wish, if one could, to secure to a solicitor that he should be paid by the person who has actually benefited by the work which he has done, yet one can only do that if the solicitor brings his case within one or other of two well-recognised rules. Counsel for the defendants has F contended that he has brought himself within the object of those rules, and has established that Messrs. Lightbound, Owen, and MacIver are entitled to a general lien, and he has claimed also that they have established that they are entitled to a particular lien.

The first question depends entirely upon a question of fact. If in truth Messrs. Lightbound, Owen, and MacIver were acting for the syndics and for the syndics G only in those negotiations which ultimately resulted in the handing over of the concessions, it would not be disputed that they could not claim a lien upon those concessions for work which had been done upon the instructions of clients other than the syndics. The defendants have endeavoured to establish that they were really acting throughout for what he has called a partnership, which included (I do not know that it consisted of) Zervudachi and Shakour Pasha, and that the H instructions which were given by the syndics by that very formal letter of Feb. 17, 1912, were not instructions given on their behalf only and to be treated as a retainer by them only, but in some way which I do not understand it is to be treated as a retainer on behalf of the partnership. As a question of fact, I entirely disagree with the view presented by the defendants; it seems to me that the facts are quite conclusive the other way. [His Lordship dealt with the facts and came I to the same conclusions as SWINFEN EADY, L.J.]

On the question of law it seems to me quite impossible to contend successfully that the rule of law which has been hitherto applied to the solicitor's lien in respect of property recovered can be applied to a case such as this. Counsel has claimed that the underlying principle should be applied to it. With great respect to him, I can see a very good reason why the principle should be applied in cases where there are proceedings, whether they consist of an action or arbitration, but I can see very good reasons why they should not be applied when the solicitors are left free to take whatever course they choose in order to secure a compromise. In my opinion, this appeal fails.

BRAY, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Lightbound, Owen & MacIver; Meynell & Pemberton.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.] B

Re PLATT. SYKES v. DAWSON C

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Sargant, J.), July 20, 21, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 563; 86 L.J.Ch. 114; 115 L.T. 524;
61 Sol. Jo. 10]

Annuity—Rights as to property charged—Bequest of fixed annuity out of income of share of residue—"Subject thereto" share bequeathed to others—Reasonable possibility of future deficiency of income—Present surplus of income—Retention of surplus—Duty of trustees. D

A testator bequeathed to his widow an annuity of £1,000, to be paid out of the income of a share of his residuary estate. "Subject thereto" he gave the share and the income thereof on trust for a son and daughter and their children. The will also contained bequests of other annuities to the testator's widow, but as to these it provided expressly that a sufficient part of the residuary estate might be appropriated to meet them, and that the surplus income of the appropriated funds should be applied as income of the residuary estate. The testator died in 1906. The rate of dividend on shares in a company in which a large part of the residuary estate was invested had lately been reduced, and, though hitherto the income had been sufficient to pay the annuity of £1,000 to the widow, there was a reasonable possibility that the rate of dividend might still further be reduced, in which case the income would be insufficient. E

Held: "subject thereto," in the context of the will, meant subject as at the time of payment of each instalment of the annuity, not subject to the satisfaction of the annuity down to the death of the annuitant; and, therefore, the trustees of the will were not entitled to retain surplus income of the share of residue to meet possible future deficiencies of income; but the surplus income, after paying the annuity down to date, must be applied on the other trusts declared by the will. F

Notes. This case must be read as explained by the Court of Appeal in Re Coller's Deed Trusts, Coller v. Coller, [1937] 3 All E.R. 292, at p. 296. H

Considered: Re Earle, Tucker v. Donne (1923), 131 L.T. 383; Re Coller's Deed Trusts, Coller v. Coller, [1937] 3 All E.R. 292. Referred to: Re Strict, Vivers v. Holman (1922), 67 Sol. Jo. 79; Re Cameron, Currie v. Milligan, [1955] 1 All E.R. 424. I

As to distribution of surplus income of an annuity fund, see 32 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 564; and for cases see 39 DIGEST 151-153.

Cases referred to in argument:

Re Watkins' Settlement, Wills v. Spence, [1911] 1 Ch. 1; 80 L.J.Ch. 102; 103 L.T. 749; 55 Sol. Jo. 63, C.A.; 39 Digest 146, 408.

Re Rose, Rose v. Rose (1915), 85 L.J.Ch. 22; 113 L.T. 142; 39 Digest 148, 422.

Harbin v. Masterman, [1896] 1 Ch. 351; 65 L.J.Ch. 195; 73 L.T. 591; 44 W.R. 421; 12 T.L.R. 105; 40 Sol. Jo. 129, C.A.; 39 Digest 144, 392.

A Originating Summons.

The testator, Frederick Platt, gave his residuary estate for division into six equal shares. After settling three of these shares to be held on trusts corresponding with those of certain settled hereditaments, the testator gave another sixth share on trust for his daughter during her life and for her children on her death, and another sixth share on trust for a son of the testator and his children. Out of the income of the remaining sixth share the testator directed his trustees to pay to his wife if she survived him an annuity of £1,000 in addition to any other annuities which he should bequeath to her by will or codicil. "Subject thereto," this sixth share of residue and the income thereof were to devolve on trusts under which they went by way of accruer to the sixth shares settled on the son and daughter. The testator gave his wife other annuities in addition to that of £1,000, and he provided as to these that the trustees of the will should have power to appropriate sufficient of the residuary estate to meet them, and that the surplus income of the appropriated funds should be applied as income of the residuary estate. He died on Sept. 22, 1906. His wife, who was his second wife, survived him, as did the son and daughter. Both had children, but the son had since died. The residuary estate consisted largely of debentures and shares in a certain company, which by the will the trustees were authorised to retain as investments. Since the outbreak of the war the dividend on some of the shares had been reduced, and fears were entertained that it might be reduced further, in which case the income of the one-sixth share of residue would become insufficient to pay the annuity of £1,000 in full. The trustees of the will accordingly took out this summons to determine whether they were entitled to retain surplus income of the one-sixth share which had already accrued to meet possible deficiencies of the income in the future.

Gurdon for the trustees.

Leverson for the widow, the annuitant.

B. A. Hall for the testator's daughter and her children, entitled to the fund "subject to" the annuity.

F Stamp for the children of the testator's son, also entitled "subject to" the annuity.

SARGANT, J.—I have felt great difficulty as to the meaning of the will in this case, but I do not think that I should resolve the difficulty by reserving judgment. The question arises with regard to the provision for the payment of an annuity of £1,000, which was directed by the testator to be paid to his widow out of the income of one-sixth of his residuary estate. The testator's widow was his second wife, and was not the mother of his children for whom provision was made by the will. [His LORDSHIP stated the material provisions of the will, and continued:] The residuary estate consists principally of debentures and preference and ordinary shares in a limited company. So long as the ordinary shares in the company pay anything like the dividend hitherto paid, there are amply sufficient means of meeting the widow's annuity from the income of the one-sixth of residue in question. However, in view of present circumstances, doubts have recently been entertained whether for the current year any dividend, or only a reduced dividend of 2½ per cent., would be paid, in which case the income of this one-sixth of residue would not be sufficient to pay the full annuity to the widow. Fortunately those fears have not been realised, and the company has been able to pay a dividend of 5 per cent.; but I must take it that there is a reasonable possibility of that not continuing to be the case, and of the income hereafter proving insufficient to pay the annuity in full. What is said on behalf of the testator's widow is that the surplus income in excess of £1,000, which is now in the hands of the trustees in respect of the past year, ought to be retained by the trustees to make good any possible deficiency in the future. Of course it is quite clear that, under the provisions of the will, the annuity is not dependent on the income of the one-sixth of residue in any particular year. It is cumulative, and has to be paid out of the income of the share during the life of the widow; and I think—though I do not decide it so as to bind those entitled in remainder—that the terms of the gift are such as, according to the most recent decisions on the subject, charge the annuity upon the corpus of the share, the gift over being made “subject thereto.” If, therefore, there is a deficiency of income in any year, it will have to be made up at least out of any surplus in a subsequent year, and almost certainly, if she so requests, by a sale of a sufficient part of the corpus of the share, but it does not necessarily follow that the trustees are entitled to retain the surplus income of a past year to meet a possible deficiency of income in a future year. I have to construe the clause as it stands, and I am very much impressed by the fact that what is permitted to devolve under the accruer clause—in other words, what is given over to the settled shares of the son and daughter, subject to the annuity—is the same share and “the income thereof.”

At any particular time when the trustees have to consider whether the income is to devolve between the son's and daughter's shares they are met by this difficulty—that is, to be “subject thereto”—that is, to the annuity. Does that mean subject as at the time of payment of the annuity or subject to the satisfaction of the annuity down to the death of the annuitant? In my opinion, the former is the true meaning of the language, and I think that the administration of the trust would be extremely complicated if any other view were adopted. It is curious that, so far as I know, the point has never been decided; at any rate, no authority has been cited before me. However, that rather tells against the claim of the annuitant, since if any such right existed it would have been enforced from time to time by persons in the same position as she. One reason may be that a fund to secure an annuity is generally so invested that the income of the fund is reasonably certain, and not of a fluctuating character, though that does not entirely explain the absence of any authority upon the point. The annuitant will not be prejudiced, since in the view which I take she will be entitled to have capital sold to make good any deficiency in the annuity. It is true that in the circumstances realisation may not be easy, but I do not think that I can take that consideration into account. Taking the analogy of a company with preference and ordinary shares, I have never heard of any suggested power in the company—apart from express provisions in the articles of association—to postpone the payment of a proper dividend on the ordinary shares for the purpose of providing for the payment of dividends on the preference shares in the future, although those shares are cumulative. Counsel for the annuitant referred to a special power in the will to appropriate a sufficient part of the residuary estate to answer out of the income thereof the other annuities given to the widow by the will, by which it is expressly provided that the surplus income shall be applicable as income of the residuary estate; but any argument derived from that clause seems to me to be of a somewhat double-edged character. The testator may have intended to draw a contrast between the annuities, or, on the other hand, he may only have indicated the course to be pursued with regard to them generally.

On the whole, though I feel great doubt on the point, I am of opinion that the income to accrue on this share of residue, after satisfying the claims of the annuitant, down to date, ought to be distributed between the two other shares as directed by the will. Of course, if the trustees should foresee a certain deficiency, and should have surplus income in their hands, I do not intend to preclude them from applying this money to making good the annuity. As a matter of administration and of immediate adjustment, they might make good the annuity out of any income in their hands. All that I decide is that they are not to retain or accumulate any surplus income for the purpose of making good any possible deficiency in a future year.

Solicitors: Gadsden & Pennefather.

[Reported by T. DE LA POER BERESFORD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re PRYCE. NEVILL v. PRYCE

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Eve, J.), December 13, 19, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 Ch. 234; 86 L.J.Ch. 383; 116 L.T. 149;
61 Sol. Jo. 183]

Settlement—Marriage settlement—Covenant to settle after-acquired property—Enforcement of covenant by volunteers—Wife's next-of-kin—Opposition by wife.

By a marriage settlement in 1887 on the marriage of P., who died in 1907, to the defendant, the defendant (the wife) covenanted to settle after-acquired property. The residue of the wife's trust funds in remainder, in the event, which happened, of there being no children of the marriage, was held by trustees for her next-of-kin as though she had died intestate and without having been married, and the husband's fund in trust for him, his executors, administrators, and assigns, the husband covenanting to bring into settlement any sum to which he should become entitled under his father's will. By an appointment in 1868, P. became entitled, subject to the life interest of his mother, who died in 1913, to a share of property worth approximately £4,500. A sum of £4,700 had in 1889 been settled in trust for three persons as P.'s father, who died in 1891, should appoint, a third share being appointed to P. by his father's will. In 1904 P. executed a deed of gift to the wife which he confirmed by his will, under which the wife took all P.'s interest under the 1868 appointment, and also a life interest in P.'s residuary estate. The funds in question had not been got in by the trustees of the 1887 settlement, and the wife did not wish them to be recovered by the trustees for the benefit of her next-of-kin.

Held: P. became entitled to his share of the £4,700 under his father's will: Re Crawshay, Walker v. Crawshay (1), [1891] 3 Ch. 176, applied; Evans v. Jennings (2) (1862), 1 New Rep. 178, not applied, and so this share was caught by his 1887 covenant to settle; the interests assured to the wife by the 1904 deed of gift were caught by her 1887 covenant to settle after-acquired property: Re Ellis's Settlement, Ellis v. Ellis (3), [1909] Ch. 618, applied; but, as the wife's next-of-kin were outside the consideration of her 1887 marriage settlement, and so were volunteers, the court would not, merely at their instance and for their benefit, order the trustees of that settlement to get in these funds: Re d'Angibau, Andrews v. Andrews (4) (1880), 15 Ch.D. 228, applied.

Notes. Applied: Re Kay's Settlement, Broadbent v. Macnab, [1939] 1 All E.R. 245. Referred to: Cannon v. Hartley, [1949] 1 All E.R. 50.

As to covenants for settlement of after-acquired property, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 450–458, as to consideration for settlements, see ibid., 458–461; and for cases see 40 DIGEST (Repl.) 533–565 and 566–581 respectively.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Crawshay, Walker v. Crawshay, [1891] 3 Ch. 176; 60 L.J.Ch. 583; 65 L.T. 72; 39 W.R. 682; 40 Digest (Repl.) 549, 566.
- (2) Evans v. Jennings (1862), 1 New Rep. 178; 40 Digest (Repl.) 537, 476.
- (3) Re Ellis's Settlement, Ellis v. Ellis, [1909] 1 Ch. 618; 78 L.J.Ch. 375; 100 L.T. 511; 26 T.L.R. 166; 40 Digest (Repl.) 539, 496.
- (4) Re D'Angibau, Andrews v. Andrews (1880), 15 Ch.D. 228; 49 L.J.Ch. 756; 43 L.T. 135; 28 W.R. 930, C.A.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 569, 750.
- (5) Re Plumptre's Marriage Settlement, Underhill v. Plumptre, [1910] 1 Ch. 609; 79 L.J.Ch. 340; 102 L.T. 315; 26 T.L.R. 321; 54 Sol. Jo. 326; 40 Digest (Repl.) 539, 497.
- (6) Leigh-White v. Rutledge, [1914] 1 I.R. 135; 40 Digest (Repl.) 540, *108.

(7) Pullen v. Koc, [1913] 1 Ch. 9; 82 L.J.Ch. 37; 107 L.T. 811; 57 Sol. Jo. 97; 40 Digest (Repl.) 566, 718. A

Also referred to in argument:

Coles v. Coles, [1901] 1 Ch. 711; 70 L.J.Ch. 324; 84 L.T. 142; 40 Digest (Repl.) 539, 495.

Spickernell v. Holtham (1854), Kay, 669; 2 Eq. Rep. 1103; 2 W.R. 638; 69 E.R. 285; 6 Digest (Repl.) 478, 3372. B

Lovett v. Lovett (1859), John. 118; 33 L.T.O.S. 255; 7 W.R. 333; 70 E.R. 362; 40 Digest (Repl.) 517, 284.

A.-G. v. Chapman, [1891] 2 Q.B. 526; 60 L.J.Q.B. 602; 65 L.T. 119; 40 W.R. 79; 7 T.L.R. 640, D.C.; 21 Digest 13, 64.

Adjourned Summons to determine (i) whether a sum of approximately £4,500 to which Pryce Meyrick Pryce, the deceased husband of the defendant, became entitled under his father's marriage settlement and a joint appointment made in 1868 was caught by a covenant to settle after-acquired property; (ii) whether a third share of another sum of £4,700, was a sum to which Pryce M. Pryce became entitled under the will of his father; and (iii)—on which judgment was reserved—whether the trustees of the defendant's marriage settlement ought to take steps to recover these funds. C

These questions were raised on the following facts.—By an indenture of marriage settlement dated Aug. 30, 1887, and made between Robert Davies Pryce of the first part, Pryce M. Pryce of the second part, Robert Swann of the third part, the defendant Mabel Georgina Pryce of the fourth part, and three trustees, now represented by the two plaintiffs, of the fifth part certain property and funds belonging to the defendant, and therein described as "the wife's trust funds," were settled upon trusts for the defendant for her separate use during the joint lives of herself and her husband, with remainder to the survivors of herself and her husband for life, with remainder for the children of the marriage (of whom there never in fact were any), with remainder as to the sum of £6,000, part of the wife's trust fund, for the defendant Mabel G. Pryce absolutely, D

"and as to the residue of the wife's trust funds, including any after-acquired property and subject to the trusts of the wife's trust fund, to the person or persons who would be entitled thereto under the statute of distributions of intestates' estates had Mabel G. Pryce died intestate and without having been married." E

Clause 3 of the marriage settlement contained the following provision: F

"It is agreed that all real and personal property not hereinbefore settled to which Mabel G. Pryce at the time of the intended marriage or she or Pryce M. Pryce in her right at any time during her now intended coverture shall be or become entitled, whether in possession, reversion, or otherwise . . . shall, as soon as circumstances will admit and at the cost of the trust estate, be assured and transferred by Pryce M. Pryce and Mabel G. Pryce respectively and by all other necessary and proper parties (if any) under or otherwise vested in the trustees upon . . . the trusts and with and subject to the powers and provisions hereinbefore declared and contained concerning the wife's trust funds." G

Clause 5 contained the following provision: H

"It is agreed and declared that the trustees shall stand possessed of any sum to which Pryce M. Pryce shall become entitled under the will of Robert D. Pryce (his father) upon the trusts following . . ."

In the clause were set out certain trusts of such sums (therein defined as "the husband's trust funds"), which trusts were for the husband during the joint lives of the spouses, then to the survivor of them, with remainder to their children, and in default (as happened) of there being any child cl. 5 declared that the trustees I

A should stand possessed of the husband's trust funds upon trust for Pryce M. Pryce absolutely.

Under the marriage settlement executed on Jan. 17, 1849 on the marriage of Robert D. Pryce, the father of Pryce M. Pryce, Robert D. Pryce and his wife were given a joint power of appointment over property and funds among the issue of his marriage after the death of the wife of Robert D. Pryce. This joint power was exercised in the year 1868, the property and funds subject to the 1849 settlement being appointed upon trust for the children of the marriage in equal shares at twenty-one or marriage. Robert D. Pryce died on Aug. 21, 1891, and his wife, who took a life interest in part of the property subject to the settlement of 1849, died on Dec. 28, 1913. Pryce M. Pryce was the second of the four children of the marriage of Robert D. Pryce and his wife, and Pryce M. Pryce accordingly became absolutely entitled under his father's marriage settlement and the appointment of 1868 to a vested interest in at least one-fourth share of the property and funds subject to the trusts of the 1849 settlement, the share amounting to about £4,500. On Dec. 12, 1904, Pryce M. Pryce executed a deed of gift to his wife, the defendant, the operative part of which deed was as follows:

D "Pryce M. Pryce doth hereby convey unto Mabel G. Pryce, her executors, administrators, and assigns, all that the share and interest of him Pryce M. Pryce of and in the capital surplus moneys to arise or which have arisen from the sale of the land contained or referred to in the settlement of Jan. 17, 1849, and of and in all other the capital moneys to arise or which have arisen from the sale of the land mentioned or referred to in the settlement of Jan. 17, 1849, and of and in all other the capital moneys, legacies, portions, funds, stocks, securities, and personal estate comprised and described in the settlements, and thereby or otherwise rendered subject to the joint power of appointment to hold the same unto Mabel G. Pryce for her separate use absolutely subject to the life interests therein of Jane S. Pryce [the mother of Pryce M. Pryce]."

Pryce M. Pryce died on Jan. 17, 1907. By his will he appointed the defendant and his two brothers executors and trustees, and, after purporting again to give to his wife all his share and interest under the appointment of 1868 and all moneys appointed thereunder, gave his residuary estate upon trust for conversion and to hold the same and the investments thereof upon trust to pay the income to his wife during her life, and after her death in trust for his two brothers in equal shares. The defendant did not desire that effect should be given to the covenant contained in cl. 3 of her marriage settlement of 1887. By an indenture dated July 27, 1889, and made between Robert D. Pryce of the first part, Athelstan Robert Pryce of the second part, and two trustees of the third part, hereinafter referred to as "the deed of family arrangement," certain hereditaments were appointed and assured to the trustees to the use of Robert D. Pryce during his life and subject thereto to the use of the trustees for a term of 1,000 years upon trust to raise by mortgage or sale, first, £9,000 after Robert D. Pryce's death, and, secondly, a sum of £4,700 immediately after the death of the survivor of Robert D. Pryce and his wife, and the trustees were to stand possessed of such two sums of £9,000 and £4,700 for all or any of three named persons, of whom Pryce M. Pryce was one, as Robert D. Pryce should by deed or will or codicil appoint, and in default of such appointment upon trust for such three persons in equal shares, with a power to postpone payment.

H Robert D. Pryce (who died in the year 1891), by his will made on July 30, 1889, gave the residue of his personal estate and American land to three of his sons, of whom Pryce M. Pryce was one, in equal shares, and appointed any sums coming within the power in the 1889 deed of family arrangement to such three sons in equal shares. By a codicil to his will he devised hereditaments to his eldest son, Athelstan R. Pryce, in fee simple charged with the payment of £3,500 to his younger sons, of whom Pryce M. Pryce was one. After his father's death Pryce M. Pryce, without the knowledge of the trustees of the settlement of 1887, received and spent his shares of the £9,000 and £3,500. The third share of the £4,700 secured by the term of years limited by the 1889 deed of family arrangement was the only sum which remained receivable or recoverable under cl. 5 of the marriage settlement of 1887 and appointed by his father's will to Pryce M. Pryce. A

An originating summons was taken out on behalf of the present trustees of the marriage settlement of Aug. 30, 1887, to which Mabel Georgina Pryce was defendant, asking for the determination of the three questions summarised ante. B

EVE, J., having held that the £4,500 was caught by the covenant to settle the wife's after-acquired property, and that the share of the £4,700 came under the will of Pryce M. Pryce's father, and that no steps ought to be taken to recover those funds, intimated that he would give reasons for the latter conclusion at a later date.

J. M. Gover for the trustees. C

D. D. Robertson for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 19, 1916. EVE, J., read the following judgment.—These proceedings have been instituted by the plaintiffs, the present trustees of the settlement executed on the marriage in 1887 of the late Mr. Pryce Meyrick Pryce with the defendant, who is now his widow, with the object, first, of having it determined whether certain interests in reversion assured by the husband to his wife in December, 1904, were caught by the covenant to settle the wife's after-acquired property contained in the settlement; secondly, to have it determined whether the one-third share of the husband in two sums of £9,000 and £4,700 appointed to him by the will of his father in exercise of a special power of appointment contained in a deed of family arrangement come to in 1889 was caught by an agreement and declaration in the marriage settlement that the trustees should stand possessed of any sum to which the husband should become entitled under the will of his father upon the trusts therein mentioned; and, thirdly, to have it determined whether, in the events which have happened, the trustees ought to take any steps to recover or enforce payment or transfer to them of such (if any) of the said premises as the court shall hold to have been caught by the said covenant or agreement respectively. D

I have already held, on the authority of Re Ellis's Settlement (3), followed in Re Plumtree's Marriage Settlement (5) and in Leigh-White v. Rutledge (6), that the interests assured by the husband to the wife were caught by the covenant to settle her after-acquired property, and, on the authority of Re Crawshay, Walker v. Crawshay (1), in preference to Evans v. Jennings (2), that the husband's third share of each of the two sums of £9,000 and £4,700 represented a sum of money to which he became entitled under the will of his father. His title to the one-third of the £9,000 occurred on his father's death in 1891, and shortly afterwards, without the knowledge of the marriage settlement trustees, he received and spent it. When he died in 1907 he left no estate beyond what was required for payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, and in these circumstances it is obvious that nothing can be gained by taking any proceedings to recover this particular sum, and no proceedings ought, therefore, to be taken in respect thereof. The interests given by the husband to the wife and the husband's one-third share of the £4,700 stand on a different footing from the item I have just dealt with. These have only fallen into possession on the recent death of the husband's mother, and are still outstanding in the trustees of the parents' marriage settlement and in the trustees of the deed of family arrangement respectively. E F G

The question I have to decide is whether the plaintiffs, as trustees of the marriage settlement, ought to take steps to obtain transfer and payment to them of these premises. In considering this question it is material to note that there was never any issue of the marriage between the late Mr. Pryce and the defendant, and that, subject to the defendant's life interest in both funds, the residue of the wife's fund, after payment thereof to the defendant of a sum of £6,000, is held in trust for her statutory next-of-kin as though she had died intestate and without ever having H I

A been married, and the husband's fund in trust for the husband, his executors, administrators, and assigns. As the defendant is tenant for life under the husband's will, no good can come of any action by the trustees to obtain payment to them of the one-third share of the £4,700, and accordingly I declare that they ought not to take any steps to recover that. The position of the wife's fund is somewhat different in that her next-of-kin would be entitled to it on her death, but they are volunteers, and, although the court would probably compel fulfilment of the contract to settle at the instance of any persons within the marriage consideration (see per COTTON, L.J., in Re D'Angibau (4), 15 Ch.D. at p. 242) and in their favour will treat the outstanding property as subjected to an enforceable trust (Pullen v. Koe (7)), "volunteers have no right whatever to obtain specific performance of a mere covenant which has remained as a covenant and has never been performed": see per JAMES, L.J., in Re D'Angibau (4), 15 Ch.D. at p. 246. Nor could damages be awarded either in this court or, I apprehend, at law, where since the Judicature Act the same defences would be available to the defendant as could be raised in an action brought in this court for specific performance or damages.

B In these circumstances, seeing that the next-of-kin could neither maintain an action to enforce the covenant nor for damages for breach of it, and that the settlement is not a declaration of trust constituting the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust between the defendant and the next-of-kin, in which case effect would be given to the trusts even in favour of volunteers, but is a mere voluntary contract to create a trust, ought the court now for the sole benefit of these volunteers to direct the trustees to take proceedings to enforce the defendant's covenant. I think it ought not; to do so would be to give the next-of-kin by indirect means relief they cannot obtain by any direct procedure, and would in effect be enforcing the settlement as against the defendant's legal right to payment and transfer from the trustees of the parents' marriage settlement. The circumstances are not unlike those which existed in Re D'Angibau (4), and I think the position here is covered by the judgments of the lords justices in that case. Accordingly I declare that the trustees ought not to take any steps to compel the transfer or payment to them of the premises assured to the wife by the deed of Dec. 12, 1904. The costs must be taxed as between solicitor and client and paid out of the capital of the trust funds.

C Solicitors: Tyler & Co.; Palmer, Bull & Bartlett, for John A. Kingdon, Basingstoke.

[Reported by W. P. PAIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

MITCHELL, COTTS & CO. v. STEEL BROS. & CO., LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Atkin, J.), May 26, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 610; 85 L.J.K.B. 1747; 115 L.T. 606;
32 T.L.R. 533; 22 Com. Cas. 63; 18 Asp.M.L.C. 497]Shipping—Charterparty—Implied term—Undertaking by charterer not to send ship on illegal voyage.

There is an implied undertaking by a shipper of goods that he will not ship goods which involve the risk of unusual danger or delay to the ship of which her owner does not know or might not reasonably know, without communicating to the owner the facts which are within his knowledge and indicating the risk. A shipment of goods upon an illegal voyage, i.e., a voyage that cannot be performed without violating the law of the flag of the country or the law of the place where the goods are to be carried—a shipment of goods which would involve the ship in the consequences of forfeiture or delay—is analogous to a shipment of goods which might cause the destruction of the ship.

Charterers chartered a vessel to ship a cargo of rice to P. They knew that the rice could not be discharged there without the permission of the British government, a fact which the shipowners did not know and of which they were not informed by the charterers. After negotiations had taken place permission was refused and as a result the ship was delayed. On a claim by the shipowners for damages for detention of the ship,

Held: as the shipowners did not know, and could not reasonably have known, that the vessel would not be allowed to proceed without special permission, the charterers were in breach of the charterparty and the shipowners were entitled to recover.

Statement of CROMPTON, J., in Brass v. Maitland (1) (1856), 26 L.J.Q.B. 49 at p. 57, applied.

Notes. Distinguished: The Domald, [1920] P. 56; Transoceanica Societa Italiana di Navigazione v. H. S. Shipton & Sons, [1923] 1 K.B. 31. Referred to: Akt. Geysir v. Dansk Svoelvsyre and Superphosphat Fabrik (1919), 24 Com. Cas. 178; Spanish Steamship Sebastian v. De Vizecaya, [1920] 1 K.B. 332; The Lisa, [1921] P. 38; Burley, Ltd. v. Stepney Corpn., [1947] 1 All E.R. 507.

As to shipment of goods likely to cause damage or delay to ship or cargo, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 302-304; and for cases see 41 DIGEST 314, 315.

Case referred to:

(1) Brass v. Maitland (1856), 6 E. & B. 470; 26 L.J.Q.B. 49; 27 L.T.O.S. 249; 2 Jur.N.S. 710; 4 W.R. 647; 119 E.R. 940; 41 Digest 314, 1750.

Also referred to in argument:

Dunn v. Bucknall Bros., Dunn v. Donald Currie & Co., [1902] 2 K.B. 614; 71 L.J.K.B. 963; 87 L.T. 497; 51 W.R. 100; 18 T.L.R. 807; 9 Asp.M.L.C. 336; 8 Com. Cas. 33, C.A.; 41 Digest 410, 2552.

Greenshields, Cowie & Co. v. Stephens & Sons, [1908] A.C. 431; 77 L.J.K.B. 985; 99 L.T. 597; 24 T.L.R. 880; 52 Sol. Jo. 727; 11 Asp.M.L.C. 167; 14 Com. Cas. 41, H.L.; 41 Digest 597, 4225.

Award stated by an arbitrator in the form of a Special Case arising on a claim brought by the owners of the steamship Kaijo Maru against charterers for damages for detention of the ship.

By a charterparty dated March, 1915, the ship was chartered for the carriage of a cargo of rice from Bassein to Alexandria. The ship was loaded, and left her port of loading on Apr. 18 bound for Alexandria. While she was on her way the charter was varied, and it was agreed between the parties that the ship should go to Piraeus to discharge. When the ship arrived at Suez the charterers tried to

A get the consent of the Admiralty authorities to her proceeding to Piraeus. There were negotiations, and eventually permission was refused. The ship remained for twenty-two days and then went to her original destination, Alexandria. The shipowners alleged that they were entitled to recover damages caused by the ship being thus detained. The matter went to arbitration and the arbitrator found that the ship was delayed at Port Said for twenty-two days; that such detention
B was wholly due to the fact that the charterers had not obtained the permission of the government authorities for the destination of the ship and cargo being changed to Piraeus and that, when negotiating with the owners for their agreement to the ship being sent to Piraeus, the charterers were aware of the fact that to send the ship to that destination permission from the government authorities was necessary, but they did not communicate that fact to the owners. On those find-
C ings the arbitrator made an award in favour of the shipowners. In a supplemental award the arbitrator found that the owners had no knowledge and might not reasonably have known that permission was necessary to discharge the cargo at Piraeus.

Roche, K.C., and Norman Raeburn for the shipowners.

Leslie Scott, K.C., and R. A. Wright for the charterers.

D ATKIN, J., stated the facts, and continued: The shipowners say that this is analogous to the case of shipping goods which are known to the charterers to be dangerous, in which case the charterers would be responsible for such damage as happened to the ship or shipowners in the course of the voyage. I was referred to Brass v. Maitland (1), where the majority of the court seem to have laid down
E that there is an absolute obligation on a shipper to make good damage caused by a shipment of dangerous goods. CROMPTON, J., however, took a narrower view. He said (26 L.J.Q.B. at p. 57):

"Suppose, for instance, that a shipment was made of goods to a foreign port to which, according to the information known at the shipping port, such consignments might be properly and safely made, but that by some recent
F law the foreign country has made such shipment illegal, would the shipper be liable in such case? I entertain great doubt whether either the duty or the warranty extends beyond the cases where the shipper has knowledge or means of knowledge of the dangerous nature of the goods when shipped or when he has been guilty of some negligence as shipper, as by shipping without com-
G municating danger which he had the means of knowing and ought to have communicated."

I think there can be no question but that the shipment of goods upon an illegal voyage, i.e., upon a voyage that cannot be performed without violating the law of the flag of the country or the law of the place where the goods are to be carried to—a shipment of goods which would involve the ship in consequences either of H forfeiture or delay—is precisely analogous to a shipment of dangerous goods which might cause the destruction of the ship. What is the full extent of the shipper's obligation? It appears to me that it amounts to this, that he stipulates that he will not ship goods which involve the risk of unusual danger or delay to the ship, which the owner does not know of or might not reasonably know of without communicating to the owner facts which are within his knowledge indicating that I there is such a risk. I do not say that his obligation is not wider than that. I take the findings of the arbitrator to be here that the shippers did know when they made this contract of affreightment with the shipowners that the goods could not be taken to Piraeus though the government might, if the shippers succeed in inducing them to do so, give them a licence. In other words, that the destination in itself was an illegal destination because the British government would not allow the goods to go through unless a special permission was given. I think it must be taken on the findings themselves, by which of course I am bound, that the shippers knew, and the shipowners did not know, and could not reasonably have known, that the vessel would not be allowed to proceed without special permission. In these circumstances it appears to me that it follows on the findings of the arbitrator that this delay arose from a breach of the charterparty by the charterers. I think, therefore, the shipowners have a cause of action against the charterers for the delay so caused, the arbitrator has found what that should be, and with that I cannot interfere. Therefore, I think this award must stand, and the shipowners must have the costs of this hearing.

Award upheld.

Solicitors: Waltons & Co.; Botterell & Roche.

[Reported by W. V. BALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

MANN, CROSSMAN AND PAULIN, LTD. v. LAND REGISTRY

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Neville, J.), October 25, 26, 1917]

[Reported [1918] 1 Ch. 202; 87 L.J.Ch. 81; 117 L.T. 705;
34 T.L.R. 89; 62 Sol. Jo. 54]

Perpetuities—Lease—Reversionary lease to commence more than twenty-one years after date of grant—Interesse termini—Registration with good leasehold title.

A brewery company was lessee in possession of premises under a lease for fifty years granted in 1896. In 1917 the owner of the reversion in fee granted the company a reversionary lease of the same premises for thirty years to commence immediately upon the expiration of the previous lease at Midsummer 1946. The company, which was registered as proprietor with a good leasehold title in respect of the first lease, applied to the Land Registry for similar registration in respect of the reversionary lease. The registrar refused to register the reversionary lease with a good leasehold title, being doubtful of the validity of a lease commencing beyond the period allowed by the rule against perpetuities and the practice of the Land Registry having been to register such reversionary leases with a possessory title only. On a summons to determine the matter,

Held: under the reversionary lease the company had an immediate vested interest, and, therefore, the lease was not void under the rule against perpetuities and the company was entitled to be registered with a good leasehold title.

Notes. The doctrine of interesse termini was abolished by s. 149 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, see 20 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 752, but this case is useful as stating the law before 1926.

As to interests subject to the rule against perpetuities, see 29 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 293; and for cases see 37 DIGEST 76. As to future leases and the doctrine of interesse termini, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 476; and for cases see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 479.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Miller v. Green (1831), 8 Bing. 92; 2 Cr. & J. 142; 1 Moo. & S. 199; 2 Tyr. 1; 1 L.J.Ex. 51; 131 E.R. 336, Ex. Ch.; 89 Digest 200, 900.
- (2) Redington v. Browne (1893), 32 L.R.Ir. 347; 37 Digest 82, 216i.
- (3) Lord Llangattock v. Watney, Combe, Reid & Co., Ltd., [1910] 1 K.B. 236; 79 L.J.K.B. 233; 101 L.T. 766; 74 J.P. 73; 26 T.L.R. 125; 54 Sol. Jo. 117, C.A.; affirmed [1910] A.C. 394; 79 L.J.K.B. 559; 102 L.T. 548; 74 J.P. 174; 26 T.L.R. 418; 54 Sol. Jo. 456, H.L.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 483, 1257.

- A (4) Gillard v. Cheshire Lines Committee (1884), 32 W.R. 943, C.A.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 480, 1218.

Also referred to in argument:

- Doe d. Rawlings v. Walker* (1826), 5 B. & C. 111; 7 Dow. & Ry.K.B. 487; 4 L.J.O.S.K.B. 93; 108 E.R. 41; 38 Digest (Repl.) 904, 962.
- B Doe d. Pulteney v. Cavan (1794), 5 Term Rep. 567.
- Smith v. Day* (1837), 2 M. & W. 684; Murp. & H. 185; 6 L.J.Ex. 219; 150 E.R. 931; 40 Digest (Repl.) 483, 1255.
- Knight v. City of London Brewery Co.*, [1912] 1 K.B. 10; 81 L.J.K.B. 194; 106 L.T. 564; 30 Digest (Repl.) 483, 1258.
- Re Frost, Frost v. Frost* (1889), 43 Ch.D. 246; 59 L.J.Ch. 118; 62 L.T. 25; 38 W.R. 264; 44 Digest 419, 2508.
- C Re Da Costa, Clarke v. Church of England Collegiate School of St. Peter, [1912] 1 Ch. 337; 81 L.J.Ch. 293; 106 L.T. 458; 28 T.L.R. 189; 56 Sol. Jo. 240; 37 Digest 73, 134.
- Beard v. Wescott* (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 801; 106 E.R. 1383; 37 Digest 117, 488.
- Woodall v. Clifton*, [1905] 2 Ch. 257; 74 L.J.Ch. 555; 93 L.T. 257; 54 W.R. 7; 21 T.L.R. 581, C.A.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 495, 1395.
- D Williams v. Bosanquet (1819), 1 Brod. & Bing. 238; 3 Moore, C.P. 500; 129 E.R. 714; 31 Digest (Repl.) 452, 5785.
- London and South Western Rail. Co. v. Gomm* (1882), 20 Ch.D. 562; 51 L.J.Ch. 530; 46 L.T. 449; 30 W.R. 620; on appeal (1882), 20 Ch.D. 576, C.A.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 331, 2716.
- E Dunn v. Flood (1883), 25 Ch.D. 629; 53 L.J.Ch. 537; 49 L.T. 670; 32 W.R. 197; affirmed (1885), 28 Ch.D. 586; 54 L.J.Ch. 370; 52 L.T. 699; 33 W.R. 315; 1 T.L.R. 206, C.A.; 37 Digest 73, 136.
- Re Hollis' Hospital Trustees and Hague's Contract*, [1899] 2 Ch. 540; 68 L.J.Ch. 673; 81 L.T. 90; 47 W.R. 691; 43 Sol. Jo. 644; 37 Digest 72, 133.
- Re Ashforth, Sibley v. Ashforth*, [1905] 1 Ch. 535; sub nom. Re Ashforth's Trusts, Ashforth v. Sibley, 74 L.J.Ch. 361; 92 L.T. 534; 53 W.R. 328; 21 T.L.R. 329; 49 Sol. Jo. 350; 37 Digest 98, 336.
- F Re Abbot, Peacock v. Frigout, [1893] 1 Ch. 54; 62 L.J.Ch. 46; 67 L.T. 794; 41 W.R. 154; 3 R. 72; 37 Digest 108, 415.
- Lock v. Furze* (1865), 19 C.B.N.S. 96; 6 New Rep. 340; 34 L.J.P. 201; 12 L.T. 731; 11 Jur.N.S. 726; 13 W.R. 971; 144 E.R. 722; on appeal (1866), L.R. 1 C.P. 441; Har. & Ruth. 379; 35 L.J.C.P. 141; 15 L.T. 161; 30 J.P. 743; 14 W.R. 403, Ex. Ch.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 147, 2858.
- G Lewis v. Baker, [1905] 1 Ch. 46; 74 L.J.Ch. 39; 91 L.T. 744; 21 T.L.R. 17; 30 Digest (Repl.) 509, 1488.

H Summons taken out by the plaintiffs asking whether the registrar of the Land Registry ought to comply with the request for registration of the plaintiffs, or whether such application ought to be refused on the ground that the reversionary lease was void as offending against the rule against perpetuities.

The plaintiffs, a brewery company, were lessees in possession of a beerhouse known as the Anchor and Hope, St. George's Street East, in the county of Middlesex, under a lease for fifty years, granted in 1896, at a premium of £225 and an annual rent of £30. In 1917 Isabella Hind, the widow of the lessor of the first lease and owner in fee of the reversion, granted a lease of the same premises to the plaintiffs, dated Mar. 23, 1917, for a term of thirty years, to commence immediately upon the expiration of the previous lease—i.e., at Midsummer, 1946. The plaintiffs, who were registered as proprietors with a good leasehold title in respect of the first lease, applied at the Land Registry for similar registration as to the reversionary lease. The registrar, having regard to the warranty as to title implied by such registration and to the doubts which existed as to the validity of a reversionary lease commencing beyond the period allowed by the rule against perpetuities, refused to register the lease. It had been the practice of the Land Registry to register such reversionary leases with possessory title only.

Bryan Farrar for the plaintiffs, the lessees.

J. G. Wood for the lessor.

Austen-Cartmell for the registrar.

NEVILLE, J.—What I have to decide is whether the interest in question which may arise in possession more than twenty-one years hence is, within the meaning of the rule against perpetuities, a vested interest or whether it is not.

I have heard a very interesting inquiry as to whether the law still requires an entry to perfect a lease, but I am certainly not going to decide that question, because I do not think that it is necessary for the determination of the present case. I think, however, that the reference to the nature of an interesse termini in 2 Co. Litt. at p. 270a, in that connection is worthy of attention. He states it thus :

"For before entry the lessee hath but an interesse termini, an interest of a term, and no possession, and therefore a lease which enures by way of enlarging of an estate cannot work without a possession, for before possession there is no reversion; and yet if a tenant for twenty years in possession make a lease for B. for five years and B. enter, a release to the first lessee is good, for he had an actual possession, and the possession of his lessee is his possession. And so it is if a man make a lease for years, and the first lessee doth enter, a release to him in the remainder for years is good to enlarge his estate."

Counsel for the registrar has pointed out there may be a distinction between the case of one lease, so to speak, overlapping another and subject to the other, and two leases one beginning when the other terminated, and it is not easy to see from the words used which was intended by the learned author. The note which is of authority does appear to indicate that the real question is whether the interest is vested or not. Then, again, it has been observed that the observation is only with reference to the operation of the Statute of Uses. I confess I had some little difficulty in feeling sure that the case where the lease was to commence at a future date when the lessor is in possession is identical with the case of a lease by the lessor when his lessee is in possession at the time of the granting of the lease. I am not satisfied in that case that the taking possession by the lessee later in date is necessary.

There is another point with regard to that. MR. JOSHUA WILLIAMS [in WILLIAMS ON REAL PROPERTY (22nd Edn.) 201, 202] certainly seems to have thought that, both with regard to a lease dating from the present and with regard to a lease dating in futuro, the lease ought to be made good either under the common law, if it was accompanied by possession or followed by possession, and under the Statute of Uses if it was made by bargain and date. Then we have in connection with that the interesting case of Miller v. Green (1), in which TINDAL, C.J., lays it down that it is for the lessee to say in a case of a lease which is capable of being held as a bargain and date, whether he takes it as lessee under the Statute of Uses or as a common law demise. He may elect to treat the lease to him by his landlord from either point of view. It could not be done in the case before the court there, because the persons buying were not the lessees but strangers to the lease, and could not exercise the election which the lessees might have exercised. I say these things by the way, because I do not feel satisfied in my mind that it is a sound proposition of law to say that a lease in futuro must be accompanied by or followed by possession to make it complete. However, whether that be so or not, the question, to my mind here is, having regard to the rule against perpetuities, whether the interesse termini which undoubtedly the tenant in futuro takes is a vested or an executory or contingent interest. I think if it is vested it does not come within the rule against perpetuities; I think if it is executory or contingent it does.

A I now turn to the definition of "vesting" in FEARNE ON CONTINGENT REMAINDERS (10th Edn.) vol. 2, p. 27. There the matter is stated thus:

B "Where the right is a right of present possession, and the party is in possession, whether personally or by substitute, the estate is said to be vested in possession. When it is a present right of having that possession whenever it may become vacant by the determination of a preceding chattel interest, or whenever it may become vacant by the determination of a preceding freehold estate, or at some other future time to which only the possession is postponed, in each of these cases the estate is said to be vested in right or interest. And even when it is a present right of present possession, if such right has been attended with possession, but ceases to be so the estate can only be said to be vested in right of interest."

C Applying that proposition to the present case, undoubtedly the interest here is vested in right or interest. It has been decided with regard to an interesse termini that it is alienable and passes on the death of the lessee to his executors, and consequently it seems to me impossible to say that that is not a right of taking possession whenever it has become vacant by the determination of a preceding chattel interest. I think that is a complete and perfect definition of the proposition we find here. So much for the general principle, but before passing from that, I would refer to CRUISE'S DIGEST (4th Edn.) vol. 4, p. 89, s. 21, where the author says:

E "Every estate and interest in lands and tenements may be assigned; as also every present and certain estate or interest in incorporeal hereditaments, such as rents, allowances, etc., even though the interest be future, as a term for years to commence at a subsequent period, yet it may be assigned, for the interest is vested in presenti, though only to take effect in futuro."

F Now, to turn to the decisions. Strangely enough, the question of whether a lease in futuro not to come into effect until after the expiration of twenty-one years is good or not has never been expressly decided by the English courts. But in Redington v. Browne (2) in the Irish courts the question was actually raised and decided, and BEWLEY, J., who tried it, says (32 L.R.Ir. at p. 355):

G "I understand Mr. Redington's counsel to be prepared if necessary to contend that if a lease has been made for lives and for a term of years, of which more than twenty-one years are still unexpired, it is not competent for the lessor to make or agree to make any lease in reversion to commence on the expiration of the subsisting terms. This startling proposition, however, would be clearly not in accordance with the law."

That is the exact point raised in this case. The learned judge deals expressly with the rule against perpetuities, and says:

H "The effect of the rule is to restrict the inalienability of property and limit the period for which its absolute vesting may be postponed. If the future limitation is vested in interest in an ascertained living person at the time of the execution of the instrument by which it is created or must necessarily vest within the period fixed by law—that is to say, within a life in being and a period of twenty-one years after, it is not open to the objection of remoteness; and it is immaterial that the actual enjoyment in possession may be deferred for a much longer period."

I With respect, I entirely agree with that expression of the law; I think BEWLEY, J., accurately laid down the rule against perpetuities as it is, at all events, understood to-day.

There has been no decision on the exact point in the English courts, but I have been referred to several cases, of which Lord Llangattock v. Watney, Combe, Reid & Co., Ltd. (3) is an instance where the courts seem to have recognised without argument and without the point being raised, sub silentio in fact, the existence of terms in futuro, to commence at a date exceeding the time limited by the rule against perpetuities, and I cannot but think that if there was any real doubt about the question it is quite impossible that the matter should have escaped observation in those cases. The real difficulty has arisen from what is to be found in the books of the best writers on the subject. We have some of them confidently stating that such a lease is void, and the passage in HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND (1st Edn.) vol. 18, p. 404 [see now (3rd Edn.) vol. 29, pp. 293, 294] is one of them; some equally confidently stating it to be valid; and others again saying that the point is doubtful. I do not think I should serve any useful purpose by going in detail through their different views. They have all been very properly called to my attention, and I must bear them in mind in coming to a conclusion, and, of course, until the matter came to be decided by the English courts expressly, such a difference of opinion could not be put an end to.

On the question what is the nature of an interesse termini, there is one case which I think is of the greatest importance as indicating that in the true sense of the word it is a vested interest, an interest which conveys a right actually in the land itself, although the time fixed for the commencement of the term has not arrived. I refer to Gillard v. Cheshire Lines Committee (4). There the plaintiff agreed to take a theatre for eight weeks, to commence on a future day. Before the commencement of the term, and before entry by the plaintiff, the defendants by excavations on their property deprived the theatre of the support of the adjacent land, so that the theatre was rendered unsafe and was closed during the eight weeks by order of the proper local authorities. The plaintiff sued the defendants in respect of the damage suffered by him in consequence of their act, and was held entitled to maintain his action. BOWEN, L.J., says in the course of his judgment:

"When that demise was made to the plaintiff he had vested in him an interest known to the law as an interesse termini. That is more than a right of entry; it is an interest which the law recognises in a future term, coupled with a right to complete that interest by possession. If that was a bare right of action arising out of contract, it would not give such an interest in the property as probably would entitle the owner to bring an action against anyone who interfered with the property. But it seems to me that this is a right in rem; a right which is alienable at common law; a right which not only passes to the executor, as pointed out in WILLIAMS' SAUNDERS [vol. 1, p. 251], but can be granted away."

If that is not a definition of a vested interest in the land itself, I fail to understand the meaning of the learned judge's words. I think it very strongly confirms the conclusion at which I have arrived, that with regard to the rule against perpetuities this reversionary lease is a vested interest which does not come within the mischief of the rule. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiffs are entitled to be registered with a good title in respect of this lease. There must be a declaration that the lease is not void as offending the rule against perpetuities, with a direction to the registrar to proceed with the plaintiff's application. I ought to add that the registrar was perfectly right, having regard to the obvious difference which had arisen amongst lawyers, to have the matter brought before the court, because he could not on his own authority have decided it.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Crossman, Pritchard, Crossman & Block; Wrensted, Hind & Roberts; Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by R. R. FORMOY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

JONES v. LORD HATHERTON

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady and Bankes, L.J.J., and Bray, J.), March 12, 13, 15, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 412; 86 L.J.K.B. 1206; 116 L.T. 657;
81 J.P. 101; 61 Sol. Jo. 383]

Licensing—Licence—Renewal—Opposition—Service of notice—Service on "holder of licence"—Service on grantee of protection order—Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), s. 16 (3).

Notice of opposition to an application for the renewal of a justices' licence must, to be valid, be served on the holder of the licence. A person to whom a protection order has been granted is not a "holder" of the licence for this purpose, and service on him of a notice of objection does not give the licensing justices jurisdiction to entertain the objection, even though by the time the application for renewal and the objection come to be heard the licence has been transferred to the applicant for removal.

Decision of Divisional Court, [1917] 1 K.B. 148, reversed.

Licensing—Justices—Liability for costs—Repayment out of local funds—Unsuccessful appeal to High Court—Case stated by quarter sessions—Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), s. 32.

An appeal by licensing justices to the High Court on a Case stated by quarter sessions, arising out of their refusal to renew a licence, was dismissed.

Held: an order for costs would be made against the justices, they being entitled to obtain repayment out of local funds under s. 32 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 [now s. 37 of Licensing Act, 1953].

Notes. The Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, was repealed by the Licensing Act, 1953 (33 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 142). Section 16 (3) and (4) and s. 38 (1) and (7) of the Act of 1910 have been replaced by s. 11 (3) and s. 23 (1) and (4) of the Act of 1953 respectively.

As to renewal of licences and costs, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 549 et seq., 610–614; and for cases see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 15–21, 70–73.

Cases referred to:

(1) Blencowe & Co., Ltd. v. Lord Hatherton, etc., Justices (1907), 96 L.T. 817; 71 J.P. 210, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 16, 91.

(2) Price v. James, [1892] 2 Q.B. 428; 61 L.J.M.C. 203; 67 L.T. 543; 57 J.P. 148; 41 W.R. 57; 8 T.L.R. 682; 36 Sol. Jo. 624, C.A.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 16, 90.

(3) R. v. Hughes (1879), 4 Q.B.D. 614; 48 L.J.M.C. 151; 40 L.T. 685; 43 J.P. 556; 14 Cox, C.C. 284, C.C.R.; 33 Digest 336, 476.

(4) R. v. Salford Hundred Justices, [1912] 2 K.B. 567; sub nom. R. v. Salford Hundred Justices, Ex parte Bolton Justices 81 L.J.K.B. 952; 107 L.T. 174; 76 J.P. 395; 23 Cox, C.C. 110, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 71, 530.

Also referred to in argument:

Kydd v. Liverpool Watch Committee, [1908] A.C. 327; 77 L.J.K.B. 947; 99 L.T. 212; 72 J.P. 395; 24 T.L.R. 772; 52 Sol. Jo. 639; 6 L.G.R. 903, H.L.; 33 Digest 450, 1607.

Wills & Sons v. McSherry, [1914] 1 K.B. 616; 83 L.J.K.B. 596; 110 L.T. 65; 78 J.P. 120; 12 Asp.M.L.C. 426, D.C.; 41 Digest 244, 848.

Walsall Poor Overseers v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1878), 4 App. Cas. 30; 48 L.J.M.C. 65; 39 L.T. 453; 43 J.P. 108; 27 W.R. 189, H.L.; 16 Digest 186, 920.

Appeal by the licensee and owners of licensed premises against an order of a Divisional Court (VISCOUNT READING, C.J., RIDLEY and Low, JJ.), made on a Case stated by Stafford Quarter Sessions in the matter of an appeal wherein Clement James Jones, the licensee of the premises, and the owners thereof, were the appellants, and Lord Hatherton and others, justices of the peace for the county of Stafford, were the respondents.

The appeal was heard on Apr. 5, 1916, by the quarter sessions against the refusal of the respondents, on Feb. 14, 1916, to renew to the appellant, Jones, a licence to sell intoxicating liquors on premises known as the King's Arms, situate at Hednesford, within the petty sessional division of Penkridge, which premises belonged to the other appellants, who were the trustees and executors of Edward Wright, deceased.

The general annual licensing meeting for the petty sessional division of Penkridge was held at Penkridge on Feb. 14, 1916. On Jan. 24, 1916, a protection order or temporary authority to sell intoxicating liquors under the licence was granted to the appellant Jones in pursuance of s. 88 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, and Jones on the same day commenced and thereafter continued to sell intoxicating liquors and to carry on the business under the powers conferred on him by the protection order or temporary authority and the licence. On Feb. 2, 1916, a notice of objection to the renewal of the licence on the ground that the premises had been ill-conducted, requiring the appellant Jones to attend at the general annual licensing meeting on Feb. 14, 1916, was served by the police on Jones. At the general annual licensing meeting on Feb. 14, 1916, the licence was transferred to Jones under s. 23 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, before the hearing of the application for the renewal of the licence. After the transfer had been granted, Jones at the same meeting applied for the renewal of the licence, and the justices proceeded to hear evidence in opposition to the renewal and in support of the objection contained in the notice served on Jones. Jones was represented by a solicitor, who called evidence in support of the renewal, but no objection was raised as to the invalidity or irregularity of the notice or as to the service thereof by the police upon the appellant Jones. After hearing the evidence the justices refused to renew the licence, and on Feb. 18, 1916, the appellant gave notice to the justices of his intention to appeal against the refusal to the next quarter sessions. On the hearing of the appeal the notice of appeal was admitted, and evidence was called in opposition to the renewal and in support of the notice of objection served on Jones. Immediately before this evidence was called the appellant submitted that there was no jurisdiction to entertain any objection to the renewal of the licence, inasmuch as at the time of the service of the notice of objection on Jones he was not the holder of the licence, and, therefore, notice of objection had not been served on the holder of the licence seven days before the commencement of the general annual licensing meeting as required by s. 16 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910. The appellants cited Blencowe & Co., Ltd. v. Lord Hatherton, etc., Justices (1). The respondent contended that before and at the time of the hearing of the objection to the renewal of the licence on Feb. 14, 1916, the licence had been transferred to Jones, that he was then the holder of the licence and as such had applied for the renewal thereof, that he had received seven days' notice as required by s. 16, that such notice was valid, and that, if not, he had waived any irregularity in the service of the notice of objection by appearing before the licensing justices in support of the renewal without raising any objection to the notice. The respondents cited Price v. James (2), R. v. Hughes (3) and Blencowe & Co., Ltd. v. Lord Hatherton, etc., Justices (1). Before going into the facts the court considered the question of the notice and found that the service of the notice was invalid and bad in law, but at the request of the respondents consented to state this Case. The court then heard the evidence for the respondents and for the appellant, and found upon the facts that the ground of objection to the renewal of the licence had been proved.

By the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 16 [see now Licensing Act, 1953, s. 11]:

A “(3) Subject to the provisions of this section, the licensing justices shall not, where the holder of a justices’ licence applies for the renewal of his licence, entertain any objection to or take any evidence with respect to the renewal thereof unless written notice of an intention to oppose the renewal of the licence stating in general terms the grounds on which the renewal is opposed, has been served on the holder thereof not less than seven days before the commencement of the general annual licensing meeting. (4) The licensing justices may, notwithstanding that no notice of intention to oppose the renewal of a justices’ licence has been given, on an objection being made to the renewal, adjourn the consideration of the renewal to a future day fixed by them (whether more or less than one month from the date of the original general annual licensing meeting), and require the attendance of the holder of the licence on that day when the case will be heard and the objection considered as if notice to oppose had been given.”

By s. 88 (7) [see now s. 23 of Act of 1953] :

D “Any person to whom a protection order is granted shall, while the order is in force, be subject to the provisions of this Act, with respect to the regulation, government, or control of holders of justices’ licences, in the same manner as if he were the holder of a justices’ licence.”

The Divisional Court held that the service of the notice under s. 16 (3) of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, meant service on the holder of the licence at the time of application for renewal, and the service was good, though at the time of service Jones was not the holder of the licence. Jones and the owners of the premises appealed.

E Disturnal, K.C., and H. H. Joy for the appellants.

R. W. Coventry (Vachell, K.C., with him) for the respondents.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J. [having stated the facts] : The question turns upon the true construction of s. 16 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910. Sub-section (2) provides that :

F “The holder of a justices’ licence applying for the renewal of his justices’ licence need not attend in person at the general annual licensing meeting, unless he is required by the licensing justices to attend, and he shall not be required so to attend save for some special cause personal to himself.”

G [His LORDSHIP read sub-s. (3).] At the date when the notice of intention to oppose was served upon Jones he was not the holder of the licence, and, therefore, the question is whether the service was sufficient. In the opinion of the court the true construction of this section requires that the notice should be served on the holder of the licence applying for renewal. By sub-s. (2), “The holder of a justices’ licence applying for the renewal need not attend in person unless,” and so forth. The section is dealing with the holder of a justices’ licence applying for a renewal. In my opinion, the person to be served under sub-s. (3) is alone that person, the holder applying for the renewal, and where sub-s. (3) says “unless written notice of an intention to oppose . . . has been served on the holder thereof” the service is not effective under the statute unless the person so served is at the time when he is served, the holder thereof—the holder of a justices’ licence. It is said that such a construction may produce inconvenience in practice, because cases may arise in which the full seven days’ notice before the commencement of the general annual licensing meeting cannot be given, because the transfer to the holder has taken place in a shorter period of time before the meeting. In the present case the transfer was on the very day of the meeting, but earlier in the day, and as the notice must be given before the commencement of the general annual licensing meeting, it is said there may be some cases—there may be few, but there certainly may be some—in which it is impossible to give seven days’ notice of that kind. The answer to that is that such cases are provided for in s. 16 (4) which provides :

"The licensing justices may, notwithstanding that no notice of intention to oppose the renewal has been given, on an objection being made to the renewal, adjourn the consideration of the renewal to a future day fixed by them . . . and require the attendance of the holder of the licence on that day when the case will be heard and the objection considered as if notice to oppose had been given."

So, in cases of difficulty that arise in giving the notice, where the conditions are such that an effectual notice cannot be given under sub-s. (3), the licensing justices have full power to deal with the matter by adjourning the application to a future date, and then on that future date, on the adjourned hearing, they can consider the objection as if notice to oppose had been duly given. The construction that notice is to be given to the holder applying for the renewal is quite consistent with Blencowe & Co., Ltd. v. Lord Hatherlon, etc., Justices (1). It is said that it would be a departure from the Licensing Act, 1872, and that an alteration of the law in that respect is not to be expected in the Licensing Consolidation Act. I am not satisfied that the position under the Act of 1872 would not be exactly the same. Section 42 of that Act, referring to an application by a "licensed person" for the renewal of his licence, provided:

"The justices shall not entertain any objection to the renewal of such licence or take any evidence with respect to the renewal thereof unless written notice of an intention to oppose the renewal of such licence has been served upon the said holder not less than seven days before the commencement of the general annual licensing meeting."

The word "holder" had not been previously used in the section. There was a definition, in s. 74 of that Act, of "licensed person": "Licensed person means a person holding a licence as defined by this Act." A person to whom temporary protection has been granted is not a person holding a licence, and such a person, holding a merely temporary authority, is not entitled to apply for the renewal of the licence. He must first obtain a transfer to himself of the licence; then he became a "licensed person" within the meaning of the Act of 1872, and, on his applying for a renewal of the licence, there had to be served on him a notice under s. 42 not less than seven days before the commencement of the general annual licensing meeting. In my opinion, the language of the 1910 statute is clearer than the language of the 1872 statute, because the latter refers to the "said holder" without having previously mentioned the words. Under the present Act, as under the Act of 1872, I am of opinion that the person to be served must be the holder applying for a renewal, and, for there to be an effective service of notice of objection, he must be the holder of the licence at the date when he is served, and the same person must be the person applying at the general annual licensing meeting, or at an adjournment thereof, for the renewal of the licence.

Under these circumstances I am of opinion that the decision of the court below should be reversed, and that the decision of the Court of Quarter Sessions should be restored, and that the view which quarter sessions took was the true view of the construction of the statute.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree. I regret being obliged to differ from the court below, but it does not appear to me to be possible to put into the language of the Act the construction which the Divisional Court gives to the words used. It is sufficient to say that the words "the holder thereof not less than seven days before the commencement of the general annual licensing meeting" in s. 16 (3), must mean the person who was at that time the holder of the licence; but I think that is made plainer, if it requires to be made plainer than the words themselves make it, by reference to other sections of the statute which are applicable to this particular case.

On Jan. 24, 1916, a man named Horne was the holder of the licence granted in respect of these licensed premises, and on that day a protection order was granted to Jones under s. 88 of the Act of 1910. Jones was at that time, no doubt, the

A person to whom it was proposed to transfer the justices' licence, and, the protection order having been made to Jones, the position is defined by s. 88 (7) which provides: "Any person to whom a protection order is granted shall, while the order is in force, be subject to the provisions of this Act with respect to the regulation, government, or control of holders of justices' licences in the same manner as if he were the holder of a justices' licence." Those words seem to me to indicate quite plainly that, although the Act does not regard Jones as the holder, he is to be subject to the same obligations with reference to the carrying on of the house, and so forth, as the holder. This section is silent as to any provision that he is to be treated as a holder for all purposes of the Act, which might include the service of a notice upon the holder. The section deals with the case where the transfer of a justices' licence may be authorised. By s. 23: "For the purposes of this Act the transfer of a justices' licence is the grant of a justices' licence in respect of certain premises to one person in substitution for another person who holds or has held the licence." The grounds upon which a transfer may be granted are set out in Sched. 4 to the Act, and the words "held or has held" are used because that schedule includes cases where the holder is dead, in which it is necessary to use the words "has held," and it refers to cases where the occupation of the premises is given up by the holder of the licence or his representative, which is this case. Horne had given up the occupation under s. 23; therefore he would remain the holder of the licence by the terms of that section. On Feb. 2, whilst Horne remained the holder, notice of objection was served on Jones. From one point of view Jones was the right person on whom to serve the notice, because directly Horne had gone out of occupation and Jones had applied for the temporary authority, Horne ceased to be the person who was intending to apply for the renewal. The temporary authority having been granted to Jones by the court, he was the person who intended to apply for the transfer, and therefore, the applicant for the transfer within Part 2 of Sched. 2 to the Act of 1910. The section dealing with transfer is s. 16 (3). The objection there referred to is one of the objections which the Act provides may be taken to the renewal. A list of those objections is set out in Part 2 of Sched. 2. They refer, so far as they are personal, not to the case of the holder of the licence but to the case of the applicant. In the circumstances which happened here, Jones, not Horne, was the applicant. Therefore, if the notice was to be given at all, it was to be given to Jones and not to Horne.

We come back to s. 16 (3), to see whether this particular case was provided for by this subsection. In my judgment, the only possible construction to be put upon the language is that the words to "the holder of the licence," both at the beginning and at the end of that subsection, refer to a person who is the holder and also the applicant for the renewal. Where the word "holder" is used in the beginning of that subsection its meaning is plain, because the subsection speaks of the holder of a justices' licence applying for the renewal, and, therefore, it must have reference to a holder who is the applicant; and, when the word is used later in the subsection you find the language is this: "unless written notice of an intention to oppose the renewal of the licence, stating in general terms the grounds upon which the renewal is opposed, has been served on the holder thereof," which must be the holder at that date, who is also the applicant at the transfer sessions. A notice given to a person who was not the applicant would not comply with the provisions of the statute as to what is necessary to make a good objection. On those grounds, in my opinion, it is not possible to put the construction upon the statute which the Divisional Court put, because it is plain that they were of opinion that Jones had received the notice which the Act contemplated that the applicant should have. The answer seems to me to be that the case was not contemplated or provided for by the actual language used.

BRAY, J.—I also agree. The question we have to decide is what is the true construction of certain words in sub-s. (3) of s. 16 of the Licensing Consolidation Act, 1910—namely, "to the holder thereof not less than seven days before the commencement of the general annual licensing meeting." It seems to me that the natural interpretation of these words is that the person to be served must be the holder of the licence at the time he is served. It is quite clear that Jones was not the holder at the time when he was served; he did not become the holder until the day on which he made the application for the renewal. If that be so, is there any reason for our putting other than the ordinary interpretation on those words? The Lord Chief Justice has said that "the words of the statute might compel one to hold a view which to me would be wholly absurd and unreasonable." I do not think it can be fairly said that the natural interpretation of those words is either absurd or unreasonable, because s. 16 (4) provides for a case like this. He then goes on to say that he thinks the language used in sub-s. (3) means only that the person who is applying for the renewal of his licence must have had at least seven days' notice. I cannot agree with that. I think if Parliament had desired it to read thus they would have used quite different words. It would have been perfectly simple to say "had been served on the person applying for the renewal of the licence," but those words are not found. RIDLEY, J., refers to the Act of 1872, and says that the result of giving the interpretation which the appellants desire in this case—the interpretation which quarter sessions put upon the subsection—would be to involve a change of the law. In my opinion, this is by no means clear. I am not at all satisfied that the words "the said holder" in s. 42 of the Act of 1872 would not also involve that the person on whom service was to be made should be the holder at the time of the service, but when s. 16 (3) of the Act of 1910 is looked at it appears that it has been re-drafted. There is a very important provision in it which is not to be found in the Act of 1872—namely, that the written notice must state in general terms the grounds on which the renewal is opposed. Those are entirely new words. Then, instead of saying "on the said holder," it says "on the holder thereof." It is necessary, therefore, for us to consider the section as it stands, and, in my opinion, the interpretation is one which must have been put on some similar words in the Act of 1872.

Mar. 16, 1917. SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—This case stood over until to-day to be mentioned as to costs in order that the practice of the King's Bench Division with regard to the position of licensing justices might be ascertained. The Master of the Crown Office reports to us that he has had the books examined, and he finds that from the beginning of 1911 up to the present time there have been eight proceedings by way of Special Case from quarter sessions in which the licensing justices have either been appellants or respondents. In five of those cases costs were ordered by the Divisional Court to be paid to the justices. Of the remaining three cases, in two the justices were respondents and in the third case the justices were appellants in the Divisional Court. In those three cases they were ordered to pay costs. The result, therefore, is that in all the cases that have been decided costs have been given either for or against the licensing justices as if they were ordinary people. In the present case the justices were respondents in the Court of Quarter Sessions, but they were appellants to the Divisional Court, and as the parties proceeding upon a Special Case the justices entered into recognisance under the Crown Office rules to pay the costs. In R. v. Salford Hundred Justices (4) it is shown that the indemnity against costs to which licensing justices are entitled under s. 32 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act includes costs of an appeal to the High Court on a Special Case. We are of opinion that in the present case the practice should be followed, and that the licensing justices should be ordered to pay costs here and below, they being entitled to obtain the repayment by virtue of s. 32 of the statute.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co., for Selby Gardner, Cannock; Robinson & Bradley, for C. A. Loxton, Walsall.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

PLUMMER v. PLUMMER

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Bankes and Warrington, L.JJ.), June 5, 1917]

B

[Reported [1917] P. 168; 86 L.J.P. 145; 117 L.T. 321;
33 T.L.R. 417; 61 Sol. Jo. 558]

Marriage—Validity—Marriage by licence before registrar—Notice to registrar—Statement in notice false to knowledge of both parties—Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 4.

C

Whereas a wilful and fraudulent mis-statement made to the knowledge of both parties will invalidate a marriage by banns, such a false statement contained in the notice or declaration given or made to the superintendent registrar pursuant to s. 4 of the Marriage Act, 1836, will not invalidate a marriage by licence.

Holmes v. Simmons (falsely called Holmes) (1) (1868), L.R. 1 P. & D. 523, 529, considered.

D

Re Rutter, Donaldson v. Rutter (2), [1907] 2 Ch. 592, applied.

Notes. The Marriage Act, 1836, and the Marriage and Registration Act, 1856, have been replaced by the Marriage Act, 1949. For the requirement of notice and declaration, and as to want of due notice affecting the validity of a marriage, see ss. 27, 28, 49 of the 1949 Act.

Followed: R. v. Lamb, [1934] All E.R.Rep. 540.

E

As to notice and misdescriptions in notice, see 19 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.)
786, 787; and for cases see 27 DIGEST (Repl.) 57, 58. For the Marriage Act, 1949, see 28 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 650.

Cases referred to:

F

(1) Holmes v. Simmons (falsely called Holmes) (1868), L.R. 1 P. & D. 523; 37
L.J.P. & M. 58; 18 L.T. 770; 16 W.R. 1024; 27 Digest (Repl.) 58, 361.

(2) Re Rutter, Donaldson v. Rutter, [1907] 2 Ch. 592; 77 L.J.Ch. 34; 97 L.T.
883; 24 T.L.R. 12; 27 Digest (Repl.) 57, 354.

(3) Prowse v. Spurway and Bowley (1877), 46 L.J.P. 49; 26 W.R. 116; 27
Digest (Repl.) 57, 353.

Also referred to in argument:

G

Bevan (falsely called M'Mahon) v. M'Mahon (1861), 2 Sw. & Tr. 230; 30
L.J.P.M. & A. 61; 3 L.T. 820; 7 Jur.N.S. 218; 164 E.R. 983; 27 Digest (Repl.) 55, 333.

Appeal from a decision of BARGRAVE DEANE, J.

A petition was presented to the Divorce Division of the High Court by Albert William Plummer, a coach painter, asking that a ceremony of marriage between himself and Rose Elizabeth Loveday should be declared null and void.

H

In his petition the petitioner stated that on Aug. 24, 1903, at the register office in the district of Fulham, in the county of London, a ceremony of marriage took place between himself and one Rose Elizabeth Loveday. The ceremony of marriage took place by virtue of the licence of the superintendent registrar of the district, which licence was granted upon certain information furnished to the superintendent registrar by the petitioner and Rose Elizabeth Loveday. At the time of the giving of such information the true name of Rose Elizabeth Loveday was not disclosed to the superintendent registrar, but was falsely given as Rose Elizabeth Findlow.
William Charles Loveday, the father of Rose Elizabeth Loveday, was then alive, but the name of the father was given as William Charles Findlow, and he was stated to be deceased. These false particulars were given knowingly and wilfully by the petitioner and by Rose Elizabeth Loveday to the superintendent registrar, and were duly published by him, and after such publication the ceremony of marriage took place at the time and place aforesaid.

I

The petition came on for hearing as an undefended suit on June 20, 1916, when a decree nisi of nullity was pronounced by BARGRAVE DEANE, J. It subsequently transpired that there had been issue of such marriage one child only, a daughter, born on June 1, 1904, and named Dorothy Frances Plummer. By an order dated Dec. 15, 1916, the Official Solicitor was assigned as guardian ad litem of Dorothy Frances Plummer for the purpose of presenting a petition for a declaration of her legitimacy, and on May 1, 1917, it was ordered that she be allowed by her guardian ad litem to intervene forthwith in the suit pursuant to the provisions of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1907. The Court of Appeal thereupon granted the infant leave to enter an appeal against the decree nisi.

Hollis Walker, K.C. (with him Stuart Bevan), for the intervener (the infant).

Gordon Hewart, K.C. (with him Bayford), for the King's Proctor, supported the intervener.

McCall, K.C. (with him W. A. Metcalfe) for the husband.

LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—This is a case of general interest and importance, but, having listened to the arguments of counsel with attention, I have no hesitation in saying that the order of BARGRAVE DEANE, J., cannot be supported. The case is one in which the marriage of the parties was celebrated at a registrar's office. It was a marriage by licence and not a marriage by banns. There is a distinction as regards notice between a marriage by licence and a marriage by banns. Thus a wilful and fraudulent mis-statement to the knowledge of both parties will invalidate a marriage by banns. A licence to marry, however, can be obtained on the payment of a certain sum of money, and after the application for a licence and before the marriage has taken place no publicity is necessary, which seems to me to show that the principles which have been applied to marriages by banns or on notice without licence ought to have no application to a case where the marriage takes place by licence.

There are three authorities to which our attention has been called. The first is Holmes v. Simmons (falsely called Holmes) (1), which was a decision of LORD PENZANCE. That was a case not of marriage by licence, because there the marriage was proposed to be made without licence, and is in a different class of case altogether. The only passage in the judgment in that case which I think assists the petitioner here is where LORD PENZANCE suggested a doubt whether a notice can be properly considered a notice at all if it does not comply with the form and is fraudulent in intent. For he there said (L.R. 1 P. & D. at p. 529):

"Whether a notice in a wholly false name (which must be done fraudulently) could be properly held a notice at all may possibly still be a question."

That is a mere dictum of LORD PENZANCE; a dictum entitled, no doubt, to great weight in a case where the circumstances are similar. But here the circumstances are not similar. The second case is Prowse v. Spurway and Bowley (3), a decision of LORD HANNEN, which strongly supports the appellant here. Lastly there is Re Rutter, Donaldson v. Rutter (2), which was a decision of SWINFEN EADY, J., which, it sound, goes the whole way required in the present case. SWINFEN EADY, J., there said ([1907] 2 Ch. at p. 595):

"Section 17 of the Marriage and Registration Act, 1856, prevents any question of residence being raised in any proceedings touching the validity of a marriage once solemnised, and, though ss. 18 and 19 impose the penalties of perjury, and liability to forfeiture of property accruing by the marriage on parties wilfully giving a false notice, they do not invalidate the marriage thereby procured," for which he cites Holmes v. Simmons (falsely called Holmes) (1) and Prowse v. Spurway and Bowley (3). And he adds:

"Marriages in false names have been held valid in many cases of marriage by licence."

A Therefore I think that we should be taking a retrograde step if we were to hold this marriage invalid, with the result of bastardising the child of the marriage. It was no doubt by a slip, but it was a serious slip that the petition did not mention the birth of issue. I think that one of the witnesses, not a very friendly witness, I gather, to the petitioner, let fall the remark that there was a child, and that was all. That being so, the child not being a party to the suit, the court has made an order B which declares the marriage null, and therefore bastardises the issue. In my opinion that decision cannot be supported, and the appeal must be allowed.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree. The matter does not appear to have been fully discussed before BARGRAVE DEANE, J., but the question that has been brought before us on appeal has been fully argued, and, after hearing the argument, I am C clearly of opinion that the judgment of BARGRAVE DEANE, J., cannot stand.

The point is quite a short one. The marriage between the parties was a marriage after notice to the registrar under s. 4 of the Marriage Act, 1836. It is not in dispute that a false name of the lady was given to the knowledge of both the persons concerned, and was given with the intention of concealing the fact from her father that the lady was about to go through the form of marriage. Section 4 D of that Act provides:

"That in every case of a marriage intended to be solemnised in England according to the rites of the Church of England, unless by licence or by special licence, or after publication of banns [which this marriage was not] and in every case of marriage intended to be solemnised in England according to the usages of the Quakers or Jews or according to any form authorised by this Act, E one of the parties shall give notice under his or her hand . . . to the superintendent registrar of the district within which the parties shall have dwelt for not less than seven days next preceding . . . and shall state therein the name and surname and the profession or condition of each of the parties intending marriage, the dwelling-place of each of them, and the time, not being less than seven days, during which each has dwelt therein, and the F church or other building in which the marriage is to be solemnised. . . ."

There is no dispute here that the notice was in due form, but the particulars which were filled in were incorrect, and incorrect to the knowledge of the parties in more than one particular. Then s. 42 provides that:

"If any person shall knowingly and wilfully intermarry under the provisions of this Act in any place other than the church, chapel, registered G building, office, or other place specified in the notice and certificate as aforesaid, or without due notice to the superintendent registrar, or without certificate of notice duly issued . . . the marriage of such persons, except in any case hereinafter excepted, shall be null and void."

H The argument before BARGRAVE DEANE, J., and repeated here is that, inasmuch as the notice was incorrect in the particulars which I have indicated, it was not a due notice, and stress was laid upon decisions, a number of which have been referred to (and there are others a number of which might have been referred to) in which it has been held that the words "due publication of banns" include a true statement of the names of the parties who intend to go through the ceremony of marriage. There is no authority for the proposition that "due notice" to the I registrar includes a correct statement of all the particulars which are required to be included in the notice, but the passage in the judgment of LORD PENZANCE in Holmes v. Simmons (falsely called Holmes) (1) has been relied upon as sufficient authority for the proposition which BARGRAVE DEANE, J., accepted. LORD PENZANCE in that case expressed himself in these terms (L.R. 1 P. & D. at pp. 528, 529):

"I think, therefore, that the 'due notice' required by the statute for the validity of a marriage, such as that now in question, is a notice conforming to the formalities by the statute provided, and that the words 'due notice' will be satisfied though the contents of the notice in respect of Christian name or residence or other details are not strictly true or accurate."

Therefore he covers the question of an inaccurate statement of the Christian name, and of course the same reasoning would apply to an inaccuracy in the surname. But then he goes on to say:

"Whether a notice in a wholly false name (which must be done fraudulently) could be properly held at notice at all may possibly still be a question."

He merely left that point open as a matter for further consideration.

It seems to me that there is no principle upon which you can draw the distinction which the learned judge hinted at. If a deliberate mis-statement, according to the learned judge's view, is not sufficient to constitute a notice not a "due notice," it seems to me impossible to draw a logical distinction between that case and a case which somebody might designate as a case of fraud where a person deliberately and with set purpose gives a false name. It seems to me impossible to draw a distinction between a case where it is done fraudulently and a case where it may be said not to be done fraudulently. But SWINFEN EADY, J., in Re Rutter, Donaldson v. Rutter (2), treated the matter as beyond all question. He said, and I think that he was right in saying, that "marriages in false names have been held valid in many cases of marriage by licence," and then he cited authority in support of that view, and, as far as I have been able to look into them in the short time at my disposal, they seem to me to entirely support the learned judge's view. The conclusion which I have come to is that there is no authority for saying that the giving of due notice requires anything more than the giving of notice in due form of law, that is to say, in the form required by the statute, and that the reasoning applicable to the due publication of banns does not apply to the case of a notice. On these grounds I think that this appeal succeeds.

WARRINGTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The marriage in this case was solemnised before the registrar by licence of the superintendent registrar. In such a case the provisions of the Marriage Act, 1836, and the Marriage Registration Act, 1856, applicable are to this effect: First, notice of the intended marriage must be given, and that notice must state that the marriage is to be by licence. It has also to state amongst other things the name and surname of each of the parties intending marriage. It must be accompanied by a declaration confirming the correctness of the statements contained in the notice, and a person making a false declaration is rendered liable to the penalties of perjury. The notice in the case of a marriage by licence is, like other notices, filled in by the superintendent registrar, and a copy thereof entered in a book which is open to inspection without payment of any fee, but it is not otherwise published, as was the case of a notice of a marriage intended to be solemnised not by licence. Not only is the notice not otherwise published than by being entered in the registrar's book, but the only interval necessary between the giving of the notice and the issuing of the certificate of due notice and the issue of the licence itself is one day. It is obvious, therefore, from those provisions that the legislature did not intend in the case of a marriage by licence before the registrar that there should be any more publication of the fact of the intended marriage than in the case of a marriage by licence in a church under the old ecclesiastical rules. The matter does not rest there. Provisions were made both in the Marriage Act, 1836, and the Marriage and Registration Act, 1856, for validating the marriage notwithstanding that certain conditions had not been complied with. Section 43 of the Act of 1836 [repealed] recognised that a marriage might be valid although it was had by means of "any wilfully false notice, certificate, or declaration"; and s. 19 of the Act of 1856, which replaces s. 43 of the Act of 1836, contains a similar provision where the marriage is had by means of "any wilfully false declaration, notice, or certificate." It seems to me, therefore, that in a case of marriage by licence under the express terms of the statute, although the notice or declaration may be wilfully false, yet the marriage

A itself will be valid, the means resorted to by the legislature for protecting the public and the parties concerned against such false notice being the imposition of extremely severe penalties upon those who sign a false notice or make a false declaration.

B But the matter does not rest merely on the interpretation of the statute as it seems to me it ought to be interpreted, because I think that the present case is covered by authority, and in particular I refer to the statement of the law by LORD PENZANCE in Holmes v. Simmons (fulsely called Holmes) (1), not in giving judgment, but in the course of the argument (L.R. 1 P. & D. at p. 525). I think what he said there covers the case of a marriage by licence, although the case before him was not one of marriage by licence, but of marriage after publication in the registrar's office of the notice, and that the passage which appears in his judgment as to notice in a wholly false name must be read in reference to the facts of the case before him. Secondly, I think that the present case is covered a fortiori by the decision in Re Rutter, Donaldson v. Rutter (2), which was also a case of marriage after publication by notice, and was not a case of marriage by licence.

D I am of opinion, therefore, that it comes to this, that in the case of a marriage by licence, which is the only case with which we here have to deal, although both parties may make a false statement as to the names or the purpose of the notice and declaration required by the Act of 1836, yet the marriage will be valid, the consequence of giving the false notice being not to invalidate the marriage, but to expose the parties to the penalties for perjury.

E LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—The appeal will be allowed, the decree nisi rescinded, and the petition dismissed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Official Solicitor; King's Proctor; Sterns.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

F

G

HULTON v. HULTON

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Bankes and Scrutton, L.JJ.), January 26, 29, 30, 31, February 1, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 813; 86 L.J.K.B. 633; 116 L.T. 551;
33 T.L.R. 197; 61 Sol. Jo. 268]

H Husband and Wife—Action by wife against husband—Rescission of deed obtained by husband by fraud—Action “for tort”—Competency—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict., c. 75), s. 12.

I There is nothing in s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, to take away from a married woman the right which she possessed before the passing of the Act of taking proceedings against her husband to have set aside any deed obtained by him from her by fraud or duress. Such proceedings are not proceedings for tort within s. 12 although in proving the facts which would entitle her to rescission the wife might prove fraudulent misrepresentation on the part of the husband.

Contract—Rescission—Restitutio ad integrum—Precise restoration of statu quo impossible—Substantial equality of benefit between parties.

A court of equity will give relief by way of the rescission of a contract whenever by the exercise of its powers it can do what is practically just.

although it cannot restore the parties precisely to the state in which they were before the contract. It is sufficient if the party against whom rescission is sought has substantially received a quid pro quo for what the party seeking rescission has received under the contract.

Decision of LUSH, J., [1916] 2 K.B. 642, affirmed.

Notes. Referred to: Lever Bros., Ltd. v. Bell, [1931] 1 K.B. 557.

As to the right to sue a spouse for tort, see 19 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 875, 876; and for cases see 27 DIGEST (Repl.) 222-224, 258 et seq. As to actions for rescission for fraud, see 26 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 874 et seq.; and for cases see 35 DIGEST 65 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Andrews v. Cradock (1713), 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 72; Prec. Ch. 376; Gilb. Ch. 36; 21 E.R. 884; 28 Digest (Repl.) 669, 1676.
- (2) Lambert v. Lambert (1767), 2 Bro. Parl. Cas. 18; 1 E.R. 764, H.L.; 27 Digest (Repl.) 223, 1786.
- (3) Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. (1878), 3 App. Cas. 1218; 48 L.J.Ch. 73; 39 L.T. 269; 27 W.R. 65, H.L.; 35 Digest 77, 748.
- (4) Aahlin v. White (1816), Holt, N.P. 387, N.P.; 35 Digest 28, 192.
- (5) Pasley v. Freeman (1789), 3 Term Rep. 51; 1 Digest (Repl.) 27, 205.

Also referred to in argument:

- Webster v. Webster*, post p. 1016; [1916] 1 K.B. 714; 85 L.J.K.B. 691; 114 L.T. 701; 92 T.L.R. 290; 27 Digest (Repl.) 260, 2106.
- Evans v. Carrington* (1860), 2 De G.F. & J. 481; 30 L.J.Ch. 364; 4 L.T. 65; 25 J.P. 195; 7 Jur.N.S. 197; 45 E.R. 707, L.C.; 27 Digest (Repl.) 222, 1774.
- Evans v. Edmonds* (1853), 13 C.B. 777; 1 C.L.R. 653; 22 L.J.C.P. 211; 21 L.T.O.S. 155; 17 Jur. 883; 1 W.R. 412; 138 E.R. 1407; 27 Digest (Repl.) 222, 1773.
- Urquhart v. Macpherson* (1878), 3 App. Cas. 831, P.C.; 35 Digest 76, 747.
- Rees v. De Bernardy*, [1896] 2 Ch. 437; 65 L.J.Ch. 656; 74 L.T. 585; 12 T.L.R. 412; 12 Digest (Repl.) 124, 742.
- Donovan v. Fricker* (1821), Jac. 165; 37 E.R. 813; 35 Digest 651, 3848.
- Whittington v. Scale-Hayne* (1900), 82 L.T. 49; 16 T.L.R. 181; 44 Sol. Jo. 229; 35 Digest 74, 719.

Appeal by the defendant from an order made by LUSH, J., in an action tried by him with a special jury.

In 1895, when the plaintiff first met the defendant, she was a married woman, her husband having deserted her and gone to South Africa. She became on very friendly terms with the defendant who asked her to marry him when she had obtained a divorce from her husband. She assented, and in March, 1900, she obtained a decree nisi for divorce against her husband. On Sept. 12, 1900, the decree was made absolute. She then became engaged to marry the defendant. He was then about thirty-one years of age, and she was about thirty-seven. The defendant's father was a newspaper proprietor in Manchester. The business had been sold to a limited company, in which the father held the bulk of the shares—namely, 103,276 out of 114,757 issued £1 shares—and the defendant then held about 11,000 of the shares. The plaintiff stated in evidence that when the defendant asked her to marry him he said that he had £1,000 a year from his father in payment for services, which could be taken from him at his father's pleasure, that he had no other property or income, and that he would give her half of the £1,000 for herself and domestic purposes. The parties were married before the registrar at Bedford on Nov. 28, 1900, and the defendant made the plaintiff an allowance of £500 a year. His father died in March, 1904, leaving an estate of about £558,000. The plaintiff stated that she had an interview with the defendant about April, 1904, when he told her that the money left to him by a previous will had been finally left to his sisters, that he was no better off after his father's death, and that his gross income was bigger, but his net income the same. On June 7, 1910,

A the parties executed a deed of separation which was impeached in the action on the ground that it was obtained by untrue misrepresentations as to defendant's means—that the defendant had persistently represented that he had no more than £1,000 a year or thereabouts, the truth being that upon his father's death his pecuniary position had improved very greatly and his income was upwards of £30,000 a year, which figure was not disputed by the defendant. The plaintiff

B alleged that by reason of this fraud by the defendant she had been prevented from demanding or receiving a proper allowance adequate to her position as the defendant's wife, and she claimed damages for fraud and/or rescission of the deed. The defendant, by his defence, traversed the allegations made by the plaintiff, and he contended that the action did not lie by reason of s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, which provides: "Every woman, whether married

C before or after this Act, shall have in her own name against all persons whomsoever, including her husband, the same civil remedies, and also . . . the same remedies and redress by way of criminal proceedings, for the protection and security of her own property, as if she were a feme sole, but, except as aforesaid, no husband or wife shall be entitled to sue the other for tort . . ." [The section is printed here as amended by the Law Reform (Married Women or Tortfeasors) Act, 1935,

D Scheds. 1 and 2]. The jury found at the trial that the plaintiff was induced to execute the deed by the false and fraudulent representations and concealment of the defendant. LUSH, J., ordered the deed to be rescinded, but held that the plaintiff could not in law recover damages. The defendant appealed on the grounds that the verdict was perverse and such as no reasonable jury could return and that the action was not maintainable under s. 12 of the Act of 1882. The

E plaintiff gave notice of cross-appeal against that part of the judgment which decided that she could not recover damages for the fraud, but the cross-appeal was not proceeded with. On Feb. 7, 1916, the plaintiff obtained a decree absolute dissolving her marriage with her husband and subsequently an order was made giving her £5,000 a year permanent maintenance, Schwabe, K.C., and Barrington-Ward for the defendant.

F Sir John Simon, K.C. (Hemmerde, K.C., W. O. Willis, and Guedalla with him) was only called upon on the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to rescission without repaying to the defendant the sums which she had received under the deed.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J., stated the facts, held that it was impossible to hold that no reasonable men could upon the evidence before them have found the verdict which the jury returned, and that therefore the application for a new trial must fail, and continued: It was next contended that the plaintiff could not maintain this action by reason of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 12. It was not disputed that previous to the passing of this Act a married woman could have sued her husband to set aside a deed obtained by fraud or duress, the married woman, according to the old practice, suing by her next friend: see MITFORD ON

G PLEADING, p. 28; and consenting to the action being brought. The practice of the Court of Chancery was for actions that lay in infants or married women to be instituted by the next friend, the difference between them being that when the infant was plaintiff his consent was not necessary for the institution of the action, but that where the action was brought by a married woman by her next friend her consent was necessary. This was pointed out in Andrews v. Cradock (1).

H Lambert v. Lambert (2) was referred to. That was an action brought by a wife by her next friend against her husband and others to set aside as having been obtained by duress a deed dated Nov. 29, 1762, whereby the husband agreed to give his wife £20 a year by way of a separate maintenance. The wife succeeded in the action, and the decree was affirmed by the House of Lords.

The defendant in the present case, however, contended that the right to bring such an action was taken away from a married woman by s. 12 of the Act of 1882, as the wife would be suing the husband for a tort. In my judgment, this contention is not well founded, whether the claim to set aside the deed is based on facts which would or would not as between other parties give ground for an action of deceit. A proceeding to set aside a deed for fraud is not suing for a tort within the meaning of s. 12. It is one of the matters which by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34 [now Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1925, s. 56], are assigned to the Chancery Division. A claim in an action to obtain damages for deceit would, in my opinion, be suing for a tort. In my judgment, there is nothing in s. 12 of the Act of 1882 to take away from a married woman the right which she previously possessed of taking proceedings against her husband to have set aside any deed obtained by him from her by fraud or duress. The ancient jurisdiction of the court in this respect is not diminished or affected by s. 12 of the Act of 1882.

There remains the further point that the plaintiff cannot obtain the setting aside of the deed as there cannot be complete restitutio in integrum. The learned judge accepted the plaintiff's undertaking to repay the debt of £375, from which she was released by the deed, by allowing that sum to be set off against costs awarded to her, but he declined to require her as a condition of relief to repay the annual sums of £500 paid to her between the date of the deed and the date of the decree absolute made by the Divorce Court. It must be remembered that the plaintiff had been receiving an allowance of £500 a year from 1905 or before to the date of the deed in 1910. The same sum continued to be paid to her after the deed and pursuant to the deed, and she lived upon that amount, and the defendant's credit was not pledged by the plaintiff for any necessities. These were obtained by means of the annual payment. Moreover, the deed, so long as it stood, was a bar to the plaintiff obtaining alimony pendente lite from the Divorce Court. The permanent maintenance of £5,000 a year now fixed by that court as a suitable provision for the plaintiff, and to be paid by the defendant to her, only commences to run from the date of the decree absolute—namely, Feb. 7, 1916. The defendant contends that he ought to escape from all liability to maintain his wife between June 7, 1910, the date of the deed, and Feb. 7, 1916, and that the plaintiff ought to be put upon terms to refund all sums paid in respect of the period between the two last-mentioned dates—in other words, that the plaintiff should repay all sums paid to her, while he retains the full benefits and advantage during that period of not having been called upon to maintain his wife, and of having by means of the deed and so long as it remained in force prevented her from obtaining any alimony pendente lite from the Divorce Court. In my judgment, this would be entirely inequitable. As against the defendant, upon the facts as they are now known, it must be taken that no less a sum than £500 a year could be considered a suitable provision for the wife's maintenance, and this is all that he has paid. I agree with the view expressed by the learned judge at the trial that, having regard to the defendant's actual means and to the finding of the jury, such a sum was altogether inadequate. The general rule is that as a condition of rescission there must be restitutio in integrum, but at the same time the court has full power to make all just allowances. It was said by LORD BLACKBURN in Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. (3) (3 App. Cas. at p. 1279) that the practice had always been for a court of equity to give relief by way of rescission whenever by the exercise of its powers it can do what is practically just, though it cannot restore the parties precisely to the state they were in before the contract. In the present case the defendant has obtained certain advantages for which he stipulated, which cannot be taken away from him—the destruction of his letters is an accomplished fact—and he has been relieved of any claims in respect of the maintenance of his wife between the date of the deed and the date of the decree absolute. Under these circumstances the most that can be required of the plaintiff, as a condition of rescission, is to restore to the defendant the status quo ante with regard to the advance of £375. This she does by allowing the amount to be set off against her costs. It was further urged that the plaintiff did not really desire rescission, and could gain nothing by it. This must be considered with reference to the date when the action was commenced, namely, Mar. 2, 1915. The deed was then a subsisting

A contract which prevented the plaintiff from instituting proceedings for restitution of conjugal rights, from obtaining a divorce for any previous matrimonial offence, and from obtaining alimony pendente lite, and it bound her to indemnify the defendant from all torts theretofore committed or thereafter to be committed by her. If such a deed was obtained from her by fraud—and the jury have found that it was—she was entitled to have it set aside. In my opinion, the appeal fails and should be dismissed.

B BANKES, L.J.—I agree. This court has no power to set aside the verdict of a jury upon the ground merely that we do not agree with it. We can only set aside a verdict upon the ground that it is against the weight of the evidence if we come to the conclusion that the verdict is one which no reasonable men could have arrived at. That is the question which we have to consider. The main claim of the plaintiff was for damages. That claim was from the outset an impossible claim and, as a matter of law, in my opinion, could not succeed. The second ground of claim was for the rescission of the deed of separation. [His Lordship reviewed the evidence and came to the conclusion that the verdict was not one which no reasonable men could have arrived at.] With regard to the point that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover because she is, in reference to the claim for rescission, suing her husband for a tort within the meaning of s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, I entirely agree with what has been said by SWINFEN EADY, L.J. I think, however, it is sufficient to say that, in my opinion, the words in that section "sue for a tort" relate to something quite different from that which is described in s. 34 of the Judicature Act, 1873—"a cause or matter for the purpose of the setting aside or cancellation of deeds or other written instruments."

C With regard to the point that the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed without bringing into account the £500 a year which she received between June 7, 1910, and Feb. 7, 1916, the date of the decree absolute, it is sufficient to say that, in my opinion, we should not be doing justice or equity if we were to order the plaintiff under the particular circumstances of this case to repay that amount either directly or in account.

D SCRUTTON, L.J.—I agree. On the part of the claim for "rescission of the aforesaid deed" it was argued for the husband that, as the wife, in proving facts which would entitle her to rescission, would prove fraudulent representations which might also give rise to a claim for damages in an action between parties other than husband and wife, a claim for rescission was really a claim for tort within s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. The jurisdiction to rescind a contract in some cases for innocent misrepresentation and in some cases for fraud has been exercised by courts of equity for at least 200 years before the Act of 1882 was passed and before the action of deceit came into existence. The action of deceit, whereby damages were obtained for fraudulent representation, as I understand the history of the English law, was first started by the courts in Pasley v. Freeman (5). In that case GROSE, J., who dissented, said that that was the first instance on record in which such a claim had been made, and about thirty years afterwards in Ashlin v. White (4) GIBBS, C.J., said (Holt, N.P. at p. 388):

"I am old enough to remember when this species of action came into use.

It was dexterously intended to avoid the Statute of Frauds."

E Therefore, in 1882, when s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act was enacted, there were two forms of action, one affecting the formation of a contract and alleging that the contract was badly formed if it had been obtained by fraud and asking for rescission, and the other claiming damages for a fraudulent representation for a tort in law. I think that the proceeding in a court of equity to obtain rescission is not an action "for a tort" within the meaning of s. 12. I take that expression to mean an action complaining of a tort or wrong independently of contract and asking for damages following from such a tort. I do not see how that language can apply to a proceeding which is asking for rescission on the ground of fraud in connection with the making of a contract. This part, therefore, of the husband's appeal fails, and the court below had jurisdiction to consider whether the deed of separation was obtained by fraud. A

The next question is whether this court should interfere with the finding of the jury that the plaintiff was induced by the false and fraudulent representation of the defendant to execute the deed of separation, not upon the ground that there was no evidence to support it, but upon the ground that the verdict was perverse and against the weight of the evidence though in my view it comes to nearly the same thing; and the question which we have to ask ourselves is whether twelve reasonable men could on the evidence have found the verdict. [His LORDSHIP considered the evidence, and came to the conclusion that it could not be said that the verdict was one which a reasonable jury could not have found, and that therefore the defendant failed to make out a case for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence.] B C

There remains the last point. It is said that the court will only rescind the deed if it can put the other party back in the position in which he was before the contract. Courts of equity, which have long exercised this power of rescission, have endeavoured to use it on the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity, and that he who asks to have a contract rescinded must, as far as possible, put matters back into the position in which they were before the contract was originally made. D The passage from LORD BLACKBURN'S opinion in Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. (3) which has been referred to by SWINFEN EADY, L.J., points that out in very clear language. It is said that the court in this case should not order rescission for two reasons. In the first place, it is said that the letters of the parties have, under the terms of the deed, been destroyed, and that as those letters cannot be restored the court will not decree rescission. As to that, I must take it E on the verdict of the jury that those letters contained misrepresentations by the defendant. I further take into account that it was the defendant who was very anxious that those letters should be destroyed. I cannot in these circumstances treat the letters as so important to him that there can be no rescission because they cannot now be brought back into existence. Secondly, it is said that the plaintiff has been receiving under the deed £500 a year for over five years, and that if F the deed is to be rescinded the plaintiff ought to be ordered to repay to the defendant that £500 a year. A court of equity has, as I understand, always in such a case endeavoured to do justice between the parties by making each return whatever benefit he has received under the deed, and if the benefits on the one side and the other are commensurate there is no question of return, because whatever has been G received by the one party will be paid for by the other. As illustrating that, I may take the case of the purchase of a house being set aside and a reconveyance ordered on repayment of the purchase money, when the party who has occupied the house has to pay an occupation rent: see KERR ON FRAUD AND MISTAKE (4th Edn.) p. 371, where the authorities are collected. Applying that principle to the present case, while it is true that the wife has received an allowance of £500 a year for some years, the husband has received during those years freedom from molestation and H from proceedings by the wife for restitution of conjugal rights, and other very considerable advantages. Taking that into account, I see no reason for the return of the £500 a year, because a sufficient quid pro quo has been given to the husband. On all the points raised by the defendant I think the appeal ought to fail.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Guedalla & Jacobson; Lewis & Lewis.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

JOHNSON v. BRAHAM AND CAMPBELL

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Rowlatt and Sankey, JJ.), May 22, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 529; 85 L.J.K.B. 1166; 115 L.T. 76;
60 Sol. Jo. 681]

B [COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Bankes and Scrutton, L.JJ.), January 19, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 586; 86 L.J.K.B. 613; 116 L.T. 188;
61 Sol. Jo. 586]Agent—Misrepresentation—Principal induced to enter into contract by untrue statement negligently made by agent—Measure of damages.

C

Where a principal employs an agent to procure him an engagement, and he is able to show that he was induced to take up the engagement by the negligence of the agent, he is entitled to recover the amount of his actual loss, and also to compensation for loss of time. He is not entitled to any anticipated profit that he might have made from the engagement.

D Notes. As to remedies of a principal for his agent's default, see 1 HALSBURY'S Laws (3rd Edn.) 188-190; and for cases see 1 DIGEST (Repl.) 481 et seq.

Cases referred to:(1) Bell v. Cunningham (1830), 3 Pet. 69.(2) Cassaboglou v. Gibb (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 797; 52 L.J.Q.B. 538; 48 L.T. 850; 32 W.R. 138, C.A.; 1 Digest (Repl.) 554, 1747.

E (3) Salvesen & Co. v. Rederi Akt. Nordstjernen, [1905] A.C. 302; 74 L.J.P.C. 96; 92 L.T. 575, H.L.; 1 Digest (Repl.) 555, 1754.

Appeal by the defendants from a decision of the judge of the Westminster County Court.

The plaintiff, who was an artiste, claimed damages for negligence and breach of duty owed by the defendants to the plaintiff as her agents for reward in connection with the making of a contract in writing, dated Oct. 19, 1915, between the plaintiff and the Suito Co., Ltd. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants, by their manager, represented to the plaintiff, shortly before the date of the contract, that the weekly takings of the Palace, Northampton, the music-hall of the above company, were not less than £250, that the hall was a first-class hall, that all assistance, staff, lighting, &c., would be available at the hall, that the company to be taken over by the plaintiff was booked for £60, that Harold Montague was one of the company booked, and that a grand piano would be provided free of charge. The plaintiff alleged that, by these representations, she was induced to enter into the contract. The plaintiff took her company to the Palace, Northampton, and played there for a week commencing Nov. 29, 1915. The total takings were only £68 11s. 7d. She incurred a liability to the Suito Co., Ltd., of £25 11s. 11d. She also lost £35 13s., being the expenses of her company, and alleged further that she had lost the profits which she should have made from performing for the week, which she estimated at £38. The county court judge found as a fact that the defendants' manager, in perfect good faith, told the plaintiff that the weekly takings at the hall were not less than £250, but as to the other alleged representations he found in the defendants' favour. He gave judgment for the plaintiff for £55 13s., being £35 13s. for her expenses and an extra £20. The defendants appealed.

I

Hawke, K.C. (Lever with him), for the plaintiff.Compston, K.C., and Beazley (Patrick Hastings with them) for the defendants.

ROWLATT, J.—In this case, the first point taken on behalf of the defendants is that there was no evidence to support the finding of negligence. It was said by the plaintiff that the agent had given inaccurate information and had failed to exercise due care. It appears that when the takings at another revue were £120 net, he assumed that they would be £250 gross; that he admitted he would make such an assumption in his own case, but that, in the case of a client he would make further inquiry. On that it was, in my opinion, open to the county court judge to find, as he did, that the agent had been negligent. It was a question of fact. The appeal, therefore, fails on the main point. A

There remains, however, another point not free from difficulty. The plaintiff's right to recover the £20 is challenged. It is said on behalf of the defendants that, where a principal complains of being misled by the negligence of an agent into entering into some transaction, and a loss ensues because the venture does not succeed, he is only entitled to be restored to the position in which he would have been had he never met the agent who had been guilty of negligence. It is contended that he is not entitled to the speculative profit he might have earned had he made other use of his money. In my opinion, that proposition is sound. B
 The principal may not say: "Had I been able to employ my £100 otherwise I could have made £150." To award him damages on that basis would be to assume that he would make a fortunate speculation. In the present case, what the learned judge actually did is not quite clear. We have no note by him of his judgment. If he meant to award this £20 to the plaintiff on the ground that that is what she might have made, I do not think he could do so. That is not the measure of damage. The damage is the loss which she would have avoided if she had not embarked on this enterprise. It would appear from such note of the judgment as we have seen that the learned judge did not essay to calculate her loss of profit. He said, in effect, that, in addition to her out-of-pocket expenses, she was entitled to something for loss of time. He may well have said to himself that £20 was the value of a week of her time on the average; just as a professional man may be awarded the value of what he would have earned because his time is of value. In my opinion, if he took that view, his judgment can be supported. C

The cases cited do not afford much assistance. In Bell v. Cunningham (1), which is an American decision, it appeared that an agent at Leghorn, having funds of his principal in hand, was directed to invest part of them in tiles and part in paper, and to ship the cargo for Havana. He invested the whole in paper, which, on the ship's arrival, sold at a loss, whereas the tiles would have realised a profit. The defendant claimed to have the damages estimated at the value of the money which ought to have been invested in tiles at Leghorn, and not at the value they would have sold for at Havana. The court decided against him. The decision of the court is thus summarised in MAYNE ON DAMAGES (8th Edn.) at p. 645: D

"They said this measure would be correct if the breach of contract consisted in the nonpayment of the money and not in the failure to invest that sum in tiles. Speculative damages, dependent on possible successful schemes, ought never to be given; but positive and direct loss, arising plainly and immediately from the breach of orders, may be taken into estimate. Thus, in this case, an estimate of possible profits to be derived from investments at Havana of the money resulting from the sale of the tiles, taking into view a distinct operation, would have been to transcend the proper limits which a jury ought to respect; but the actual value of the tiles themselves, at Havana, affords a reasonable standard for the estimation of the damages." E

It is clear that in that case if the agent had executed his commission the principal would have had the money in his pocket, so that those damages flowed directly from the breach. In Cassaboglou v. Gibb (2) the plaintiff ordered agents in Hong Kong to purchase certain opium for him. No such opium could be obtained, but, instead of informing the plaintiff of this fact, the defendants mistakenly informed him that they could procure it, and did in fact send opium of an inferior description. It was held that the relation between the plaintiff and the defendants was not that of vendor and purchaser, but of principal and agent, and that, therefore, the true measure of damages was not the difference in value of the opium ordered and shipped, but the loss actually sustained. In the other case cited, F
G
H
I

- A Salvesen & Co. v. Rederi Akt. Nordstjernen (3), a ship did not get employment owing to the negligence of certain agents. It was held that the shipowners were entitled to damages for trouble which they had incurred; but LORD DAVEY expressly pointed out ([1905] A.C. at p. 311) that there was no evidence that the respondents lost any opportunity of profitably employing the vessel. I have no doubt that if the plaintiff in the present case could have specifically shown that she had made a loss she would be entitled to recover it. But the profit was merely speculative.

I, therefore, come to the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to this sum of £20 as compensation for loss of time.

- C SANKEY, J.—On the question of damages, I think that where the principal employs an agent, and is able to prove a breach of contract by that agent, the true measure of damages is the principal's actual loss, not his anticipated profit. Was there here an actual loss? I desire to found myself on the judgment of LORD DAVEY in Salvesen's Case (3), where he says ([1905] A.C. at p. 311):

- D "But the appellants were guilty of breach of their duty to the respondents, their principals, in giving them incorrect information as to their business, and are liable in damages for such a breach of duty. The measure of damages in such a case has recently been discussed in the Court of Appeal in England in the case of Cassaboglou v. Gibb (2). It was there determined that the measure of damages was the loss actually sustained by the principal in consequence of the misrepresentation, and that it did not include the anticipated profit which he might have made if the representation had been true. I am of opinion that the proper measure of damages in the present case is the same as in the case I have referred to."

E It appears to me that there was evidence on which the county court judge could find that the plaintiff lost the opportunity of profitably occupying her time. It is true that on one reading of his judgment he seems to have awarded this sum of £20 on account of profits. But I do not so read it. He really awarded it for time lost. This appeal should be dismissed.

- F The defendants appealed.

Patrick Hastings and Wallington for the defendants.

Hawke, K.C., and E. F. Lever for the plaintiff.

- G SWINFEN EADY, L.J., stated the facts, and continued: In my opinion, there was evidence to support the county court judge's finding of fact, and, therefore, no appeal lies in respect thereof. The only question is as to the damages. It is not denied that the plaintiff is entitled to her out-of-pocket expenses. These she proved to the sum of £35 13s. The county court judge gave her in addition a sum of £20. The Divisional Court came to the conclusion that this sum was given as compensation for her loss of time in going to Northampton and performing there. There was evidence before the county court judge as to other engagements which she had, and so he had evidence before him as to the value of her time. There was evidence, therefore, on which he could award her this sum of £20 for her loss of time. No question of principle is involved in this case. The appeal must be dismissed.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree.

- I SCRUTTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors. Roberts, Seyd & Co.; Wingfield, Blew & Kenward.

[Reported by W. VALENTINE BALL, Esq., and EDWARD J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.]

CLARKE BROS. v. KNOWLES

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (A. T. Lawrence and Lush, JJ.), November 20, 1917]

[Reported [1918] 1 K.B. 128; 87 L.J.K.B. 189; 118 L.T. 253]

County Court—Jurisdiction—“Court in district of which cause of action partly arose”—Letter containing offer posted by plaintiff within, but received by defendant outside, jurisdiction—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict., c. 43), s. 74.

By the County Courts Act, 1888, s. 74: “. . . every action or matter . . . may be commenced by leave of the judge or registrar . . . in the court in the district of which the cause of action or claim wholly or in part arose.”

The plaintiffs contracted to purchase certain goods from the defendant. The plaintiffs' offer was posted by them in West Hartlepool and received and accepted by the defendant in Croydon. The defendant failed to deliver the goods, and the plaintiffs applied under s. 74 of the Act of 1888 for leave to commence proceedings in the West Hartlepool County Court, on the ground that, by posting the offer there, part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of that court. Leave was granted and a plaint was issued. The defendant's solicitor thereupon demanded particulars of the claim in order to ascertain whether the West Hartlepool County Court had jurisdiction. On receipt of the particulars, the defendant applied for a writ of prohibition directed to the West Hartlepool County Court and to the plaintiffs.

Held: the posting of the offer was not part of the cause of action; the defendant's demand for particulars did not, in the circumstances, amount to waiver; and, therefore, the application succeeded.

Notes. The County Courts Act, 1888, was repealed and replaced by the County Courts Act, 1934 (which has been repealed and replaced by the County Courts Act, 1959). For s. 74 of the Act of 1888, see now the County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 2, r. 1.

Referred to: Smythe v. Wiles, [1921] 2 K.B. 66.

As to the place where a county court action may be commenced, see 9 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 166 et seq.; and for cases see 13 DIGEST (Repl.) 415 et seq. As to prohibition, see 9 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 332, 333; and for cases see 13 DIGEST (Repl.) 489 et seq.

Cases referred to:

(1) Lee v. Cohen (1894), 71 L.T. 824; 39 Sol. Jo. 27, C.A.; 16 Digest 123, 211.

(2) Firquharson v. Meryin, [1894] 1 Q.B. 552; 63 L.J.Q.B. 474; 70 L.T. 152; 58 J.P. 495; 42 W.R. 306; 10 T.L.R. 240; 9 R. 202, C.A.; 13 Digest (Repl.) 491, 1199.

Also referred to in argument:

R. v. Tristram, [1902] 1 K.B. 816; 71 L.J.K.B. 418; 86 L.T. 515; 50 W.R. 477; 18 T.L.R. 406, C.A.; 19 Digest 241, 224.

Green v. Beach (1873), L.R. 8 Exch. 208; 42 L.J.Ex. 151; 21 W.R. 856; 13 Digest (Repl.) 420, 464.

Jones v. James (1850), 1 L.M. & P. 65; Cox, M. & H. 290; Rob.L. & W. 197; 19 L.J.Q.B. 257; 14 L.T.O.S. 424; 13 Digest (Repl.) 494, 1225.

Moore v. Gamgee (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 244; 59 L.J.Q.B. 505; 38 W.R. 669, D.C.; 13 Digest (Repl.) 494, 1231.

Appeal from an order of Low, J., at chambers.

The plaintiffs, who carried on business at West Hartlepool, contracted to purchase certain goods from the defendant at Croydon. A written offer made by the plaintiffs was posted by them at West Hartlepool and received and accepted by the defendant at Croydon. This constituted the contract. The defendant failed to deliver the goods. The plaintiffs applied under s. 74 of the County Courts Act, 1888, for leave to commence an action at West Hartlepool. In accordance with

A the County Court Rules, Ord. V, r. 13, the plaintiffs filed an affidavit stating that part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction, i.e., the posting of the offer at West Hartlepool. Leave having been granted, a plaint was issued. The defendant's solicitor, on receipt of it, wrote for particulars of the claim, and said that he would accept service of all proceedings in the action at his office as specified. He also said:

B "I have been instructed by the defendant to defend this action, and, subject and without prejudice to any point which the defendant may raise as to the jurisdiction or otherwise, I send you the enclosed demand for further particulars of the plaintiffs' claim."

C On receipt of the particulars, the defendant applied to the judge in chambers for a writ of prohibition to the West Hartlepool County Court and the plaintiffs to prohibit them from proceeding further in the action, but the application was dismissed. The defendant appealed.

J. B. Matthews, K.C. (Morle with him), for the appellant.

Neilson for the respondent.

D A. T. LAWRENCE, J.—This is an appeal from an order of Low, J., at chambers dismissing an application for a writ of prohibition. An action was brought to recover damages for breach of contract for the sale of certain brass and iron. The action was commenced in the County Court of West Hartlepool. For the judge to have jurisdiction, part of the cause of action must arise within the jurisdiction of the county court, and where the plaintiff tries to serve process outside, he must apply to the judge or registrar. For that purpose, the plaintiff must state his reasons in an affidavit. In the present case, the plaintiffs did apply, and they filed an affidavit stating that part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction. The fact relied on here is the posting of the offer at West Hartlepool. It is said by defendant that this fact did not constitute a part of the cause of action, and that, inasmuch as this was apparent on the face of the proceedings, the court had no jurisdiction. I think counsel for the defendant is right in saying that, while the posting of the offer was not part of the cause of action, the making of the offer clearly was. It does not matter where the letter containing the offer was posted, as it was only made when it reached its destination. While counsel may be correct in saying that it appears on the face of the affidavit that there was no jurisdiction, counsel for the plaintiffs relies on waiver. For this purpose, he has referred us to an application made by the defendant's solicitor on receipt of the affidavit, which, by the rules of the county court, must accompany the summons. It is said that he wrote a letter which contained a notice amounting to a waiver.

I do not think this is correct. Counsel for the defendant's answers, or some of them, were sufficient to defeat the argument. The letter was in express terms. [Hrs LORDSHIP referred to the letter, and continued:] Counsel for the defendant says the demand in question was a step in the action. I come to the conclusion that it was not a step in the action, and for this reason, that its whole object was to obtain further particulars which would enable the defendant to ascertain whether the court had jurisdiction. That follows, as it seems to me, from the use of the words "without prejudice." They import that no consent to the jurisdiction is to be implied. There has, therefore, been no waiver, and it seems to me that Lee v. Cohen (1) supports the view that such a document cannot amount to a waiver. The headnote reads (71 L.T. 824):

"Where an action has been commenced in the Mayor's Court the defendant does not, by entering appearance, not under protest, and taking other steps, waive his right to object to the jurisdiction so soon as he ascertains exactly what the nature of the plaintiff's claim against him is."

And LINDLEY, L.J., said (ibid. at p. 825):

"Then as to the point whether the defendant has waived his right to object to the jurisdiction of the Mayor's Court by the steps he has taken, when one looks at it it comes to this: So soon as the defendant's legal advisers ascertained exactly what the nature of the plaintiff's claim was, the defendant objected to the jurisdiction, and applied for the writ of prohibition. That being so, he has not, in my opinion, waived his right to object by having entered appearance and taken the other steps that he did. I think, therefore, that the prohibition must go, and that the appeal must be allowed with costs in the usual way."

A. L. SMITH, L.J., agreed, giving judgment to the same effect. There was stronger evidence of waiver in that case than in this, because here it was guarded by the words "without prejudice." This being my view, it is unnecessary to say anything further as to counsel for the defendant's point that there was want of jurisdiction apparent on the face of the proceedings. He cites Farquharson v. Morgan (2), but that need not be relied on to decide this case. I think this application succeeds, and that the prohibition must go.

LUSH, J.—Three questions arise in this court. The first is whether the whole or any part of the cause of action arose in the district of the West Hartlepool County Court. If any part did so arise, then the prohibition must be refused because of s. 74 of the County Courts Act, 1888. The plaintiff did apply for and obtained leave. I agree with what A. T. LAWRENCE, J., has said on this part of the case. Counsel for the plaintiffs said correctly that the material facts must arise within the jurisdiction in order to establish the claim; but he says that one of these was the dispatching of the offer, and that, as it was dispatched in the West Hartlepool district, part of the cause of action arose in that district. I disagree with his contention. It is true that the sending of the offer must be proved, but the material fact is that the offer was made. That is proved partly by proving dispatch and partly proving receipt of the offer, but the question is, where was the offer made? It was made not where it was dispatched, but where it was received. The posting of the offer was, therefore, not part of the cause of action. As to acceptance, it is clear that an offer is accepted when it is put in the post, and, therefore, it was accepted at Croydon, and the whole of the contract was concluded outside the district in which these proceedings were commenced. It cannot be said that any part of the cause of action arose in the West Hartlepool district.

Counsel for the defendant raised a further question. He said that, as it was apparent on the face of the affidavit that the cause of action arose outside the West Hartlepool district, therefore want of jurisdiction was apparent on the face of the proceedings; and he contended, on the authority of Farquharson v. Morgan (2), that, if the want of jurisdiction appears on face of the proceedings, it is bad, although the defendant may have acquiesced. Applying that here, counsel says the defendant is entitled to a prohibition ex debito justitiæ. Perhaps it is not necessary for us to deal with the point, but, as I have formed an opinion, I propose to state it. In Farquharson v. Morgan (2), there was a total absence of jurisdiction. The county court judge there had no jurisdiction, without regard to whether he was a judge of one county court or another. Inasmuch as it was apparent to the county court judge that it was a claim which could never be submitted to a county court, he was entertaining a claim which he ought to have known could only have been entertained by the High Court. Therefore, the Court of Appeal, following older decisions, but expressing reluctance, held that, although the defendant consented, yet, notwithstanding the consent, he was entitled to a prohibition ex debito justitiæ. If the present case is on all fours with that, then it must be followed. In that case, the interests of the litigants were subordinated to the court. LORD HALSBURY said ([1894] 1 Q.B. at p. 556):

"The court must protect the prerogative of the Crown and the due course of the administration of justice by prohibiting the inferior court from proceeding in matters as to which it is apparent that it has no jurisdiction."

- A Here, however, there has been no such total absence of jurisdiction. The county court judge had some jurisdiction. It was an ordinary action for breach of contract well within the limits of jurisdiction. Although the registrar had no power to give leave, the defect of jurisdiction was not such as it was in the case I have referred to. It was a mere defect in so far as the locality of the county court was concerned. In my view, this was rather a matter of procedure than jurisdiction, using that word as it was used in Farquharson v. Morgan (2). That, in my opinion, is the distinction between this case and Farquharson v. Morgan (2).
- B

- The third question is: Was there any waiver? When the solicitor for the defendant wrote the letter which has been referred to, he sent with it a very formal document demanding particulars. He also says: [His LORDSHIP referred to the letter, and continued:] As first sight it strikes one that it was an undertaking to act as solicitor at West Hartlepool, and a consent to the suit proceeding there. On reflection, however, I have come to the conclusion that this is not the correct view. He says, in effect, "I take this step without prejudice." If he had taken a step with a view to his ultimate success, his saying "I reserve my right to object to the jurisdiction" would not have mattered. He would have waived his right to object. One must remember that the particulars already given were very meagre.
- C
- D Thus, the plaintiffs did not say where the contract was made; they gave no information to enable the defendant to form any opinion whether he could succeed in an application for prohibition. For that purpose, the defendant was entitled to further particulars. True, the letter said where the notices must be sent, but the defendant's solicitor only applied for particulars so that he could advise his client. That is all that was meant or done by the solicitor for the defendant. The defendant did not, in my opinion, acquiesce in the jurisdiction. To decide otherwise would be to disregard the substance of the matter. He seems to me to tell the plaintiffs in clear terms that it is not to operate as a waiver. I, therefore, agree that this appeal should be allowed.
- E

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: F. Gowen, Croydon; Crossman, Pritchard & Co., for J. H. Smith, West Hartlepool.

[Reported by W. V. BELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

FOWLER v. MIDLAND ELECTRIC CORPORATION FOR POWER DISTRIBUTION, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Bankes and Warrington, L.J.J.), April 24, 25, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 1 Ch. 656; 86 L.J.Ch. 472; 117 L.T. 97;
33 T.L.R. 322; 61 Sol. Jo. 459]

Company Debenture - Payment of principal and interest - Duty of company to seek out debenture holder.

Unless the covenant to pay principal and interest to the registered holders of debentures issued by a company contains some special provision, as, e.g., a condition fixing a place of payment, excluding the common law obligation as between debtor and creditor, and in the absence of any evidence that the debenture holder had prevented the payment to him by deliberately absenting himself or deceiving the company as to his whereabouts, it is the duty of the company to seek out the debenture holder for the purpose of performing the covenant.

Notes. As to debentures generally, see 6 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 466 et seq.; and for cases see 10 DIGEST (Repl.) 763 et seq.

Cases referred to in argument:

New Zealand Gold Extraction Co. (Newbery-Fautin Process) v. Peacock, [1894] 1 Q.B. 622; 63 L.J.Q.B. 227; 70 L.T. 110; 9 R. 669, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 333, 2133.

Webb v. Crosse, [1912] 1 Ch. 323; 81 L.J.Ch. 259; 105 L.T. 867; 56 Sol. Jo. 177; 35 Digest 667, 4029.

Thornton v. Court (1854), 3 De G.M. & G. 293; 22 L.J.Ch. 361; 20 L.T.O.S. 318; 17 Jur. 151; 43 E.R. 151, L.J.J.; 35 Digest 667, 4036.

Appeal from an order made by EVE, J., in an action by a debenture holder.

In 1903 the defendant company issued a series of debentures of £100 each, amounting to £250,000. By each debenture the company covenanted to pay to the person therein named, or other the registered holder for the time being, the principal money thereby secured, together with a premium of 2½ per cent., on June 30, 1913, and until payment of such principal moneys to pay interest on the principal sum thereby secured at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum on June 30 and Dec. 31 in each year. The debentures did not contain any charge on the company's assets, but by one of the conditions indorsed thereon it was provided that the holders of the debentures were and would be entitled pari passu to the benefit of an indenture therein mentioned, whereby certain freehold and leasehold properties belonging to the company had been assured or covenanted to be assured to, and the other assets and the undertaking of the company had been charged in favour of, trustees to secure the debenture debt and interest. By that indenture it was provided that "upon payment by the trustees to debenture-holders of any principal moneys or interest hereby or thereby secured the respective debentures shall be produced to the trustees who shall cause a memorandum of the respective amounts and dates of payment to be indorsed thereon respectively."

Neither the debentures nor the deed fixed any place for payment of the debentures. By the articles of association of the company it was provided that in the event of the death of a registered holder of debentures his executors or administrators, or, in the case of joint holding, the survivor or survivors of the several joint holders, should be the only person or persons recognised by the company as having any title to the debenture. It was provided that a notice to a debenture-holder should be deemed to be duly served if sent through the post prepaid addressed to the

A debenture-holder at his registered address, and that a notice so sent should be deemed to be served twenty-four hours after it was posted. Miss Mary Jane Fowler was the registered holder of eighteen of the debentures. She died on Jan. 19, 1913, having by her will appointed J. Challiner and E. Fowler her executors. Considerable delay arose in proving her will, caveats having been entered against the probate. The company proposed to issue on July 1, 1913, £400,000 of 5 per cent. guaranteed first mortgage debenture stock, partly in place of the debentures which would then have become payable, and for that purpose it was necessary to pay off the debentures. On May 23, 1913, the company sent a circular letter to M. J. Fowler (in common with the other debenture holders) to her registered address, offering to issue to her such amount of debenture stock in exchange for her debentures as she might elect to take. No answer was received to this letter on behalf of M. J. Fowler, and on June 23, 1913, the company wrote a further letter to her at her registered address, stating that, as she had not elected to exchange her debentures for debenture stock, it was assumed that she wished the debentures to be redeemed, and asking her to forward the debentures to the company duly cancelled for that purpose. No answer was received to this letter. On June 29, 1913, the company sent a warrant for the amount due to M. J. Fowler for interest on June 30 to her registered address, and on July 1 this warrant was returned to the company by her bankers with the information of her death, and that Challiner, whose address was given, was one of her executors. In July, 1913, the company paid to the trustees of the debenture trust deed £1,845, being the principal money due, with £45 the agreed bonus. This sum was placed by the trustees on deposit at Parr's Bank. It was subsequently invested in Treasury Bills, which were paid off in July, 1916, when the trustees again placed the principal together, with the accrued interest on the bills upon deposit. On Aug. 15, 1913, the company sent a letter to M. J. Fowler at her registered address informing her that they had paid the money to the trustees, and asking her to send the debentures to Parr's Bank, the trustees' bankers. No answer was received to this letter. In October, 1913, the company wrote to Challiner that they held the interest warrant, which had been sent on June 29, uncashed, in anticipation of probate of M. J. Fowler's will being lodged for registration. Challiner replied stating that he had renounced probate, and that E. Fowler, whose address he gave, was the only executor, adding that he understood that probate was not likely to be taken out for some time, but that if the company applied to Fowler he could inform them more fully. The company then wrote to Fowler, pointing out to him that until probate was registered with them there was no one to whom they could make a legal tender of the amount due in respect of the debentures. On Oct. 25, 1913, Fowler wrote to the company stating that the caveats had been withdrawn, and that he expected that probate would be obtained within the next three weeks. Probate was granted to Fowler on Nov. 5, 1913, but Fowler placed the debentures in the National Safe Deposit, and appeared to forget all about them, and the probate was not registered with the company until Apr. 10, 1916. The company then paid to Fowler the interest due on June 30, 1913, and offered to pay to him the £1,845 and the amount of the interest thereon earned by the deposit with the trustees' bank and the interest on the Treasury bills. Fowler, however, claimed interest on the £1,800 from June 30, 1913, to the date of payment at $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and, as the company refused to pay this interest, commenced this action to recover the £1,845 and interest on the £1,800 at the said rate. The company paid into court the £1,845 and £159 10s. 9d., the amount of the interest earned as before-mentioned, as sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's demand. The action was continued to recover the difference between the £159 10s. 9d. and the interest on the £1,800 at $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. from June 30, 1913. On Feb. 19 the action came on for trial before EVE, J.

In the course of his judgment EVE, J., said that the short point raised by the action was whether the holder of a registered debenture, not containing any provision appointing a particular place for payment, who from oversight, carelessness, or other cause had neglected to present his debenture for payment off on the due date, could, in a case where there had been no legal tender, recover from the borrowers interest on the principal moneys secured by the debenture down to the date of actual payment. In other words, was it the duty of the borrowers in such circumstances to seek the creditor if he is within the realm and to pay the money without request? It was not disputed that the general rule that the debtor must seek his creditor might, and probably would, have applied had the registered holder, Miss Fowler, survived June 30, 1913, but it was suggested that the real bargain being a covenant to pay Miss Fowler or other the registered holder, with express terms that the company should recognise and treat the registered holder of each debenture as being sole absolute owner thereof, and as alone entitled to receive and give effectual discharges for the principal moneys and interest, and that on the death of a registered holder his administrator or executor should be the only person recognised by the company as having any title to the debenture, and might be registered as the holder thereof, the company was not bound to look beyond the register, and that when it was discovered that the person whose name appeared on the register as the holder was dead, the company was relieved from any obligation to seek out the administrator or executor, and could retain the overdue principal moneys or deposit them with the trustees without being liable to pay interest on them until such time as the legal personal representative chose or was able to have the grant to him recorded in the register. His LORDSHIP continued: I do not think this suggestion is well founded. The contract is in express terms to pay interest until payment of the principal moneys, and the conditions relating to the register, and to the absolute title of the registered holder and his legal personal representatives, are not intended to operate, nor do they in fact operate, as a qualification on the covenant to pay. They are inserted to protect the company and the debenture trustees against the possible consequences of notice of any trust in favour of or any claim advanced by a third party, and to relieve the company and the trustees of all obligation to pay regard to any persons other than those in whom the legal title is vested. Beyond this they do not, in my opinion, affect the rights of the debenture-holder and his legal personal representatives, and I cannot so construe them as to hold that they transfer to the creditor the obligation of seeking out the debtor. But then it is said that, if this conclusion be right, a careless debenture-holder, or one who was more content to leave his money with the company, possibly at a high rate of interest than to have it repaid, might inflict hardship on the company by neglecting to surrender his debenture, or possibly by delaying the application for a grant of administration to the estate of a holder who had died intestate. This may be so, but, in the first place, the whole difficulty can be, and I think at the present time generally is, met by a condition fixing a place of payment, and, in the next place, even in the absence of such a condition, a legal tender to the careless debenture-holder would determine his right to subsequent interest, and by payment into court in redemption or administration proceedings the same result would probably be brought about in the case of a deceased member. But these latter considerations do not really apply to the present case, for, as I have already shown, the company was supplied, on the very day or the day after the debenture matured for payment, with the name of one of the deceased holder's executors, and by the 24th of the following October the information was given that the plaintiff was the only proving executor and was expecting to receive the grant within a few weeks. The defendants were, therefore, from the first in possession of information which told them the person or persons to whom a tender might be made, and, although it is true that caveats had been entered and this might have made them hesitate for a time to make such tender, all grounds for any such hesitation were removed by the letter addressed to them in October. There must be judgment, with costs, for the plaintiff for the amount of the difference between the £159 10s. 9d. and the interest on the £1,800 at 4 per

A cent. per annum from June 30, 1913, down to judgment, less tax, and an order for payment out to him of the moneys in court. The defendants appealed.

Maugham, K.C., and R. W. Baxter for the defendants.

Clayton, K.C., and F. L. Wright, for the plaintiff, were not called upon to argue.

B LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—This seems to me to be a very plain case. A Miss Fowler was entitled to debentures for £1,800, carrying an express rate of interest, the capital sum with a premium being made payable on June 30, 1913. The debentures were secured by a charge upon the property created by a deed, which is referred to on the back of each debenture. We have not anything to do with the charge upon the property here. This is simply an action on the debentures themselves in respect of the £1,800 principal money, which became due on June 30, 1913. It was not paid, and it is said that it carries interest till payment, and that it ought to be paid to the plaintiff, who is the legal personal representative of Miss Fowler. Miss Fowler is said to have been, and I assume she was, a trustee for some charity. That she held the debentures as trustee for a charity makes no difference, because when we look at the debentures it is quite clear from cl. 11 thereof that

D “In the event of the death of the registered holder of debentures, his executors or administrators, or, in the case of joint holding, the survivor or survivors of the several joint holders, shall be the only person or persons recognised by the company as having any title to the said debentures.”

E It is entirely immaterial, therefore, whether Miss Fowler was beneficially interested in the £1,800, or whether she was, as in truth apparently she was, merely a trustee for the charity. The money was payable to her representative, and not to any new trustee the charity might select.

F Miss Fowler, as the holder of these debentures, had her name on the register, and dividend warrants were from time to time paid by the company by cheque through her bankers. The cheque for the first half year of 1913 was returned through the bankers with the information that the lady was dead. The bank gave the information which they then had that one of the executors was Mr. Challiner, who, when he was applied to, said that he had renounced probate, and gave the name of the other executor, the plaintiff. In June, 1916, this action was commenced. The defendants paid into court the £1,800 and the premium and interest up to June 30, but that is all. The plaintiff says that he has a legal right under the express covenant made by the company with Miss Fowler, and the company must satisfy their legal obligation, which is to pay £1,800 with the premium and interest until payment.

G We are invited to hold that there is something special and peculiar in the debentures of this company which renders the ordinary law applicable to such a case inoperative. I entirely refuse to assent to that. There is here an obligation under seal by the company to pay on June 30, 1913, a certain sum of £1,800 with a premium and with interest. The interest goes on accruing until payment is made, unless it has been shown that there is a tender which was not accepted or that there has been some default of an obligation on the part of the plaintiff which stops the interest from running. I can see no trace of such a thing here. The debenture does not name any place where the capital sum is to be paid. There is no clause similar to that which provided for a definite payment of interest, and I think that it would be dangerous in the last degree to listen for a moment to the suggestion which has been made that there is some company law in the city, when transactions of this kind are dealt with, which makes it improper that the company should be chargeable with interest up to the date when the full payment is made. I do not myself think that there is any obligation whatever as executor to register. I cannot find anything in the deed to require that. I think that if the executor goes to the company and says: “My testatrix is the registered owner of these debentures, here they are, here is the probate of her will, I am the sole executor, please pay me the amount due under that debenture,” that is perfectly good, and there is not the least necessity for any kind of registration of probate with the company at all. There is no obligation for it, no necessity for it, and no harm done by its not having been registered before. I am unwilling to say very much more about this case. I agree entirely with the judgment of Eve, J. I think that the defence to this action is misconceived, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree with what the learned judge in the court below said with reference to the construction of this debenture. Counsel for the defendant company has suggested that if our decision goes against him the position of secretaries of companies will be a pitiable one, and that their main duty, or a great part of their duty, will consist of rushing about the country seeking out the creditors of the company. He has appealed to what he says is "the universal practice of mankind" to induce us to accept his view of the construction of this document. If there is a universal practice of mankind, and if it is applicable to this case at all, I should say it would lead one to the conclusion that the occasions are rare when the creditor does not demand, and if necessary present himself promptly to receive, payment of money which is due to him, and in those rare cases where he does not do so, either from carelessness, or neglect, or ignorance, then the rights of the parties have to be dealt with according to the strict letter of their bargain. The bargain, as I understand it, contained in this debenture was that on a given date the company would repay the principal, and would pay interest until the principal was repaid. If there was any evidence whatever that the creditor had prevented, in the ordinary sense of the word, the payment to him by the company by absconding or deliberately absenting himself, or keeping himself out of the way, or deceiving the company as to his whereabouts, there might be foundation for some of the observations that were addressed to us. But in this case it is plain what the position was. The lady died, and one of the named executors did not intend to accept probate. But by Oct. 25, 1913, the company received information from Mr. Fowler that he expected probate would be obtained within the next three weeks, the caveats which had been entered against probate having been withdrawn, and a request by him that the cheque for interest due down to June 30 should be sent to a certain bank. Having that information the company wrote back and said that until probate had been registered they had no authority to pay. By "registered" the company merely meant noted in their books the fact that probate had been obtained. It may be a convenient practice to adopt, but there is nothing in the contract which entitled them to say that, although Mr. Fowler had sent in the probate and they had made that note concerning it, they would not consider that the time had come when they were under an obligation to pay and that they would continue to be under an obligation to pay the interest. That being the position of things in 1913, the company themselves did nothing. They knew who the creditor was. It was open to them to write a letter and say that they insist upon having probate registered, and asking when Mr. Fowler was going to send it in, because he was entitled to the principal. They did nothing for three years until 1916, and then, when it turned out that the executor had forgotten what the real position was, having put this debenture away, they turned round and said: "You have prevented us from paying." As far as I can see, there is not the slightest ground for supporting that view here.

WARRINGTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. This case is an extremely simple one. By a document which is called a debenture, but which is for the present purpose to my mind an ordinary covenant to pay, the defendant company covenanted to pay Miss Mary Jane Fowler, as the registered holder, the sum of £1,800 with a certain premium on June 30, 1913, together with interest at $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum. June 30, 1913, arrived. Miss Fowler happened to be dead. Her will was not proved till some months later, and for reasons which are quite immaterial, probate of the will was not produced to the company and noted in their books until April, 1916. They then refused to pay any interest on the £1,800

A from June 30, 1913, and the present action is brought to enforce the covenant to pay. What possible answer can there be? The registered holder has done nothing to prevent the company from paying the debt. The obligation, if you look at the terms of the covenant itself and the conditions indorsed on it, is to pay the registered holder, or, if the registered holder is dead, his executor or administrator. The company have not paid the executor in this case. The only answer is that

B there is something peculiar about the contract between the company and the debenture-holder, something which renders it incumbent on the court to hold that the ordinary common law rule as to the duty of the debtor to seek out the creditor and pay him is not to apply. I altogether repudiate any such suggestion. It is an ordinary covenant to pay, and, unless the covenant contains some special provisions in terms excluding the common law obligation as between debtor and creditor, I do

C not think that the court ought to recognise any such exclusion, or to countenance the idea for a moment that there should be such an exclusion to the common law right. This is an ordinary action on a covenant to pay. Payment has not been made, and the plaintiff is plainly entitled to judgment.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Rawle, Johnstone & Co., for Hill, Dickinson & Co., Liverpool; Ranger, Burton & Frost, for George Trenam, Balham.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. v. WILLS

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Earl Loreburn, Viscount Haldane, Lord Kinnear, Lord Shaw and Lord Parmoor), October 26, 27, November 2, 1916, March 13, 1917]

[Reported [1917] A.C. 148; 86 L.J.K.B. 641; 116 L.T. 615; 33 T.L.R. 254; 61 Sol. Jo. 335]

Carriage of Goods—"Non-delivery"—Short delivery—Goods carried at owner's risk—Carrier liable for "non-delivery of consignment"—Appreciable part of consignment not delivered.

G The respondent delivered goods to the appellant railway company for carriage on the terms of a consignment note which exempted the railway company from liability "for all loss, damage, misdelivery, delay, or detention," except where caused by the wilful misconduct of the servants of the company, and proceeded: "But nothing in this agreement shall exempt the company from any liability they might otherwise incur in the following cases of non-delivery, pilferage, or misdelivery (that is to say):—1. Non-delivery of any package or consignment fully and properly addressed, unless such non-delivery is due to accidents to trains or fire. 2. Pilferage from packages of goods protected otherwise than by paper or other packing readily removable by hand provided the pilferage is pointed out to a servant of the company on or before delivery. 3. Misdelivery where goods fully and properly addressed are not

H tendered to the consignee within 28 days after dispatch. Provided that the company shall not be liable in the said cases of non-delivery, pilferage, or misdelivery on proof that the same has not been caused by negligence or misconduct on the part of the company or their servants." The company failed to deliver at its destination what the county court judge found to be an appreciable, though not a great, portion of the consignment. On a claim by the

I respondent for the value of the undelivered goods,

Held (LORD SHAW dissentiente): on the true construction of the consignment note as a whole non-delivery of a consignment meant non-delivery of the whole consignment and not short delivery, and, therefore, the respondent had failed to prove non-delivery of the consignment within exception No. 1 of the consignment note, and was not entitled to succeed.

Decision of Court of Appeal, [1915] 1 K.B. 199, reversed.

Notes. Referred to: O'Keefe v. Great Western Rail. Co. (1920), 123 L.T. 269.

As to special contracts of carriage, see 4 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 154-157; and for cases see 8 DIGEST (Repl.) 41-43, 60 et seq.

Appeal by the railway company, the defendants in the action, from an order of the Court of Appeal (BUCKLEY and PICKFORD, L.J.J.; PHILLIMORE, L.J., dissentiente), which affirmed a decision of the Divisional Court, reported [1914] 1 K.B. 263, upholding a judgment given for the plaintiff in an action commenced by him in the Bristol County Court.

The facts are stated in the headnote and their Lordships' opinions.

Schiller, K.C., and Bernard Campion (for C. K. Tatham, serving with his Majesty's Forces) for the appellants.

Rawlinson, K.C., and F. E. Weatherly for the respondent.

The House took time for consideration.

Mar. 13, 1917. EARL LOREBURN.—The majority of the House place upon this consignment note a construction which is favourable to the appellants, but also the majority of the House are of opinion that, the point not having been tried by the learned judge, there should logically be a new trial. As, however, we apprehend that what the appellants desire is a construction of the note, we ask whether it is necessary to have a new trial.

The learned counsel for the parties having agreed to dispense with a new trial, the following opinions were read.

EARL LOREBURN.—What alone matters in this case is the construction to be placed on the owner's risk note. The railway company are relieved from liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, delay or detention subject to a qualification which does not apply here. But the agreement does not exempt the company "in the following cases of non-delivery, pilferage, or misdelivery, that is to say, the non-delivery of any package or consignment fully and properly addressed."

There is again a qualification which does not apply here, so I omit further reference to these qualifications.

The company is to be ordinarily not liable for a loss, but liable for non-delivery (which is a loss) when the thing not delivered is a package or consignment fully and properly addressed. That is the general effect of the agreement. You are to distinguish packages or consignments so addressed from other things, no doubt because it is easier to convey them safely if so identified and addressed. If it is desired the consignor can send each article as a separate consignment fully and properly addressed and then the railway company would be answerable for every single article. Probably this is in many cases practically an impossible thing to do, or it might entail a heavier charge for carriage. But if he does not do that, then, in my opinion, the question is whether or not the consignment as a whole has been delivered. It was argued that when you have such a package or consignment the railway company is liable unless everything contained in it or of which it consists is delivered: for example, that the loss of one egg out of 500 or of one handle in a piece of furniture amounts to non-delivery of the package or consignment. Subtle arguments might be multiplied on this footing, as all kinds of things are packed or consigned. In my opinion, it is not a question of law but a question of fact in each case whether there has been delivery or non-delivery, which are the antitheses the one of the other. And a judge or jury ought to answer the question: Was there in substance and in a business sense delivery or not?, according to the circumstances, as they would answer about the delivery of a cargo.

A and would look at the nature of the things packed or consigned. If they came to a conclusion which a reasonable man could reach on the evidence their finding would be supported. A court can construe the meaning of words, but I do not think it is a question of construction whether a deficiency in the delivery of a package or consignment amounts to non-delivery of the package or consignment or not. Nor do I think it is possible as a matter of law on this contract to say
B either that to deliver a consignment means delivering everything that composes it or to prescribed by percentage or by any other automatic standard what does or does not amount to delivery. I regard it as a question for the jury. We are not assisted by the maxim de minimis non curat lex, for that maxim merely applies to negligible trifles. In my opinion, the construction is plain. The railway company are not relieved from liability where there has been non-delivery of the C package or consignment, but the judge of fact or the jury have to say whether or not there has been as a matter of business in substance non-delivery. If there were a considerable shortage and the jury found there had been delivery I should set aside the finding on the ground that there was no evidence to support it, and I do not believe that a court of law can give more assistance to those who have to decide the facts than by saying that. You cannot convert a question of fact D into a question of law by saying it is inconvenient not to have any certain standard by which you can automatically ascertain liability. The parties here have chosen to make liability depend on the ascertainment of a fact.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—It is after hesitation that I have arrived at a conclusion as to the construction of this consignment note, and that hesitation has not E been the less because of the eminence and experience of learned judges in the courts below who have taken a different view. But the question is one of the construction of an ill-drawn and obscure document on which those who have to interpret it must form their own opinions.

The consignment note in controversy is framed with the object of relieving the company from liability as common carriers and under s. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, a section which prohibits contracting out of the principle F it lays down, excepting under conditions which may be adjudged just and reasonable by the court. In particular cases, such conditions may be so adjudged if the goods are carried at a reduced rate and if the stipulations excluding liability are not grossly unfair. I will not read over again the terms of the particular stipulations for carriage at reduced rates under construction in the present case. It is enough G that their substance is that the company is to be free from all liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, delay, or detention, unless, firstly, these are due to the wilful misconduct of the company's servants, or secondly, they fall under certain specified kinds of non-delivery, pilferage, or misdelivery, which, in the absence of any misconduct of the company's servants, would, but for this exception, come within the sweeping exemption conferred by the main words. Even these specified H cases of exceptional liability may be got rid of if the company can prove that they have not been due to negligence or misconduct by themselves or their servants.
But if they cannot discharge the burden of proving this, then they are liable if there is non-delivery of any package or consignment fully and properly addressed, unless the non-delivery is due to accident to a train or to fire. A second head under which liability is preserved is that of pilferage from properly covered I packages, and a third is misdelivery where goods properly addressed are not tendered to the consignee within twenty-eight days after dispatch. This last head points to damage arising from delay caused by goods ultimately delivered to the consignee having previously been wrongly delivered to some other person.
In the conditions annexed to the note there is one in particular, the third, which must be kept in mind in construing the exceptions to which I have referred. It excludes claims in respect of goods for loss or damage during the transit, unless made within three days after delivery of the goods, or, in case of non-delivery of any package or consignment, within fourteen days after dispatch. It will be noticed that in the second of these alternatives the expression "package or consignment" is used instead of "goods" as in the first, a variation which suggests that the non-delivery contemplated is not one arising merely by loss of items during the transit, but non-delivery of something which is an entirety. Loss, say by pilferage or other cause of short delivery, would be literally covered by the words in the first alternative, and is apparently meant to be excluded from the second, which is, I think, directed to absolute non-delivery as contrasted with short delivery. This is not without its bearing on the real question in the appeal which is the meaning of the expression "consignment" in the first of the exceptions to freedom from liability bargained for in the body of the note.

Reading the note and the conditions as a whole, I have come, though not with any great degree of confidence, to the conclusion that by "consignment" in the first exception is meant the consignment in its entirety of what is included in a consignment note, as distinguished from the items which together make up the consignment. The juxtaposition of "package," which connotes a single whole, with consignment appears to me to point to this interpretation. It seems, from the second exception, that pilferage is not treated as covered by partial non-delivery, and this indicates that non-delivery of a part is not to be contemplated as within the first exception. As I have already said, there is nothing in the provisions of condition 3, which prescribe the method of claim in all cases, that, as I read it, conflicts with this construction. I do not find myself in agreement with BUCKLEY and PICKFORD, L.JJ., in their interpretation of the word "loss" as it occurs in the third condition. I think that "loss" is there meant to include loss by failure to deliver items as distinguished from the entirety.

These considerations dispose of the real question of importance in the appeal. They seem to me to imply that, on the facts as established before the county court judge, there was a delivery of what was included in the consignment note, a delivery which was short by reason of the loss of certain items at some stage of the transit, but not the less a delivery within the meaning of the condition. This is how I construe his finding, and, if I am right in my interpretation of the note itself, his judgment was consequently wrong.

LORD KINNEAR.—I have found this case to be one of difficulty. But, after consideration, I am unable to accept the conclusion of the court below, and I agree with the noble and learned viscount [LORD HALDANE] that the appeal must be allowed. The question before the House, as I understand it, is purely one of construction, since the facts have been ascertained finally, and with sufficient precision, by the learned judge of the county court. I assume, therefore, in accordance with his decision, that certain carcasses of sheep and lambs, parts of three separate consignments from one of the appellants' railway stations to the respondent at Bristol were not delivered, and that, although the proportion of the undelivered parts to the entire consignments was in each case small and of no great value in money, there was still an appreciable difference between the quantities delivered and the quantities consigned. The respondent claims the value of the undelivered carcasses, and I apprehend that if the consignments had been made under an ordinary contract of carriage by which the appellants had undertaken to bring the goods safely to their destination or to indemnify their owner for their loss or injury, the claim would have been good. But that is by no means the contract between the parties in this case. The appellants, like other railway companies, allow to traders the option of having their goods carried under one or other of two different arrangements. They may be carried at the ordinary rate, which is not alleged to be excessive, under the ordinary liability of a railway company as fixed by statute, or else they may be carried at a reduced rate, provided the sender undertakes to relieve the railway company from all liability for loss or damage, except in certain distinctly specified cases. The respondent adopted the second method, and the consignment note, which is in usual terms, and is for

A "goods to be carried at reduced rates at owner's risk," sets forth that the goods mentioned "are to be carried at the reduced rate below the company's ordinary rate, in consideration whereof I agree to relieve the Great Western Railway Co. and all other companies over whose lines the goods may pass from all liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, delay or detention except when proof that such loss, etc., arose from wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants." Under

B the further exception :

"Nothing in this agreement shall exempt the company from any liability they might otherwise incur in the following cases of non-delivery, pilferage or misdelivery (that is to say): 1. Non-delivery of any package or consignment fully and properly addressed unless such non-delivery is due to accidents to trains or fire."

C The respondent, therefore, undertakes for valuable consideration that his goods shall be carried at his own risk and not at the risk of the appellants, except in certain specified cases. I apprehend that such exception to be effective must be expressed with explicit accuracy. I do not suggest that the case is governed by any fixed rule of law by which a stipulation of this kind must be construed against or in favour of one party or the other, but still it is for the respondent, who stipulates for an exception in his favour from his own clear obligation, to show clearly that the case falls within the terms of the exception, and in this, I think, he has failed. The particular exception upon which he relies is that last quoted—"Non-delivery of any package or consignment fully and properly addressed," and the question to be decided is simply what is meant by "consignment."

D

E I am of opinion that, taking the words in their ordinary and grammatical meaning, it means the entire consignment, and not any part or parts of it. The subject of the stipulation is not the consignment or any part of it, but the whole consignment, including every part of it. It is regarded as an integral unity. This is in accordance with the assumption on which the pleadings of the parties are stated. They are at one as to the meaning of the word as used in their contract: and there is nothing to suggest that either entertained the slightest doubt as to the identification of the three consignments in question. The respondent does not allege that the consignments have not been delivered, but claims damages for the non-delivery of certain carcasses "which formed parts of three consignments delivered by him to the appellants for carriage" to Bristol; and then sets out that the said shortage "appears in the delivery sheets prepared by the appellants' servants." This is quite in accordance with the ordinary use of language. Non-delivery of a consignment is one thing and short delivery of the same consignment is another and different thing; and when the respondent claims damages in respect of short delivery only, he does so in terms. But then his exemption from the general risk he has undertaken does not arise in the case of short delivery but of non-delivery of the entire consignment. It is urged very forcibly that if an appreciable part of a consignment is not delivered the entire consignment is not delivered; and if the thing to be proved were that the appellants had delivered a consignment in terms of a contract to that effect, the argument would be unanswerable. But if the question is whether non-delivery of an entire consignment has been proved, it is irrelevant. It is no part of the appellants' case that they should prove delivery. They have not insured the safe delivery of the goods intrusted to them; and no obligation of theirs comes into consideration at all, until the respondent has exempted himself, by force of the special exception, from his general obligation to take the risk of carriage on himself. The affirmative or negative of delivery makes all the difference in the meaning and effect of the stipulation. But it does not alter the thing to be delivered. I agree that if a part is not delivered the consignment cannot be said to be delivered. But for the same reason the non-delivery of a part does not prove the non-delivery of the whole.

F

G

H

I

I agree with the noble and learned viscount that this view is confirmed by the terms of the second exception, which deals with pilferage. This would have been altogether superfluous if short delivery or partial non-delivery had been already covered by the first exception. Goods that have been pilfered in transit are not delivered; and it cannot be suggested that if the first exception stood alone short delivery of a consignment would have been covered and short delivery of a package would not. It may be that a package is more obviously a single thing than a consignment, which may be made up of a variety of goods. But each is contemplated as possessing the same degree of unity in this respect, that it must be capable of being fully and properly addressed, and so being regarded as one definite subject of a particular contract. Moreover, the component parts of a package, as of any other consignment, may be disintegrated and scattered in the course of transit. In that case, if any part were missing, there would be short delivery. But the terms of the second exception make it clear that that would not be enough to throw liability on the railway company. For it is only in one particular case, to wit, when the packet has been protected otherwise than by paper or other packing easily removable by hand, that the exception comes into force, and even then it is only allowed subject to a proviso that due notice shall be given to the company's servants. All this is, to my mind, a very significant indication that the case provided for in exception No. 1 is that of a total non-delivery of a definite thing which is assumed to be deliverable once for all, and I think the same inference is to be drawn from the third of the conditions on the back, which has been said to be inconsistent with it. It is not the purpose of this clause to define the grounds on which the company's general exemption from liability may be excluded, but to fix the conditions on which claims against the company may be made, assuming them to be in themselves admissible under the contract. But in laying down these conditions it was necessary to provide for the two different cases which we have been considering. There may have been a partial or insufficient delivery due to the misconduct of the company's servants and involving loss or damage to the owner, and in that case it is provided that notice must be given within a certain time after delivery of the goods. Or there may have been a total non-delivery bringing into force the conditions of exception No. 1, and in that case notice must be given within fourteen days after dispatch. I think with my noble and learned friend that the variation of language in the expression of these alternatives is significant. Throughout the contract the same language is used when it is necessary to distinguish between partial delivery and absolute non-delivery of an entire consignment. I venture to think that the interpretation I adopt is in harmony with the declared object and design of the main contract between the parties. The intention is to relieve the railway company of liability for safe delivery in return for a reduced rate. It is not inconsistent with this, that the general exemption should be qualified by certain specific exceptions, resting upon intelligible grounds. But it ought not, in my opinion, to be displaced by any exceptional condition which has not been expressed with clearness and certainty.

LORD SHAW.—Owing to the difference of opinion among us in this House on the subject of this case, I have given a full reconsideration to it. It humbly appears to me that the result reached by all the courts below is right.

There are really two questions. The first and most important is whether on a sound construction of the contract between the parties a case of non-delivery arises when it is admitted that there has not been delivery of an appreciable part of the goods consigned. The second question is whether non-delivery of a portion of the goods consigned falls within the scope of "loss and damage during the transit." The claimant (respondent in the appeal) made three consignments of carcasses of sheep and lambs -752 in number -from the appellants' railway station at Bristol to himself at Bristol. Each carcase was separately addressed, and each was marked. Of the total number twelve were not delivered. It is agreed that the case is not to be determined on any principle of de minimis, and that it should be taken on the footing put by the county court judge, that an appreciable part of

A the goods consigned was not delivered. It is further agreed that the contract between the parties, which was for carriage at owner's risk, is to be found in the "Receive and forward" document addressed by the sender to the railway company. On the footing of that agreement the goods were received, and in it the obligations on forwarding are to be found. The important part of the agreement for the purposes of the present case is as follows: After providing for non-liability "for all loss, damage, misdelivery, delay, or detention," except where these are caused by the wilful misconduct of the railway servants, the contract proceeds:

"But nothing in this agreement shall exempt the company from any liability they might otherwise incur in the following cases of non-delivery, pilferage, or misdelivery (that is to say):—

C 1. Non-delivery of any package or consignment fully and properly addressed, unless such non-delivery is due to accidents to trains or fire. 2. Pilferage from packages of goods protected otherwise than by paper or other packing readily removable by hand provided the pilferage is pointed out to a servant of the company on or before delivery. 3. Misdelivery where goods fully and properly addressed are not tendered to the consignee within twenty-eight days after dispatch. Provided that the company shall not be liable in the said cases of non-delivery, pilferage, or misdelivery on proof that the same has not been caused by negligence or misconduct on the part of the company or their servants."

E It could not be disputed that the words "nothing . . . shall exempt from liability" means and can only mean that in the cases not so exempted, liability is assumed and undertaken by the company in the specified instances of non-delivery, pilferage, or misdelivery.

F Was this, then, a case of "non-delivery"? That, of course, depends on what "delivery" means. I hold it to be free from doubt that delivery means delivery of all and every part of the goods received. These goods, all and every part thereof, received by the carrier, must be handed over to the consignee. Any other rule would be contrary, in my humble opinion, to the most elementary notions as to the carriage of goods. It will not do to say, delivery is satisfied if I give the substantial part of what I got. It might as well be maintained that the obligations of payment were satisfied when the substantial part of the account was paid. Business could not be conducted on so loose a footing. Accordingly, if this be the case with regard to delivery, namely, that it means delivery of the whole and every part of the goods consigned, then the negation of that, namely, the case of non-delivery arises when such delivery does not occur. When a part is not delivered, I cannot see how it can be affirmed that the whole and every part has been delivered. In the realm of logic it is inadmissible that a universal affirmative can stand alongside a partial negative. When a partial negative is postulated the universality of the affirmative is destroyed. And in the realm of business the proposition would be repudiated that when a consignment of goods, separately ticketed, addressed, and numbered as here—it may be carcasses as in this case, or it may be articles of great value, such as statuary or pictures—fails to reach the consignee in full, then a case of non-delivery has not occurred. As LORD WRENCHURCH says, "I am unable to agree that a delivery of twenty-nine is a delivery of thirty." I do not see my way to introduce or to sanction in the legal construction of this contract a proposition which is inadmissible in logic and would be repudiated in the ordinary practice of business.

H The view that the case of non-delivery does not arise unless there is non-delivery of the entire aggregate of the consignment is defended by a reference to the word consignment—a single substantive. But that substantive either means the act of consigning or the goods consigned; and here it clearly means the latter. The fact that a "package" is also mentioned and that pilferage therefrom (if securely packed) is provided for, points, by way of contrast, to package being one thing—a unity—forwarded as such, and out of which unity pilfering may take place. But it is not so with a consignment: the consignment may have great variety: it may be forwarded in several lots, in several trucks, or in several trains, and yet may be all under one consignment note covering and meant to cover each and every part of the goods consigned. Accordingly, in the case of a consignment, what is meant by short delivery? Short delivery simply means that there has been delivery of one part of the goods consigned and non-delivery of the other part of the goods consigned. The obligation was to deliver all and every part; where part is delivered, quoad that part the contract has been obeyed, and liability is not incurred. Similarly the liability was in respect of all and every part; where part is not delivered, quoad that part the contract has not been obeyed and liability is incurred.

Much was made in argument of condition 3, annexed to the contract. That condition, in my opinion, strikingly confirms the view just taken of the rights of parties.

"3. No claim in respect of goods, for loss or damage during the transit, for which the company may be liable, will be allowed unless the same be made in writing within three days after delivery of the goods in respect of which the claim is made, such delivery to be considered complete at the termination of the transit, as specified in condition 6, or in the case of non-delivery of any package or consignment within fourteen days after dispatch."

I am clearly of opinion that the loss or damage here mentioned is loss or damage upon the goods delivered. It is to be observed that the claim is "in respect of goods" not in respect of a consignment in the aggregate; and that the loss or damage is "during the transit"—which must, I think, mean that the damage takes place to part or the whole of the goods in the course of their passage from the consignor to the consignee. But any doubt on this point appears to be removed by this, that the claim is to be intimated "within three days after delivery of the goods in respect of which the claim is made, such delivery to be considered complete at the termination of the transit." The meaning of this appears to me to be that after all the goods are to hand the merchant makes up and within three days presents his claim for any loss or damage that he may have found the goods delivered may have suffered. The whole of this—the claim in respect of loss or damage which must be claimed for within three days of delivery—is entirely apart from the separate case, "the case of non-delivery," the claim in respect of which is to be made within fourteen days of dispatch. Nothing could more clearly show, I venture to think, the differentiation of the case of non-delivery from the case of loss or damage, which loss or damage can only be claimed after delivery. In my humble opinion, both upon this condition and upon the other parts of the contract, "the case of non-delivery" of a consignment has occurred and is the subject of claim when a portion of the goods consigned has not been delivered. I am accordingly, of opinion that the appeal should be disallowed.

LORD PARMOOR.—The respondent, who is a meat salesman, claimed damages in the county court from the appellants for the non-delivery of certain carcasses of frozen mutton, which formed parts of three consignments delivered by him to the appellants for carriage from Avonmouth to Lawrence Hill Station, Bristol, to be delivered thence to his order. The learned county court judge found as a fact that the carcasses which had not been delivered formed an appreciable part of each of the three consignments. This finding is sufficient to raise the legal points involved in the appeal and is not open to review. The question in debate before your Lordships depends on the construction of the owner's risk consignment note on which the consignments were received and forwarded by the appellants.

Up to the year 1854 railway companies had power to act as carriers over their railways, but there was no obligation upon them. When railway companies did undertake to act as carriers it was not unusual for them to attempt to limit their liability by general conditions contained in public notices. In 1854 a new obligation was imposed on railway companies and a duty was imposed on them, according

- A to their respective powers, to afford all reasonable facilities for the receiving, forwarding, and delivery of traffic upon the several railways and canals belonging to, or worked by, such companies, and for the return of carriages, trucks, boats, and other vehicles. By s. 7 of the Act, railway companies were made liable for the loss of, or for any injury done to, animals or things, in the receiving, forwarding, or delivering thereof, occasioned by the neglect or default of the company
- B or its servants, notwithstanding any notice, condition, or declaration made and given by such company contrary thereto, or in anywise limiting such liability, every such notice, condition, or declaration being declared to be null and void. It was, however, provided that nothing contained in the Act should be construed to prevent railway companies from making such conditions with respect to the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of animals or goods as should be adjudged
- C by the court or judge before whom any question relating thereto should be tried to be just and reasonable. No question arises in the present appeal as to whether the terms of the owner's risk consignment note are just and reasonable, but this question has been raised in many cases, and it has been decided that it is a matter wholly for the decision of the court or judge, although it may involve questions of fact. It is further provided that the special contract shall not be binding upon or
- D affect any party unless the same is signed by him or by the person delivering such animals or things for carriage. In the present case the special contract was signed by the respondent.

- Since 1854 goods have been largely carried by railway companies under owner's risk consignment notes, the traders being willing to limit the liability of the railway company in return for being charged at a lower rate. In the present case the
- E consignment note is in the usual modern form, and may be found in text-books on railway law. Their Lordships were informed that this form had been generally adopted by the railway companies in order to obtain uniformity and to avoid discrimination between different railway systems. The consignment note commences with the notice that there are two rates of carriage at either of which the goods may be consigned at the sender's option: one, the ordinary rate, when the
- F company take the ordinary liability of a railway company; and the other a reduced rate, adopted when the sender agrees to relieve the company and certain other companies or persons from all liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, delay, or detention, except (1) upon proof that such loss arose from wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants, (2) in the case of such non-delivery, pilferage, or misdelivery as was thereunder mentioned. It was said that No. 2 had been
- G added at the instance of the traders, and there is no doubt that owner's risk consignment notes have been held just and reasonable, although they protected the railway companies from all liability for loss or damage except upon proof that such loss or damage had arisen from wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants, so long as the sender had the choice of a reasonable alternative ordinary rate. The note then contains the usual direction to the railway company to receive
- H and forward the goods at the reduced rate in consideration whereof the respondent agrees to relieve the railway company and certain other companies and persons from all liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, delay, or detention (including detention of traders' trucks), except upon proof that such loss, damage, misdelivery, delay, or detention arose from wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants. If the note had stopped at this point I think that the word "loss" is
- I applicable both to a case of non-delivery or short delivery, and that the respondent could not have recovered unless he could prove that the loss had arisen from wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants. I agree with the opinion expressed by LUSH, J., that from the point of view of the consignee there is no difference between goods being lost and goods being not delivered. Then follows the paragraph:

"But nothing in this agreement shall exempt the company from any liability they might otherwise incur in the following cases of non-delivery, pillage, or misdelivery—that is to say: Non-delivery of any package or consignment fully and properly addressed, unless such non-delivery is due to accident to trains or fire. Provided that the company shall not be liable on proof that the same has not been caused by negligence or misconduct on the part of the company or their servants.”

An attempt was made at the trial to prove that the non-delivery had not been caused by the negligence or misconduct of the company or their servants, but this failed. The consignment was fully and properly addressed and the non-delivery was not due to accident to trains or fire.

The case, therefore, turns on the meaning of the words “non-delivery of any package or consignment.” In its ordinary sense “consignment” means the entirety or aggregate of the goods comprised in a consignment note. A consignment is not delivered to the consignee if an appreciable part of the goods comprised in the consignment note have been lost during the transit. The present case illustrates this principle. The consignment was not delivered to the respondent since there was a failure to deliver certain carcasses which on the finding of the county court judge were an appreciable part of the consignment. There was only a partial delivery and the respondent framed his claim on this basis. I am unable to hold that the ordinary meaning of consignment is not applicable where the subject-matter is non-delivery, or that in this contract it has any other than its ordinary meaning, the entirety of the goods comprised in the consignment note. No doubt, there may be non-delivery of part only of a consignment just as there may be delivery of part only of a consignment, and in my opinion, on the finding of the county court judge, there has been a non-delivery of part of a consignment in the present case. If this is the correct meaning of the term “consignment,” then the question arises whether, to use the words of BRAY, J., “the non-delivery of a consignment includes non-delivery of part of a consignment,” or, in other words, whether the condition should be read “non-delivery of any package or consignment or part of consignment.” I cannot think it is right to interpolate the words “part of a consignment” unless the interpolation is necessitated either by the special context or by the terms of the consignment note regarded as a whole. With all respect to the learned judges who have decided in favour of the respondent, it appears to me that neither the special context nor the terms of the consignment note, regarded as a whole, support the interpolation in the contract of the words “part of a consignment.” It is admitted that “package” does not include part of a package having regard to condition No. 2, which exempts pilferage from packages of goods protected otherwise than by paper or other packing readily removable by hand, provided the pilferage is pointed out to a servant of the company on or before delivery. If package does not include part of a package, it would seem to be inconsistent that in the same context consignment should be construed as including part of a consignment. The words “fully and properly addressed” which follow “consignment” are not applicable to part of a consignment any more than they would be applicable to part of a package; but in any case I am unable to hold that there is anything in the special context which can justify the interpolation of the words “part of a consignment” which the contracting parties have not used.

I should come to the same conclusion having regard to the general terms of the contract in the consignment note. Apart from condition No. 3 of the general conditions, to which I propose to refer later, I think it is difficult to read consistently exceptions No. 1 and No. 2 if the non-delivery of a consignment includes non-delivery of part of a consignment. This difficulty was evidently present to the mind of LUSH, J. Exception No. 1 includes under this head loss both in the case of non-delivery and of short delivery, and if exception No. 2 has the same ambit, then short delivery as well as non-delivery is in substance removed from the operation of exception No. 1. I do not overlook the limitation that a consignment must be fully and properly addressed and that the non-delivery must not be

A due to accident to trains or fire, but in ordinary practice a consignment is fully and properly addressed, and the losses due to accident to trains or fire would be by no means co-extensive with the losses in respect of short delivery, for which, under exception No. 1, the consignee has no claim except upon proof that the loss arose from wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants.

B Much reliance was placed in the argument on behalf of the respondent on the terms of condition No. 3 of the general conditions, and there is no doubt that this argument had much weight both in the Divisional Court and the Court of Appeal. I think that, as a matter of construction, if there is any inconsistency between the special terms of the consignment note and the general conditions on the back of the note, the special terms should prevail, but I am unable to find any inconsistency. Condition No. 3 is a rule of procedure which limits the time within which

C a claim must be made in respect of goods, for loss or damage during transit. It must be made within three days after delivery of the goods in respect of which the claim is made. Take the instance of a claim for loss from short delivery. It must be made within three days after the short delivery of the goods in respect of which it is made, this being the time at which the short delivery would come to the notice of the trader. It is not necessary in the present case to consider

D when the short delivery was complete, but the condition provides that delivery is to be considered complete at the termination of the transit as specified in condition No. 6. Condition No. 3 further provides "or in the case of non-delivery of any package or consignment within fourteen days after dispatch." A provision of this character is obviously necessary where there has been a non-delivery of a package or consignment, or, in other words, where there has been a loss of the whole

E package or consignment. In my opinion, the words "package or consignment" have the same meaning in condition No. 3 of the general conditions as in condition No. 1 on the face of the consignment note, and I think that in both cases "consignment" is used in its ordinary sense of the entirety of the goods comprised in the consignment note. If there had been a non-delivery of an inappreciable part of a consignment, I think that the principle de minimis would apply, but on this

F point the finding of the county court judge is conclusive. In my opinion the appellants succeed.

EARL LOREBURN.—The order of this House will be: The parties agreeing to dispense with a new trial and agreeing as to costs, judgment to be entered for the appellants, who have agreed to pay the respondent his cost here and below.

Solicitors: L. B. Page; Billing & Co., for Fairfax Spofforth, Bristol.

[Reported by W. E. REID, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

PUDDEPHATT v. LEITH

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Younger, J.), April 13, 14, 18, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 168; 85 L.J.Ch. 543; 114 L.T. 1159;
60 Sol. Jo. 568]

Costs—Set-off—Judgments in separate proceedings—Set-off resulting in defeat of solicitor's lien.

The court has a discretion to allow costs ordered to be paid by a party to an action to be set-off against a debt for which that party has obtained judgment against the same opponent in a separate action in another Division of the court, notwithstanding that the set-off may defeat a solicitor's lien for costs in the action in which the set-off is allowed. Prima facie a set-off should not be refused because of a solicitor's lien if, as between the parties themselves, it would be fair and just and no fraud or imposition has been practised on the solicitor by collusion between them.

David v. Rees (1), [1904] 2 K.B. 435, Reid v. Cupper (2), [1915] 2 K.B. 147, Edwards v. Hope (3) (1885), 14 Q.B.D. 922, Hall v. Ody (4) (1799), 2 Bos. & P. 28, per Lord Eldon, C.J., and Wright v. Mudie (5) (1823), 1 Sim. & St. 266, considered.

Blakey v. Latham (6) (1889), 41 Ch.D. 518, and Bake v. French (7), [1907] 1 Ch. 428, not followed.

Notes. The provisions of the R.S.C. as to costs considered in this case have all been repealed and replaced by the Supreme Court Costs Rules, 1959, r. 18 of which replaces (in different, but similar, terms) R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (21). R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 14, has been repealed, but not replaced. These changes do not appear to affect the validity of the principles stated in this case.

Considered: Knight v. Knight, [1925] All E.R.Rep. 598. Referred to: Mason v. Mason and Cottrell, [1933] All E.R.Rep. 859; Welch v. Royal Exchange Assurance (No. 2), [1939] 3 All E.R. 305; Re Debtor (No. 21 of 1950), Ex parte Petitioning Creditors v. Debtor, [1951] 1 All E.R. 600.

As to allowance by the court of a set-off despite a solicitor's lien, see 31 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 250; and for cases see 42 DIGEST 282-287.

Cases referred to:

- (1) David v. Rees, [1904] 2 K.B. 435; 73 L.J.K.B. 729; 91 L.T. 244; 52 W.R. 579; 20 T.L.R. 577; 48 Sol. Jo. 603, C.A.; Digest (Practice) 945, 4852.
- (2) Reid v. Cupper, [1915] 2 K.B. 147; 84 L.J.K.B. 573; 112 L.T. 573; 31 T.L.R. 103; 59 Sol. Jo. 144, C.A.; 42 Digest 284, 3194.
- (3) Edwards v. Hope (1885), 14 Q.B.D. 922; 54 L.J.Q.B. 379; 53 L.T. 69; 33 W.R. 672, C.A.; 42 Digest 284, 3192.
- (4) Hall v. Ody (1799), 2 Bos. & P. 28.
- (5) Wright v. Mudie (1823), 1 Sim. & St. 266; 1 L.J.O.S.Ch. 136; 57 E.R. 107; 42 Digest 285, 3204.
- (6) Blakey v. Latham (1889), 41 Ch.D. 518; 60 L.T. 624; 37 W.R. 569; 42 Digest 284, 3193.
- (7) Bake v. French, [1907] 1 Ch. 428; 76 L.J.Ch. 299; 96 L.T. 496; 51 Sol. Jo. 326; 42 Digest 286, 3216.
- (8) Taylor v. Poplum, Monke v. Taylor (1808), 15 Ves. 72; 33 E.R. 682; 42 Digest 287, 3221.
- (9) Re Harrauld, Wilde v. Walford (1884), 53 L.J.Ch. 505; 51 L.T. 441, C.A.; 42 Digest 287, 3228.
- (10) Newbiggin-by-the-Sea Gas Co. v. Armstrong (1879), 13 Ch.D. 310; 49 L.J.Ch. 231; 41 L.T. 637; 28 W.R. 217, C.A.; 42 Digest 354, 4030.
- (11) Meynall v. Morris (1911), 104 L.T. 667; 55 Sol. Jo. 480; 40 Digest (Repl.) 468, 538.

- A (12) Pringle v. Gloag (1879), 10 Ch.D. 676; 48 L.J.Ch. 380; 40 L.T. 512; 27 W.R. 574; 42 Digest 284, 3191.

Also referred to in argument :

Hassell v. Stanley, [1896] 1 Ch. 607; 65 L.J.Ch. 494; 74 L.T. 375; 44 W.R. 405; 40 Sol. Jo. 356; 42 Digest 285, 3196.

Throckmorton v. Crowley (1866), L.R. 3 Eq. 196; 40 Digest (Repl.) 435, 273.

- B Collett v. Preston (1852), 15 Beav. 458; 51 E.R. 615; 42 Digest 285, 3208.

Summons by a defendant in a Chancery action for liberty to set off costs ordered to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff against a debt, for which the defendant had been given judgment against the plaintiff in a separate King's Bench action.

The facts are set out in the judgment.

Order 65, r. 14 (since repealed and not replaced) provided :

- C "A set-off for damages or costs between parties may be allowed, notwithstanding the solicitor's lien for costs in the particular cause or matter in which the set-off is sought."

Order 65, r. 27, sub-r. 21 (now Supreme Court Costs Rules, r. 18) provided :

- D "In any case in which, under the last preceding regulation, or any other rule of court or by the order or direction of the court or judge, or otherwise, a party entitled to receive costs is liable to pay costs to any other party, the taxing officer may tax the costs such party is so liable to pay, and may adjust the same by way of deduction or set-off, or may, if he shall think fit, delay the allowance of the costs such party is entitled to receive until he has paid or tendered the costs he is liable to pay; or such officer may allow or certify the costs to be paid, and direct payment thereof, and the same may be recovered by the party entitled thereto in the same manner as costs ordered to be paid may be recovered."

H. E. Wright for the defendant.

Beebee for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

- F Apr. 18, 1916. YOUNGER, J., read the following judgment.—This is a summons by the defendant asking that he may be at liberty to set off the sum of £75 11s., being the taxed costs ordered by the judgment in this action to be paid by him to the plaintiff, against the sum of £299 7s. 2d. ordered to be paid by the plaintiff to him by a judgment in the King's Bench Division, dated Dec. 2, 1915, in an action in which he was plaintiff, and the present plaintiff was defendant.

- G The two actions arose out of the same transaction—a transaction of a loan of £2,500 by the defendant to the plaintiff, the repayment of which, with interest at the rate of 5½ per cent. per annum, was secured to the defendant by an agreement under seal dated Feb. 14, 1913, whereby the plaintiff transferred to the defendant by way of mortgage 2,500 fully paid shares of £1 each in a company called the London Cosmopolitan Mining Co., Ltd. That mortgage was preceded by what HARGANT, J., has held to be a collateral agreement in the form of a letter, addressed by the defendant to the plaintiff, in which the defendant said that the plaintiff's voting rights in virtue of the shares held in mortgage by him during the period of the loan would be untouched though the shares would be in his name and his voice might give the vote; that he would give no such vote without consulting the plaintiff; and that he would vote in all cases where a vote was necessary in respect of those shares as the plaintiff wished him to do. The plaintiff has paid no interest at all upon the loan, and on Nov. 12, 1915, there was due to the defendant in respect of arrears of interest the sum of £289 18s. 2d. On that day the defendant issued a writ against the plaintiff in the King's Bench Division claiming that amount, and on a summons under Ord. 14 judgment was on Dec. 2, 1915, given for £290 17s. 2d., with £8 10s. for costs. That judgment has not been satisfied, in whole or in part, and another half-year's interest has since become due on the mortgage. In the meantime, in November last, a general meeting of the company was approaching, and the defendant threatening and intending to vote as he thought fit in respect of the shares, and to disregard, as he had done once before, the plaintiff's expressed wishes on the subject, she on Nov. 26, 1915, commenced this action in the Chancery Division, claiming an injunction to restrain the defendant from voting upon a poll at any meeting of the company in respect of the 2,500 shares otherwise than in accordance with her directions. The plaintiff moved for an injunction accordingly; the motion was heard by SARGANT, J., on Dec. 11, 1915; it was treated as the trial of the action, and by an order of that date the learned judge granted the plaintiff an injunction in substance as claimed, ordered the defendant to pay the plaintiff her costs of the action, but gave liberty to the defendant to apply to set off such costs when taxed against the amount recovered by him against the plaintiff under the judgment in the King's Bench Division above referred to: ([1916] 1 Ch. 200). These costs have now been taxed at the sum of £75 11s., and in pursuance of the liberty so reserved to the defendant the present application is made. It should, however, be stated, as both parties agree, that the learned judge when giving that liberty in no way expressed any opinion as to what the result of the application would be, if and when it was made. It will be observed that the plaintiff, if she had been so minded, might quite appropriately have raised the issue in this action by way of counterclaim in the King's Bench action. There can, I think, be no doubt that had she done so, and had the issues on either side in that way been determined in one proceeding, as they have now been in two, the set-off asked for would have been a matter of course. It is, however, contended that the fact that the two questions have been disposed of in different actions and in different divisions, and not in one action and in one division, displaces any right to set-off which might otherwise have existed, and owing to the present state of the authorities, so far at least as the Chancery Division is concerned, the point, strange as it may seem, is one of extreme nicety, and it has been elaborately argued by counsel for the defendant, and by counsel for the plaintiff.

It is perhaps not too much to say that the difficulty is due to the decision of the Court of Appeal in David v. Rees (1), to the effect that the provisions of Ord. 65, r. 14, with regard to set-off of costs between parties are confined to cases in which the judgments for costs sought to be set off against each other are in the same action or proceedings, and do not extend to cases in which the judgment for costs are in distinct and independent litigations. The Court of Appeal in Reid v. Copper (2) has stated very clearly the grounds for questioning the correctness of that decision; but it has at the same time intimated that it is bound by it, and accordingly it can only now be reconsidered in the House of Lords. The Court of Appeal, however, in the same case has definitely laid it down that, notwithstanding the view that Ord. 65, r. 14, does not allow a set-off of costs in separate proceedings, still Edwards v. Hope (3) shows that the common law courts at least had a discretion to allow the set-off by the practice previous to the Reg. Hil. Term, 1853, r. 63, that that discretion was restored at least to the common law divisions of the High Court of Justice on the repeal of these rules, and that in the case before it the discretion of the learned judge, SCRUTTON, J., had been rightly exercised in favour of the set-off. (I will in a later portion of this judgment give my reasons for saying that the judgment of the Court of Appeal went even further than I have so far indicated. Counsel for the plaintiff, however, agreed that it went at least as far as that.) Further, it is made clear by both Edwards v. Hope (3) and David v. Rees (1) that not only does the discretion, where it exists, extend to the setting-off of costs against costs, but it extends also, in a proper case, to the setting-off of debt or damages against costs, and that, indeed, was the particular set-off allowed in the last-named case. Moreover, so far as the old courts of common law were concerned, the allowance of a set-off was not confined to cases where both actions were in the same court. In Hull v. Ody (4), a common pleas case, notable for a characteristic outburst on the part of LORD ELDON referred to later, it was stated that a set-off had even been allowed by that court between costs in a court of

A equity and costs in a court of law. It seems quite clear, therefore, that it in this case the application to set off had been made in the King's Bench action by the defendant there, instead of, as it is, in the Chancery action by the defendant to that action, there would have been an ample discretion to allow it, if the court thought it right so to do.

B Is then the same discretion denied to the Chancery Division? The reason for saying that it is based on the practice of the old Court of Chancery in this matter prior to the Judicature Act, as that practice has been interpreted since the Act, chiefly by two decisions, one of KAY, J., and the other of PARKER, J. I need, perhaps, hardly say that the objection to allowing a set-off is not really usually entertained as an objection between party and party; it is as between the solicitor of the party against whom the set-off is asked and the party claiming it, for the set-off is or may be destructive of the solicitor's lien for costs. And the practice of the old Court of Chancery, and incidentally of the other courts, turning as it did on this very point, is conveniently summarised by SIR JOHN LEACH in Wright v. Mudie (5) (1 Sim. & St. at p. 267):

D "It is clear upon the authorities that the practice of the Common Pleas, as stated in the case of Hall v. Ody (4), that the lien of the attorney for his costs is subject to the equitable claims of the parties as between themselves is not adopted by the Court of King's Bench; and LORD ELDON, then Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, expressly states it to be contrary to the practice of the Court of Chancery. In Taylor v. Popham (8) LORD ELDON states the rule of this court thus: 'That where in a cause costs may have been given in different proceedings on both sides, there the lien of the solicitor is only on the balance of costs which may be due to his client. That case is not an authority for setting off against each other the costs of different causes in this court; and still less, for setting off here against costs in the King's Bench, when it is clear that that court would not permit the set-off of costs there against the costs here.' "

F The same principle is laid down by LORD ELDON in Hall v. Ody (4) as follows (2 Bos. & P. at p. 29):

G "Finding it to be the practice of this court (the Common Pleas) that an attorney shall not take his costs out of the fund which by his diligence he has recovered for his client, where the opposite party is entitled to a set-off, it does not become me to say more than that I find it to be the settled practice with much surprise, since it stands in direct contradiction to the practice of every other court as well as to the principles of justice. In the Court of Chancery the same parties are often concerned in many suits, and I never knew the idea entertained of arranging the funds till the respective attorneys were paid their costs. However, as the attorney in this case has acted with a knowledge of the settled practice of the court, he can have no right to claim the advantage of a more just principle; and it will only remain for the court to consider whether the practice of the Court of King's Bench should not be adopted here for the future."

H It will be noticed that the practice is not in either judgment treated as one resting on a discretion to be exercised in each case, but as a definite rule of procedure. It will, however, also be noticed that the practice is treated as being the same as in the King's Bench. In that state of things KAY, J., dealt with the question in Blakey v. Latham (6). First on the general principle he says (41 Ch.D. at p. 521):

I "The rule now is settled by Ord. 65. r. 14, which is as follows: 'A set-off for damages or costs between parties may be allowed, notwithstanding the solicitor's lien for costs in the particular cause or matter in which the set-off is sought.' That gives the court a complete discretion, but the doubt seems to have been whether that applied to costs in different actions. I do not know why it should not apply to costs in different actions. The set-off for damages must apply to different actions, because damages cannot be given to the plaintiff and the defendant in the same action; and therefore as regard damages the rule prima facie means different actions, and why in the case of costs it should not also mean different actions I do not know."

And later, but not referring to the way in which the old King's Bench practice had been interpreted in Edwards v. Hope (3), he said (ibid. at p. 523):

"Before this rule which gives the court discretion [i.e., Ord. 65, r. 14], there was a right acknowledged in the Court of Chancery that the solicitor who has a lien upon the costs recovered against the other side could by that lien intercept the costs ordered to be paid to the other party," and accordingly he refused the set-off asked for, greatly as he deplored the result. Again in Bake v. French (7) PARKER, J., after deciding that Ord. 65, r. 14, did not even allow a set-off of costs payable in a consolidation action against costs receivable under an order made prior to consolidation in one of the actions which had been consolidated, proceeded as follows ([1907] 1 Ch. at p. 436):

"I must therefore deal with this motion on the footing that the consolidation does not affect the matter, and inasmuch as the rules of court I have referred to have no application to independent proceedings, I must consider the question, What would have been the practice prior to the making of those rules? It seems to me that the practice of the court, independently of those rules, was not to allow any set-off of costs in independent proceedings otherwise than subject to what is called, in the reported cases, 'the solicitor's lien for costs.' This appears, I think, from the cases of Wright v. Mudie (5) and Re Harrauld (9)."

He, like KAY, J., treated the matter as one of strict rule and not of discretion at all.

The result, therefore, prior at least to Reid v. Cupper (2) and so far as authority goes, is that while the practice in the King's Bench, and in the old Court of Chancery, was in this matter the same, still, curiously enough, the King's Bench Division had apparently a discretion in every proper case to ignore the solicitor's lien and allow the set-off, but the Chancery Division had none. Further, the King's Bench Division exercised its discretion as it did by its approval of the principles enumerated by KAY, J., in Blakey v. Latham (6), to which he, in the Chancery Division, felt himself powerless to give effect. And all this involved the extraordinary result that the Court of Appeal on an appeal from the King's Bench Division would or might allow a set-off, and on an appeal from the Chancery Division it would, under exactly similar circumstances, be compelled to refuse it. Such a state of things, the result of counsel for the plaintiff's argument, if correct would, I think, be intolerable.

The question is whether I am compelled by the authority of Blakey v. Latham (6) and Bake v. French (7) to hold that it exists. I think that Reid v. Cupper (2) shows that I am not. It appears from the judgments of all the lords justices, but specially from that of PICKFORD, L.J., that this practice with regard to set-off was really discretionary in all courts. PICKFORD, L.J., in Reid v. Cupper (2) says ([1915] 2 K.B. at pp. 155, 156):

"With regard to the second point—namely, that under those circumstances the case has to rest upon the old jurisdiction as to costs—I agree; but with regard to the second part of the proposition, that, according to the old jurisdiction of the courts, this lien must be allowed, I do not agree. I think the result of the old practice was that the courts had a discretionary power to allow this set-off, and a discretion as to the terms upon which they would allow it. The Court of King's Bench Division decided to exercise its discretion in one particular way, the Court of Common Pleas laid down a different and directly opposite rule. The Court of Chancery exercised its discretion in A the same way as the Court of King's Bench, and the Court of Exchequer exercised its discretion according to circumstances. The different courts exercised their discretion in different ways."

Now that judgment gets rid of all difficulty, and puts, if I may very respectfully say so, the whole matter upon a logical and consistent foundation. PICKFORD, L.J., adds:

B "In Edwards v. Hope (3) the Court of Appeal expressly decided the point that the courts, in exercising the old jurisdiction, exercised it with discretion as to the terms on which it was to be exercised."

That is to say, LORD ELDON's views have now been displaced by those of KAY, J., as to what is the best and most salutary rule of practice in this matter. That rule was always the rule of the old Court of Common Pleas, and, accordingly, the principle laid down by SIR GEORGE JESSEL in Newbiggin-by-the-Sea Gas Co. v. Armstrong (10) becomes applicable.

C On every ground, therefore, and notwithstanding the decision in Blakey v. Latham (6) and Bake v. French (7), I think I have a discretion in this case, and the only question that remains for determination is, how I ought to exercise it.

D In my opinion I ought to exercise it in favour of the set-off, notwithstanding the plaintiff's solicitor's lien. I have pointed out that the plaintiff's case in this action might have been raised by way of counterclaim in the King's Bench action. If it had, the set-off would have been a matter of course for reasons similar to those stated by EVE, J., in Meynall v. Morris (11). I cannot think that the result should be affected by a mere accident of procedure. Moreover, I am struck by the fact that both actions arise out of the same transaction, and although I recognise that the plaintiff's own default in the performance of her obligations under the contract cannot have seemed to SARGANT, J., sufficiently serious to disentitle her to relief in Chancery, I may still, I think, have regard to the fact that the judgment was obtained by the defendant in the King's Bench Division before the injunction was awarded, and, therefore, that the reason for refusing the set-off in Edwards v. Hope (3) does not apply. But beyond all these considerations I should wish to base this exercise of my discretion on broader grounds. Order 65, r. 14, reversing as it did the rule which had obtained in the courts of common law for nearly fifty years, and the recent judgment of the Court of Appeal to which I have referred go to show that the old views as to the sanctity of a solicitor's lien no longer obtain. As ROOKE, J., said in Hall v. Ody (4) (2 Bos. & P. at p. 29):

E "The attorney looks in the first instance to the personal security of his client, and if beyond that he can get any farther security into his hands, it is a mere casual advantage."

G And SIR GEORGE JESSEL in Pringle v. Gloag (12) says (10 Ch.D. at p. 680):

H "If a solicitor says, 'Unless I have a lien I cannot get paid,' the answer is, he should see before he undertakes a particular business for a client that that client is able to pay him for it; a solicitor is not compelled to work for an insolvent client."

I In other words, the views of KAY, J., and not those of LORD ELDON, on this subject now hold the field, and it is well, I think, that they should. And the result, I think, is that prima facie a set-off should not, owing to such a lien, be refused if as between the parties themselves it would be fair and just, and if no fraud or imposition has been practised upon the solicitor by collusion between them. That in the present case the set-off would not be fair and just as between the parties was not even suggested by counsel for the plaintiff, and accordingly I think that the set-off ought to be allowed for the amount of £75 11s., less only the costs of this summons, the defendant's costs of which will be taxed and deducted in the first instance from the £75 11s. referred to in the summons.

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co.; Hatchett-Jones & Co.

[Reported by M. H. TRUELOVE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

JOHN RUSSELL & CO., LTD. v. CAYZER, IRVINE & CO., LTD.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Haldane, Lord Sumner, Lord Parmoor and Lord Wrenbury), June 2, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 A.C. 298; 85 L.J.K.B. 1152; 115 L.T. 86; 60 Sol. Jo. 640]

Practice Service—Service out of jurisdiction—Action “properly brought” against defendant served within jurisdiction—Writ issued in England against two defendants in Scotland—Acceptance by one defendant of service of writ on agent within jurisdiction—Service of writ on other defendant out of jurisdiction—Validity—R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g).

By Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), service out of the jurisdiction of a writ of summons may be allowed where “any person out of the jurisdiction is a necessary or proper party to an action properly brought against some other person duly served within the jurisdiction.”

Where all the defendants to an action are out of the jurisdiction of the court, the action is not “properly brought against some . . . person duly served within the jurisdiction” within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), merely because some of the defendants have accepted service within the jurisdiction.

An action was brought against two defendants, both companies registered in Scotland. One defendant accepted service of the writ on an agent in England. On an application for leave to serve the other defendant out of the jurisdiction under R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), Held: leave must be refused because the action was not “properly brought” within the meaning of r. 1 (g).

Per VISCOUNT HALDANE: The root principle of the English law about jurisdiction is that the judges stand in the place of the Sovereign in whose name they administer justice.

Notes. Referred to: Tyne Improvement Comrs. v. Armement Anversois Société Anonyme, The Brabo, [1949] 1 All E.R. 294.

As to service out of the jurisdiction, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 323-328; and for cases see DIGEST (Practice) 336 et seq.

Case referred to:

(1) Clokey v. London and North Western Rail. Co., [1905] 2 I.R. 251; 39 I.L.T. 42; Digest (Practice) 266, 40.

Also referred to in argument:

Copin v. Adamson (1875), 1 Ex.D. 17; 45 L.J.Q.B. 15; 33 L.T. 560; 24 W.R. 85, C.A.; 11 Digest (Repl.) 509, 1246.

Massey v. Heynes (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 330; 57 L.J.Q.B. 521; 59 L.T. 470; 36 W.R. 834, C.A.; Digest (Practice) 308, 349.

Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Co., Ltd. v. Société des Métallurgistes (1889), 58 L.J.Q.B. 435; 60 L.T. 924; 38 W.R. 78; 5 T.L.R. 618, D.C.; 13 Digest (Repl.) 354, 1612.

Witted v. Galbraith, [1893] 1 Q.B. 577; 62 L.J.Q.B. 248; 41 W.R. 395; 37 Sol. Jo. 354; 4 R. 362; sub nom. Witted v. Pembroke Galbraith & Co., 68 L.T. 421, C.A.; Digest (Practice) 357, 705.

Montgomery, Jones & Co. v. Liebenenthal & Co., [1898] 1 Q.B. 487; 67 L.J.Q.B. 313; 78 L.T. 211; 46 W.R. 292; 14 T.L.R. 201; 42 Sol. Jo. 232, C.A.; Digest (Practice) 314, 390.

Appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal dated Feb. 21, 1916, reversing an order of ROWLATT, J., in chambers.

The plaintiffs shipped goods at Liverpool on the steamship M., owned by the first defendants, Glasgow United Shipping Co., Ltd., for carriage to Calcutta. The goods were insured under a bill of lading which contained the usual exceptions,

A including restraint of princes. At Madras the M. was requisitioned by the Indian Government, and her cargo was discharged. The second defendants, C., I. & Co., Ltd., without the knowledge or consent of the cargo-owners, loaded the goods on one of their own steamers going to Calcutta, but she was sunk by the German cruiser Emden and all her cargo lost. The first intimation which the plaintiffs received of their loss was by a letter written by the second defendants. The plaintiffs brought this action, which was in fact a test action, to have the rights of all the shippers in the same position as themselves determined, in England, against the first defendants for breach of contract and for conversion of the goods entrusted to them for carriage, and against the second defendants for trespass to the goods. Both the defendant companies were registered in Scotland and were out of the jurisdiction. The first-named defendant raised no objection to the jurisdiction and accepted service on an agent in England. The plaintiffs then applied ex parte for leave to issue a concurrent writ, with liberty to serve the same out of the jurisdiction on the second defendants under Ord. 11, r. 1 (g).

The second defendants, on being served, applied that the writ should be set aside.

ROWLATT, J., in chambers refused the application, but the Court of Appeal (SWINFEN EADY, PICKFORD, and BANKES, L.JJ.) allowed the application on the ground that the action was not "properly brought" within the meaning of the rule.

Adair Roche, K.C., and R. A. Wright for the plaintiffs.

Maurice Hill, K.C., and Stuart Bevan, for the second defendants, were not called on to argue.

VISCOUNT HALDANE stated the facts, and continued: The real question is whether the action is one which is properly brought against some other person duly served within the jurisdiction within the meaning of this rule [i.e., R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), the relevant part of which is printed above].

I do not think that the case is one in which any of the authorities which have been cited are decisive. The whole question is one as to the construction of the rule, and, in order to construe the rule, it is necessary to see on what jurisdiction depends apart from the rule. It is quite true that jurisdiction can be given by accepting service—that is to say, by consent. The root principle of the English law about jurisdiction is that the judges stand in the place of the Sovereign in whose name they administer justice, and that, therefore, whoever is served with the King's writ, and can be compelled consequently to submit to the decree made, is a person over whom the courts have jurisdiction. In other countries that is different; in Scotland jurisdiction is to a considerable extent made dependent on the presence within the jurisdiction of property of the defender who may be outside the jurisdiction. But we are concerned with the rule based on the English jurisprudence, and that jurisprudence is prima facie as I have stated. It has been extended by the rules which have been made as to service out of the jurisdiction. These rules have been made with scrupulous care because there arose some time ago a conflict between the Scottish courts and the English courts about jurisdiction, and the rules were framed with a view of preventing such conflicts from arising again. Under r. 1 (e), where a contract is made outside the jurisdiction and a breach takes place within the jurisdiction, an action may be brought and service out of the jurisdiction allowed against the defendant, provided he is not a defendant ordinarily domiciled or resident in Scotland or Ireland. I cite that merely for the purpose of showing how carefully these things have been dealt with in the rules, and not for any other reason, because I think we have nothing to do with it directly here. The whole question in the present case arises under r. 1 (g), to which I have referred, and the question is whether the action has been properly brought within the meaning of the rule which I have read.

Although, as I have pointed out, the acceptance of service confers jurisdiction, it does not necessarily make it a duty of the court to decide the case. The sphere of jurisdiction and the sphere of the right which the acceptance of service confers upon the court are not coterminous. For example, the court may decline jurisdiction on the ground that it is contrary to its duty to entertain it. If the action relates to matrimonial status, then, according to well-settled principles of private international law—well settled, at any rate, so far as this country is concerned—the courts will now refuse to interfere unless the parties are domiciled—the husband, at any rate in this country. If the action relates to land abroad, similarly the courts decline jurisdiction, because they cannot go into questions of title under foreign law. Again, if a foreign Sovereign is sued, although it might be possible to serve him within this country, the court would decline to regard the service as giving rise to jurisdiction, unless, indeed, the foreign Sovereign chose voluntarily to submit. These things show that jurisdiction and service are not coterminous, and, consequently, when an action is spoken of as properly brought, it may well be that something more than the mere question of rights arising out of the fact of service was in the contemplation of those who framed that rule. I think that “properly brought” refers to something more than the mere fact that one of the parties has been served, and in that way jurisdiction has been obtained over that person. It seems to me by its context to imply considerations affecting the other person out of the jurisdiction as well as the person out of the jurisdiction who has been served by leave. Consequently you have to look and ask yourself whether when the action was brought it was an action that was properly brought within the rule interpreted in that wider sense.

The action was brought when the writ was issued, and the writ was marked, as SWINFEN EADY, L.J., in his judgment in the Court of Appeal points out, as “Not for Service out of the Jurisdiction”; consequently there was no action “properly brought” against anybody out of the jurisdiction at that time, and it was not until a later stage, when the Glasgow Shipping Co., one of the defendants, came in and accepted service that there was an action brought at all against them. I do not think that in the wider meaning of “properly brought” the rule has been complied with as regards Cayzer, Irvine & Co. It seems to me that the application is therefore one which the courts have no jurisdiction to entertain; they certainly have none at common law; and, if I am right in my construction of the words “properly brought,” they have none under this rule. I am therefore of opinion that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

LORD SUMNER.—I also think that the appeal fails. It is not enough for the plaintiff to be able to point out when he applies to the court or judge under Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), for leave to make a person out of the jurisdiction a party, that there is then in existence an action at the time when the person out of the jurisdiction is not a party to it at all which can be said to be “properly brought” in this sense, that the other person who is the defendant to it cannot say or complain that it has been improperly brought by reason of the fact that some irregularity in the procedure or some objection which he could have taken have been waived by him. It seems to me that the words “properly brought” enure to the protection of the person out of the jurisdiction who is proposed to be served with process, that his protection is not to be found exclusively in the words “a necessary or proper party,” and that, in the language of PICKFORD, L.J., in the court below, the persons who are already defendants in the action, although they may submit to the jurisdiction, and, if so, cannot themselves raise any objection, cannot by that procedure affect the rights of third parties. The party out of the jurisdiction, in my view, is entitled to that protection before he is brought into a proceeding to which he would normally remain a stranger, that the procedure laid down in the rules and orders shall have been followed, and not merely that that procedure should have been put in force against someone whose action does not bind him thanks to the consent of that prior defendant.

It is unnecessary to express any opinion as to the effect of the words “duly served within the jurisdiction,” but, if I had a doubt as to the construction of the words “properly brought,” I should certainly have expected to find that the

A words "duly served" could be so construed as to give the party out of the jurisdiction the same protection.

LORD PARMOOR.—I concur. I think that the words "properly brought" clearly enure to the protection of the person out of the jurisdiction, and in other respects I should like to adopt what was said by PICKFORD, L.J., with whose judgment I entirely agree.

B LORD WRENBURY.—In this case the appellants, John Russell & Co., Ltd., brought an action against two defendants, describing them both as "of Glasgow, in Scotland"; they were, therefore, both parties resident out of the jurisdiction. I doubt myself whether such a writ ought to be sealed without leave. I find that in a case in Ireland—Clokey v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1)—PALLES, C.B., in giving judgment, said this ([1905] 2 I.R. at p. 257):

C "In England the rule is that if the defendant's address as given in the writ is a foreign one, the clerk in the Record and Writ Office will not seal the writ unless an order giving liberty to issue it is produced."

D That was said after certain cases in England had been cited to the court. I have not had the opportunity of referring to them and seeing how far they justify the observations made by the Chief Baron. I have simply forbore from doing so because it is not necessary to pursue it in this case, inasmuch as the writ in point of fact was sealed. I express my doubt whether such writ ought to be sealed without leave. The writ, however, was sealed, and what happened was that one of the two Scottish defendants, the Glasgow Shipping Co., accepted service and entered an appearance. The question for determination is whether under those circumstances Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), can be brought into operation so as to bring the other defendants who are out of the jurisdiction within the jurisdiction of the court. That turns upon the proper construction of the words of Ord. 11, r. 1 (g): Was this an action "properly brought" against some person other than Cayzer, Irvine & Co. "duly served within the jurisdiction"? Those words, to my mind, do not mean founded upon a good cause of action. Many an action properly brought may turn out to be founded upon no good cause of action. It may break down on the facts; it will nevertheless have been properly brought in the sense that a good cause of action was alleged. "Properly brought" in this rule means, I think, or at any rate includes, brought with a due observance of the process of the court against a person who could properly be served in that court under the process of the court, and not because he chooses voluntarily to submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court. That, of course, has not happened here. The exact question for determination is this: Can one defendant by consent by submitting to the jurisdiction confer jurisdiction as against another defendant? In my opinion he cannot. I think the action mentioned in Ord. 11, r. 1 (g), as one "properly brought" means an action brought by a plaintiff against a defendant by virtue of the user of the process of the court, not by user of the process with the addition of a voluntary submission by the defendant to the jurisdiction of the court.

H That being so, it seems to me that the case is not within the rule and that, therefore, this appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Ballantyne, Clifford & Hett; Coward & Hawksley, Sons & Chance.

[Reported by W. E. REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re MELLISH. DAY v. WITHERS

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Neville, J.), March 30, April 5, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 1 Ch. 562; 85 L.J.Ch. 433; 114 L.T. 991]

Will—Class gift—Ascertainment of class—Time—Gift, at death of survivor of two life-tenants of income, to persons entitled as on intestacy of first life tenant.

A testator gave a fund in trust to pay the income to G. for life and then to G.'s wife, E., for life, and at the death of the survivor to the persons who at the decease of such survivor should be of the blood of G. and of kin to him, and who under the statutes of distribution of intestates' effects would be entitled to his personal estate if he were dead unmarried and intestate. In the event E. survived G. for many years.

Held: the class representing the next-of-kin of G. was an artificial class, to be ascertained as at the death of G. if G. had died at the same date as E.

Re McFee, McFee v. Toner (1) (1910), 103 L.T. 210, and Re Helsby, Neate v. Bozie (2) (1914), 112 L.T. 539, followed.

Bullock v. Downes (3) (1860), 9 H.L.Cas. 1, distinguished.

Notes. Approved: Hutchinson v. National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, [1920] All E.R.Rep. 701. Referred to: Re Gansloser's Will Trusts, Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China v. Chillingworth, [1951] 2 All E.R. 231.

As to classes to be ascertained at time shown by will, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 266, 267. as to ascertainment when the class is described by reference to Statutes of Distribution, see ibid. 319, 320; and for cases see 44 DIGEST 879-886.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re McFee, McFee v. Toner (1910), 79 L.J.Ch. 676; 103 L.T. 210; 44 Digest 881, 7384.
- (2) Re Helsby, Neate v. Bozie (1914), 84 L.J.Ch. 682; 112 L.T. 539; 44 Digest 886, 7426.
- (3) Bullock v. Downes (1860), 9 H.L.Cas. 1; 3 L.T. 194; 11 E.R. 627, H.L.; 44 Digest 876, 7328.
- (4) Re Sturge and Great Western Rail. Co. (1881), 19 Ch.D. 444; 51 L.J.Ch. 185; 30 W.R. 456; sub nom. Sturge v. Sturge, Sturge to Great Western Rail. Co., 45 L.T. 787; 44 Digest 881, 7383.

Originating Summons.

By his will, dated in 1880, James Mellish gave the sum of £1,200 to his trustees in trust to invest and pay the income to his son George Mellish during his life, and after his death to pay the income to the latter's wife, Emma Mellish, during her life

"And from and immediately after the death of the survivor of them upon trust for the person or persons who at the decease of such survivor as aforesaid shall be of the blood of my said son George Mellish and of kin to him and who under the statutes of distribution of intestates' effects would be entitled to his personal estate if he were dead unmarried and intestate, such persons if more than one to take in the portions prescribed by the same statutes.

James Mellish died on Mar. 23, 1880, leaving George Mellish, two other sons, and three daughters surviving. George Mellish died on June 16, 1882. Emma Mellish survived him and died on Sept. 30, 1915.

At her death the trustees of the will of James Mellish had to ascertain the class of persons who were entitled to share in the gift over of the £1,200. Three

- A alternative suggestions were put forward: (i) That the class of next-of-kin should be ascertained once and for all at the death of George Mellish; (ii) that it should be then ascertained, but only those should share who were living at the death of Emma Mellish; (iii) that the class was an artificial class, to be ascertained at the death of "such survivor." In the event of the last alternative being adopted, nephews and nieces of George Mellish, born since his death, would be included.
- B This summons was accordingly taken out to determine the issue.

Greenland for the trustees of James Mellish's will.

Baden Fuller, Bovill, and Bompas for the various defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

- C Apr. 5, 1916. NEVILLE, J., read the following judgment.—If an ultimate gift after failure of other limitations is in any form equivalent to this, "to my next-of-kin according to the statutes as though I had died intestate and unmarried," it appears to me fairly obvious that the testator intends to designate those who were next-of-kin at his death, and this is in accordance with the rule laid down in Bullock v. Downes (3). Even in this case it is to be observed that the gift does not take effect by operation of the statutes, which can only apply if the testator did die intestate.
- D Some of the reasoning in the reported cases, based on the necessity of bringing yourself within the statutes, seems to me overstrained, for in any hypothetical intestacy the gift is merely referential. On the other hand, it appears to me that if the testator says in effect "to those who at the date of the event upon the happening of which the gift over takes effect or at any other future date are my next-of-kin according to the statutes as if I had then died intestate and unmarried," he is indicating what has been called an artificial class, to be ascertained at the date of the happening of the event. The rule in Bullock v. Downes (3) is expressly stated to be prima facie, and I do not think it precludes the court from giving effect to what it finds to be the intention of the testator expressed by the words of the will. It appears to me also that when the testator, as in this case, resorts to an elaborate explanation with regard to what he intends, it is probably with a view to expressing something different from what would result from a bare reference to his next-of-kin according to the statutes, and, if what he does mean is reasonably plain, there is nothing in Bullock v. Downes (3) to prevent effect being given to it.
- E
- F

- G The testator, in the will which I have to construe, gave a sum of £1,200 out of his residue to trustees on trust to invest and to pay the income to his son George Mellish for life, and after his death to his wife for life, and after the death of the survivor of them on trust for

- H "the person or persons who at the decease of such survivor as aforesaid shall be of the blood of my said son George Mellish and of kin to him and who under the statutes of distribution of intestates' estates would be entitled to his personal estate if he were dead unmarried and intestate, such persons if more than one to take in the proportions prescribed by the same statutes."

- I Three constructions of these words have been suggested: (i) That the class of next-of-kin is to be ascertained once and for all at the death of George Mellish; (ii) that the class is to be ascertained at the death of George Mellish, but those only take who are living "at the decease of such survivor"; and (iii) that the class is a so-called artificial class to be ascertained "at the decease of such survivor." I think the meaning of the words used is tolerably plain. The testator appears to me to be referring to a class of persons living at the death of George Mellish, composed of persons who not only fulfil the condition "of the blood of George Mellish and of kin to him," but also that of being persons who would take under the statutes upon the death of George Mellish unmarried and intestate at the date when the gift takes effect, and the testator adds that the persons fulfilling these conditions.

should there be more than one, are to take in the proportion prescribed by the same statutes. I think the context here requires the words "if he were dead" to be interpreted "if he had then died." The words used in Bullock v. Downes (8) were as follows:

"Such persons of the blood or next-of-kin to me as would by virtue of the statutes have become and been then entitled thereto in case I had died intestate."

The only words there which it seems to me could possibly take the case out of the prima facie rule are the words "and been then entitled," and, having regard to the context, these words appear to me to refer rather to the survivors of a class than to any limitation of the class itself which had been previously determined. They were not deemed adequate, however, to limit the gift to the survivors of the original class.

I have been referred to a decision by HALL, V.C., in Re Sturge and Great Western Rail. Co. (4), which was followed by JOYCE, J., in Re McFee, McFee v. Toner (1), and a later decision of EYE, J., in Re Helsby, Neate v. Bozie (2), and I am unable to distinguish any one of these cases from the case before me in any sense favourable to the application of the rule in Bullock v. Downes (3). The words of the will in the last case were,

"such one or more of the persons who at the time of my daughter's decease shall be my next-of-kin according to the statutes of the distribution of intestates' effects," and it was held that an artificial class to be ascertained at the daughter's death was intended. These cases are binding on me, and I must follow them. They are in accordance with the view which I should myself take of the construction of the present will. I must, therefore, declare that the class is to be ascertained at the date of the death of George Mellish, as if he had died at the date of the death of his wife, Emma Mellish.

Solicitors: Loughborough, Gedge, Nisbet & Drew, for Pearless, Sons & De Rougemont, East Grinstead.

[Reported by G. HAYES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A ASIATIC PETROLEUM CO., LTD. v. ANGLO-PERSIAN OIL CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady and Bankes, L.JJ.), March 6, 13, 14, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 1 K.B. 822; 85 L.J.K.B. 1075; 114 L.T. 645;
32 T.L.R. 367; 60 Sol. Jo. 417]

B Discovery—Production of document—Production contrary to public interest—Document not official document—Correspondence relating to contract between company and government Department in wartime.

The rule protecting documents from discovery on the ground that disclosure would be injurious to the public interest is not limited to State papers, reports, minutes, and other official documents or correspondence. It applies, for instance, to correspondence between a company and its agent abroad relating to a contract, made in wartime, between the company and a government Department. The foundation of the rule is that the information cannot be disclosed without injury to the public interest, and not that the documents are confidential or official, which alone is no reason for their non-production. If the production of the document would be injurious to the public service the general public interest must be considered paramount to the individual interest of the suitor.

D Notes. In this case the court itself inspected the documents, but the House of Lords has since ruled in Duncan v. Cammel Laird & Co., [1942] 1 All E.R. 587 at p. 593, that where a minister of the Crown claims privilege, the court will accept his statement and ought not to examine the documents to see if his claim is well founded. See also the Crown Proceedings Act, 1947, s. 28 (6 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 66).

E Considered: Robinson v. State of South Australia (No. 2), [1931] All E.R.Rep. 333; Spigelman v. Hocken, Goldblatt v. Hocken (1933), 150 L.T. 256. Referred to: Rowell v. Pratt, [1938] A.C. 101; Duncan v. Cammel Laird & Co., [1942] 1 All E.R. 587.

F As to protection of documents from discovery on the ground of public interest, see 12 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 53-55; and for cases see 18 DIGEST (Repl.) 139-144.

Cases referred to:

- G (1) Smith v. East India Co. (1841), 1 Ph. 50; 11 L.J.Ch. 71; 6 Jur. 1; 41 E.R. 550, L.C.; 18 Digest (Repl.) 142, 1276.
(2) Hennessy v. Wright (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 509; 57 L.J.Q.B. 530; 59 L.T. 323; 53 J.P. 52; 4 T.L.R. 597, D.C.; 18 Digest (Repl.) 141, 1268.
(3) Beatson v. Skene (1860), 5 H. & N. 838; 29 L.J.Ex. 430; 2 L.T. 378; 6 Jur.N.S. 780; 8 W.R. 544; 22 Digest (Repl.) 386, 4148.

H Appeal by the plaintiffs from an order of SCRUTTON, J., at chambers.

I The plaintiffs' claim was for damages (i) for alleged breach of a contract by the defendants to supply to the plaintiffs a cargo of crude oil to be loaded f.o.b. on board the plaintiffs' steamship Cardium at Abadan in the Persian Gulf; and (ii) for having ordered the Cardium when she arrived at Abadan on Feb. 7, 1915, to receive the cargo to proceed to Tarahan without having loaded the cargo. By their defence the defendants stated that as to the alleged non-delivery of crude oil the contract if made was a contract expressly or by implication for the supply of crude oil brought to Abadan by means of a pipe laid from the oil-producing districts of Persia to the defendants' tanks at Abadan, and to the knowledge of the plaintiffs the whole of the crude oil, from time to time received by the defendants at Abadan, was obtained from the said districts by means of the said pipe line; that the defendants were to the plaintiffs' knowledge under contract to supply to divers persons, including the Admiralty, large quantities of crude oil or its derivatives to an extent that could only be fulfilled so long as a constant supply of crude oil was being delivered through the said pipe line; that accordingly it was an implied term and/or the substratum of the contract that the pipe line should continue to exist in a condition fit to carry and deliver crude oil; and that on or about Feb. 5, 1915, and prior to the date for the delivery of the crude oil which had been sold by the defendants to the plaintiffs, the pipe line was cut by native tribes, believed to have been incited thereto by the King's enemies, and the defendants' supplies of crude oil were totally cut off during all material times, and the contract accordingly became impossible of performance and its substratum was destroyed. Further, or in the alternative, as to the alleged non-delivery, the defendants produced from crude oil delivered at Abadan large quantities of oil fuel for the use of His Majesty's Fleet, and the said crude oil and its derivative fuel oil was war material or warlike stores; and upon the interruption of the pipe line the defendants were directed by the Admiralty to reserve for the use of the Admiralty the whole of the crude oil then at Abadan, as the same might be required for conversion into fuel oil, the said directions having been given under the Defence of the Realm Acts and Regulations. The said non-delivery was due to the interruption of the pipe line and/or to the directions of the Admiralty. As to the alleged diversion of the steamship Cardium, the defendants denied that they caused the steamship to proceed to Tarahan, and alternatively, with a denial of liability, they brought into court £2,300 as sufficient to satisfy the plaintiffs' claim in respect thereof. The defendants by their secretary made an affidavit of documents, para. 4 of which was as follows:

"The defendants have also in their possession two documents . . . (i) a contract made between the defendant company and the Board of Admiralty; (ii) copy of a letter from the defendant company to their agents in Persia in the month of February, 1915, dealing with the progress of the campaign in Persia, and the policy, views, and intentions of the authorities, including the said Board of Admiralty, in relation thereto. I am informed by Mr. J. C. Clarke of the Navy Contracts Department of the Admiralty and believe that the said documents have been read and considered by the Secretary of the Admiralty, and the said Mr. J. C. Clarke has on behalf of the said Secretary of the Admiralty instructed the defendant company not to produce or disclose the said documents on the grounds, having regard to their confidential nature, of the interest of the State and of the possible assistance to the enemy should the contents thereof become known. In consequence of the said instructions the defendant company object to produce the said documents."

Paragraph 5 was as follows:

"With regard to the documents referred to in part 3 of the said schedule . . . the defendant company object to produce and claim the right to seal up or otherwise cover up the portions indicated in the said part 3 of the said schedule. I am informed by the said Mr. J. C. Clarke and believe that the said documents have been read and considered by the Secretary of the Admiralty, and the said Mr. J. C. Clarke has on behalf of the said Secretary of the Admiralty instructed the defendant company not to produce or disclose the said portions of the said documents on the grounds that the said portions relate to the progress of the said campaign in Persia and the policy, views, and intentions of the authorities, including the said Board of Admiralty, in relation thereto, and to the position of the said Board with regard to their supplies of fuel oil, and that production or disclosure of such portions of the said documents would accordingly be detrimental to the interests of the State and be of possible assistance to the enemy should the same become known."

The documents referred to in part 3 of the schedule were three cablegrams dated respectively Feb. 7, 8, and 10, 1915, from Messrs. Strick, Scott & Co., who were the defendants' agents in Persia to the defendant company. The plaintiffs applied to SCRUTTON, J., for an order that the defendants should give inspection of the documents referred to in paras. 4 and 5 of the affidavit of documents to the plaintiffs and their solicitors, and permit them to peruse the same and to take copies

A thereof. The secretary of the defendant company made an affidavit in opposition which, so far as material, stated as follows :

“2. The defendant company are large refiners of oil with a refinery at Abadan, in the Persian Gulf, and are the owners of a pipe line for conveying crude oil from the Persian oilfields to Abadan, and as such refiners produce large quantities of fuel oil suitable for the use of His Majesty's fleet. 3. In B 1914 the Board of Admiralty, being desirous of ensuring an adequate supply of fuel oil for His Majesty's fleet in times of war independent of the goodwill of neutral countries, procured that by a public and general statute (Anglo-Persian Oil Co. (Acquisition of Capital) Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 37) the C Treasury should be empowered to subscribe for share or loan capital of the company out of the public funds, and the Treasury accordingly did so subscribe the amount of £2,000,000, and the interest of the Board of Admiralty in the company and its business is directly represented by two directors nominated by the Treasury. 4. At or about the time of the passing of the Act the Board of Admiralty entered into a contract with the defendant company for the supply of fuel oil in peace and in war, and this contract is one of the documents D which I have been directed by the secretary of the Admiralty to decline to produce. 5. The other documents, the whole or part of which I have been directed to refuse to produce, all passed at or about the time when the pipe line of the defendant company had been broken by hostile natives, and at the time when the campaign in Persia in the same neighbourhood was in progress —namely, in February, 1915, and by reason of the interest of the Board of Admiralty in the maintenance of a supply of fuel oil as aforesaid, and by E reason of the close association of the defendant company with the Board the defendant company from time to time receive confidential information from the Board as to the progress of the campaign, and as to the hopes and intentions of the authorities in reference thereto, and such information is given to the defendant company for the purpose of assisting them in maintaining the supply of fuel oil and to enable the defendant company to keep their local F agents in Persia properly instructed. 6. The letter from the defendant company to their agents in Persia, referred to in para. 4 of the affidavit of documents, discloses upon the face of it that it is in part a copy of confidential cablegrams sent to the India Office by their official representatives in Persia, and disclosed by the India Office to the defendant company, and in part G comments by the defendant company upon the information therein contained. 7. The only portions of the cablegrams from Strick, Scott & Co. to the defendant company dated Feb. 7 and 10, 1915, respectively and not disclosed set out the actual quantity of fuel oil available upon the said dates for the purpose of the Board of Admiralty.”

H SCRUTTON, J., made an order that the application be adjourned to the judge at the trial, and he indorsed the summons as follows :

“I desire to state that having seen the documents, I think the government may be right in the view that they ought not to be produced to others, and I will not take the responsibility of ordering them to be produced against the wishes of the government.”

I The plaintiffs appealed by leave.

Roche, K.C., and Stuart Bevan for the plaintiffs.

Sir John Simon, K.C., and O'Hagan for the defendants.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—This is an appeal from an order of SCRUTTON, J., adjourning to the judge at the trial an application by the plaintiffs for the production of certain documents. The defendants resist the application on the ground that their production would be against the public interest. [His LORDSHIP then referred to the pleadings and the Act of 1914.] The first document of which production is asked is the contract between the Board of Admiralty and the defendant company, but counsel for the plaintiffs do not now press for production of it. The other documents are a letter dated Feb. 12, 1915, from the defendant company to their agents in Persia, and three cablegrams, dated Feb. 7, 8, and 10, from the defendants' agents in Persia to the defendants. The plaintiffs are especially desirous of having the letter produced, and although they ask for production of the cablegrams, they do not attach so much importance to them. It will be observed that all these documents passed within a few days of the cutting of the pipe line, which is alleged to have taken place on Feb. 5. In the affidavit of the secretary of the defendant company in opposition to the application for inspection the letter is dealt with in this way. [His Lordship then read paras. 5 and 6 of the affidavit.] In his original affidavit of documents the secretary of the defendant company said that the letter and the cablegrams had been considered by the secretary of the Admiralty. [His Lordship then read para. 4 of the affidavit, and said that a similar statement was made in para. 5 as to the cablegrams.] The proper officer of the Admiralty has, therefore, expressed an opinion to Mr. Clarke, who has informed the defendants of it, that these documents cannot be produced without prejudice to the public service, and that in the public interest an order for their production ought not to be made.

It was urged by the plaintiffs that the rule protecting documents from discovery, on the ground that disclosure would be injurious to the public interests, was limited to State papers, reports, minutes, and other official documents or correspondence, and could not be held to extend to a letter from the defendants to their agents in Persia, or to cablegrams from the agents to the defendant company. Although the instances in which documents have been held to be protected from discovery on the broad principle of State policy and public convenience have usually been cases of public official documents of a political or administrative character, yet the rule is not limited to these documents. The foundation of the rule is that the information cannot be disclosed without injury to the public interests, and not that the documents are confidential or official, which alone is no reason for their non-production: see Smith v. East India Co. (1); Hennessy v. Wright (2). If the production of the document would be injurious to the public service, the general public interest must be considered paramount to the individual interest of the suitor: see Bealson v. Skene (3) (5 H. & N. at p. 853). The learned judge from whom the present appeal is brought has himself perused the documents and expressed an opinion upon them [as to this see Notes, ante p. 637] and refused to order production at this stage. We see no reason for overruling the discretion thus exercised. The question of production will arise again at the trial. Before that date the Board of Admiralty, or the Secretary of the Admiralty, will doubtless carefully consider—and should be prepared at the trial to say—whether any further discovery of the documents in question can be given without injuriously affecting the public interest, or whether some inspection cannot properly be given, limited as to the persons to whom given, and upon satisfactory assurances with regard to the information being treated as confidential and not to be further disclosed. But this is a matter for the Board of Admiralty or the Secretary to consider.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Waltons & Co.; Ashurst, Morris, Crisp & Co.

[Reported by EDWARD J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

Re SUAREZ. SUAREZ v. SUAREZ

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Warrington and Scrutton, L.JJ.), November 19, 20, December 5, 1917]

[Reported [1918] 1 Ch. 176; 87 L.J.Ch. 173; 118 L.T. 279;
34 T.L.R. 127; 62 Sol. Jo. 158]

B

Constitutional Law—Diplomatic privilege—Waiver—Need for consent of foreign Sovereign—Waiver by submission to jurisdiction of English courts—Termination of privilege—Period of grace.

C

The exemption from legal process accorded to the minister accredited to the British Court of any Sovereign or State may be waived by the Sovereign or head of the State or by the minister himself with the permission of the Sovereign or head of State. Waiver may be effected by the minister submitting to the jurisdiction of the English courts.

D

The exemption ceases on the termination of the appointment of the minister to the British Court, but it will continue for a reasonable time thereafter in order that the minister may wind-up the affairs of the legation and transfer them to his successor.

Constitutional Law—Diplomatic privilege—Termination—Evidence—Foreign Office letter.

A letter under the hand of an assistant secretary of the Foreign Office

E

Held: to be sufficient evidence of the fact stated therein, namely, that at the date of the letter a named person had ceased to be the minister of a foreign State accredited to the British Court, and that, accordingly, his name had been removed from the diplomatic list.

F

Notes. Considered: Dickinson v. Del Solar, [1929] All E.R.Rep. 139. Referred to: Engelke v. Musmann, [1928] All E.R.Rep. 18; R. v. A.B., [1941] 1 K.B. 454. As to diplomatic privilege, see 7 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 267 et seq.; and for cases see 11 DIGEST (Repl.) 628 et seq. For Diplomatic Privileges Act, 1708, see 4 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 591.

Cases referred to:

G

(1) Triquet v. Bath (1764), 3 Burr. 1478; 1 Wm. Bl. 471; 97 E.R. 936; 11 Digest (Repl.) 632, 555.

H

(2) Vivcash v. Becker (1814), 3 M. & S. 284; 105 E.R. 619; 11 Digest (Repl.) 633, 573.

I

(3) Novello v. Toogood (1823), 1 B. & C. 554; 2 Dow. & Ry.K.B. 833; 1 L.J.O.S.K.B. 181; 107 E.R. 204; 11 Digest (Repl.) 632, 561.

(4) Taylor v. Best (1854), 14 C.B. 487; 8 State Tr.N.S. 317; 23 L.J.C.P. 89; 22 L.T.O.S. 287; 18 Jur. 402; 2 W.R. 259; 2 C.L.R. 1717; 139 E.R. 201; 11 Digest (Repl.) 629, 517.

(5) Magdalena Steam Navigation Co. v. Martin (1859), 2 F. & E. 94; 28 L.J.Q.B. 310; 34 L.T.O.S. 30; 5 Jur.N.S. 1260; 7 W.R. 593; 121 E.R. 36; 11 Digest (Repl.) 628, 513.

(6) The Parlement Belge (1880), 5 P.D. 197; 42 L.T. 273; 28 W.R. 642; 4 Asp.M.L.C. 234, C.A.; 11 Digest (Repl.) 628, 516.

(7) Mighell v. Sultan of Johore, [1894] 1 Q.B. 149; 63 L.J.Q.B. 593; 70 L.T. 64; 58 J.P. 244; 10 T.L.R. 115; 9 R. 447, C.A.; 11 Digest (Repl.) 615, 435.

(8) Barbuits Case (1737), Cas. temp. Talb. 281; 25 E.R. 777, L.C.; 11 Digest (Repl.) 634, 582.

(9) Wilson v. McIntosh, [1894] A.C. 129; 63 L.J.P.C. 49; 70 L.T. 536; 6 R. 429, P.C.; 38 Digest (Repl.) 887, *993.

(10) Tatham v. Parker (1855), 1 Sm. & G. 506; 1 Eq. Rep. 257; 22 L.J.Ch. 903; 25 L.T.O.S. 22; 1 Jur.N.S. 992; 3 W.R. 347; 65 E.R. 221; 21 Digest 603, 1903.

- (11) Hyde v. Hyde (1888), 13 P.D. 166; 57 L.J.P. 89; 59 L.T. 529; 36 W.R. 708; 4 T.L.R. 586, C.A.; 21 Digest 600, 1855. A
- (12) Allen v. Allen (1885), 10 P.D. 187; 54 L.J.P. 77; 33 W.R. 826; 21 Digest 597, 1807.
- (13) R. v. Wigand, [1913] 2 K.B. 419; 109 L.T. 111; sub nom. Re Wigand, R. v. Wigand, 82 L.J.K.B. 735; 29 T.L.R. 509, D.C.; 21 Digest 597, 1809.
- (14) Musurus Bey v. Gadban, [1894] 2 Q.B. 352; 63 L.J.Q.B. 621; 71 L.T. 51; 42 W.R. 545; 10 T.L.R. 493; 38 Sol. Jo. 511; 9 R. 519, C.A.; 11 Digest (Repl.) 629, 523. B
- (15) Foster v. Globe Venture Syndicate, Ltd., [1900] 1 Ch. 811; 69 L.J.Ch. 375; 82 L.T. 253; 44 Sol. Jo. 314; 22 Digest 143, 1298.
- (16) New Zealand Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Société des Ateliers et Chantiers de France, [1917] 2 K.B. 717; 87 L.J.K.B. 13; 117 L.T. 71; 33 T.L.R. 545; 14 Asp.M.L.C. 108, C.A.; affirmed [1918-19] All E.R.Rep. 552; [1919] A.C. 1; 87 L.J.K.B. 746; 118 L.T. 731; 34 T.L.R. 400; 62 Sol. Jo. 519; 14 Asp.M.L.C. 291, H.L.; 17 Digest (Repl.) 275, 809. C
- (17) President and Governors of Magdalen Hospital v. Knotts (1879), 4 App. Cas. 324; 48 L.J.Ch. 579; 40 L.T. 466; 43 J.P. 460; 27 W.R. 602, H.L.; 32 Digest 440, 1105. D
- (18) South African Republic v. Compagnie Franco-Belge du Chemin de Fer du Nord, [1898] 1 Ch. 190; 77 L.T. 555; 46 W.R. 151; 14 T.L.R. 65; 42 Sol. Jo. 66; 1 Digest (Repl.) 53, 398.
- (19) Re Tuck, Murch v. Loosemore, [1906] 1 Ch. 692; 75 L.J.Ch. 497; 94 L.T. 597; 22 T.L.R. 425, C.A.; 16 Digest 50, 534. E

Also referred to in argument:

- Gye v. Felton* (1813), 4 Taunt. 876; 128 E.R. 577; 42 Digest 656, 652.
- United States v. Benner* (1830), 1 Baldwin, 240.
- Knill v. Dumergue*, [1911] 2 Ch. 199; 80 L.J.Ch. 708; 105 L.T. 178; 27 T.L.R. 525; 55 Sol. Jo. 648, C.A.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 565, 170.
- Foster v. Usherwood* (1877), 3 Ex.D. 1; 47 L.J.Q.B. 30; 37 L.T. 389; 26 W.R. 91, C.A.; 16 Digest 118, 167. F
- Re Aylmer, Ex parte Bischoffsheim* (1887), 20 Q.B.D. 258; 57 L.J.Q.B. 168; 36 W.R. 231; 4 T.L.R. 174, C.A.; 16 Digest 119, 169.
- Duke of Brunswick v. King of Hanover* (1844), 6 Beav. 1; 6 State Tr.N.S. 33; 13 L.J.Ch. 107; 2 L.T.O.S. 306; 8 Jur. 253; 49 E.R. 724; affirmed (1848), 2 H.L.Cas. 1; 9 E.R. 993, H.L.; 1 Digest (Repl.) 60, 438.
- Re Lumley, Ex parte Cathcart*, [1894] 2 Ch. 271; 63 L.J.Ch. 435; 42 W.R. 401; 38 Sol. Jo. 398; 7 R. 179; sub nom. Re Lumley, Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, 70 L.T. 780, C.A.; 16 Digest 75, 922. G
- Willcock v. Terrell* (1878), 3 Ex.D. 323; 39 L.T. 84, C.A.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 565, 173.
- Miller v. Miller* (1870), L.R. 2 P. & D. 54; 39 L.J.P. & M. 38; 22 L.T. 418; 18 W.R. 585; 21 Digest 596, 1781. H
- Gordon v. Gordon*, [1903] P. 141; 72 L.J.P. 33; 89 L.T. 73; on appeal [1904] P. 163; 73 L.J.P. 41; 90 L.T. 597; 52 W.R. 389; 20 T.L.R. 272; 48 Sol. Jo. 297, C.A.; 16 Digest 65, 750.
- Re Deakin, Ex parte Cathcart*, [1900] 2 Q.B. 478; 69 L.J.Q.B. 797; 83 L.T. 39, C.A.; 21 Digest 595, 1779.
- Gowan v. Wright* (1886), 18 Q.B.D. 201; 56 L.J.Q.B. 131; 35 W.R. 297; 3 T.L.R. 258, C.A.; 21 Digest 417, 8. I
- R. v. Inhabitants of Hipswell* (1828), 8 B. & C. 466; 2 Man. & Ry.M.C. 474; 2 Man. & Ry.K.B. 474; 7 L.J.O.S.M.C. 4; 108 E.R. 1116; 34 Digest 522, 4410.

Appeal by the defendant from an order made by EVE, J., on a summons under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Acts, 1914-1916 [repealed], for the leave of the court to proceed to execution or otherwise for the enforcement of the payment of the sum of £16,269 4s. 9d. directed to be paid into court by the defendant by an

- A order of Jan. 30, 1917, and that the plaintiff might be at liberty to issue a writ or writs of sequestration against the property and effects of the defendant.

The facts are stated in the judgments.

Frank Russell, K.C., and Greenland for the defendant.

Maugham, K.C., and Beebee (for Cyril Harker, serving with His Majesty's forces) for the plaintiff.

- B Dec. 5, 1917. The following judgments were read.

Cur. adv. vult.

- C SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—This is an appeal from an order of EVE, J., giving leave to issue a writ of sequestration against the defendant Pedro Suarez for not paying into court £16.269 4s. 9d., a portion of trust moneys received by him, which by an order dated Jan. 30, 1917, he was ordered to pay into court, and which by a supplemental order dated Mar. 7, 1917, he was ordered to pay into court on or before Mar. 14, 1917. The defendant Pedro Suarez contends that as a former minister of the Republic of Bolivia he was and is exempt from civil process. The answer to that by the plaintiff is that his diplomatic position has long since ceased to exist, and that, while he was minister, by the direction or with the consent of his government he expressly waived his diplomatic privilege, voluntarily came in under the present proceedings, and took advantage of them to obtain an order against the plaintiff to account.

- E The facts of the case are not in dispute. The defendant Pedro Suarez is a defaulting administrator who received large sums of money forming part of the estate of one Francisco Suarez, deceased, and absconded. The judge below stated that he was not to be believed on his oath. Indeed, his counsel frankly stated that the appeal had not any merits, but nevertheless that he was entitled to succeed in point of law. It appears that Francisco Suarez died intestate on Feb. 10, 1897, possessed of considerable property. Whether he was domiciled here is a matter in dispute, an inquiry as to domicile not having yet been answered. On Feb. 23, 1900, letters of administration to his estate were granted to the defendant as the attorney of and for the use and benefit of the plaintiff Nicholas Suarez and the defendant Pedro Suarez. Each claims to be one of the next-of-kin of Francisco Suarez, and as such entitled to a share of his personal estate. In the month of January, 1914, the plaintiff Nicholas Suarez was desirous of having the estate administered by the court, and ascertaining definitely of what it consisted and who were the parties entitled to a share of it. It would appear that the defendant Pedro Suarez then also took the view that such a course was desirable. Accordingly, on Jan. 26, 1914, the plaintiff issued an originating summons asking for an account and that the personal estate might be administered by the court. A copy of this summons was sent to the defendant's solicitors on the same day, and in answer they wrote as follows :

- H "Jan. 28, 1914.—Dear Sirs,—Re Francisco Suarez (deceased).—We have yours of the 26th inst. inclosing copy of originating summons issued by you in this matter. Our client Colonel Suarez is perfectly willing to have the estate administered by the court; in fact, he was considering taking the same step himself, and if you will let us have the originating summons we will indorse thereon our acceptance of service.—Yours truly, HYLAND, ATKINS, AND ROGER."

I Accordingly, the originating summons was sent to them, and they wrote upon it the following memorandum :

"We accept service of this summons on behalf of Pedro Suarez, and undertake to enter an appearance thereto in due course. Dated Jan. 29, 1914.—HYLAND, ATKINS, AND ROGERS, 81, Cannon Street, E.C."

In due course they entered an appearance. The originating summons came on for hearing before Joyce, J., on July 10, 1914, when Mr. Tomlin, K.C., appeared for the defendant Pedro Suarez. The hearing of the summons was adjourned until July 14, 1914, at the desire of the defendant's counsel, to enable him to take the personal instructions of the defendant as to claiming privilege as minister for the Republic of Bolivia. On July 14, 1914, Mr. Tomlin, K.C., stated to the court that the defendant Pedro Suarez waived his privilege, and the order for administration was accordingly made on that date. The judge added as co-defendant one Hugo Boger, directed the usual accounts and inquiries, and gave the conduct of the accounts and inquiries thereby directed to the new defendant Hugo Boger.

The plaintiff appealed from this order, so far as it gave the conduct to Boger, and the defendant Pedro Suarez gave notice to the plaintiff and the defendant Boger, pursuant to R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 6, of his intention to contend that the order of JOYCE, J., should be varied by the insertion therein of a direction that an account be taken of the personal estate of Francisco Suarez, deceased, come to the hands of the plaintiff as agent for the defendant Pedro Suarez, the administrator of Francisco Suarez, or otherwise, or the hands of any other person or persons, by the order or for the use of the plaintiff as such agent or otherwise, and of a submission by the plaintiff to account as aforesaid, or, in the alternative, in the event of the plaintiff refusing to submit to account, that the action might be dismissed with costs. The appeal and cross-contention were disposed of on July 30, 1914, when the order of JOYCE, J., was varied and effect given to the contentions of each party. Boger was to be at liberty to attend in chambers upon the taking of the accounts and inquiries, but did not have the conduct of them, and, the plaintiff by his counsel submitting to account, an additional account was directed—namely, an account of the personal estate of the intestate come to the hands of the plaintiff as the attorney of the defendant Pedro Suarez, or to the hands of any other person or persons, by the order or for the use of the plaintiff. I gather that the defendant, after obtaining letters of administration, had appointed the plaintiff his attorney to collect moneys due to the estate abroad. The position, therefore, was that the defendant had appeared voluntarily without the summons having been served upon him, that he expressly waived any diplomatic privilege on the hearing of the summons, and that he came in under the proceedings and took the benefit of them, and himself claimed and obtained an order for the plaintiff to account. It was not disputed that the defendant had waived his privilege, so far as he could do it, but one contention raised was that he could only do it with the consent of his government, and it had not been shown that he did obtain this consent.

The first answer to this argument is that while he was minister credit must be given to his acts, and it must be assumed that in the course which he took he was acting in accordance with the instructions of his government. But the further answer is that he did in fact obtain the authority of his government, and his solicitors so informed the plaintiff in writing. In January, 1915, questions arose whether the defendant should waive his privilege in respect of another proceeding, and on Jan. 29, 1915, the defendant's solicitors wrote to the plaintiff's solicitors that the plaintiff was prepared to write to the President of Bolivia and ask him whether in such other proceeding the President would consent to waiver of privilege. This letter in terms referred to the fact that the president had authorised the defendant to waive his privilege in the administration action. This letter, so far as material, is as follows:

"81, Cannon Street, E.C., Jan. 29, 1915.—Messrs. Darley, Cumberland & Co. Dear Sirs,—Suarez v. Suarez.—Your client is misinformed. The president of Bolivia authorised Colonel Suarez to waive his privilege in the case of the administration of Francisco Suarez' estate, but he has not done so in any other matter. Colonel Suarez informs us that the view of the Diplomatic Corps is that they cannot themselves waive the privilege, which attaches to their respective countries, the consent of whose ruler or head they must obtain, and we believe this is the correct view under international law. . . .—Yours truly, HYLAND, ATKINS, AND ROGER."

A The accounts were taken under the administration order. The defendant Pedro filed accounts, made affidavits, and was cross-examined upon them. The result was that large sums appeared to be due from him. By a subsequent order an inquiry as to domicile was added. The defendant lodged one sum of £3,698 in court, in pursuance of an order against him to that effect, and he also voluntarily lodged £19,500 Consols in court. A surcharge was brought in against him and proceeded upon, and at the conclusion of his cross-examination before EYR. J., he submitted to be surcharged on his accounts as administrator with the sum of £16,269 4s. 9d.; by an order made by EYR. J., on Jan. 30, 1917, the defendant was ordered to pay that sum into court, with a provision that no steps were to be taken to enforce the order if the amount was paid into court by the instalments there mentioned, the first of which was payable on or before Feb. 21, 1917, and the last of which was payable on or before July 29, 1917. No part of this amount has been paid into court by the defendant, although he was personally present in court when the order was made. On Mar. 5, 1917, the defendant was personally served with an order to attend before the master on Mar. 9, 1917, for examination as to his means. On Mar. 7, 1917 (the defendant being then in default in respect of the first instalment) an order was made for the defendant to pay into court the £16,269 4s. 9d. on or before Mar. 14, 1917. The next day, Mar. 8, 1917, he left this country, and there is no evidence that he has since returned, and he has not made any further payment into court. On the same Mar. 8 the defendant's solicitors forwarded to the plaintiff's solicitors a copy of a letter they had received from their client in the following terms:

E "81, Cannon Street, E.C., Mar. 7, 1917.—Messrs. Nelson, Son, and Plews, 31, Budge Row, E.C.—Dear Sirs,—As you are aware, during the last three years I have been trying to obtain evidence from Bolivia with regard to the cases, and that all the documents that have been sent to me from there have gone astray. In view of this I have requested the Bolivian government to grant me leave to go personally and obtain all the documents and particulars I require. This leave has been granted me, allowing me three months, commencing from the 1st inst., and as the time is so very short, and as it is necessary to avail myself of the first steamer going out, I am unable to attend the court on Friday, the 9th inst. I should, therefore, be greatly obliged to you if you would express my regrets to the master, assuring him that it is quite unavoidable. As time at my disposal is so very short, I shall not be able, as I had intended, to make out a written statement in regard to my financial standing, but I will endeavour to send it to you from Bolivia.—Yours faithfully, PEDRO SUAREZ."

The three months' leave mentioned in this letter would expire on June 1. It does not appear that this leave was ever extended. On Sept. 21, 1917, Sir Walter Langley, Assistant Under-Secretary at the Foreign Office, wrote to the plaintiff's solicitors that he was directed by Mr. Secretary Balfour to inform them that His Majesty's chargé d'affaires at La Paz had ascertained and reported by telegraph that the Bolivian government had terminated the appointment of Colonel Suarez as Bolivian minister at the Court of St. James', and that his name had accordingly been removed from the diplomatic list. Thus the defendant no longer possesses any diplomatic privilege, and does not appear to have been in England since Mar. 8, 1917. It is not a case in which a claim is made for a reasonable time to wind-up the affairs of the legation. The defendant has not made any affidavit on this application, and it is not suggested that ample opportunity has not already been given him to wind-up the business of the legation. Why, therefore, should not a writ of sequestration be issued to compel obedience to the orders of the court?

I It was contended on behalf of the defendant that, by virtue of the Diplomatic Privileges Act, 1708, s. 3, the proceedings taken against him were null and void, and that a minister could not waive his privilege and any purported waiver was ineffective. It must, however, be remembered that s. 3 of the statute of 1708 was merely declaratory of the common law, as its language shows. The recitals in the Act (since repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1867) show the circumstances under which the Act was passed. They are well known, and need not be repeated here. Section 3 provides: "And to prevent the like insolences for the future, be it further declared," not "enacted." It has been frequently pointed out by many eminent judges that s. 3 of the Act was declaratory of the common law, and must, therefore, be construed according to the common law, of which the law of nations must be deemed a part. It was so pointed out by LORD MANSFIELD in Triquet v. Bath (1) (3 Burr. at p. 1480), by LORD ELLENBOROUGH in Viveash v. Becker (2), by ABBOTT, C.J., in Novello v. Toogood (3), by JERVIS, C.J., and WILLIAMS, J., in Taylor v. Best (4), by LORD CAMPBELL in Magdalena Steam Navigation Co. v. Martin (5), and in The Parlement Belge (6) (5 P.D. at p. 213). The exemption from process accorded by the law of nations to Sovereigns and to ambassadors and foreign ministers, being for their benefit, may be waived by or with the permission of the Sovereign in accordance with the maxim quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto.

In Mighell v. Sultan of Johore (7) it was pointed out by the Court of Appeal that a foreign Sovereign might submit to the jurisdiction, LORD ESHER adding ([1894] 1 Q.B. at p. 159): "Everybody knows and understands that." The time when he can be said to elect whether he will submit to the jurisdiction is when the court is being asked to exercise jurisdiction over him—for example, when he enters an appearance to a writ. If a Sovereign can submit to the jurisdiction, why cannot an ambassador or other foreign minister with the consent of his Sovereign? Indeed, it may be for the benefit of such a one to come in and have some question determined in the courts of the country to which he is accredited. In the present case, if the defendant had been honest, the proceedings might have established his right to a share of a large fund.

It was held by the Court of Common Pleas in 1854, in Taylor v. Best (4), that a minister might waive his privilege, and the court there refused to set aside proceedings taken against M. Drouet, a public minister accredited by the King of the Belgians to the Court of St. James'. His attorney had given an undertaking to appear in the action, had duly entered an appearance, and had pleaded, and, after notice of trial, had obtained a rule for a special jury and the court refused his application to stay or set aside the proceedings. The doubt raised in that case—and stated by MAULE, J., to be—whether an ambassador or public minister can be brought into court against his will by process not immediately affecting either his person or his property, and have his rights and liabilities ascertained and determined, was afterwards settled in favour of the ambassador in Magdalena Steam Navigation Co. v. Martin (5). But the actual decision in Taylor v. Best (4), that a minister may, with the consent of his Sovereign, waive his privilege, notwithstanding the provisions of the statute of Anne, has never been questioned from that time to the present. It was affirmed by LORD CAMPBELL in Magdalena Steam Navigation Co. v. Martin (5) when he said, speaking of a public minister (2 E. & E. at p. 111):

"If he has done nothing to forfeit or waive his privilege, he is for all juridical purposes supposed still to be in his own country."

The contention on behalf of the defendant in the present case was founded upon a dictum of LORD TALBOT in Barbuit's Case (8). But the passage referred to merely means, as the context shows, that, the privilege being for the sake of the princes by whom an ambassador is sent, the ambassador cannot renounce such privilege and protection without the consent of the government which sent him: see also Wilson v. McIntosh (9). This point, therefore, fails. It was further urged on behalf of the defendant that, as the order of Mar. 7, 1917, fixing a definite date for payment was never served upon him, it was irregular to issue a writ of sequestration. In support of this contention reliance was placed upon the terms of Ord. 42, r. 6, which provides for the issue of a writ of sequestration, after due service of a

A judgment or order. The plaintiff, however, was not proceeding under that rule, which provides for the issue of a sequestration as of course and without obtaining any order for the purpose. The plaintiff's application for leave to issue a writ of sequestration was made under Ord. 42, rr. 4 and 24. The court may dispense with service of the order altogether if it is satisfied that the defaulter knows of the order and is keeping out of the way. The object of requiring service is to establish that
B the person ordered to do something has been fully informed of what he is required to do. The court has full jurisdiction to dispense with service of an order in proper cases. Here the defendant was personally present in court when the order of Jan. 30, 1917, was made, and indulgence was shown him at his request by giving him an opportunity of paying by instalments at fixed dates, all long since expired, and no payment whatever has been made. The defendant is in contempt, and,
C by keeping away, prevents any attachment of his person. A writ of sequestration is a process of execution against the estate which is said to have been first issued by Lord Keeper Bacon, and was resorted to by reason of the infirmity of the process of contempt, which is merely personal. The proceedings on a writ of sequestration are in rem and not in personam: see Tatham v. Parker (10), 1 Sm. & G. at p. 514. There are many reported instances of the court ordering the issue of a writ of D sequestration when the defendant keeps out of the way and so prevents personal service of any order being effected upon him: see Hyde v. Hyde (11); Allen v. Allen (12); and R. v. Wigand (13). In my opinion, the order of EVE, J., was quite right and this appeal fails.

WARRINGTON, L.J.—This is an appeal by the defendant Pedro Suarez from an order dated Oct. 23, 1917, giving leave to issue a writ of sequestration by E reason of his failure to comply with an order of Jan. 30, 1917, that he should lodge in court £16.269 odd, part of the estate of an intestate in his hands as administrator, and a subsequent order, dated Mar. 7, 1917, directing lodgment on or before a fixed date or afterwards within four days after service.

The first question is whether at the date of the order of Oct. 23, 1917, the defen-
F dant was entitled to claim the privilege against legal process of a minister of a foreign State. He had been the accredited minister in this country of the State of Bolivia. But on Sept. 21 the Foreign Office, by letter under the hand of one of the assistant secretaries, informed the plaintiff's solicitors that His Majesty's chargé d'affaires at La Paz had ascertained and reported by telegraph that the Bolivian government had terminated his appointment as Bolivian minister at the G British Court, and that his name had, accordingly, been removed from the diplomatic list. In my opinion, that letter is for the purposes of the present matter sufficient evidence of the fact that at the date of that letter the defendant had ceased to hold the office of minister. The privilege may, however, continue for a reasonable time after the minister ceases to hold office in order that he may wind-up the affairs of the legation and transfer them to his successor: Musurus Bey v. Gadban (14). In the present case, however, it is idle to suggest that on this
H ground the privilege still subsisted on Oct. 23. The four-day order was made in the presence of the defendant's solicitors on Mar. 7. On Mar. 5 he had been personally served with an order to attend on Mar. 9 to be examined as to his means. On Mar. 8 he disappeared, and the plaintiff has heard nothing of him since. It is,
I in my opinion, clear that if it could be said in this case that there was any period of grace at all, it had come to an end long before Oct. 23, and that he did not then enjoy any privilege from process. But it is said that by virtue of the Diplomatic Privileges Act, 1708, all the proceedings on which the order appealed from was made were void by reason of the existence of the privilege at the date of their institution; that the privilege cannot be waived; and that, therefore, there was no jurisdiction to make the order appealed from. On the facts there is no question that the defendant deliberately, and after consideration for which opportunity was afforded him with the consent of his own government, submitted to the jurisdiction.

Further, he obtained on appeal a modification in his favour of the original judgment. He complied with it by carrying in and verifying the necessary accounts. He paid and transferred monies and Consols into court, and, on the order for payment of the £16,269 odd into court being made, he obtained the indulgence of being allowed to pay by instalments.

The evidence in point of fact of the ambassadorial privilege is clear. That in law an action which the privilege would have rendered impossible of prosecution may be continued effectually if the privilege is not insisted on was decided in 1854 by the Court of Common Pleas in Taylor v. Best (4). The same point is assumed in the judgment of Lord CAMPBELL, L.C., in Migdalena Steam Navigation Co. v. Martin (5), decided in 1859. The dictum of Lord TALBOT in Barbuit's Case (8) is, properly understood, not adverse to this view. The context shows that Lord TALBOT is referring only to waiver with the consent of the ambassador's government. The decision in Taylor v. Best (4) has never been overruled or questioned on this point, and, in my opinion, even if we thought it wrong, this court ought not after this length of time to overrule it. But I see no reason to doubt that the decision was correct. There can, I think, be no question that independently of the statute the privilege of being free from process in this country, whether it be that of a Sovereign or of another State or of an ambassador of such a Sovereign, was capable of being waived, and that proceedings could validly be prosecuted if the privileged defendant submitted to the jurisdiction. It has frequently been pointed out by judges of great eminence that the third section of the statute of Anne on which the present question turns is merely declaratory of previously existing law. It appears by the preamble that the object was to preserve sacred and inviolable privileges which ambassadors and other public ministers have at all times been possessed of. Under these circumstances it would be a strange result if the effect of the statute were to alter the nature of the ambassadorial privilege to introduce a distinction between the case of a Sovereign himself and his ambassador, and to render absolutely void as against the latter every action although it may be his desire, and indeed to his advantage, to submit to the jurisdiction. In my judgment, the statute should be construed so as to maintain the privilege as it existed when it passed, and to render void only those writs and processes which are "sued forth or prosecuted" against the will of the privileged person.

Some reliance was placed on an expression of DAVY, L.J., in Musurus Bey v. Gadban (14) (1894) 2 Q.B. at p. 361 to the effect that there is a total want of jurisdiction to entertain an action against a person enjoying the privilege. The learned lord justice was not in that case considering the effect of waiver at all, but only the question whether the immunity of an ambassador from action prevented the Statute of Limitations from running during the continuance of such immunity. The statement of the learned lord justice has no bearing on the present question. I am of opinion, therefore, that the action was effectually prosecuted, and that the court, notwithstanding the ambassadorial character of the defendant, had jurisdiction to make all the orders it made up to and including those over which the order for the issue of the writ of sequestration was founded. The last-mentioned order itself, being the order appealed from, was made when the privilege no longer existed, and was, in my opinion, properly made.

But a technical objection is taken on the ground that no time was fixed for payment by the order of Jan. 30, and that the order of Mar. 7 was not served. That objection would have been a good one if a writ of sequestration were issued under Ord. 42, r. 6. But, in my opinion, the absence of service does not prevent the court from directing the issue of the writ in a proper case: see R. v. Wigand (13). On the whole, in my opinion, the appeal fails and must be dismissed.

SCRUTTON, L.J.—Pedro Suarez appeals from an order of EVE, J., dated Oct. 23, 1917. He objects to the order on two grounds: First, that he was when the proceedings were commenced the public minister of the Republic of Bolivia accredited to this country, and, therefore, any process against him was null and

A void. Secondly, that the first order for payment into court does not specify a time for payment, and the second order, which does specify a time, was not served on him. To his claim of ministerial privilege it is replied that he was not when the order appealed from was made, the public minister of Bolivia, and that while he was such minister he submitted to the jurisdiction with the assent and on the instructions of the Republic of Bolivia.

B Counsel for Pedro Suarez frankly opened his case as one entirely destitute of any merits that were not technical. It appears that when it was proposed to administer the estate of Francisco Suarez, an originating summons was issued on Jan. 26, 1914, by Nicholas Suarez, Pedro Suarez being a defendant, and on Jan. 28 Pedro Suarez's solicitors, in stating their willingness to accept service of the summons, wrote that Pedro Suarez was willing to have the estate administered by the court, and in fact he was considering taking some such step himself. On C Jan. 29, 1915, his solicitors wrote that the President of Bolivia had authorised Pedro Suarez to waive his privilege in the case of the administration of Francisco Suarez. In these proceedings it was ascertained that Pedro Suarez had in his hands a large sum of money belonging to the estate. On Jan. 20, 1917, he was ordered to pay £16,209 into court, the order not to be enforced if on named dates D he paid in specified instalments of this sum. He did not pay the first instalment, and he was, on Mar. 7, 1917, ordered to pay the whole sum into court within four days. On May 8, 1917, he left the country, concealing his whereabouts from the court. On Sept. 21, 1917, the Foreign Office, from whom this court obtains E conclusive information as to the status of foreign dignitaries and their accredited representatives to this country: Mighel v. Sultan of Johore (7); Foster v. Globe Venture Syndicate, Ltd. (15); informed the court that the Bolivian government had terminated the appointment of Colonel Suarez as Bolivian minister at the British Court. It is, therefore, at a time when he had been six months absent from this country, and at least a month after his appointment as minister has ceased, that he claims a privilege as minister, having waived that privilege when he was minister. His counsel said quite accurately that his case had no merits F in fact. But it was said that, however lacking in merits he was, he was in 1914 a public minister, and that the statute of 1708 had prescribed that all writs and processes which shall hereafter be sued forth whereby the person of any public minister of any foreign State may be imprisoned or his goods be seized "shall be deemed and adjudged to be utterly null and void to all intents, constructions, and purposes whatsoever." The whole proceedings were said to be null and void.

G There are large numbers of cases in which similar words have been construed by the courts. This court in New Zealand Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Société des Ateliers et Chantiers de France (16) held that in cases of contract the court supports an agreement, which by its express terms is void in certain events, by refusing to allow a person who has by his own act brought one of those events to pass to allege an invalidity caused by his own wrong. And where a lease is void on H breach of a covenant the court has not allowed the person who broke the covenant to allege the invalidity his breach of contract has created. The effect of this is to make the contract not void, but voidable at the option of the innocent party. In numerous statutes, for a bewildering variety of reasons, the courts have held transactions to be valid which the legislature has apparently enacted to be invalid for all purposes whatsoever, while in other cases they have held that the words void I for all purposes have what appear to be their plain and ordinary meaning. The cases are collected in MAXWELL ON THE INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES (5th Edn.) pp. 337-348. But one of the reasons where the courts have declined to make a transaction void is that there is a personal estoppel against a party interested in and alleging invalidity. This is the reason given by LORD CAIRNS in President and Governors of Magdalen Hospital v. Knottis (17) (4 App. C.s. at p. 333) for the numerous cases in which it has been held that leases made by statute utterly void could yet not be invalidated by the corporation during the life of the head of the college by whom they were made. I am content to decide this case on that ground, for, if ever there were a case where a man should be prevented from alleging the invalidity of a process, it is where he has assented to its issue, taken part in the proceedings for three years, thus gaining time, and only alleged its invalidity when he is otherwise not entitled to the protection of an ambassador or protected from a writ.

But, on many of the general questions argued before us, I have felt and still feel considerable doubts. I desire to say, first, that, in my opinion, the nature and extent of the effect of appearing to a process which was null and void when it was issued may require close consideration in future cases. The effect of the Sovereign's appearing has been very carefully limited—see South African Republic v. La Compagnie Franco-Belge du Chemin de Fer du Nord (18)—and I should desire to reserve my liberty to consider how exactly a writ issued without the consent of an ambassador, and, therefore, apparently a nullity: see Musurus Bey v. Gadban (14); is made an effective writ by the consent of the defendant, and the extent to which it becomes effective. In the present case I think the facts prevent the defendant from raising this point. Secondly, I am not at all satisfied, in view of the way the greater part of the reasoning in Taylor v. Best (4) has been treated in subsequent cases: see Magdalena Steam Navigation Co. v. Martin (5) and Musurus Bey v. Gadban (14); that Taylor v. Best (4) can be treated in a case where it has to be considered as a satisfactory authority for anything. The first point taken by the defendant, in my opinion, fails. On the second point, the writ of sequestration is founded on contempt of an order, and cannot be issued without leave of the court unless an order naming a time for the performance of an act has been served on the defendant and disobeyed. But in this case the writ is issued with the leave of the court, and EVE, J., has found that Pedro Suarez knew about the two orders for payment, and has left the country to evade service of the second order and payment of the sum in question. I should come to the same conclusion. The latter finding, that Pedro Suarez is evading service within the decision of the Court of Appeal in Re Tuck, Murch v. Loosemore (19), is enough to justify the issue of the writ. The appeal, in my opinion, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Nelson, Son & Plews; Darley, Cumberland & Co.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. KENNAWAY

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Viscount Reading, C.J., Darling and Avory, J.J.), October 16, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 25; 86 L.J.K.B. 300; 115 L.T. 720; 81 J.P. 99;
25 Cox, C.C. 559; 12 Cr. App. Rep. 147]

Criminal Law—Forgery—Will—“Forgery of will of either dead or living person” —Forgery of will of fictitious person—Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), ss. 1 (2) (b), 2 (1) (a), 4 (1).

The appellant in company with other persons evolved a scheme for the purpose of inducing someone to advance money on the security of a fictitious legacy in a forged will. He ascertained the name of a person who had died within the preceding three months and used that person's death certificate to obtain probate of a will written by him and purporting to be that of the deceased person. The address at which the deceased was stated to have resided was wrongly described both in the will and in the affidavit for probate. The appellant was convicted under s. 2 (1) (a) of the Forgery Act, 1913, which made it a felony to forge the will of either a dead or a living person.

Held: the fact that the deceased had never resided at the address stated in the will did not make it the will of a fictitious person, and, therefore, s. 2 of the Act applied and the appellant was rightly convicted of felony, his offence not being merely that of forging a document under s. 4 of the Act, which was a misdemeanour.

Per CURIAM: Even if the will had been that of a fictitious person its forgery might still have been a felony under s. 2 (1) (a).

Criminal Law—Evidence—Cross-examination of prisoner as to character—Cross-examination as to previous offence—Corroboration of evidence of accomplices —Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict., c. 36), s. 1 (f).

At the trial of the appellant on a charge of forging a will two accomplices gave evidence for the prosecution to the effect that he had forged the will in pursuance of a scheme by which they were to induce someone to advance money on the security of a fictitious legacy in the will. They also stated that when they had asked the appellant to act as one of the executors of the will he had refused on the ground that he had put through a will eighteen years previously and was afraid of detection if he took too ostensible a part in the present scheme. The appellant was cross-examined for the purpose of showing that eighteen years previously he had forged a will in order to obtain money in the same way as was suggested in the present case.

Held: the cross-examination of the appellant as to the previous forgery was admissible as tending to corroborate the evidence of the accomplices.

Notes. Penal servitude and hard labour were abolished by s. 1 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (28 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 351).

As to forgery of a will, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 843, and cases there cited. As to admissibility of evidence of similar offences, see ibid., pp. 443, 444, and for cases see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 420 et seq.

Appeal on a point of law against the conviction of the appellant before A. T. LAWRENCE, J., at the Central Criminal Court of forgery.

The appellant was accused of having forged the will of one Jane Augusta Leete, described as of Elmfield, Bath. There had been in fact a person of the name of Jane Augusta Leete who formerly resided at No. 27, Wilberforce Road, Finsbury Park, and had lately died. Under the forged will legacies were purported to be left to alleged relations of the deceased, and in pursuance of a conspiracy an attempt was made to induce persons to advance money on the security of the fictitious legacies in the forged will. The appellant was convicted of forgery under s. 2 (1) (a) of the Forgery Act, 1913, and sentenced to ten years' penal servitude.

E. A. Swan (H. W. Wickham with him) for the appellant.

R. D. Muir and H. D. Roome for the Crown.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

VISCOUNT READING, C.J.—The appellant Gerald Kellaway was convicted of forging a will which purported to be the will of the late Jane Augusta Leete, and also of uttering a forged document which purported to be the will of the same lady. The prosecution at the trial showed that there was an elaborate conspiracy between four persons, including the appellant. Two of the conspirators were named Bruce and Vaughan, and they were tried before DARLING, J., at the Central Criminal Court and convicted. After passing sentence upon these two men, the judge advised them to assist in bringing to justice a third person, who was evidently, as the judge had reason to think, a very expert and skilful hand and working behind these two men. If they did so assist, the judge intimated that their sentences might be affected.

The result was that the appellant and another man named Horne were tried at the Central Criminal Court before A. T. LAWRENCE, J. The prosecution called Bruce and Vaughan as witnesses and avowedly accomplices in the crime. They gave evidence to the effect that the crime was not meant to defraud the estate of the deceased person Jane Augusta Leete, but was carried out for the purpose of inducing someone to advance money on the security of a fictitious legacy in the forged will. It is clear from the evidence given at the trial that the method carried out was, first, to ascertain the name of some person who had died within the preceding three months, so as to get over any difficulty about probate of the will, and, secondly, to forge a will which purported to be the will of that person and included a provision for legacies purporting to be in favour of the accused. Then, being in possession of the forged will, it was suggested that they should endeavour to persuade someone to advance money to the supposed legatee or for their benefit. It was further shown that estate duty was paid upon an estate which never in fact existed, and that an attempt was made to obtain an advance of money upon the security of a fictitious legacy. The case put forward for the prosecution was that the appellant actually affixed to the will the signatures of the supposed testatrix and of the two witnesses. The handwritings in each case were necessarily different, but the allegation was that all the signatures were written by the appellant. In the course of the evidence given by Bruce and Vaughan it was stated that the appellant when asked refused to act as one of the supposed executors. Bruce said that he refused because of a will which he had "put through" eighteen years ago, and that he said that the risk of discovery was too great. Vaughan gave evidence to the same effect. In cross-examining the appellant counsel for the Crown questioned him for the purpose of showing that eighteen years ago a document was in existence which purported to be the will of one Fanny Fisher and was in his handwriting and written by him to enable him to obtain an advance of money in the same way as was suggested in the present case. This evidence was admitted as tending to corroborate the evidence given by the accomplices.

The appeal is based upon two grounds. First, it is said that the appellant could not be convicted of forgery as a felony, but only as a misdemeanour, and that he could not, therefore, be sentenced to more than two years' imprisonment. It is not argued that no offence was committed, but the offence is said to be a misdemeanour and not a felony. This argument was founded on the provisions of ss. 1 (2) (b), 2 (1) (a), and 4 (1) of the Forgery Act, 1913. It is said that, as the will in question purported to be that of Jane Augusta Leete, of Elmfield House, Bath, and as Jane Augusta Leete, deceased, actually resided at No. 29, Wilberforce Road, Finsbury Park, the Jane Augusta Leete whose supposed will was proved was a fictitious person, and that, therefore, the penalty prescribed by s. 2 (1) of

- A the Forgery Act, 1913, did not apply, the person whose will was forged being neither a dead nor a living person within s. 2 (1) (a), but wholly fictitious. That point can be conclusively answered. Counsel for the appellant must first show that the alleged will in question is the will of a fictitious person. In the opinion of the court it is not. The alleged will was put forward as that of Jane Augusta Leete, the person who had lately died. The certificate of death of this person was obtained
- B and used by the appellant and his accomplices and in the affidavit for probate the testatrix was described as "of No. 29, Wilberforce Road, Stoke Newington, formerly of Elmfield House, Bath." This point, therefore, in our opinion, fails. But we think it desirable to say that the court was not impressed with the suggestion that, supposing there had been no such person as Jane Augusta Leete, of Elmfield House, Bath, s. 2 (1) (a) of the Forgery Act, 1913, would not apply to the case.
- C The second point submitted to us was that the cross-examination as to the will of Fanny Fisher was inadmissible as being contrary to the provisions of s. 1 of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, which relates to questions put to accused persons tending to show that they have committed other offences or are of bad character. We need not repeat what this court has said more than once—namely, that evidence which is otherwise admissible can be given against an accused person although it
- D may show that he had committed an offence other than the offence charged or was of bad character. In the present case evidence of the fact that the appellant had committed a forgery eighteen years ago would have been inadmissible. But the evidence given by Bruce and Vaughan related to their conversation with the appellant about the reasons which he gave for not acting as executor, and contained the statement by the appellant that he had done the same thing eighteen years
- E ago, and that he was afraid of detection if he took any ostensible part in the new scheme. It is impossible to say that evidence that the appellant had in fact done this same thing eighteen years ago is not some evidence which tends to corroborate the testimony of the accomplices, and to show that the appellant was guilty of the charge preferred against him. To put it quite shortly, it amounted to this, that it was part of the scheme that the appellant should not act as executor because he
- F had once before done the same thing, and might, therefore, be more easily detected. For these reasons the court thinks that the learned judge rightly admitted this evidence as tending to corroborate the testimony of the accomplices, and the second point fails. The appeal will therefore be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Wilson, Lambert & Midgley; Director of Public Prosecutions.

[Reported by R. F. BLAKISTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re DANIEL. DANIEL v. VASSALL

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Sargant, J.), June 5, July 3, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 Ch. 405; 87 L.J.Ch. 69; 117 L.T. 472; 33 T.L.R. 503;
61 Sol. Jo. 646]

Sale of Land—Contract—Breach—Breach by vendor—Damages—Measure—Property subject to mortgage—Inability to convey because of refusal of mortgagee to release property and insufficiency of funds to pay off mortgage—Title accepted by purchaser ready to complete—Purchaser entitled to general damages for loss of bargain, but not in addition thereto to costs of investigating title.

The vendor, who had contracted to sell property which was subject to a mortgage, died before the title had been accepted by the purchaser. After the vendor's death the title was approved by the purchaser who was then ready to complete the purchase, but owing to the mortgagees' refusal to release the property and the inability of the executors to pay off the mortgage out of the vendor's insolvent estate the vendor's executors were unable to complete. On a claim for breach of the contract against the vendor's estate,

Held: (i) the vendor's incapacity to complete did not arise from a defect in the title, but merely from inability to convey; in that circumstance the absence of wilful misconduct or bad faith by the vendor was irrelevant, and so also was the lack of means to redeem the mortgage; and, therefore, the purchaser was not limited to claiming the costs of investigating the title, but was entitled to general damages for loss of his bargain.

Engell v. Fitch (1) (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 659 and Day v. Singleton (2), [1899] 2 Ch. 320, considered.

Bain v. Fothergill (3) (1874), L.R. 7 H.L. 158, distinguished.

(ii) the purchaser was not entitled to the costs of investigating the title in addition to general damages, since, if the contract had been completed, the purchaser would have had to pay those expenses.

Notes. Applied: Braybrooks v. Whaley, [1919] 1 K.B. 435. Considered: Wallington v. Townsend, [1939] 2 All E.R. 225. Followed: Thomas v. Kensington, [1942] 2 All E.R. 263. Distinguished: J. W. Cafés, Ltd. v. Brownlow Trust, Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 894. Referred to: Curtis Moffat v. Wheeler (1929), 98 L.J.Ch. 374.

As to damages for breach of contract to sell land, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 333 et seq.; and for cases on damages for breach of contract by the vendor see 40 DIGEST (Repl.) 284 et seq.

Cases referred to :

- (1) Engell v. Fitch (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 659; 10 B. & S. 738; 38 L.J.Q.B. 304; 17 W.R. 894, Ex.Ch.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 285, 2369.
- (2) Day v. Singleton, [1899] 2 Ch. 320; 68 L.J.Ch. 593; 81 L.T. 306; 48 W.R. 18; 43 Sol. Jo. 671, C.A.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 258, 2161.
- (3) Bain v. Fothergill (1874), L.R. 7 H.L. 158; 43 L.J.Ex. 243; 31 L.T. 387; 39 J.P. 228; 23 W.R. 261, H.L.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 287, 2392.
- (4) Flureau v. Thornhill (1776), 2 Wm. Bl. 1078; 96 E.R. 635; 40 Digest (Repl.) 284, 2358.

Also referred to in argument :

Esdaile v. Stephenson (1822), 1 Sim. & St. 122; 57 E.R. 49; 40 Digest (Repl.) 215, 1754.

Savory v. Underwood (1854), 23 L.T.O.S. 141; 40 Digest (Repl.) 132, 1020.

Wedgwood v. Adams (1843), 6 Beav. 600; 49 E.R. 958; subsequent proceedings (1844), 8 Beav. 103; 50 E.R. 41; 42 Digest 468, 364.

A Townsend v. Champernown (1827), 1 Y. & J. 449, 538; 148 E.R. 784; 40 Digest (Repl.) 175, 1381.

Tarn v. Turner (1888), 39 Ch.D. 456; 57 L.J.Ch. 1085; 59 L.T. 742; 37 W.R. 276; 4 T.L.R. 735, C.A.; 35 Digest 684, 4257.

B Summons taken out in an administration action to determine whether purchasers of real estate could recover general damages against the estate of the deceased vendor for the failure of his executors to perform the contract of sale, their failure being due to inability to obtain a release of the property by the mortgagees or to pay off the mortgage, or whether the purchasers were restricted to recovering the costs of investigating title to the property.

Maugham, K.C., and F. K. Archer for the purchasers.

C Fairfax Luxmoore for the executors of the vendor.

R. H. Hodge for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

D July 3, 1917. SARGANT, J.—This summons raises the interesting question whether a purchaser of real estate towards whom his vendor has failed to perform his contract by reason of inability to obtain a release of the property by a mortgagee is entitled to general damages for loss of bargain, or is limited to the costs incurred in investigating title. The vendor here has died since the contract, a judgment has been pronounced for the administration of the estate, and the master has just made his first general certificate.

E One of the claims before the master was that of the Bristol Tramways and Carriage Co., Ltd., in respect of the failure of the vendor to perform a contract dated Nov. 5, 1912, for the sale of a house called Sion Spring House, situate at Clifton, Bristol, and adjoining an hotel called the St. Vincent's Rocks Hotel. In addition to a claim for a deposit of £50 and interest thereon, which has since been satisfied by the release to them of the deposit, the company claimed a sum of £113 14s. 6d. in respect of costs, charges, and expenses incurred by the company in and about the purchase and also a sum of £500 for general damages. The F master has allowed a sum of £37 1s. 2d. in respect of costs incurred by the company, but has taken the view that general damages are not recoverable at all, and has therefore not dealt with the evidence as to the amount, if any, of such general damage. The company are now applying to the court to vary that part of the certificate which relates to their claim by allowing their claim for general damage.

G The contract was actually made with a Mr. Wood as purchaser, but the benefit of the purchase was soon transferred to the company, and they have throughout been recognised and treated as the purchasers. It fixed the purchase price at £1,000, of which a sum of £50 was paid as a deposit, and named Dec. 21, 1912, as the day for completion. Some delay took place in the matter, and the title had not been approved before the vendor's death, which occurred on Dec. 11, 1912. H But by the middle of May, 1913, the company had accepted the title and had agreed with the vendor the form of conveyance, and the matter was ready for completion. At this juncture, however, difficulties arose in consequence of the requirements of the mortgagees of the vendor, who held a mortgage for £5,000, comprising both the property sold and the St. Vincent's Rocks Hotel. These properties were, to some extent, connected or intermixed physically. And though the vendor had had a quite reasonable expectation that his mortgagees would release the property sold I on payment of the purchase price of £1,000, yet when the mortgagees came to consider the actual terms of the conveyance they declined to join and release except with certain reservations and stipulations which the company were not bound, and were not prepared, to accept. The company accordingly called on the vendor's executors to complete the purchase as arranged, and, if necessary for that purpose, to pay off the mortgagees and obtain a release of the property. But this the vendor's executors were unable to do having regard to the position of the vendor's estate, which was probably insolvent. The company accordingly on June 15, 1914, gave formal notice to the executors requiring them to complete the matter within one month, and on their failure to do so gave a further notice terminating the contract and claiming the return of the deposit of £50 and damages to the extent already mentioned.

Under these circumstances it is, of course, not denied that there has been a breach, on the part of the vendor and his estate, of the contract he entered into; and it is conceded on the part of his executors that if a similar case had arisen on a sale of pure personal estate there would have been a liability to pay general damages for the failure to procure a release of the personal estate sold from any mortgage or lien on that personal estate, whether charged thereon solely or in common with other personal estate. But it is contended on the part of the vendor's executors that the case is within the rule in Flureau v. Thornhill (4) as expounded in Bain v. Fothergill (3) and followed in other cases, of which the most important for the present purpose is Day v. Singleton (2). That the present case is not within the exact terms of the decision in Flureau v. Thornhill (4) is clear, for that decision merely covers cases in which the incapacity of the vendor arises from a defect in his title, while here the incapacity is due, not to any defect in title, but to the refusal of the mortgagee to release and to the pecuniary inability of the vendor and his estate to pay the mortgage off. Nor do I think that the case is within the spirit of the rule in Flureau v. Thornhill (4). For, as is pointed out by LORD LINDLEY, M R., in Day v. Singleton (2) it is an anomalous rule based upon and justified by difficulties in showing a good title to real property in this country. There is no special difficulty in obtaining a release of real estate that is in mortgage. All that is required in general, and all that was requisite here, was to pay off the mortgage or a sufficient part of it to satisfy the mortgagees, and but for the lack of pecuniary means the vendor and his estate were in a position to force the concurrence of the mortgagees. This being so, a further remark of LORD LINDLEY in the same passage becomes apposite, namely, that the anomalous rule in question "ought not to be extended to cases in which the reasons on which it is based do not apply." But it was urged by counsel for the executors of the vendor that Day v. Singleton (2) was, like the somewhat similar case of Engell v. Fitch (1), a case of wilful default or bad faith, that the decision in each of these cases was really based on this fact, and that it is only in such cases that a vendor is liable. I cannot, however, think that this is so. It seems to me that these cases establish that contracts for the sale of real estate, like other contracts for sale, cast on vendors a general liability for damages for non-fulfilment of contract, subject only to an exception in a very special and limited class of cases, and that unless a case is brought within that special class the general rule applies. In Day v. Singleton (2) the question of the vendor's conduct was material, because, on the view taken by the court, it prevented the case from falling within the special class by reason of the failure being due, in fact, not to inability to make title, but to deliberate abstention from doing so. But if the case, as here, is outside the special class of exception for another reason—namely, because it is a case merely of inability to convey—the question of conduct is immaterial, and the vendor is liable for non-fulfilment of contract, wholly irrespective of misconduct.

The question, indeed, seems to me to be covered by the following passage in the judgment of LORD HATHERLEY in Bain v. Fothergill (3) (L.R. 7 H.L. at p. 209), namely,

"The vendor in [Engell v. Fitch (1)] was bound by his contract, as every vendor is bound by his contract, to do all that he could to complete the conveyance. Whenever it is a matter of conveyancing, and not a matter of title, it is the duty of the vendor to do everything that he is enabled to do by force of his own interest, and also by force of the interest of others whom he can compel to concur in the conveyance."

A Here I think that the vendor could "complete the conveyance," and could compel the mortgagees to join in the conveyance within the meaning of that passage; and that mere pecuniary inability to do so forms no better defence than it ordinarily does to a claim for a breach of contract. Can it be doubted, for instance, that in Engell v. Fitch (1), if the omission of the vendor to bring an action to dispossess the actual occupier had been due to lack of means, the decision would nevertheless have been precisely the same? At one time I entertained a doubt whether some difference might not be caused in the present case by the fact that the mortgagees' refusal to release arose out of difficulties arising from or connected with the fact of the property sold being real estate, and being physically intermixed with the rest of the property subject to the mortgage. But ultimately I have come to the conclusion that this doubt is unfounded. It is clear that the mortgagees' reluctance to convey in the way contracted for would have been overcome if they had been paid a sufficient part of their mortgage money to leave the remainder well secured notwithstanding that the hotel had not obtained the reservations and stipulations they were seeking. And even if this were not so, it was always open to the vendor's executors, apart from their pecuniary disabilities, to pay the mortgagees off altogether. Accordingly I hold that the vendor and his estate are liable for general damages.

The parties have expressed a desire that I should not send the case back to the master to assess the damages, but that I should deal with it myself, and they are both agreed upon this, that the time for estimating the damages was the time when the breach occurred and the contract was broken off, so that I have to consider what the real value of the property was at the time when the contract was broken.

E Now, the purchasers originally put the damage at £500 on the ground of the special value of the purchase to the company, but they have since found that that ground is quite insupportable in law, and I think that there is a good deal of doubt on the evidence which they have brought forward for the purpose of showing that the damages to an ordinary purchaser, apart from the special value to them, nevertheless remain at this original sum of £500. I have also to take this into consideration, that the deceased vendor himself was an estate agent, and that he had held the property for a long time, quite vacant, except for one unsatisfactory tenant, and that the rent asked was only £80, and I do not think the property can be worth more than £80; and I also have to take this into account, that his present partner considers that £1,000 was the real value, so that there is considerable prima facie evidence in favour of holding the sum of £1,000 to have been the true value. On the other hand, there is a great deal of evidence given which shows that the value to an ordinary purchaser considerably exceeded the sum of £1,000, although I am not prepared to say that it exceeded the sum of £1,000 by that sum which had been originally fixed on the basis of the special damage to the purchasers. Although I recognise that it is rather difficult in this case to arrive at the sum without any cross-examination of the persons who have given these fluctuating estimates of value, yet I think that the weight of evidence on the whole is in favour of the property having really been worth more than £1,000, and the fact that the vendor with his special knowledge sold at the sum of £1,000 is probably attributable to the fact that he was undoubtedly in a difficulty shortly before his death, and that he was sacrificing this property, having got tired of holding it so long, at less than its real value. Weighing one thing with another, I have come to the conclusion that the value of the property on the whole was very much nearer £1,000 than the sum of £1,500. I put the value at £1,125, and accordingly I allow the company's claim at £125. That being so, of course they cannot have, in addition to the £125, the costs of investigating the title—that is, £87 odd, which the master allowed them. I do not think that was contended for by counsel for the purchaser; and indeed such a claim could not be supported, for this reason, that the basis of the estimate of the loss is the difference between the value of the property if it had been conveyed to them in accordance with the contract and the price given for the property, which difference I have put at £125. If they had had the property conveyed to them, of course they would have had to incur all the expense in investigating the title that they did actually incur. Therefore it is impossible to give them that sum in addition to the sum by way of general damages. Accordingly I propose to allow the proof of the company, the purchasers, in the administration of the estate at £125, and I give them their costs as between party and party of their claim and of their summons to vary. The costs of the claim will not, of course, now be limited to the sum of £6 6s. fixed by the master, because he fixed that on the basis that the evidence of value was not relevant. So that the sum of £6 6s. will be struck out, and the costs will be taxed generally of the claim and of the summons to vary, and the executors will have their costs as between solicitor and client as against the estate.

Solicitors: Stanley, Wasbrough, Doggett & Baker; Rider, Heaton, Meredith & Mills, for Osborne, Ward, Vassall & Co., Bristol; Pilgrim & Phillips.

[Reported by L. MORGAN MAY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re HICKLIN. PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. HOARE

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Astbury, J.), June 21, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 Ch. 278; 86 L.J.Ch. 740; 117 L.T. 403; 33 T.L.R. 748; 61 Sol. Jo. 630]

Estate Duty—Property out of which duty payable—Property not passing to executor as such—Residuary fund passing in default of appointment—Charge to be borne rateably by pecuniary and residuary legacies—Incidence of expenses of payment of duty, legacy duty on pecuniary legacies, distribution of balance of fund, and withdrawal fee of Public Trustee—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict., c. 30), s. 9 (1).

The testator devised and bequeathed his real and residuary personal estate to trustees on trust for sale and directed that the income of the residuary trust fund be paid to his wife for life and thereafter be held on trust as the wife might appoint. In default of appointment the trustees were to hold the fund on trust to pay certain pecuniary legacies and to divide the residue among residuary legatees. The testator died in 1909. By her will made in 1911 the wife exercised her power of appointment over a small portion of the fund, leaving the remainder to pass in default of appointment. On the wife's death in 1915 estate duty became payable on the residuary trust fund, and the question arose, in regard to the unappointed portion of the fund, whether the pecuniary legacies should bear a rateable portion of the duty or whether the whole duty should be borne by the ultimate residue.

Held: the estate duty charged by s. 9 (1) of the Finance Act, 1894, on property such as the present unappointed fund, which did not pass to the executor as such, must be borne rateably by all the beneficiaries of the fund, and, accordingly, the estate duty was a charge on the pecuniary legacies as well as on the ultimate residue.

Berry v. Gaukroger (1), [1903] 2 Ch. 116, applied.

Held further: the costs and expenses incidental to (a) the payment of that estate duty, (b) the payment of legacy duty on the pecuniary legacies, and (c) the distribution of the balance of the fund were ordinary costs of distribution, and, therefore, must be borne by the ultimate residue; and that the withdrawal

- A fee payable to the Public Trustee (who was the sole trustee of the testator's will) on the final distribution of the trust fund was also an ordinary cost of distribution falling on the ultimate residue.
- Notes. Legacy duty was abolished by the Finance Act, 1949, s. 27.
- Considered: Re Fuch's Will Trusts, Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. Chew, [1944] 1 All E.R. 338. Referred to: Re Cassel's Will Trusts, Public Trustee v. A.-G., [1946] 1 All E.R. 704.
- B As to by whom estate duty is payable on property not passing to the executor as such, see 15 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 131, para. 269; and for cases see 21 DIGEST 27 et seq. For the Finance Act, 1894, s. 9 (1), see 9 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 369.
- C Cases referred to:
- (1) Berry v. Gaukroger, [1903] 2 Ch. 116; 72 L.J.Ch. 435; 88 L.T. 521; 51 W.R. 449; 19 T.L.R. 445; 47 Sol. Jo. 490, C.A.; 21 Digest 27, 155.
 - (2) O'Grady v. Wilmot, [1916] 2 A.C. 231; 85 L.J.Ch. 386; 32 T.L.R. 456; 60 Sol. Jo. 456; sub nom. Re O'Grady, O'Grady v. Wilmot, 114 L.T. 1097; 21 Digest 31, 186.
- D Also referred to in argument:
- Porte v. Williams*, [1911] 1 Ch. 188; 80 L.J.Ch. 127; 103 L.T. 798; 55 Sol. Jo. 45; 21 Digest 27, 149.
- Re Bentley, Public Trustee v. Bentley*, [1914] 2 Ch. 456; 84 L.J.Ch. 54; 111 L.T. 1097; 43 Digest 1035, 4761.
- E Adjourned Summons.
- Benjamin Hicklin, by his will, dated Oct. 29, 1908, after giving a legacy to his wife, Mary Hicklin, and certain specific gifts, directed his trustees to stand possessed of all his real and his residuary personal estate, on trust for sale and conversion and out of the monies thereby arising to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses and certain small bequests. The will then continued:
- F "And I direct my trustees to invest the residue of my residuary trust funds and to pay the income thereof to my said wife for and during her life and from and after her decease upon trust to stand possessed thereof for such person or persons for such estates and upon and subject to such (if any) powers, conditions, and restrictions, and generally in such manner as my said wife Mary Hicklin shall by deed or will appoint."
- G In default of or subject to any exercise of the power of appointment the testator gave a sum of £8,000 upon trusts which ceased in 1913, and, subject thereto, he gave large pecuniary legacies to seven persons, making no reference to the payment of duties thereon, and other smaller legacies which he directed to be paid "free of duty." He then directed his trustees to pay and divide all the remainder of his residuary trust funds amongst those of a number of persons named in the will who might survive him and attain the age of twenty-one. The testator died in 1909, his wife surviving him. All the pecuniary and residuary legatees whose interests were subject to the wife exercising her power of appointment survived the testator and the wife, and of the latter all attained the age of twenty-one years. By a will and codicil made in 1911, the wife appointed certain small sums in exercise of her power, but without affecting or altering the legacies given to the pecuniary or residuary legatees. She stated in her will that she did not wish to make any further exercise of the power. She died in 1915. In July, 1916, the plaintiff, the Public Trustee, was appointed sole trustee of the testator's will. Upon the death of the wife a claim for estate duty was made in respect of the whole testator's residue, as property passing at her death over which she had a power of disposal. This summons was taken out to determine whether each of the seven pecuniary legacies should bear a rateable portion of the duty, or whether the whole should be borne by the ultimate residue in exoneration of the pecuniary legacies. The question was also asked whether the costs and expenses of administration, and in particular the fees and withdrawal fee payable to the Public Trustee upon distribution, should be borne by both classes rateably or by the residue only.
- H
- I

Dill for the Public Trustee.

Harman for the pecuniary legatees.

Hunt for the residuary legatees.

ASTBURY, J., stated the facts and continued: Under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (1) (a) there became payable on the death of the widow estate duty on the unappointed fund, as property of which she was at the date of her death competent to dispose. Her executor became liable to pay this estate duty under s. 6 (2) of the Act of 1894, and, under s. 9 (1), the rateable part of the whole duty payable on the death of the widow, in proportion to the value of any property which did not pass to her executor as such, and which includes this unappointed fund, is made a first charge upon the property in respect of which the duty is leviable. If the widow had had no power of appointment, then, under s. 8 (4), which provides:

"Where property passes on the death of the deceased, and his executor is not accountable for the estate duty in respect of such property, every person to whom any property so passes for any beneficial interest in possession, . . . shall be accountable for the estate duty," the pecuniary legatees would have become liable, under sub-s. (4), to account for their proportionate parts of the duty. I do not think that O'Grady v. Wilmot (2) really throws any light on the question that I have to decide.

If the matter were free from authority, I think there would be much to be said for this proposition—that, there being estate duty payable in respect of this unappointed fund, which is made a first charge upon the fund by s. 9 (1), that incumbrance ought, having regard to the way in which the testator has given the fund, to be discharged out of the fund as a whole, and that thereafter the pecuniary legacies would be payable, leaving the remainder of the fund to be distributed as part of the testator's ultimate residue. It is not necessary for me to consider that further, because, in the view that I take of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Berry v. Gaukroger (1), I am not at liberty to deal with the matter on that footing. In that case the testator, who died before the Act, gave his real and personal property to trustees upon trust for conversion, and to pay his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies, and to invest the residue, and out of the income to pay his widow an annuity of £500. Then he directed that after her death the trustees should hold the trust fund upon trust to pay thereout certain legacies, amounting in the aggregate to £9,000, and then to divide the residue among certain persons named in the will. Except that there was no power of appointment given to his widow, the trusts in that case are similar to the ones with which I have to deal. The widow died after the Act came into operation. Estate duty became payable upon so much of the fund as had been set apart to answer annuities and as representing real estate, and the Court of Appeal held that the pecuniary legatees must bear a proportionate part of the duty and that the whole did not fall upon the ultimate residue under the testator's will.

It is perfectly true that all the members of the court decided the case, in one respect, on the language of s. 8 (4), of the Finance Act, 1894. The property in that case being property for which the widow's executor was not accountable, every person to whom it passed was made accountable under that section in the way that I have read. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., decided the case solely on the ground of that personal liability. ROMER, L.J., took, I think, the same view, but he went further. After stating that the words "any property" in s. 8 (4), included the pecuniary legatees in that case, he said ([1903] 2 Ch. at p. 133):

"that being so, I think that under s. 9 (1) the duty assessable as against these legacies became a first charge on the legacies, as against the legatees; and,

- A as above observed, I find nothing in the Act or the will which would justify the court in freeing the pecuniary legatees from this charge by making the residuary legatees indemnify them from it."

The language of that sentence is not free from difficulty, and it has been suggested by counsel before me that all that ROMER, L.J., meant was that the pecuniary legacies, being property within s. 8 (4), and the legatees being, therefore, under an obligation to pay the duty, the charge in s. 9 (1), was not a charge which in any way overrode that liability. But I think the language must be read as going further than that. His words are: "I think that under s. 9 (1), the duty assessable as against these legacies"—not merely the duty payable by the legatees, but the duty assessable as against the legacies—"became a first charge on the legacies as against the legatees." COZENS-HARDY, L.J., after basing his judgment on s. 8 (4), said (ibid. at p. 135):

"The only other question is whether there is anything in the language of the will sufficient to exempt the legatees from this liability to contribute"

—that is, the liability to contribute under the rule that he had previously dealt with. Then he says:

D "I can find nothing in the use of the word 'legacy' to justify this conclusion. The charge created by the Finance Act under s. 9 (1), was, of course, not in contemplation by the testator, who died many years before the Finance Act. It is a fresh burden, and it must be borne rateably, according to the beneficial interest of the parties in the fund."

E I can only read that sentence as meaning that there is a charge (as there undoubtedly is) created by s. 9 (1), and that in the case before him, where there were pecuniary legacies payable out of this fund, and the balance was divisible as has been mentioned, that the burden was a burden which fell upon all the interests in the fund, and must be borne accordingly. It has been contended that that decision ought to be regarded as based solely upon the facts of that particular case, and upon s. 8 (4) which was operative. That section is not operative in the present case, and it has been contended that I ought to hold that this duty is an incumbrance upon this trust fund, which has now become divisible, and that it ought to be discharged in relief of the pecuniary legatees upon that fund at the expense of the residue. As I have said, if it were not for the decision and the passages which I have read in Berry v. Gaukroger (1), I think there would be sound reason in coming to that view. But, giving the case and the expressions of ROMER and COZENS-HARDY, L.J.J., the best attention I can, I do not think it would be respectful for me to come to a conclusion which, so far as I can understand their view, would be contrary to the conclusions at which they arrived. I, therefore, hold that the charge created by s. 9 (1), is a charge on the legacies and on the residue, and that it must be borne rateably by the several interests accordingly.

H The second question is, first, how ought to be borne the costs and expenses of and incidental to (a) the payment of the estate duty which is payable proportionately by the various parties interested, (b) the payment of legacy duty on the pecuniary legacies, and (c) the distribution of the balance of the fund, and, secondly, how the withdrawal fee payable under the public Trustee Act, 1906, and the rules and orders made thereunder ought to be borne. With regard to the first three items, although the estate duty and the legacy duty are duties payable in respect of the interests given to the pecuniary legatee, I think that, as the whole estate is now being wound-up and distributed, they are ordinary costs of distribution, and as the testator has given pecuniary legacies out of this fund, and has directed the ultimate residue only to be held for the residuary legatees, I think the latter must bear and pay these costs as ordinary costs of distribution, and that no proportion thereof ought to fall on the pecuniary legatees. I have come to the same conclusion with regard to the withdrawal fee payable to the Public Trustee under the Public Trustee (Fees) Order, 1912, which provides that upon the withdrawal of any capital from the trust, a fee, as therein mentioned, shall be payable, and the Public Trustee Act, 1906, s. 9 (2), provides that any expenses which might be paid out of trust property by the Public Trustee shall be paid in like manner, and in addition to such expenses. Here the trustee is distributing, or about to distribute, the total fund. I think that the withdrawal fee, just as the other expenses, is an expense which he must incur as such trustee in making this final distribution, and that it must fall upon the residue.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Finnis, Downey, Linnell & Chessher, for S. W. Page & Sons, Wolverhampton; Cecil J. Mercer.

[Reported by G. HAYES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re KNIGHT'S SETTLED ESTATES

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Neville, J.), November 15, 1917]

[Reported [1918] 1 Ch. 211; 87 L.J.Ch. 111; 118 L.T. 170;
62 Sol. Jo. 141]

Settled Land—Tenant for life—Incumbrance created by settlor—Sale with consent of incumbrancer—Power to shift incumbrance overreached by sale and attached to proceeds of sale—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict., c. 38), s. 5, s. 20 (2).

A tenant for life who desires to sell part of the settled land which is subject to an incumbrance created by the settlor so that the incumbrance should not attach to the proceeds of sale has power to do so under s. 5 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and with the consent of the incumbrancer, to shift the incumbrance to any other part of the settled land not sold in exoneration of the part sold and the proceeds of sale, notwithstanding that by a conveyance under s. 20 (2) of that Act, although the incumbrance on the land is discharged the incumbrance itself is not overreached but attaches to the proceeds of sale.

Notes. Section 5 and s. 20 (2) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, have been replaced by s. 69 and s. 72, respectively, of the Settled Land Act, 1925, see 23 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 153, 158. The words in s. 5 of the Act of 1925 "... whether capable of being overreached on the exercise by the tenant for life of his powers under this Act or not) ..." would appear to confirm the decision in this case.

As to the power of the tenant for life to shift incumbrances created by the settlement, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 569, and for cases see 40 DIGEST (Repl.) 838.

Cases referred to in argument:

Re Earl of Strafford and Maples, [1896] 1 Ch. 235; 65 L.J.Ch. 124; 73 L.T. 586; 44 W.R. 259; 40 Sol. Jo. 130, C.A.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 838, 3152.

Hampden v. Earl of Buckinghamshire, [1893] 2 Ch. 531; 62 L.J.Ch. 643; 68 L.T. 695; 41 W.R. 516; 37 Sol. Jo. 455; 2 R. 419, C.A.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 809, 2870.

Re Mundy and Roper's Contract, [1899] 1 Ch. 275; 68 L.J.Ch. 135; 79 L.T. 583; 47 W.R. 226; 43 Sol. Jo. 151, C.A.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 866, 3384.

Adjourned Summons.

Edward Knight by his will, dated Feb. 17, 1876, settled certain freehold estates in strict settlement, and thereby charged the Neatham Manor Farm of 525 acres

A and Neatham Mill, in the county of Southampton, forming part of the settled estates, with a jointure rentcharge in favour of Florence Knight, the wife of the testator's son, Montague George Knight, the first tenant for life under his will. The testator died on Nov. 5, 1879. Montague George Knight died on July 17, 1914, without ever having had any issue, and in the events which happened

B Lionel Charles Edward Knight, the plaintiff, succeeded as tenant for life of the estates settled by the will. The plaintiff, with the object of providing money for payment of estate duty which became payable on the death of the late tenant for life, Montague George Knight, desired to sell the Neatham Manor Farm and Neatham Mill, the part of the settled estates which he was able to sell most advantageously. Not wishing that the jointure rentcharge should attach to the proceeds of sale, and desiring that the jointure rentcharge should attach to the

C money arising under the Settled Land Acts, the plaintiff took out this summons, to which the present trustees of the will were made defendants, to determine whether on a sale of the Neatham Manor Farm and Neatham Mill or part thereof he had power as tenant for life under s. 5 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, with the consent of the jointress, to charge the jointure rentcharge on other parts of the settled estates in exoneration of the part sold, notwithstanding that the said jointure

D rentcharge either would or might be overreached by the conveyance by the plaintiff to a purchaser at such sale.

H. Johnston for the plaintiff.

F. E. Farrer for the trustees.

P. F. Wheeler for the jointress.

E NEVILLE, J.—A short but very important question is raised upon this summons under s. 5 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, which provides that:

“Where on a sale, exchange, or partition there is an incumbrance affecting land sold or given in exchange or on partition, the tenant for life, with the consent of the incumbrancer, may charge that incumbrance on any other part of the settled land, whether already charged therewith or not, in exoneration of the part sold or so given, and, by conveyance of the fee simple or other estate or interest the subject of the settlement, or by creation of a term of years in the settled land, or otherwise, make provision accordingly.”

F

In WOLSTENHOLME'S CONVEYANCING AND SETTLED LAND ACTS (9th Edn.) p. 343 [see now (12th Edn.) vol. 2, p. 1086], the note to s. 5 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, is as follows:

G

“‘Incumbrance,’ within the meaning of this section, includes a charge having priority to the settlement, although no money has been actually raised under it, but not a charge created by, or in exercise of any power in, the settlement, on which no money has been actually raised. The last-mentioned charge is, but the other is not, overreached by the conveyance of the tenant for life under s. 20 (2). A substituted security on any other part of the settled land may be given under this section for any charge not overreached.”

H

That note has found its way in different words into several other text-books, to which I have been referred, and they seem to be unanimous as to its accuracy. But in my opinion the view there expressed as to the operation of the section is erroneous, and it is easy to understand how such a mistaken view came to be accepted by the textwriters, because on a superficial consideration of the section one sees that if a tenant for life can, with the consent of an incumbrancer whose incumbrance has priority, transfer the charge so as to sell free from the incumbrance, why should he have to get the consent of an incumbrancer to transfer an incumbrance which is overreached by the sale and which attaches to the proceeds of sale? But on going a little deeper into the section it becomes clear that that view is erroneous, because it overlooks the fact that, although the incumbrance on the land is discharged by a conveyance under s. 20 (2) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the incumbrance itself is not overreached, but attaches to the proceeds of sale, and that the tenant for life may wish to transfer it to another part of the settled estates. Consequently, the power of the tenant for life to use the whole of the proceeds of sale will be hampered if he cannot, as here, use those moneys without limitation as capital money arising under the Act. There is great convenience given by the words used in s. 5 of this Act if they are given a wide interpretation so as to get rid of a charge on land to be sold or given in exchange or partition. I have carefully considered the section, and I can see nothing whatever in its language to justify the limiting of its operation as suggested by text-writers, and if their view is right a great benefit given to the tenant for life would be withheld from him. I hold on the construction of the section that an incumbrance, although overreached by a sale and attaching to the proceeds of sale, is within the beneficial operation of the section. Therefore an incumbrance, though created by the settlement itself, is nevertheless within the meaning of the section. There will be a declaration that on a sale of the Neatham Manor Farm Estate the tenant for life may, with the consent of the jointress, charge the jointure rentcharge on other parts of the estates settled by the will of the testator.

I

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Andrew, Wood, Purves & Sutton, for G. Brook Night, Farnborough; Evans, Wadham & Co.

[Reported by G. P. LANGWORTHY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

RONDEAU, LEGRAND & CO. v. MARKS

[COURT OF APPEAL (Pickford and Bankes, L.J.J., and Sargant, J.), October 15, 1917]

[Reported [1918] 1 K.B. 75; 87 L.J.K.B. 215; 117 L.T. 651; 34 T.L.R. 8;
62 Sol. Jo. 24]

Husband and Wife—"Necessaries"—Wearing apparel—Agreement that all apparel be provided by husband for wife and be his property—Validity.

A husband is bound to provide his wife with necessary wearing apparel, but he is not bound to give it to her. Therefore, where a husband has provided his wife with wearing apparel in pursuance of an agreement between them that the property therein is to remain in the husband, the agreement is valid and the apparel is not liable to be taken in execution by a judgment creditor of the wife.

Decision of BAILHACHE, J., [1917] 2 K.B. 636, affirmed.

Notes. As to gifts between husband and wife, see 19 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 831 et seq.; and for cases see 27 DIGEST (Repl.) 145 et seq.

Cases referred to in argument:

Massen, Templier & Co. v. De Fries, [1909] 2 K.B. 531; 79 L.J.K.B. 24; 101 L.T. 476; 25 T.L.R. 784; 53 Sol. Jo. 744, C.A.; 27 Digest (Repl.) 102, 751.

Read v. Legard (1851), 6 Exch. 636; 20 L.J.Ex. 309; 17 L.T.O.S. 145; 15 Jur. 494; 155 E.R. 698; 27 Digest (Repl.) 80, 613.

Powell v. Hankey (1722), 2 P. Wms. 82.

Appeal from a judgment of BAILHACHE, J.

The following Case was stated by MASTER CHITTY for the opinion of the court in an interpleader issue referred to the master in respect of a claim by a husband to the property in his wife's clothing and articles of attire as against execution creditors on a judgment obtained by them against the wife. (i) The claimant (the husband of the judgment debtor) claimed all his wife's dresses, clothing, and

- A wearing apparel on the ground that, in July, 1914, he made an agreement that all dresses, articles of clothing, and wearing apparel which were to be used or worn by his wife were to be purchased by the claimant in his own name and on his credit, and that such dresses, articles of clothing, and wearing apparel when purchased were to be the absolute property of the claimant, and that he was to be entitled to dispose of them as and when and how he pleased, his wife having
- B no right or title to them except to wear them during his pleasure. The master found the agreement proved, and that the dresses and wearing apparel were bought by the claimant and used by his wife on such terms. (ii) It was contended by the execution creditors that the alleged agreement was in fraud of creditors, contrary to public policy, void for want of consideration, invalid in law, and not such an agreement as the law would recognise as binding in effect. The question
- C for the opinion of the court was whether such an agreement was valid in law or not.

BAILHACHE, J., held that the agreement was valid, and the execution creditors appealed.

Schiller, K.C., and J. D. Crawford for the execution creditors.

D. M. Hogg, K.C., and C. F. Lowenthal for the claimant.

- D PICKFORD, L.J.—I think the judgment of BAILHACHE, J., was right. If I may say so, I think that the only difficulty has been occasioned by the form in which the Case is Stated. Assume that the property in this case would have been the wife's but for this agreement, is this agreement to take it away from her a valid one? I do not think that is the question at all, and I do not think so for the reason that BAILHACHE, J., has given. There lies at the root of that assumption this
- E proposition, that the obligation of a husband to provide clothing for his wife is an obligation to provide it by giving it to her and that he does not discharge his obligation without doing it, and, therefore, apart from any agreement such as has been mentioned in this case, as soon as the clothing has been bought, it becomes the property of the wife. I do not think that any such obligation exists. It clearly
- F did not exist before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, because all the clothing that the husband provided, including what was called paraphernalia, remained his property, and could be seized by his execution creditors. The Married Women's Property Act said that the wife might acquire property of her own, but I do not know that it ever said that property bought with her husband's money which did not become her property has ipso facto, as soon as that Act was passed, become her property.

- G I think that the husband discharged his obligation in law to the wife so long as he provided her clothes, either by giving them to her or by lending them to her. I agree with BAILHACHE, J., that in ordinary cases where a husband provides clothing for his wife the presumption is that he intends to give it to her, but I see nothing to prevent the husband and the wife from rebutting that presumption, and I see
- H nothing to prevent the conversation by which they rebut that presumption from being called an agreement. It does not follow that, by calling it an agreement, you attach to it all the niceties of consideration and other matters. What happened in this case was that they "agreed," using the word in the ordinary and popular sense, that the provision for her should be by lending the clothes and not by giving them, and the fact that there was attached to the loan a right of the husband to re-possess himself of the property and clothing does not seem to me to divest
- I him of his obligation to provide for his wife. If he took the property away and left her without any clothing at all, he would have an obligation to provide for her, it might be, by lending her other clothes, and providing her in just the same way as he provided her at first.

The only question we are asked is whether that agreement is valid in law or not. I can see nothing to say that it is not. I am dealing with it altogether apart from questions of consideration, or what might be necessary to take the property out of the wife, if it had ever been in her. I think that, where there is only an obligation to provide either by giving or lending, as agreed between the parties, the agreement for lending is valid in law in this sense, that there is nothing to prevent the parties doing so. It has been argued that we must simply say whether or not this is such an agreement as could be enforced if not supported by consideration. I do not think that that is the intention of the case before us at all. I think the intention of the case is simply to ask the court whether what took place between the husband and the wife was operative, or constituted such a state of things that this property is now the property of the husband, and not of the wife. I think it did, and in that sense it is valid in law. I do not see any real difficulty except the one that has been raised by assuming, or asking us to assume, that, but for this agreement, the property was the wife's. What took place in this case was perfectly valid in law, and BAILHACHE, J.'s, judgment saying that it was valid in law is right.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree. This case has been argued as though this so-called agreement excluded the husband's common law obligation to provide his wife with necessary clothing. I do not so read or interpret the conversation which took place between this husband and wife. It seems to me that, if you use language other than the one in which they themselves clothed their statements, it amounts to this: The husband says to the wife, "I will provide all your clothes, and, as by so doing I shall be fulfilling and more than fulfilling my common law obligation, you must undertake not to pledge my credit," and she agrees. He then says, "You shall have no right of property in any of the clothes so provided, but you shall have a right to wear them only during my pleasure," and she agrees. Whether you treat that as an agreement in the strict legal technical sense that counsel for the execution creditors says we are obliged to take it, or whether you treat it as an agreement in a colloquial sense, as a statement to which both parties assent, seems to me immaterial. If it was necessary and we were bound to treat it as one of a legal agreement for which consideration was required, I think I can find in the statement, as I read it, sufficient consideration, there being a statement and an agreement with reference to clothes other than and beyond those which would be covered by the husband's common law obligations. But I feel myself entitled to take the view which BAILHACHE, J., took, that, when this Special Case asks whether such an agreement is valid in law, you are entitled to take the view that it was operative in the sense that it marked an arrangement between husband and wife as to the rights that she should exercise in respect of clothes provided for her, and was something short of a legal agreement which required consideration. I think on both grounds the appeal fails.

SARGANT, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the point raised by the Special Case can be interpreted by the contention mentioned in para. 2. There it is said, "It was contended by the execution creditors that the alleged agreement was in fraud of the creditors"—that is, in fraud of the wife's creditors—that it was "contrary to public policy; void for want of consideration," and so on. That obviously assumes that the property in the goods at some time or another was in the wife, and the contention is that the effect of the agreement was to raise some legal bar which prevented her dealing with the goods and rendered the agreement invalid. In fact, the goods, as was admitted by counsel for the execution creditors, were goods purchased by the husband, and, therefore, were prima facie the property of the husband. Whether this agreement is an agreement which can be enforced in every respect or not, it certainly is sufficient to prevent the ordinary presumption arising under which the clothes might be supposed to have been given to the wife by the husband, and, if the agreement is in any way invalid, the result merely is that the goods remain the property of the person who originally purchased them and provided them—namely, the husband.

But assume for a moment what I do not think is the case, that the wife might have complained of this agreement, and might have come and demanded to have other clothes provided for her which should be her absolute property. Does that

- A give the execution creditors of the wife any right at all to claim that these particular goods with regard to which this agreement was made are the property of the wife for the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of her debts? It seems to me that such a contention has only to be stated to be disposed of. I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

Solicitors : Cohen & Cohen; W. B. Glasier.

- B [Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

HUMPHREYS v. MILLER

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady and Bankes, L.J.J., and A. T. Lawrence, J.), December 7, 11, 1916]

D

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 122; 86 L.J.K.B. 1111; 116 L.T. 668;
33 T.L.R. 115]

Landlord and Tenant—Furnished letting—Implied warranty of fitness of tenant to occupy.

E

On the taking of furnished apartments, there is no implied warranty by the incoming tenant that he is a fit and proper person to occupy the apartments, and is not suffering from any infectious or contagious disease.

Notes. Considered: Collins v. Hopkins, [1923] All E.R. Rep. 225.

As to warranty of fitness on the letting of a furnished house, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 577, 578; and for cases see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 547.

- F Cases referred to:

- (1) Smith v. Marrable (1843), 11 M. & W. 5; Car. & M. 479; 12 L.J.Ex. 223; 7 Jur. 70; 152 E.R. 693; 31 Digest (Repl.) 195, 3266.
- (2) Wilson v. Finch Hatton (1877), 2 Ex.D. 336; 46 L.J.Q.B. 489; 36 L.T. 473; 41 J.P. 583; 25 W.R. 537; 31 Digest (Repl.) 196, 3268.
- (3) Bird v. Lord Greville (1884), Cab. & El. 317; 31 Digest (Repl.) 197, 3281.

G

Application by the plaintiff for judgment or a new trial of an action tried by DARLING, J., with a special jury.

H

The plaintiff, who let furnished lodgings, sued to recover damages for breach of warranty, fraudulent misrepresentation, and concealment against Miss I. K. Miller and Mr. A. W. Rendell, the executors of H. C. Miller, and Dr. Harbord. In July, 1914, Miss Miller engaged furnished lodgings in the plaintiff's house for herself and her father, and on Sept. 10 they entered into occupation of the lodgings and remained there until the death of Mr. Miller on Dec. 16. Dr. Harbord, who had previously been Mr. Miller's medical adviser, attended him from Sept. 21 until his death. As a result of letting the lodgings, some of the plaintiff's furniture had to be destroyed. The questions left to the jury, with the answers thereto, were as follows: (i) Was Mr. Miller when he entered or remained in the plaintiff's rooms liable to infect them or the furniture there with leprosy?—Yes. (ia) If so, did he or Miss Miller know it?—Yes, both. (ii) Is leprosy infectious or contagious so as to be in England communicable from a leper to another person?—Yes. (iii) Did Miss Miller and Dr. Harbord fraudulently misrepresent that Mr. Miller was a fit and proper person to occupy the plaintiff's rooms?—Yes. (iv) Did Miss Miller and Dr. Harbord conceal from the plaintiff the fact that Mr. Miller was to their knowledge a leper and suffering from a disease which made him unfit and dangerous to occupy the rooms?—Yes. (v) Did Dr. Harbord, acting as agent for Miss Miller and Mr. Miller, state to Mrs. Humphreys that Mr. Miller was not suffering from any infectious or serious disease?—Yes. (vi) If so, were those statements untrue to the knowledge of either; if so, which?—Yes, to the knowledge of both. (vii) Did Mr. Miller, Miss Miller, and Dr. Harbord conspire together to conceal the state of Mr. Miller from the plaintiff and to make false statements to the plaintiff for that purpose?—Yes. (viii) Damages?—£250. DARLING, J., held (32 T.L.R. 524) that there was in law no implied warranty that an incoming tenant of furnished apartments was a fit and proper person to occupy them, and that there was no evidence of fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment. He gave judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff appealed.

I

Hemmerde, K.C., and H. W. Liversedge for the plaintiff.

McCall, K.C., and Neilson for the defendants Miller and Rendell.

Gordon Hewart, K.C., and Craig Henderson for the defendant Harbord.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J., stated the facts, and continued: Is there any warranty or condition that, when a person engages furnished rooms he shall not be suffering from any disease which may be contagious, or that he shall not be carrying disease? It is admitted that there is no authority that, on engaging such rooms, there is any such warranty. Such a proposition has never been heard of in the text-books. When a person lets furnished rooms, there is a warranty that the premises are reasonably fit for immediate occupation, and there is authority that a tenant would be entitled to repudiate the contract at once if it appears that the premises are not fit for immediate occupation. That is the result of the decisions in Smith v. Marrable (1); Wilson v. Finch Hatton (2), and Birt v. Lord Greville (3). In my opinion, there is no foundation in law for the argument that a warranty by the intending tenant ought to be implied in such circumstances. If any such warranty is to be imposed, it will have to be imposed by statute. There is nothing in the text-books to support such a proposition, nor is there any principle involved. I agree with the view of DARLING, J., and think that the appeal should be dismissed. [His Lordship further held that there was no evidence of concealment against Miss Miller, nor of misrepresentation against Dr. Harbord.]

BANKES, L.J., and A. T. LAWRENCE, J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Tippetts; Mason & Co.; Le Brasseur & Oakley.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ORMISTON v. GREAT WESTERN RAIL. CO.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Rowlatt, J.), January 19, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 598; 86 L.J.K.B. 759; 116 L.T. 479;
33 T.L.R. 171]

Railway—Liability for act of servant—Arrest of passenger—Authority by company—Regulation of Railways Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict., c. 57), s. 5 (2).

A servant or officer of a railway company may arrest a passenger by virtue of his powers under s. 5 (2) of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1889, only if the passenger refuses to give his name and address after having failed to produce his ticket or to pay his fare. The law does not imply against a railway company that they have given authority to a servant to do that which they have no right to do themselves, and, therefore, no authority can be implied to make a company liable for the act of their servant in arresting a passenger save an authority to act in conformity with s. 5.

The plaintiff held a first-class season ticket between two stations on the defendants' railway. On July 31, 1916, he arrived at one of the stations and showed his ticket to the collector. As he proceeded towards the exit from the station, he was seized by a porter in the defendants' employment, who, in the presence of numerous persons, charged him with having travelled first class with a third-class ticket. The plaintiff sued the defendants, claiming damages for slander, assault, and false imprisonment.

Held: the action failed.

Notes. As to liability of corporations in tort and liability for the acts of a servant, see 9 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 87 et seq., and ibid., vol. 25, pp. 535 et seq.; for cases see 13 DIGEST (Repl.) 317 et seq., and 34 DIGEST 123 et seq. As to offences in relation to tickets and fares, see 31 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 669 et seq.; and for cases see 8 DIGEST (Repl.) 119 et seq. As to slander imputing a crime, see 24 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 30; and for cases see 32 DIGEST 47, 48. For the Regulation of Railways Act, 1889, s. 5, see 19 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 865.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Michael v. Spiers and Pond, Ltd. (1909), 101 L.T. 352; 25 T.L.R. 740; 32 Digest 48, 552.
- (2) Hellwig v. Mitchell, [1910] 1 K.B. 609; 79 L.J.K.B. 270; 102 L.T. 110; 26 T.L.R. 244; 32 Digest 48, 553.
- (3) Poultton v. London and South Western Rail. Co. (1867), L.R. 2 Q.B. 534; 8 B. & S. 616; 36 L.J.Q.B. 294; 17 L.T. 11; 31 J.P. 677; 16 W.R. 309; 8 Digest (Repl.) 127, 812.

Also referred to in argument:

- Goff v. Great Northern Rail. Co.* (1861), 3 E. & E. 672; 30 L.J.Q.B. 148; 3 L.T. 850; 25 J.P. 326; 7 Jur. N.S. 286; 121 E.R. 594; 8 Digest (Repl.) 126, 811.
- Edwards v. London and North Western Rail. Co.* (1870), L.R. 5 C.P. 445; 39 L.J.C.P. 241; 22 L.T. 656; 18 W.R. 834; 34 Digest 136, 1055.
- Allen v. London and South Western Rail. Co.* (1870), L.R. 6 Q.B. 65; 40 L.J.Q.B. 55; 23 L.T. 612; 35 J.P. 308; 19 W.R. 127; 11 Cox, C.C. 621; 34 Digest 135, 1048.
- Bayley v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Rail. Co.* (1873), L.R. 8 C.P. 148; 42 L.J.C.P. 78; 28 L.T. 366, Ex.Ch.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 124, 801.
- Moore v. Metropolitan Rail. Co.* (1872), L.R. 8 Q.B. 36; 42 L.J.Q.B. 23; 27 L.T. 579; 37 J.P. 438; 21 W.R. 145; 8 Digest (Repl.) 127, 813.
- Bank of New South Wales v. Owston* (1879), 4 App. Cas. 270; 48 L.J.P.C. 25; 40 L.T. 500; 43 J.P. 476; 14 Cox, C.C. 267, P.C.; 1 Digest (Repl.) 382, 468.
- Lambert v. Great Eastern Rail. Co.*, [1909] 2 K.B. 776; 79 L.J.K.B. 32; 101 L.T. 408; 73 J.P. 445; 25 T.L.R. 734; 53 Sol. Jo. 732; 22 Cox, C.C. 165. C.A.; 34 Digest 40, 162.

Webb v. Beavan (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 609; 52 L.J.Q.B. 544; 49 L.T. 201; 47 J.P. 489; 32 Digest 48, 550. A

Knights v. London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co. (1893), 62 L.J.Q.B. 378; 5 R. 399; 8 Digest (Repl.) 119, 762.

Action tried before ROWLATT, J., without a jury.

The plaintiff held a first-class season ticket on the defendants' railway between Westbourne Park Station and Hanwell Station, and, according to his evidence, on July 31, 1916, he passed through the ticket barrier at the Westbourne Park Station, showing his ticket to a ticket collector. Before he had arrived at the exit from the station, a porter employed by the defendants took him by the arm, saying, "I want you," dragged him back to the ticket collector, and, in the presence of a large number of persons, said: "You have been travelling first class with a third-class ticket." The ticket collector thereupon said: "He has a first-class ticket." B C

The plaintiff claimed to recover damages for assault, false imprisonment and slander.

By the Regulation of Railways Act, 1889, s. 5:

"(1) Every passenger by a railway shall, on request by an officer or servant of a railway company, either produce, and if so requested deliver up, a ticket showing that his fare is paid, or pay his fare from the place whence he started, or give the officer or servant his name and address; and in case of default shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine . . . (2) If a passenger having failed either to produce, or if requested to deliver up, a ticket showing that his fare is paid, or to pay his fare, refuses, on request by an officer or servant of a railway company, to give his name and address, any officer of the company or any constable may detain him until he can be conveniently brought before some justice or otherwise discharged by due course of law. (3) If any person—(a) Travels or attempts to travel on a railway without having previously paid his fare, and with intent to avoid payment thereof . . . he shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding forty shillings, or, in the case of a second or subsequent offence, either to a fine not exceeding twenty pounds, or in the discretion of the court to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month." D E F

Alexander Neilson for the plaintiff.

Schiller, K.C., and Barrington-Ward for the defendants. G

ROWLATT, J., said that the claim for slander could not succeed as the offence of travelling first with a third-class ticket with intent to avoid payment of the fare was punishable by fine only, and it was settled by Michael v. Spiers and Pond (1) and Hellwig v. Mitchell (2) that to accuse anyone of that class of offence was not actionable slander without special damage, and he continued: It is not a possible contention. That disposes of the question of slander. H

I come to the question of assault. [His LORDSHIP stated the facts and continued:] The evidence of the plaintiff is that the porter came forward and took upon himself to assault the plaintiff in this way. In the first place counsel for the plaintiff asks me to say that that indicates some actual authority on the part of the defendants to arrest the plaintiff. The porter did technically arrest the plaintiff, but it is the most elementary thing in the world that the fact that a person does a thing is not evidence that he has authority to do it or delegate it to another person. There is no evidence that there was any actual authority to arrest the plaintiff, but there is, of course, a certain implied authority to servants of railway companies, and it is that that has to be examined upon the evidence that has been given. I

First of all, in order to make clear the point that counsel for the defendants made, it is necessary to see what are exactly the powers of the defendants themselves.

A because the principle is that they are not to be held to have impliedly given authority to their servants to do something which would be unlawful for them to do themselves. They might do it expressly, but that must be proved. The law does not imply against them that they have given authority to their servants to do things which they have no right to do themselves. What is the power of a railway company in these circumstances? By s. 103 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, the offence was created of travelling without having previously paid the fare, and with intent to avoid payment. That includes without having paid the proper fare, and then by s. 104 it was provided that any person discovered in or after committing or attempting to commit any of the offences mentioned in s. 103, for there were other offences than that which I have shortly described, might be arrested by any servant of the company. That was the law under that Act, but in 1889 a curious statutory situation was brought about by reason of the enactment of s. 5 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1889. I will not read that all through, because it does not add to the clarity of the argument, but in my view that section replaces ss. 103 and 104 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, so far as it covers the same ground. It is an extraordinary thing that that section should have been put upon the statute book, and that it should not have been made clear by repeal or otherwise how ss. 103 and 104 were to stand in future. But the Statute Law Revision Act, 1892, a form of enactment which is not supposed to change any substantive law, did repeal all the earlier, and, for the purpose of this plaintiff, the relevant part of s. 103 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. It left the definite offence, namely, not quitting a carriage, still governed by s. 103, and left s. 104, which was still necessary to give powers to arrest applicable to that offence which was left to be governed by s. 103, namely, not quitting the railway carriage, but in my view, and I think it was the view of those who drafted the Statute Law Revision Act in question, so far as not paying the fare is concerned, the code and the remedy for it that is contained in the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, went, and an entirely new one was provided by s. 5 of the Act of 1889, and under that code there is no power to arrest for travelling without having previously paid the fare, and with intent to avoid payment thereof. The only power of arrest is to arrest a person for not having produce his ticket and refusing on request by an authority to give his name and address. It is that, and that alone, that the companies are empowered to arrest passengers for.

Therefore, according to the principle laid down in Poulton v. London and South Western Rail. Co. (3), the defendants only impliedly gave authority to their servants to arrest people for not giving their name and address on the request of an officer or servant of the railway company after not producing a railway ticket or paying their fare. They gave them authority to arrest for that. That means that they gave them authority to arrest them upon an allegation that they have refused to give their name and address upon request. It does not mean that they only give them authority to do it when they are right, so that the defendants are not responsible if the arrest is not justified, because there is no authority; it does not mean that, but it means that the defendants only give the porter authority to act for them in determining whether a man shall be arrested, and arresting a man when the accusation against him is such as gives power to the defendants themselves to arrest, namely, that he has not given his name and address. The evidence in this case, it is to be observed, negatives on the part of the plaintiff that suggestion. This porter emerged from the crowd and proceeded to arrest him for an irrelevant cause. He simply came forward and seized him by the arm for travelling in a class superior to that for which he had a ticket. He might as well have purported to arrest him for travelling without a hat, or any other trivial cause, so far as the law is concerned. He had no authority to do that on behalf of the defendants. The defendants did not put him there to decide whether or not the plaintiff had travelled or whether there was a case against the man for travelling without a proper ticket, and arresting him for that purpose. They might have put him there to decide whether a man had failed to give his name and address, but that was not the point at all. He arrested him for a cause that was wholly outside any implied authority he could possibly have. On those grounds it seems to me that the point taken by counsel for the defendants is one to which there is no answer, and that the action must fail and be dismissed with costs.

Judgment for defendants.

Solicitors: Bartlett & Gluckstein; L. B. Page.

[Reported by W. V. BALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re MELTON. MILK v. TOWERS

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Warrington and Scrutton, L.J.J.), October 19, 22, 23, 1917]

[Reported [1918] 1 Ch. 37; 87 L.J.Ch. 18; 117 L.T. 679; 34 T.L.R. 20;

[1917] H.B.R. 246]

Guarantee—Surety—Right against debtor—Bequest by surety to debtor—Bankruptcy of debtor—Proof of debt by creditor—Satisfaction of guaranteed debt out of surety's estate—Right of executor to retain out of bequest to debtor amount paid in respect of debt.

In 1901 a testator guaranteed to a bank the amount of his son's indebtedness thereto to the extent of £250. The testator died in 1907, having by his will given his estate to his wife for life, with remainder to the son and three daughters in equal shares. In 1910 the son assigned his vested interest in the estate to the bank, and in 1911 he became bankrupt. The bank proved in the bankruptcy, and received a dividend. In 1912 the executors of the testator paid the £250 due to the bank under the guarantee. In 1915 the bank, with the concurrence of the trustee in the son's bankruptcy, assigned the son's interest in the testator's estate to the son's wife. On the death of the testator's wife in 1916,

Held: the son being under an obligation to indemnify the testator against the consequence of the guarantee, he became a debtor to the testator's estate to the extent of the amount by which his liability to the bank had been discharged out of the testator's estate; so much of the son's assets as was necessary to satisfy this claim of the testator's estate never formed part of the son's property distributable among his creditors in the bankruptcy; and, therefore, although the bank had proved against the son in his bankruptcy, the executors of the testator's estate were entitled to deduct the amount paid by them under the guarantee from the son's one-fourth share of the testator's estate which had been assigned to the son's wife.

Re Binns, Lee v. Binns (1), [1896] 2 Ch. 584, overruled.

Notes. Referred to: Re Lennard, Lennard's Trustee v. Lennard, [1934] Ch. 235. Applied: The Liverpool (No. 2), [1960] 3 All E.R. 307.

As to legatees bringing debts into account, see 16 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 321, 322, and as to a surety's rights against a debtor after satisfaction by surety of guaranteed debt, see ibid., vol. 18, pp. 478-482. For cases see 23 DIGEST (Repl.) 444 et seq., and 26 DIGEST (Repl.) 124 et seq.

Cases referred to:

(1) Re Binns, Lee v. Binns, [1896] 2 Ch. 584; 65 L.J.Ch. 830; 75 L.T. 99; 40 Sol. Jo. 654; 26 DIGEST (Repl.) 126, 891.

- A (2) Midland Banking Co. v. Chambers (1869), 4 Ch. App. 398; 38 L.J.Ch. 478; 20 L.T. 346; 17 W.R. 598, L.J.J.; 26 Digest (Repl.) 123, 862.
- (3) Re Sass, Ex parte National Provincial Bank of England, [1896] 2 Q.B. 12; 65 L.J.Q.B. 481; 74 L.T. 383; 44 W.R. 588; 12 T.L.R. 333; 40 Sol. Jo. 686; 3 Mans. 125; 26 Digest (Repl.) 92, 635.
- B (4) Re Oriental Commercial Bank, Ex parte European Bank (1871), 7 Ch. App. 99; 41 L.J.Ch. 217; 25 L.T. 648; 20 W.R. 82, L.J.J.; 10 Digest (Repl.) 982, 6764.
- (5) Willes v. Greenhill (No. 1) (1860), 29 Beav. 376; 30 L.J.Ch. 808; 9 W.R. 217; 54 E.R. 673; 26 Digest (Repl.) 140, 1008.
- (6) Re Watson, Turner v. Watson, [1896] 1 Ch. 925; 65 L.J.Ch. 553; 74 L.T. 453; 44 W.R. 571; 23 Digest (Repl.) 447, 5159.
- C (7) Stammers v. Elliott (1868), 3 Ch. App. 195; 37 L.J.Ch. 353; 18 L.T. 1; 16 W.R. 489, L.C.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 431, 230.
- (8) Cherry v. Boulthbee (1839), 2 Keen, 319; 4 My. & Cr. 442; 9 L.J.Ch. 118; 3 Jur. 1116; 41 E.R. 171, L.C.; 4 Digest (Repl.) 452, 3967.
- (9) Re Peruvian Railway Construction Co., Ltd., [1915] 2 Ch. 442; 85 L.J.Ch. 129; 113 L.T. 1176; 32 T.L.R. 46; 60 Sol. Jo. 25, C.A.; 10 Digest (Repl.) 1075, 7434.
- D (10) Re Whitehouse, Whitehouse v. Edwards (1887), 37 Ch.D. 683; 57 L.J.Ch. 161; 57 L.T. 761; 36 W.R. 181; 23 Digest (Repl.) 447, 5158.
- (11) Rhodesia Goldfields, Ltd., Partridge v. Rhodesia Goldfields, Ltd., [1910] 1 Ch. 233; 79 L.J.Ch. 133; 102 L.T. 126; 54 Sol. Jo. 135; 17 Mans. 23; 43 Digest 922, 3617.
- E (12) Re Akerman, Akerman v. Akerman, [1891] 3 Ch. 212; 61 L.J.Ch. 34; 65 L.T. 194; 40 W.R. 12; 23 Digest (Repl.) 448, 5163.

Also referred to in argument :

- Re Dacre, Whitaker v. Dacre*, [1916] 1 Ch. 344; 85 L.J.Ch. 274; 114 L.T. 387; 60 Sol. Jo. 306, C.A.; 23 Digest (Repl.) 455, 5243.
- F Re Wheeler, Hankinson v. Hayter, [1904] 2 Ch. 66; 73 L.J.Ch. 576; 91 L.T. 227; 52 W.R. 586; 48 Sol. Jo. 493; 23 Digest (Repl.) 450, 5186.
- Armstrong v. Armstrong* (1871), L.R. 12 Eq. 614; 25 L.T. 199; 19 W.R. 971; 4 Digest (Repl.) 455, 3986.
- Re Overend, Gurney & Co., Grissell's Case* (1866), 1 Ch. App. 528; 35 L.J.Ch. 752; 14 L.T. 843; 30 J.P. 548; 12 Jur. N.S. 718; 14 W.R. 1015, L.C. and L.J.J.; 10 Digest (Repl.) 986, 6787.
- G Priddy v. Rose (1817), 3 Mer. 86; 36 E.R. 33; 43 Digest 921, 3612.
- Re Wallis, Ex parte Jenks*, [1902] 1 K.B. 719; 71 L.J.K.B. 465; 18 T.L.R. 414; 9 Mans. 136; 5 Digest (Repl.) 684, 6030.

Appeal from an order of ASTBURY, J., made on a summons taken out by executors and trustees to determine a question arising on the trusts of the will.

- H On Oct. 29, 1901, Richard Melton and James Chapman executed a deed by which they guaranteed to the London and Provincial Bank the payment of moneys then owing by or in the future to be advanced to the former's son, Arthur Melton. The guarantors covenanted :

- I "We hereby jointly and severally guarantee to you, your successors, representatives and assigns . . . the repayment of all moneys which shall at any time hereafter for the time being be due or payable to you from or by the said Arthur Melton . . . either separately or jointly with any other person or persons . . . and we and each and every of us hereby declare that this guarantee shall be a continuing guarantee to the extent at any one time of £500 from the amount which for the time being shall be owing as aforesaid to you . . . and in addition to the said sum of such further sum for interest and other banking charges and for costs as shall accrue after the date of demand by you upon us . . . or either of our executors or administrators for payment . . . and we and each and every of us further declare that you may, without thereby affecting your rights hereunder, at any time or times hereafter determine or vary any credit to the said debtor, or require or accept from him any further security or consideration, or vary, exchange, or release any securities held or to be held by you from or on account of the said debtor. . . . This joint and several guarantee shall continue to be binding on us . . . without right or power on the part of us or either of us to revoke or determine the same except by or with your consent thereto in writing previously had and obtained and upon the executors and administrators, estates and effects of us and each and every of us not so released and discharged by you as aforesaid until the expiration of one calendar month after you shall have received notice in writing from the executor or administrator so bound as aforesaid determining their liability in respect of any liabilities arising after the expiry of the said month, from which date the estate and effects of the party hereto so dying shall cease to be liable thereunder except as to the liabilities existing before and at the date of the expiry of the said month."

Richard Melton made his will in 1906, appointing his wife, Maria Melton, the son, Arthur Melton, and the plaintiff, David Milk, to be his executors and trustees. After providing for payment of his debts and giving some small pecuniary legacies, he gave all the residue of his personal estate to his wife absolutely. He demised all his real estate to her for life, and directed that after her death the surviving trustees should sell the real estate and divide all the moneys arising from the sale amongst his children in equal shares. The testator died on July 6, 1907, leaving his wife, his son, and three married daughters surviving him. The value of the personal estate was small and insufficient to pay the debts and funeral expenses, but the value of the real estate was estimated at his death at about £3,000. In June, 1910, Arthur Melton, by way of security for his indebtedness, assigned all his vested interest in remainder in his father's estate to the London and Provincial Bank. In April, 1911, Arthur Melton absconded. On May 24, 1911, a receiving order was made against him, and on June 12, 1911, he was adjudicated bankrupt. At that time he owed the bank more than £1,030. The bank proved in his bankruptcy, and received a dividend of £494 4s. 6d. James Chapman having died in 1909, the bank, in 1912, called upon the executors of both guarantors to pay the £500 specified in the deed of guarantee, with charges and costs. The executors of Chapman paid at once, and the two acting executors of Richard Melton obtained an order of the court enabling them, without the concurrence of Arthur Melton, to raise by mortgage of the real estate a sum sufficient to pay their testator's share of the guarantee. The amount paid to the bank for debt, interest, and charges amounted to £313 13s. 8d. In April, 1915, the bank, in consideration of the sum of £75, assigned all the interest of Arthur Melton in the residuary estate of the testator to Arthur Melton's wife, Frances Melton. The official receiver in bankruptcy of Arthur Melton was a party to the deed. Maria Melton died on April 13, 1916, the four children of the marriage surviving her. After her death Arthur Melton's whereabouts were discovered, and by a deed executed in July, 1916, he retired from the trusts of Richard Melton's will, another trustee being appointed in his place. The then trustees, the plaintiffs in this summons, realised Richard Melton's estate, and after paying off all charges, including the mortgage raised to pay the bank the amount due under the guarantee, there remained a sum of £1,597 18s. 10d. They now asked the court to determine whether they should deduct from the one-fourth share due to Frances Melton, as assignee of Arthur Melton, the amount so paid to the bank. Frances Melton and the three daughters of the testator were cited as defendants. ASTBURY, J., held that the defendant assignee, Frances Melton, was not entitled to receive in the administration of the testator's estate more than the true amount of the bankrupt's residuary share, which must be determined after bringing into account the amount paid for him

A under the guarantee, with interest thereon at four per cent. From that decision the assignee appealed.

L. F. Potts for the assignee.

Beebee for the defendants the other residuary legatees.

Sheldon, for the trustees, took no part in the argument.

B SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—This is an appeal from a decision of ASTBURY, J., whereby he declared that in the events that have happened the plaintiffs, as trustees of the will of Richard Melton, were entitled to retain as against the defendant, Frances Melton, or to deduct from the share of which she was an assignee, two sums—one a sum of £313 13s. 8d., and the other a sum of £47 2s. 2d. She appeals against that order. With regard to the sum of £47 2s. 2d. the point has not been argued, and, indeed, when the grounds upon which the claims are put are stated it was conceded that it was not arguable. Mrs. Melton is the assignee of a share under the will of Arthur, a son of the testator. Arthur was a trustee of the will, and absconded, and put the estate to certain costs, which were taxed at £47 2s. 2d., and it is conceded that Arthur must bear those costs. The assignee of Arthur with regard to them is in no better position than Arthur himself should have been; and so the appeal with regard to the £47 2s. 2d. has not been pressed.

D The question really turns upon the point relating to the £313 13s. 8d. The contention of Frances Melton is that that sum is not to be retained out of the share of Arthur, or brought into account as against the assignee of the share. The question arises in this way. On Oct. 29, 1901, the testator, Richard Melton, gave a guarantee to a bank for his son Arthur; a Mr. Chapman joined in the guarantee. It was a joint and several guarantee on the bank's printed form, which is of an elaborate character, and its effect, which is not in dispute, is that it is a continuing guarantee for the whole of the debt owing from Arthur to the bank from time to time, with a limit of the liability of each surety to £250. On July 6, 1907, the testator died. He gave his personal estate to his wife, subject to his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses. The personal estate was small and insufficient to pay the debts, funeral and testamentary expenses. He had some realty, and he gave that, after the death of his widow, upon trust for sale and to convert and divide into four shares (he had four children), a share to each child, the son Arthur and three daughters. So that Arthur took one-fourth of the proceeds of sale of the testator's real estate. On June 4, 1910, Arthur mortgaged his share under the will to the bank to secure a debt. On June 12, 1911, Arthur was adjudicated a bankrupt. He has never obtained his discharge in the bankruptcy. In the autumn of 1912 a sufficient amount was raised out of the real estate to pay the debts of the testator remaining unpaid, including the £250 which the testator's estate was called upon to pay under the guarantee, with an amount for interest, bringing up the total sum paid to £313 13s. 8d., that is £250 principal and £63 13s. 8d. for interest, making together £313 13s. 8d. The testator's estate was liable for the payment, and that was raised under the order of the court, and recourse had to be had to the court in consequence of the absconding of the trustee—the beneficiaries could not deal with the real estate—and the costs incurred on that occasion were the £47 to which I have already referred and from which I now pass. On April 30, 1915, Arthur's wife, Frances Melton, purchased the share of Arthur under his father's will from the bank as mortgagees, the trustee in bankruptcy concurring in the assignment, and in that way became entitled to the share of Arthur. The rest of the real estate has now been sold. After paying expenses and so on there is a sum of £1,507 10s. 6d. for distribution among the testator's four children. I will call it £1,500. Frances Melton claims that she is entitled to receive one-fourth, or £375, of that, without any deduction in respect of the £313. Again there it is said that so. The estate consists not only of the sum of £1,500 but also of the £313 which the estate has paid on behalf of Arthur, and which Arthur was originally indebted to his father in respect of the agreement that the debtor must indemnify the surety for the obligations of the surety." The trustees say: "We have to administer this fund in our hands, treating notionally that £313 as part of the fund." So, again calling it roughly £1,600 and £313 or together £1,900, the trustees say: "You, Mrs. Arthur, are entitled to about one-fourth of about £1,900, of which you have in hand £313." That is the way it is put, and those are the respective contentions of the parties.

It is not disputed that, having regard to the form of the guarantee under an ordinary creditor's deed—and it would be the same in bankruptcy for this purpose—the creditor can prove for the whole amount of the debt. The bank in this case have carried in a proof against the bankrupt's estate for the whole amount of their debt; they can do that notwithstanding that the surety on account of his liability may have made a payment to the bank in respect of which the bank are not bound to give credit. They may prove for the whole amount just as if no payment had been made by the surety. I think, further, that it cannot now be disputed that that would be the same, although the payment made by the surety had been made not out of his own money, but out of the proceeds of a counter-security which may have been given to him by the debtor to indemnify him against his liability as surety. That is the effect of the decision in Midland Banking Company v. Chambers (2). There the surety had paid to the bank, who were the creditors, a sum of £300, the surety had received a mortgage from the debtor to secure his liability under the guarantee, the debtor executed a creditor's deed, the property was realised by the trustees under the creditor's deed, and thereout they paid to the surety the sum of £300, which the surety had paid to the principal creditor. Notwithstanding that, the principal creditor claimed to prove for the whole amount of the debt—£410—which was the amount which the debtor owed them, without having given credit for the £300. In that case it was urged in the same way as counsel for Frances Melton has urged here that it is paying the debt out of the debtor's property twice over, because it was out of his property that the £300 paid by the surety to the bank had been raised, and if the bank proved for the full amount of their claim it was paying the debt twice over. That line of argument did not find favour with the court in Midland Banking Co. v. Chambers (2), and GIFFARD, L.J., on appeal, expressed himself thus (4 Ch. App. at p. 402):

"The argument that [the £300] has been paid out of the debtor's estate is a fallacy; it was paid out of something which, having before the execution of the creditor's deed been dedicated to the purpose of indemnifying the surety, was not at the time of the execution of that deed part of the debtor's estate. Such a payment stands on the same footing as if it had been made by Thorpe [the surety] out of his own moneys, and furnishes no ground for reducing the proof."

On the construction of the guarantee, Re Sass, Ex parte National Provincial Bank of England (3) was referred to and is to the same effect. It has not been disputed that the form of the guarantee is such that the bank can prove for the full amount. It is quite true, that there can be no double proof against the estate, and the rule against double proof has regard to the substance of the transaction and not to the form. It may well be that technically there are two demands against the debtor in respect of the transaction—two claims, two separate legal liabilities of the debtor, arising out of the transaction. One is the debtor's liability to the bank for the money that he has owed. A separate liability arising out of the contract of guarantee is the debtor's liability to indemnify the surety in respect of the surety's liability to the principal creditor. Technically there are two separate liabilities, but in substance it is the same, and in respect of that liability there could not be double proof against the estate—that is, the creditor could not prove for the amount of the debt, and the surety bring in a proof practically for the same or part of the same amount as regards his liability for part of that amount.

A I think that is clear from what MELLISH, L.J., said in Re Oriental Commercial Bank, Ltd., Ex parte European Bank (4). The learned lord justice there said (7 Ch. App. at p. 103):

"This rule against double proof applies in the Court of Chancery as well as in the Court of Bankruptcy, and, therefore, would apply equally where companies are being wound-up. It seems to me that the principle is a perfectly sound one."

B After referring to the extent to which the principle should be carried, he proceeded (ibid.):

"But the principle itself—that an insolvent estate, whether wound-up in Chancery or in bankruptcy, ought not to pay two dividends in respect of the same debt—appears to me to be a perfectly sound principle. If it were not so a creditor could always manage, by getting his debtor to enter into several distinct contracts with different people for the same debt, to obtain higher dividends than the other creditors, and perhaps get his debt paid in full. I apprehend that is what the law does not allow; the true principle is that there is only to be one dividend in respect of what is in substance the same debt, although there may be two separate contracts."

D That applies to a case of principal and surety. There could not be a double proof in respect of that obligation. But apart from Arthur having become bankrupt, I think that it cannot be questioned that the debt arising under an obligation to indemnify a surety can be deducted from a legacy or share of residue given to the debtor. Apart from bankruptcy, there can be no question at all.

E Willes v. Greenhill (No. 1) (5) was referred to. There a residuary legatee mortgaged his share of residue. After the mortgage a debt of that legatee of which the testator had become surety was paid out of his estate. Of course, the liability of the surety was existing at the date of his death. He was the testator, and his liability to pay as surety was existing at the date of his death. Then the legatee mortgaged his share; and after the mortgage the obligation of the surety was discharged by payment out. It was held by the Master of the Rolls that the lien of the executors had priority over the mortgage; and he put it in this way (29 Beav. at p. 382):

G "The share of a residuary legatee is not ascertained until all the charges on the testator's estate have been paid and all equities between each legatee of the testator's estate have been settled. That which remains after this alone constitutes the residue. It does not differ in this respect from a pecuniary legacy."

For this purpose there is no distinction between a share of residue and a pecuniary legacy. The Master of the Rolls continued thus (ibid. at pp. 382, 383):

H "If a testator leave £1,000 to A., and A. owed the testator £100, the legacy is discharged by paying £900 to the legatee or his assigns. In like manner, if an equity exist at the death of the testator between him and one of his residuary legatees, the share of that person in the residue is only so much as remains after satisfying what is due to the testator's estate . . . All the mortgagee advanced his money upon was the share that Henry [who was entitled to a share] was entitled to receive out of the testator's estate—namely, one-sixth of the clear residue, and which residue must be increased by his paying a sum which the testator's estate has been compelled to pay for his benefit, and which must be treated as a set-off against his share. Whether it be treated as set-off or payment, or in whatever way, it has to be brought into account. This, therefore, whilst increasing the testator's estate and the shares of the other five residuary legatees, diminishes his own; it is only one-sixth of the whole after the repayment of the sum for which the testator was surety for him, and which the executors have been compelled to pay. I am of opinion that Henry's share is only the amount less the recouping that which the testator's has paid, and accordingly the mortgages are charges on that diminished share only."

The important phrase is "if an equity exists at the death of the testator."

What was the position here? At the death of the testator Arthur took under the will a share of the proceeds of sale of the real estate. At the same moment Arthur was under an obligation to indemnify the testator against the consequences of the guarantee. The subsequent discharge out of the testator's estate of that liability would, therefore, obviously be brought in as against Arthur in respect of his share of the estate. It is money paid which he is liable to repay to the testator's estate, and he is treated as already having in his possession that sum. That is how the matter stands, apart from bankruptcy. Then take bankruptcy. I apprehend it is clear that, even if there is a bankruptcy, but the principal creditor or the creditor has not brought in a proof in bankruptcy, the right of the surety and the trustees of the surety's estate would not be affected. I think that that follows from Re Watson, Turner v. Watson (6). In that case it was a surety for a mortgage, the surety was the testator, and by his will he bequeathed a share of the residue of his estate to the mortgagor, for whom he was surety. The mortgagor became bankrupt, and never obtained his discharge. Neither the mortgagees—that is, the creditors—nor the testator's executors, the sureties, proved in the bankruptcy. After the bankruptcy the executors made some payments to the mortgagees in respect of the liability of the testator under the contract of suretyship. It was held that the executors were entitled, notwithstanding the bankruptcy, to retain out of the mortgagor's share of the residue the amount of the payments which they had made to the mortgagees. NORTH, J., in a reserved judgment of considerable length, dealt with the position of the assignees, referred fully to the authorities, and then pointed out ('1896' 1 Ch. at p. 931) that the assignees of the share were in no better position than the son himself would have been if he were alive and not a bankrupt. He then held that the trustees were entitled to retain out of the share of the son what had been paid out of the father's estate in respect of that liability.

Down to that point I think that there is no dispute. But then it is said that the proof by the creditor against the estate affects the right of the surety, and that if the creditor has proved against the estate of the bankrupt, the right of the representatives of the surety to make this deduction is lost. I cannot see why. I put this case to counsel for the assignee during the argument, because the way in which he was then putting his point was thus. He said that by virtue of the bankruptcy and the proof by the creditor the debt is gone, there is nothing owing in respect of which the executors have a right to retain. I put the case to him of a surety receiving a specific charge by deposit of deeds on real estate to indemnify him in respect of his suretyship, and the creditor proving in the bankruptcy. If the surety were not able to retain the security because there was no longer any debt, the principal creditor having proved, it would follow that the trustee in bankruptcy could then come to the surety and say: "Give up the deeds; there is no debt in respect of which you are entitled to them; give them up to me as trustee in bankruptcy." It would be quite impossible to argue that, and counsel conceded that. The only authority on which he relied in support of his proposition was the authority of the case before NORTH, J., of Re Binns, Lee v. Binns (1). That was a case in which the surety had deposited with the bank, who were the creditors, a considerable sum, £2,400, as a continuing security for any amount which might be due from the surety's two sons to the bank as principal debtors. The bank proved in the bankruptcy for the whole amount of their debt, £8,858. No dividend was paid in the bankruptcy. It was conceded that it was improbable that the estate would realise enough to pay the bank in full, and that the bank would ultimately appropriate the whole of the deposit towards the sons' debt. The question was whether the trustees of the will were entitled to retain the legacies and shares of

A residue bequeathed to the sons against the liability of the father's estate as surety to the bank. NORTH, J., dealt with the case upon the footing of what the position would have been if the sons had not become bankrupt, and he said ([1896] 2 Ch. at pp. 587, 588):

B "Suppose that the sons had gone to the executors immediately after the father's death and had pointed out to them that there was a large estate, and that they wished to receive their legacies, or suppose that a year had elapsed from the father's death, and the time had therefore come at which they would have a right to ask for payment of their legacies, and they had come and asked for them? The executors would then have been entitled to say: 'There is a matter still pending as between your father's estate and you; he has become surety for you as principal debtors to the bank; he is entitled to have the security which he has given as your surety released and to be indemnified by you against any claim which can be made by the bank upon the security, or upon himself as giving that security.' It seems to me that the executors would then have been in a position to say to the sons that, although they were not indebted in any particular amount to their father in respect of this trans-
C action, they were bound to indemnify his estate against all liability by reason of his having become surety for them at their request. Under these circum-
D stances the executors might have declined to pay over the legacies to the sons until the account had been worked out and the amount of the liability ascertained."

E Now, that would undoubtedly have been the position apart from bankruptcy. The learned judge went on to consider what was the effect of the bankruptcy, and he said (ibid. at p. 588):

F "How then does the matter stand between the testator's estate and the sons? The trustees of the estate still say to the sons: 'We will not pay over to you any part of your legacies or shares of residue till we have been indemnified by you.' But the difficulty in their way is this: that there is no debt in respect of which the trustees of the will can at present claim to retain anything as against the trustees of the sons' estate. The claim against that estate is made by the principal creditors, and the surety cannot, as against the principal creditors, set up an adverse claim of any kind."

G That is the fallacy that was exposed by GIFFARD, L.J., in Midland Banking Co. v. Chambers (2). The claim of the surety is not an adverse claim set up against the principal creditors. The suggestion here is that it is set up against the principal creditors because the estate that would be divisible in the bankruptcy is diminished by reason of this claim. That is the point. The fallacy is that at the date of the bankruptcy it was not part of the debtor's estate. The equity arose at the death of the testator; and when the sons became bankrupt there was already an equity subject to which the trustee in bankruptcy took the debtor's interest.
H The trustee in bankruptcy took nothing more than the debtor had, and the debtor's interest under the will was subject to this equity. In my opinion, the judgment of NORTH, J., in this respect was erroneous, and I think that he fell into the fallacy that was exposed by GIFFARD, L.J., in Midland Banking Co. v. Chambers (2). For these reasons I am of opinion that that case was wrongly decided, and that there is nothing to prevent the trustees of the will in the present case maintaining their
I right to say that the share in which Arthur and his assigns are interested is a share increased by the £313 which Arthur owes to the estate.

The other cases that have been cited do not throw much further light on the present case. Stammers v. Elliott (7) was a simple case where the creditor had proved without valuing his security, and the court merely held that he could not prove for the whole debt and rely on his security, and that, having proved for the whole debt he had given up his security. Nor do I think that Cherry v. Baulthorpe (8) really affects the matter, because when you consider what the position was at the death of the testatrix, she had only a right to prove, which she had not exercised. At the death of the testatrix there was a right to prove under a commission for the debt. She was entitled to dividends, that was all; and she had never exercised her right. I only refer to Cherry v. Boulthée (8) because the nature of the right of the executor to retain, which is not strictly set-off, was dealt with by the Lord Chancellor who says that it is not a right of set-off. These are his words (4 My. & Cr. at p. 447):

"The term 'set-off' is very inaccurately used in cases of this kind. In its proper use it is applicable only to mutual demands, debts, and credits. The right of an executor of a creditor to retain a sufficient part of a legacy given by the creditor to the debtor to pay a debt due from him to the creditor's estate is rather a right to pay out of the fund in hand than a right of set-off."

Re Peruvian Railway Construction Co., Ltd. (9) was a similar case to that of Cherry v. Boulthée (8), and was decided on the same ground. There the deceased, Mr. Alt, was a debtor to the company at the time of his death. He died insolvent, and the company had a right to prove against his estate and receive dividends, but that was all. It was years after the death that in the winding-up of the company there was some return upon his shares, and so the estate became entitled to some money. That is practically the same as Cherry v. Boulthée (8), and was decided on the same ground. The only other case that I need refer to is Re Whitehouse, Whitehouse v. Edwards (10), decided by STIRLING, J. The language there is appropriate, and only appropriate, to the facts of the case to which it was there applied. That was a case of a composition, and STIRLING, J., pointed out the respective rights of the principal and of the surety. But it was not a case of bankruptcy.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal wholly fails, both as regards the £313 and as regards the £47. I may add this. Care must be taken in properly expressing in the order the effect of the present decision. I mention this because I see that in the affidavit in support of the application the trustee says that he and his co-trustee "now have in our hands the sum of £1,597 18s. 10d. for distribution among the four children." Then Arthur claims one-fourth share of the proceeds; and the question is whether out of that share—that is, one-fourth of £1,600—there ought to be deducted the sum of £313. That is not quite right. The whole share must be brought into account. The fund treated as being available for division must first be increased by the amount which Arthur owes; he is entitled to one-fourth of that entire amount; and as against that he must give credit for what he has already notionally received.

WARRINGTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think it is quite clear that at the death of the testator the trustees had a right to be indemnified against any claim which they might ultimately have to satisfy as the result of the guarantee, and to retain in their hands so much of the share of Arthur as was sufficient to provide for that indemnity. But it is said that subsequent circumstances have deprived them of that right. Those subsequent circumstances are that after the death of the testator the son became bankrupt. The bank had taken a mortgage of his share for the purpose of securing their debt, and in the bankruptcy, having placed a value on that security, they proved and received dividends on the entire balance of the debt, without reference to the fact that part of it had been guaranteed. That, of course, they were entitled to do. They have also realised the security which they held, but the net result is that they have not yet received 20s. in the pound on their entire debt. Those, I think, are the whole of the really material facts.

It is said that those circumstances deprive the trustees of the right which, but for those circumstances, they would certainly have had. I ask myself "Why?" The first question as to which one has to satisfy one's mind is: What is really the nature of the right which the trustees had as against Arthur, the beneficiary

A under the testator's will? That is clearly expressed by the Lord Chancellor in Cherry v. Boulthbee (8), in the particular passage 4 My. & Cr., at p. 447. It had been suggested there that the right of the trustees was in the nature of a set-off. The Lord Chancellor combats that view and says this (ibid.):

B "It must be observed that the term 'set-off' is very inaccurately used in cases of this kind. In its proper use it is applicable only to mutual demands, debts and credits. The right of an executor of a creditor to retain a sufficient part of a legacy given by the creditor to the debtor to pay a debt due from him to the creditor's estate is rather a right to pay out of the fund in hand than a right of set-off. Such right of payment, therefore, can only arise where there is a right to receive the debt so to be paid, and the legacy or fund so to be applied in payment of the debt must be payable by the person entitled to receive the debt."

C The important part of that is that the right of the executor is a right to pay out of the fund in hand. I think it follows from that that if the right of the executors at this testator's death was to pay out of the share sufficient to discharge and satisfy the claim to be indemnified, then so much of that fund as was necessary to make good the trustees' claim never formed part of the estate of Arthur, the legatee, divisible in bankruptcy among his creditors. In saying that, I am only adopting the view clearly expressed by GIFFARD, L.J., in Midland Banking Co. v. Chambers (2). It seems to me clearly a corollary of the statement of the Lord Chancellor of that which is the executors' right. GIFFARD, L.J., said (4 Ch. App. at p. 402):

E "The argument that [the payment that had been made in that case] has been paid out of the debtor's estate is a fallacy; it was paid out of something which, having before the execution of the creditors' deed [an equivalent in that case to the bankruptcy in the present case] been dedicated for the purpose of indemnifying the surety was not, at the time of the execution of that deed, part of the debtor's estate."

F In my judgment, therefore, the answer to the claim put forward by the assignee, who is in the same position, of course, as Arthur, is that so much as is necessary to repay to the testator's estate that which has been paid in satisfaction of the guarantee—that is £318—never formed part of the bankrupt's estate at all divisible among his creditors.

G That completely answers the argument put before us founded on the undoubted principle that in bankruptcy there can never be double proofs for the same debt. It is not a question of double proof at all. Double proof has nothing to do with it. In my humble judgment, it is that fallacy referred to by GIFFARD, L.J., into which, with all respect, I think NORTH, J. fell in Re Binns, Lee v. Binns (1). The facts in that case are undoubtedly, for all substantial purposes, identical with those of the present case; and if Re Binns, Lee v. Binns (1) was rightly decided, it would decide the present case. But, in my opinion, that case was not rightly decided, and the fact that NORTH, J., unwittingly fell into the fallacy referred to by GIFFARD, L.J., is shown quite plainly by his judgment. He said this ([1896] 2 Ch. at p. 588):

I "The difficulty in [the way of the trustees] is this: that there is no debt in respect of which the trustees of the will can at present claim to retain anything as against the trustees of the sons' estate. The claim against that estate is made by the principal creditors; and the surety cannot, as against the principal creditors, set up an adverse claim of any kind. No doubt, when the principal creditors have been paid in full, the position of matters would be different."

There are two statements there which seem to me to be unfounded, that is to say, not to be the foundation of the decision at which the learned judge arrives. The first of those statements is "that there is no debt in respect of which the trustees can at present claim to retain." That seems to me to be quite incorrect. The trustees held a certain fund. They had a right to retain in their hands part of that fund in satisfaction of a claim which they had, and which they had had before his bankruptcy against the bankrupt. It seems to me quite immaterial whether there was a set-off for which they could sue at that moment or not. The second mistake, I think, is found in the statement of the learned judge that the surety cannot, as against the principal creditors, set up an adverse claim of any kind. The answer is that the surety is not setting up an adverse claim against the principal creditors. That which the surety is claiming never was distributable among the creditors of the bankrupt at all. I think, therefore, that in the present case, on the simple ground that the right of the trustees to retain is in respect of something which at the date of the bankruptcy did not form part of the estate distributable among the creditors of the bankrupt, the trustees are still entitled to the right which they then had.

If it were necessary for the purposes of the decision of the present case—I do not think it is as at present advised—I should be prepared to say that the trustees, in respect of their claim, are in the position of secured creditors, for their right, as expressed by the Lord Chancellor in Cherry v. Boulthée (8), seems to me to have all the characteristics of a depository lien. They have certain moneys in their hands, and out of those moneys they are entitled to pay themselves a certain sum. But it is not necessary to decide that. It is enough to say that, for the other reasons which I have given, I think that the trustees are clearly entitled to retain the amount due from Arthur to the testator's estate in respect of the guarantee, and that the judgment of ASTBURY, J., was, therefore, right and ought to be affirmed.

SCRUTTON, L.J.—A number of authorities have been cited to us in the present case, which is one of considerable complication. I suppose it is inevitable that there should be complication when the facts raise the relation of principal and surety, the right, whatever it is—varying language has been used to describe it—of executors to pay themselves a debt due from a beneficiary under a will out of his share, and the position in bankruptcy. I have had an opportunity while the case has been proceeding of considering the authorities which have been cited, and I am very glad to be able entirely to concur in the result at which my brothers have arrived. It appears to me to be the only result consistent with common sense. But, as I am not quite sure that I get at the result in the same way as one at any rate of my brothers does, I think it right to express shortly my judgment in my own way.

[His LORDSHIP stated the facts, said that Frances Melton, the assignee, had relied on the judgment of NORTH, J., in Re Binns, Lee v. Binns (1), which decided the point in her favour, and continued:] Take one by one the questions of law which arise. First of all, if there was no bankruptcy, and if there was no question of principal and surety excepting existing debt, what would be the position of the executor? A long series of authorities has decided the position in a simple case like that. I take the statement of the law by SWINFEN EADY, J., in Re Rhodesia Goldfields, Ltd., Partridge v. Rhodesia Goldfields, Ltd. (11) ([1910] 1 Ch. at p. 247):

"The rule is of general application that where an estate is being administered by the court, or where a fund is being distributed, a party cannot take anything out of the fund until he has made good what he owes to the fund."

That followed a series of authorities, of which the passage most often cited is a passage by KEKEWICH, J., in Re Akerman, Akerman v. Akerman (12) ([1891] 3 Ch. at p. 219):

"A person who owes an estate money—that is to say, who is bound to increase the general mass of the estate by a contribution of his own, cannot claim an aliquot share given to him out of that mass without first making the contribution which completes it. Nothing is in truth retained by the representative of the estate; nothing is in strict language set-off; but the contributor is paid by A holding in his own hand a part of the mass, which, if the mass were completed, he would receive back."

B Apply that to a simple case like the present case. A beneficiary is given half the residue. That beneficiary, one of the two beneficiaries who were to divide the residue, owes the estate a sum. I will take a simple figure. Suppose the executors have in hand £500, but that the first beneficiary A. owes the estate £500, what happens? The executors are entitled under that principal to say: "The real residue is £1,000, for you must pay your £500. Half £1,000 is £500. We can give the beneficiary B. £500; we need give you nothing, because you have to give us £500. There is no need to go through that performance; what you get is a release of your debt." In the same way, if instead of owing £500 beneficiary A. owed £250, and the amount in the hands of the executors was £500, the amount of the distributable fund would be £750, and each beneficiary would be entitled to £375, £375 would be paid to beneficiary B., but to beneficiary A. the executors would say: "Here is £125; the other £250 is, as far as you are concerned, discharged. You ought to have given it to us, and we would have handed it back to you. It has the same effect as taking a discharge." I do not think that it is necessary in the present case to decide exactly what that right of the executors is. I am rather disposed to agree with the view that was expressed by KEKEWICH, J. It is not a retainer. I have a great difficulty, in spite of the dictum of the learned Lord Chancellor in Cherry v. Boulton (8), in seeing how it is a lien. It seems to me that it is simply ascertaining what the share is by finding out what the whole residue is. But I do not think that it is necessary for me, beyond stating the principle in the way which I have done, to say what the exact legal description of it is.

E The next question is: How does the fact that the debt is a debt arising out of the relation of principal and surety affect it? As I understand, you work out the law of principal and surety by paying attention to three principles. The debtor must discharge the debt once, and he need not discharge it more than once. The creditor is entitled to get his 20s. in the pound from someone. He cannot get more than 20s. in the pound. The surety is not entitled to keep against the debtor more than he has paid, or is liable to pay. If the creditor is paid in full by the surety, that does not stop the creditor from suing the debtor for the whole debt, because it is true that, although the creditor has got 20s. in the pound, he has not got it from the debtor, and he enforces the full claim as trustee for the surety who has paid the 20s. Again, supposing the debtor has paid the surety the full amount, but owing to the surety's absconding the creditor has not got the money, although the debtor has paid 20s. in the pound, the creditor has not got it. If a debtor pays more than 20s. in the pound, he can get the surplus back; and if the creditor has received more than 20s. in the pound, the surety has received from the debtor more than his debt. To these two sets of legal principles you apply further the question of bankruptcy, with the rule that you must not have double proof—that is to say, not have two proofs for the same debt—and with the further explanation that in regarding what is the same debt you look, not at technicalities, but at substance, as pointed out in Re Oriental Commercial Bank, Ex parte European Bank (4) to which my Lord has referred.

I Bankruptcy has ensued. The trustee in bankruptcy and the bank come to the executors and say: "Pay over the share of this beneficiary in the estate." What is there to stop the executors from exercising the first right, and saying: "You want your share in the estate. Very well, we must find out what the whole is of which this is a share; and the whole includes your making good the debt." As I understand, it is said first of all: "You cannot use that right, because the only person who can use such a right is a secured creditor, and you are not a secured creditor." A secured creditor is defined in the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, as a person who has a mortgage, charge or lien. Speaking simply for myself, I am not prepared to say that this right of the executor is a mortgage, charge, or lien. It appears to me to be, as I have said, a right to say to a man who asks for a share : "You must have a share of the whole estate, and not of a part of it. You cannot say : 'Here is part of the estate; I want a share of that, and I am going to disregard that part of the estate which consists of the amount that I ought to pay under a debt to the estate.' " As at present advised, though I do not wish finally to decide it, because the question may arise in other cases, I doubt how that can be called a lien. But equally I see nothing in s. 7 (1) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, to make this a remedy against the property or person of the debtor which the creditor is forbidden to exercise unless he is a secured creditor otherwise than by proof. It appears to me to be simply this, that the person who claims a share of the estate is required to claim the proper share, and not to pick out such portions of the estate as he thinks will give him a benefit, and leave out those portions which will reduce the share he would otherwise have. Therefore, I see nothing in s. 7 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, which prevents it from being put forward in that way.

Does the rule against double proof come in? When one considers the principles that I have laid down, I hope correctly, on which the law of principal and surety can be governed, how in any way does it infringe the rule of double proof when the bankrupt comes and says: "I want my share," and the creditors say: "Certainly, but you must ascertain your share in the proper way?" If in the end it turns out that the debtor has paid more than 20s. in the pound, he will get it back from one or the other. If in the end it turns out that the creditor has got more than 20s. in the pound, the surplus will be returned to the surety or to the debtor, whichever ought to have it. I am quite unable to see how the rule of double proof applies to the present case. From what I have said it follows that I think that the decision in Re Binns, Lee v. Binns (1) was wrongly decided. I agree with the reasons which have been given by the other members of the court as to exactly why it was wrongly decided. For the reasons that I have expressed I have come to the conclusion that the judgment of ASTBURY, J., was right, and that it correctly works out the legal principles, though possibly he was—as we are not—technically bound by Re Binns, Lee v. Binns (1), which decided the question the other way.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Harrison, Powell & Tulk, for E. H. Vores, East Dereham; Haslewood, Hare & Co., for Norgate & Hood, East Dereham.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CORNELIUS v. PHILLIPS

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Finlay, L.C., Viscount Haldane, Lord Dunedin, Lord Atkinson and Lord Parmoor), October 30, November, 1, 29, 1917]

[Reported [1918] A.C. 199; 87 L.J.K.B. 246; 118 L.T. 228; 34 T.L.R. 116; 62 Sol. Jo. 140, H.L.]

Moneylender—Address—Business to be carried on at registered address—Solitary transaction carried out elsewhere—Commission of offence—Avoidance of transaction—Moneylenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict., c. 51), s. 2 (1) (b).

By s. 2 (1) (b) and s. 2 (2) of the Moneylenders Act, 1900 [see now Moneylenders Act, 1927, s. 1 (3) (b): 16 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 377] it was made an offence for a moneylender to carry on the moneylending business at any address other than his registered address or addresses. Such an offence is committed where a moneylending transaction is carried out at an address which is not the moneylender's registered address even though it is an isolated transaction of that kind. It is immaterial whether a single transaction or a number of transactions are involved. The contract resulting from the transaction, being forbidden and made criminal by statute, is void and cannot be enforced by the moneylender against the borrower.

Decision of the Court of Appeal [1916] 2 K.B. 719, sub nom. Finegold v. Cornelius; Philips, third party, reversed.

Per LORD FINLAY, L.C.: If a transaction has been substantially effected at the moneylender's registered address, the fact that some subsidiary acts have been done elsewhere will not amount to an offence.

Notes. Considered: H. Bowen & Co. v. Samuels (1918), 34 T.L.R. 487; Grosvenor Guarantee Trust, Ltd. v. Colleano (1950), 94 Sol. Jo. 706.

As to restrictions on the carrying on of moneylending business, see 27 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 29–36, and for cases see 35 DIGEST 202 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Kirkwood v. Gadd, [1910] A.C. 422; 79 L.J.K.B. 815; 102 L.T. 753; 26 T.L.R. 530; 54 Sol. Jo. 599, H.L.; 35 Digest 207, 324.
- (2) Sadler v. Whiteman (1910), 26 T.L.R. 255; reversed [1910] 1 K.B. 868; 79 L.J.K.B. 786; 102 L.T. 472; 26 T.L.R. 372; 54 Sol. Jo. 375, C.A.; on appeal, sub nom. Whiteman v. Sadler, [1910] A.C. 514; 79 L.J.K.B. 1050; 103 L.T. 296; 26 T.L.R. 655; 54 Sol. Jo. 718; 17 Mans. 296, H.L.; 35 Digest 204, 294.
- (3) Fergusson v. Norman (1838), 5 Bing. N.C. 76; 1 Arn. 418; 6 Scott, 794; 8 L.J.C.P. 3; 2 J.P. 809; 3 Jur. 10; 132 E.R. 1034; 32 Digest 237, 215.
- (4) Cope v. Rowlands (1836), 2 M. & W. 149; 2 Gale 231; 6 L.J.Ex. 63; 1 Digest (Repl.) 611, 1990.

Appeal by the plaintiff from an order of the Court of Appeal (SWINFEN EADY and BANKES, L.JJ., PHILLIMORE, L.J., dissentiente) reversing a judgment of RIDLEY, J., on the trial of an action without a jury at Liverpool Assizes.

The facts are stated in their Lordships' opinions.

Greer, K.C., and Clement Davies for the appellant.

Leslie Scott, K.C., Rigby Swift, K.C., and W. Greaves Lord for the respondent.

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

Nov. 29, 1917. The following opinions were read.

LORD FINLAY, L.C.—The question in this case is whether a single transaction of lending may amount to carrying on a moneylending business at an address other than the registered address of the moneylender, and, if so, whether the Moneylenders Act, 1900, renders it void.

The respondent was a moneylender registered under the Act, his registered address being at No. 33, Crown Street, Liverpool. The appellant, a young man holding a commission in the Royal Garrison Artillery, had been asked by a friend of his, of the name of Shelmerdine, to assist him in raising money. The appellant and Shelmerdine went out for a walk together, and Shelmerdine took the appellant to the Blundell Arms Hotel, Formby, where they found the respondent, who was quite unknown to the appellant. The respondent produced two promissory notes, each for £300, one in favour of the respondent and the other in favour of the appellant, which were then and there signed, the former by the appellant and the latter by Shelmerdine. The respondent then drew a cheque for £200 to the appellant's order, and this was indorsed by the appellant and handed over to Shelmerdine, who received payment. The effect of this transaction was that Shelmerdine got £200, while the appellant became indebted on his promissory note to the respondent for £300, in respect of which liability the appellant held Shelmerdine's promissory note for the same amount. The respondent transferred the appellant's promissory note to one Finegold, and he, in the capacity of bona fide holder for value without notice, sued the appellant. Finegold was entitled to recover by virtue of the Moneylenders Act, 1911, s. 1 [repealed by Moneylenders Act, 1927], but as that Act gave Cornelius a right of recourse against Phillips, the latter was made party to the action under a notice claiming indemnity. Finegold signed judgment against Cornelius for £300 with interest and costs, and Cornelius filed a statement of claim against Phillips claiming indemnity. The case was tried before RUDLEY, J., who gave judgment in favour of Cornelius as against Phillips. This judgment was reversed in the Court of Appeal by SWINFEN EADY and BANKES, L.J.J., PHILLIMORE, L.J., dissenting. All the members of the Court of Appeal agreed in finding that the transaction amounted to a carrying on of the business, but the majority took the view that the transaction was not rendered void by the Act, while PHILLIMORE, L.J., held that it was. The present appeal is brought from the decision of the Court of Appeal.

The case turns upon the construction of s. 2 of the Moneylenders Act, 1900, which, so far as is material, is as follows :

"2 (1). A moneylender as defined by this Act—(a) Shall register himself as a moneylender in accordance with regulations under this Act, at an office provided for the purpose by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, under his own or usual trade name, and in no other name, and with the address, or all the addresses if more than one, at which he carries on his business of moneylender; and (b) shall carry on the moneylending business in his registered name, and in no other name and under no other description, and at his registered address or addresses, and at no other address; and (c) shall not enter into any agreement in the course of his business as a moneylender with respect to the advance and repayment of money, or take any security for money in the course of his business as moneylender, otherwise than in his registered name; and (d) shall on reasonable request, and on tender of a reasonable sum for expenses, furnish the borrower with a copy of any document relating to the loan or any security therefor. (2) If a moneylender fails to register himself as required by this Act, or carries on business otherwise than in his registered name, or in more than one name, or elsewhere than in his registered address, or fails to comply with any other requirement of this section, he shall be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to a fine not exceeding £100, and in the case of a second or subsequent conviction to imprisonment. . . . (3) A prosecution under sub-s. (1) (a) of this section shall not be instituted except with the consent in England of the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General, and in Ireland of the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General."

I agree with all the judges in the court below in thinking that the transaction contravened the provisions of para. (b) of s. 2 (1). The whole of the transaction in

A this case, in every one of its stages as between the moneylender Phillips and the borrower Cornelius, was carried out at the Blundell Arms Hotel, which was not the registered address of Phillips. In effecting this transaction, Phillips was carrying on the moneylending business. If the transaction had been substantially effected at the registered address of the moneylender, the fact that some substantial part had been done elsewhere would not have amounted to a contravention of para.

B but here no part of the transaction was carried out at the moneylender's office. I entirely agree with what is said on this point in the judgment of SWANESBURG, L.J. The matter seems to me clear on principle, and there is a great weight of authority in favour of the view which was taken on this point in the courts below.

C It was argued before this House that if a single transaction might amount to a carrying on of business under para. (b), para. (c) would be surplusage, and that, therefore, para. (b) must be read as dealing only with a course of business or a series of transactions as distinguished from one transaction. I cannot agree. Having regard to the manner in which Acts of Parliament are drawn, the argument that a restricted meaning must be adopted for a certain provision in a statute on the ground that otherwise there would be repetition in a subsequent provision, is not a very safe guide. The repetition may have been ex major cautela only. But, D further, para. (c) is not surplusage. It is not correct to say that all the transactions which would fall within para. (c) would have been covered by para. (b), inasmuch as taking particular agreements or securities might be merely incidental to the transaction, and would not fall within (b), but it may have been considered advisable to secure complete publicity for the registered name of the moneylender by providing specifically by (c) that in every one of these documents the registered E name should appear. All that was decided by the House of Lords in Kirkwood v. Gadd (1) was that every stage and every incident of the moneylending business need not be transacted at the registered office.

The question remains whether this contravention of the statute rendered the transaction void, or merely subjected the moneylender to a penalty. While PHILLIMORE, L.J., held that the transaction was void, the majority of the Court F of Appeal held that it merely subjected the moneylender to a penalty, proceeding solely on the ground that they thought the point was concluded by the decision of this House in Whiteman v. Sadler (2). In my opinion, the point should have been decided by the Court of Appeal on its own view of the construction of the section, as it was not covered by the decision in Whiteman v. Sadler (2). It is G admitted on all hands, and, indeed, could not be disputed, that a statutory prohibition avoids any transaction in contravention of the prohibition, as the transaction is unlawful and any contract which forms part of it is void, and can confer no rights. The Act of 1900 by s. 2 (1) provides that a moneylender shall carry on a moneylending business at his registered address and at no other address, while sub-s. (2) imposes a penalty for contravention of this provision. The words of the statute prohibit carrying on the moneylending business at any address other than H the registered address, and to do so is, therefore, an unlawful act. Paragraphs (b) and (c) stand in this respect on precisely the same footing; there is a prohibition in (b) just as much as in (c).

The case with which the House of Lords had to deal in Whiteman v. Sadler (2) was that of a moneylender who had been in fact registered, but it was said that the registration was void and ought to be disregarded for two reasons. First, that the I registration was in a trade name, and inasmuch as he had never before carried on business in that name he could not be registered under it as his "usual trade name" s. 2 (1) (a), and ought to have been registered in his own name; and, second, that the moneylender under different names carried on one business as an individual and another as a member of a firm, and that the registration was, therefore, in contravention of s. 2 (1) (b). It was, therefore, contended that the registration should not have been effected, and, being wrongful, was void. In order to understand the judgments in the House of Lords, the earlier history of the case must be examined. Arthur and Walter Whiteman carried on business as moneylenders, and were registered under the name of Cobb & Co., at Moorgate Street, while Arthur also carried on business as a moneylender under another name at Seven Sisters Road. The plaintiff in the action applied for a loan at the office of Cobb & Co. The loan was arranged and a bill of sale was given as security, under which the moneylender seized the goods. Sadler thereupon brought an action of trespass, and contended that the bill of sale was invalid. The case was tried before BRAY, J. The first ground of invalidity alleged was that Cobb & Co. was not the usual trade name of the brothers Whiteman, as they were not known by that name as moneylenders before registration. BRAY, J., held that the words "usual trade name" were satisfied, as Cobb & Co. was the trade name under which they intended to carry on business, and that this complied with the Act. The other main objection to the validity of the bill of sale was that Arthur Whiteman, one member of the firm of Cobb & Co., was also registered and carried on business as a moneylender under another name at another address. BRAY, J., held that this was not an infringement of the Act, on the ground that the one business was that of the firm and the other that of one of the members alone. He accordingly dismissed the action with costs, holding both objections invalid. The Court of Appeal by a majority, consisting of FLETCHER, MOULTON and FARWELL, L.J.J., reversed the judgment of BRAY, J., on these points and entered judgment for the plaintiff, treating the bill of sale as void.

The case was brought on appeal to this House. LORD MACNAGHTEN, with whom LORD LOREBURN, L.C., concurred, agreed with the Court of Appeal, and held that the Act was infringed because Cobb & Co. was not the usual trade name and also because Arthur Whiteman was carrying on two businesses under different names, but he differed as to the effect of this contravention of the Act, holding that as there was a de facto registration the registration could not be treated as void so as to avoid the bill of sale under s. 2 (1) (c). In other words, he held that registration de facto cannot be ignored for the purposes of s. 2 (1). LORD MACNAGHTEN says ([1910] A.C. at p. 521):

"A moneylender registered under these regulations is to carry on the money-lending business in his registered name and in no other name. That is s. 2 (1) (b). He is not to enter into any agreement in the course of his business otherwise than in his registered name. That is s. 2 (1) (c) . . . If, in violation of the plain words of the Act, a moneylender trades without being registered at all, or, being registered, trades in another name, he is very properly left to the mercy of anyone who chooses to attack him, and his contracts are rightly avoided. But if he is registered by the commissioners and registered improperly, the fault does not lie with him alone. . . . In the case of an alleged infringement of sub-s. (1) (a), the sub-section with which the commissioners are mainly concerned, no prosecution can be instituted except with the consent of the law officers. No such provision is made with regard to (b) or (c). This seems to me to show that what the Act meant to strike at in (c) was the case of a person actually registered by the commissioners contracting otherwise than in his registered name, and that, so long as his name remains on the register, his contracts in that name are not to be held void, or his action in making contracts in that name punishable by fine and imprisonment."

It was under (c) that the bill of sale given by Sadler was impeached. No question arose with regard to the effect of (b) except as avoiding the registration. The whole transaction was carried out in the registered name of Cobb & Co., and, as was held (as stated by FARWELL, L.J., [1910] 1 K.B. at p. 896), substantially at the moneylender's address. The bill of sale was not void on the ground that Arthur Whiteman carried on business under another name except on the view that the registration was on this ground improper, and, therefore, should have been treated as non-existent, so as to make the case one of a moneylender with no registered

A name. LORD DUNEDIN points out ([1910] A.C. at p. 525) that registration of Cobb & Co. ought to have been refused on the ground that Cobb & Co. was not their usual trade name, and that Arthur Whiteman, being already registered, could not be again registered, he says (ibid. at p. 527):

B “I come, therefore, to the conclusion that the contract here was only void if it was struck at by the prohibition in s. 2 (1) (c). Was it so struck at? It is said that because we held the registration to have been an improper registration therefore it was no registration. I do not think so. I think registered name means de facto registered name, and that it would be contrary to all justice to penalise the appellants for what was really a mistake of the Inland Revenue. The appellants had a registered name, and I think the statute sought only to prohibit dealing in a name which was not registered at all.”

C This last passage really contains a statement of all that was decided in Whiteman v. Sadler (2) and LORD LOREBURN, L.C., expressed his concurrence with LORD DUNEDIN's judgment as well as with LORD MACNAGHTEN's. In the result, the House of Lords restored the judgment of BRAY, J., but for very different reasons.

D I have read with great attention the passage in the judgment of SWINFEN EADY, L.J., in which he deals with the effect of the decision of the House of Lords in Whiteman v. Sadler (2). It appears to me to overlook the fact that in that case the whole question was whether the registration was vitiated and should be treated as non-existent. In the report of Sadler's Case (2) in the Court of Appeal ([1910] A.C. at p. 521) occur the words which I have already quoted:

E “If, in violation of the plain words of the Act, a moneylender trades without being registered at all, or being registered trades in another name, he is very properly left to the mercy of anyone who chooses to attack him, and his contracts are rightly avoided.”

F SWINFEN EADY, L.J., understands that LORD MACNAGHTEN in this passage was referring to contracts in violation of s. 2 (1) (c). I cannot so understand LORD MACNAGHTEN. It appears to me plain that he was referring, not to s. 2 (1) (c) but to s. 2 (1) (b). No question was raised in Whiteman v. Sadler (2) as to the effect of an infringement of s. 2 (1) (b) except by way of rendering the registration null. The decision was that the registration was not null, although it should not have been effected. I cannot agree with the statement in LORD MERSEY's judgment (ibid. at p. 534) that “there is no express prohibition in either of these clauses” (a) and (b) “whereas in cl. (c) there is.” Paras. (b) and (c) appear to me, for the reasons I have stated earlier in this judgment, to stand exactly on the same footing. G BANKES, L.J., in his judgment says ([1916] 2 K.B. at p. 740):

H “It is not, therefore, for us on the present occasion to give any independent judgment, but only to ascertain how far, if at all, the decisions of this court on these questions have been adopted or dissented from in the House of Lords.”

I He goes on to say that the judgment of LORD DUNEDIN, appears to him to decide in terms that the effect of a breach by a moneylender of the provisions of s. 2 (1) (b) does not invalidate the transaction, and adds (ibid. at p. 741):

I “I have some difficulty in taking the same view of LORD MACNAGHTEN's language, but as LORD LOREBURN and LORD ASHEOURNE treats the opinions of LORD MACNAGHTEN and LORD DUNEDIN as being in accord, I think the decision of Whiteman v. Sadler (2) in the House of Lords must be treated as a decision in the appellant's favour.”

I think that LORD DUNEDIN and LORD MACNAGHTEN were in accord, but in a sense opposite to that which the lord justice ascribed to them.

The majority of the Court of Appeal in this case have expressed no opinion of their own upon the point in dispute. I think it was open to them to do so, and I concur in the conclusion reached by PHILLIMORE, L.J. For these reasons,

I think that the appeal should be allowed and the judgment of RIDLEY, J. restored. A
The appellant should have his costs here and in the Court of Appeal.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—I think that this appeal should succeed. The facts are not in dispute. According to the appellant's evidence, Shelmerdine, who was a friend of his, wanted him to back a bill in order that money might be advanced on it to him, Shelmerdine. He told the appellant that a friend who would lend the money was at the Blundell Arms Hotel, which is not in Liverpool, though not very far from it. The appellant and Shelmerdine found the respondent in a room at the hotel. The appellant did not know who the respondent was, or that he was a registered moneylender carrying on business at an address in Liverpool, and he was not told. He signed a promissory note for £300, which was produced by the respondent, and the latter handed him a cheque for a smaller amount, which he endorsed. The respondent then handed the cheque to Shelmerdine. The respondent did not enter the box or challenge this evidence. B C

Two questions arise on these facts. The first is whether the respondent, who was a registered moneylender whose registered address was in Crown Street, in Liverpool, carried out this particular transaction in his moneylending business "at his registered address or addresses" within the meaning of s. 2 (1) (b) of the Moneylenders Act, 1900. The second question is whether, if the first question be answered in the negative, the effect was to render the transaction void, or was merely to expose the moneylender to liability for criminal proceedings without rendering the transaction void. On the first question the Court of Appeal decided in appellant's favour, and I entertain no doubt that they were right in holding as they did that the sub-section applies, whether or not the place other than his registered address where the transaction has taken place is one at which the moneylender can be said to have an address of a different kind. On the facts it is clear that the transaction, as between the appellant and the respondent, the only parties who, under the circumstances of the case, have to be considered, took place and was carried out in its integrity at this hotel. D E

On the second question the Court of Appeal by a majority (PHILLIMORE, L.J., dissenting) decided that the point was covered by the decision of this House in Whiteman v. Sadler (2). There a moneylender had been registered under the statute by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, to whom the duty of registering him had been entrusted by the legislature, under two names. It was held that this was an improper act of the commissioners, but that, as the name under which the moneylender had traded was de facto registered, even though improperly, the statute did not render illegal a transaction entered into in a name thus registered. It was said in the course of the judgments that if the transaction had fallen within s. 2 (1) (c) by reason of not being entered into in any registered name, it would have been avoided, but that the language used could not be construed as avoiding transactions which de facto complied with s. 2 (1) (a). The only point before the House was whether a registered name meant a name which was de facto registered. There was no question whether, if the case was one to which sub-s. (1) (b) applied, by reason of the transaction being carried out otherwise than at a registered address, it was rendered void. None of the judgments was directed to the consideration of such a point, and even if the dicta relied on by the majority in the Court of Appeal can be read as covering it in words, which I greatly doubt, they were not part of the decision, and I wish to add that dicta by judges, however eminent, ought not to be cited as establishing authoritatively propositions of law unless these dicta really form an integral part of the train of reasoning directed to the real question decided. They may, if they occur merely at large, be valuable for edification, but they are not binding. I do not find in any of the judgments in this House an intention to decide the question on sub-s. (1) (b) which was before the Court of Appeal in the present case and is before us now, and, as I have said, I doubt whether any of the dicta in question justify the assumption that there was an intention to consider F G H I

A the point. We are certainly free on the present occasion to construe the sub-section according to the words which the legislature has used. These words do not appear to all to be ambiguous. They enact that a moneylender shall carry on his business at his registered address and at no other address. So standing, they are clear, and they prohibit, and, therefore, make void, any contract which contravenes them. That there is a subsequent sub-section which makes a contravention by the money-

B lender a criminal offence makes no difference. There might have been inserted in the statute a context which would have modified the application of the general rule—that there is nothing in the actual context to exclude the ordinary result which follows in law when a statutory prohibition is disregarded. I am, therefore, of opinion that the majority in the Court of Appeal were wrong in their answer to this question.

C

LORD DUNEDIN.—The first question in this case is, in my view, a pure question of fact: Was the respondent on Nov. 24, 1914, at the Blundell Arms, Formby, carrying on the business of a moneylender? I think he was. Each case depends on its own circumstances. Kirkwood v. Gadd (1) only decided that if a particular transaction is substantially arranged and started at the moneylender's registered place of business, the mere fact that certain incidental proceedings are carried through at another place does not make the moneylender carry on business at that other place. It was said that this was an isolated transaction. That fact is not conclusive one way or other, though it may in particular circumstances lead to an inference decisive of the question. Here I think the respondent only appeared at the Blundell Arms as a moneylender for the purposes of a money-

D lender, and in fact acted as, and so carried on the business of a moneylender.

E There remains the question what is the result, and it was strongly urged that the decision of this House in Whiteman v. Sadler (2) settles that unless there is an infringement of s. 2 (1) (c), the contract itself is not avoided. The opinion of LORD MERSEY does go that length, and an expression used by myself, expressio unius est exclusio alterius, would, although directed to s. 2 (1) (a), apply in terms to s. 2 (1) (b). But the actual decision of the House only applied to s. 2 (1) (a), and I am satisfied on reconsideration that the expression I used was not accurate if applied to s. 2 (1) (b), because s. 2 (1) (c) and s. 2 (1) (b) do not cover exactly the same ground. The judgment is binding on us, but further I have no doubt it was right. Two views may be taken. Inasmuch as Whiteman had been de facto registered, although wrongly registered, it might be held that there had been no contravention of any of the sections. That is not my own view. I think there had been a contravention of s. 2 (1) (a), though I think that in view of the faulty regulations issued by the Inland Revenue, the Attorney-General might well have withheld his consent to any prosecution, or even if he had given it, a jury might have refused to convict. But the contravention had nothing directly to do with the contract. In fact it came within the category of matters collateral, as pointed out by TURNER, C.J., in Fergusson v. Norman (3). This was the view expressed in the present case by PHILLMORE, L.J., and I think it was the correct one. As I said in Whiteman's Case (2), the question always comes to be put as PARKE, B., put it in Cole v. Rowlands (4). Does the statute seek to prohibit the contract? Sect. 2 (1) (b) seems to me to prohibit the contract, though it is expressed in words which apply directly to the contractor rather than to the contract. Indeed, if one looks at the mischief sought to be remedied, the case seems to me a stronger one than that of Cope v. Rowlands (4). I am, therefore, of opinion that the appeal should be allowed.

F

G

H

I

LORD ATKINSON.—In this case Isadore Phillips, the third party in the action, was at the date of the transaction impeached a moneylender registered in accordance with the Moneylenders Act, 1900, and carrying on moneylending business at his registered address, No. 33, Crown Street, in the city of Liverpool. The appellant had the misfortune to have a friend, named Harvey Shelmerdine, who apparently testified his regard for him by borrowing considerable sums of money from him, and on Nov. 24, 1914, stood indebted to him in the sum of about £3,000. At about 9.30 in the morning of that day Shelmerdine called upon the appellant while the latter was at breakfast, and in a room adjoining the breakfast-room, into which they went, asked him to put his name on a bill for him (Shelmerdine), so that he might obtain some money, as he was "hard up." After some time, not at first, the appellant consented to do this. Shelmerdine and he then went out to take a walk. As they came to the end of the lane leading up to the Blundell Arms Hotel, Shelmerdine said to the appellant: "Are you coming in? I have got my friend in the hotel." The appellant replied: "All right," and went to the hotel. In a small room at the back of the hotel he found the moneylender. He did not know Phillips. He did not know, and was not told who or what he was. He merely thought he was a friend of Shelmerdine. Phillips appears to have been then furnished with two of the instruments of his trade, two promissory notes already drawn up. The transaction had the true moneylender's ring about it. No rate of interest is mentioned in the promissory note which Cornelius signed, but, in fact, he was to pay £100 for the loan of £200 for six months—cent. per cent. Phillip's cheque was endorsed by both the appellant and Shelmerdine, and given to the latter. That this transaction was regarded by Phillips as a transaction carried out by him in the conduct of his business of moneylending, and not as an isolated transaction unconnected with that business, is evident from this, that he entered the transaction as of Nov. 24 in the ledger account of his moneylending business. He also entered the transfer of the note on May 5, 1915, to K. Finegold, the alleged bona fide holder for value without notice of any defect due to the operation of s. 2 of the Moneylenders Act, 1900, so as to secure for it the protection afforded by s. 1 of the Moneylenders Act, 1911. He had carried out the matter in his registered name. In that name he was made the payee of the promissory note. He had nothing, therefore, to fear from s. 2 of the Act of 1900, unless the carrying out of this transaction amounted under sub-s. (1) (b) of that section to carrying on his moneylending business at an address other than his registered address. It is, of course, quite evidence that the whole transaction was arranged between Phillips and Shelmerdine before the latter called upon the appellant on the morning of Nov. 24.

No difficulty arises about the meaning of the words "address" or "addresses" in s. 2 (1) (b) of the Act of 1900. The immediately preceding provision shows, I think, that the word "address" is used to identify the houses or house, office or buildings, in which the moneylender carries on his moneylending business. If he should carry it on in any house, office or building other than that registered as his address, then he would commit a crime within the provision of sub-s. (1) (b). I do not think that it is incumbent on any person impeaching the validity of a moneylending transaction carried out at a place other than that indicated by the registered address of the moneylender to prove that the latter has carried out many other transactions of the same kind at the same unauthorised place. In my view, when a registered moneylender, whose business it is to lend money, comes to a place other than his registered address and carries out there a moneylending transaction, it must be taken, in the absence of all evidence to the contrary, that he is carrying on his moneylending business at the latter place. A man may be a moneylender within the meaning of the statute, though he never made a loan in the whole course of his existence, provided he advertises, or announces himself, or holds himself out in any way as carrying on moneylending business. Here the very mischief against which the statute of 1900 was directed was contrived. The appellant was introduced to the respondent as a person ready to lend money. He was induced to deal with him without knowing whether he was a moneylender or not, and without knowing whether he had a registered office or not. I think that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the respondent, by entering into this moneylending transaction on Nov. 24, 1914, at Blundell Arms Hotel, Formby, did carry on moneylending business at an address other than his registered address

- A within the meaning of s. 2 (1) (b) of the Moneylenders Act, 1900. In Kirkwood v. Gadd (1) it was contended by the persons impeaching the security that every step or stage in a loan transaction must be transacted at the registered address of the lender, and that, as the bill of sale given in that case was executed, and the money lent to the borrower, paid at his own house, the moneylending business was not carried on at the lender's registered address. This House decided against
- B that contention. It was not necessary to decide any other point. It had, however, been contended, on behalf of the respondent, that, even if the business of making the loan should be taken to have been transacted at the borrower's residence, still it was only a single moneylending transaction, and that the carrying of it through did not amount to carrying on moneylending business within the meaning of s. 2 (1) (b). There was nothing amounting to a decision of the House that the
- C carrying through of one moneylending transaction at a given place might not amount to the carrying on of moneylending business at that place within the statute. On the contrary, the effect of the decision was, I think, that it depended upon the facts and circumstances of each case whether it amounted to that or not. The main point decided in Whiteman v. Sadler (2) was, as I read the report, that a contract made with a moneylender in one of his registered names
- D did not come within s. 2 (1) (b), because the lender, though wrongly registered in two names, did in fact take from the borrower the security impeached in his registered name—not in an unregistered name.

In the argument in the present case the object aimed at by this latter provision has, I think, been misunderstood. The clause had a special object—namely, to require that as far as possible the name of the moneylender should appear in a written agreement on the face of the document as a contracting party in order to prevent these agreements being made in the name of persons who were trustees for the moneylender or acted as agents for him as an undisclosed principal. It provided a protection additional to that mentioned in the preceding section against borrowers being induced to deal with the same moneylender under different names, and it secured that transferees or holders of bills and promissory notes and such

E like securities for money should know who the real lender was. But s. 2 (1) (b), and s. 2 (1) (c), are not mutually exclusive. That is the fallacy underlying the respondent's argument. If a moneylender in the conduct of his moneylending business makes a loan in a place other than that indicated by his registered address, and as security for that loan takes from the borrower a promissory note of which the moneylender's clerk is the payee, the transaction offends against the provisions of both

F s. 2 (1) (b), and s. 2 (1) (c). Against the first, because the moneylender has carried on moneylending business at a place other than that indicated by his registered address, and against the second because the moneylender has taken a security for money in the course of his business as a moneylender otherwise than in his registered name. The argument that, because the form of the document given as security offends against sub-s. (1) (c), therefore the moneylending transaction of which the

G giving of that security forms a part, cannot offend against the provisions of sub-s. (1) (b), is, I think, altogether unsound. It is not disputed that the language of sub-s. (1) (c) is prohibitive. I think it is clear that if the lender in Whiteman v. Sadler (2) had not registered his name at all, this House would have applied the principle laid down by PARKE, B., in Cope v. Rowlands (3), and by TINDAL, C.J., in Fergusson v. Norman (4), and, as the taking of the bill of sale could not have been held to be

H a collateral matter have held that security to be void. The words which are said to make the latter clause prohibitive are: "shall not enter into . . . otherwise than in his registered name," but if s. 2 (1) (b), be thrown into a negative form, the sense will remain quite the same and yet it will be equally prohibitive. It would then run: "shall not carry on the moneylending business in any name other than his registered name nor at any address other than his registered address or addresses." The sense of the clause is in no way altered, yet it is quite as prohibitive as the succeeding clause, while the doing of the thing prohibited is in each case an offence of the same kind and punishable by the same penalties in s. 2 (2). The definite article "the" is used in sub-s. (1) (b) to refer to the business mentioned in the preceding clause as his "(the moneylender's) business of moneylending." The appellant's account of the transaction must be accepted as accurate since he is absolutely uncontradicted. I am of opinion that the promissory note dated Nov. 4, 1917, and the whole transaction of which it formed part was void, that the judgment appealed from was erroneous and should be reversed, and that the judgment of RIPLEY, J., be restored, and this appeal be allowed with costs here and below.

I

LORD PARMOOR.—The facts in this appeal are not in dispute. On Nov. 24, 1914, the appellant, at the invitation of a friend, Harvey Shelmerdine, entered the Blundell Arms Hotel, Formby, and met the respondent, whom he had not before seen. The respondent was a moneylender, as defined by the Moneylenders Act, 1900, properly registered, and carrying on the moneylending business at his registered address, 33, Crown Street, in the city of Liverpool. At this meeting an ordinary moneylending transaction was completed. The respondent drew a cheque for £200 payable to the appellant or order, and the appellant signed a promissory note promising to pay the respondent or order the sum of £300 for value received six months after date. There was, therefore, a moneylending transaction carried out with a registered moneylender at an address other than his registered address.

It was contended on behalf of the respondent that a single transaction of this character did not amount to a carrying on of the moneylending business so as to bring the respondent within the prohibition of s. 2 (1) (b) of the Moneylenders Act, 1900, that the moneylender should not carry on the moneylending business at other than his registered address. I think that it is impossible to accept this contention. In my opinion, the respondent, in effecting a moneylending transaction with the appellant, was, in the ordinary sense, carrying on the moneylending business, and that it is immaterial whether a single transaction or a number of transactions are involved. The business was carried through at an address other than the respondent's registered address, and, therefore, comes directly within the prohibition of s. 2 (1) (b). Reference was made to Kirkwood v. Gadd (1). In that case it was decided on a question of fact that the particular transaction was not impeachable, because every stage and every incident of every piece of the moneylending business was not transacted at the registered office, and it does not, in my opinion, affect the matters involved in the present appeal, or give any colour to the view that the moneylending business is not carried on at a place where all the stages of a single moneylending transaction are carried through.

The second point argued on behalf of the respondent was that, assuming the moneylending transaction to come within s. 2 (1) (b), yet on the true construction of the section as a whole it was not thereby rendered an illegal transaction so as to make the contract void. In support of this contention it was said that the case had been determined in favour of the respondent by Whiteman v. Sadler (2) as decided by a majority in the Court of Appeal. I propose, in the first instance, to consider the construction of the section and then to examine the decision in your Lordships' House. No question arises under sub-s. (1) (a), and the respondent had fulfilled his obligation in this respect by a proper registration. Sub-section (1) (b) not only places an obligation on a moneylender to carry on the moneylending business in his registered name and at his registered address, but expressly prohibits him from carrying on that business in any other name or at any other place. If the moneylending transaction at the Blundell Arms, Formby, was a carrying on of the moneylending business by the respondent, as I think it was, the transaction is one which the statute has expressly prohibited. It was argued, however, that sub-s. (1) (c) was inconsistent with the inference that the transaction prohibited under sub-s. (1) (b) was thereby rendered void as between the parties. Sub-section (1)

- A (c) enacts that the moneylender shall not enter into any agreement in the course of his business as a moneylender with respect to the advance and repayment of money, or take any security for money in the course of his business as a moneylender otherwise than in his registered name. This sub-section has no reference to the address, and, as was pointed out in Kirkwood v. Gadd (2), any such limitation as applied to the address might render the convenient carrying on of a particular transaction in some cases very difficult. The sub-section, in my opinion, in no way limits the obligations imposed under sub-s. (1) (b), but is cumulative in effect, and provides that every agreement made in the course of his business as a moneylender by a moneylender shall not be entered into otherwise than in his registered name, thereby providing that all agreements incident to the moneylending business with respect to the advance and repayment of money or the taking of security for money, shall not be transacted otherwise than in the registered name of the moneylender. It is putting a further restriction on the moneylender as to the use of his registered name beyond that put upon him in reference to the use of his registered address. If the sub-s. (1) (c) did nothing more than enforce in more specific language obligations which had been placed on a moneylender under sub-s. (1) (b) I should not come to the conclusion that it was intended to limit the obligations which sub-s. (1) (b) had imposed, but that it was intended to make clear its meaning and ambit. Sub-section (1) (d) is not material. Section 2 (2) renders a moneylender liable to a fine not exceeding £100, and, in the case of a second or subsequent conviction, to imprisonment if he carries on his business otherwise than at his registered address. The result is that the transaction under consideration in this appeal is prohibited by statute, and renders the moneylender liable to a fine on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts.

- E The principle of law applicable has been accurately expressed by FARWELL, L.J., that a contract which is expressly forbidden and made criminal by Act of Parliament can give no cause of action to a party who seeks to enforce it. In Whiteman v. Sadler (2), LORD DUNEDIN adds that the same result follows in the case of a contract which is not expressly but only impliedly forbidden. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the appellant is not liable and that his appeal should be allowed, unless the case is governed by the decision in Whiteman v. Sadler (2). If it is so governed, the appellant cannot succeed.

- F The point really decided in Whiteman v. Sadler (2) is that a moneylender whose name has been placed on the register by the officers of a public department in conformity with regulations purporting to be issued under the authority of Parliament does not become liable to fine and imprisonment and the absolute loss of all his contracts, not for trading without registration, but for trading in a name registered wrongly, but registered by the authorised exponents of the requirements of the Act as statutory custodians of the register. This passage is in substance taken from the opinion of LORD MACNAGHTEN. LORD MACNAGHTEN goes on to say : ([1910] A.C. at p. 521) :

- H "If, in violation of the plain words of the Act, a moneylender trades without being registered at all, or being registered, trades in another name, he is very properly left to the mercy of anyone who chooses to attack him, and his contracts are rightly avoided."

- I In the case with which LORD MACNAGHTEN was dealing the question was one of registered name, but, in my opinion, the passage is equally applicable to a question of registered address. LORD DUNEDIN states in his opinion (ibid. at p. 527) :

"I think registered name means de facto registered name, and that it would be contrary to all justice to penalise the appellants for what was really a mistake of the Inland Revenue."

LORD DUNEDIN no doubt expresses the opinion that, apart from the question of registration, the contract was only void if it was struck at by the prohibition under s. 2 (1) (c), but this was not the matter directly in debate, and the noble

Lord has expressed his opinion on this point in the present appeal after full discussion. Lord LOREBURN expresses his concurrence, and that of Lord ASHBOURNE, with the opinions of Lord MACNAGHTEN and Lord DUNEDIN. Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD withdrew his intended opinion, although entertaining on some points considerable doubt. There is no doubt that the opinion of Lord MERSEY does state specifically that there is no express prohibition in either sub-s. (1) (a) or (b), whereas there is in sub-s. (1) (c), but this opinion, although entitled to great weight, was not concurred in by any other of the noble Lords before whom the appeal was heard. I think, therefore, that the question now in appeal before your Lordships is not governed by Whiteman v. Sadler (2), but is open to consideration on its merits. In my opinion the appeal should be allowed with costs here and below.

Solicitors: Pritchard, Englefield & Co., for Simpson, North, Harley & Co., Liverpool; Ford, Lloyd, Bartlett & Michelmores, for Barrett & Co., Liverpool.

[Reported by W. E. REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NORMAN v. MATHEWS AND ANOTHER

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lush and Sankey, JJ.), February 9, 10, 1916]

[Reported 85 L.J.K.B. 857; 114 L.T. 1043; 32 T.L.R. 363; 80 J.P. Jo. 100]

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinton Eady, Pickford and Bankes, L.J.J.), February 14, March 18, 1916]

[Reported 32 T.L.R. 369]

County Court—Jurisdiction—Hearing in camera—Need to secure proper administration of justice—Public interest—Dismissal or stay of proceeding because frivolous or vexatious.

A county court judge has jurisdiction to hear a case in camera if it appears that it is necessary to do so to secure the proper administration of justice, e.g., where it would not be in the public interest for the case to be heard in open court with the result that the contents of documents alleged to be likely to cause disaffection to the Crown during a time of war would be made public. The court, however, should not lightly decide to hear a case in camera. Before doing so the court should carefully consider whether there is any prima facie ground for departing from the ordinary method of administering justice.

A county court judge has the same jurisdiction as a judge of the High Court to dismiss or stay a proceeding on the ground that it is frivolous and vexatious.

Notes. As to the jurisdiction of the county court generally, see 9 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 141 et seq.; for cases see 13 DIGEST (Repl.) 380 et seq.; and for County Courts Act, 1934, see 5 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 11.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Scott v. Scott, [1913] A.C. 417; 82 L.J.P. 74; 109 L.T. 1; 29 T.L.R. 520; 57 Sol. Jo. 498, H.L.; 16 Digest 31, 301.
- (2) Reichel v. Magrath (1889), 14 App. Cas. 665; 59 L.J.Q.B. 159; 54 J.P. 196, H.L.; Digest (Pleading) 84, 701.
- (3) Metropolitan Bank v. Pooley (1885), 10 App. Cas. 210; 54 L.J.Q.B. 449; 53 L.T. 163; 49 J.P. 756; 33 W.R. 709, H.L.; Digest (Pleading) 82, 691.

Also referred to in argument:

Coster v. Headland, [1906] A.C. 286; 75 L.J.K.B. 483; 94 L.T. 589; 70 J.P. 249; 22 T.L.R. 441; 4 L.G.R. 589, H.L.; 18 Digest (Repl.) 400, 1489.

- A Bynoe v. Bank of England, [1902] 1 K.B. 467; 71 L.J.K.B. 208; 86 L.T. 140; 50 W.R. 359; 18 T.L.R. 276, C.A.; 14 Digest (Repl.) 592, 5900.
Ex parte Norman (1915), 85 L.J.K.B. 203; 114 L.T. 232; 80 J.P. 156; 60 Sol. Jo. 90; 25 Cox, C.C. 263; 16 Digest 129, 268.

Appeal from Westminster County Court.

- B On Aug. 18, 1915, upon the instructions of the defendant, Sir Charles Mathews, Director of Public Prosecutions, an information in writing upon oath was laid before Alderman Sir John Knill, one of His Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the city of London, by a detective-inspector of the City of London Police Force, which satisfied him that certain newspapers, books, periodicals, pamphlets, and other printed publications containing reports of statements likely to cause disaffection to His Majesty or to prejudice His Majesty's relations with foreign Powers, or to prejudice the recruiting, training, discipline, or administration of His Majesty's forces were about to be issued for publication or dispersion in or upon certain premises in the city of London contrary to reg. 27 of the Defence of the Realm (Consolidation) Regulations, 1914. Sir John Knill thereupon issued a warrant, pursuant to reg. 51A of the regulations, authorising the entry on such premises and the seizure of documents. Some of the documents thus seized were alleged
- D by the plaintiff to be his. On Aug. 27 the plaintiff commenced an action in the Westminster County Court against the defendants Sir Charles Mathews and Sir William Nott-Bower, Commissioner of Police for the City of London, claiming a declaration that he was entitled to possession of these documents and damages for their wrongful detention. On Sept. 10 the documents were brought before the alderman, who read and considered them, and satisfied himself that they contained statements likely to prejudice His Majesty's relations with foreign Powers and likely to prejudice the recruiting of His Majesty's naval and military forces. He thereupon issued a summons to the owners of the documents, including the plaintiff, Clarence Henry Norman, the owner of some of them, calling upon them to appear before the court of summary jurisdiction, sitting at the Mansion House Justice Room, to show cause why they should not be destroyed. On Sept. 13 and various subsequent dates some of the owners, including the plaintiff, appeared, but, after various hearings, which were conducted in camera, the alderman, not being satisfied by the arguments addressed to him that the articles were not of such a character as mentioned in reg. 51A, on Oct. 25 ordered them to be destroyed after the expiration of seven clear days unless notice of appeal against his order should have been given within such seven clear days by any person who felt aggrieved. On Oct. 29 an application was made ex parte on behalf of the plaintiff to the Divisional Court for a rule nisi directed to the magistrate to show cause why a writ of certiorari should not issue to bring up the order to be quashed. That application, which was heard in camera, the judgment, however, being delivered in open court, was dismissed. On Dec. 6 the plaintiff gave notice of an application in the county court action for discovery and interrogatories, and for a special day to be fixed for the trial of the action in open court. On Dec. 8 the defendants gave notice of an application to strike out the plaintiff's action as being frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court. On Dec. 9 the parties appeared before the county court judge, who heard the application in private at the request of the defendants, and struck out the action as frivolous and vexatious.
- I The plaintiff appealed.

The plaintiff appeared in person.

G. A. H. Branson for the defendants.

LUSH, J. (after stating the facts).—I will assume, as the plaintiff asks us to do, that not all the books belonging to him were destroyed under the order, but that some are still in existence and in the possession of the defendants. The question is whether this action was one which the county court judge was entitled to strike out as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court.

The plaintiff has raised many objections. I will deal first with the question whether the procedure adopted by the county court judge was right or wrong. The plaintiff contended that the county court judge had no jurisdiction to hear the matter in camera, and that, apart from that, he had no power to hear an application or make an order to strike out the action on the ground that it was frivolous and vexatious. The plaintiff further contends that, even if the county court judge had such power, the action was not frivolous and vexatious, and that he had a substantial and real cause of action and was entitled to have it adjudicated upon.

As to the question of the hearing in camera, a Divisional Court, of which I was a member, have already held that in this case it was a proper order to make that it should be heard in camera, for, after the order for the destruction of these documents had been made, an application was made to this court for a writ of certiorari to quash the order on the ground that it was invalid. This court held that, having regard to the nature of the publications in question, it was not in the public interest or for the public welfare that the case should be heard in open court, and, therefore, heard the application for a writ of certiorari in camera. Having regard to the view expressed by the Divisional Court on that occasion, I am of opinion that the county court judge was right in holding that this action, which dealt with the same documents, ought to be heard in camera also. I desire to add, however, that I do not think that a court should lightly decide to hear a case in camera. It does not follow that because there is an application for a case to be heard in camera that the order should be made as of course. The court should carefully consider whether there is any prima facie ground for departing from the ordinary method of administering justice; but if there are materials before the court which lead them to the conclusion that it is necessary for the proper administration of justice that the matter should be heard in camera, there is no doubt that the court has power, apart from any particular regulation to that effect, to hear a case in camera. The question was fully discussed in Scott v. Scott (1), where LORD HALDANE, L.C., pointed out that, while the broad principle was that the courts should administer justice in public, it was subject to exceptions which were the outcome of a yet more fundamental principle—that the chief object of courts of justice must be to secure that justice was done. He said ([1913] A.C. at p. 439):

“I think that to justify an order for hearing in camera it must be shown that the paramount object of securing that justice is done would really be rendered doubtful of attainment if the order were not made.”

LORD LOREBURN, after pointing out that a court could be closed in a case of some secret process of manufacture on the ground that to communicate it to the world in open court would be in effect a denial of justice, said (ibid. at p. 445):

“Again, the court may be closed or cleared if such a precaution is necessary for the administration of justice. Tumult or disorder, or the just apprehension of it, would certainly justify the exclusion of all from whom such interruption is expected, and, if discrimination is impracticable, the exclusion of the public in general . . . It would be impossible to enumerate or anticipate all possible contingencies, but in all cases where the public has been excluded with admitted propriety the underlying principle, as it seems to me, is that the administration of justice would be rendered impracticable by their presence, whether because the case could not be effectively tried, or the parties entitled to justice would be reasonably deterred from seeking it at the hands of the court.”

Therefore, if it is necessary in the interests of justice that the public should be excluded, the court has jurisdiction to hear and try the matter in camera. The order of the magistrate for the destruction of these books and documents was made upon the ground that their contents were of such a nature that it would be incompatible with the public welfare that publicity should be given to them. If it was open to the owner of them to bring an action against those who had been instrumental in moving the court to make the order for their destruction and to insist

A on the trial of the action being heard in open court before a jury, the very mischief might be done which the regulation was intended to obviate. It is, therefore, impossible to say, having regard to the circumstances of the case, that the county court judge had no jurisdiction to make the order, and I see no reason for disagreeing with his exercise of that jurisdiction.

The next question is: Had the county court judge jurisdiction to entertain the application to dismiss or stay the action on the ground that it was frivolous and vexatious? I am of opinion that a county court judge has the same jurisdiction as a judge of the High Court in that respect. There is the authority of LORD HALSBURY in Reichel v. Magrath (2) and of LORD SELBORNE in Metropolitan Bank v. Pooley (3) for saying that there is an inherent power in every court of justice to stay or dismiss actions or applications that are frivolous and vexatious in order to protect itself from the abuse of its procedure. It is clear that there must be such powers, otherwise a county court judge would be compelled to listen to an action when it was patent to him that it was one which no sensible man would have brought. Further, if the authority of a statute is necessary, s. 164 of the County Courts Act, 1888 [now s. 100 of County Courts Act, 1934], expressly provides that the general principles of practice in the High Court may be adopted and applied in the county court, and s. 9 [s. 72 of Act of 1934] also provides that a county court judge shall have jurisdiction to make any order or exercise on an ex parte application any authority or jurisdiction in any action or proceeding which might be given, made, or exercised by a judge of the High Court in chambers. It is, therefore, clear that the county court judge had both an inherent and a statutory jurisdiction to dismiss this action as frivolous.

E [On the facts HIS LORDSHIP held that it was a case which the county court judge was entitled to treat as frivolous and vexatious, and concluded:] The appeal therefore fails, and must be dismissed.

F SANKEY, J.—I agree. Three questions arise in this case: (i) Was the county court judge entitled to hear the case in camera? (ii) Had he a right to dismiss the action as frivolous and vexatious? (iii) If he had such a right, did he properly exercise it in dismissing or striking out this action?

As to the first question, it must be noted that the hearing of the summons before the magistrate for the order to destroy these documents was conducted in camera, and the application for a certiorari to quash that order was also heard in camera. I entirely agree with my brother LUSH as to the very great care and caution which ought to be exercised before an application to hear a case in camera is granted. To hear a case in camera is to take a very exceptional course, and it is a jurisdiction which ought to be exercised with the greatest care, and only upon the strongest grounds. In my view, the best exposition of the law is that laid down by LORD HALDANE, L.C., in Scott v. Scott (1). He says ([1913] A.C. at p. 439):

H "I think that to justify an order for hearing in camera it must be shown that the paramount object of securing that justice is done would really be rendered doubtful of attainment if the order were not made."

I have already pointed out that the previous hearings before the magistrate and the Divisional Court were conducted in camera and in numerous other cases which have come before the courts recently a similar course has been adopted. It is, therefore, clear that there is jurisdiction to hear a case in camera, but that jurisdiction ought to be exercised with caution. In Scott v. Scott (1) LORD SHAW (ibid. at p. 482), lays down the three exceptions to the application of the general rule of publicity, and one of them is where secrecy is of the essence of the cause. In my opinion, secrecy was of the essence of the cause here, and that the county court judge was, therefore, justified in hearing the application in camera. With regard to the second point, I think that the county court judge clearly had the right to strike out the action as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court. The latter part of s. 164 of the County Courts Act, 1888, confers that jurisdiction, and I think it is within the inherent jurisdiction of the court. The authority for that is contained in the judgment of LORD SELBORNE, L.C., in Metropolitan Bank v. Pooley (3), where he says (10 A.C. at p. 214):

"Before the rules were made under the Judicature Act, the practice had been established to stay a manifestly vexatious suit which was plainly an abuse of the authority of the court, although as far as I know there was not at that time either any statute or rule expressly authorising the court to do it. The power seemed to be inherent in the jurisdiction of every court of justice to protect itself from the abuse of its own procedure."

I am therefore, of opinion that the answer to the second question is in the affirmative [His LORDSHIP added that on the facts the action was frivolous and vexatious] and the county court judge was perfectly justified in striking it out.

Appeal dismissed.

Feb. 14, 1916. The plaintiff appealed to the Court of Appeal. The Court reserved judgment. On Mar. 18 SWINFEN EADY, L.J., said that he had had an opportunity of considering the shorthand notes of the proceedings in the courts below and in that court and also of the application for a certiorari, and having considered them he saw no ground for giving the applicant leave to appeal. PICKFORD, L.J., and BANKES, L.J., concurred, and the appeal was dismissed.

Solicitor: Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by L. H. BARNES & E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esqs., Barristers-at-Law.]

ABINGDON RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. CITY OF OXFORD ELECTRIC TRAMWAYS, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady and Scrutton, L.JJ., and Bray, J.), April 20, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 318; 86 L.J.K.B. 1247; 117 L.T. 133;
81 J.P. 189; 33 T.L.R. 319; 15 L.G.R. 446]

Highway—Damage—Extraordinary traffic—Question of fact—Full omnibus service started on country road—Traffic not increasing with slow, normal development of district—Cessation of traffic being extraordinary—Highways & Locomotives Amendment Act, 1878, (41 & 42 Vict., c. 77), s. 23.

Whether traffic over a road is "extraordinary traffic" within s. 23 of the Highways and Locomotives Amendment Act, 1878 [now s. 62 (1) of the Highways Act, 1959 (see 39 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 480], is a question of fact in each particular case and in deciding it all the circumstances of the case must be taken into consideration. Increased traffic which is due to the slow and normal increase of the development of the district is not "extraordinary traffic." In considering whether traffic is "extraordinary" there is no distinction in principle between the conveyance of goods and the conveyance of persons, e.g., by motor omnibus, and the purpose and occasion of the traffic is immaterial. Accordingly, where an hourly omnibus service was started over roads which no heavy traffic had previously used, it was held to constitute "extraordinary traffic" although it was instituted to satisfy the needs of the neighbourhood.

Per SWINFEN EADY, L.J.: Traffic held to be extraordinary need not always remain extraordinary traffic. In each case the court is only dealing with the

A position in the period in respect of which the extraordinary expenses are claimed. Extraordinary traffic may in course of time become merely a portion of the ordinary traffic of the district.

Notes. Referred to: Weston-super-Mare U.D.C. v. H. Butt & Co., Ltd. [1919] 2 Ch. 1.

B As to extraordinary traffic, see 19 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 156-161, and for cases see 26 DIGEST (Repl.) 437 et seq.

Cases referred to:

(1) Hill v. Thomas, [1893] 2 Q.B. 333; 62 L.J.M.C. 161; 69 L.T. 553; 57 J.P. 628; 42 W.R. 85; 9 T.L.R. 647; 4 R. 565 C.A.; 26 Digest (Repl.) 439, 1370.

(2) Barnsley British Co-operative Society, Ltd. v. Worsborough U.D.C., [1916] 1 A.C. 291; 85 L.J.K.B. 103; 113 L.T. 1121; 80 J.P. 114; 32 T.L.R. 41; 60 Sol. Jo. 25; 14 L.G.R. 122 H.L.; 26 Digest (Repl.) 449, 1449.

Also referred to in argument:

Etherley Grange Coal Co. v. Auckland District Highway Board, [1894] 1 Q.B. 37; 69 L.T. 702; 58 J.P. 102; 42 W.R. 198; 10 T.L.R. 62; 38 Sol. Jo. 38; 9 R. 88, C.A.; 26 Digest (Repl.) 440, 1382.

D Hemsworth R.D.C. v. Micklethwait (1904), 68 J.P. 345; 2 L.G.R. 1084, D.C.; 26 Digest (Repl.) 441, 1390.

Billericay R.D.C. v. Poorlaw Union and Keeling, [1911] 2 K.B. 801; 80 L.J.K.B. 1241; 105 L.T. 476; 75 J.P. 497; 55 Sol. Jo. 647; 9 L.G.R. 796, C.A.; 26 Digest (Repl.) 452, 1478.

E Appeal by the defendants, omnibus proprietors, from an order made by SANKEY, J., giving judgment for the plaintiffs, the local authority, in an action in which the plaintiffs claimed the expenses alleged to have been incurred by them in repairing certain roads between the city of Oxford and Abingdon, by reason of the damage caused by the excessive weight and extraordinary traffic of the defendants' omnibuses.

F The facts are stated in the judgment of SWINFEN EADY, L.J.

Disturnal, K.C., and Eustace Hills for the defendants.

Clavell Salter, K.C., and C. Willoughby Williams for the plaintiffs were not called on to argue.

G SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—This is an appeal by the defendants, City of Oxford Electric Tramways, Ltd., from a decision of SANKEY, J., who tried the case without a jury. The plaintiffs are the Abingdon Rural District Council, and the claim in the action was made in respect of extraordinary traffic under s. 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878. The learned judge gave judgment for the plaintiffs for a sum of £350. SANKEY, J., gave a very full and elaborate judgment dealing in great detail with the nature of the traffic in respect of which the claim was made, and full particulars of the roads over which the traffic proceeded. The claim is in respect of the institution of a line of motor-omnibuses running between Oxford and Abingdon. These omnibuses run over a road divided into sections and dealt with by SANKEY, J., as section A, section B, and section C. The claim allowed at the trial is in respect of the road section B, and some eighty yards of section C.

H It appears that the road, starting from Oxford, leads to the residential district of Bear's Hill, and then proceeds to Abingdon. The traffic in question consists of traffic from Oxford to Abingdon, and from Abingdon to Oxford, thus enabling the through journey to be made, and also enabling persons living at or near the Bear's Hill to proceed either to Oxford or to Abingdon. The traffic in respect of which the claim is allowed is for one year from July 20, 1914, to July 20, 1915. It is beyond dispute that the traffic has occasioned very much extra expense in the repair of the road used by the omnibuses—in fact, according to the evidence, the charge for maintaining the roads previous to this traffic was about £117 per mile, and the additional charge, caused solely by this traffic, is almost double that figure, that is to say, it has increased it from £117 per mile to £221 per mile. Section 23 of the Act of 1878 provides : A

"Where by a certificate of their surveyor it appears to the authority which is liable or has undertaken to repair any highway, whether a main road or not, that, having regard to the average expenses of repairing highways in the neighbourhood, extraordinary expenses have been incurred by such authority in repairing such highway by reason of the damage caused by excessive weight passing along the same, or extraordinary traffic thereon, such authority may recover in a summary manner from any person by whose order such weight or traffic has been conducted the amount of such expenses . . ."

That extraordinary expenses have been incurred by the plaintiff authority to the extent of £104 per mile by reason of this traffic is not in dispute, but the defendants contest that they are under any liability for it, on the ground that the traffic which has occasioned this additional charge is not extraordinary traffic within the meaning of s. 23 of the Act. The road over which the traffic extends is thus described by the judge. He says : C

"I, therefore, find, with regard to these roads, that they were as described by Mr. Weaving—that is to say, that road B was a lane more or less; that there was hardly any traffic on it before the buses came; that a person walking along the road seldom met anybody or anything; that it was very narrow at parts and very steep; that it was tortuous and with nasty bends, and it was merely a country lane for country light traffic, agricultural carts occasionally, and occasionally possibly a tradesman's cart, still more occasionally a motor-car, but that it was a mere cross-country lane." D

That is a description of the road which forms the middle section from Oxford to Abingdon, section B, and is the road in respect of which the claim is mostly made. There are another eighty yards or so on road C, but as to that the Judge says : E

"Road C, which is the other road I have to deal with, was, I think, of a different character. That was a road which was much better than road B, but at the same time nothing approaching what is known as a main road, and, although the traffic along it was traffic of a more frequent and a heavier character than the traffic along road C, it still remained, for all intents and purposes, a country road." F

It was with reference to the roads so described that the present traffic became additional traffic. What happened was that the defendants were minded to supply a series of motor-omnibuses. Previously, according to the evidence, there had been a one-horse omnibus that for a time sufficed to take the people from Boar's Hill into Oxford and vice-versa, but in 1914 the defendants established a series of motor-omnibuses that were of three types. They were double deck, large single deck, and small single-deck omnibuses. The weights were between 3 tons and a little under 3½ tons empty, but when loaded with passengers they weighed from 4 tons 7cwt. to 5½ tons. The service, from one terminus to the other was a daily service, the omnibuses running hourly from each terminus from about nine in the morning until nine at night, and, accordingly, about twenty-four of them passing over and along the highways in every period of twenty-four hours. So that there would be something like 168 buses in the week going over the roads in question, weighing from 3 to 5½ tons, where previously to the commencement of this traffic there were no motor-omnibuses at all. That is the nature of the traffic. It was urged that it is necessary to consider the nature of the neighbourhood, the nature of the traffic, and the roads in the district. The judge did that. He pointed out, and I will not dwell further upon it, the nature of the roads and the nature of the traffic brought on to these roads where previously there was no traffic of this description. It is an entirely new traffic so far as regards motor-omnibuses. G
H
I

A Is that extraordinary traffic within the meaning of s. 23 of the Act. In Hill v. Thomas (1) BOWEN, L.J., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal, dealt with extraordinary traffic in this way ([1893] 2 K.B. at p. 340):

B "Extraordinary is really a carriage of articles over the road at either one or more times, which is so exceptional in the quality or quantity of articles carried, or in the mode or time of user of the road, as substantially to alter and increase the burden imposed by ordinary traffic on the road, and to cause damage and expense thereby beyond what is common."

C That will apply to the carriage of persons as well as to that of articles. Here the burden has been very much increased, the cost has been almost doubled, and this additional traffic is traffic of an entirely novel kind, not forming hitherto any portion of the ordinary traffic. It is not traffic that has grown up by slow degrees, but it has been put on, it may be, to serve the needs of the neighbourhood, on quiet country roads on which previously the ordinary traffic of the road did not comprise any omnibus traffic at all. Counsel for the defendants argued that the court is bound, in considering the question of extraordinary traffic, to take into account the purpose and occasion of the traffic. He formulated a proposition which is dealt with by SANKEY, J., when he says:

D "I come to another point, and that is the point raised by the learned counsel for the defendants. Briefly it may be put as follows: He says the question that has to be answered in this case is: Is an omnibus service run to serve the needs of a district an extraordinary service—that is to say, is an omnibus service so run extraordinary traffic—and he refers to the colony at Boar's Hill as being the district over which, including Abingdon itself, this motor service is run."

E In substance this was the argument that was put in arguing Barnsley British Co-operative Society, Ltd. v. Worsborough U.D.C. (2). It was part of the argument that was advanced unsuccessfully in that case. There it was argued: "At the present day the essential characteristic of the law with regard to the user of roads is that every member of the public is entitled to use them properly as much as he needs, and traffic will not now be treated as extraordinary, although it be heavy and although it be by traction engine, if it is the ordinary carrying traffic of persons engaged in business in the neighbourhood." So here it is now argued that, if all these motor-omnibuses do is to satisfy the needs of the immediate neighbourhood and to carry the ordinary local traffic between Abingdon and Oxford, that cannot amount to extraordinary traffic. In my opinion, such an argument as that is not well founded. The observations LORD BUCKMASTER in the Barnsley Case (2) ([1916] 1 A.C. at p. 299) are important. He says:

H "It is therefore quite plain that before the road was used under the circumstances that I have stated traffic of the description which was put upon it by the appellants would not have been the ordinary traffic of the road; but this is essentially a question of fact, and a question of fact which I think must be determined at the time, and under all the circumstances existing, when the complaint was made. I do not think it is necessary in this case to consider how long the road may be the subject of extraordinary traffic before such extraordinary traffic becomes ordinary. What the learned judge who tried this case himself said with regard to that matter appears to me to be perfectly sound—namely, that extraordinary traffic is not the traffic which is due to the slow and normal increase of the development of traffic owing to the development of the district."

I That is applicable to the present case. This service of motor-buses was not the slow and normal increase of the development of traffic owing to the development of the district, but it was a service of buses put on at almost one time, and it so rapidly increased from the time of its first institution as to be dealt with as being substantially put on at one time and wholly different in character from anything that preceded it. Counsel for the defendants in substance argued, that if the traffic is now extraordinary traffic, it must always remain extraordinary traffic. I do not accept that at all. All that we are dealing with is the particular year in question, and traffic which when it first takes to the road is new and out of the ordinary may in course of time become merely a portion of the ordinary traffic of the district. But we are not now concerned to inquire within what time the traffic that is now extraordinary may become ordinary. All we have to determine is whether the plaintiffs in this case have made out that during the year in question in which they were put to the additional expense of £350 by reason of traffic the like of which had not been seen on the road before, that traffic, at that time and for that year, was extraordinary traffic within the meaning of s. 23 of the Act.

In my opinion, the judge did not misdirect himself in any way, and in his long and careful judgment he arrived at the proper conclusion. I must say here what was said by LORD BUCKMASTER in the Barnsley Case (2) ([1916] 1 A.C., at p. 300):

"I am unable to find that the learned judge who considered this case and gave a long and careful judgment has in any respect whatever misdirected himself in forming the opinion which he expressed as to this user complained of having been extraordinary and excessive."

Whether user is extraordinary, whether the traffic is extraordinary, is a question of fact in each particular case, and in deciding it all the circumstances of the case must be taken into consideration. I am of opinion that the learned judge arrived at the right conclusion of fact. I am quite unable to accept the distinction which junior counsel for the defendants attempted to draw between this case and the Barnsley Case (2) by saying that in the Barnsley Case (2) it was a demand for goods or commodities which caused the increased traffic, whereas here the traffic results from a demand by passengers for conveyance. The circumstances under which this new traffic takes place differs in different cases. In one case it may be in respect of goods, in another case it may be in respect of the conveyance of persons. In my judgment, there is no distinction in principle between the conveyance of persons and the conveyance of goods in determining whether traffic is or is not extraordinary traffic. For these reasons I am of opinion that the judgment of the court below was quite right, and that the appeal fails.

SCRUTTON, L.J.—I agree.

BRAY, J.—I agree. It is quite clear that this traffic falls within the definition which has been read from the judgment of BOWEN, L.J., in Hill v. Thomas (1), and equally within the passage from LORD BUCKMASTER'S speech in the Barnsley Case (2) ([1916] 1 A.C., at p. 300):

"The learned judge must determine, having regard to all the circumstances, what was the ordinary traffic of the road, and he must then settle whether or no the traffic complained of was not that ordinary traffic, but was extraordinary traffic which the road was not accustomed to bear."

It is said that there must be an exception to that, and that the traffic ceases to be extraordinary if it is due to the development of traffic owing to the development of the district. In the present case SANKLY, J., dealt with that. He found as a fact that the additional traffic was not due to the development of the district at all. Certainly it was not slow and gradual. He said:

"I am considering road B and a part of road C, and I do not think that, even if the point taken by counsel for the defendants was right with regard to the demand preventing the traffic from being extraordinary, it applies to the road in question. I cannot forget that his own and chief witness said—I mean his first official witness—that the defendant company did not cater for wayside traffic. We had considerable evidence given with regard to the number of people who went through from Oxford to Abingdon and vice versa. There was considerable evidence given with regard to the number of people who went to A Boar's Hill, but I watched carefully and I think it was only two or three gentlemen who were put down at Pound's Corner, and who wanted to wander off even to Wooton on the one side or Pewit House on the other side. As I have already said, I do not think, either in law or in fact, that the contention of counsel for the defendants applies here."

B In my opinion, that is quite right, and this was clearly extraordinary traffic.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Church, Adams & Co., for Challenor & Son, Abingdon; Sydney Morse.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

PRITCHETT AND GOLD AND ELECTRICAL POWER STORAGE CO. v. CURRIE AND ANOTHER

D

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Pickford and Warrington, L.JJ.), July 7, 8, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 515; 85 L.J.Ch. 753; 115 L.T. 325]

Lien—Sale of goods—Goods supplied under sub-contract—Right of sellers against party to main contract.

E

The defendant C. entered into a contract with the second defendant, a company for the installation of an electrical apparatus. Among the materials that were required to be supplied was a storage battery. The defendant company entered into a sub-contract with the plaintiff company for the supply of a battery and the erection thereof. The battery was delivered, and a short time afterwards the defendant company went into liquidation. Thereupon the plaintiff company commenced an action against the defendant C. for the price of the battery.

F

Held: the plaintiffs had no lien on or right to follow any part of the money which was payable under the main contract by the defendant C. to the defendant company, and, therefore, their claim must fail.

G

Bellamy v. Davey (1), [1891] 3 Ch. 540, where the subject-matter of the main contract and the sub-contract was co-extensive, distinguished.

Notes. Referred to: Pole-Carew v. Western Counties and General Manure Co., Ltd., [1920] 2 Ch. 97.

As to legal and equitable liens, see 24 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 148-164, and for cases see 32 DIGEST 275 et seq.

H

Case referred to:

(1) Bellamy v. Davey, [1891] 3 Ch. 540; 60 L.J.Ch. 778; 65 L.T. 308; 40 W.R. 118; 7 T.L.R. 725; 32 Digest 284, 613.

Appeal by the defendant company, Hamble River, Luke & Co., Ltd., from an order of SARGANT, J.

I

The facts are stated in their Lordships' judgments.

Romer, K.C., and H. E. Wright for the defendant company.

Grant, K.C., and S. P. J. Merlin for the plaintiffs.

LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—This appeal from a decision of SARGANT, J., raises some curious points. The first is a question not involving any general principle of law, but involving the construction of a somewhat obscure contract. On the one side it is said that the property in the subject-matter of the contract remained in the plaintiffs and did not pass to the defendant company. That is denied by the other side. The main bulk of the argument which we have heard depends upon that issue. The other question is, whether the property passed or not, can the plaintiffs be entitled, as against the defendant company, to claim the money paid into court in the circumstances which I must shortly mention? In my view, the second point is the easier one to deal with, and I propose to deal with that first.

The defendant Mrs. Hilda Beatrice Currie entered into a contract with the defendant company for the supply of an electrical installation. It was a contract for a large sum, and among the things which were required was a storage battery. The defendant company were minded to do that which they had a perfect right to do—namely, to obtain this storage battery from other traders. Accordingly, they entered into a contract with the plaintiffs for—I am using a neutral word—the supply of the storage battery and its erection. That was, of course, for a much smaller sum than was due as between Mrs. Currie and the defendant company. That was one of the many things which had to be dealt with in order to complete the contract between Mrs. Currie and the defendant company. The defendant company got into financial difficulties. The plaintiffs commenced this action originally against Mrs. Currie. It is very hard to see what right they had against her, but I do not say whether they had or had not any such right. Mrs. Currie then took a step which has probably been the cause of a great many of the difficulties. She instituted something in the nature of interpleader proceedings (it plainly was not a case for interpleader), and also asked that the defendant company might be made defendants to the action. The master did not adjourn the case to the judge as usually would have been done. He made an order adding the defendant company, and also providing that a sum of £269, less costs, part of the contract price as between Mrs. Currie and the defendant company, should be paid into court without prejudice to any question between the parties, and proceedings were stayed against Mrs. Currie. The plaintiffs say that they ought to have the money which is in court handed over to them. The learned judge in the court below has adopted that view. With great respect, I am quite unable to follow that. What is this money? On the face of it, it is part of the purchase money to which the defendant company are entitled from Mrs. Currie. When counsel is asked to justify that order, he says that the only authority in point to support that contention is the decision of ROMER, J., in Bellamy v. Davey (1).

Without saying whether Bellamy v. Davey (1) is an authority upon which the court can rely—which I very much doubt—it certainly is no authority for a case like the present. In Bellamy v. Davey (1) there was a contract for erecting two tanks and there was a sub-contract for the erection of the same two tanks. The tanks were unfinished and in an incomplete state when the original contractor became insolvent, and an order was made by the court that the tanks should be completed by the plaintiff, the sub-contractor. Let them be completed by him, said the court, and let him be paid the amount. In that case ROMER, J., seems to have held that it was something in the nature of stoppage in transitu—though it is very difficult to see how that could be so. He held that the sub-contractor was entitled to be paid out of the money due from the building owner to the principal contractor. That may be right or it may be wrong. But it is impossible to apply that doctrine to a case like the present, where the principal contract is one for a large number of items involving more than £1,300, and the sub-contract is merely for one of the elements to be furnished under the contract and is for a very small sum of money. I know of no authority which can justify such a contention as that which has been urged. I am bound to say that I doubt it unless it is put on the footing of arrangement between the parties, and even if Bellamy v. Davey (1) is right, it seems to me to be no authority for the order which has been made here. Counsel for the defendant company say that this is part of the purchase money, and must be handed out of court to the defendant company. I can see no answer to that claim. That being so, in the view which

A I take, it is not strictly necessary to consider the language of the contract between the sub-contractors and the defendant company on the question whether the property did or did not pass. It is a point of difficulty. Upon the whole, for reasons which I think PICKFORD, L.J., will more fully elaborate, I think that the property did pass under the terms of this contract. For these reasons I think that this appeal must be allowed.

B PICKFORD, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The plaintiffs sued the defendant, Mrs. Currie, for the value of materials which they had supplied to the defendant company for the purpose of their being erected by the defendant company on Mrs. Currie's premises as an electric battery as part of a much larger contract for the whole electrical installation, amounting to nearly £1,350. The master made an order that without prejudice to any questions between the plaintiffs and the defendant company Mrs. Currie should lodge in court a certain sum of money, a portion of the balance of the contract price alleged to be payable by her to the defendant company, and it was ordered that on such lodgment all proceedings should be stayed against Mrs. Currie and that the plaintiffs should within fourteen days deliver a statement of their claim to the defendant company who were within fourteen days thereafter to deliver their defence and be at liberty therein to set up any counter-claim. The defendant company had been added on the application of Mrs. Currie as defendants. The result of that was that a certain sum of money payable by Mrs. Currie in respect of the main contract was paid into court, and the plaintiffs were to deliver a claim by which they were to establish their right to that sum of money as against the defendant company. I think that one of the learned counsel used the expression that it was a "sort of interpleader issue." But it was not an interpleader issue at all.

To establish that right, counsel for the plaintiffs, concedes, quite rightly, that he must establish that he has a lien upon or a right to follow that particular sum. He also concedes that, unless such a right is given to him by the authority of Bellamy v. Davey (1), he cannot make out such a right because it is the assertion by a sub-contractor of a lien on the whole of the money payable by the principal debtor to the head contractor under the contract. He admits that, unless that is given to him by the authority of that case, it is contrary to the general rules of law. I do not think that it is in the least necessary for me to consider whether Bellamy v. Davey (1) is right or is wrong. I think that it is enough to say that, assuming that the decision in that case was absolutely right, it is no authority for the proposal for which the plaintiffs contend in the present case. That was a case in which the contractor and the sub-contractor were concerned only with the article that was supplied by the sub-contractor. No doubt the contractor had charged a larger price to the building owner than the sub-contractor charged to him. But that and that only was the subject of the contract. It may be—I do not say whether it is or is not so—that in that case the sub-contractor may have a lien upon the amount payable to the contractor for the amount due to him, and that only the surplus went to the contractor, but it seems to me that that does not in any way establish that where there is a sum of money payable to a contractor, not in respect of one article only, but in respect of the whole contract which includes many things other than the subject-matter of the sub-contract, the sub-contractor has a lien upon a large sum which is not connected with him except indirectly for the payment of his debt. It seems to me that Bellamy v. Davey (1) is no authority for such a proposition as that. The plaintiffs have to establish their right as against the defendant company. The defendant company are entitled to have this money paid to them by Mrs. Currie unless the plaintiffs have established that they have a lien upon it. The plaintiffs have not established any such lien. Therefore, it seems to me that they have not established that they are entitled to the money as against the defendant company or anybody else. I think that the action fails on that ground. [His LORDSHIP dealt in detail with the documents which had been put in evidence and said, in his opinion, the property in the battery did pass to the defendant company.] A

WARRINGTON, L.J.—In this case SARGANT, J., made an order that the £255 odd paid into court by Mrs. Currie should be paid out to the defendants. Can that order be supported? It is admitted by counsel for the plaintiffs that the only authority which could support the order is Bellamy v. Darcy (1). It is quite unnecessary to say whether Bellamy v. Darcy (1) on the facts of that particular case, was properly decided. All that it is necessary for us to say is that it does not apply to a case like the present, where the head contract was for the performance of a number of applications, only one of which was covered by the sub-contract. In Bellamy v. Darcy (1) the head contract and the sub-contract were co-extensive so far as their subject-matter was concerned. On the first point I say nothing more than that—that Bellamy v. Darcy (1), whether rightly or wrongly decided, does not apply to the present case. On the second point, whether the learned judge in the court below was right in saying that the plaintiffs were entitled to the electric battery and fittings, I have closely followed the reasons given by PICKFORD, L.J., and I think that it would be sheer waste of time to express the same reasons in my own language. I agree, therefore, that the appeal ought to be allowed. B

Appeal allowed. C

Solicitors: Bircham & Co.; Claremont, Haynes & Co. D

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.] E

AMMONIA SODA CO., LTD. v. CHAMBERLAIN AND ANOTHER F

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Warrington and Scrutton, L.JJ.), October 29, 30, 31, November 1, 2, 5, 7, 1917]

[Reported [1918] 1 Ch. 266; 87 L.J.Ch. 193; 118 L.T. 48; 34 T.L.R. 60; 62 Sol. Jo. 85] G

Company—Dividend—Distribution—Payment out of profit—Need to make good loss of fixed capital in previous trading period—"Fixed capital"—"Circulating capital".

There is no legal obligation on a limited company not to distribute as dividend the net profit earned by it during a trading period unless its fixed capital is then intact, any loss suffered by that capital in previous trading periods having been made good out of profit. H

For this purpose a distinction must be drawn between "fixed capital" and "circulating capital." "Fixed capital" is that which a company retains in the shape of assets on which the subscribed capital has been expended, which assets either themselves produce income independently of any action by the company—as, e.g., a trust company formed to acquire and hold securities and from time to time to divide the income arising therefrom—or, being retained by the company, are used to gain profits—e.g., a manufacturing company erecting works and installing machinery or plant. "Circulating capital" is subscribed capital temporarily parted with and circulated in business, as in the purchase of goods to be sold at a profit or a loan by a banker to be repaid with interest. The amount of such circulating capital must be charged against receipts in ascertaining profit. Otherwise gross profit would be dealt with as I

- A net profit, and its distribution as dividend would involve a distribution of capital which would be illegal.

Notes. Applied: Lawrence v. West Somerset Mineral Rail. Co., [1918] 2 Ch. 250. Considered: Atherton v. British Insulated and Melsby Cables, [1925] 1 K.B. 421. Referred to: Stapley & Co., Ltd. v. Read Bros., Ltd., [1924] All E.R.Rep. 421; Long Acre Press v. Odhams Press, [1930] All E.R.Rep. 237; Abbott v. Albion Greyhounds (Salford), Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 308.

As to the source and distribution of dividends, see 6 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 396 et seq.; and for cases see 9 DIGEST (Repl.) 179-182, 627 et seq. The present Companies Act is that of 1948, for which see 3 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 452.

C Cases referred to:

- (1) Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalt Co. (1889), 41 Ch.D. 1; 58 L.J.Ch. 408; 61 L.T. 11; 37 W.R. 321; 5 T.L.R. 260; 1 Meg. 140, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 180, 1161.
- (2) Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, [1894] 2 Ch. 239; 63 L.J.Ch. 456; 70 L.T. 516; 10 T.L.R. 393; 38 Sol. Jo. 384; 1 Mans. 136; 7 R. 170, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 181, 1170.
- (3) Re National Bank of Wales, Ltd., Cory's Case, [1899] 2 Ch. 629; 68 L.J.Ch. 634; 81 L.T. 363; 48 W.R. 99; 15 T.L.R. 517; 43 Sol. Jo. 705, C.A.; affirmed sub nom. Dovey v. Cory, [1901] A.C. 477, H.L.; 3 Digest (Repl.) 152, 170.
- (4) Lagunas Nitrate Co. v. Lagunas Syndicate, [1899] 2 Ch. 392; 68 L.J.Ch. 699; 81 L.T. 334; 48 W.R. 74; 15 T.L.R. 436; 43 Sol. Jo. 622; 7 Mans. 165, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 36, 44.
- (5) Re County Marine Insurance Co., Rance's Case (1870), 6 Ch. App. 104; 40 L.J.Ch. 277; 23 L.T. 828; 19 W.R. 291, L.J.J.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 527, 3474.
- (6) Bond v. Barrow Hematite Iron Co., Ltd., [1902] 1 Ch. 353; 71 L.J.Ch. 246; 86 L.T. 10; 50 W.R. 295; 18 T.L.R. 249; 46 Sol. Jo. 280; 9 Mans. 69; 9 Digest (Repl.) 181, 1168.

Also referred to in argument:

Re Sharpe, Re Bennett, Masonic and General Life Assurance Co. v. Sharpe, [1892] 1 Ch. 154; 61 L.J.Ch. 193; 65 L.T. 806; 40 W.R. 241; 8 T.L.R. 194; 36 Sol. Jo. 151, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 631, 4209.

Irvine v. Union Bank of Australia (1877), 2 App. Cas. 366; L.R. 4 Ind. App. 86; 46 L.J.P.C. 87; 37 L.T. 176; 25 W.R. 682, P.C.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 665, 4407. Boschoek Proprietary Co., Ltd. v. Fuke, [1906] 1 Ch. 148; 75 L.J.Ch. 261; 94 L.T. 398; 54 W.R. 359; 22 T.L.R. 196; 50 Sol. Jo. 170; 13 Mans. 100; 9 Digest (Repl.) 465, 3043.

Re Crabtree, Thomas v. Crabtree (1911), 106 L.T. 49, C.A.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 744, 2319.

Dent v. London Tramways Co. (1880), 16 Ch.D. 344; 50 L.J.Ch. 190; 44 L.T. 91; 9 Digest (Repl.) 181, 1175.

Davison v. Gillies (1879), 16 Ch.D. 347, n.; 50 L.J.Ch. 192, n.; 44 L.T. 92, n.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 637, 4243.

Lubbock v. British Bank of South America, [1892] 2 Ch. 198; 61 L.J.Ch. 498; 67 L.T. 74; 41 W.R. 103; 8 T.L.R. 472; 9 Digest (Repl.) 178, 1155.

Foster v. New Trinidad Lake Asphalt Co., Ltd., [1901] 1 Ch. 208; 70 L.J.Ch. 123; 49 W.R. 119; 17 T.L.R. 89; 45 Sol. Jo. 100; 8 Mans. 47; 9 Digest (Repl.) 629, 4201.

Bishop v. Smyrna and Cassaba Rail. Co. (No. 2), [1895] 2 Ch. 596; 64 L.J.Ch. 806; 73 L.T. 337; 2 Mans. 575; 13 R. 803; 9 Digest (Repl.) 178, 1150.

Macdougall v. Jersey Imperial Hotel Co., Ltd. (1864), 2 Hem. & M. 528; 4 New Rep. 497; 34 L.J.Ch. 28; 10 L.T. 843; 28 J.P. 708; 10 Jur.N.S. 1043; 12 W.R. 1142; 71 E.R. 568; 9 Digest (Repl.) 630, 4207.

- Re Exchange Banking Co., Flitcroft's Case* (1882), 21 Ch.D. 519; 52 L.J.Ch. 217; 48 L.T. 86; 31 W.R. 174, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 631, 4210. A
- Re National Funds Assurance Co.* (1878), 10 Ch.D. 118; 48 L.J.Ch. 163; 39 L.T. 420; 27 W.R. 302; 9 Digest (Repl.) 630, 4208.
- Re Mercantile Trading Co., Stringer's Case* (1869), 4 Ch. App. 475; 20 L.T. 591; 17 W.R. 694; sub nom. Re Mercantile Trading Co., Ex parte Official Liquidator, 38 L.J.Ch. 698, L.J.J.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 524, 3454. B
- City of Glasgow Bank (Liquidators) v. Mackinnon* (1882), 9 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 535; 9 Digest (Repl.) 528, *1416.
- Wilmer v. McNamara & Co., Ltd.*, [1895] 2 Ch. 245; 64 L.J.Ch. 516; 72 L.T. 552; 43 W.R. 519; 11 T.L.R. 371; 39 Sol. Jo. 450; 13 R. 513; 9 Digest (Repl.) 182, 1176.
- Re Crichton's Oil Co.*, [1901] 2 Ch. 184; 70 L.J.Ch. 639; 84 L.T.Rep. 864; 8 Mans. 319; affirmed [1902] 2 Ch. 86; 71 L.J.Ch. 531; 86 L.T. 787; 18 T.L.R. 556; 9 Mans. 402, C.A.; 10 Digest (Repl.) 1086, 7406. C
- Leeds Estate, Building and Investment Co. v. Shepherd* (1887), 36 Ch.D. 787; 57 L.J.Ch. 46; 57 L.T. 684; 3 T.L.R. 841; 36 W.R. 322; 9 Digest (Repl.) 632, 4216.
- Hinds v. Buenos Ayres Grand National Tramways Co., Ltd.*, [1906] 2 Ch. 654; 76 L.J.Ch. 17; 95 L.T. 780; 23 T.L.R. 6; 51 Sol. Jo. 13; 13 Mans. 411; 9 Digest (Repl.) 178, 1153. D
- Bosinquet v. St. John D'El Rey Mining Co., Ltd.* (1897), 77 L.T. 206; 13 T.L.R. 525; 9 Digest (Repl.) 182, 1179.

Appeal by the plaintiff company from an order made by PETERSON, J., dismissing an action in which the company claimed that the defendants, directors of the company, should make good sums paid as dividends which, the company alleged, were not paid out of available profits, but out of capital. E

The facts are as stated by SWINFEN EADY, L.J.

Gore-Browne, K.C., and J. H. Stamp for the plaintiff company.

Clauser, K.C., and D. D. Robertson, for the defendants, were not called on to argue. F

SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff company from the judgment of PETERSON, J., dismissing the action. In the autumn of 1915 the plaintiff company was the owner of lands in Cheshire of about 160 acres with extensive beds of rock salt and two proved brine flows. They also had buildings and machinery which had been erected at a cost, including the cost of exploration of the lands, of upwards of £150,000. The plaintiff company's predecessors purchased the land in 1907. It had taken several years to erect the works and establish the business, and by 1911 it had become a paying concern. For the thirteen months ending Jan. 31, 1912, the net profit was £13,030, and for the twelve months ending Jan. 31, 1913, the net profit was £15,669. In each year the profit was made after charging depreciation, mortgage and debenture interest, directors' fees, and other outgoings. The business carried on by the plaintiff company apparently competed with the business of Brunner, Mond & Co., and in the autumn of 1915 Brunner, Mond & Co. approached the directors and negotiated for and ultimately purchased substantially all the shares of the company. They thus obtained entire control of the plaintiff company, including all effective voting power. The old directors retired, and a new board nominated by Brunner, Mond & Co. took its place. The first report of the new board is dated Apr. 26, 1916, for submission to the shareholders in general meeting on May 16, 1916. The present action was commenced on May 18, two days after. The object of the action was to obtain a declaration that the dividends declared between September, 1912, and March, 1915, were paid out of capital, and to have the amount refunded by the defendants to the plaintiff company. The dividends alleged to have been paid out of capital are the following amounts. £916 10s. 7d. on Sept. 30, 1912; G H I

A £2,429 2s. 7d. on Mar. 31, 1913; a similar amount on Sept. 30, 1913; a similar amount on Apr. 4, 1914; and a further sum of £4,264 12s. — part of £4,912 10s. 1d. — on Mar. 31, 1915. Thus the total amount claimed in this action as dividends alleged to have been paid out of capital is £12,468 10s. 4d. If the claim were well founded it would be immaterial that Brunner, Mond & Co. had acquired their shares at what the parties agreed to be the value after all these dividends had been paid, and that the repayment of the amount to the plaintiff company would now in effect operate to enable Brunner, Mond & Co. to acquire a substantial additional benefit. The real question is: Were these dividends paid out of capital? PETERSON, J., held that they were not, and the plaintiff company contends that that judgment was erroneous. There is no dispute between the parties that these dividends were not paid out of the subscribed capital in the ordinary sense; on the contrary, it is admitted that they were paid out of net profits earned during the period in respect of which the dividends were paid. This is clearly the case, and is admitted on the face of the report of Apr. 26, 1916.

C The plaintiff company contends, however, that although net profits were earned during the period, they were not available for dividend, and cannot really be considered "profits," as in the earlier period of the plaintiff company's history a loss had been incurred, and it is contended that until that loss has first been made good there cannot be any profits in the true sense of the word. In my judgment, this argument is unsound and has been exposed again and again. The Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, does not press any obligation upon a limited company, nor does the law require it, that it shall not distribute as dividend the clear net profit of its trading unless its paid up capital is intact or until it has made good all losses incurred in previous years. Upon this point it is only necessary to refer to three decisions of the Court of Appeal and one in the House of Lords.

E In Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co. (1) COTTON, L.J., said (41 Ch.D. at pp. 15, 16, and 18):

F "The plaintiff's second point is that the property of the company is not now sufficient to make good the share capital; that assets to provide for that share capital must be made up before any dividend can be declared; and that, if dividends are declared without that being done, that is to be treated as a return and a division of capital amongst the shareholders, and therefore illegal. In my opinion that is entirely wrong. It is a misapplication of the term 'Return of capital.' . . . But if the court sees that the directors and the company have acted fairly and reasonably in ascertaining whether this is a division of profit and not of capital, then in what is really a matter of internal arrangement (if it is done honestly, and does not violate any of the provisions of the articles) the court is very unwilling to interfere and, in my opinion, ought not to interfere, with the discretion exercised by the directors, who have the management of the company, or with the powers exercised by the company, within the articles."

H LINDLEY, L.J., said (ibid. at pp. 22 and 23):

I "I may safely say that the Companies Acts do not require the capital to be made up if lost. They contain no provision of the kind. There is not even any provision that if the capital is lost the company shall be wound-up, and I think this omission is quite reasonable. The capital may be lost and yet the company may be a very thriving concern. As I pointed out in the course of the argument, and I repeat now, suppose a company is formed to start a daily newspaper; supposing it sinks £250,000 before the receipts from sales and advertisements equal the current expenses, and supposing it then goes on, is it to be said that the company must come to a stop, or that it cannot divide profits until it has replaced its £250,000, which has been sunk in building up a property which if put up for sale would perhaps not yield £10,000? That is a business matter left to business men. . . . Having shown from the Acts (negatively, of course, because this is a negative proposition, and can only be proved by looking through the Acts) that the Acts do not require the capital to be made up if lost. I cannot find anything in them which precludes payment of dividends so long as the assets are of less value than the original capital."

LOPES, L.J., was of the same opinion.

The next case was Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust (2) LINDLEY, L.J., in delivering the judgment of himself and A. L. SMITH, L.J., said ([1894] 2 Ch. at pp. 266 and 267):

"The law is much more accurately expressed by saying that dividends cannot be paid out of capital than by saying that they can only be paid out of profits. The last impression leads to the inference that the capital must always be kept up and be represented by assets which, if sold, would produce it; and this is more than is required by law. Perhaps the shortest way of expressing the distinction which I am endeavouring to explain is to say that fixed capital may be sunk and lost, and yet that the excess of current receipts over current payments may be divided, but that floating or circulating capital must be kept up, as otherwise it will enter into and form part of such excess, in which case to divide such excess without deducting the capital which forms part of it will be contrary to law. . . . There is nothing in the Companies Acts, 1867 and 1887, any more than in the Act of 1862, which prevents a company which has lost part of its capital from continuing to carry on business and declaring and paying dividends."

KAY, L.J., said (ibid. at p. 270) that he did not know of any law to prevent income received from being divided, whether part of the capital is lost or not, and he added that it might be difficult to frame such a law without unduly interfering with the liberty of commercial proceedings.

In Re National Bank of Wales, Ltd., Corg's Case (3) LORD LINDLEY, M.R., in delivering the judgment of the court, said ([1899] 2 Ch. at p. 669):

"It is not possible for the court to say that the law prohibits a limited company, even a limited banking company, from paying dividends unless its paid-up capital is intact."

After referring to Lee v. Neuchatel Asphaltic Co., Ltd. (1) and to Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, Ltd. (2), he said (ibid. at pp. 670 and 671):

"What was lost there was fixed capital, and it is obvious that circulating capital, or any other money employed in earning returns, must be deducted from them in order to ascertain how much of them can be regarded as profit. If the returns do not exceed the money spent in procuring them (whether such money be called circulating capital or by any other name) there can be no profits; and no ingenious process of bookkeeping can alter the fact. It is not denied that in this case the annual receipts did exceed the annual outgoings, and, the dividends having been paid out of the excess, the allegation that they were paid out of capital is not accurate. . . . It was stated in the judgment of this court in Lagunas Nitrate Co. v. Lagunas Syndicate (4) that, if directors act within their powers—if they act with such care as is reasonably to be expected from them, having regard to their knowledge and experience—and if they act honestly for the benefit of the company they represent, they discharge their equitable as well as their legal duty to the company. We believe this statement of the law to be correct, and we adopt it as our guide."

In the same case in the House of Lords, under the name of Dovey v. Cory (3), some observations of LORD MACNAGHTEN may appropriately be cited, with reference to the large number of points of detail upon which counsel for the plaintiff company invited us to express an opinion. He said ([1901] A.C. at p. 488):

"I do not think it desirable for any tribunal to do that which Parliament has abstained from doing—that is, to formulate precise rules for the guidance or embarrassment of business men in the conduct of business affairs. There

A never has been, and I think there never will be, much difficulty in dealing with any particular case on its own facts and circumstances; and, speaking for myself, I rather doubt the wisdom of attempting to do more."

LORD DAVEY approved of the principle laid down by LORD ROMILLY in Rance's Case (5) with a slight qualification. He also cited with approval (6 Ch. App. at p. 493)

B LINDLEY, L.J.'s judgment in Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, Ltd. (2) ([1894] 2 Ch. at p. 266), where he said:

C "Perhaps the shortest way of expressing the distinction which I am endeavouring to explain is to say that fixed capital may be sunk and lost, and yet that the excess of current receipts over current payments may be divided, but that floating or circulating capital must be kept up, as otherwise it will enter into and form part of such excess, in which case to divide such excess without deducting the capital which forms part of it will be contrary to law."

The distinction between "fixed" capital and "circulating" capital is not to be discovered in any of the Companies Acts. It appears to have first found its way into notice in Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co., Ltd. (1), where LINDLEY, L.J., in his judgment adopted the expression which had been used by Sir Horace Davey in argument derived from writers in political economy. It is necessary to consider the sense in which the expressions "fixed capital" and "circulating capital" were used in that case and in Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, Ltd. (2). What is fixed capital? That which a company retains in the shape of assets upon which the subscribed capital has been expended, which assets either themselves produce income independently of any further action by the company, or, being retained by the company are made use of to reproduce income or gain profits. A trust company, founded to acquire and hold stocks, shares, and securities, and from time to time to divide the dividends and income arising therefrom, is an instance of the former. A manufacturing company, acquiring or erecting works with machinery or plant, is an instance of the latter. In these cases the capital is fixed in the sense of being invested in assets intended to be retained by the company more or less permanently and used in producing an income. What is circulating capital? It is a portion of the subscribed capital of the company intended to be used by being temporarily parted with and circulated in business in the form of money, goods, or other assets, and which or the proceeds of which are intended to return to the company with an increment and are intended to be used again and again and to always return with some accretion. Thus the capital with which a trader buys goods circulates; he parts with it and with the goods bought by it, intending to receive it back again with profit arising from the resale of the goods. A banker lending money to a customer parts with his money and thus circulates it, hoping and intending to receive it back with interest. He retains, more or less permanently, bank premises in which the money invested becomes fixed capital.

H It must not be, however, assumed that the division into which capital thus falls is permanent. The language is merely used to describe the purpose to which it is for the time being appropriated. This purpose may be changed as often as considered desirable, and as the constitution of the bank may allow. Thus bank premises may be sold and the money used as circulating capital may be expended in acquiring bank premises. The terms "fixed" and "circulating" are merely terms convenient for describing the purpose to which the capital is for the time being devoted, when considering its position in respect to the profits available for dividend. Thus, when circulating capital is expended in buying goods which are sold at a profit, or in buying raw materials from which goods are manufactured and sold at a profit, the amount so expended must be charged against, or deducted from, receipts before the amount of any profits can be arrived at. This is quite a truism, but it is necessary to bear it in mind when you are considering what part of current receipts are available for division as profit.

To return to the facts of the present case. The plaintiff company was registered in 1908 as a private company, and took over the property and assets of a partnership which carried on business as the Ammonia Soda Co. No profit was made on the sale of the concern by the partnership to the company. The plaintiff company took over all the assets and property at the price which they had cost the firm, and paid for them in shares. The substance of the transfer was that the private partnership was converted into a private company. It was carried on as a private company for three years until 1911, when, further capital being needed to the extent of about £150,000, it was decided to convert the private company into a public company. At this time its capital was £150,000 in ordinary shares, and it was decided to increase it to £300,000, the additional capital created being £150,000 in 6 per cent. preference shares which were to be issued to the public. The private partnership having been formed in 1907, it had taken four years to carry out the exploratory works, erect plant and machinery, and bring the concern to a profit-earning stage. Before the conveyance of Sept. 2, 1907, to the partnership of the 160 acres of land the existence of a brine run on the premises, furnishing a supply of brine which was practically inexhaustible, had been established. After purchase a shaft was sunk to work this brine. Another boring was made which proved the existence of a second brine run, the hydrostatic value of which differed by some 20 ft. from that of the first boring, but probably having some connection with the first. After a tool had been broken in the bore hole this was abandoned. Another boring was also made to the depth of 2,509 ft., which was not successful in achieving the purpose for which it was sunk, but nevertheless produced a wholly unexpected, startling, and unique result. The purpose of the sinking was to reach water into which could be turned the effluent from the company's works, and so dispose of it. This purpose failed, but a new bed of rock salt of a thickness of 666 ft. or thereabouts was proved, the existence of which was previously entirely unknown and unsuspected. The directors and their advisers considered that the results obtained by this expenditure increased the value of the company's property considerably in excess of what had been expended upon it. There was, however, in 1911, when the company was contemplating the issue of preference shares, an amount standing to the debit of profit and loss of £19,028 5s. 4d. This amount arose by debiting to that account at a time when the company's gross trading profit was insufficient to provide for the purpose the following sums for depreciation of buildings, plant, and machinery—namely, for the twelve and a half months ending Jan. 12, 1910, £5,383 6s. 6d.; for the year ending Dec. 31, 1910, £5,218 10s. 1d.; and for the seven months ending July 31, 1911, £3,119 3s. 6d., making together £13,721 0s. 1d. These sums represent a bookkeeping entry of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on buildings and $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on plant and machinery. But there is no evidence of any actual depreciation of these items during this period. There were also debited during the same period large sums for directors' fees and mortgage and debenture interest. By reason of these debits there stood to the debit of profit and loss in May, 1911, when the issue of preference shares was contemplated, the said sum of £19,028. The directors proceeded to write off this debit balance in a manner which I will explain directly, and which is the foundation of this action. But if they had not done so, was there anything to prevent the payment of dividends out of subsequent net profits? In my opinion, there was not, for the reasons already stated. The directors were not under any obligation to recoup this lost capital before dividing net profit subsequently earned. And if money of a company be lost before any profits have been earned, which is alleged to have been the case here, it can only be capital which has been lost.

Counsel for the company invited the court to lay down that wherever there was a debit to the profit and loss account, irrespective of the way in which it arose, of the stage in the company's operations, and of the nature and business of the company, it was illegal to divide profits subsequently earned without first writing off out of those profits the amount of the debit. To do so would be to fall into the error which Lord MacNAGHTEN pointed out should be avoided, and would only

A serve to harass and embarrass business men, and impose upon companies a burden which Parliament has abstained from casting upon them. The directors in this case were of opinion that no capital had been really lost, and they were of opinion that the value of the land and works as a going concern had been increased, as a result of their boring and exploratory work, to a considerably greater amount than £19,028. A committee of directors was appointed to look into the matter and

B value the land. Mr. Cocking, who made a valuation, was a mining engineer and scientific chemist, and had planned the works which had been erected. With his assistance the committee arrived at the conclusion that the sum at which the premises stood in their books was far below its real value, and on the revaluation the amount was increased by £20,542 2s. 8d. The learned judge in the court below

C in so doing. The balance-sheet fully disclosed what had been done. The auditors drew attention to it in their certificate written at the foot of the balance-sheet, and it was explained to, and concurred in by, the shareholders in general meeting, and the report and accounts were received and adopted. In my opinion, in thus acting the directors were merely stating in their balance-sheet what, upon reasonable grounds, they believed to be the real value of their assets. At the trial three

D expert valuers were called by the defendants, and each of them was of opinion that the land was of the value at which it was entered, and the judge in substance accepted their evidence. Indeed he held that the estimate of value of Major Jackson, who was called for the plaintiffs, did not even approach the real value. The mode in which Mr. Cocking had arrived at his value was not attempted to be justified, but the amount arrived at was the fair value of the land. The result of

E increasing the value at which the land stood was to give a credit which would have enabled the debit of £19,028 to be written off. Part of it was, however, actually written off out of subsequent net profits. The debit consisted in part of a nominal depreciation in the fixed assets of the company, buildings, plant, and machinery, and as regards the balance it consisted of sums paid out of the subscribed capital of the company for mortgage and debenture interest and directors' fees, there

F not being sufficient trading profits to provide these amounts. The transaction was carried out with the full approval of the shareholders in general meeting, and in all honesty and good faith. The dividends complained of, paid out of net earnings in the subsequent years, were not paid out of capital, but out of profits, and the defendants are, in my opinion, under no liability whatever to repay the same or any part. The appeal fails, and should be dismissed.

G WARRINGTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The plaintiffs, the Ammonia Soda Co., Ltd., claim to recover from two ex-directors the amount of certain dividends paid to preference shareholders, on the alleged ground that they were paid either (a) out of capital or (b) at all events otherwise than out of profits, the articles of association providing that no dividend should be paid except out of H profits of the company. It is unnecessary for me to re-state the facts in detail; it is enough shortly to mention those which raise the question.

At the end of 1910 there stood to the debit of the profit and loss account the sum of £19,028 5s. 4d., being the net loss on the trading of the company up to that time. By July 31, 1911, this loss had been reduced by subsequent profits to £12,970 18s. 3d. During the period ending on the same date the total amount

I allowed for depreciation of buildings and machinery had been the sum of £13,702 15s. 7d. The company's land, if entered on the same footing as that previously adopted, viz., at cost with certain additions, the nature of which it is unnecessary to specify, would have stood at £63,246 and some odd shillings. The directors, however, determined to enter it in the balance sheet for the period ending July 31, 1911, at £83,788, viz., £20,542 more than the £63,246, and to carry the £20,542 to a reserve account. This they did, and to this reserve account they charged, amongst other sums, the £12,970 18s. 3d., standing to the debit of profit and loss. The result was to wipe off this debit. Subsequently, considerable profits in trading were made, and out of these the dividends in question were paid. In arriving at the amount of the profit for purposes of dividend there were deducted from the gross returns all money employed in earning them, including wages, cost of material, depreciation of buildings and machinery, and so forth. It is not suggested that any expense of this nature which ought to have been deducted was not deducted. That such proper deductions must be made is, I believe, all that LORD LINDLEY meant in the passages relating to circulating capital contained in his two judgments in Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, Ltd. (2) and in Re National Bank of Wales, Ltd., Cory's Case (3). As to the value of the land, the directors honestly believed that it was worth at least the extra £20,000, and I am quite satisfied that they had reasonable grounds for that belief. I am myself prepared to go further, and to say that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the land was not of at least the value adopted by the directors.

Under these circumstances can the directors be held liable for the payments they made? LORD MACNAGHTEN gave utterance in Dorcy v. Cory (3) to a warning which should be borne in mind in all such cases as these. He said ([1901] A.C. at p. 488):

"I do not think it desirable for any tribunal to do that which Parliament has abstained from doing—that is, to formulate precise rules for the guidance or embarrassment of business men in the conduct of business affairs. There never has been, and I think there never will be, much difficulty in dealing with any particular case on its own facts and circumstances; and, speaking for myself, I rather doubt the wisdom of attempting to do more. I understand from my noble and learned friend, LORD SHAND, that he also takes this view."

There is, however, one restriction on the powers of companies incorporated under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, viz., that they must not under the guise of dividends or in any other way return to their shareholders money subscribed for their shares unless it be with the sanction of the court under the appropriate statutory provisions. It has been asserted in this case, not for the first time, that there is a further restriction—suggested to be a corollary of the rule I have just mentioned—which would make it illegal for a company to pay dividends out of the profits of a current year unless it first makes good deficiencies in paid-up capital occasioned by losses in previous years, or, to put the contention in a broader form, no dividends can properly be paid out of profits so long as there are losses previously incurred and not made good.

In my opinion, this alleged restriction has no foundation in law. It is not contended that there is anything in the statutes imposing it, and its suggested existence as a doctrine of the court has been negatived by the Court of Appeal in Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co., Ltd. (1), Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, Ltd. (2), and Re National Bank of Wales, Ltd., Cory's Case (3). I am, of course, far from saying that in all such cases dividends can properly be paid without making good the previous loss. The nature of the business and the amount of the loss may be such that no honest and reasonable man of business would think of paying dividends without providing for it. In such a case I apprehend the court would take the view that a payment which no honest and reasonable man of business would think it right to make could not properly be made by directors. We have no such case here. Even without taking credit for the appreciation of the land, I think the dividends paid were properly paid. They were not paid out of capital unless they were paid out of money which the directors were bound to treat as capital. For the reasons I have given the directors were not, in my opinion, bound to treat as capital the profits out of which the dividends were paid. They were not paid otherwise than out of profits, for they were clearly paid out of profits of trading clearly ascertained after making the necessary deductions. But if I am wrong in this view, the case is made quite clear by accepting the view of the directors and treating the land as of the value at which they entered it in the

A balance-sheet. If I am right, that they honestly and reasonably believed it to be of this nature, they were clearly entitled to so treat it in the balance-sheet; and the effect of so doing was to establish that there was no deficiency of paid-up capital, and no ground, therefore, for applying the restriction I have alluded to. The fund out of which the dividends were paid would then clearly be profits even if such restriction existed, as, in my opinion, it did not. I am of opinion that the judgment of PETERSON, J., was right and that the appeal should be dismissed.

B SCRUTTON, L.J.—If there had not been three previous decisions of the Court of Appeal discussing the subject-matter of the law which has been argued in this case, I should certainly have desired very carefully to have considered the language in which I expressed my judgment. The course, however, which the case has taken, and the opinion that I have formed, enables me very shortly to express the view that I have taken, though having regard to what may be described, according to the point of view, as either the hope or the threat that this matter will be tested by a superior tribunal who can deal with the whole matter, I have thought it right shortly to express in my own words the opinion that I have formed.

C I do not propose to repeat the facts which have been stated by SWINFEN EADY, L.J. The facts which shortly raise the point appear to me to be these. An attempt is made to make the directors liable for dividends which their company has paid under their sanction. That those dividends amount to between £1,200 and £1,300 paid in the years 1912, 1913, 1914, and 1915; in amount they are less than the net profits which were made in those years; and in calculating those net profits allowance has been made for some £28,000 for depreciation or wear and tear of fixed assets, and for some £32,000 for repairs of those fixed assets. What is said is this: "Although in the years in which you paid these dividends there were profits out of which you could pay them, in three of those years—1909, 1910, and 1911—there was a loss of £19,000, and the profits of subsequent years must be applied in the first instance to replace the loss." It is true that such a loss was shown in those years by deducting or writing off a depreciation of some £13,000 on fixed assets and repairs. The answer to the attack made on the directors is put, as I understand it, in four ways at least. [His LORDSHIP dealt with two questions of fact which, he said, it was unnecessary to decide, and continued:] I come now to the third and fourth answers which are made to the attack. It is said thirdly: "We might be liable if we paid dividends out of capital. But we did not pay dividends out of capital; we paid them out of profits." Fourthly it is said: "If there was a loss of capital (which we dispute) there is no obligation to replace a loss of capital out of subsequent profits before dividends are paid." Without laying down a hard-and-fast rule to settle all business cases, which LORD MACNAGHTEN deprecates, I come to the clear conclusion that in a case where the facts are such as they are in this case, the three decisions of the Court of Appeal, in Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co., Ltd. (1), in Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, Ltd. (2), and in Re National Bank of Wales, Ltd. (3), bind me to say that those two contentions of the defendants are accurate, and if they are to be reviewed or qualified, or if any further rules are to be laid down, that must be done by a higher tribunal than the Court of Appeal.

H In the first place, as to whether the dividends were paid out of capital—assuming all the facts in the plaintiffs' favour—£19,000 was lost in the years 1909-1911. What was lost? It was not profits, because there were no profits to lose. It could be nothing else than capital that was lost, and when you have lost a thing you cannot use it for anything else. You cannot pay dividends out of a thing which you have lost, because it is not there to pay dividends out of. Therefore, I come to the conclusion which has been come to in the three cases to which I have referred—that it is inaccurate to say that if in subsequent years you pay dividends, having lost capital in previous years, you are paying the dividends out of the capital that you lost in the previous year. It is only possible to support the suggestion that you do so by treating the profit, when made in a subsequent year, as in some way automatically turned into capital, as replacing the capital which has been lost, and then saying that what was made as profit has in some way automatically become capital, and, therefore, must be treated as capital. I can find no foundation for that in the statutes nor the decisions; the three judgments of the Court of Appeal to which I have referred seem to bind me to hold the opposite. A

Dealing with the fourth proposition, it appears to me that the decisions of the Court of Appeal and the reasoning throughout the judgments in the Court of Appeal in the three cases to which I have referred show that there is no obligation, except of the most limited character, to make good a loss of capital out of subsequent profits. I am not sure that the language in which KAY, L.J., expressed it in Verner's Case (2) does not sufficiently express my position. He said ([1894] 2 Ch. at p. 270): B

"These provisions seem to me to mean that any income received may be divided, whether part of the capital is lost or not. At present I do not know of any law to prevent this, and it might be difficult to frame such a law without unduly interfering with the liberty of commercial proceedings." C

LINDLEY, L.J., in the same case began his judgment by saying (ibid. at p. 264): D

"The broad question raised by this appeal is, whether a limited company which has lost part of its capital can lawfully declare or pay a dividend without first making good the capital which has been lost. I have no doubt it can—that is to say, there is no law which prevents it in all cases and under all circumstances."

When one looks to see what qualification the learned judge had in mind when he said "in all cases and under all circumstances," one finds that he introduced a distinction, which seems to me in subsequent cases and in arguments to have been much misunderstood, between fixed and circulating capital. He introduced it in this way (ibid. at p. 266): E

"If the income of any year arises from a consumption in that year of what may be called circulating capital, the division of such income as dividend without replacing the capital consumed in producing it will be a payment of a dividend out of capital within the meaning of the prohibition which I have endeavoured to explain." F

That I understand simply to mean this, which, when stated, appears to me to be a truism. When you are taking receipts in an ordinary period, and to earn those receipts you have parted absolutely with some of your capital, as when you have bought goods and then sold them for a price, you must not treat the price as the net profits without deducting the money representing the cost of the goods which you have parted with in order to obtain the price. In other words, you cannot treat as net profits what are actually gross profits. When a few lines later LINDLEY, L.J., stated the principle, he stated it with a view to the sentence which he had used just above, explaining what he means by "circulating": G

"Perhaps the shortest way of expressing the distinction which I am endeavouring to explain is to say that fixed capital may be sunk and lost, and yet that the excess of current receipts over current payments may be divided, but that floating or circulating capital must be kept up, as otherwise it will enter into and form part of such excess, in which case to divide such excess without deducting the capital which forms part of it will be contrary to law." H

That appears to me simply to point to the extremely true and obvious proposition which he has used a little further up, that you cannot take the gross receipts of the year without taking into account in finding the profits the part of the capital which you have parted with—circulated, sold—in order to obtain this profit. I dwell upon this because I am startled to find that in the decision of FARWELL, J., in Bond v. Barrow Hematite Iron Co., Ltd. (6) he has extended LINDLEY, L.J.'s I

- A proposition to wear and tear of fixed capital, which is not parted with at all, and has treated the wear and tear of buildings as circulating capital which must be made good. Such a meaning of the term "circulating capital" is certainly not the sense in which it was used by the economists from whom the definition was taken. Mr. MILL's definition of circulating capital was: Capital which fulfils the whole of its office in the production in which it is engaged by a single use. Certainly
- B Mr. MILL would have been astonished to hear that a building which deteriorates by wear and tear was circulating capital within his definition. In my view the proposition laid down by LINDLEY, L.J., and approved by LORD DAVEY in the House of Lords in Dovey v. Cory (3) has to be very carefully limited to the facts with regard to which LINDLEY, L.J., used it. That being the view I take of the decisions of the Court of Appeal, it seems to me impossible to say that there was any obligation imposed either by statute or by the decided cases to replace the losses of 1909, 1910, and 1911 before dealing with and dividing the profits made in 1912, 1913, 1914, and 1915.
- C

It was suggested, as I understand, by counsel for the company that while, if he had only to deal with decisions of the Court of Appeal, he might be in some difficulty, those decisions had been so shaken as to be rendered no longer binding on this court by the judgment of the House of Lords in Davey v. Cory (3). I desire to say very respectfully to the House of Lords that, if Court of Appeal decisions are to be overruled, it must be done in a clearer way than has been done by the noble Lords in Dovey v. Cory (3). In that case LORD HALSBURY says ([1901] A.C. at pp. 482 and 486):

- E "I am very anxious not to deal with some reasons given for their judgment by the Court of Appeal which in view of the facts that I have do not arise here. . . . I am very reluctant to enter into a question which for the reasons I have given does not arise here, and into which the Court of Appeal has entered at some length. The only reason why I refer to it at all is lest by silence I should be supposed to adopt a course of reasoning as to which I am not satisfied that it is correct."

- F That, with great respect to the noble Lord, leaves the decision of the Court of Appeal where it was. It is a warning that on some future occasion the noble Lord may have to consider whether or not he is satisfied by the arguments he then hears for the reasons given by the Court of Appeal. But it certainly leaves the decisions of the Court of Appeal binding on this court. I respectfully sympathise
- G and agree with the protest which LORD HALSBURY made in Dovey v. Cory (3) (ibid. at p. 487) as to bringing in the distinction between fixed and floating capital, which is appropriate enough to an abstract proposition like that which occurs in ADAM SMITH'S WEALTH OF NATIONS, but is quite inappropriate in concrete cases. LORD MACNAGHTEN, in whose judgment LORD SHAND concurs, says (ibid):

- H "I desire to guard myself from being understood to assent to all the propositions supposed to have been laid down in the Court of Appeal in this case."

He did not say which of the propositions he dissented from. He said they were supposed to have been laid down; and again I respectfully suggest that one requires a much clearer expression from the House of Lords than that before one can treat a decision of the Court of Appeal as overruled. LORD DAVEY, who went into rather more detail, adopted the view of the principle as stated by LORD LINDLEY in Verner's Case (2), reserving the question for future consideration as to the effect of an actual and ascertained loss. I find nothing in that decision which renders the views of the Court of Appeal within their legitimate compass no longer binding upon them. Finding those decisions spread over a period of some twenty years, I adopt them, and I come to the conclusion that on the third and fourth points raised in answer to the attack made on the defendants in this case the decisions of the Court of Appeal bind me to say, first of all, that these dividends were not paid out of capital, for the capital, if lost at all, had been lost in preceding years, and could not be used to pay dividends; secondly, that there was in this case no obligation, before dividends were paid out of profits accrued in an ordinary period of the working of the company, to make good losses of capital which had been suffered in a previous ordinary working period of the company. For these reasons I agree with the judgments of my brothers. A

I

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Blyth, Dutton, Hartley & Blyth, for J. H. Gold, Northwich; Morris & Bristow, for William Morris, Birmingham. B

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

TITMUS v. LITTLEWOOD

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Reading, C.J., Sankey and Low, JJ.), January 28, 1916] D

[Reported [1916] 1 K.B. 732; 85 L.J.K.B. 738; 114 L.T. 614;
80 J.P. 239; 23 T.L.R. 278; 25 Cox, C.C. 337]

Licensing—Offence—Sale of intoxicating liquor at place other than licensed premises—Executory agreement to sell at place not authorised by licence liquor kept at licensed premises—Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 and 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), s. 65 (1). E

By s. 65 (1) of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910: "a person shall not sell or expose for sale by retail any intoxicating liquor . . . at any place except that for which the justices' licence authorises him to hold an excise licence for the sale of that liquor," and sub-s. (2) makes a contravention of s. 65 an offence.

Held: an executory agreement for sale was not a "sale" within s. 65 (1), and, therefore, a licensee who, at a place other than his licensed premises, entered into an executory agreement for the sale of intoxicating liquor kept at the licensed premises had not acted in contravention of s. 65 (1). F

Notes. The Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, has been repealed by the Licensing Act, 1953. For s. 65 of the Act of 1910, see now s. 120 of the Act of 1953. G

As to selling intoxicating liquor without a licence, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 663 et seq.; and for cases see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 84 et seq. For the Licensing Act, 1953, s. 120, see 33 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (3rd Edn.) 250.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Pletts v. Beattie, [1896] 1 Q.B. 519; 65 L.J.M.C. 86; 74 L.T. 148; 60 J.P. 185; 12 T.L.R. 227; 40 Sol. Jo. 297; 18 Cox, C.C. 264, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 87, 665. H
- (2) Stephenson v. W. J. Rogers, Ltd. (1899), 80 L.T. 193; 63 J.P. 230; 15 T.L.R. 148, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 93, 698.
- (3) Strickland v. Whittaker (1904), 90 L.T. 445; 68 J.P. 235; 52 W.R. 538; 20 T.L.R. 224; 48 Sol. Jo. 246; 20 Cox, C.C. 610, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 88, 669. I

Also referred to in argument:

- Pletts v. Campbell*, [1895] 2 Q.B. 229; 64 L.J.M.C. 225; 73 L.T. 344; 59 J.P. 502; 43 W.R. 634; 11 T.L.R. 454; 39 Sol. Jo. 585; 18 Cox, C.C. 178; 15 R. 493, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 87, 664.
- Walker v. Walker* (1903), 90 L.T. 88; 67 J.P. 452; 47 Sol. Jo. 655; 20 Cox, C.C. 594, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 88, 667.

Case Stated by justices for the county of Southampton.

A At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Southampton on Sept. 13, 1915, the respondent preferred an information against the appellant charging that he, being duly licensed to sell by retail intoxicating liquor in his house and premises known as Victoria House, Johns Road, Woolston, in the parish of Itchen, on Sept. 3, 1915, unlawfully sold by retail certain intoxicating liquor, to wit, stout, at a certain other house known as 2, Eperney Villas, Station Road, Netley, in the parish of Hound, where he was not authorised by his licence to sell the same. The following facts were admitted or proved. The appellant was the holder of a licence authorising him to sell all intoxicating liquors to be consumed off his premises, Victoria House. Before Sept. 3, 1915, and the coming into operation of the Order of the Central Control Board (Liquor Traffic) made for the area of Southampton on July 22, 1915, Annie L. Wigginton, of 2, Eperney Villas, was and had been a customer of the appellant. On Sept. 3, 1915, Jack Harrison, who was in the employ of the appellant, called about 11.30 a.m. on Annie L. Wigginton at 2, Eperney Villas, as he had been accustomed to do, and on behalf of the appellant he received from her an order for four quarts of oatmeal stout and entered the same in a book kept by him for the purpose. On receipt of the order, Harrison (in accordance with general instructions received from the appellant in consequence of the order of the Board and particularly s. 8 thereof) asked for and received from her the sum of 2s. The appellant received the order and the 2s. of Annie L. Wigginton from Harrison at Victoria House the same day, and he appropriated the stout and labelled the bottles in execution of the order, and duly despatched the stout to 2, Eperney Villas. An information was preferred on the above facts against Harrison for unlawfully selling by retail intoxicating liquor which he was not licensed to sell by retail, and by consent the informations against him and against the appellant were heard together, and the justices dismissed the information against Harrison.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that there had been no sale by retail of intoxicating liquors by the appellant at 2, Eperney Villas, but that, on the contrary, the sale had taken place at Victoria House. It was contended by the respondent that there had been a sale by retail of intoxicating liquor by the appellant at 2, Eperney Villas. The justices convicted the appellant, and he now appealed.

Hewart, K.C. (S. H. Emanuel with him), for the appellant.

St. Gerrans for the respondent.

G LORD READING, C.J.—The question in this case is whether an executory agreement for the sale of intoxicating liquor is to be regarded as a sale of intoxicating liquor within s. 65 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910. The contention for the respondent is that the traveller who receives an order from a customer and payment for the goods in advance and who books the order is selling the goods within the meaning of the statute, and that, as in this case, these acts took place at the customer's house and not at the licensed premises, an offence was committed. The justices came to the conclusion on a prosecution of the appellant for having sold this intoxicating liquor at the customer's house that it was sold there and not at the licensed premises, and on these facts they convicted the appellant. It is not quite clear from the Case Stated whether they intended to hold in fact that the traveller, the appellant's agent, had completed an agreement for sale—i.e., that he had authority to make an agreement for sale—and that when he received the money and the order and booked the goods this amounted to an agreement for sale, or whether they intended to hold that he simply received an offer to be transmitted to his employer. I do not propose to deal with the case on the footing that there is that nice distinction to be drawn between the Case as Stated by the justices and the case as argued for the respondent—namely, that, as there is no finding that the traveller had no authority, it must be assumed that he had authority, and, therefore, there was an agreement for sale at the time when the traveller did these various acts, and I think that counsel for the respondent was right in saying that we ought to deal with the case as if the appellant himself had gone to the customer's house and had done what his employee did. There is no doubt that that would make an executory contract for sale. Equally there is no doubt that it was not a sale.

The whole question, therefore, is, as I have said, whether an executory agreement for sale can be a sale within s. 65. In cases like Pletts v. Beattie (1), there has been much discussion whether, in the particular case before the court, there was appropriation so as to constitute a sale at or off the licensed premises, and the court has always considered it important to determine where appropriation took place. If the respondent's contention is right, that was unnecessary, because in that event all the court would have to consider was whether there was an agreement for sale made off the licensed premises, and, if so, it was an offence. Primâ facie, I find it difficult to believe that the judges and counsel in those cases did not have that point in mind. There are cases like Stephenson v. W. J. Rogers, Ltd. (2) and Strickland v. Whittaker (3) in which the court apparently expressed doubt whether an executory agreement for sale was sufficient. In Stephenson v. W. J. Rogers, Ltd. (2), CHANNELL, J., expressed the view (63 J.P. at p. 231) that the word "sale" might be satisfied by the making of an executory contract for a future sale. That dictum came up for review in Strickland v. Whittaker (3), where LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., and WILLS, J., both referred to the point, and certainly did not decide that such an executory agreement could not be a sale, but equally they did not decide that it could. They left the point open. LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., inclined to the view that it might be a sale, but it certainly cannot be said that it has ever been decided.

Although these dicta are worthy of attention, I am more impressed by the absence of any authority supporting such a conviction as this ever since the passing of the Licensing Act, 1872. That is not in itself sufficient to decide this case. It is an element for consideration, but we must decide according to the words used in the section. For some time I was much impressed by the argument that s. 85 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, says that, in proving a sale of intoxicating liquor, it shall not be necessary to show that any money actually passed or any intoxicating liquor was actually consumed, if the court is satisfied that a transaction in the nature of a sale actually took place. The words "in the nature of a sale" seem to indicate something less than a completed sale, which might very well be an agreement for sale. The difficulty which I felt was that I did not quite see what meaning was to be attributed to these words, but, on closer examination, I find that they were used in s. 62 of the Licensing Act, 1872, and in s. 18 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, and a reference to those statutes helps to clear up the mystery which surrounded the discussion of the words in question. Section 62 of the Licensing Act, 1872, said:

"In proving the sale or consumption of intoxicating liquor for the purpose of any proceeding relative to any offence under this Act, it shall not be necessary to show that any money actually passed or any intoxicating liquor was actually consumed if the court hearing the case be satisfied that a transaction in the nature of a sale actually took place. . . ."

That statute repealed s. 18 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, in which the language was as follows:

"every person who shall sell, barter, exchange, or for valuable consideration otherwise dispose of, any excisable liquor by retail" shall be liable to a penalty. That leads to the conclusion that the words "in the nature of a sale" refer to a case of barter or to some equivalent other than money being given for the liquor. That gives a meaning to the words on which so much reliance has been placed by the respondent. As soon as we see the real meaning of those words, the point made for the respondent disappears. We ought not to construe the words making a sale an offence as covering an agreement for sale. Section 65 of the Act of 1910 does not use the words "agreement for sale," and the

A word "sale" in that section must mean what lawyers understand by sale. By the language used in some cases as to the legal niceties of sale not being required to be proved, I think the court can hardly have intended to say that an agreement for sale was sufficient, but were rather referring to the way in which the facts ought to be dealt with.

B Bearing in mind the numerous cases in which the question whether there was any evidence of an offence has been assumed to depend on where appropriation took place, I have come to the conclusion that an executory agreement for sale is not a sale within s. 65 of the Act of 1910. The conviction was, therefore, wrong.

C SANKEY, J.—I agree. The difference between a sale and an executory agreement for sale is well known. The words of s. 65 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, are "shall not sell or expose for sale by retail." There is no definition of sale which would bring an executory agreement for sale within it. On the plain words of the section, I think it does not cover an executory agreement for sale. As we are construing a penal section, we ought not to give its words, which in themselves are plain, a meaning which they have not got.

D LOW, J.—We are asked, in construing s. 65 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910—a highly penal section—to hold that the word "sale" means something more than it says, and this contention is supported by certain dicta which have been referred to. Is there a distinction between an agreement for sale and the act of selling? If there is, and I think that no one can doubt that there is, then, in order to convict under this section in respect of an agreement for sale, it is necessary to read words into the section. It is no part of our duty to do that, and, therefore, I entirely agree with the other members of the court in holding, on the construction of this section, that a mere agreement for sale does not come within it. It is to be observed that, in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, it was thought right to define "sale" in s. 62 and to make it expressly include "a bargain and sale as well as a sale and delivery." If the respondent's contention is sound, there was no occasion to do anything of the sort. In the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, there is no definition of "sale," and it appears to me that we must give the word its ordinary meaning and not go out of our way to extend it.

F

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Godden, Holme & Ward, for Lamport, Bassitt & Hiscock, Southampton; Robins, Westlake & Dominy, Southampton.

[Reported by W. W. ORR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

STOTT AND ANOTHER v. GAMBLE AND OTHERS

[King's Bench Division (Horridge, J.), May 12, June 5, 1916]

Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 504; 85 L.J.K.B. 1750; 115 L.T. 309;
80 J.P. 448; 32 T.L.R. 579; 14 L.G.R. 769]

Cinematograph—Licence—Condition—Exhibition of film—Reasonableness of condition—Prohibition of film objectionable, indecent, or likely to produce breach of peace—Interference with contract between exhibitors and person possessing exhibiting rights over film—Liability of licensing authority.

A licence to use a theatre for an exhibition of cinematograph films had been granted to the proprietors of the theatre by the licensing authority, subject to the following condition: "No film shall be shown that is objectionable or indecent, or anything likely or tending to educate the young in the wrong direction, or likely to produce riot, tumult, or breach of the peace. . . . Provided also that no film shall be exhibited if notice that the justices object to such film has been given to the licensee." The plaintiffs, who had acquired the sole right of exhibiting a certain film, entered into an agreement with the proprietors of the theatre to exhibit their film there. The licensing authority, after inspecting the film, gave notice to the proprietors of the theatre that under the condition they objected to the film being shown. In an action by the plaintiffs against the licensing authority,

Held: (i) the true meaning of the condition was that the licensing authority might give notice of objection to a film where they had bona fide and in the exercise of their discretion come to the conclusion that it was objectionable on one of the grounds mentioned therein; the condition was desirable and reasonable; and, therefore, the notice was valid.

Dictum of AVORY, J., in Ex parte Stott (1), [1916] 1 K.B. at p. 9, applied.

(ii) even if the condition was unreasonable and the notice invalid, the plaintiffs had no cause of action since there was no evidence that the licensing authority knowingly or for their own ends induced the theatre proprietors to commit an actionable wrong.

Dictum of LORD WATSON in Allen v. Flood (2), [1898] A.C. at p. 96, applied

Notes. As to the licensing of premises for cinematograph entertainment, see 32 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 72 et seq.; and for cases see 42 DIGEST 919 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Ex parte Stott, [1916] 1 K.B. 7; 85 L.J.K.B. 502; 114 L.T. 234; 80 J.P. 169; 32 T.L.R. 84; 60 Sol. Jo. 418, D.C.; 42 Digest 921, 167.
- (2) Allen v. Flood, [1898] A.C. 1; 67 L.J.Q.B. 119; 77 L.T. 717; 62 J.P. 595; 46 W.R. 258; 14 T.L.R. 125; 42 Sol. Jo. 149, H.L.; 42 Digest 972, 35.
- (3) Huish v. Liverpool Justices, [1914] 1 K.B. 109; 83 L.J.K.B. 133; 110 L.T. 38; 78 J.P. 45; 30 T.L.R. 25; 58 Sol. Jo. 83; 12 L.G.R. 15, D.C.; 42 Digest 920, 156.
- (4) L.C.C. v. Bermondsey Bioscope Co., Ltd., [1911] 1 K.B. 445; 80 L.J.K.B. 141; 103 L.T. 760; 75 J.P. 53; 27 T.L.R. 141; 9 L.G.R. 79, D.C.; 42 Digest 921, 164.
- (5) Theatre de Luxe (Halifar), Ltd. v. Gledhill, [1915] 2 K.B. 49; 112 L.T. 519; 79 J.P. 238; 31 T.L.R. 138; 13 L.G.R. 541; 24 Cox, C.C. 614; sub nom. Halifar Theatre de Luxe, Ltd. v. Gledhill, 84 L.J.K.B. 649, D.C.; 42 Digest 920, 160.
- (6) South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co., [1905] A.C. 239; 74 L.J.K.B. 525; 92 L.T. 710; 53 W.R. 593; 21 T.L.R. 441, H.L.; 42 Digest 989, 180.
- (7) National Phonograph Co., Ltd. v. Edison Bell Consolidated Phonograph Co., Ltd., [1908] 1 Ch. 335; 77 L.J.Ch. 218; 98 L.T. 291; 24 T.L.R. 201, C.A.; 42 Digest 988, 177.

A (8) Lumley v. Gye (1853), 2 E. & B. 216; 22 L.J.Q.B. 463; 17 Jur. 827; 1 W.R. 432; 118 E.R. 749; 42 Digest 987, 169.

Action tried before HORRIDGE, J., without a jury at Liverpool Assizes.

B The county borough of St. Helens having delegated to the justices of the borough sitting in petty sessions the powers conferred on them by s. 2 of the Cinematograph Act, 1909, of granting licences for cinematograph exhibitions, the justices granted a licence for one year from April 5, 1915, to Robert Wilkinson Fox to use the Hippodrome (St. Helens), Ltd., for the purpose of such exhibitions. The conditions attached to the licence, so far as material, were these:

C "(5) No film shall be shown that is objectionable or indecent, or anything likely or tending to educate the young in the wrong direction, or likely to produce riot, tumult, or breach of the peace, and no offensive representations of living persons shall be shown. Provided also that no film shall be exhibited if notice that the justices object to such film has been given to the licensee"; and

D "(46) For every breach of any of these rules or of any of the regulations of the Secretary of State by the owner of the cinematograph, or by the occupier of the premises who allows his premises to be used in contravention thereof, there shall be forfeited and paid a sum of not exceeding £20, and a further sum of not exceeding £5 for each day during which the offence continues, and this licence may also be revoked."

E By an agreement dated May 28, 1915, the plaintiffs were granted the sole exclusive licence until Dec. 31, 1924, subject to certain agreements therein specified, to rent the film entitled "Five Nights" for exhibition in Lancashire and other places, and by an agreement made in August, 1915, the Hippodrome (St. Helens), Ltd., undertook to hire this film for six days for £40 as from Oct. 4, 1915. On that day, the defendants, who were members of the cinematograph committee of the justices of the peace of the borough, inspected the film, and on the same day gave notice to the Hippodrome company that they objected to it under condition 5 of the licence. F Notice of that objection was communicated to the plaintiffs, and they instituted the present action, claiming against the defendants an injunction restraining them from wrongfully procuring or inciting the Hippodrome company or any person who had entered into contracts with the plaintiffs to hire and exhibit the film to commit a breach or breaches of their contracts. They also claimed damages. They contended that condition 5 was unreasonable, and that, by that condition, the defendants made themselves the sole judges without hearing the parties on the question whether the film was objectionable or not; and they alleged that the defendants caused and procured the Hippodrome company, in breach of their contract with the plaintiffs, to abandon the exhibition of the film.

G Cyril Atkinson, K.C., and T. G. R. Dehn for the plaintiffs.
H Gibbons, K.C., and Acton for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

I June 5, 1916. HORRIDGE, J., read the following judgment in London, in which he stated the facts, and continued: It was contended before me that the condition No. 5 attached to the licence was unreasonable inasmuch as the jurisdiction of the magistrates in granting the licence was administrative and not judicial, and that, by the condition, they made themselves the sole judges without hearing the parties as to whether or not the film was objectionable, and in the event of the licensee not complying with a notice not to exhibit, he became liable under condition 46 to penalties.

It was decided in Huish v. Liverpool Justices (3) that justices at petty sessions exercising delegated powers were not sitting as a court of summary jurisdiction so as to enable an order to be made on them to state a Case. In L.C.C. v. Bermondsey Bioscope Co., Ltd. (4), PICKFORD, J., says ([1911] 1 K.B. at p. 453):

"The county council might impose such conditions, so long as they were not unreasonable, as they thought right"; and LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., uses similar language. In Theatre de Luxe (Hali-fax), Ltd. v. Gledhill (5) the majority of the court held that certain conditions attached to a licence were unreasonable. In giving judgment, LUSH, J., says ([1915] 2 K.B. at p. 55):

"Mr. Montgomery also conceded that the condition must be reasonable having regard to the conduct of the licensed premises, or in other words that it must be a reasonable condition having regard to the subject-matter of the licence, and if this condition were reasonable having regard to the subject-matter of the licence, namely, the use by the licensee of these premises for cinematograph exhibitions, it would be very difficult for us to say that it was in excess of the powers of the licensing authority."

The question I have to consider is whether condition 5 is reasonable having regard to the subject-matter of the licence. In Ex parte Stott (1), an application was made to a Divisional Court for a rule nisi for a writ of certiorari to bring up the justices' notice in that case. The court held that persons in the plaintiffs' position were not parties aggrieved, and the contention in that case was urged that this particular condition was unreasonable. AVORY, J., says ([1916] 1 K.B. at p. 9):

"I may say that I think the last clause of the condition means that the justices may give notice of objection to a film where they have bona fide and in the judicial exercise of their discretion come to the conclusion that it is objectionable on one of the grounds mentioned in the previous part of the condition. If that is the true meaning of the condition the objection to it disappears."

I think this is the true meaning of the condition. I think it is most desirable and reasonable that the justices should, when granting a licence, put in a condition retaining to themselves power to stop the exhibition of any film which they think is objectionable on the grounds mentioned in the condition. I, therefore, think the justices' notice in this case was given rightly and legally and no one has any cause of complaint in respect of it.

If, however, I am wrong in this view, I still think the plaintiffs are unable to recover. The way in which their case was put is this. It is said the giving of the notice was a wrongful act and such an act as might, as a natural and probable consequence of it, produce injury to another and which did produce injury to the plaintiffs. In the first place, I do not think it at all follows that it would cause injury to the plaintiffs. If the notice was a bad notice, the licensee might have ignored it, and he must be presumed in law to know it was an illegal notice if in fact it was. Further, even if the natural effect of the notice was to prevent the licensee from giving the performance and to cause him not to pay £40, I do not think this gives any right of action to the plaintiffs. The line of cases relied on was the one of which South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Co. (6) is an example. In the judgment of BUCKLEY, L.J., in National Phonograph Co., Ltd. v. Edison Bell Consolidated Phonograph Co., Ltd. (7), he says ([1908] 1 Ch. at p. 359):

"I take the law which I have to apply from two passages which I will read. In Allen v. Flood (2) LORD WATSON says ([1898] A.C. at p. 96):

"There are, in my opinion, two grounds only upon which a person who procures the act of another can be made legally responsible for its consequences. In the first place, he will incur liability if he knowingly and for his own ends induces that other person to commit an actionable wrong. In the second place, when the act induced is within the right of the immediate actor, and is therefore not wrongful in so far as he is concerned, it may yet be to the detriment of a third party; and in that case, according to the law laid down by the majority in Lumley v. Gye (8), the inducer may be held liable if he

A can be shown to have procured his object by the use of illegal means directed against that third party.' "

In my view, this case clearly does not fall within the second class, where the object has been procured by illegal means directed against a third party, and therefore, must, if there is here any cause of action, fall within the first proposition—namely,

B "he will incur liability if he knowingly and for his own ends induces that other person to commit an actionable wrong."

I see no evidence that the defendants knowingly or for their own ends induced a person to commit an actionable wrong. It is quite different from such cases as South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co. (6), where, although possibly for a personal object and not to injure, the defendants had directly induced the miners to break their contracts. In my view, this action fails, and judgment must be entered for the defendants with costs as between solicitor and client.

C

Judgment for defendants.

Solicitors: Field & Cunningham, Manchester; Cobbett, Wheeler & Cobbett, for Bertram Brewis, Manchester.

D [Reported by EDWARD J. M. CHAPLIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

E

MATTISON v. JOHNSON

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Reading, C.J., Sankey and Low, JJ.), January 28, 1916]

F [Reported 85 L.J.K.B. 741; 114 L.T. 951; 80 J.P. 243; 25 Cox, C.C. 373; 14 L.G.R. 457]

Criminal Law—Brothel—Lessee permitting premises to be used for prostitution Use only by lessee—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict., c. 69), s. 13 (2).

G The respondent, a prostitute, was the tenant of premises of which she alone made use for the purpose of her own habitual prostitution. She was charged with knowingly permitting the premises to be used for the purposes of habitual prostitution under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, s. 13 (2).

H Held: "permitting the premises to be used" in s. 13 (2) of the Act of 1885 meant permitting them to be used by another person, and, as the respondent alone used the premises, she could not be convicted under s. 13 (2).

Notes. The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, has been repealed by the Sexual Offences Act, 1956. For s. 13 (2) of the Act of 1885, see now s. 35 of the Act of 1956.

As to disorderly houses, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 671 et seq.; and for cases see 15 DIGEST (Repl.) 904 et seq. For the Sexual Offences Act, 1956, s. 35, see 36 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 234.

I

Case referred to:

(1) Warden v. Tye (1877), 2 C.P.D. 74; 46 L.J.M.C. 111; 35 L.T. 852; 41 J.P. 120, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 94, 706.

Also referred to in argument:

Singleton v. Ellison, [1895] 1 Q.B. 607; 64 L.J.M.C. 123; 72 L.T. 236; 59 J.P. 119; 43 W.R. 426; 18 Cox, C.C. 79; 15 R. 201, D.C.; 15 Digest (Repl.) 904, 8715.

Durose v. Wilson (1907), 96 L.T. 615; 71 J.P. 263; 21 Cox, C.C. 421, D.C.; 15 Digest (Repl.) 904, 8719. A

Caldwell v. Leech (1913), 109 L.T. 188; 77 J.P. 254; 29 T.L.R. 457; 23 Cox, C.C. 510, D.C.; 15 Digest (Repl.) 904, 8718.

Case Stated by the stipendiary magistrate for the city of Manchester.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Manchester, the appellant, James Mattison, a police officer, preferred an information against the respondent, Marie Johnson, charging that she on Sept. 10, 1915, being the occupier of certain premises in New York Street, Manchester, did knowingly permit the premises to be used for the purposes of habitual prostitution. The following facts were proved or admitted. The respondent was the sole tenant or occupier of the premises in question, a dwelling-house, No. 39, New York Street, Manchester. On four successive days in September, 1915—namely, the 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th of that month—the respondent took home different men and used the dwelling-house for the purpose of her own habitual prostitution. The premises were used solely by the respondent for the purpose of habitual prostitution; no other women either lived on or visited the premises for that purpose. B C

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that, on the above facts, a case was established against the respondent under s. 13 (2) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, of having knowingly permitted the premises in question to be used for the purpose of habitual prostitution. D

The learned stipendiary magistrate was of opinion that the mere use by the respondent for the purposes of habitual prostitution on her own account of premises of which she was herself the tenant or occupier did not constitute permitting such premises to be used for the purposes of habitual prostitution, and dismissed the charge. E

By the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, s. 13, it is provided:

"Any person who—(1) keeps or manages or lets or assists in the management of a brothel, or (2) being the tenant, lessee, or occupier or person in charge of any premises, knowingly permits such premises or any part thereof to be used as a brothel, or for the purposes of habitual prostitution, or (3) being the lessor or landlord of any premises, or the agent of such lessor or landlord, lets the same or any part thereof with the knowledge that such premises or some part thereof are or is to be used as a brothel, or is wilfully a party to the continued use of such premises or any part thereof as a brothel, shall on summary conviction in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts be liable [to the penalties prescribed by the section]." F G

McCardie for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear and was not represented.

LORD READING, C.J.—There is a point of considerable importance raised in the present case. [His LORDSHIP stated the facts, and continued:] In my opinion, the learned magistrate was quite right. There was no offence disclosed under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, and I think that the view which was taken of the section under which the proceedings were taken was the correct one. If we were to accede to the contention put forward on behalf of the appellant it would be a criminal offence for a woman to use premises occupied by herself, and by herself alone, for the purposes of habitual prostitution. If a woman is the occupier of certain premises, and men resort thither for the purpose of committing with her the act which would constitute her a prostitute, can it be said that she is knowingly permitting the premises to be used for the purpose of habitual prostitution? This is not the case of another person letting the premises to her with the knowledge that she intends to use the premises for habitual prostitution. This is the case of the woman who herself does the act which, it is said, must not be knowingly permitted. I entertain no doubt whatever about this case, and it appears to me H I

A that it is sufficient to say that we have only to construe the language of the statute and to ascertain from that language what was the intention of the legislature. If Parliament had meant to make it a criminal offence for a woman to carry on prostitution on the premises which she rents and uses as her home it could have said so in the plainest language. It is not within our province to say whether we think that it would be a good or a bad thing for a statute to be passed making
B prostitution a criminal offence. We are merely concerned with interpreting the language of the statute which is now in question. If we were to accept the argument of counsel for the appellant, the result would be that though it would not be a criminal offence to be a prostitute and to carry on that occupation so long as it was not carried on on premises occupied by the prostitute, yet, if the prostitute could not have a house of her own and could not rent premises, she would be driven into
C the house of a person permitting it who would be liable under s. 13 (2) of the Act of 1885, if it was habitual, or she would be driven into the street to commit the act in a public place where it would be a criminal offence.

Before I could arrive at such a conclusion as that, I should have to be faced with very plain language indeed. I do not think, however, that there is any necessity to look outside the statute, the whole intention of which appears to me to be quite plain. The title of the Act is "An Act to make further provision for the Protection of Women and Girls, the suppression of brothels and other purposes." Part II is headed "Suppression of Brothels." The whole of s. 13 deals with the proceedings which may be taken against persons keeping brothels or permitting premises to be used for habitual prostitution. What Parliament was aiming at was the prevention of premises being let for the purposes of habitual prostitution. It
E was not sufficient to say "used as a brothel," because there might be a difficulty in proving that the premises were a brothel, and, nevertheless they might still be used for the purposes of habitual prostitution. There can be no doubt that Parliament intended that both cases should be included, and that appears to me to be the reason why the section makes the tenant, lessee, or occupier who knowingly permits the premises which he holds as tenant, lessee, or occupier to be used for
F the purposes of habitual prostitution guilty of a criminal offence. When the actual language is examined, it seems to me that the section is not aimed at the person who does the act. The words are "knowingly permits such premises or any part thereof to be used." The word "permits" is not used with reference to one's own acts, but to the acts of another. The present case is analogous in many respects to that of Warden v. Tye (1). That was a case under s. 13 of the Licensing
G Act, 1872, corresponding to s. 75 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, in which the language used is very similar to that of the section of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, which we are now considering. The section to which I have referred imposed a penalty on any licensed person who permitted drunkenness to take place on his premises. In Warden v. Tye (1) a licensee of certain premises was summoned for permitting drunkenness on his premises, he, the licensee, being H the person who was drunk. It was held that the licensee could not be convicted. As I have said, I think that case is very analogous to the present, and, just as a licensee cannot be convicted of permitting drunkenness on his own premises when he is the person who is drunk, so a prostitute who alone uses premises of which she is the tenant or occupier for the purposes of her trade cannot be convicted of
I permitting her premises to be used for the purposes of habitual prostitution. I think that the learned magistrate was quite correct in arriving at his decision, and this appeal must be dismissed.

SANKEY, J.—I am of the same opinion. The information against the respondent was preferred under the provisions of s. 13 (2) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, which makes it an offence for a person who is the tenant, lessee, or occupier of any premises knowingly to permit such premises or any part thereof to be used for the purposes of habitual prostitution. In my view, it is a matter of importance to see in which part of the Act this section occurs. It occurs in Part II, and the heading of this Part is "Suppression of Brothels." This heading makes it quite clear that this portion of the Act is aimed not at the suppression of prostitution, but at the suppression of brothels. It is not denied in the present case that the respondent's premises are not a brothel. It would be strange, then, if premises which are not a brothel were brought under legislation which is for the suppression of brothels. I think that when s. 13 (2) speaks of permitting premises to be used, it must refer to permitting them to be used by another person and not by the person permitting. Both by reason of the general words of the Act and by reason of the particular words of the section, I think that the magistrate was right and that the appeal fails.

LOW, J.—I agree. This is a case of considerable importance, and I think that it is somewhat remarkable that, although this particular statute was passed in 1885, it does not appear that any attempt has been made to put on this section the construction here contended for by the appellant, although that course might have received encouragement from some statements in certain quarters. The notion of permitting implies some person to be permitted. If the appellant's contention is correct the offence aimed at is prostitution. On the facts before us, the only person who could be said to be implicated in that are the respondent and the man engaged with her in using the premises. It is said that the respondent permitted prostitution—that is, sexual intercourse for gain or reward. It could not be said that the man permitted prostitution. It would be a gross abuse of language to attempt to describe his act in that way. That being so, the only person left is the respondent herself. I think also that it is likewise an abuse of language to say that a woman who does an act is permitting the act to be done. If there had been any desire on the part of the legislature to make the mere act of prostitution an offence, there would have been no difficulty in doing so by using clear and definite language to that effect. Here there is nothing of the sort, and I thoroughly agree with my Lord in the judgment which he has given and in the reasons on which he has based it. The appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Austin & Austin, for P. M. Heath, Manchester.

[Reported by J. A. SLATER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

LESTER v. HICKLING

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Scrutton, J.), May 2, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 302; 114 L.T. 798; 85 L.J.K.B. 1060]

Bill of Sale—Defeasance—Agreement subsequent to and not part of bill of sale—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict., c. 31), s. 10 (3).

A bill of sale was given by the grantor, and, on the next day and as a separate transaction, an agreement was entered into between the grantor and the grantee which amounted to a defeasance of the bill of sale. The bill of sale was registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 10, without the terms of the subsequent agreement being included in it.

Held: since the agreement was made subsequent to the bill of sale, it was not a defeasance within s. 10 (3) of the Act of 1878, and, therefore, the bill of sale was valid.

Notes. As to defeasances, see 3 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 296–298; and for cases see 7 DIGEST (Repl.) 81 et seq. For the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 10, see 2 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 566.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Southam, Ex parte Southam (1874), L.R. 17 Eq. 578; 43 L.J.Bey. 39; 30 L.T. 132; 22 W.R. 456; 7 Digest (Repl.) 83, 473.
- (2) Linfoot v. Pockett, [1895] 2 Ch. 835; 64 L.J.Ch. 752; 73 L.T. 197; 44 W.R. 66; 11 T.L.R. 590; 39 Sol. Jo. 721; 2 Mans. 482; 12 R. 504, C.A.; 7 Digest (Repl.) 82, 471.
- (3) Pettit v. Lodge and Harper, [1908] 1 K.B. 744; 77 L.J.K.B. 413; 98 L.T. 771; 24 T.L.R. 329; 15 Mans. 136, C.A.; 7 Digest (Repl.) 82, 466.

Action tried by SCRUTTON, J., without a jury.

The facts are set out in the judgment.

Bickmore for the plaintiff.

Doughty for the defendant.

SCRUTTON, J.—This case raises a short point of some difficulty, but after hearing counsel, I do not think I shall gain any advantage by taking time to consider my judgment. Thomas Lester brings an action against George Hickling, and he asks for a declaration that a bill of sale dated Apr. 25, 1912, is void. The reason why he asks for a declaration that it is void is this: He says there was an agreement which amounted to a defeasance of the bill of sale which is not expressed in the bill of sale, and, consequently, under s. 10 (3) of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, the registration is void, and, being unregistered, the bill would be void.

The first thing is to ascertain what the facts are, because the plaintiff, in setting up his case, has alleged that the agreement in question which is said to amount to a defeasance was made in consideration of the plaintiff executing the bill of sale. I find the facts to be these: the plaintiff was a coal hawker and got his coal frequently from the defendant, and at the time the bill of sale was given, or shortly before the bill of sale was given, in April, 1912, the plaintiff was in debt to the extent of nearly £200 to the defendant for coal supplied. The defendant got judgment against him. That judgment stands, and, as far as I can see, the plaintiff will not gain any great advantage by having the bill of sale set aside, because execution could be put in under the judgment immediately for the unsatisfied balance on any property which he has. Judgment having been obtained, terms were attempted to be made for postponing the payment of the judgment. The plaintiff was asked to sign a bill of sale. He would not. Thereupon the defendant took the only course open to him of putting in execution under the judgment, which involved, apparently, seizing the horse and cart by which the plaintiff carried on his business of a coal hawker. This seems to have been a very effectual measure as against the plaintiff and brought him round at once, because without his horse and cart he could not go on coal hawking. At an interview at the defendant's office, it was agreed that the execution should be withdrawn if the bill of sale was executed. The bill of sale was then executed providing for payment of the sum in two half-yearly payments of £102 and interest. I find that was a complete transaction and that nothing at that time was said about any payment by smaller sums. The next day, and as I find as a separate transaction from what had happened the day before, the plaintiff, having got back his horse and cart and wanting coal to go on with his business of coal hawking, went to the defendant to get coal. The question of the transaction that had taken place the day before having been raised, the defendant said, what I dare say was quite true, that he would not be able to pay the £102 in six months, to which the defendant appears to have said if he would pay by instalments he would not be hard on him; the plaintiff then said he would pay 10s. a week, and thereupon paid the first 10s. I think the effect of that was that there was an agreement that the bill of sale would not be enforced so long as the plaintiff went on paying 10s. a week and getting his coal from the defendant.

Now comes the question whether that agreement which I have found is a defeasance of the bill of sale which renders the registration, and, therefore, the bill of sale, void under s. 10 (3) of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. I look first to the language of the section, which is the first thing I have to go by:

"If the bill of sale is made or given subject to any defeasance or condition or declaration of trust not contained in the body thereof, such defeasance, condition, or declaration shall be deemed to be part of the bill, and shall be written on the same paper or parchment therewith before the registration, and shall be truly set forth in the copy filed under this Act therewith and as part thereof, otherwise the registration shall be void."

In my view, if I had no authority at all, that clearly relates to a defeasance or condition existing at the time when the bill of sale is made or given, i.e., either an antecedent agreement or a contemporaneous agreement, part of the same transaction. I do not see how, by any ordinary use of language, you can say that a bill of sale is made or given subject to a defeasance if the defeasance takes place some time after the bill of sale is made or given. That is what I should have said if there was no authority at all. It is curious that there is so little authority on the subject. As far as I can find there are only three cases which may have any bearing on the matter at all, and there is one passage in a text-book. I see that in Re Southam (1), in 1874, there being an agreement for payment by instalments, SIR JAMES BACON, C.J., said (L.R. 17 Eq. at p. 580):

"Mr. Robertson Griffiths [the counsel in that case] said that he did not care whether that agreement was entered into before or after the execution of the bill of sale. In my opinion it makes all the difference whether it was before or after."

I think SIR JAMES BACON clearly thought, as I think, that you did not make or give a bill of sale subject to defeasance if the defeasance came into existence after you had made or given the bill of sale. Then there is a decision of the Court of Appeal in Linfoot v. Pockett (2), where, a bill of sale having been drawn up, the moneylender in whose favour the bill of sale was granted sent a set of rules and regulations after the bill of sale had been drawn up which the moneylender alleged were an agreement which he tried to enforce. All three members of the court said there was not an agreement, but simply a receipt, without objection, of the regulations which were tried to be enforced. To that extent, therefore, the case does not directly decide the point which I have to decide. All three members of the court use language which appears to me to show that they took the view that an agreement, if there was one, after the bill of sale was executed was not a

A defeasance which came within s. 10 (3). LINDLEY, L.J., says ([1895] 2 Ch. at p. 844):

B "Now, was there any condition or defeasance which ought to have been embodied in this bill of sale? It appears to me that when the facts are understood there obviously was not. The bill of sale was executed; and up to that time no condition, no defeasance was mentioned. When it was executed the bargain was complete, and there was no condition or defeasance forming part of the bargain."

C That language seems to me clearly to point to the conclusion that LINDLEY, L.J., thought that an agreement after the bargain, and forming no part of it at the time it was made, was not a defeasance within the section. LOPES, L.J., says (ibid. at p. 848):

D "Then another point was taken—that the bill of sale was void on the ground that it was subject to a condition or defeasance such as is contemplated by the Act of 1878, s. 1 (3). I think that means a condition or defeasance which is part of the bargain, and here, as far as I can discover, it is impossible to say that there was any condition or defeasance which was part of the bargain."

RIGBY, L.J., says (ibid. at p. 850):

E "A stipulation which was not made known to the other side cannot be a condition within the meaning of the Act, and the putting forward of these rules and regulations after the bill of sale had been executed and the money advanced would not make them part of the contract."

F All three of those judges took the view that an agreement, if there was one, after the execution of the bill of sale, and not forming part of the bargain which led to the execution, would not be a defeasance within s. 10 (3) of the Act of 1878. There remains Pettit v. Lodge and Harper (3), which I must frankly say has given me considerable difficulty, because, if the point has been decided by the Court of Appeal, I am bound by it. I can find no trace in the statement of the facts or the judgments to show that the judges thought or had present in their minds the question of the difference between an agreement before or contemporaneous with the bill of sale and a separate agreement afterwards. The reporter has not stated the facts so as to tell me clearly when the agreement was made, and I think he has not stated it for the reason that no consideration was laid on it one way or the other in the course of the argument. While I think counsel for the plaintiff is right in saying that the judgment of the Master of the Rolls (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.) indicates language which is more consistent with it being after, it is still extremely vague. The previous decision of the Court of Appeal in Linfoot v. Pockett (2) was not cited to the court. I cannot find in the argument that any question was raised about the agreement being entered into before or after the bill of sale, and I have come to the conclusion that I cannot treat Pettit v. Lodge and Harper (3) as a decision binding on me, that an agreement after the execution of the bill of sale can be treated as a defeasance defeating it within the meaning of s. 10 (3). It is not an authority, and I only mention it because it was referred to in the course of the case. It is gratifying to a judge coming to the conclusion I have come to to find that a living authority does agree with him. I find that in LORD HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, vol. 3 (1st Edn.), p. 45 [see now 3rd Edn., vol. 3, p. 297] in an article on bills of sale written by Mr. HERBERT REED, it is stated in plain language that terms made subsequent to the bill are not within the provisions of the section to which I have referred.

I Finding, as a fact, therefore, as I do, that the agreement in this case was not part of the bargain for the bill of sale, but was separate and subsequent, I hold as a matter of law that such a defeasance is not one in which the bill of sale is made or given subject to the defeasance, and that, consequently, it does not come within the prohibition of s. 10 (3) of the Bill of Sale Act, 1878, and that, therefore, the plaintiff's claim fails.

The defendant counter-claims for the sum due under the bill which has become due under the subsequent agreement also because the instalments have not been kept up, and it is agreed that the amount now due under the bill is £72 15s. There must be judgment for the defendant on the claim and on the counter-claim for the sum of £72 15s. with costs.

Solicitors: W. A. H. Johnston; Jennens & Jennens.

[Reported by WILFRID PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOLISEMENT (OWNERS) v. BUNGE AND BORN

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady and Bankes, L.JJ., and A. T. Lawrence, J.), November 1, 2, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 160; 86 L.J.K.B. 145; 115 L.T. 732;
13 Asp.M.L.C. 524; 22 Com. Cas. 135]

Shipping—Detention of ship by charterers—Loading completed before expiration of lay days—Rights to detain until termination of lay days.

By a charterparty dated Feb. 1, 1915, a steamer was to be loaded at an Argentine port and to proceed therefrom to a European port at the master's option for orders "unless these be given to him by the charterers on signing bills of lading to discharge" at a certain port. By cl. 13 the steamer was to load at a certain rate, otherwise demurrage was to be paid, and by cl. 16 dispatch money was to be paid to the charterers for time saved in loading. It was agreed that the charterers had the right to keep the steamer for twenty-four hours after completion of loading, for the purpose of settling accounts. The steamer was loaded nineteen days before the expiration of the lay days, and in respect of these nineteen days the charterers received dispatch money, but, owing to delay by the charterers in deciding as to the port of call, the steamer was kept waiting for the bills of lading and orders for three days. On a claim by the shipowners for damages in respect of two days' delay,

Held: the effect of ell. 13 and 16 was not to permit the charterers to detain the steamer after she had been loaded for the remaining number of lay days; directly the ship was loaded it became their duty to present bills of lading for signature, and, if they did not do so and in consequence the ship was detained for an unreasonable time, they were guilty of a breach of duty for which the shipowners were entitled to damages; there was no provision in the charter as to the measure of damages for such detention; and, therefore, the damages were at large.

Decision of ATKIN, J., [1916] 1 K.B. 805, reversed.

Notes. As to damages for detention of a chartered vessel, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 344-352; and for cases see 41 DIGEST 577 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Moel Tryvan Ship Co. v. Kruger & Co., [1907] 1 K.B. 809; 76 L.J.K.B. 550; 96 L.T. 429; 23 T.L.R. 271; 10 Asp.M.L.C. 416; 12 Com. Cas. 38, C.A.; affirmed sub nom. Krüger & Co., Ltd. v. Moel Tryvan Ship Co., Ltd., [1907] A.C. 272; 76 L.J.K.B. 985; 97 L.T. 143; 23 T.L.R. 677; 10 Asp.M.L.C. 465; 13 Com. Cas. 1; sub nom. Moel Tryvan Ship Co., Ltd. v. Kruger & Co., Ltd., 51 Sol. Jo. 623, H.L.; 41 Digest 403, 2503.

- A (2) Oriental Steamship Co. v. Tylor, [1893] 2 Q.B. 518; 63 L.J.Q.B. 128; 69 L.T. 577; 9 T.L.R. 591; 42 W.R. 89; 7 Asp.M.L.C. 377; 4 R. 554, C.A.; 41 Digest 665, 4963.

Also referred to in argument:

Oakville Steamship Co. v. Holmes (1899), 48 W.R. 152; 16 T.L.R. 54; 44 Sol. Jo. 75; 5 Com. Cas. 48; 41 Digest 576, 3997.

- B Appeal by shipowners from a decision of ATKIN, J., on an award in the form of a Special Case stated by an arbitrator.

C By a charterparty dated Feb. 1, 1915, made between the owners of the steamship Nolisement and the charterers, Ernest A. Bunge and J. Born, it was agreed (by cl. 2) that the steamer should with all convenient speed after arrival at Montevideo proceed as ordered by the charterers to various ports or places to receive a full and complete cargo of wheat or other grain. By cl. 4 the steamer, when loaded, was to proceed to one or other of various European ports at the master's option for orders,

"unless these be given to him by the charterers on signing bills of lading to discharge at a safe port on the Continent. . . ."

- D By cl. 13 the steamer was to load at a certain rate, otherwise demurrage to be paid at the rate of 3d. sterling per ton per running day. By cl. 16 dispatch money, which was to be paid to the charterers before the steamer sailed, was payable for all time saved in loading at the rate of £15 sterling per day. The loading of the vessel proceeded so rapidly that it was completed nineteen days before the lay days were completed, and the charterers received in account dispatch money in respect of those nineteen days. A dispute then arose between the parties as to what damages (if any) the owners were entitled to receive in consequence of the steamer being unable to sail from her port of loading for three days after the loading was completed owing to the failure of the charterers to make out the bills of lading, they not having made up their minds as to the port of discharge. The matter having gone to arbitration, the umpire found that the shipowners were right, and were entitled to £300 for the detention of the vessel and costs. He also found that, assuming the damages should have been assessed upon the basis of the demurrage rate, they came to £94 14s. The umpire having stated his award in the form of a Special Case, ATKIN, J., held that, the loading time granted to the charterers not having been exceeded, the shipowners were not entitled to claim for demurrage or detention, but only to a return of the dispatch money as money paid for a consideration which had failed. The shipowners appealed.

Sir Maurice Hill, K.C. (W. N. Raeburn with him), for the shipowners.

Leck, K.C. (R. A. Wright with him), for the charterers.

- H Nov. 2, 1916. SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—This is an appeal by the owners of the steamship Nolisement from the judgment of ATKIN, J., upon a Special Case stated by an umpire. The question arises in respect of a charterparty dated Feb. 1, 1915, whereby the ship Nolisement was to proceed to the River Plate and there load a full and complete grain cargo. The charterparty provides for the rate at which the steamer is to be loaded, and it provides for dispatch money. It appears from the facts stated in the Case that the ship was loaded in eight days and earned dispatch money for about nineteen and a quarter days, and was duly paid on that basis, but her sailing was delayed for three days after the loading was completed. The umpire found that there was an agreement between the parties that the detainer for one day was proper. He says:

"It was agreed between the parties and I find that the charterers had the right to keep the steamer for twenty-four hours for the purpose of settling the accounts, and that the dispute arises in relation to the two remaining days that the steamer was kept waiting."

In other words, after the steamer was fully loaded; at the expiration of the eight days that it took to load her, she was detained a further three, one of which was justified; and so the claim was in respect of the remaining two days that she was detained. The reason for the detention for the two days was that the charterers were unable to make up their minds as to the port of discharge, and it is in respect of the claim for that two days' detention that the owners' claim went to arbitration. [His Lordship stated the findings of the arbitrator.] The umpire having made his award in an alternative form, the matter came before the learned judge, who decided that there was no liability upon the charterers in respect of the detention of the ship, and that they were entitled as of right to detain the ship for all the lay days—that is to say, for the period of time that was necessary for the loading of the ship, if she had been loaded only according to the rate of loading prescribed by the charterparty. But he says on that footing that, although the charterers had the right to detain the ship for the whole of the lay days, nevertheless they could not claim dispatch money when the ship was detained in respect of those two days, and the shipowners had gained nothing by the accelerated rate of loading. Therefore, he held that the dispatch money in respect of the two days was money paid without consideration, and the charterers must return to the owners that amount. From that judgment the owners appeal. They contend that they are entitled to damages for the detention of the vessel, that there is no contract rate of damage, that the damage is at large, that the umpire, a business man in the shipping world, has arrived at a sum which is a fair and reasonable sum, and which there is no ground to disturb, and that in other respects the award is right.

The charterparty provides, by cl. 4, that, the steamer being loaded, "shall with all reasonable speed therewith proceed to St. Vincent (Cape Verdes), or Las Palmas, or Teneriffe (Canary Islands), or Madeira or Dakar, at the master's option, for orders (unless these be given to him by charterers on signing bills of lading)." So the charterparty gives to the charterers the option, on signing bills of lading, to name the port of discharge, and it is on that option that the umpire finds that the charterers had decided, not that the ship was to sail and call for orders, but that the port of discharge was to be named by them on signing bills of lading before the ship sailed. They had not, however, made up their minds as to the particular port. The provision for lay days is in this way. Clause 12 provides that the lay days shall not commence before Mar. 1, 1915, unless charterers begin loading sooner, and, should the steamer not be ready to load by 6 p.m. on Mar. 31, the charterers should have the option of cancelling. Clause 13 provides for the rate of loading:

"The steamer shall be loaded at the rate of 225 tons per running day up to the first 3,000 tons, and at the rate of 400 tons per running day for any quantity above 3,000 tons, Sundays and holidays excepted, otherwise demurrage shall be paid . . ."

The parties have worked out, and there is no dispute between them as to this, the number of days which that rate of loading would give the vessel to load, and, having regard to the eight days that were occupied in the actual loading, there were nineteen or nineteen and a quarter in respect of which dispatch money was payable. It will be observed that demurrage is only payable under cl. 13 if the steamer is not loaded at the agreed rate. It says the steamer shall be loaded at a particular rate, otherwise demurrage is to be paid. The steamer was loaded at an accelerated rate, and, in my opinion, that clause does not provide any rate for the detention of the steamer after she is fully loaded. It is merely that, unless she is loaded at a particular rate, demurrage shall be paid. In this case, the steamer having been loaded at an accelerated rate, no claim can arise under that clause. Clause 16 provides for dispatch money which the vessel earned and received; cl. 20 provides for advance freight; and cl. 21 provides for the signature of the bills of lading:

"The master to sign bills of lading in the form indorsed hereon, at any rate of freight that the charterers or their agents may require, but any difference in

- A amount between the bills of lading freight, and the total gross chartered freight, as above, shall be settled at port of loading before the steamer sails; if in the steamer's favour, to be paid in cash on or before signing bills of lading; if in charterers' favour, by usual master's bill payable five days after arrival at port of discharge, or upon collection of freight (whichever occurs first), and such bill is hereby made by owners a charge upon bill of lading freight, and the
- B said freight is hereby hypothecated as security for said bill."

So the master was under an obligation to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight that the charterers or their agents might require. That, no doubt, was a provision for the benefit of the charterers, who could have required the master to sign bills of lading, of course, before sailing.

- C In those circumstances one must consider, in the first place, that it is the duty of the charterers to prepare and present the bills of lading. In Moel Tryvan Ship Co. v. Kruger & Co. (1) SIR GORELL BARNES, P., said he was proposing to apply to the terms of the contract one or two well-known propositions, and the second proposition he puts is this ([1907] 1 K.B. at p. 819):

- D "That, as a matter of business—and it necessarily must be so—the charterer has to prepare the bills of lading; he has to select how many parcels of goods he wishes the shipment to be divided into, and whether he will send the bills of lading to certain specific persons named or have them made out to order and indorse them. It is obvious that it must be for the charterer, if he wishes to have bills of lading signed, to make out the bills of lading and tender them for signature."

- E Here, of course, it is essential that they should be made out by the charterers, because the rate of freight to be mentioned in the bill of lading is to be the rate of freight directed by the charterers. If that is their duty, then within what time and when ought the charterers to make out the bills of lading and present them to the master? In Oriental Steamship Co. v. Tylor (2) LORD ESHER said ([1893] F 2 Q.B. at p. 528):

- "Now, with regard to what time is the signing of the bill of lading to be determined? What is the time at which, or from which, you are to calculate the necessity or the obligation to sign the bill of lading? It is not from the sailing of the ship; it is from the loading of the cargo. No captain has authority to sign a bill of lading unless there is cargo on board, and he has only authority to sign for the cargo which is on board. But when there is a cargo on board, what is the time within which the bills of lading are to be signed? The bills of lading are almost invariably signed before the ship sails. Take an ordinary charter, where there are not the words 'or agent' in it, where the bills of lading are to be signed by the captain only: is it not elementary to say that those bills of lading are to be signed before the ship sails? It is obvious, in almost every case, that the bill of lading is signed before the ship sails, and the time from which you are to determine the obligation as to the time of signing the bill of lading is from the time of loading the cargo. Therefore, the time for the signing of these bills of lading is to be calculated from the time of the loading on board."

- I A little later on, he points out that the charterers ought to have presented the bills of lading almost immediately—that is to say, there was an obligation on the charterers to present the bills of lading within a reasonable time after the ship was loaded.

The charterers in the present case not having done that, were they in breach of any duty by detaining the ship as they did? The learned judge has held that it was not. In his judgment, he says that the true view is that the charterer had a stipulated period of lay days during which he may delay the ship at the port of loading without incurring liability for demurrage or for damages. In other words, he commits no breach for detaining the ship for that particular period. It may well be that if all the lay days are consumed in loading, there is no breach for which the charterer is liable; but in a charterparty in this form, where the ship is fully loaded at an accelerated rate, the charterer has no right to detain the ship after she is loaded. The charterer has no right to say: "I might have taken another nineteen days to load the ship, so, after the ship is fully loaded, I can detain her for the rest of the period I might have occupied in loading without being liable in damages for forfeiting or not retaining any right to the dispatch money." In my opinion, in a charterparty in this form the charterer has no such right, and, after the expiration of the one day allowed by the parties, it was a breach by the charterers to detain the ship by not presenting the bills of lading and enabling the ship to sail. The learned judge has held that acceptance of the dispatch money did not prevent the charterers saying that they were under no obligation to let the ship sail before the lay days expired, and that the charterers could not retain the two days' dispatch money. I am of opinion that the charterers had earned and were entitled to retain the dispatch money. In cl. 16 dispatch money which is to be paid to the charterers before the steamer sails shall be payable for all time saved in loading at a certain rate. The time was saved in loading her. True it is the ship was afterwards delayed, but, according to the terms of the contract, the dispatch money is payable for time saved in loading; and when once it is ascertained that nineteen or nineteen and a quarter days were saved in loading the ship, then the dispatch money became payable for that time, and the charterers were entitled to receive and retain it, although they might also be liable in damages afterwards for detaining the ship.

The next question is: Is there any contract rate for damages? I can find none. I have already pointed out that the demurrage payable if the steamer does not load within the contract time is inapplicable; and I can find no contract for the payment of damages where the ship is detained. Where the umpire finds that she is unreasonably detained for two days at the port of loading, the damages are such sum as may reasonably be taken to be within the contemplation of the parties for the breach of it. This matter has been referred to a commercial umpire, and he has awarded the sum of £300 as damages. It is urged by counsel for the defendants that the damages were practically nil, because they were damages for detaining the ship two days at the port of loading, and, by reason of that detention, a detention later on in the voyage at the port of call was obviated, for otherwise, as she would have had to call for orders, she would have been detained under the contract for twenty-four hours at the port of call. In short it was only a question of a detention of two days at the port of loading, instead of a detention of a similar number of days at the port of call. In my opinion, as a matter of law that cannot be sustained. The ship may not have been detained for that time at the port of call. A commercial arbitrator takes those matters into consideration. I think it was rather put before the umpire, having regard to the contention of the owners, that "in calculating the damages regard must be had to the terms of cl. 22 and the consequent saving to the shipowners by reason of waiting for orders at the loading port of time which would otherwise have been lost in calling for orders and waiting for twenty-four hours or more for orders under cl. 22." Of course, a commercial arbitrator might well say that, having regard to the state of business, the ship would not have been detained for that time, or anything like it; but that is a matter for the umpire to take into consideration with all the rest of the facts of the case in ascertaining the amount of damages. I am of opinion that there is no contract rate, that neither the dispatch money rate nor the demurrage rate apply, and that, therefore, the damages were open to be assessed by the arbitration tribunal. The amount having been assessed at £300, I see no ground for disturbing that assessment. In my opinion, the judgment below ought to be reversed; and the judgment should be in accordance with para. 1 of the umpire's award.

A BANKES, L.J.—I agree. As presented to the arbitrators and umpire, it does not appear to me, from the statement of the Case, that the charterers dispute their liability to pay something to the shipowners, but they contend that it ought to be limited to the amount of the dispatch money, which they alleged had been paid under a mistake of fact. When the matter came before ATKIN, J., the argument which was developed and the case which was presented to the learned judge was that the charterers were under no obligation to present any bills of lading to the master at all, but, in any event, having regard to the provision in the charterparty with regard to the lay days and the fact that the time which the shipowners contended had been wrongly occupied fell within the named lay days, the charterers were under no obligation to pay any damages at all. With regard to the payment of dispatch money, they argued that the right ground upon which to put that question was that there had been a total failure of consideration, so that the money was properly repayable to the shipowners.

B To take the second point first. The provision in the charterparty dealing with dispatch money is contained in cl. 16 which provides that dispatch money shall be payable for all time saved in loading. That is a short and convenient way of expressing what the parties meant. But time saved in loading must mean any portion of the full time allowed by the charterparty for loading which remains after the vessel has been fully loaded, and for that time the language of the clause is plain that dispatch money has to be paid. Therefore, dispatch money under this clause in the contract had to be paid for the full period which remained between the completion of the loading and the last day allowed under cl. 13 for the operation of loading. If the construction adopted by ATKIN, J., with regard to the other question in dispute is accepted, this, as it seems to me, extraordinary and absurd result follows—that dispatch money is payable under the terms of the charter in respect of a period of time during which the ship is not free to sail owing to the action of the charterers. That difficulty was, no doubt, felt by the charterers when they were at the arbitration, and they tried to get out of it by saying that the dispatch money had been paid under a mistake of fact. That obviously fails. Then another attempt was made, and this attempt was accepted by ATKIN, J. It was said: "The money ought not to be retained by the charterers because of the total failure of consideration." I am quite unable to accept that view of the position. It seems to me that the consideration for the payment of dispatch money was diligence in loading, and, so far from there being a total failure of consideration, the facts show that the consideration was fully executed. In those circumstances, I can see no ground for coming to the conclusion that the dispatch money in respect of those two days was not properly payable.

C That brings me now to consider the first question, and that depends upon the proper construction of this charterparty. ATKIN, J., has treated cl. 13 as though it gave some right to the charterers in respect of the ship that was not limited to the time actually occupied in loading, but extended to the full period which might have been occupied, but which was not in fact occupied. In my opinion, that is not the correct view of cl. 13. It does not specify any number of lay days at all; so far from giving the charterers any right, in my opinion, the correct view of this clause is that it places them under an obligation to load at a certain minimum rate, with a further provision that, if they do not so load, they must pay demurrage at a certain rate. That is the effect of the clause, as it seems to me—a clause indirectly, you may say, conferring a right, because of the obligation it places upon them; but the primary effect of the clause is to place the charterers under an obligation to load at a certain minimum rate and an obligation that, if they fail to do so, they are to pay demurrage at a certain rate. If they fail in performing the obligation, the penalty is to pay demurrage. If they fulfil the obligation and do not occupy the full time which they were entitled to occupy, they receive dispatch money. If they occupy the exact time, they neither pay demurrage nor receive dispatch money. If that is the correct view of the clause, the right upon which the learned judge founded his decision does not appear to me to exist, and the charterers have no right to say: "Although we did not occupy the time which the charterparty allowed us to occupy, we are still in a position to claim the right to detain the ship in the sense of refusing to take action which will allow her to depart just as long as we please, so long as our full loading time is not exceeded."

The next point is this - assuming the view of the contract to be right that when the ship is once fully loaded any right (if you call it a right) of the charterers in respect of the ship ceases, what is the position of the parties with reference to the bills of lading? I suppose in practice in almost every case the charterers desire that there shall be a bill of lading, and the owner of the ship, or his representative, the master, also desired that there shall be a bill of lading, and a certain amount of time is necessarily occupied in preparing the necessary document or documents and submitting them to the master. In this particular case the parties are agreed that a reasonable time would be twenty-four hours. Is there any obligation upon the charterers under those circumstances to present a bill of lading? I should certainly have thought there was; but this case, it seems to me, goes beyond that, because it does not rest upon ordinary commercial practice. It appears to me that upon the correct reading of cl. 21 there is an obligation upon the charterers to present bills of lading, and on the master to sign them. The obligation is not inserted there in the interest of the charterers only. It seems to me that the provisions of the clause are for the mutual benefit of the master and the charterers. In this contract it is obviously within the contemplation of the parties that the bill of lading is to be presented by the charterers to the ship-owner or master. Within what time? As I have said, the parties have agreed that twenty-four hours would be a reasonable time. If it is within the contemplation of the parties that the act shall be done, there will be an implied condition that it shall be done within what the parties have agreed is a reasonable time. Under those circumstances it seems to me that there was in this case, upon the facts as found, a breach by the charterers of the implied condition that they should present a bill of lading to the captain for signature within a reasonable time, and, as they failed to comply with that condition, they are liable in damages. The damages do not come within any provision of the charterparty fixing the amount of damages for this particular breach. Under those circumstances, the damages were at large, and I see no reason why we should interfere with the view of the umpire, who had all the matters before him, as to the amount of damages that ought to be awarded in this particular case.

A. T. LAWRENCE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question depends upon whether the charterers' contention that the lay days provided by cl. 12 and 13 are to be taken as a gross period for which the charterers are absolutely entitled to have the ship at their disposal is right, or whether they are only a means of controlling the rate of loading, so that, if the rate of loading does not rise to that level, demurrage is to be paid. I think that they are not gross days at all, but that they are days given for the operation of loading. That is made clear by cl. 16, which provides for dispatch money in the event of the loading being at a more rapid rate than the calculation under cl. 12 and 13 would work out at. In this case the loading was completed in a lesser time, and dispatch money was earned and paid, but it does not seem to me possible to say that those days were still to the credit of the charterers. Directly the ship was finally loaded it became the charterers' duty, within a reasonable time, to present their bills of lading for signature. If they did not do so, but for an unreasonable time delayed the ship before they presented the bills of lading, that was a breach of duty, and for it damages are recoverable. It is agreed that the reasonable time within which to have done that was twenty-four hours, and after that period the ship was delayed for two days. Counsel for the charterers argues that the ship might have gone away without waiting for the bills of lading. I do not think that is a correct view of the charterparty. Clause 21 seems to me clearly to mean that the master has

- A to sign bills of lading at the port of loading before the steamer sails. He could not have complied with this charterparty by leaving a bill of lading and going away. He would have had to declare his option as to what port of call he was going to in writing before signing the final bill of lading. It seems to me it is not possible to read this charterparty as one intended to give the charterers twenty-seven and a quarter days as a time in gross in which the ship was to be at their disposal, and
- B to mean that during that time they could retain her for any purpose they liked. I think they could not. They could only detain her in the operation of loading for that time, and if they detained her otherwise they were committing a breach of duty. The measure of damages was, perhaps, a point of some difficulty, but, on the whole, I think that there is no agreed rate of demurrage here for detention. The demurrage provided for in cl. 13 is for a detention caused by delay in loading,
- C and there are a number of other assessments of damage in the charterparty, none of which applies to this particular detention. Consequently, I think the damages for the detention in question were at large, and the umpire was entitled to find the sum which he did. I think the judgment which was given by my Lord is correct.

Appeal allowed.

- D Solicitors: Thomas Cooper & Sons; Church, Rackham & Co., for Donald Maclean & Handcock, Cardiff.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

E

VANNECK v. BENHAM AND OTHERS

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Younger, J.), July 14, 17, 19, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 Ch. 60; 86 L.J.Ch. 7; 115 L.T. 588]

Intestacy—Distribution—Interest of next-of-kin—Right to claim specific property.

F

An interest in an intestate's estate is not sufficiently specific, apart from agreement with the other next-of-kin where there are more than one, to enable any one of the next-of-kin to say to the administrator: "This or that thing is mine. Hand it over to me."

Settlement—Marriage settlement—Covenant to settle after-acquired property—

G

Exclusion of specified kinds of chattel—Covenantor becoming entitled to share of intestate's estate including chattels of excepted kinds—Sale of intestate's property—Effect of covenant on proceeds.

H

In a post-nuptial settlement the husband covenanted to bring into settlement any property coming to him thereafter under an intestacy, except chattels of specified kinds. He subsequently became entitled as one of the next-of-kin of an intestate to a share in the intestate's personal estate, which included chattels of the kinds excepted from the covenant. In the course of administration of the estate these chattels were sold.

I

Held: the husband's interest in the intestate's estate, so far as the estate consisted of such chattels, was not an interest in each of the specific chattels, but was an interest in the fund created by the proceeds of their sale, and, therefore, his interest in such chattels or in the proceeds of sale thereof did not fall within the exception of the covenant in the settlement, but, together with his interest in the rest of the estate, was subject to the covenant.

Lord Sudeley v. A.-G. (3), [1897] A.C. 11, applied.

Cooper v. Cooper (1) (1874), 7 H.L. 53, and Blake v. Bayne (2), [1908] A.C. 371, distinguished.

Notes. Referred to: Re Donkin, Public Trustee v. Cairns, [1948] Ch. 74; Re Cunliffe-Owen, Mountain v. I.R.Comrs., [1953] 2 All E.R. 196.

As to the distribution of an intestate's estate and the settlement of after-acquired property, see 16 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 392 et seq., and ibid., vol. 34, pp. 450 et seq. For cases see 24 DIGEST (Repl.) 923 et seq., and 40 DIGEST (Repl.) 533 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Cooper v. Cooper (1874), L.R. 7 H.L. 53; 44 L.J.Ch. 6; 30 L.T. 409; 22 W.R. 713, H.L.; 23 Digest (Repl.) 480, 5474.
- (2) Blake v. Bayne, [1908] A.C. 371; 77 L.J.P.C. 97; 99 L.T. 35, P.C.; 23 Digest (Repl.) 232, 2819.
- (3) A.-G. v. Lord Sudeley, [1896] 1 Q.B. 354; 65 L.J.Q.B. 281; 74 L.T. 91; 60 J.P. 260; 44 W.R. 340; 12 T.L.R. 354, C.A.; affirmed sub nom. Lord Sudeley v. A.-G., [1897] A.C. 11; 66 L.J.Q.B. 21; 75 L.T. 398; 61 J.P. 420; 45 W.R. 305; 13 T.L.R. 38, H.L.; 23 Digest (Repl.) 474, 5445.
- (4) Re Dickson, Dickson v. Dickson, [1890] W.N. 10; 34 Sol. Jo. 181.

Action to rectify a deed of assignment to trustees of a post-nuptial settlement executed in October, 1908, by limiting the assignment thereby made of the interest of the plaintiff as one of the next-of-kin in the personal estate of his brother, Lord Huntingfield, to so much of such interest as he was in fact bound to assign.

The settlement was made between the plaintiff, Walter Vanneck, of the first part, the defendant, his wife, of the second part, and the two defendant trustees of the third part, and by it certain funds were to be held by the trustees upon trusts for the benefit of the husband, the wife, and their children. By cl. 2 of the settlement an obligation was imposed on the wife out of the income of the settled property to maintain a suitable house and provide therein a home for herself and her husband and their children for the time being unmarried, and in cl. 13 there was an assignment by the husband and wife of "all those the articles of plate, furniture, pictures, books, and all other chattels and effects of household or domestic use or ornament which are now in or about or belong to the joint home of the husband and wife at Darsham aforesaid, and including therein the articles which were bequeathed to the husband by his grandmother, Lady Huntingfield, a list whereof . . . has been made and has been or will be delivered to the trustees, which articles of plate, as specified in such list, are hereinafter referred to as 'the scheduled plate,' to hold the same unto the trustees" upon the trusts therein mentioned. Clause 8 provided:

"If during the joint lives of the husband and wife they shall not reside together in such home as aforesaid, there shall be paid to the husband during the remainder of the said joint lives out of the income of the husband's fund the annual sum of £65" subject to a certain possible deduction. By cl. 19:

"Each of them the husband and the wife shall further bring into settlement and make over to the trustees or trustee all the property of every kind (property consisting of a life interest or of income only or being of a value not exceeding £200 and furniture, plate, jewels, and other chattels of personal, domestic, or household use excepted) to which they should respectively during their joint lives hereafter become entitled in possession by virtue of any gift, devise, or bequest by will or under any settlement or by virtue of any intestacy or other succession, the same to be held as to any property brought into settlement by the wife as part of the wife's fund, and as to any property brought into settlement by the husband upon trust to pay the income to the husband for his life, and after his death to the wife if surviving for her life and after the death of both upon the trusts then subsisting hereunder as to the husband's fund, any such property consisting of real estate or lands or houses to be held upon trust for sale at the discretion of the trustees or trustee, but subject to the consent of the husband or wife as the case may be by whom the same shall be brought

A into settlement during their respective lives . . . any such property consisting of investments may be retained though the investments be not of a kind herein authorised."

In January, 1915, Lord Huntingfield died intestate and unmarried, and letters of administration to his estate were granted to the Public Trustee. The plaintiff as one of the next-of-kin became entitled to one-sixth share of the intestate's personal estate. The remaining five-sixth shares were divisible among the sisters of the intestate and the children of two deceased brothers. The net value of the whole personal estate after payment of duties was approximately estimated to be £30,000. The value of the pictures, plate, furniture, and other articles of personal or household use, was estimated to be £15,200, but these articles in the result realised more than £21,000. Mr. and Mrs. Vanneck accepting the opinion of their solicitor that any interest which Mr. Vanneck might have under the intestacy of his brother would be subject to the trusts of the settlement as after-acquired property, instructions were given for a deed of assignment of Mr. Vanneck's entire interest under the intestacy to the trustees, and it was also arranged that Mr. Vanneck should give up the sum of £65 a year, while Mrs. Vanneck agreed to limit her interest in the fund brought into settlement to £165, and, accordingly, the deed of which rectification was sought was executed in August, 1915. Clause 1 of this deed was as follows :

"The husband as settlor with the privity of the wife hereby grants, assigns, and conveys unto the trustees first all that the share, estate, and interest of him the husband in the personal estate of the late Baron Huntingfield as one of his next-of-kin and all the moneys, stocks, funds, securities, and property which have become or shall become vested in or belonging to the husband as such next-of-kin or by any other succession by reason of the death of the said late Baron Huntingfield and secondly all the share or shares, estate, and interest to which the husband has become entitled or which have descended upon the husband as an heir or co-heir of the said late Baron Huntingfield by reason of his death intestate or which the husband has become entitled to by any other succession by reason of the death of the said Baron Huntingfield to hold the same as to the said first described premises absolutely and as to the said secondly described premises unto and to the use of the trustees, their heirs and assigns, nevertheless upon the trusts and subject to the powers and provisions upon and subject to which the same ought to be held by virtue of cl. 19 of the settlement as property to be brought into and made subject to the trusts, powers, and provisions of the settlement."

Clause 2 contained a release by the husband of the right to have paid to him under cl. 8 of the settlement the annual sum of £65, cl. 3 contained a release by the wife of her rights to the income of the fund brought in in excess of £165 a year, and by cl. 4 the trustees were appointed attorneys to receive the share of Mr. Vanneck in the intestate's estate. The next-of-kin, not being in entire agreement as to the administration of Lord Huntingfield's estate, concurred in asking the court to appoint the Public Trustee as administrator, and he acted in that capacity. After the estate had been realised a letter was written on behalf of the Public Trustee to the plaintiff saying that the Public Trustee had been advised by counsel that he could not safely pay over to the trustees of the settlement the portion of the share of Lord Huntingfield's estate which represented proceeds of sale of furniture, plate, &c., as it appeared from the terms of the settlement that they were expressly excluded from the plaintiff's covenant.

Clauson, K.C., and B. A. Hall for the plaintiff.

Mathew, K.C., and J. E. Harman for the defendant Mrs. Vanneck.

W. H. Cozens-Hardy, K.C., and J. T. Prior for the trustees of the settlement.

YOUNGER, J., read a judgment in which he stated the nature of the action and the facts, and said that the provisions of cl. 2 and 13 of the settlement might be of some importance as tending to show that the range of the exception in the covenant in cl. 19 was of articles capable of enjoyment in specie by the husband or the wife of the kind already brought into settlement under cl. 13 for the purposes of the home which was to be provided by the wife. The whole estate of Lord Huntingfield has been converted into cash. The plaintiff has not received, nor has there at any time been available for him to receive, any interest in the estate except a sum in cash. In these circumstances the first question I have to determine is whether the whole interest of the plaintiff in his brother's estate was caught by the covenant, or whether, seeing that some part of the net sum representing Mr. Vanneck's ascertained share in the result of the administration owed its origin to the realisation of articles of the description excepted from the covenant, his obligations under the covenant are reduced by the amount properly attributable to the ascertained value of these articles. The answer to this question depends primarily on the true construction of the covenant, and it is asserted on Mr. Vanneck's behalf that his strict right as one of the next-of-kin of his brother was a right to one-sixth interest in every picture, chair, table, spoon, ring, or necklace, pot or pan, which remained in the hands of the administrator after payment of the intestate's debts and administration expenses. If that view were well founded and it were necessary to decide the case on that footing, I should be of opinion that on the true construction of the covenant in this settlement the exception did not extend so far and was not directed to such an interest. But it would be unsatisfactory to determine the case on so narrow, so debatable, and, it might be suggested, so grotesque a hypothesis. I therefore proceed to deal with the point at issue on more general grounds.

The contention on behalf of the plaintiff is that the next-of-kin of an intestate have at the moment of death, subject only to the claims of creditors, a substantial title to the whole of his personal property, and a clear and tangible interest therein, and for that view he relies on Blake v. Bayne (2). On the other hand, counsel for Mrs. Vanneck contends, and with equally high authority to support him, that Mr. Vanneck's only right at the moment of Lord Huntingfield's death was to have the administration completed and the estate ascertained and realised, and then and there to have one-sixth of the proceeds paid to him, with no right of property in nor any right to claim any part of that estate in specie: see per LORD DAVEY in Lord Sudeley v. A.-G. (3). Plainly both of these views, divergent as they may seem, must, having regard to their origin, when properly applied, be capable of acceptance. My task is to see which of them is applicable to the problem which in this case has to be solved.

In confirmation of the husband's contention, there is, first, Cooper v. Cooper (1), a decision which establishes that the residuary legatee under a will has a clear and tangible interest in the residue, and that, the Statute of Distributions being nothing but a will made by the legislature for an intestate, his next-of-kin stand, with regard to his personal estate, in the same position as does a residuary legatee under a will. The case next establishes, as stated in the headnote, that (L.R. 7 H.L. 53):

"The rule of the Statute of Distributions which requires the conversion of an intestate's estate into money is introduced simply for the benefit of creditors and the facility of division amongst the next-of-kin. But, as regards the substantial title to property, the right of the next-of-kin (subject only to the claims of creditors) is complete."

That being the effect of the decision, it becomes important to see what are the facts of the case with reference to which it was given. A testator had devised an estate called Pain's Hill to trustees. That estate had by the testator been directed to be sold, and a power of appointment among his children had been given to the widow. The widow by deed, the property having in the meantime been sold, appointed the proceeds of sale to her sons in equal shares. Subsequently by her will she gave

A the whole of the estate, mentioning it specifically, to one of her sons, and by the same will she gave benefits to the second son and to the children of the third son, who had died intestate, and whose children on his intestacy had become entitled to that one-third appointed to their father. The question which had to be determined by the House of Lords was whether the interest of these children of the deceased son under the appointment, which interest they took only through the intestacy of their father, was such an interest in the estate of their father as to put them to their election to take either under the grandmother's will or under the appointment; and the answer to that question depended upon what their rights were under their father's intestacy. It was contended by those who appeared for the children that the interest which they took was no more than an undefined and intangible interest. LORD CAIRNS, dealing with that contention, says (ibid. at pp. 64, 65):

D "My Lords, it was very much pressed on your Lordships, in the extremely able argument we heard at the Bar from the counsel for the appellants, that the interests of a next-of-kin in the estate of an intestate is an undefined and intangible interest; that it is a right merely to have the estate converted into money and to receive a payment in money after the debts and expenses are discharged. My Lords, no doubt the right of a next-of-kin is a right which can only be asserted by calling upon the administrator to perform his duty, and the performance of the duty of the administrator may require the conversion of the estate into money for the purpose of paying debts and legacies. But I apprehend that the rule of law, or the rule laid down by the statute, which requires the conversion of an intestate's estate into money is a rule introduced simply for the benefit of creditors and for the facility of division. For the benefit of creditors and for the facility of division among the next-of-kin the estate is turned into money, but as regards substantial proprietorship the right of the next-of-kin remains clear to every item forming the personal estate of the intestate, subject only to those paramount claims of creditors. My Lords, this right of the next-of-kin I find extremely well expressed in a book which on this subject is a book of high authority—BACON'S ABRIDGMENT—in the part of it which treats of executors and administrators. Speaking of the right of the next-of-kin, and of the statute regulating the succession to an intestate's estate, it says, on the clause of the statute which directs that no distribution shall be within the year after the death of the intestate [Tit. Executors and Administrators s. 4, vol. iii (7th Edn.) p. 75]:

G "It hath been adjudged that if a person entitled to a distributive share dies within the year, yet it is such an estate vested in him as shall go to his executor or administrator, for the statute doth not make any suspension or condition precedent to the interest of the parties, but it is a clause merely for the benefit of creditors; also this statute, being in the nature of a will for all persons who die intestate, ought in this instance to be resembled to the case of a residuary legatee, in which it is always holden that if such a legatee die before the debts are satisfied, so that it doth not appear to how much the surplus will amount, yet the executor or administrator of such a legatee shall have the whole residue, &c., which remains over and not the executor of the first testator." "

H
I Again LORD CAIRNS says (ibid. at p. 66):

"If we look on the Statute of Distributions, as I think we ought to look on it, as in substance nothing more than a will made by the legislature for the intestate, and liken this to the case of a person having made a will and having directed his debts and expenses to be paid, and having given over his clear residue to his three children and his widow—if, I say, we look at the case as if it had assumed these features—I apprehend your Lordships will be perfectly clear that the residuary legatees under such a will had a clear and tangible interest in specie in the Pain's Hill estate, just in the same way as the youngest of the three brothers, Frederick John, who directly took one-third of the proceeds of the estate."

The effect of that decision I take to be that the interest which these children took under the intestacy of their father in (inter alia) the one-third which had been appointed to their father by the grandmother was sufficiently specific to require them to elect between the benefits they took under their grandmother's will and the appointed fund which under another name had been disposed of by that will. That fund came to them in the form of money or money's worth; for the purposes of election it was enough that in the result they had it in the form of money's worth.

The next case referred to by counsel for the husband and mainly relied on by him was Blake v. Bayne (2) in the Privy Council. The judgment there was delivered by LORD MACNAGHTEN. That was a case in which the claim was made under an administration bond in respect of breaches of duty by the administrator, who was one of three sisters, in administering the mother's personal estate; and the circumstances were that, the debts of the mother having been paid, the management of the property was left in the hands of the administratrix as trustee for the other two sisters and herself, with the result that losses occurred. The other two sisters then commenced an action against the sureties who had given the administration bond in respect of the alleged breaches of duty by the administratrix for which the sureties would be responsible. It was held by the Privy Council that after payment of the intestate's debts the three sisters were entitled to the residue of the estate in equal undivided shares, and that in the circumstances it was not thereafter competent for the two sisters to maintain any claim against the sureties. In delivering the judgment of the board LORD MACNAGHTEN, after reading LORD CAIRNS' judgment in Cooper v. Cooper (1), which I have already read, says this ([1908] A.C. at p. 383):

"The opinion expressed by LORD CAIRNS and the other noble and learned Lords in Cooper v. Cooper (1) goes a long way to dispose of the whole case set up on behalf of the plaintiffs. Subject to the payment of the debts, the whole estate was the absolute property of the three next-of-kin. The furniture and effects were theirs; the money was theirs; the houses were theirs. The debts were paid immediately after the death. If the next-of-kin choose to leave the whole estate just as it was in the hands of the eldest sister and under her absolute control (as the evidence shows, and as HOLROYD, J., finds, it was their desire and intention to do), there was no reason why effect should not be given to their wishes. As long as they lived together there was no reason for dividing the furniture. There was no reason for dividing the money. It was applied honestly and equally for their common benefit."

And again he says (ibid. at p. 379):

"It is important to note the position of the estate when the deed of indemnity was signed. All the debts had been paid. There was no liability outstanding. The mother's estate was clear. The three sisters were equally entitled to it, and every part of it, in the actual state and condition in which it was. Without the consent of her two sisters it was neither the duty nor the right of the administratrix to convert the estate into money for the purpose of division or investment."

I think with regard to that case, and in particular to the passages I have read from LORD MACNAGHTEN's judgment, that all the Privy Council necessarily decided was that on the facts the whole of the personal estate was capable of division and that the value of each separate share after division would be the same as the value of one-third of the whole, and that the parties entitled had agreed to enjoy it in specie. I do not think that LORD MACNAGHTEN intended to say, and there is a great deal to be urged against such a view, that the same result necessarily follows where that

- A is not the case, where there has been agreement to take in specie, or where the estate consists of things which lose the whole or some of their value if divided; such things, for instance, as a pair of Oriental vases, which together may be worth much more than twice the value of each of them separately. Moreover, on any other view, the particular basis adopted in Blake v. Bayne (2) is not in harmony with the decision in Cooper v. Cooper (1), on which, in another part of his judgment,
- B LORD MACNAGHTEN relies, nor with Lord Sudeley v. A.-G. (3). Nor is it in harmony with the ordinary case of a trust for sale and division, where every cestui que trust has the right to have the trust carried out because, if not so carried out, every beneficiary would not receive that which he has a right to claim.

- That consideration brings me to Lord Sudeley v. A.-G. (3). In that case the question arose whether a share in New Zealand mortgages, which formed part of the residue of the testator's estate, became specifically the property of his widow, a residuary legatee, who had died. If it had, the value of her interest in these mortgages would be exempted from probate duty payable on her estate in this country; and the House of Lords held that the right of the executors of the widow as a person interested in the residue was not a right to the one-fourth of the mortgages in specie, but was a right merely to require the husband's executors to administer his personal estate and to receive one-fourth of the residue, and that probate duty therefore attached on the widow's interest therein. That case was decided by the House of Lords, but it followed a reported judgment of the Court of Appeal, sub nom. A.-G. v. Lord Sudeley (3), and I will read two passages from what the lords justices stated. LOPES, L.J., says ([1896] 1 Q.B. at p. 363):
- C "It is to be observed that neither Frances nor her executors could claim any part of this estate in specie; the executors of her husband were not trustees of the estate for her—all she was entitled to was her proportion of the proceeds of her husband's estate after realisation."
- D KAY, L.J., says (ibid. at p. 365):

- E "The one-fourth share of his residuary estate, which belonged to Frances, would still be an English asset, because neither she nor her executors would have any right to any of such investments in specie."

F When the case came before the House of Lords these judgments were adopted by LORD MACNAGHTEN, and LORD HALSBURY, dealing with the matter, says ([1897] A.C. at pp. 15, 16, 17):

- G "It is uncertain until the residuary estate has been ascertained of what it will consist. It may consist of many things—it may consist of only a sum of money—and until that has been ascertained the actual right capable of instant assertion does not exist; and whether the character is that of executor or of trustee seems to me to be immaterial, because the legatee has no right to go and say, 'I will have this or that part of the assets.' If a trustee is to be the character filled the cestui que trust has no right to apply to the trust fund until a trust fund has been constituted, and by the hypothesis the trust fund is not constituted. . . . The whole foundation of the argument is that the New Zealand mortgages are specifically the property of the legatee, which is a proposition which to my mind it is impossible to maintain."
- H

- I LORD HERSCHELL says, with regard to the widow's share in the residuary estate (ibid. at pp. 18, 19):

"I agree with my noble and learned friend on the woolsack that the whole fallacy of the argument on behalf of the appellants rests on the assumption that Mrs. Tollemache or they as her executors were entitled to any part of these New Zealand mortgages as an asset—she in her own right or they as executors of their testatrix. I do not think that they have any estate, right, or interest, legal or equitable, in these New Zealand mortgages so as to make them an asset of her estate. What she had a right to—what they as her executors had a right to— was one-fourth of the clear residue of Mr. Tollemache's estate—that is to say, what remains of his estate after satisfying debts and legacies; and a bequest to them of one-fourth part of his residuary estate does not seem to me to vest in them or in her a fourth part of each asset of which that estate consists, as contended for on the part of the appellants. It seems to me, as my noble and learned friend has pointed out, that until the estate is fully administered it is impossible to say of what assets the residuary estate will consist. . . . Well, in that case, how would it be possible to say that any one of the residuary legatees could point to any part of the assets of the testator and say, 'This is part of my estate,' when it depends entirely upon the method of administration by the trustees in what form the residue becoming divisible will exist when the administration is at an end. . . . In truth, the right she had was to require the executors of her husband to administer his estate completely, and she had an interest to the extent of one-fourth in what should prove to be the residuary estate of the testator, Algernon Tollemache."

LORD MACNAGHTEN says (ibid. at p. 19):

"I am of the same opinion. I think the point is a very short one, and I think the claim of the Crown is clear. For my part, I am quite content to adopt the judgments of LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J."

LORD SHAND says (ibid. at p. 20):

"The claim of Mrs. Tollemache's executors and trustees was really a claim to a share of the residue, and it had never been changed by allocation either by Mr. Tollemache's trustees or by arrangement with the other persons interested, so as to make the right of these executors a right to specific assets. They might have objected to accept the New Zealand mortgages if it had been proposed to allocate these to them as part of the residue, and the other parties interested might also have had valid objections to such an allocation. If Mr. Tollemache's executors had held the entire estate for behoof of his widow, the case might have been different; but, with other persons interested in an undivided and unrealised residue, none of the beneficiaries had in themselves a right of ownership in particular assets of Mr. Tollemache's estate."

LORD DAVEY says (ibid. at pp. 21, 22):

"What, then, are the rights of the appellants? Their right, and the only right they could enforce adversely, is to have the administration completed and the residuary estate ascertained and realised, either wholly or so far as may be necessary for the purpose, and to have one-fourth of the proceeds paid to them. . . . My Lords, I am of opinion, on the facts of this case, that Mrs. Tollemache at the time of her death had no right of property in or right to claim any part of the mortgages in specie, and that the appellants, her executors, acquired only a right to have the estate duly administered and to enforce that right by an action for the purpose, but had no right virtute officii to have any part of the New Zealand mortgages appropriated to the estate of their testatrix in specie."

The only one other case to which I have been referred is Re Dickson (4), a case superficially very like the present case, because in that case there was a covenant by a wife in a settlement of very much the same kind as in this case. What had happened was that the testator, who died in 1888, gave by his will all the residue of his estate to his executors upon trust for sale, and, after payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, to hold the whole of that residue in trust for Lady D., his wife, who had entered into the covenant. From the report of the case in 34 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 181, it appears that before the summons came on the furniture had been sold, but the sale had been made without prejudice to the question in what form Lady D. was entitled to take. STIRLING, J., decided that

A the fact that the lady had an interest under the covenant did not preclude her, being the only legatee, from electing to take the property in specie, and that, therefore, the furniture and other articles were by the very terms of the covenant excluded therefrom.

B These are the cases in point. It is unfortunate that Cooper v. Cooper (1), which forms the foundation of the argument for the husband here, was not cited in Lord Sudeley v. A.-G. (3), especially as it was more relevant to the appellant's case than were some of the cases that were cited. It is unfortunate also that Lord Sudeley v. A.-G. (3) was not cited in Blake v. Bayne (2). But I think that it is not difficult to arrive at the true distinction between the two lines of authority which at first sight might seem to be in conflict. The distinction I think is that an interest in an intestate's estate is sufficiently specific to raise the case of an election, representing, as that interest does, all the money's worth of the property comprised therein, but that such interest is not sufficiently specific, apart from agreement with the other next-of-kin, where there are more than one, to enable any one of the next-of-kin to say to the administrator: "This or that thing is mine. Hand it over to me." In the present case a sale was necessary. It was necessary to sell at least part of Lord Huntingfield's estate for the purpose of ordinary administration, and no agreement was come to not to sell the whole. It may be that there were infants who had interests, and that no such agreement was possible. In any case, having regard to the correspondence, I do not think that such an agreement was practicable. At all events no such agreement was arrived at. At no moment of time, therefore, was Mr. Vanneck entitled specifically to any part of Lord Huntingfield's estate answering to the description of the property excepted from the covenant. This view has the merit of convenience. Any other view would involve a careful inquiry in each case, and elaborate accounts on insufficient material where any claim to exemption is made by a covenantor under such a covenant as we have here. That consideration, I quite agree, ought not to affect the true construction of the covenant, but it does not weaken the force of that which appears to be the natural construction. In these circumstances it is unnecessary to consider whether there was in this case any such mistake on the part of Mr. Vanneck as would have entitled him to relief had my view of his liability been different, but, in case the matter should be taken further, I will say that, in my view, all the parties to the deed of August, 1915, intended that the whole of Mr. Vanneck's interest under his brother's intestacy should be assigned. I agree that all that Mr. Vanneck was bound to assign was truly covered by his assignment, but I am altogether in the dark as to what the parties would have done if they had known or thought that he was not bound to assign his whole interest in his brother's estate. I am morally certain, however, that, if the assignment had been limited in the way the husband's counsel suggested, either no assignment would have been made at all or the parties would have agreed upon some figures being inserted in the deed to adjust their conflicting claims.

H In the result I am of opinion that the action fails; but as the action was first suggested to Mr. Vanneck by the Public Trustee, I think that he was justified in having the question decided by the court. Accordingly I make no order in the action except that the costs of all parties should be paid out of the fund assigned, the costs of the trustees and of Mr. Vanneck to be taxed as between solicitor and client.

I Solicitors: Theodore Goddard & Co.; Lawrence, Graham & Co.; R. Voss & Son.

[Reported by N. TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

Re SANDYS. UNION OF LONDON AND SMITHS BANK
v. LITCHFIELD

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Sargant, J.), March 3, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 1 Ch. 511; 85 L.J.Ch. 418; 114 L.T. 690;
32 T.L.R. 355]

B

Settlement—Portions—Time for raising—Regard to be had to interests of persons entitled to estate as well as to those of portioners.

In exercise of a power conferred on him by a settlement, the testator, as tenant for life, appointed the settled estate to trustees on trust to raise by mortgage, sale, demise, or "any other reasonable means" portions amounting to £25,000 for the testator's younger daughters, the trustees having power at their discretion to postpone raising the portions. Interest of four pounds per cent. per annum was payable on the £25,000 during the period of postponement. The total settled estate amounted to some £175,000. On the testator's death the trustees found that the only suitable way of raising the portions was by mortgage at the rate of five per cent. per annum, but the present tenant for life objected to the immediate raising of the portions and offered to increase the rate of interest during postponement to five per cent. if the trustees would postpone raising the portions. On a summons for directions taken out by the trustees,

C

D

Held: in considering whether to effect the mortgage the trustees were bound, bearing in mind the terms of the will, to have regard to the interests of the persons entitled to the estate as well as to the interests of the portioners, and in the circumstances the trustees ought to accept the offer made by the tenant for life and postpone raising the portions for one year, with liberty to apply at the end of the year.

E

Notes. Referred to: Re Charteris, Charteris v. Biddulph, [1917] 2 Ch. 379.

As to the time for raising portions, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 499, 500; and for cases see 40 DIGEST (Repl.) 661 et seq.

F

Originating Summons taken out by trustees for directions whether they should exercise their discretion to raise a sum of £25,000 for portions by mortgage of their term.

The facts and arguments appear from the judgment of SARGANT, J.

G

St. John Clerke for the trustees.

Martelli, K.C., and W. Gordon Brown for the portioners.

Romer, K.C., and J. B. Dyne for the tenant for life.

SARGANT, J.—This is a summons by which the Union of London and Smiths Bank, who are the trustees of a term to which I will refer, ask the direction of the court whether they ought to take any proceedings to raise a sum of £25,000 with interest by mortgage of that term. The trustees have expressly submitted the exercise of any discretion they may have to the court, so that I have not to consider whether the trustees are proposing to do an act within their powers or not. They are themselves asking the court what would be a proper exercise of their discretion. The question seems to me to be one of great importance quite apart from the fact that a large sum of money is involved. Shortly stated, the property with regard to which the application has been made is a considerable estate in Surrey, certain houses in Westminster, and a considerable amount of stocks and securities, which at present prices are worth some £24,000, settled upon trusts corresponding with the uses of the lands, settled to be invested in land to be settled on the like uses as the property. The total value of the freehold estates seems to be something like £150,000, so that there is a total settled estate of something like £175,000.

H

I

A By the settlement, which is the first instrument I have to refer to and which was dated Nov. 7, 1902, the property was settled upon two gentlemen, who were brothers, in succession for their lives, and then it was settled for the eldest of five daughters of the second tenant for life. The second tenant for life was given express power by will or codicil to charge the estate to the extent of £25,000 from the death of the survivor of himself and the prior tenant for life—they are both dead now—for the portion or portions of his four younger daughters. He was also given the usual power to appoint the premises charged for any term of years without impeachment of waste upon the usual trusts by mortgage or otherwise to raise the principal and interest charged and all costs of raising the same. The second tenant for life died in 1910 and the first tenant for life died in April, 1915. By his last will the second tenant for life, in exercise of the power conferred on him to charge the estate, charged all the hereditaments, capital moneys and investments with the sum hereinafter directed to be raised, and appointed that all the said hereditaments should be to the use of the Union of London and Smiths Bank, Ltd., the trustees, for the term of 1,000 years upon trust that “they shall by mortgage or sale or demise of the premises, or any part thereof, for all or any part of the said term, or by receipt of the income thereof, or by sale of timber or minerals, or by all or any of those means, or by any other reasonable means, raise for the portions of my said four younger daughters hereinafter named and their children the sum of £25,000 and interests thereon until the raising or payment thereof at the rate of £4 per cent. per annum”—that was the maximum rate that he could charge under the settlement. Then there is this important proviso:

E “Provided always that my trustees may in their discretion postpone the raising of the said sum of £25,000 or any part thereof for such period as they may think fit, and that the interest at the rate of £4 per cent. per annum payable in respect thereof, or any part thereof, under the trusts of the said indenture of settlement and this my will shall be paid and applied during such period of postponement in like manner as the income of the said sum of £25,000 when raised is hereby directed to be paid and applied.”

F On the death of the tenant for life the trustees at once proceeded to see how they could raise this sum of £25,000, and they found that it would be impossible to raise it by the sale of the securities in question, because, although there were minimum prices quoted as to a large part of the securities, those prices could not in fact be realised, and only a comparatively small portion of the sum could be realised by sale of any of those securities, and that part at a very heavy sacrifice indeed. Further, with regard to the sale of the property, there were very great difficulties of course, as everybody must realise, in selling any part of the property; and as regards a mortgage they found that the only people who were prepared to deal were insurance companies, who not only required at least 5 per cent. interest, but also made it a condition that insurances on the life of the tenant for life should be taken out, because, as is well known, insurance companies like when lending moneys also to command or provide an addition to their ordinary business of life insurance. But lately it has been found by the trustees that they might borrow from one large insurance company, without the onerous obligation of the tenant for life insuring her life. She does not want to insure her life; there is no reason why she should. The capital is perfectly secure. It is not a question of a mortgage on the life interest or anything of that sort, but the sum could be provided at a rate of 5 per cent. per annum if it was not to be paid off for five years.

I The question, therefore, is whether, under those circumstances, the trustees ought or ought not to effect that mortgage. It is a question of effecting that mortgage and not of adopting any of the other means which I have mentioned. The first and ruling consideration with regard to this question is, whether, as contended by counsel for the portioners, the trustees owe a duty only to the portioners and are bound to consider their interests alone without any regard to the effect which the raising of the money may have on the persons entitled to the estate, or whether they ought also to consider the interests of the persons entitled to the estate. In my opinion, the latter is the true view. It is noticeable that the trustees are only to raise the money by the means stated "or by any other reasonable means." It can be of no importance for the portioners as such whether the means are reasonable or not provided they get their money. The phrase "reasonable means" obviously has reference to this, that the trustees are not to exercise their trust so as unduly to hamper or sacrifice the estate. Further, the power of postponement in the discretion of the trustees seems to me obviously one which is inserted in order that the trustees may be at liberty not to unduly injure the persons interested in the estate. It is difficult to suggest any other adequate reason for its insertion. Generally speaking, any person at all familiar with the way in which real property is settled in this country must recognise that makers of settlements, while desirous that a certain provision shall be made for the younger children, also exercise the greatest care that the general interests of the property as a family estate shall be preserved for the benefit of the head of the family and those who succeed him. In my opinion one of the considerations which may actuate and ought to actuate the trustees under the trusts of this settlement and will is the consideration of not unduly injuring the owners of the estate in the course of raising the provision which the makers of this settlement have thought fit to make for the younger branches of the family. Some stress was laid by counsel for the portioners upon a comparison between the comparative wealth of the eldest daughter and the comparatively narrow means of the younger daughters arising under this settlement. In my opinion, that is not a circumstance which the court can properly take into account. The proportion between the benefits given to the eldest and the younger daughters is fixed by those who were the owners of the property and who were entitled to settle what that proportion should be.

The tenant for life has offered to the trustees as a condition of their discretion being exercised in the direction of postponing the matter for a certain time that she would pay interest at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. That was the original proposal, and under the pressure of the case as it proceeded, and in deference to a suggestion made by me, she is now willing to increase that rate to 5 per cent. In my judgment that is an offer which the trustees in their discretion ought to accept. It appears to me that at the present time one has to consider really two rates of interest. There is the higher rate of interest which will probably be permanent, and which is due to destruction of capital in consequence of the present war, and there is also the still higher rate of interest which is due to the temporary stringency of money due to the actual existence of the war. Ultimately no doubt the persons interested in the portions will be able to avail themselves of the former rate of interest, that is to say, the higher rate of interest which is likely to be permanent; but I do not think that the trustees in their discretion would be right in insisting upon raising the money during the present circumstances so as to secure for the portioners not merely that extra rate of interest which is likely to be permanent, but also the still higher rate of interest which is a temporary rate due to the temporary stringency. I think that in doing that they would be regarding too exclusively the interests of the portioners alone and not paying sufficient attention to the object with which this power of postponement and the power of choosing the means of raising the money were obviously inserted in the settlement. The order will be that the trustees are at liberty to postpone the raising of the portions for a term of one year, subject to the tenant for life paying as from to-day interest after the rate of 5 per cent. instead of 4 per cent., and there will be liberty to apply at the end of the year.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Biddle, Thorne, Welsford & Gait; Trollope & Winckworth.

[Reported by T. DE LA POER BERESFORD, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

PRODUCE BROKERS CO., LTD. v. OLYMPIA OIL AND CAKE CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Warrington and Scrutton, L.JJ.), November 30, December 1, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 320; 86 L.J.K.B. 421; 116 L.T. 1; 33 T.L.R. 95]

Custom—Evidence of—Admissibility—To explain contract—Sale of goods—Trade custom—Appropriation of goods.

Evidence of a custom is admissible to explain the language of a written contract, although the admission of that evidence must to some extent vary the terms of the contract since the contract construed without the custom will be different from what it is if construed with the custom. Despite that, evidence of a custom can be given for use as a dictionary to explain what words in the contract mean, e.g., that "twelve" means "thirteen" or "one hundred" means the "long hundred" (120), or to define periods of time or places. In the present case,

Held: to explain a contract evidence was admissible of a custom of the trade in soya beans imported from the east that in the case of re-sales buyers under the Incorporated Oil Seed Association contract impliedly agreed with their sellers that they would accept the original shipper's appropriation, if passed on without delay, provided that it was valid and in order when made, and that the seller under the contract should be under no obligation to make any appropriation other than that of passing a copy of the original shipper's appropriation without delay, even though at the time of being passed on the appropriation might, apart from the custom, be invalid and not in order, as where the ship carrying the goods and the cargo had been lost.

Notes. Referred to: Westacott v. Hahn, [1918] 1 K.B. 495; Manbre Saccharine Co., Ltd. v. Corn Products Co., Ltd., [1918-19] All E.R.Rep. 980; Clark v. Cox, McEuen & Co., [1921] 1 K.B. 139.

As to admission of evidence of custom, see 11 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 191-196; and for cases see 17 DIGEST (Repl.) 38-48.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Hutcheson & Co. v. Eaton & Son (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 861; 51 L.T. 846, C.A.; 1 Digest 733, 2764.
- (2) Re North-Western Rubber Co. and Hüttenbach & Co., [1908] 2 K.B. 907; 78 L.J.K.B. 51; 99 L.T. 680, C.A.; 17 Digest (Repl.) 44, 523.
- (3) Arnhold, Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, Greene, Jourdain & Co., Ltd., [1915] 2 K.B. 379; 84 L.J.K.B. 1673; 113 L.T. 185; 31 T.L.R. 351; 13 Asp.M.L.C. 94; affirmed [1916] 1 K.B. 495; 85 L.J.K.B. 665; 114 L.T. 152; 32 T.L.R. 186; 60 Sol. Jo. 156; 13 Asp.M.L.C. 235; 21 Com. Cas. 174, C.A.; 39 Digest 578, 1813.
- (4) Humphrey v. Dale (1857), 7 E. & B. 266; 26 L.J.Q.B. 137; 28 L.T. 284; 5 W.R. 466; 3 Jur.N.S. 213; affirmed sub nom. Dale v. Humphrey (1858), E.B. & E. 1004; 6 W.R. 854; 120 E.R. 783; sub nom. Humphrey v. Dale and Morgan, 27 L.J.Q.B. 390; 31 L.T.O.S. 328; 5 Jur.N.S. 191, Ex. Ch.; 1 Digest 736, 2779.

Appeal by the buyers under a contract for the sale and purchase of soya beans from an order made by the Divisional Court on a consultative Case stated by arbitrators.

The Case raised questions arising under a contract, dated May 30, 1912, by which the Produce Brokers Co., Ltd. agreed to sell and the Olympia Oil and Cake Co., Ltd., agreed to buy 6,000 (10 per cent. more or less) tons of 2,240 lb. each Harbin and/or Dalny soya beans to be shipped from an Oriental port or ports during December, 1912, and/or January, 1913, by steamer direct or indirect via Suez Canal or Cape to Hull at £7 18s. 9d. per ton, gross weight, ex ship, usual new bags included. By cl. 3 of the contract it was provided that:

"Particulars of shipment, with date of bill or bills of lading and approximate weight, marks (if any), and number of bags to be declared by original sellers not later than forty days from the date of last bill of lading. . . . In case of re-sales, copy of original appropriation shall be accepted by buyers and passed on without delay. Buyers shall not object to slight deviations in marks so long as the beans can be identified on arrival as the bona fide shipment intended to be delivered on the declaration. . . ."

By cl. 10 of the contract it was provided:

"This contract is to be void as regards any portion shipped that may not arrive by the ship or ships declared against this contract, and also if shipment or delivery be prevented by embargo, hostilities, prohibition of export, or blockade."

The form of contract used was the printed form used by the Incorporated Oil Seed Association for adoption by persons engaged in the oil seed trade in sales of cargoes of Manchurian soya beans with slight variations adopted by the parties. The facts appear in the judgment of SCRUTTON, L.J.

Leslie Scott, K.C., and C. R. Dunlop for the buyers.

Leek, K.C., and MacKinnon, K.C., for the sellers.

SCRUTTON, L.J.—A contract was entered into on May 30, 1912, under which the Olympia Oil and Cake Co., Ltd., bought of the Produce Brokers Co., Ltd., 6,000 tons of soya beans to be shipped at an oriental port or ports during December, 1912, and/or January, 1913, by steamer direct or indirect to Hull at a price per ton gross weight ex ship. The Produce Brokers Co., Ltd., bought a cargo complying in date and in quantity with the terms of that contract from the East Asiatic Co., and they received less than forty days from the date of the bill of lading an appropriation of that cargo by the Canterbury to the contract which they had with the East Asiatic Co. On Feb. 4, 1913, the Canterbury was lost, and on that day, knowing of the loss, the Produce Brokers Co. declared the cargo by the Canterbury under their contract to the buyers, the Olympia Oil and Cake Co. The buyers took the view that they could not declare a cargo which they knew to be lost at the time it was declared, and the matter, as provided in the contract, went to arbitration of the Incorporated Oil Seed Association, first of all to three arbitrators and then on an appeal to the board of appeal of that association. The board of appeal, being asked to do so in the course of the proceedings, stated for the opinion of the court in its consultative jurisdiction a Special Case in which they asked certain questions. The first of them was whether, regard being had to the terms of the contract of May 12, 1912, a tender or appropriation could validly be made if at the material time, and whether to the knowledge of the sellers or not, the vessel and her cargo had already become a total loss. That Special Case came before the Divisional Court of the King's Bench, composed of my brothers AVORY, ROWLATT, and SHEARMAN ([1915] 1 K.B. 233). My brothers AVORY and SHEARMAN took the view that you could not make a declaration if the goods were lost, whether you knew it or not. My brother ROWLATT declined to express an opinion as to what would happen if you made a declaration and at the time did not know the goods were lost. He agreed that if you knew they were lost it could not be a good declaration. The Special Case stated nothing about customs of trade, and the decision was on the construction of the contract. The Special Case, therefore, was sent back to the board of appeal of the association answering the first question in the negative—that is, that a declaration could not be validly made.

The next step was that the arbitrators made their award and the board of appeal made its award and in making their award they unreservedly accepted the answers

A on the construction of the contract. But they found that there was a long established and well-recognised custom the trade that buyers impliedly agree that they will accept the original shipper's appropriation if passed on without delay, provided that the original shipper's appropriation was valid and in order at the time of being made by the original shipper to his buyer, and then that their sellers should be under no obligation to make any appropriation other than that of passing

B on a copy of the original shipper's appropriation without delay, even though that appropriation at the time of being passed on might, apart from such custom and implied agreement, be invalid and not in order. Thereupon the buyers complained that the board of appeal said that they were unreservedly accepting the answers of the Divisional Court upon the construction of the contract, but that what in fact they were doing was to snap their fingers at those answers by finding a custom of

C the trade which rendered them of no use. The buyers contended that the board of appeal could not find such a custom of trade, and came to the Divisional Court for the second time to set aside the award as invalid, inasmuch as it relied on a custom which contradicted the contract.

The Divisional Court was hampered or assisted, whichever word you like to use, by two decisions of the Court of Appeal, one in Hutcheson & Co. v. Eaton & Son (1) and the other in Re North-Western Rubber Co. and Huttenbach & Co. (2) in which it had in effect been said that arbitrators acting on a contract must deal with the contract, and could not take into account or find a custom which modified the contract. The Divisional Court were, of course, bound by the two decisions of the Court of Appeal, and that court, therefore, said that it was not for the arbitrators to find this custom, and that they would follow the precedent established in

E Huttenbach & Co.'s Case (2) and themselves would hear evidence on affidavit and cross-examination to ascertain whether there was such a custom or not. Meanwhile they stated that they did not know whether or not the award was valid until they had ascertained whether there was such a custom. The case then went to the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal in a judgment, of which I must respectfully say I have never seen the like before, said, not in effect, but in terms, that

F they allowed that they were going to give a judgment which they knew was wrong and would set out the reasons why it was wrong, but they stated that they were bound by the two decisions of their own court in Huttenbach & Co.'s Case (2) and in Hutcheson & Co. v. Eaton & Sons (1) to give the judgment which they did give. They declared that it was not for the arbitrators to find the custom of the trade, and that the judgment of the Divisional Court to hear evidence to find the custom

G was correct. An appeal was brought to the House of Lords ([1916] 1 A.C. 314), and the House of Lords, being at liberty to deal with Hutcheson & Co. v. Eaton & Son (1) and with Huttenbach & Co.'s Case (2), said that they entirely adopted the reasons of the Court of Appeal, agreed that their judgment was wrong for the reasons that they had given, and, therefore, they reversed the decision of the Divisional Court—that is to say, held that they themselves would hear whether

H there was a custom. It must be taken that there was such a custom, they said, and they remitted the question whether the custom was contradictory to the contract or could be proceeded upon to the Divisional Court again.

When the matter came back to the Divisional Court for the third time ([1916] 2 K.B. 296), the points being taken before them that the custom contradicted the contract, that the contract was unreasonable, but that by reason of certain facts alleged to be in the Special Case the award was bad, the Divisional Court rejected all preconsidered considerations and said that the award must stand. Thereupon the buyers appealed to this court. The obvious comment that I make is the one that LORD LOREBURN made—that this is a very expensive cargo of soya beans, because, besides the original price, it has now had to stand the expense of six hearings in courts of law and of two hearings before the Incorporated Oil Seed Association. I respectfully agree with LORD LOREBURN's remark that to decide a dispute in this way by a combination of commercial men and courts of law is about the very worst way that you could do it. Our labour is a little helped by the fact that, whereas before the Divisional Court it was argued that the custom was unreasonable, counsel for the buyers in this court has given up that contention, and, indeed, considering that it is obvious that a large number of commercial people act upon this custom, it would be a little difficult for judges to hold that the course of procedure followed by commercial men was unreasonable.

I

The question which we have to consider is: "Is the custom alleged one which contradicts the written contract, and which, therefore, cannot be relied upon or given in evidence?" I think that it is first of all necessary to try to understand what the original contract means in order to see whether the custom contradicts it. Counsel for the buyers has not argued that the custom contradicts any particular clause of the contract so that if the two were read together they would appear to be inconsistent. But, as I understand him, he says that the custom is inconsistent with the scheme, the tenor, the frame, and the nature of the contract—that it does not fit in with the general idea of the contract. The contract is this. A cargo of soya beans is to pass from sellers to buyers at an English port, payment on delivery. But if the question be asked what cargo of beans is indicated, the reply is that it is a cargo which is to have been shipped at an oriental port during a certain period, and, therefore, some time before it is delivered. There is, accordingly, a period between the time when the cargo is shipped and when it is delivered, during which it will be at the risk of sea perils. It would consequently be expected that there should be some provision in the contract showing who is to bear the risk of sea perils involving total loss of the cargo, partial loss of the cargo, damage to part of the cargo, and loss of profits on the cargo. The mere shipment of the cargo does not appropriate it to the contract—that is to say, a man who has sold a cargo, supposing that the original seller to him had shipped a cargo at an oriental port during the named period, would not by that alone be bound to deliver it under this contract, and it would consequently be expected by anyone familiar with commercial transactions that there might be some provision by which the seller was either bound to or might during the voyage or at the time of shipment appropriate the cargo to the contract, not in the sense of passing the property in the cargo, but in the sense of binding himself to deliver that cargo against that contract. There is to be found in the contract a provision that particulars of shipment with date of bills of lading be declared by original sellers not later than forty days from the date of the last bill of lading. Where the parties to this contract, the sellers, are themselves the shippers, they would be absolutely bound under that clause to make the declaration within forty days from the date of the last bill of lading. The effect of that clause appears to be that where the sellers are not the original sellers or the shippers, if they are under any duty to declare, they must declare a cargo which fulfils the description given and that the original sellers have declared it within forty days of the date of the bill of lading. This contract does not in terms say anything about sellers declaring who are not the original sellers. But it assumes that such a declaration will be made, for it says that the buyers shall have at least three clear days after appropriation, which can only be appropriation by declaration under the contract to give the necessary orders for the port of destination at the port of call. Then it goes on to deal with the case of re-sales—that is to say, where there is a sale of something which has been already sold, and where the sellers under this contract are selling something which they have already bought. A copy of the original appropriation is to be accepted by buyers if passed on without delay. It is not necessary in this case to decide what I am about to say. But my own strong impression is that on the meaning of this contract, where sellers under the contract have received an appropriation from original sellers, this clause binds the buyers under the contract to accept that declaration, whether the cargo is lost or not. As I say, however, it is not necessary in this case to decide that. When in Arnhold, Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, Greene, Jourdain & Co., Ltd. (3) I had to consider the effect of the cases on this subject,

A I was then in a position in which I was bound, as a judge of the King's Bench Division, by the decisions of the Divisional Court in the cases which have been mentioned. I there said that the cases were binding on me on the point to be decided. I am not now in a position where I am bound by the decision of the Divisional Court, and, without deciding the point, I should like to state my strong impression that for the reasons I have given on the particular point which the court

B would have to decide as to the meaning of that particular clause in the case of re-sale, the decision of the Divisional Court was wrong ([1915] 1 K.B. 233). But, as I say, it is not necessary to decide it, because the question in the case is whether, supposing the view of the Divisional Court is right, the custom found by the arbitrators is inconsistent with it or not, or so contradictory of it that it cannot be brought forward.

C The rule whether evidence of a custom is admitted to vary a written contract is perhaps easier to state than to apply, because in a sense any admission of custom varies a written contract. The contract construed without the custom will be different from what it is if construed with the custom, and in that sense every admission of custom varies the written contract. That is pointed out by LORD CAMPBELL in a passage which has been read from his judgment in Humphrey v.

D Dale (4) where he points out (7 E. & B. at p. 275) that, if by the side of the written contract without the added incident you write the same contract with it, the two would seem to import different obligations and be different contracts. But it is quite clear that, though the meaning of the written contract is varied, you may use the custom, first of all, as a dictionary to explain what words in the contract mean—where the contract says “twelve” you may show that by custom “twelve” means

E “thirteen,” where the contract says “one hundred,” you may prove by custom that “one hundred” means the “long hundred”—one hundred and twenty, and where the contract says payment at “thirty days,” as in the case of an ordinary bill of exchange or promissory note, you may find that “thirty days” means “thirty-three days,” or that “three months” means “three months and three days.” You may use it also to define places. Thus, “alongside” without a custom may mean a

F certain area, and “alongside” with a custom may mean a much larger area. You may use custom to define method of performance. The method of performance without the custom might be limited to certain means, and the method of performance with the custom might be much wider.

In my view, you may justify the use of the custom proposed in this case in several ways, which, though they vary the meaning of the written contract, do not

G contradict it in the sense in which LORD CAMPBELL points out that it might be inadmissible. One of the ways in which I think you may use it is with reference to cl. 10, which runs thus:

“This contract is to be void as regards any portion shipped that may not arrive by the ship or ships declared against this contract. . . .”

H What is the meaning of “ship or ships declared against this contract”? May you declare a ship against this contract which is lost at the time you declare it? By custom of trade you may do so if you are not the original seller, but the seller who has bought, and you are declaring a ship which has been declared to you by the original seller. I think also you may perhaps use it as explaining a sentence in cl. 3: “copy of original appropriation shall be accepted by buyers”—that is to say,

I that it is a good appropriation though the ship and cargo that you are appropriating are lost, if you have had them declared to you by original buyers. It is a little difficult for me to express why I think the custom is not contradictory of the original contract, because I am of opinion that the original contract in all probability means the same as the custom. But, taking the view of the first Divisional Court ([1915] 1 K.B. 233), that without the custom the contract means what they say it does, in my opinion, the custom is admissible, not as contradicting the contract, as varying its meaning, it is true, but as varying its meaning by explaining what will be a good declaration. That is, I think, substantially the line taken by the Divisional Court. I am of opinion, therefore, that the result they have arrived at is right for the reasons that I have stated, and I think that there is always a satisfaction when the courts construe a business document in the way in which business men themselves construe it. For these reasons I think that this appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—I agree.

WARRINGTON, L.J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: William A. Crump & Son, for Andrew M. Jackson & Co., Hull; Waltons & Co.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re WINN. BURGESS v. WINN

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Eve, J.), November 1, 1916]

[Reported 86 L.J.Ch. 124; 115 L.T. 698; 61 Sol. Jo. 99]

Will—Beneficiary—Description—Description by relationship—Misdirection of specific legatee—Effect on construction of subsequent residuary bequest to same person—"Nephews and nieces"—Nieces by affinity, but not by blood.

The fact that a testator has in his will attached what was in fact a misdescription to a legatee does not operate to give to a subsequent residuary bequest a meaning which would include the person so misdescribed.

A testator bequeathed the proceeds of a close of land and of the residue of his real estate, after a life interest, in trust "to pay and divide the same to and among all my nephews and nieces (including the said C.B. and T.B.) in equal shares." C.B., T.B., and E.L. were in fact nieces, not of the testator, but of the testator's deceased wife, and on each of them in the earlier part of his will the testator had conferred benefits, referring to them as "my nieces."

Held: only nephews and nieces of the testator were entitled to participate in the bequest.

Smith v. Lidiard (1) (1857), 3 K. & J. 252, and Wells v. Wells (2) (1874), L.R. 18 Eq. 504, applied.

Notes. Considered: Re Davidson, National Provincial Bank, Ltd. v. Davidson, [1949] 2 All E.R. 551. Referred to: Re Ridge, Hancock v. Dutton, [1933] All E.R.Rep. 449; Re Daoust, Dobell v. Dobell, [1944] 1 All E.R. 443.

As to description of beneficiaries in a will by relationship to testator, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 296-298; and for cases see 44 DIGEST 807-826.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Smith v. Lidiard (1857), 3 K. & J. 252; 69 E.R. 1102; 44 Digest 822, 6729.
- (2) Wells v. Wells (1874), L.R. 18 Eq. 504; 43 L.J.Ch. 681; 31 L.T. 16; 22 W.R. 893; 44 Digest 823, 6736.
- (3) Re Jodrell, Jodrell v. Seale (1890), 44 Ch.D. 590; 59 L.J.Ch. 538; 63 L.T. 15; 38 W.R. 721, C.A.; affirmed sub nom. Seale-Hayne v. Jodrell, [1891] A.C. 304; 61 L.J.Ch. 70; 65 L.T. 57; 44 Digest 561, 3789.

Also referred to in argument:

Merrill v. Morton (1881), 17 Ch.D. 382; 50 L.J.Ch. 249; 43 L.T. 750; 29 W.R. 394; 44 Digest 823, 6737.

Re Cozens, Miles v. Wilson, [1903] 1 Ch. 138; 72 L.J.Ch. 39; 87 L.T. 581; 51 W.R. 220; 47 Sol. Jo. 51; 44 Digest 823, 6739.

- A Wharton v. Barker (1858), 4 K. & J. 483; 4 Jur.N.S. 553; 6 W.R. 534; 70 E.R. 202; 44 Digest 883, 7397.
- Re Parker, Parker v. Osborne*, [1897] 2 Ch. 208; 66 L.J.Ch. 509; 76 L.T. 421; 45 W.R. 536; 44 Digest 819, 6705.
- Re Helliwell, Pickles v. Helliwell*, [1916] 2 Ch. 580; 86 L.J.Ch. 45; 115 L.T. 478; 60 Sol. Jo. 619; 44 Digest 819, 6707.
- B Re Corsellis, Freeborn v. Napper, [1906] 2 Ch. 316; 75 L.J.Ch. 607; 95 L.T. 583; 54 W.R. 536; 50 Sol. Jo. 499; 44 Digest 819, 6706.

Adjourned Summons taken out by trustees to determine the construction of a will.

The testator, Thomas Winn, by his will dated Nov. 16, 1875, after appointing two persons—now represented by the applicants—trustees and executors of his will, devising his dwelling-house and garden then in his occupation to “my niece Catherine Bell (daughter of the late Robert Bell), now residing with me,” in fee simple and giving to the said Catherine Bell his furniture absolutely and making a devise of cottages to his brother John Winn, and giving and bequeathing the legacy of £19 19s. apiece “to each of my nephews and nieces following”—namely, Amelia Bales and Ann Bales (daughters of his late sister Jane Bales), John Wood, Samuel Wood, and Thomas Wood (children of his late sister Ann Wood), the first respondent Hannah Winn, the second respondent Alice Winn, Samuel Winn, Elizabeth Winn, William Edgar Winn, and John Thomas Winn (children of his brother John Winn), “and my niece Ellen Lacy” (whose correct name was, however, Eleanor Lacey)—gave and bequeathed the legacy of £600 to his trustees upon trust for investment and to pay the interest arising as to a moiety or half part thereof “to the said Catherine Bell” during her life for her separate use and the remaining moiety or half part thereof to “my niece Thomasin Bell” during her life for her separate use, and from and after the death of the said Catherine Bell the testator bequeathed £300 (being one half of the £600) to Sybil Anne Rowlands and Ada Blance Rowlands, daughters of “my nephew Edward Rowlands” (but whose correct name was Edward Samuel Rawlins), and from and after the decease of Thomasin Bell the testator bequeathed the remaining half of the £600 unto Samuel Winn, William Edgar Winn, and Thomas Winn in equal shares. The testator devised a close of land, then in the occupation of William Cuthbert, and the residue of his real estate (if any) to his trustees upon trust for sale and investment and for payment of the interest and annual income of the proceeds to Edward Rowlands during his life, and after his decease to stand possessed of the same proceeds “in trust to pay and divide the same to and among all my nephews and nieces (including the said Catherine Bell and Thomasin Bell) in equal shares.” The testator’s will contained a bequest of the residue of his personal estate (subject to the payment of the legacies thereinbefore bequeathed) to Edward Rowlands. The testator died on May 2, 1876, and his will was duly proved. The close of land in the occupation of William Cuthbert had been sold, and the proceeds were the subject of the present originating summons. There were living at the date of the testator’s death twelve of the testator’s nephews and nieces by consanguinity, and at that date there were living eight nephews and nieces of the testator’s deceased wife, who were the children of her brother and the testator’s relations by affinity. Catherine Bell, Thomasin Bell, and Eleanor Lacey (in the will called “Ellen Lacy”), who were described in the testator’s will as “my nieces,” were in fact the nieces of the testator’s deceased wife. Edward S. Rawlins, the life tenant, died on May 8, 1915. The testator left no ultimate residuary personal estate. The trustees of the testator’s will caused an originating summons to be issued to which two nieces, daughters of the testator’s brother John Winn were made respondents, together with Robert Atkinson, who claimed to be interested in the proceeds of sale of the close of land both as administrator of Eleanor Lacey, deceased, mentioned in the will as Ellen Lacy, and as personal representative of his deceased mother, Phyllis Atkinson, one of the other nieces of the testator’s deceased wife, asking whether all the nephews and nieces of the testator’s deceased wife other than Catherine Jane Beckett, in the testator's will described as Catherine Bell, and Thomasin Bell or their representatives or estates were entitled to share equally with all the nephews and nieces of the testator (as well as Catherine J. Beckett and Thomasin Bell) in the proceeds of sale of the close of land.

John M. Stone (for G. H. J. Hurst, serving with His Majesty's forces) for the trustees of the testator's will.

E. E. H. Brydges for the testator's nephews and nieces by consanguinity.

Owen Thompson for the legal personal representative of a deceased niece of the testator's wife.

EVE, J. The question is whether in this will the expression "my nephews and nieces" means the testator's own nephews and nieces or whether it is to be extended so as to include his wife's nephews and nieces.

I will endeavour, as I have been invited to do, to approach the question without any preconceived impression as to the meaning of the words "my nephews and nieces," and on the footing that they can be so used as to include, not only nephews and nieces, but persons who are not nephews and nieces. What is there in this will to show that they are used in this wider sense? Counsel on behalf of the wife's relatives argues that there is such a user of the word "niece" in the earlier parts of the will as to demonstrate clearly that the testator when he used the same word in the residuary bequest did not intend to restrict its application to his own nieces. There are three instances in the will, before the residue is dealt with, where the testator has conferred benefits upon ladies who were nieces of his wife, and in each case he has referred to the beneficiary as "my niece." Catherine Bell, Thomasin Bell, and Ellen Lacy were all nieces of the testator's wife, but the testator speaks of them, in the instances I have referred to, as "my niece." Does this fact impress the words "my nephews and nieces" in the residuary bequest with the wider significance I have mentioned?

There are, as it appears to me, two direct authorities on the very point. Each of the learned judges who decided Smith v. Tadard (1) and Wells v. Wells (2) expressed a clear and unqualified opinion that the mere fact that the testator had in the earlier part of his will attached to a legatee what was in fact a misdescription did not operate to give to the residuary bequest a meaning which would have included in that gift the person so misdescribed in the earlier part of the will. I do not regard anything that was said either in the Court of Appeal or in the House of Lords in Re Jodrell (3) as overruling these cases, and, in a case which is as nearly identical with those cases as any one case raising a point of construction can be with another, I am not going to be so presumptuous as to differ from the conclusions of PAGE WOOD, V.C., and SIR GEORGE JESSEL as therein expressed. In my opinion, treating those cases with the respect they ought to be treated with, and not overlooking the warning protests raised by LORD HALSBURY in Re Jodrell (3) against a too servile adoption of prior decisions as authorities on points of construction, I ought here to follow these two cases, and accordingly I hold that there is not sufficient in this will to satisfy me that the testator intended to include his wife's nephews and nieces in residuary bequests.

But there is another element in this bequest which would, I think, have led one to the conclusion at which I have arrived. The residuary gift is "to and among all my nephews and nieces (including the said Catherine Bell and Thomasin Bell)." These were two of the wife's nieces to each of whom a bequest had been made in the earlier part of the will as "my nieces." Counsel for the personal representatives of a deceased niece of the wife argues that the parenthetical clause was introduced to indicate that those two ladies were to take a share in the proceeds of the residue notwithstanding that they had already been benefited by the testator's earlier dispositions, but that argument provokes the observation that there is no mention of Ellen Lacy in the parenthesis, and the introduction of the parenthesis is, I think, more consistent with the suggestion that the testator appreciated that the expression

A he had used would not extend to the ladies named unless they were so named. The result is that, in my judgment, only nephews and nieces of the testator can participate in the residue.

Solicitors: Willis & Willis, for Edward Fryer & Webb, West Hartlepool; J. E. Anthony.

[Reported by W. P. PAIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re STOODLEY. HOOSON v. LOCOCK

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Warrington, L.J., and Bray, J.), January 13, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 1 Ch. 242; 85 L.J.Ch. 226; 114 L.T. 445; 60 Sol. Jo. 221]

Will—Codicil—Partial revocation of will—Gift of "residue not bequeathed by the above will"—Residue directed in will to be held in trust.

A gift of residue in a will is revoked by a different gift of residue in a codicil to the will, even though the codicil purports to deal with residue of property undisposed of by the will.

By his will a testator, after making various bequests, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate not thereby otherwise disposed of upon trust for conversion and to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts and the legacies and to hold the residue of the moneys and the income thereof in trust as to one-third thereof for a certain society and as to the remaining two-thirds for a named person. By a codicil the testator, after referring to his will, provided as follows: "The residue of my estate not bequeathed by the above will I give and bequeath to M. A. L. absolutely, and I appoint her sole executrix of this codicil."

Held: the codicil took effect on the general residuary estate of the testator, revoking the gift by the will of the residuary estate and operating as a gift thereof to M. A. L. absolutely.

Earl of Hardwicke v. Douglas (1) (1840), 7 Cl. & Fin. 795, applied.

Notes. As to partial revocation of a will by a later will or codicil, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 79, 80, para. 111, for irreconcilable gifts, see ibid. 218, 219, para. 278; and for cases see 44 DIGEST 324-330.

Case referred to:

(1) Douglas v. Leake (1835), 5 L.J.Ch. 25; reversed sub nom. Earl of Hardwicke v. Douglas (1840), 7 Cl. & Fin. 795; West, 555; 9 E.R. 597, H.L.; 44 Digest 338, 1674.

Also referred to in argument:

Re Barrance, Barrance v. Ellis, [1910] 2 Ch. 419; 79 L.J.Ch. 544; 103 L.T. 104; 54 Sol. Jo. 651; 44 Digest 383, 2174.

Re Joseph Isaac, Harrison v. Isaac, [1905] 1 Ch. 427; 74 L.J.Ch. 277; 92 L.T. 227; 44 Digest 745, 6035.

Davis v. Bennett (1861), 30 Beav. 226; 54 E.R. 875; on appeal: (1862), 4 De G.F. & J. 327; 44 Digest 609, 4358.

Brocklebank v. Johnson (1855), 20 Beav. 205; 24 L.J.Ch. 505; 25 L.T.O.S. 56; 1 Jur.N.S. 318; 3 W.R. 341; 52 E.R. 581; 44 Digest 608, 4349.

Shipperdson v. Tower (1842), 1 Y. & C.Ch. Cas. 441; 6 Jur. 658; 62 E.R. 961; 44 Digest 607, 4341.

Kermode v. Macdonald (1866), L.R. 1 Eq. 457; 35 L.J.Ch. 358; affirmed (1868) 3 Ch. App. 584; 37 L.J.Ch. 879; 19 L.T. 179; 17 W.R. 4, L.C.; 44 Digest 340, 1693.

Doe d. Hearle v. Hicks (1832), 8 Bing. 475; 6 Bli.N.S. 37; 1 Cl. & Fin. 20; 1 Moo. & S. 759; 131 E.R. 476, H.L.; 44 Digest 337, 1671.

Lee v. Delane (1850), 4 De G. & Sm. 1; 16 L.T.O.S. 102; 14 Jur. 861; 64 E.R. 707; 44 Digest 333, 1632.

Appeal from a decision of EVE, J., on an originating summons for the construction of a will.

The testator, Thomasin Albert Stoodley, clerk in holy orders, by his will, dated Dec. 21, 1912, appointed the plaintiffs executors and trustees, and, after giving sundry specific and pecuniary legacies and giving and devising real estate and a share in property in his marriage settlement to the vicar of Ilminster for charitable purposes, the will proceeded as follows:

"I devise and bequeath all my real and personal estate not hereby otherwise disposed of unto my trustees upon trust that they shall sell, call in, and collect the same and shall out of the moneys to arise thereby and all other moneys forming part of my estate pay my funeral and testamentary expenses and debts and the legacies other than specific bequeathed by this my will or any codicil hereto and shall hold the residue of the said moneys and the income thereof in trust as to one equal third part thereof for the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge and as to the two remaining equal third parts for the vicar for the time being of Ilminster aforesaid to be applied by him as to part thereof towards providing an adequate vestry for the parish church and as to the remainder towards extending the nave of the said church one bay westwards."

A codicil to the testator's will, dated Feb. 17, 1915, but signed on Feb. 19, 1915, was as follows:

"This is a codicil to the will of me Thomasin Albert Stoodley. . . . The residue of my estate not bequeathed by the above will I give and bequeath to Mabel Abbie Locock . . . absolutely, and I appoint her sole executrix of this codicil."

The testator died on Feb. 27, 1915. The plaintiffs took out an originating summons to which M. A. Locock, the trustees of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and the Rev. Prebendary James Street, the vicar for the time being of Ilminster, were made defendants, asking for the decision of the questions whether the gift to M. A. Locock by the codicil revoked in whole or in part the residuary gift contained in the will of the testator to the society and vicar of Ilminster, or, alternatively, what portion of the testator's estate passed to the defendant M. A. Locock under the codicil. The summons was adjourned into court and on July 7, 1915, EVE, J., held that the words in the codicil were not so clear and the meaning so unambiguous as to lead to the conclusion that the testator contemplated the revocation of the residuary gifts in his will, and that the intention as expressed in the codicil was to give Miss Locock such portion, if any, of the residue as might ultimately turn out not to have been effectually disposed of by the will and no more. From that decision the defendant M. A. Locock now appealed.

Upjohn, K.C. (with him Maugham, K.C., and Vaisey), for the defendant M. A. Locock.

Clayton, K.C. (with him A. J. Spencer, for F. H. L. Errington, serving with His Majesty's forces) for the defendant, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

Hewitt, K.C. (with him F. E. Farrer), for the defendant vicar of Ilminster.

Whinney for the executors of the will.

A LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—This is an appeal from the decision of EVE, J., on the construction of a codicil which has one merit, that of brevity, and that is the only merit in it which I have been able to discover.

The testator was a clergyman of the Church of England and was apparently possessed of considerable property. He first of all disposed by his will of a great number of chattels, furniture, and so on, gave certain pecuniary legacies, and there were also specific devises. Then we come to the gift of the residue, which was in these words [HIS LORDSHIP read the residuary gift, which is printed ante p. 762, and continued:] That is the will which the testator made on Dec. 21, 1912. Then he made a codicil on Feb. 17, 1915, and this is the whole of the language of it:

C “This is a codicil to the will of me Thomasin Albert Stoodley, of No. 73, Wimborne Road, Bournemouth, the said will having been made in December, 1912, and being in the possession of J. H. Pitchforth, solicitor, of No. 9, Bush Lane, Cannon Street, E.C. The residue of my estate not bequeathed by the above will I give and bequeath to Mabel Abbie Locock, of No. 39, Carlton Road, Putney, S.W., absolutely, and I appoint her sole executrix of this codicil.”

D The point which has arisen on this appeal is whether the effect of the codicil is to deprive the charities of the interest in the residuary estate; that is to say, to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, one-third, and to the vicar, two-thirds; or whether Miss Locock fails to take anything under the codicil. Apart from authority, this is a case which would have given me considerable doubt, but in a case of this kind the point has been many years ago elaborately argued—in fact, twice argued—in the House of Lords. When a decision has been given laying down a certain principle, we ought to follow it. The principle which I think is laid down in the case to which I shall presently refer is that if you find a residue given by will, and then there is a codicil, called a codicil, giving that residue to a different person or in a different mode, it is really a revocation of the gift of the residue by the will. That in the present case this was a testamentary instrument and that the testator had a testamentary intention is quite clear. He appointed Miss Locock “sole executrix of this codicil,” and we were told that she and the two executors named in the will jointly proved the will.

F Two views on this question were taken in Earl of Hardwicke v. Douglas (1). LORD COTTENHAM, when he was Master of the Rolls, held in that case that the legatee under the codicil took nothing; and that the codicil had no effect, but when the case came before the House of Lords the noble Lords present were LORD G COTTENHAM himself, by whom the original decision was given, and LORD BROUGHAM and LORD LYNTHURST. LORD BROUGHAM and LORD LYNTHURST reversed the decision of LORD COTTENHAM on the ground that the second codicil was a revocation of the gift of the residue, and that the persons entitled to the residue were the original legatee and another person taking in moieties according to the terms of the codicil. H It has been suggested that the decision is not on any question of principle, but on the ground that the testator there had, and it was admitted that he had, the will before him at the date when the codicil was made. I am bound to say that it is impossible for us to vary the construction of the codicil in the present case on the ground that in one case the will that is referred to in the codicil was physically before the testator, and in the other case it was not physically before him, although I he knew that there was a will, and he knew that there had been a will which contained those bequests and devises. Then, again, it is said that there was a clearer indication in that case that the terms of the gift of the residue in the will were present to the testator’s mind. I decline to assume that the testator had no idea, when he made his codicil, what were the residuary gifts in his will. It is rather an elaborate one—one-third of the residuary estate to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and the other two-thirds to the vicar for the time being of Ilminster. I do not think that we ought to treat Earl of Hardwicke v. Douglas (1) otherwise than as a guide to direct us in the present case.

How has that decision of the House of Lords been dealt with? Has it ever been questioned or interlarded with or doubted by text-writers or by persons of authority? In dealing with a decision of the House of Lords at that time one looks, and is bound to look, at what has been laid down by LORD ST. LEONARDS in SUGDEN'S LAW OF PROPERTY at pp. 217 and 218. He discusses that case and says:

"But where an intention can be collected to make a new disposition by a codicil giving a residue, it will operate against a disposition of the residue by the will, although there is no express revocation, and the gift in the codicil is of the residue not thereinbefore or by the will disposed of. This was decided in the case of Earl of Hardwicke v. Douglas (1)."

He then goes through all the facts of that case and refers to LORD COTTENHAM'S decision as Master of the Rolls. He also refers to the difference of opinion in the House of Lords and says that the decision of LORD BROUGHAM and LORD LYNDHURST was the best construction, and was one that manifestly carried out the intention of the testator. Has the decision of the House of Lords ever been doubted by text-writers? JARMAN ON WILLS (6th Edn.), p. 173, says this:

"So if the residue of personal estate be given by will to A., and by codicil to B., the former gift is revoked. And this was so held in Earl of Hardwicke v. Douglas (1) though the gift by codicil was of personal estate 'not hereinbefore or by my will or any other codicil disposed of.' The words were construed to mean 'not hereinbefore or by my will disposed of by way of particular legacies,' thus leaving something for the gift to operate upon; literally construed they left nothing."

I therefore think that unless we can find some special circumstances, which I cannot find in this case, we must take the view that EVE, J.'s decision cannot be upheld.

The point which I have felt some doubt about is this. There was a time, not many years ago, when a gift of residue like this to a charity was extremely likely to fail so far as the impure personal estate was concerned, and, if that had been so, then it might have been held that the original gift in the will remained and that the codicil operated only upon the residue so far as it consisted of impure personal estate. But that is not the law now, and, therefore, is not a matter that creates a difficulty. I do not think that we can consider this will in any different way on the assumption that the testator, who was not a lawyer, but was a clergyman, was thinking of the old law. He was, of course, thinking of nothing of the kind, and we must construe his language as we find it. Then it was said that this will might fail so far as the residue was concerned, because, even assuming that the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge could not take, the vicar of the parish might disclaim. No authority has been cited for that proposition, and it does not require any discussion. It is elementary law that a gift to a charity never fails for the want of a trustee, because the court would see that a proper trustee was appointed, and would take care, if necessary, that it should be done under the direction of the Attorney-General. Further, it was said that suppose with regard to the gift to the vicar, which involves a large alteration and elongation of the nave of the church, there was a difficulty because a faculty would not be granted. I am not inclined to suppose such a thing, and it is not necessary to discuss or consider it. The gift in the will, as it seems to me, and the gift in the codicil can stand only in this sense, that the will gave the whole residue, after the specific and pecuniary legacies and after the payment of debts, to charities, and I find, according to the language of the codicil, the testator says this:

"The residue of my estate not bequeathed by the above will I give and bequeath to Mabel Abbie Locock, of No. 39, Carlton Road, Putney, S.W., absolutely."

That is a gift which must prevail, and revokes the gift of the residue which was disposed of to the charities in the manner that I have described. We must, therefore,

A reverse the decision of EVE, J., and make a declaration accordingly. The appeal will be allowed, and the costs of the appeal ought to come out of the estate as between party and party, except as to the trustees, who will have their costs as between solicitor and client.

B WARRINGTON, L.J.—The testator in this case made a codicil on Feb. 17, 1915, in these terms:

“The residue of my estate not bequeathed by the above will I give and bequeath to Mabel Abbie Loeck, of No. 39, Carlton Road, Putney, S.W., absolutely, and I appoint her sole executrix of this codicil.”

C Reading the codicil by itself, I have not the remotest doubt that what the testator meant to bequeath to Miss Loeck was the residue of his estate in the ordinary sense. The difficulty is caused when one comes to look at the will, because it is said that when one looks at the will one finds that there is no residue not bequeathed by the will, and, therefore, there is nothing for the codicil to operate upon. I look at the will and I find there that the testator appointed certain persons as executors, and then in the words “I bequeath” gave several specific and pecuniary legacies; and in the words “I give and devise” he made certain specific devises of real estate. He then inserted a general devise and bequest of his real and personal estate in these terms [HIS LORDSHIP read the bequest, which is printed ante p. 762, and continued:] The contention on the part of the two charities which would benefit by the will is that in the events that have happened—and one may say something more than that, but, at all events, in the events that have happened—the codicil is ineffective, because the whole of the testator’s property is bequeathed by the testator’s will, and therefore there is nothing left on which the codicil can operate. The result of that would be to impute to the testator that he sat down and wrote his codicil giving the residue of his estate to Miss Loeck knowing at the same time that it could have no effect. It seems to me too absurd to suppose that the testator was thinking when he made this codicil that possibly there might be some difficulty in applying some of the moneys included in the residue to the improvement in the fabric of the church, or still less to impute to him forgetfulness of the fact that he had made a will—which, by the way, he refers to specially by date in the codicil—or that he could have forgotten that he had made the will and that will contained a gift of residue. I cannot impute such a thing to the testator.

G Then one has to see whether, without imputing such an absurd intention to the testator, one can give a reasonable construction to the codicil which will give effect to it, and I think one can. There is no difficulty at all in referring the word “bequeathed” contained in the codicil to gifts other than those of the residue itself with which the codicil is dealing. The codicil deals with the residue so far as not bequeathed by the will. It is absurd to suppose that, having bequeathed the residue by the will, he intended that the words “not hereinbefore bequeathed” should extend to the residue itself. One may quite well so construe the codicil as to give to the word “bequeathed” a meaning that would exclude the gift of the residue. I think, therefore, that, independently of authority, I should have come to the conclusion on the true construction of the codicil that it did take effect upon the general residuary estate of the testator. But when one comes to look at the authority which has been cited to us, Earl of Hardwicke v. Douglas (1), any possible difficulty one might have had on the construction of the words themselves is entirely removed. That was, in my view, an extremely strong case. The testator there having made by his will an effectual gift of residue, by his codicil used these words: “All the rest and residue of my property, not hereinbefore (or by my will or any other codicil) disposed of, I give and bequeath,” in a manner other than that in which he had given the residue by the will. That is a case, therefore, in which it would have been difficult to have given to the codicil such a construction as I have suggested can be given to it in this case, because he used the words there "disposed of" and not "bequeathed." I think, therefore, both on the words of the will and the codicil themselves and on the authority of Earl Hardwicke v. Douglas (1), the judgment of the learned judge in the court below was wrong and ought to be reversed.

BRAY, J.—I agree. I do not think that the present case can really be distinguished from Earl of Hardwicke v. Douglas (1). The opposing views in that case were these: First, that there was a manifest intention of the testator and on the other side were the words which, perhaps, literally construed, would not have given effect to the intention, and what the learned judges had to decide was which view should prevail. I think that that appears quite plainly from the speech of LORD BROUGHAM in the House of Lords, where, after referring to the nature of the case and the particular words used, he says (7 Cl. & Fin. at p. 811)—and his speech had been settled between him and LORD LYNTHURST—

"The one construction makes the testator give 'all the residue of his property over the particular legacies given in the will and codicils,' which is a sensible construction, and leaves something for the words to act upon. The other construction makes him give all the residue over the legacies and over all the residue; that is, all that remains after the legacies and after what remains over the legacies; which is not a sensible construction, and leaves nothing whatever."

On the other hand, the Lord Chancellor differed and said this (ibid. at p. 813):

"As the opinion which I have formed differs from that at which they have arrived in their superior judgment, I think it right, as it involves a question of principles, to state to your Lordships the ground on which I originally formed an opinion in favour of the respondent."

Then, after stating he could not doubt what the real intention was, he says (ibid. at p. 814):

"The difficulty is, how far we are justified in coming to a conclusion which shall give effect to that probable intention; and I must say I find no words in this codicil which can lead to such a conclusion. It is more from the situation of the parties and the probability of the case that I infer that that probably was the intention of the testator than from anything I find in the testamentary papers; but if the words do not bear it, it is contrary to all rule to speculate upon the intention; for the ground of conclusion ought not to be found in anything but the expressions which are used."

If that opinion had been adopted, our decision in this case must have been in favour of the charities; but the learned Lords differed from him on what seems to me to be a question of principle.

Looking at it in the same way in this case, one cannot doubt that it was the intention of the testator by this codicil to give a substantial benefit to this lady. The words are:

"The residue of my estate not bequeathed by the above will I give and bequeath to Mabel Abbie Loeck, of No. 39, Carlton Road, Putney, S.W., absolutely, and I appoint her sole executrix of this codicil."

That is the whole of the codicil. The codicil was not brought into existence for any other purpose except to make this lady a substantial gift, and to say that we are to construe it as if the intention of the testator was to give her nothing, which is the barest possibility, certainly does not commend itself to me and is not an intention which I can infer. On those grounds I think the appeal should succeed.

[Their Lordships made a declaration that the gift contained in the codicil revoked the residuary gift contained in the will and operated as a gift to the defendant M. A. Loeck of the residuary moneys and income by the will directed

A to be held in trust for the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge and the vicar for the time being of Ilminster.]

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Rider, Heaton, Meredith & Mills, for Osborne, Ward, Vassall & Co., Bristol; Bridges, Sautell & Co.; Wansey, Stammers & Co., for E. Lee Michell, Wellington, Somerset; J. H. Pitchforth.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re FORREST. BUBB AND NEWCOMB AND OTHERS

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Sargant, J.), July 7, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 386; 85 L.J.Ch. 784; 115 L.T. 476; 32 T.L.R. 656; 60 Sol. Jo. 655]

Will—Gift to servants—"Servants"—Legacy to—Usual meaning—Persons who minister to wants or comfort—Farm labourers not included.

Where a testator who had a house, where domestic servants were employed, and 700 acres of land, on which farm hands were employed, bequeathed to each of his servants who should have been in his service for three years prior to his decease and should be still in his service one year's wages free of legacy duty,

Held: the gift did not include farm servants engaged in the usual way for twelve months, but merely included servants who ministered in some way to the testator's personal comfort or his wants.

Semble: The word "servants" simpliciter is not necessarily confined to persons employed in the testator's house, but applies to all persons who minister to his wants or personal comfort.

Booth v. Dean (1) (1833), 1 My. & K. 560, and Thrupp v. Collett (No. 2) (2) (1858), 26 Beav. 147, applied.

Notes. Not followed: Re Drake, Drake v. Green, [1921] All E.R.Rep. 157.

Referred to: Re Countess of Rosse, Parsons v. Earl of Rosse (1923), 93 L.J.Ch. 8.

As to gifts by will to "servants," see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 323-325, paras. 373, 374; and for cases see 44 DIGEST 899-903.

Cases referred to:

(1) Booth v. Dean (1833), 1 My. & K. 560; 2 L.J.Ch. 162; 39 E.R. 793; 44 Digest 903, 7630.

(2) Thrupp v. Collett (No. 2) (1858), 26 Beav. 147; 5 Jur.N.S. 111; 53 E.R. 853; 44 Digest 902, 7620.

(3) Re Ravensworth, Ravensworth v. Tindale, [1905] 2 Ch. 1; 74 L.J.Ch. 353; 92 L.T. 490; 21 T.L.R. 357, C.A.; 44 Digest 903, 7633.

(4) Re Earl of Sheffield, Ryde v. Bristow, [1911] 2 Ch. 267; 80 L.J.Ch. 521; 105 L.T. 236, C.A.; 44 Digest 903, 7634.

Also referred to in argument:

Bulling v. Ellice (1845), 9 Jur. 936; sub nom. Belling v. Ellise, 5 L.T.O.S. 475; 44 Digest 901, 7613.

Armstrong v. Clavering (1859), 27 Beav. 226; 54 E.R. 88; 44 Digest 902, 7615.

Blackwell v. Pennant (1852), 9 Hare, 551; 22 L.J.Ch. 155; 19 L.T.O.S. 336; 16 Jur. 420; 68 E.R. 631; 44 Digest 901, 7612.

R. v. Inhabitants of Worfield (1794), 5 Term Rep. 506; 101 E.R. 285; 34 Digest 52, 269.

Nowlan v. Ablett (1835), 2 Cr.M. & R. 54; 1 Gale, 72; 5 Tyr. 709; 4 L.J.Ex. 155; 150 E.R. 23; 34 Digest 36, 131.

Originating Summons by the testator's executor asking whether seven outdoor employees took a year's wages under the following legacy given by the will of the testator, George F. Forrest, who died on Dec. 28, 1914, and whose will was dated Apr. 7, 1913:

"I give and bequeath to each of my servants who shall have been in my service for three years prior to my decease and shall be still in my service one year's wages free of legacy duty."

The testator lived at the Bungalow, Andoversford, Gloucester. His brother, Major C. E. Forrest, D.S.O., was his residuary legatee, but was killed in action a year after the testator's death. At the time of his death the testator owned an estate of about 700 acres at Pegglesworth in Gloucestershire and had a farm there. He had four domestic servants in his house, as to whom no question was raised, but he also employed six labourers and an under-keeper on his estate, who had been in his employment for more than three years at the time of his death. Each of these labourers was engaged for the usual farm labourers' service of twelve months, and was paid weekly from 13s. to 16s. a week and allowed the use of a cottage rent free, the value of the cottage being about 1s. 6d. a week.

C. F. Turner for the plaintiff, W. N. Bubbs, sole executor of the will of the testator.

Tyldesley Jones, for Major Forrest's representatives, who were his widow and Reginald J. Winterbotham, admitted that the under-keeper was entitled under the legacy, and also declined to raise any objection to the claims of the six labourers on the ground that their wages were paid weekly, and said he would argue that farm servants did not take under a gift to "servants."

Herbert J. H. Mackay for the seven employees.

SARGANT, J.—The question in this case is who are entitled under a bequest by the testator "to each of my servants who shall have been in my service for three years prior to my decease and shall be still in my service one year's wages free of legacy duty." He had a small estate in Gloucestershire of some 600 or 700 acres, and he had an ordinary establishment there, comprising three or four indoor servants, a stud groom, and an under-keeper. He himself farmed almost the whole of his property, if not the whole of it, and in his farming he employed six labourers at ordinary labourers' wages. It is conceded that they were, as is customary in that part of the country, hired yearly and at a wage determined by the year, although in fact they were paid by the week. Therefore no such point arises here as arose in cases like Re Ravensworth (3) and Re Earl of Sheffield (4). These labourers are not excluded merely because they were not paid by the year. As regards the under-keeper, Mr. Tyldesley Jones has not contested that he was a "servant" within the meaning of the words I have read, but the question arises whether the six labourers were servants in the service of the testator within the meaning of those words.

I confess that when I first read the will I had a clear view that, although these six persons were servants in some sense they were not servants in the service of the testator within the true meaning of the words used in the will, and that the testator was referring to persons who ministered in some way to his personal comfort or his wants—persons of the class of domestic servants, though not necessarily only those employed in the house. After having heard all the cases read I am a good deal more puzzled than I was at first. But in the result I adhere to my first impression, and I observe that it is the view taken by Sir JOHN LEACH, M.R., in Booth v. Dean (1). I think also that it is the view which was very clearly indicated by Sir JOHN ROMILLY, M.R., in Thrupp v. Collett (No. 2) (2). It is true that in such cases as Re Ravensworth (3) and Re Earl of Sheffield (4)—certainly in the latter case—there were some claimants who were in the same

- A position, or very nearly the same position, as the six claimants in this case, and that they were not excluded on the ground that they were in that position; but the point was never argued; they were excluded for other reasons, and it may well be that the counsel who argued against their inclusion chose to base his argument merely upon those reasons. I cannot find in the cases anything which amounts to a decision or even to an indication of opinion that persons in the position of farm labourers would come within the prima facie meaning of the word "servants" in such a will as this. I think that in this case the narrower meaning of the word "servants" is that in which the term has been used by the testator, and that these six persons do not take under the bequest.
- B

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co., for Bush & Co., Cheltenham; Jackson, Elwell & Cowan, for Jessop & Son, Cheltenham; Waterhouse & Co., for Winterbotham.

- C Gurney & Co., Cheltenham.

[Reported by L. MORGAN MAY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

D

Re DOLOSWELLA RUBBER AND TEA ESTATES, LTD., AND REDUCED

- E [CHANCERY DIVISION (Neville, J.), November 28, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 Ch. 218; 86 L.J.Ch. 223; 115 L.T. 858]

Company—Capital—Reduction—Subdivision of partly paid shares—Proportion of amounts paid and unpaid altered by subdivision—Reduction of liability on unpaid shares—Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), s. 41 (1) (d); s. 46 (1) (a).

F

A company proposed to subdivide its £500 shares, upon which £185 had been paid up, into five shares of £100, of which two were to be surrendered to the company, and the remaining three were to be treated as paid up to the extent of £61 13s. 4d. each.

G

Held: though s. 41 (1) (d) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 [now s. 61 (1) of the Companies Act, 1948], precluded a subdivision of partly paid shares by which the proportions of paid and unpaid capital on the new shares were altered, yet the court, if it approved of the scheme, might sanction it under the provisions of s. 46 (1) (a) [now s. 66 (1) (a) of the 1948 Act] which permitted a company to reduce the liability on its shares in respect of capital not paid up.

H

Notes. Re Walker Steam Travel Fishing Co., Ltd., Petitioners, 1908 S.C. 123, in which the Scottish court refused to confirm a reduction similar to that sanctioned in the present case, was not cited to NEVILLE, J. The Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, has been repealed, but similar provisions as to reduction of capital are now made by the Companies Act, 1948, s. 66.

I

As to confirmation of reduction of capital by the court, see 6 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 156-160, paras. 327-336; and for cases see 9 DIGEST 149-175. For the Companies Act, 1948, see 3 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 452.

Case referred to in argument:

Re Vine and General Rubber Trust, Ltd. (1913), 108 L.T. 709; 57 Sol. Jo. 610; 9 Digest (Repl.) 176, 1134.

Petition to sanction scheme for reduction of capital.

The Doloswella Rubber and Tea Estates, Ltd., was registered as a company on Feb. 20, 1913, the capital being £350,000, divided into 700 shares of £500 each.

There was no other class of shares, and no issue of debentures, and at the date of the petition the only creditors of the company were for wages and small current expenses. The object of the company was to plant and develop about 8,000 acres of rubber and tea-bearing lands in Ceylon. Owing to the war and the prevailing scarcity of labour, the directors were unable to plant more than about 4,000, and the capital at their disposal was, therefore, too large. The position in August, 1915, was that 640 shares had been issued, on which £185 per share had been called up and paid, and on Aug. 15, 1915, the directors issued a circular containing a proposal to reduce the capital intended to be issued for the present to £192,000. The scheme provided that the £500 shares should be subdivided into shares of £100 and each holder of a £500 share would receive five £100 shares. Of those he was to surrender two to the company absolutely, to be issued again if the future needs of the company required, and to retain the other three. The £185 paid on the original share was to be treated as a payment of £61 13s. 4d. on each of the three shares retained, leaving upon each an uncalled amount of £38 6s. 8d. The directors' summary of the effect of the scheme was as follows:

| | |
|---|----------------|
| 3,200 shares of £100 each to be created against the existing 640 shares of £500 each, of which— | |
| 1,920 shares, £61 13s. 4d. paid up, to be issued to shareholders | £118,400 |
| £38 6s. 8d. uncalled liability on each share | 73,600 |
| 1,280 shares uncalled, to be surrendered to the company | 128,000 |
| 300 shares unissued, against the existing 60 shares of £500 | 30,000 |
| <hr/> 3,500 shares | <hr/> £350,000 |

In respect of the 1,280 shares for possible future issue it was provided that upon surrender to the company all personal liability of the present holders was to be absolutely extinguished. Article 58 of the company's articles of association gave the company power from time to time by special resolution to reduce the capital either by paying off or by cancelling capital which had been lost or was unrepresented by available assets, or to reduce outstanding liability on the shares, or otherwise, as might seem expedient. It might also, by the same article, subdivide its shares. By art. 27 it was provided that the directors might accept from any member a surrender of all or any part of his shares upon such terms and conditions as might be agreed upon. A special resolution approving the proposals was passed by a large majority at a meeting held on Aug. 25, 1915, and was confirmed by the shareholders at a subsequent meeting held on Sept. 22. The court was now asked to sanction the scheme.

Clayton, K.C., and Sir M. D. Warmington for the company.—The only difficulty here is under s. 41 (1) (d) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 [now Companies Act, 1948 s. 61 (1)] which provides:

"A company limited by shares, if so authorised by its articles, may alter the condition of its memorandum as follows (that is to say) it may . . . (d) Subdivide its shares, or any of them, into shares of smaller amount than is fixed by the memorandum, so, however, that in the subdivision the proportion between the amount paid and the amount, if any, unpaid on each reduced share shall be the same as it was in the case of the share from which the reduced share is derived."

but the desired reduction can be effected by s. 46 (1) (a) [now Companies Act, 1948, s. 66 (1)], which provides:

"Subject to confirmation by the court, a company limited by shares, if so authorised by its articles, may by special resolution reduce its share capital in any way, and in particular (without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power) may . . . (a) Extinguish or reduce the liability on any of its shares in respect of share capital not paid up."

A NEVILLE, J.—It seems to me, and I do not know if I have overlooked any difficulty, that you can bring this petition under s. 46 (1) (a) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. Having surrendered your two £100 shares to the company, and having got them out of the way, what you are doing is extinguishing a liability. If it were necessary to do it by agreement between classes of shareholders, you might call in s. 120 [which made provisions similar to those of s. 206 of the 1948 Act], which would, subject to the confirmation of the court, permit members of each class to deal with their shares. Section 120 would, however, involve the summoning of another meeting, and s. 46 (1) (a) seems to me to cover it. I will therefore make the order, and not consider that I have called in aid s. 120.

Solicitors: Stephenson, Harwood & Co.

C [Reported by G. HAYES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

D Re MUIRHEAD. MUIRHEAD v. HILL

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Eve, J.), May 3, 12, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 181; 85 L.J.Ch. 598; 115 L.T. 65]

E Apportionment—Accrual of periodical payments—Payment by instalments—Distribution when due in accordance with Apportionment Act as applied on occurrence of event bringing it into operation—Will—Tenant for life and remainderman—Debentures and shares—Interest and dividends earned before, but declared after, death of life tenant—Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict., c. 35), ss. 2, 5.

F Whenever there are periodical payments accruing when an event calling for apportionment under the Apportionment Act, 1870, occurs, the Act must be applied, and when subsequently the accruing payments become due and payable they must be distributed in accordance with the Act as applied on the occurrence of the event which brought it into operation. The Act does not cease to apply merely because the accruing payments ultimately become due and payable by instalments, some of which go entirely to one destination.

G The testator, who died on Dec. 18, 1913, and was at that date registered as holder of five debentures and 1,126 shares of a limited company, by his will gave his converted residuary estate upon trust for payment of the dividends and income to his wife for life and after her decease for his nephews and nieces. H The beneficial ownership of the shares and debentures was claimed by the testator's brother, A. M., and actions in which that question had been raised were compromised by an agreement, dated May 20, 1915, by which it was agreed that the debentures and shares should be transferred to A. M. at a percentage of their face value, and that he should be entitled to all interest and dividends become due or declared on the same since the testator's death. I On July 10, 1915, £7,630 was accordingly paid to the testator's executors, who had transferred the shares and debentures to A. M. The testator's widow died on July 24, 1915. Half-yearly interest became due on the debentures in March and September, 1914 and 1915, and dividends on the shares in July and September, 1914, and September, 1915. Dividends on railway companies' stock and shares, forming part of the testator's residuary estate, were declared, after the date of the death of the testator's widow, in respect of the half-year ending on June 30, 1915, and paid to the plaintiff, one of the testator's executors. By consent the value of the debentures and shares was taken at par.

Held: at the death of the tenant for life on July 24, 1915, there were dividends accrued and accruing de die in diem on the investments from Dec. 31, 1914.

and the Act made the whole of those dividends apportionable as on July 24, the estate of the tenant for life taking the proportion that had accrued down to that date, the remainderman taking the proportion accruing subsequent to that date; the apportionment was not to be disregarded and the Act to be treated as no longer applicable because the fund which was the subject-matter of the apportionment was afterwards made payable in instalments, the earliest of which went entirely to the estate of the tenant for life in part satisfaction of her apportioned part of the fund.

Re Oppenheimer, Oppenheimer v. Boulman (1), [1907] 1 Ch. 399, applied.

Per Curiam: The Apportionment Act, 1870, has no application to payments which accrue due before the happening of the event calling for apportionment: Ellis v. Rowbotham (2), [1900] 1 Q.B. 473, explained.

Notes. Considered: Re Henderson, Public Trustee v. Reddie, [1940] 1 All E.R. 623. Applied: Re Winder's Will Trusts, Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. Fausset, [1951] 2 All E.R. 362.

As to apportionment of income received by a personal representative, see 16 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 282, 283; and for cases see 20 DIGEST 280-284. For the Apportionment Act, 1870, see 13 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 867.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Oppenheimer, Oppenheimer v. Boulman, [1907] 1 Ch. 399; 76 L.J.Ch. 287; 96 L.T. 631; 14 Mans. 139; 20 Digest 282, 414.
- (2) Ellis v. Rowbotham, [1900] 1 Q.B. 740; 69 L.J.Q.B. 379; 82 L.T. 191; 48 W.R. 423; 16 T.L.R. 258; 31 Digest (Repl.) 286, 4208.

Also referred to in argument:

Bates v. Mackinley (1862), 31 Beav. 280; 31 L.J.Ch. 389; 6 L.T. 208; 8 Jur.N.S. 299; 10 W.R. 241; 54 E.R. 1146; 40 Digest (Repl.) 719, 2118.

Wright v. Tuckett (1860), 1 John. & H. 266; 70 E.R. 747; 40 Digest (Repl.) 716, 2092.

Re Maxwell's Trusts (1863), 1 Hem. & M. 610; 1 New Rep. 549; 32 L.J.Ch. 333; 9 L.T. 224; 9 Jur.N.S. 350; 11 W.R. 480; 71 E.R. 267; 20 Digest 280, 398.

Re Earl of Chesterfield's Trusts (1883), 24 Ch.D. 643; 52 L.J.Ch. 958; 49 L.T. 261; 32 W.R. 361; 20 Digest 368, 1065.

Re Godden, Teague v. Fox, [1893] 1 Ch. 292; 62 L.J.Ch. 469; 68 L.T. 116; 41 W.R. 282; 3 R. 67; 40 Digest (Repl.) 763, 2477.

Adjourned Summons.

The testator, Henry James Muirhead, by his will, dated Oct. 24, 1912, appointed his wife, Gertrude Julia Muirhead, and his brothers, Alexander Muirhead and Francis Lauder Muirhead (the plaintiff), executors and trustees thereof. After making specific devises and specific and pecuniary bequests, the testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to his trustees upon trust for sale and conversion as they should think fit. The testator declared that his trustees should pay his debts, legacies, annuities, and duties and stand possessed of his residuary estate in trust to invest and pay the dividends, interest, and income of the investments unto the testator's wife during her life if she should so long remain his widow. From and after the decease or second marriage of his wife the trustees were to stand possessed of the residuary estate and investments for the time being representing the same upon trust (subject to a power of appointment which was not exercised) to divide the same into eighteen equal parts and to appropriate two of such parts to his three nephews and niece, the second, third, and fourth defendants respectively, if he or she should be living at the death of his wife, and to appropriate one of the remainder of such parts to each of the testator's twelve other nephews and nieces, if he or she should be living at the death of the testator's wife, as in the testator's will mentioned. The testator empowered his trustees to postpone during such period as they should think fit the sale and conversion of his residuary estate, and declared that all the net rents, profits, and income arising

A from his estate until conversion should for all the purposes of his will and as between all persons interested thereunder and as well during the first year after his death as afterwards be applied as if the same were income arising from the proceeds of sale and conversion or the investment of such proceeds, no part thereof being liable to be retained as capital. The testator died on Dec. 18, 1913, and his will was duly proved by Gertrude J. Muirhead and the plaintiff, Francis L. Muirhead.

B Alexander Muirhead renounced probate and disclaimed the trusts of the will. The testator was at his death the registered holder of 1,126 shares of £10 each and transferee under a deed of transfer of five debentures of £500 each of Muirhead & Co., Ltd. In July, 1914, Alexander Muirhead, by his action against the testator's executors and the company, claimed that the 1,126 shares and five debentures were his property, and in January, 1915, the company, by their action

C against the testator's executors, claimed an account of the company's moneys alleged to have been misapplied by the testator as a director of the company. These actions, by an agreement dated May 20, 1915, between the parties to them, were compromised with the approval of the court subsequently obtained on June 7, 1915, on the terms that Alexander Muirhead was to pay to the testator's executors sums of £2,000 (being 80 per cent. of the face value of the debentures) and £5,630

D (being 50 per cent. of the face value of the 1,126 shares in the company) and on payment, which was in fact made on July 10, 1915, of such sums the debentures and shares were to be vested in Alexander Muirhead, and he was to be entitled to all interest and dividends on the debentures and shares which had become due or been declared since the testator's death. On July 10, 1915, the testator's executors invested £7,000, part of the two sums of £2,000 and £5,630, in the purchase of

E £7,000 4½ per cent. War Loan Stock, and placed the £630, being the balance, on deposit at a bank. Gertrude J. Muirhead died on July 24, 1915, and the first defendant, Charles Edward Cecil Hill, was the surviving executor under her will. There were due at the date of his, the testator's death, or became due since that date, for interest on the five debentures at 4½ per cent., less income tax, the following sums—viz., £56 5s. on Mar. 31, 1914, Sept. 20, 1914, and Mar. 31, 1915, respectively. Also a further half-year's interest, £56 5s., payable on Sept. 30, 1915—that is, after the death of the testator's widow—in respect of the half-year from Mar. 31, 1915, to Sept. 30, 1915. Dividends free of income tax on the 1,126 shares had been declared since the testator's death—viz., an interim dividend of £281 10s. on July 30, 1914, a final dividend of £563 on Dec. 17 in respect of the year ending Sept. 29, 1914, and a dividend of £563 declared in December, 1915, G for the year ending Sept. 29, 1915. The residuary estate of the testator included the following stocks and shares—viz., £4,000 consolidated ordinary stock of the Central Argentine Railway, Ltd., and on Sept. 30, 1915, a final dividend thereon for the year ending on June 30, 1915, was declared and a dividend of £106 was paid to the plaintiff executor of his will on Nov. 2, 1915; £11,820 ordinary stock of the Buenos Ayres Great Southern Railway Co., Ltd., and on Sept. 29, 1915, a dividend for the half-year ending June 30, 1915, was declared and the dividend, £208 16s. 5d., was paid to the plaintiff on Oct. 27, 1915; £1,100 4 per cent. extension shares 1915 of £10 each of the Buenos Ayres Western Railway, Ltd., and on Sept. 30, 1915, interest for the half-year ending June 30, 1915, was declared payable, and such interest, £194 6s. 8d., was paid to the plaintiff.

I By this originating summons of the executor of the will of the testator, to which the executor of his widow and a number of the nephews and nieces of the testator were defendants, the question was raised whether the defendant Charles E. C. Hill, as the executor of Gertrude J. Muirhead, was entitled to have the sums of £2,000 and £5,630, paid under the terms of compromise of May 20, 1915, apportioned as between capital and income, and to have an apportioned part of such sums paid to the estate of Gertrude J. Muirhead in respect of the interest and dividends accruing on the shares and debentures the subject of the compromise between the date of the testator's death and the date of the payment of such sums of £2,000 and £5,630. The originating summons also raised the question whether the dividends and interest declared and paid since the death of Gertrude J. Hill on the stock and extension shares of the railway companies were payable to her executor or were apportionable as between the estate of the testator's widow and the remaindermen.

Stafford Crossman for the plaintiff.

Maugham, K.C., and J. M. Gover for the executor of Gertrude J. Muirhead.—We concede that the value of the debentures and shares shall be taken at their par value, whereas Alexander Muirhead paid a percentage of that value only.

Edward Clayton, K.C., and C. J. W. Farwell for residuary legatees.

W. S. Eastwood for other defendants interested in residue.

On the first question a declaration was made by the court, EVE, J., expressing the opinion that Alexander Muirhead had bought the debentures and shares with the interest and dividends thereon, and that an apportioned part of the aggregate of the sums of £2,000 and £5,630, bearing the same proportion to the whole of the aggregate as the amount of the interest and dividends which accrued between the death of the testator and May 20, 1915, on the five debentures and the 1,126 shares (including apportioned parts of the interest and dividends which were accruing at the death of the testator and on May 20, 1915, respectively) bore to the capital value on May 20, 1915, of the debentures and shares, was payable to the defendant Charles E. C. Hill as the executor of Gertrude J. Hill, the capital value of such debentures and shares on May 20, 1915, being by consent, with the approbation of the judge as to such of the defendants as were infants, treated as their par value, the said sums to be apportioned accordingly. On the second question in the originating summons judgment was reserved, and on May 12, 1916, the following judgment was read.

EVE, J.—Down to the date of her death on July 24, 1915, the late Mrs. Gertrude J. Muirhead was tenant for life of her husband's residuary estate. Part of the estate was invested in ordinary stock of the Central Argentine Railway, Ltd., and the Buenos Ayres Great Southern Railway Co., Ltd., and in extension shares of the Buenos Ayres Western Railway, Ltd. In September, 1915, each of these railway companies declared a dividend on the investment, payable in the following month, for the half-year ending on the preceding June 30. The question is whether these dividends, amounting in all to a sum of £509 and upwards, belong to the legal personal representative of the late tenant for life or to those who on her death became entitled to the income of the testator's estate. It is conceded that the claim of the widow's representative must be established under the Apportionment Act, 1870, or otherwise fail.

By s. 2 of that Act it is provided that from and after the passing of the Act

"all rents, annuities, dividends, and other periodical payments in the nature of income . . . shall, like interest on money lent, be considered as accruing from day to day, and shall be apportionable in respect of time accordingly."

Section 5 enacts that the word "dividends" includes

"all payments made by the name of dividend, bonus, or otherwise out of the revenue of trading or other public companies divisible between all or any of the members of such respective companies, whether such payments shall be usually made or declared at any fixed times or otherwise; and all such divisible revenue shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to have accrued by equal daily increment during and within the period for or in respect of which the payment of the same revenue shall be declared or expressed to be made."

It has been argued on behalf of the remainderman that the language I have read does not operate to make these dividends part of the estate of the late tenant for life, because, if the claim of her estate is well founded, the entirety goes to her estate, and, there being no apportionment or division necessary, there is nothing to bring the Act into operation or to which its provisions can apply.

A I do not think it is unreasonable to test this argument by one or two concrete cases. It is admitted here that in the events which have happened the Act applies to the dividends accruing on the investments for the half-year ending Dec. 31, 1915, and that the widow's estate will take such proportion of these dividends as accrued between June 30 and July 24; but, if the argument above stated be sound, the result is that her estate takes a share of dividends earned over a period partly within and partly beyond her lifetime, but has no part of the dividends earned in an antecedent period wholly within her lifetime. Or again, had the widow died on June 29, it is conceded that the Act would have applied, and her estate would have taken the whole dividend for the half-year ending June 30, less an apportioned part for the last day of the half-year which would have gone to the remainderman; but, had she died on June 30, her estate would have taken no share of the half-year's dividend, because there would have been no part of it apportionable to the remainderman, and the Act would in these circumstances not have been applicable.

B

C

Unless I am compelled to do so, I cannot attribute to the legislature any results so fanciful, so whimsical, and so illogical, and I do not feel so compelled. In my opinion, whenever there are periodical payments accruing when the event calling for apportionment occurs the Act is at once brought into operation and must be applied, and when subsequently the accruing payments become due and payable they must be distributed in accordance with the Act as applied on the occurrence of the event which brought it into operation. The Act does not cease to apply because the accruing payments ultimately become due and payable by instalments, some of which go entirely to one destination. In the present case, at the death of the tenant for life on July 24, 1915, there were dividends accrued and accruing de die in diem on these investments from Dec. 31, 1914, and the Act made the whole of these dividends apportionable as on July 24, the estate of the tenant for life taking the proportion that had accrued down to that date, the remainderman taking the proportion accruing subsequent to that date. I am quite unable to see upon what principle that apportionment is to be disregarded and the Act to be treated as no longer applicable because the fund which is the subject-matter of the apportionment is afterwards made payable in instalments, the earliest of which go entirely to the estate of the tenant for life in part satisfaction of her apportioned part of the fund. I do not think Ellis v. Rowbotham (2) has anything to do with the point I have to consider here. What that case decided was that the Apportionment Act has no application to payments which accrue due before the happening of the event calling for the apportionment. None of the payments here accrued due until three months and more after the death of the late tenant for life. The conclusion at which I have arrived, that the whole of these dividends belong to the widow's estate, is in accordance with the order made in Re Oppenheimer (1), though it does not appear from the report of that case that the point here raised on behalf of the remainderman was argued.

D

E

F

G

Solicitors: Fowler & Co.; Cronin & Son; Trinder, Capron & Co.

[Reported by W. P. PAIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

MEEKING v. MEEKING AND OTHERS

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Astbury, J.), October 18, 19, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 Ch. 77; 86 L.J.Ch. 97; 115 L.T. 623]

Mistake Document Rectification Disentailing deed—Jurisdiction of court—Claimant by title paramount per formam doni—Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), s. 47.

Where a mistake has been made in a disentailing deed, by reason of which the deed as executed does not represent the intention of the parties to it, a court of equity is not deprived of its jurisdiction to rectify the deed by s. 47 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833.

Dicta in Hall-Dare v. Hall-Dare (1) (1885), 31 Ch.D. 251, applied, and dicta in Binkes v. Small (2) (1887), 36 Ch.D. 716, reconciled. Re Otley's Estate (3), [1910] 1 I.R. 1, not followed.

A court of equity will not refuse to rectify in such a case on the ground that a person claims by title paramount per formam doni from the creator of the estate tail.

Hinton v. Hinton (4) (1755), 2 Ves. Sen. 631, distinguished.

Notes. As to rectification, see 26 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 914-921; and for cases see 35 DIGEST 127 et seq., and 40 DIGEST (Repl.) 581-587. For Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, see 20 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 397.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Hall-Dare v. Hall-Dare (1885), 31 Ch.D. 251; 55 L.J.Ch. 154; 54 L.T. 120; 84 W.R. 82; 2 T.L.R. 100, C.A.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 584, 887.
- (2) Binkes v. Small (1887), 36 Ch.D. 716; 56 L.J.Ch. 832; 57 L.T. 292; 35 W.R. 765; 3 T.L.R. 740, C.A.; 38 Digest (Repl.) 856, 699.
- (3) Re Otley's Estate, [1910] 1 I.R. 1; 38 Digest (Repl.) 857, *688.
- (4) Hinton v. Hinton (1755), Amb. 277; 2 Ves. Sen. 631, 638; 27 E.R. 187, L.C.; 38 Digest (Repl.) 856, 696.
- (5) A.-G. v. Day (1749), 1 Ves. Sen. 218; 27 E.R. 992, L.C.; 38 Digest (Repl.) 856, 695.

Also referred to in argument:

- Bonhote v. Henderson*, [1895] 1 Ch. 742; 72 L.T. 556; affirmed [1895] 2 Ch. 202; 72 L.T. 814; 35 Digest 133, 332.
- Bentley v. Mackay* (1862), 4 De G.F. & J. 273; 31 L.J.Ch. 697; 7 L.T. 143; 8 Jur.N.S. 1001; 10 W.R. 873; 45 E.R. 1191, L.J.J.; 35 Digest 135, 343.
- Frank v. Mainwaring* (1839), 2 Beav. 115; 48 E.R. 1123; 38 Digest (Repl.) 856, 697.
- Mills v. For* (1887), 37 Ch.D. 153; 57 L.J.Ch. 56; 57 L.T. 792; 36 W.R. 219; 21 Digest 310, 1134.
- Wheeler v. Heseltine* (1801), 2 Bos. & P. 560.
- Dowse v. Reeve* (1801), 2 Bos. & P. 578.
- Phillips v. Jones* (1803), 3 Bos. & P. 362.
- Milbanke v. Jolliffe* (1772), 2 Bos. & P. 579; 126 E.R. 1450; 19 Digest 382, 2043.

Witness Action by the plaintiff, Violet Emily Mildred Meeking, claiming rectification of an indenture of disentailing assurance, dated July 21, 1893, between Charles Meeking, of the first part, Bertram C. C. S. Meeking, of the second part, and Marshall Pontifex, of the third part, by the insertion of the words "in fee simple" immediately after the name of Marshall Pontifex in the habendum to him as grantee to uses.

Charles Meeking, the father, by his will settled property to the use of his son Charles Meeking for life with remainder to Bertram C. C. S. Meeking in tail. Charles Meeking, the father, died in 1872, and in 1893, in contemplation of the marriage of Bertram C. C. S. Meeking, a disentailing deed was executed, and a

A re-settlement made of the same date. The disentailing assurance was enrolled pursuant to the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, on July 29, 1893. By the disentailing deed the property was conveyed to the grantee to uses, Marshall Pontifex, but the words "in fee simple" were omitted after his name by mistake. It was recited, however, in the re-settlement that the property had been conveyed by the disentailing deed of the same date to Marshall Pontifex in fee simple, and the two deeds were executed by all parties under the belief that the usual disentailment had been effected. Under the re-settlement, at the date of this action in the events which had happened, the property was limited to the use of the first and other daughters of Bertram C. C. S. Meeking successively according to seniority in tail male with various remainders over. The three persons parties to the disentailing assurance had all died prior to the commencement of this action. Bertram C. C. S. Meeking had two children only, the plaintiff, his elder daughter Violet Emily Mildred Meeking, and the defendant Daisy Finola Meeking. Charles Meeking, the son, remarried in 1907 and had as issue of that marriage the defendant Sybille Marie Annie Meeking, who under the disentailing deed as executed and the will of Charles Meeking, the son, would take an interest in the property. The defendant Violet Charlotte Johnson was the wife of Bertram C. C. S. Meeking, who on Dec. 18, 1912, had re-married, her second husband being Herbert Johnson. The remaining defendants, including Herbert Johnson, were the present trustees of the re-settlement of 1893 and also of the will of Charles Meeking, the son. The question arose whether s. 47 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, deprived a court of equity from exercising the ordinary jurisdiction to rectify the disentailing deed, and, further, whether, if the court was not so deprived of its jurisdiction by that section, the court ought not to exercise its discretion to rectify against the defendant Daisy Finola Meeking, an infant, on the ground that she was not a party to the disentailing assurance and could claim by title paramount per formam doni.

Frank Russell, K.C., and Ashworth James (for Tydesley Jones, serving with His Majesty's forces) for the plaintiff, a daughter of Bertram Meeking.

Micklem, K.C., and Fairfax Lummoore for the defendant Daisy Finola Meeking, younger daughter of Bertram Meeking.

E. Beaumont (for J. Beaumont, on His Majesty's service) for the defendant Sybille Marie Annie Meeking, a party interested.

Sheldon for the defendant Violet Charlotte Johnson, mother of the plaintiff and first defendant, who had re-married.

G ASTBURY, J.—This is an action of an unusual character to rectify a disentailing assurance which was executed on July 21, 1893. There is no dispute as to the facts.

H One Bertram Meeking, who was about to marry the defendant, Violet Charlotte Johnson, was tenant in tail under a settlement created by his grandfather's will under which his father was tenant for life. The father and son, in contemplation of the son's intended marriage, agreed to disentail the property and to re-settle it, which was done by the document in question and a re-settlement of the same date. By a slip in drawing up the disentailing indenture, the words "in fee simple" were omitted after the name of one Marshall Pontifex in the habendum to him as trustee to uses. In the re-settlement of the same date it is recited that the disentailing indenture conveyed, released, and confirmed unto Marshall Pontifex the estate in question to hold to him "in fee simple," which is what had been intended, but I which by a slip had not been done, and the whole of the two documents were obviously drawn on the assumption that the disentailing was intended to be effected in fact and an entire re-settlement made in pursuance of the intended marriage. Bertram Meeking died in April, 1900, leaving two daughters, the plaintiff and the defendant Daisy, who, in the event of this assurance not being rectified, would take under the limitation in the will of the grandfather of Bertram. Charles, the father, re-married in 1907, and had as issue of that marriage one child, the defendant Sybille Marie, who is interested in contending, and whose counsel has contended on her behalf that this action does not lie. Marshall Pontifex died in September, 1910, and Charles, the father, in March, 1912, and in the same year the defendant Violet Meeking re-married. With regard to the question how this slip in the drawing up of the disentailing assurance arose, I have the uncontradicted evidence of counsel who prepared the draft and of the defendant Violet, now Violet Johnson. Their evidence had been taken by affidavit by arrangement, counsel for none of the parties objecting to that method of procedure, and neither of them has been cross-examined. What they prove without a shadow of doubt is that Mr. Bertram Meeking and his father, in consideration of the proposed marriage, intended to disentail the estate, gave instructions for a disentailing deed in the usual form to be prepared, and counsel prepared it in the belief that it was in the usual form, and intended to insert the usual words of inheritance in the habendum, but by some slip omitted to do so, and the documents were executed by all parties on the faith of their being effective for the purpose for which they were intended, the signatures of Mr. Bertram Meeking and his father being witnessed by their own solicitor, who had joined in the instructions for the preparation of the deed. The defendant Daisy is an infant, and by her counsel has very properly raised all the objections which I think could be raised to the success of this action.

Those objections fall under two heads. First, it is said that under s. 47 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, there is no power in this court to give the relief which is asked, and, secondly, it is contended that if such jurisdiction exists it is a case where the court ought not to exercise it because the granting parties to the deed are dead, and that Miss Daisy Meeking is now entitled by title paramount per formam doni under her great-grandfather's will. The Fines and Recoveries Act, after providing that nothing contained in the Act shall lessen or take away the jurisdiction of any court to amend any fine or common recovery or any proceeding therein in cases not provided for by the Act, enacted in s. 15 that from and after Dec. 31, 1833, every tenant in tail, whether in possession, remainder, contingency, or otherwise, should have full power to dispose of for an estate in fee simple or for any less estate the entailed property, and s. 40 [amended by Married Women's Property Act, 1907, s. 3, and Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 167] provided that every disposition of land under the Act by a tenant in tail should be effected by one of the assurances, not being a will, by which such tenant in tail could have made the disposition if his estate had been an estate at law in fee simple absolute, provided, nevertheless, that no disposition by a tenant in tail should be of any force either at law or in equity unless made or evidenced by deed, and that no disposition by a tenant in tail resting only in contract, whether express, implied, or otherwise, and whether supported by valuable consideration or not, should be of any force at law or in equity under the Act. Section 41 [repealed by Law of Property (Amendment) Act, 1924] provided that no assurance by which any disposition of land should be effected under the Act by a tenant in tail should have any operation under the Act unless enrolled within six months as therein provided. Section 47 is the principal section under which it is contended that the relief claimed in this case cannot be granted. That section is as follows:

"In cases of dispositions of lands under this Act by tenants in tail thereof and also in cases of consents by protectors of settlements to dispositions of lands under this Act by tenants in tail thereof, the jurisdiction of courts of equity shall be altogether excluded, either on the behalf of a person claiming for a valuable or meritorious consideration, or not, in regard to the specific performance of contracts, and the supplying of defects in the execution either of the powers of disposition given by this Act to tenants in tail, or of the powers of consent given by this Act to protectors of settlements, and the supply under any circumstances of the want of execution of such powers of disposition and consent respectively, and in regard to giving effect in any other manner to any act or deed by a tenant in tail or protector of a settlement which in a court of law would not be an effectual disposition or consent under this Act; and no

A disposition of lands under this Act by a tenant in tail thereof in equity, and no consent by a protector of a settlement to a disposition of lands under this Act by a tenant in tail thereof in equity, shall be of any force unless such disposition or consent would in case of an estate tail at law be an effectual disposition or consent under this Act in a court of law."

B It is contended that this section prohibits a court of equity from supplying any defect in the execution of a power of disposition given to a tenant in tail and the supplying under any circumstances of a want of execution of such power of disposition, and that the omission by way of slip in the drawing up of the document in question is a defect in execution or a want of execution which unrectified renders the deed incapable in a court of law in passing the property for the purposes of the disentailing and re-settlement.

C There is no case that has been found where a slip in the disentailing portion of a deed which, if unrectified, would prevent it from being an effective disentailing assurance has been rectified by the court since the passing of this statute. There are three cases, however, which have been criticised and very properly dealt with in great detail which it is necessary to discuss. In Hall-Dare v. Hall-Dare (1) a disentailing and a re-settlement had been effected in one deed, and there was a

D mistake in the re-settlement portion of the deed which did not affect the validity of the disentailing portion of the document. An application was made to rectify the mistake, which the Court of Appeal, consisting of three very eminent judges, held, reversing the judgment of BACON, V.C., ought to be effected. It is only right to say that in the court below counsel for the plaintiff, who was asking for rectification, said that, if in that case the document had been defective as a disentailing

E deed, the plaintiff could not have come to the court, but that, on the contrary, the deed was not defective as a disentailing assurance, but only qua the re-settlement. In the Court of Appeal the same counsel argued that s. 47 did not touch the case at all, because the claim was to rectify, not a disposition of land by a tenant in tail within the meaning of s. 47, but to rectify a mistake in a document of re-settlement, and that all that the action sought was to supply a re-settlement

F omission which, if made by a separate deed, need not have been enrolled at all. The defendant submitted the contrary, and the three judges in the Court of Appeal, although it is perfectly true that their judgments only in fact ordered a rectification of that portion of the enrolled deed which effected the re-settlement, expressed themselves one and all in language which, as far as I am concerned, I find it impossible to treat as consistent with an intention to hold that the rectification

G permissible was confined to the re-settlement portion of the deed, and that it did not equally apply to the disentailing assurance. In fact, I do not think it is going too far to say that the court in giving judgment did not accede to the view that, as the mistake was only in the re-settlement portion of the deed, it was, therefore, unnecessary to consider s. 47. It is true that in one sense the remarks that I am

H going to refer to are obiter, because it cannot be denied that the operation of the judgment was to rectify the re-settlement part of the deed and not to disturb the language in which the actual disentailing assurance was couched, but, although obiter in that sense, I find it quite impossible to believe that the learned judges, who expressed themselves as they did, had any doubt as to the application of their views to the deed as a whole.

I LORD HALSBURY, after referring to the fact that all parties intended to execute and did execute the re-settlement in the full belief that it carried out their instructions, said this, referring to s. 47 (31 Ch.D. at pp. 257, 258):

"Now, the Act of Parliament has not in express terms excluded the jurisdiction of the court to rectify instruments on the ground of mistake. It provides a different mode of barring estates tail, and has provided that in future the particular instrument to be enrolled shall be the instrument containing the legal dispositions of the parties, and by which alone the rights of the parties are to be determined. So express is the enactment, that the legislature, having before it the knowledge that the Court of Chancery had thought right to give effect to other documents than proper legal instruments, goes out of its way to exclude the jurisdiction of the court with regard to supplying and remedying defective executions of powers and other matters, and contains express provisions, the result of which is that the effect of the instrument and the rights of the parties shall be determined by the instrument which has been enrolled, and that there shall be no other instrument outside the enrolled deed which shall affect the legal dispositions made by the tenant in tail and the protector of the settlement. Now, it seems to me, with all respect to the learned Vice-Chancellor, that [s. 47] has no reference to the present application, which is an application to amend an instrument on the ground that it is not the instrument which the parties intended to execute and believed they were executing. The purport of the Act is that there shall be one instrument, attended with certain formalities, including enrolment, and that nothing but that instrument shall be effectual as a disposition of the estate comprised in it. But what has that to do with the question whether that instrument as executed carries out the real intention of the parties? It appears to me to be entirely beside the question. The legislature having before it the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to rectify deeds, and by s. 47 excluding, as it does, in terms the jurisdiction to give effect to acts outside, or deeds outside and beyond the particular instrument, has provided what shall be the mode by which the transaction of barring an estate tail can be effected, but has omitted any reference to the well-known power of rectification. It must, therefore, have been intended to leave this jurisdiction unaffected."

I cannot conceive how language can be plainer than that, that the power of rectification is not touched by s. 47, and that it does not come within the prohibition against supplying defects in the execution of powers which was a well-known branch of equity jurisdiction different from the exercise of its power to order rectification. A little lower down, the learned judge said (ibid. at p. 258):

"What the court is asked to do is not to alter a deed, but to restore the instrument which has been enrolled to the form which the parties who executed it intended it should be in at the time when they executed it. It is a fallacy, therefore, to call this an alteration of a deed, and I cannot help thinking that the Vice-Chancellor has taken too narrow a view of the Act."

LINDLEY, L.J., said (ibid.):

"If it had been intended by the Act to deprive the court of the power of rectification, it ought to have been so stated in words which could not be mistaken. It would be too monstrous to construe s. 47 so as to preclude the court from setting aside for fraud a disentailing deed after enrolment."

I do not quite follow that, because I do not see any direction in s. 47 which could be construed as containing any such preclusion. He continued (ibid. at pp. 258, 259):

"The same observation appears to apply to cases where, by mistake or accident, a deed is executed and enrolled in a form which is not intended. Can it be said that the parties in such circumstances are to have no remedy? Looking at the language of s. 47, it appears to have been directed to a different class of cases altogether. If the legislature had meant to make a deed when enrolled unalterable [that must be the disposition referred to in the section] there would be something in the argument as to the words 'act or deed,' but I cannot find any such intention in the Act. The object of the Act was to change the form of conveyance; and, it being inconvenient that an enrolled document should have different effects at law or in equity, the section goes on to say in substance that the enrolled deed shall not be affected by equitable doctrines. That section assumes, however, that the document enrolled

- A represented the intention of the parties when they executed it, and was the deed which they intended to execute."

Pausing there for a moment, I think that an imperfect deed which as such is the deed of the parties and an imperfect deed which as such is not the deed of the parties are two different things. The section, as it appears to me, is dealing with imperfect documents and assurances which are as such the deeds of the parties to them, and, according to the view as I find it expressed in Hall-Dare v. Hall-Dare (1), the section is not dealing with documents which are imperfect in the sense that in their imperfect form they are not the deeds of the parties to them at all. That, I think, is the meaning of LINLEY, L.J.'s language when he says (ibid. at p. 259):

- C "The section assumes that the document enrolled represents the intention of the parties when they executed it, and was the deed which they intended to execute. The deed when altered will really be the deed of the parties, and there is nothing to exclude the jurisdiction of the court to rectify the deed so as to make it conform to their intentions."

- D I understand that means that rectifying a deed so as to make it the true act of the parties is clearly not specific performance within the meaning of s. 47, and, secondly, that it is not supplying a defect in the execution of the power under the Act, which refers, as I have said, to a well-known practice of the court of treating a document which is, in fact, defective as operative under the circumstances. Further, rectification does not seem to me to be the "supplying" under any circumstances "of a want of execution of such power." The parties either did or
- E did not execute the assurance within the meaning of this statute. In this case they did execute the assurance, and the court is not asked to supply any non-execution. Lastly, the fourth head under the section is:

"and in regard to giving effect in any other manner to any act or deed of a tenant in tail . . . which in a court of law would not be an effectual disposition."

- F I am not asked, in my judgment, to give effect in any other manner to any act or deed of a tenant in tail which would not be effectual to pass the estate in a court of law which is not a disposition within the meaning of the Act.

- G FRY, L.J., whose judgment is of extreme importance having regard to the fact that he was party to the decision which I propose to deal with in a moment, after referring to the fact that at the time when the Act was passed fines and recoveries were records of the common law courts, and consequently they had large powers of rectifying them, said (ibid. at p. 259):

"Then the new mode of disentailing by deed and consent, with a particular provision for evidencing by deed both the disposition and the consent of the protector of the settlement, puts the deed in the category of deeds which before the Act were in the power of the Court of Chancery to rectify."

- H Stopping there for a moment, I cannot doubt what the learned judge intended by those words. It seems to me that he says in explicit terms that when disentailing could only be effected by fines and recoveries recorded in courts of common law, full powers of rectification were possessed by the courts in which the records were kept, and that when a new method, namely, a deed, was adopted as an alternative,
- I that deed was to be for all purposes, except such as are expressly prohibited, within the jurisdiction of the court which specially dealt with documents of that character. A well-known jurisdiction which has been exercised for many generations ought not to be lightly treated as being excluded by words in respect of which there is any ambiguity. Then FRY, L.J., said (ibid. at p. 260):

"The only section which requires to be considered is s. 47. That section no doubt excludes the jurisdiction of equity in certain cases which are therein specified. Of these it is noteworthy that the first is specific performance; next comes the defective execution of powers. It is said that rectification is a branch of specific performance, but it is not so, at all events under this section. . . . It appears to me, therefore, that rectification was not excluded by s. 47. I cannot but observe that, if the legislature had meant to touch the jurisdiction to rectify, one would expect to find it mentioned in the same manner that specific performance is. But not a word is said about it. In my judgment the scope of the Act is to make the enrolled deed conclusive, but it would be monstrous and highly unjust to say that the instrument on parchment is to be conclusive of the rights of the parties for all time, however great the mistake or blunder, and however clear the evidence of it. On the other hand, if the deed is capable of amendment, it is most beneficial that it should be conclusive of the rights of the parties so that it is the only instrument to which the parties need have recourse. Whether reformed or not, it alone must be looked to."

I have read these judgments more than once, and I am unable to come to the conclusion that all the three judges who took part in them did not intend to hold absolutely and in terms that the equitable jurisdiction of rectification was not prejudiced or excluded by the provisions of s. 47. Whether obiter or not, these are opinions which, in the absence of definite decision to the contrary, I feel myself incapable of disregarding.

The next case, and in fact the only other English case which seems to me to be relevant on this point, is Bankes v. Small (2). Here again the actual decision has nothing to do with the question that I have to determine in this case. A tenant in tail in remainder barred his estate tail without the consent of the protector, and afterwards conveyed his estate and interest to a purchaser, covenanting that he would, at the request of the purchaser, execute every such disentailing or other assurance as might be necessary to vest the premises in the purchaser. The protector having died, the purchaser applied to the vendor to execute a disentailing deed to enlarge the tail fee into a fee simple, and it was held by the Court of Appeal that s. 47 of the Act did not interfere with the jurisdiction of the court to decree as against a tenant in tail specific performance of a "contract" for disentailment entered into by him, but only prevented the court from treating the contract as being in equity a disposition taking effect under the Act so as to bind the issue in tail and remainderman. The question under s. 47 was raised at the request of the court, and COTTON, L.J., said (36 Ch.D. at p. 722):

"Where a person had entered into a contract for value to bar his estate tail, a court of equity would decree specific performance against him, and direct him to execute such assurance as would effectually bar the estate tail, i.e., to levy a fine, or, if the case was one which required a common recovery, then to suffer a common recovery. But if he died without having done so, then, as against his issue in tail or the succeeding remainderman, a court of equity would not interfere at all—that is to say, it would not give effect to a contract to suffer a recovery as if a recovery had been suffered; it would not treat what had been agreed to be done as having been done. I need not do more than refer to the case of A.-G. v. Day (5), where it was held by LORD HARDWICKE that although a court of equity would grant specific performance as against a tenant in tail who had entered into a contract to bar the estate tail, yet it would not do so as against the issue in tail, for they take by a title paramount per formam doni."

I will deal with that from another point of view later on. Then the learned judge proceeds (ibid.):

"There is another point also which has to be considered. The courts of equity where there was either valuable or meritorious consideration gave effect to imperfect executions of powers."

A Stopping there for a moment, the learned judge is certainly not in that sentence referring to rectification. He proceeds (ibid.):

"and did so, not only as against the person who had actually executed the instrument which was intended to be but was not a due execution of the power, but also as against those persons whom he could by a proper exercise of the power have defeated."

B The learned judge, having read s. 47, continued (ibid. at p. 723):

"Now, looking at what I have stated to be the law, and looking at the mere construction of this clause, its object, in my opinion, was to prevent a court of equity from holding that a contract to execute a disentailing assurance was, as against the issue in tail and remaindermen, as effectual in equity as if a disentailing deed had in fact been executed, and from remedying, according to the principles applicable to defective executions of powers, any defects in the execution of a deed intended to bar an estate tail."

C I understand that sentence to mean that, in the view of COTTON, L.J., s. 47, where it prohibits the supplying of defects in the execution of a power of disposition, prohibited, and only prohibited, courts of equity from giving effect to the defective execution of powers to disentail as they were in the habit of doing in other cases of defective execution of powers. I do not think the learned judge had in his mind any question of rectification at all, especially having regard to the fact that Hall-Dare v. Hall-Dare (1) had been cited in the argument. A little further on in his judgment he said (ibid. at pp. 723, 724):

E Let us look at the language of the section. The introductory words: 'In cases of dispositions of lands under this Act by tenants in tail thereof and also in cases of consents by protectors of settlements to dispositions of lands under this Act by tenants in tail thereof,' show that the section only applies where there has been an attempt by a tenant in tail to dispose of land under the Act. It does not deal with the case of a mere contract to execute a disposition under the Act, but deals only with a deed intended to be operative under the Act, but which from some defect is not so operative. . . . In my opinion on the mere construction of that section, having regard to the law that existed before the Act, both with regard to contracts to suffer recoveries and with regard to giving effect to defective executions of powers, the section does not take away the jurisdiction of a court of equity to compel a tenant in tail to do what he has agreed to do."

That is to say, does not prevent the enforcement of specific performance of contracts. Then he cites the view on this point of LORD ST. LEONARDS in his book on the Real Property Statutes published in 1852, where the learned author said (at p. 226):

H "It cannot be too strongly impressed on purchasers that their title will depend upon the legal validity of the dispositions. Under the [Fines and Recoveries Act] nothing can be supplied, and no defect can be made good so as to make the attempted deed effectual."

I I think what he means there is that, if the deed, as executed and as intended to be executed by the parties, is a defective execution and ineffectual accordingly, there is no power in the court to treat it as otherwise than it is. The only decision that can be found in that judgment is that s. 47 has not deprived the court of equity of power to decree specific performance of contracts to disentail.

FRY, L.J., comes to the same conclusion. He said (ibid. at pp. 729, 730):

"This language appears to me to indicate an intention not to exclude jurisdiction in respect of contracts generally, not to interfere with the law or the equity relating to contracts, but only to provide that no disposition by a tenant in tail resting in contract shall have any force either at law or in equity under the Act. Then, when we come to s. 47, we find that the jurisdiction of the courts of equity is excluded in respect of four subject-matters of jurisdiction: first, in respect of specific performance of contracts; secondly, in respect of supplying defects in execution of powers . . ."

In that expression I feel satisfied that the learned judge did not intend to include rectification as his judgment in Hall-Dare v. Hall-Dare (1) was before him and was not referred to by him. He continued:

"Thirdly, in supplying want of execution of powers; and, fourthly, in regard to giving effect in any other manner to any act or deed by a tenant in tail or protector which in a court of law would not be an effectual consent or disposition under the Act. But the whole of the section is governed by the initial words, 'In cases of dispositions of lands under this Act by tenants in tail thereof and also in cases of consents by protectors of settlements to dispositions of land under this Act by tenants in tail thereof.' . . . But it appears to me to be clear that if the legislature had been minded to take away the jurisdiction of courts of equity to enforce contracts entered into by tenants in tail that they would thereafter bar the estate tail very different language from that which is used in this section would have been used."

That is very much the same as he had said in the earlier case, that if it had been intended to take away the well-known jurisdiction of rectification the statute would have said so.

Up to this point there does not seem to me to be anything in Binkes v. Small (2) in conflict with the judgments in Hall-Dare v. Hall-Dare (1), but there is a passage of FRY, L.J.'s judgment which, it is said, is inconsistent with what he said in that case. I do not so read it. It is as follows (ibid. at p. 730):

"I have come, therefore, to the conclusion that the true meaning of this section is to exclude all jurisdiction to treat as effectual in equity under the Act, either on the ground of specific performance, relief against defective execution or non-execution of powers, or on any other ground, an assurance intended to operate under the Act which is not effectual under the Act."

I think what the learned judge meant there was that you cannot relieve against the defective execution or the non-execution of a power to disentail which has not been exercised, nor on any other ground can the court of equity treat as effectual under the Act an assurance which as such is not so, referring, that is, to deeds which are imperfect as such and which as such are the deeds of the parties, and not to deeds which, having regard to accidental imperfection, are not, unless and until rectified, the deeds of the parties at all. So much for the only two decisions that have been found in this country relevant to this question.

But there is a decision of WYLIE, J., in the Irish courts which, although not binding on me, is deserving of every respect. That was in Re Otley's Estate (3), where the learned judge expressed the view, although he did not base his judgment on it, that the judgments in Hall-Dare v. Hall-Dare (1) should be qualified in the way contended for by counsel for the defendants in this case. The learned judge said ([1910] 1 I.R. at p. 8):

"Now, reading those judgments apart from the particular facts of the case, they would seem to decide that, notwithstanding s. 47 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, the court has the same power to rectify a disentailing deed so as to make it conform to the intention of the parties as in the case of any other deed. But in reading and applying those judgments it seems to me that we must have regard to the nature of the rectification applied for and granted in that case, which was to insert in the deed limitations to the second and other sons of the tenant for life which had by mistake been omitted before the limitations over to collaterals. And what distinguishes that case from the present

A case is that the amendment in that case had no effect upon the deed as a disentailing assurance. It was an effective disentailing deed, whether the rectification applied for was granted or not; but here the amendment applied for is for the very purpose of changing the deed, which at present it is assumed does not bar the entail, into an effective disentailing assurance. In a later case of Binkes v. Small (2), where an action was brought to compel a tenant in tail to execute a disentailing deed pursuant to his contract, the effect of s. 47 was again discussed."

The learned judge, after reading the passage from Fry, L.J.'s judgment (36 Ch.D. at p. 730) which I have already read, continued:

C "Now, comparing this statement of Fry, L.J., with the observations which I have quoted from his judgment in Hall-Dare v. Hall-Dare (1), it seems to me to show that when the Court of Appeal laid down broadly in that case that the power of a court of equity was to rectify a deed was not affected by s. 47 in the case of a disentailing deed, they had not present to their minds such a rectification in the form of a deed as would change a non-effective into an effective disentailing assurance."

D I am unable to come to the same conclusion as WYLIE, J., did. I have no reason to suppose that the learned judges who took part in Hall-Dare v. Hall-Dare (1) were not perfectly capable of appreciating the meaning of the language which they so decidedly made use of, and I am unable to believe that if the judges who decided Bankes v. Small (2), to whom Hall-Dare v. Hall-Dare (1) had been cited, had intended to express themselves in a way which was inconsistent with the judgments in that case they would not have said so in plain terms. I cannot believe that Fry, L.J., can have intended indirectly to overrule his own previous expression of opinion. I, therefore, come to the conclusion, as far as the Act is concerned, that I am not prohibited by s. 47 from directing the rectification which the plaintiff seeks.

F The second point which has been taken is that if I have jurisdiction to rectify this document I ought not to exercise it against the defendant, the daughter of Mr. Bertram Meeking, on the ground that she was not a party to the transaction in question, but claims by title paramount per formam doni. For that proposition A.-G. v. Day (5), Hinton v. Hinton (4), and cases of that character have been cited. LORD HARDWICKE in the latter case said (2 Ves. Sen. at p. 634):

G "It is truly said, that if a man, seised of an estate tail with or without remainders over, contracts for sale, and receives the purchase money, and dies in the first case without levying a fine, or without a recovery in the last case, this court would not carry into execution against the issue in tail: as was the case of Mr. Savill, of Medley, who when tenant in tail chose rather to live in gaol, and be served in plate there, than to perform his agreement; but the ground of that is, the issue in tail in the one case or remainderman in the other claim per formam doni from the creator or author of the estate tail, and therefore though in the power of the tenant in tail to be barred by a particular conveyance, that not being done, the court cannot take away that right they derive, not from the tenant in tail, but from the author."

I I do not think that that applies to rectification at all. Rectification is only made on the ground that the inaccurately expressed document, which was executed as an assurance, is not in its inaccurate form the deed of the parties at all, and if a proper case is made out on the evidence, and I think it is obviously made out here, the duty of the court is to put the document in the form in which it must be in order for it to be and remain the deed of the parties to it. Miss Meeking, the defendant, is not quite in the position in which the issue were in Hinton v. Hinton (4). This disentailing assurance was part of a marriage contract, and, for all I know, the marriage might never have taken place if the disentailing and re-settlement had not been arranged and carried out, but, however that may be, it does not seem to me that the reasoning of Hinton v. Hinton (4) applies to rectification at all, and I think it has been amply made out in the present case that the transaction was based on the obvious intention to make an effective disentailing assurance and re-settlement, and that none of the parties to the present case is in a position either to contest this or prevent rectification being decreed. That being so, the relief claimed by the plaintiff must be granted.

Solicitors: Pontifex, Pitt & Johnson.

[Reported by G. P. LANGWORTHY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re KING. JACKSON v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Younger, J.), July 12, 13, 17, 18, 24, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 Ch. 420; 87 L.J.Ch. 3; 117 L.T. 529; 33 T.L.R. 535; 62 Sol. Jo. 9]

Will—Gift to servants—“Persons in my service at my decease”—Testator found lunatic by inquisition—Servants engaged on behalf of testator by authority of committee.

Charity—Practice—Compromise of proceedings—Citation of charity—No appearance—Power of Attorney-General to assent on behalf of absent charity.

By a sixth codicil, dated Jan. 22, 1908, which revoked the material bequests in the will and five previous codicils, the testator bequeathed to each person in his service at his death a sum equal to one year's wages in addition to any legacy thereinbefore bequeathed as well as the wages then due. The testator gave legacies to various charities and directed that his residuary personal estate should be held on trust to be divided among four charitable institutions to be selected by his trustees. On Mar. 21, 1908, the testator was found a lunatic by inquisition, and on April 7, 1908, the Official Solicitor was appointed committee of his person. He resided in a house maintained under the authority of the Master in Lunacy and O. was appointed to be his companion and attendant with authority to engage servants. At the testator's death on Mar. 5, 1915, besides O. a coachman, butler, gardener, cook, and housemaid were employed at the house, all having been engaged by O. On Mar. 15, 1915, the heir-at-law and next of kin sought to set aside the sixth codicil in a probate action in which the Attorney-General was made a party and citations were served on the charities which, however, did not enter an appearance and were not represented. During the hearing a compromise was arrived at, the terms of which were signed by the Attorney-General and the other counsel, and thereupon a decree was made in favour of the will and all the six codicils, the claimants under the sixth codicil, under the terms, to give up one-third of their legacies. The charities were informed of the compromise and the decree, but made no objection.

Held: (i) neither O. nor the other servants engaged by him were persons in the service of the testator at the time of his death and consequently were not entitled to the legacies; (ii) the Attorney-General had authority to assent to a compromise on behalf of absent charities who had been cited, but did not appear, and accordingly, the charities were bound by the compromise.

Notes. Distinguished: Re Silverston, Westminster Bank, Ltd. v. Kohler, [1949] 1 All E.R. 641.

- A As to the rules of construction where there is a gift in a will to the servants of the testator, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 323, 324; and for cases see 44 DIGEST 903. As to compromise of proceedings where the Attorney-General is a party and the charity is cited but does not appear, see 4 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 447; and for cases see 8 DIGEST (Repl.) 522.

Cases referred to :

- B (1) Re French (1868), 3 Ch. App. 317; 37 L.J.Ch. 537; 18 L.T. 139; 16 W.R. 657, L.J.; 33 Digest 187, 834.
 (2) Re Lawson, Wardley v. Bringloe, [1914] 1 Ch. 682; 83 L.J.Ch. 519; 110 L.T. 573; 30 T.L.R. 335; 58 Sol. Jo. 320; 44 Digest 900, 7593.
 (3) Ware v. Cumberlege (1855), 20 Beav. 503; 3 Eq. Rep. 656; 52 E.R. 697; 8 Digest (Repl.) 517, 2472.
- C (4) Wytcherley v. Andrews (1871), L.R. 2 P. & D. 327; 40 L.J.P. & M. 57; 25 L.T. 134; 35 J.P. 552; 19 W.R. 1015; 23 Digest (Repl.) 118, 1207.
 (5) Ritchie v. Malcolm, [1902] 2 I.R. 403; 23 Digest (Repl.) 118, * 373.
 (6) Re Lart, Wilkinson v. Blades, [1896] 2 Ch. 788; 65 L.J.Ch. 846; 75 L.T. 175; 45 W.R. 27; 40 Sol. Jo. 656; 44 Digest 562, 3794.

- D Also referred to in argument :

Re Ponsonby (1842), 3 Dr. & War. 27; 33 Digest 215, 1228i.

Grosvenor v. Drax (1883), 2 Knapp, 82; 12 E.R. 410, P.C.; 33 Digest 229, 1408.

Strangeways v. Read, [1898] 2 Ch. 419; 67 L.J.Ch. 581; 79 L.T. 245; 46 W.R. 671; 14 T.L.R. 508; 42 Sol. Jo. 654; 33 Digest 187, 836.

A.-G. v. Ereter Corp. (1827), 2 Russ. 362; 38 E.R. 372, L.C.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 521, 2550.

E

A.-G. v. Boucherett (1858), 25 Beav. 116; 53 E.R. 580; 8 Digest (Repl.) 522, 2560.

Re Cardwell, A.-G. v. Day, [1912] 1 Ch. 779; 81 L.J.Ch. 443; 106 L.T. 753; 28 T.L.R. 307; 56 Sol. Jo. 361; 8 Digest (Repl.) 534, 2803.

Re Faraker, Faraker v. Durell, [1912] 2 Ch. 488; 81 L.J.Ch. 635; 107 L.T. 36; 56 Sol. Jo. 668, C.A.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 419, 1102.

F

Adjourned Summons to determine the construction of a will.

The testator, William Henry King, by his will and five codicils thereto appointed certain funds over which he had a power of appointment as therein mentioned, and devised and bequeathed all his real and personal property, subject to a specific gift of certain shares, to his wife (who died in his lifetime), and to the payment of certain pecuniary legacies. By the sixth codicil to his will, dated Jan. 22, 1908, his wife being then dead, the testator appointed fresh trustees of his will and codicils, and revoked all the appointments, devises, bequests, and legacies contained in his will and the five previous codicils (except the bequest of the shares), and, after certain dispositions and specific bequests, not material to the case, he bequeathed his residuary personal estate to his trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and, after payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts and legacies, upon trust to divide the proceeds of sale and conversion between four charitable institutions in Great Britain to be named and selected by his trustees; and he bequeathed pecuniary legacies to various persons and to various charities, and among others a legacy of £2,000 to the treasurer of the Primitive Methodist Chapel in Durham Street, Rochdale. He also bequeathed

I

"To each person in my service at my decease a sum equal to one year's wages (in addition to any legacy hereinbefore bequeathed as well as to the wages then due to him or her)."

On Mar. 21, 1908, after an inquisition, the testator was found to be of unsound mind, and on April 7, 1908 the Master in Lunacy appointed the Official Solicitor to have the custody of the person of the lunatic, and the custody of his estate was committed to another person. The testator at the time he made the sixth codicil and also till after the last-mentioned order was residing at Garstang in Lancashire.

But in September, 1908, under the authority of the Master in Lunacy, he went to a house at Torquay, where he resided until his death on Mar. 5, 1915. The Official Solicitor, as committee of the person, in April, 1908, appointed W. H. Oldfield to be companion and attendant on the testator, and at the time of his death there were employed at his house at Torquay, besides the attendant, a coachman, butler, gardener, cook, and housemaid, all of whom had been engaged by Mr. Oldfield on behalf of the testator and with the authority of the committee. On Mar. 15, 1915, J. R. King, as heir-at-law and next of kin of the testator, commenced an action (King v. Jackson) in the Probate Division, in the matter of the estate of the testator, against the trustees under the sixth codicil, claiming that the court should pronounce against the sixth codicil and for the will and first five codicils. Citations to see proceedings were served upon the Attorney-General and (among others) the legatees under the sixth codicil, including the charitable institutions (except two of them who had in previous codicils received the same legacy), and upon (amongst others) the treasurer of the Primitive Methodist Chapel, but neither the Primitive Methodist Chapel nor any other of these institutions entered any appearance in the action or were represented by counsel at the trial. The action was heard by HORRIDGE, J., and a special jury, and on Mar. 20, 1916, during the hearing, a compromise was agreed upon by all the persons and institutions represented by counsel, including the Attorney-General, the terms of which were signed by him and the other counsel. Thereupon a final decree was pronounced for the force and validity of the will and six codicils, and probate thereof was granted to the defendants in the action, the executors appointed by the sixth codicil. The terms of compromise were that probate should be decreed of the will and six codicils upon these (among other) terms:

"1. The beneficiaries under the sixth codicil, including the named charities, to relinquish in favour of the plaintiff one-third of the amounts devised or bequeathed to them in the sixth codicil, including one-third of the value of Brooklands. The executors to carry this term into effect . . . (3) The plaintiff to receive one-third of the residue of the estate after payment of the specific legacies above mentioned in addition to the before-mentioned amounts relinquished in his favour."

So soon as that compromise was arrived at, steps were taken to inform the charitable legatees of what had happened. No complaint or remonstrance on the part of these charities was made. On Jan. 11, 1917 the present summons was taken out by the executors and trustees appointed by the sixth codicil asking, among other things, whether the bequest in favour of persons in the testator's service took effect in favour of Mr. Oldfield and the servants employed at the house where the testator was residing at his death; whether those legatees were entitled to be paid in full notwithstanding the compromise; and whether the Primitive Methodist Chapel and the other charities, where proper officers were cited but did not appear in the probate action, were entitled to have their legacies under the sixth codicil paid in full having regard to the fact that the Attorney-General was a party to the probate action and to the compromise. The claim of the persons employed at the residence of the testator was first argued.

Stamp for the plaintiffs.

Austen-Cartmell for the Attorney-General.

H. Terrell, K.C., and P. F. Wheeler for J. R. King, the heir-at-law and next of kin.

Owen Thomson for the Primitive Methodist chapel.

H. D. Grazebrook for specific legatees.

Graham Mould for other parties.

YOUNGER, J. [after stating the facts relating to this part of the case and saying that, as the sixth codicil had been admitted to probate, it must be accepted as a fact that the testator was of sound mind when he made it].—The question is

A whether the servants in attendance on the testator at his decease took the benefit of the bequest. One of them, Mr. Oldfield, was appointed directly by the committee of the person of the testator to look after his household. The others, some of whom discharged very intimate personal services to the testator, were appointed by Mr. Oldfield. But none of them was in any sense appointed by the testator himself, nor were any of them in any other sense in his service at the time of his death. The

B question is whether any of them can claim this legacy as being a person in his service at his decease. In my opinion they cannot. I think that these persons were either in the service of the committee of the person or, as counsel for the Attorney-General put it, they were in the service of the court; but I do not think that there was at the testator's death any person who was in his service within the meaning of these words. The committee of the person under a scheme in lunacy was apparently

C allowed a certain sum by means of which he was to provide for the comforts of the testator, and, amongst other things, the engagement of a proper staff of servants; and counsel for the heir-in-law cited an authority Re French (1) which shows that the committee of the person is not liable to account for the actual disposition of moneys placed in his hands for the purpose so long as he discharges the duty of maintaining the lunatic, which it is not disputed, has been properly done

D in this case. It appears to me, therefore, that these people cannot be said to have been in the service of the lunatic as persons either appointed or paid by him. They were in fact paid for by the committee of the person out of the money allowed to him for that and other purposes, and were also appointed mediately or immediately by him.

In those circumstances it appears to me that these persons do not answer the

E description of persons "in my service at my decease," unless the words can be read as meaning "attending upon me at my death." And it has been suggested that they may bear that meaning. But when one remembers that the testator was of sound mind when he made this codicil, and that he made it presumably with reference to servants who had been engaged and would in ordinary course continue to be engaged by himself, I see no reason for extending the ordinary meaning of F the words which he used. In these circumstances I think that neither Mr. Oldfield nor any of the other servants is entitled to the benefit of the legacy. I ought perhaps to refer to the decision of EVE, J., in Re Lawson (2), where the gift was "to each of my domestic servants who shall have been in my service for two years prior to my decease." EVE, J., did allow the legacy to a male nurse who was first engaged by a receiver appointed under s. 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890. It is, however,

G obvious from the report either that there were special circumstances which enabled the judge to hold without question that the servant in that case was in the service of the testator, or that the point was not taken or pressed in argument. It is not certainly discussed in the judgment, and I do not think the decision can be considered as an authority either one way or the other on the point which has been

H definitely argued before me. Moreover, the difference between a receiver and a committee of the person may be, and I think properly is for this purpose, very marked. The answer to the question raised by the summons will be that the bequest did not take effect in favour of Oldfield or of the other persons claiming it.

[The question whether the absent charities were bound was next argued.]

Cur. adv. vult.

I July 24, 1917. YOUNGER, J., read the following judgment and after stating the facts continued:—The questions that I have now to determine are whether these charitable institutions are bound by the assent of the Attorney-General which was given on their behalf, and whether, even if they were not so bound, it is open to them now in these proceedings to repudiate the compromise come to in the Probate Division. With regard to the first question, I think the most authoritative statement as to the position of the Attorney-General in such matters is to be found in the judgment of SIR JOHN ROMILLY, M.R., in Ware v. Cumberlege (3). SIR JOHN

ROMILLY, having been asked by the Attorney-General of the day to state what was the practice with regard to the Attorney-General's intervention in charity matters, made this statement (20 Beav. at pp. 510-512):

"It is difficult to lay down any general rule which shall be adapted to every case; there must be a great deal of discretion in these matters. The general principle which regulates them I take to be something of this description: -the Attorney-General represents all absent charities, and it is sufficient to have him here to represent all absent charities. But absent charities may obviously be of two different characters; they may either be under gifts to specified individual charities, or to charity generally. In case the gift is for charity generally, no one can represent it but the Attorney-General, and he must be here to represent such general charities. When there are specified individual charities then the Attorney-General's presence is not universally necessary; but it is required by the court upon various occasions, as, for instance, where any rules are required for the regulations of the internal conduct of the charity itself, such as the establishment of a scheme and the like; there the Attorney-General is necessary for the purpose of aiding and assisting the court in directing and sanctioning the general system and principle that ought to govern charities of those descriptions. But there are other cases where there is no question as to the conduct or management of the charities, but only whether the charity is entitled to a particular legacy or not. In those cases, the Attorney-General is rather in the nature of a trustee for those charities, and the court prefers having before it the parties beneficially interested, for the purpose of putting their interests before the court in the light which they consider most favourable to them. In those cases I think it preferable that the charity itself should appear, rather than that the Attorney-General should represent it. This appears to me one of that latter class of cases, and therefore it would be better that the charity should appear. Having stated that as my general view of the case, it is very obvious, as counsel will see, that there may be mixed cases in which it is impossible to lay down a rule beforehand, and in which this court must act on the matter before it in such manner as, according to the best exercise of its discretion and judgment, it may think best calculated to promote justice."

It appears to me to follow very clearly from these observations of SIR JOHN ROMILLY that in a case like the present, where the charity was in fact cited, as it was properly cited, but did not think fit to appear, and the Attorney-General did remain a party to the proceedings as he was properly a party to them, certainly there was the same power and authority left in him to make any arrangement by way of compromise or otherwise with regard to the absent charity which had been cited but did not appear as there would have been to approve such a compromise had it been made in the presence of that charity. That was, of course, what did in fact happen. These respondents were cited. They did not appear. The Attorney-General did in the compromise which was arrived at take upon himself the duty of protecting not only the charitable purposes indicated - the unnamed charities interested in residue - but he also took it upon himself to protect and bind the interests of the charities which were specially named as pecuniary legatees, and he compromised the proceedings on behalf of all. That compromise was duly notified to all of these charities, and no objection was ever taken (nor is now taken) to the propriety of that compromise. And accordingly it appears to me clear that it is binding upon them all.

But I desire, if I may, to deal with this case on broader grounds, and I will assume, contrary to what I have stated to be my opinion, that the Attorney-General's consent in this case did not bind the absent charities. Now, there is authority for the proposition that in a probate suit it is not necessary for a person to be a party to it in order to be bound by its result. But there is also clear authority for the proposition that that rule, otherwise apparently a general rule, has

A no application to a case where the parties to the proceedings think fit to take upon themselves the responsibility of compromising it. An absent party, who would include one that had been cited but did not appear, is not, it appears, bound by a compromise of the proceedings made subsequently in the action. That principle is laid down very clearly by LORD PENZANCE in Wytcherley v. Andrews (4), where he says (L.R. 2 P. & D. at pp. 328, 329):

B "On the other hand, there is a practice in this court by which any person having an interest may make himself a party to the suit by intervening; and it was because of the existence of that practice that the judges of the Prerogative Court held that if a person, knowing what was passing, was content to stand by and see his battle fought by somebody else in the same interest, he should be bound C by the result and not be allowed to re-open the case. That principle is founded on justice and common sense, and is acted upon in courts of equity, where, if the persons interested are too numerous to be all made parties to the suit, one or two of the class are allowed to represent them, and if it appears to the court that everything has been done bonâ fide in the interests of the parties seeking to disturb the arrangement it will not allow the matter to be re-opened. That has D been undoubtedly the rule also in the Prerogative Court, but I do not find that it has ever been applied to cases of compromise. It is one thing to say that a person who stands by and lets another fight his battle must be bound by the result of the contest; and it is quite another thing to say that, without any notice that there was going to be a compromise and without any knowledge that the suit was not proceeding to its natural end, he must nevertheless be E bound by any agreement which the parties to the suit may choose to enter into.
That would be carrying the rule very far indeed. I find no authority for carrying it to that length, and I am not disposed to extend it beyond the limit within which it has been confined in former cases."

Accordingly, as a result of that opinion of LORD PENZANCE in that case, one of the next of kin of a testator who had not been a party to previous proceedings F in which an application to set aside his will had been dismissed and the will had been admitted to probate by a compromise made with one of the next of kin who was a party to the proceedings, was permitted to re-open the proceedings and to claim, notwithstanding the probate which was the result of that compromise, to have it set aside on cause shown. That principle was also followed in Ritchie v.
G Malcolm (5). The result appears to be that the parties in a case like the present who were not present in the Probate Division may seek to recall the probate which was the result of a compromise there if they have ground for having that probate set aside.

The position of the charities here, however, is very different. Their claim is to stand by the probate, not to have it set aside. The sixth codicil, they say, was proved in solemn form, and by virtue of the order which followed thereon they H are entitled to receive everything which in due course of administration that codicil gives them, free from any obligation to submit to a deduction made under some agreement to which they were not parties; and that although upon the propriety or even the necessity of that agreement they offer no criticism. The position, of course, is plausible; it is not, however, I think, tenable. It is not, to
I my mind, true to say that the codicil was admitted to probate merely on the evidence adduced of due execution. It was in fact so admitted as one term of an agreement without which probate would at the best have followed only after prolonged litigation, and at the worst might never have followed at all. In truth and in substance, therefore, anyone now seeking to claim under that codicil as proved is claiming the advantage of that agreement. And it would appear primâ facie to follow that if he takes that advantage he must submit to bear his assigned portion of the burden by means of which that advantage was secured. If it is said that in a case like the present in which the claimants have no interest to recall the probate it would result from that view that they in effect are held bound by a compromise to which they were no party, notwithstanding LORD PENZANCE's decision to the contrary, the answer is that is not so. The only effect of LORD PENZANCE's principle is that a person not bound by a compromise, who is dissatisfied with the act of the court which follows thereon, is at liberty to institute fresh proceedings and by the strength of his own case to have that act of the court recalled. LORD PENZANCE did not decide that that act would be recalled without more so soon as it appeared that all persons interested in the estate were not bound by the compromise upon which it followed. It stands until on cause shown it is recalled. So here, even if it is said that the charity having no interest to recall the probate must take it as they find it, and if they seek to claim under it they must submit to bear their assigned burden, that does not mean that if they are prepared affirmatively to establish either that the particular burden assigned to them was unfair or that it should not have been imposed upon them at all they are without remedy. If, for instance, in the present case the charity were as against the plaintiff in the probate action to establish affirmatively that the testator was of sound disposing mind at the date when he executed his sixth codicil or if they were able to show—I do not think that they could—that, even if he was not, the payment to the plaintiff in that action by way of compromise should have been made exclusively out of residue, and that no part of it should have been charged against their legacies, I see no reason why in a proper proceeding they should not do so, and why they should not, if successful, receive in the result their legacies intact. But that burden is upon them, and until assumed and discharged they must bear their part of the compromise, just as they would have had in effect to do if their position had been that they took nothing under a probate following a compromise by which they were not bound. In that case they could claim nothing from the estate until they had successfully asserted their right to have that probate recalled and have their own title established. I would only add that this conclusion is, I think, supported by such a decision as that of CHITTY, J., in Re Lart (6). This is not the first time in which this court, as the court of administration, has found it difficult to work out compromises of probate proceedings entered into without full regard to the interests of absent parties. I hope that the fact that this difficulty has not in the present case, even as regards the individual legatees, materialised, will be no encouragement to increase the number, already large enough, of such arrangements.

Solicitors: Hargreaves & Crouthers, for Johnson & Tilly, Lancaster; G. & G. Keith; Mann & Crimp, for Kitsons, Hutchings, Easterbrook & Co., Torquay; Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by N. TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re INDO-CHINA STEAM NAVIGATION CO.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Eve, J.), May 17, 25, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 Ch. 100; 86 L.J.Ch. 723; 117 L.T. 212]

B Company—Shares—Register—Rectification—Blank transfer executed by transferor—Name of transferee filled in—Insufficient stamp duty—No notice to company—Application by company to rectify register—“Person aggrieved”—Power of court to determine title to shares—Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), s. 32.

C H. sold sixty shares in the N. company to M. H. & Co., Ltd., and handed over the certificate and a transfer in blank under seal executed by him. Subsequently M. H. & Co., Ltd., filled in the name of G., who was their clerk, as the transferee and lodged the transfer, which purported to be for a nominal consideration of 10s. and was stamped with a 10s. stamp only, together with the certificate, for registration with the N. company who were unaware of the insufficiency of the stamp duty. On receipt of the usual notice of intended transfer H. raised an objection to registration, but owing to changes in staff the matter was overlooked and G.'s name was placed on the register of members. The certificate, however, was not handed to him. Subsequently, in view of the objection taken by H., the register of members was altered by reinserting the sixty shares under the name of H. The articles of the N. company did not require transfers of shares to be by deed, but by an instrument in writing signed by both the transferor and the transferee. M. H. & Co., Ltd., paid a penalty and procured the stamping of the transfer with the proper ad valorem duty. As neither H. nor G. would move in the matter the N. company applied by summons under s. 32 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, for rectification of the register by restoring and retaining the name of G. on the register and H. and G. were made respondents.

F Held: the court had jurisdiction to determine the rights of the respondents and decide the question of title to the shares as soon as there was a person aggrieved within the section and the application was properly made; further, although the N. company as against G. could have refused to register the transfer so long as it was insufficiently stamped, H. was not entitled to maintain that the transfer was void, he having been paid the full consideration; and, the registration of the transfer to G. having been made without notice of the insufficiency of the stamp duty, the subsequent alteration of the register was nugatory and G.'s name ought to be retained on the register as holder of the shares.

H Notes. Section 32 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, has been replaced by s. 116 of the Companies Act, 1948, see 3 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 549.

As to rectification of the register of members of the company, see 6 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 316 et seq., and for cases see 9 DIGEST (Repl.) 215 et seq.

Case referred to:

I (1) Maynard v. Consolidated Kent Collieries Corpn., [1903] 2 K.B. 121; 72 L.J.K.B. 681; 88 L.T. 676; 52 W.R. 117; 19 T.L.R. 448; 47 Sol. Jo. 513; 10 Mans. 386, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 388, 2473.

Also referred to in argument:

Re Tahiti Cotton Co., Ex parte Sargant (1874), L.R. 17 Eq. 273; 43 L.J.Ch. 425; 22 W.R. 815; 9 Digest (Repl.) 218, 1388.

Re Tees Bottle Co., Ltd., Davies' Case (1876), 33 L.T. 834; affirmed on appeal (see 38 L.T. 147); 9 Digest (Repl.) 218, 1391.

Ortigosa v. Brown (1878), 47 L.J.Ch. 168; 38 L.T. 145; 9 Digest (Repl.) 434, 2840.

Ireland v. Hart, [1902] 1 Ch. 522; 71 L.J.Ch. 276; 86 L.T. 385; 50 W.R. 315; 18 T.L.R. 253; 46 Sol. Jo. 214; 9 Mans. 209; 9 Digest (Repl.) 397, 2546.
France v. Clark (1884), 26 Ch.D. 257; 53 L.J.Ch. 585; 50 L.T. 1; 32 W.R. 466, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 380, 2452.

Adjourned Summons.

The applicants, the Indo-China Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., by their originating summons issued on Jan. 10, 1917, against the respondents, Frank Ernest Green and Cyril Oswald John Hopkinson, asked for an order that, notwithstanding the claim of the respondent Hopkinson to be owner of sixty fully-paid deferred ordinary shares of £5 each in the company therein mentioned, the company might be authorised to rectify the register of members of the company by restoring and retaining the name of Frank E. Green to and on the register as holder of the shares.

The facts are stated in the judgment.

Clayton, K.C., and C. W. Turner for the applicants.

Gore-Browne, K.C., and Whinney for Green.

Maugham, K.C., and Owen Thompson for Hopkinson.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 25, 1917. EYE, J., read the following judgment: In the month of January, 1916, the respondent Cyril O. J. Hopkinson sold to Mortimer, Harley & Co., Ltd., in whose employ he then was as a general manager, 930 fully-paid deferred ordinary shares of £5 each in the capital of the Indo-China Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., for sums amounting in all to £18,541 17s. 6d. Of these shares, 870 were transferred to the purchasers or their nominees, but in respect of the remaining sixty all they received was the certificate and a transfer in blank executed by the vendor. To this transfer I shall have occasion to refer more particularly by and by, but in order to explain the attitude which the vendor, who does not dispute that he has been paid for the shares and who sets up no title to retain the same on the ground of lien or otherwise, has since adopted, I interrupt the narrative of events to state that immediately after this transaction of sale and purchase the purchasers purported to determine Hopkinson's engagement as their manager and commenced proceedings against him, alleging that in this and other transactions he acted in breach of his duty towards them, and in these proceedings, still pending in the King's Bench Division, Hopkinson by counterclaim seeks to recover a large sum as damages for wrongful dismissal and in respect of other matters of which he complains. This position of affairs he treats as a sufficient justification for his opposing on technical grounds the making of any order on this summons which would have the effect of transferring to the nominee of the purchaser the shares which he sold to them and for which they paid him the purchase price.

I resume the statement of facts. Early in April the purchasers filled in the name of the respondent Frank Ernest Green—a clerk in their employ—as transferee in the transfer executed by Hopkinson, and about May 20, the transfer with the certificate of the sixty shares was lodged with the Navigation company for registration. This company, in accordance with its usual practice, gave notice of the lodging of the transfer to the transferor, and, on his raising an objection to the registration being proceeded with, some correspondence followed, and the matter was allowed to fall into abeyance for a time. The subsequent events are disclosed in a letter of Nov. 16, addressed by the solicitors of the Navigation Co. to Mr. Hopkinson's solicitors in which they write:

"In May last, when the transfer to Mr. Green was put forward, our clients communicated with Mr. Hopkinson in the usual way, and at his request promised to delay registration of the transfer until they heard further from him. Owing, however, to changes of staff in London, this correspondence was overlooked and the transfer was passed and Mr. Green's name was placed upon the register in July. The new certificate has not been handed to him, however,

A and, on the correspondence with Mr. Hopkinson being discovered, the London secretaries, being under the impression that the registration of Mr. Green might not be justified, in fact amended the register. We are advised, however, that this amendment is nugatory and that Mr. Green is, therefore, the registered owner of the shares, and it is consequently proposed to hand the certificate over to him unless within fourteen days your client takes steps to establish his right to the shares."

B Hopkinson's advisers in reply to this communication declined to accede to the view that the striking out of Green's name was nugatory, and, after stating their opinion that Hopkinson was then on the register and that there was therefore nothing for him to do, they concluded thus:

C "If Mr. Green wishes to be registered as the owner of the shares, he has a very simple remedy by application to the court by originating summons to be placed on the register, and this we submit is the proper course for him to pursue."

But neither Green nor Hopkinson would move in the matter, and, after waiting for some weeks, the company issued this summons under s. 32 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, and served it upon both of them asking for an order that, notwithstanding the claim of Hopkinson to be the owner of the shares, the company may be authorised to restore Green's name to the register as the holder thereof. In other words, the company applies to the court under s. 32 (1) to rectify the register by reinserting therein the name which was improperly struck out of, and is now without sufficient cause omitted from, the register, and on such application the court has power under s. 32 (3) to decide any question relating to the title of any person who is a party to the application to have his name entered in or omitted from the register. I point this out because one objection raised on Hopkinson's behalf was that, in view of the attitude adopted by the company in treating Green as the registered holder, there were no grounds for any application under the section by the company or Green, and that, in the absence of an application by Hopkinson, there was nothing to discuss, and the summons ought therefore to be dismissed. But in my opinion there is nothing in this objection. If it is a good answer to the company's summons, it would be an equally good one to a summons by Green, but had he been the applicant it could hardly have been advanced seriously in view of the challenge contained in the letter from Hopkinson's solicitors and the invitation to Green to adopt this very procedure. But the short and conclusive answer to the objection is this, that the section is brought into operation as soon as there is a person alleging himself to be aggrieved by an improper entry in or omission from the register, and thereupon it is open to the person so aggrieved or to the company, or to any member of the company, to come to the court under the section. Hopkinson had taken up the position of the person aggrieved some weeks before the summons was issued, and in these circumstances I have no doubt that the application is properly made, and that I have jurisdiction to determine the rights of the respondents upon the summons.

H Returning now to the transfer which Hopkinson signed and handed with the certificate to Mortimer, Harley & Co., it is under seal, and it is not disputed that as a deed it is void and inoperative by reason of the additions made in it subsequent to its execution by Hopkinson, but the articles of association of the Navigation company do not require shares to be transferred by deed, but by an instrument in writing in the usual common form signed both by the transferor and transferee, and it is conceded that when Hopkinson took the purchase moneys and handed the blank transfer and certificate to Mortimer, Harley & Co. he must be taken to have agreed to transfer the shares and to have authorised them to complete the transaction by such additions to the document as would enable them to have the shares legally vested in them or their nominees or assignees. He cannot and does not complain in these circumstances of the insertion of Green's name as transferee, but his point is that, in inserting 10s.

I

instead of the true purchase price as the consideration for the transfer, Mortimer, Harley & Co. or Green acted in excess of or contrary to any implied power or authority conferred on them or him by the delivery of the transfer, and that it is now competent for him to set up the case that the transfer so completed does not and cannot confer any right on the transferee to be registered as the legal owner of the shares. I think there are several answers to this objection. In the first place, there is no evidence that the amount of the consideration was not already inserted when the transfer was handed to Mortimer, Harley & Co. It is true, on the other hand, that there is no evidence that it was, but this is accounted for by the fact that Hopkinson never suggested this particular objection until the summons came on to be heard, and the doubt could not then be cleared up as Green is absent on active service in the Navy, and the consideration and other written matter in the transfer is in his handwriting.

But, even assuming that the incorrect consideration was filled in after Hopkinson had executed and handed over the transfer, and that the transfer was, therefore, inadequately stamped with a duty of 10s., and inoperative while so inadequately stamped as a transfer, I cannot see how Hopkinson, with the full consideration money in his pocket and without attempting to set up any right or title to or any interest in the shares, could have been heard in this court successfully to assert the right to remain on the register in respect of the shares in breach of the contract of sale evidenced by his execution of the document and admitted by him to have been made. No doubt had he, or, for that matter, anybody else, given notice to the Navigation company that the consideration was not truly disclosed and that the transfer was not duly stamped according to law, the directors of that company would have refused to register the transfer (see Maynard v. Consolidated Kent Collieries Corpn. (1) until satisfied on the point; but this refusal could, and, of necessity, would, have been withdrawn on their being satisfied that the proper duty had been paid, and thereupon, without any further reference to Hopkinson, the transfer would have been registered. The fact that, as between the Navigation company and Green the former could properly have refused to register the transfer so long as it was insufficiently stamped could not, in my opinion, entitle Hopkinson to maintain the attitude that the transfer was void and his signature a nullity. The most he could do was to assert that which was undoubtedly the fact, that the registration of the transfer while inadequately stamped could not operate to bring about a legal transfer of the shares into the name of the transferee. But the fact is that the Navigation company, so far from having notice of the insufficiency of the stamp duty paid on the transfer, were informed by a declaration subscribed by the manager of Mortimer, Harley & Co. and by Green that it was sufficiently stamped with a 10s. stamp, and thereupon registered the transfer and inscribed Green's name in the register as the holder of the shares. Although for reasons unconnected with this question of the stamp duty his name was subsequently struck out, this striking out was a wholly unauthorised act and must be disregarded. The transfer was subsequently stamped with the proper ad valorem duty, and the penalty for neglect to do this in the first instance has been paid. The position, therefore, when the summons came on to be heard was this, that Green's name was on the register, and the transfer by virtue of which Hopkinson's name was taken off and Green's entered had been validated by the payment of the additional duty. In these circumstances it is, in my opinion, impossible for Mr. Hopkinson to claim, as in effect he does, to have Green's name struck out and his own restored, and I make the order for which the company asks in the summons, and I further order Hopkinson to pay the costs of the company and of Green.

Solicitors: Freshfields; Wansey, Stammers & Co.; Atkey, Clarke & Atkey.

[Reported by W. P. PAINE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

Re DEBTOR (No. 686 of 1916)

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Warrington and Scrutton, L.JJ.), March 2, 1917]

B

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 60; 86 L.J.K.B. 745; 116 L.T. 581;
[1917] H.B.R. 123]

Bankruptcy—Receiving order—Moneylender's petition—Re-opening of transaction—Debt exceeding £50 after allowance for relief—Moneylenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict., c. 51), s. 1—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 1 (1) (g), s. 3, s. 4.

C

On a petition in bankruptcy for a receiving order by a moneylender founded on non-compliance with a bankruptcy notice in respect of a judgment obtained against the debtor, although the judgment cannot be set aside nor its due execution be restrained, the registrar has power to re-open the transaction and give relief under the Moneylenders Act, 1900, but if after allowance for such relief there still remains a debt due to the petitioning creditor amounting to £50 or more, a receiving order ought to be made on the petition. An adjournment of the hearing to allow the petition to be amended and re-presented so as to state the true figures, the registrar having found that there remained a debt of over £50, held not to be a judicial exercise of his discretion.

D

Notes. Applied: Re Debtor (No. 549 of 1928), [1928] All E.R. Rep. 505; Re Debtor (No. 21 of 1937), Petitioning Creditor v. Debtor, [1938] 2 All E.R. 356.

As to adjournment of the hearing of a bankruptcy petition, see 2 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 309 et seq., and for cases see 4 DIGEST (Repl.) 159 et seq. As to bankruptcy proceedings for moneylenders' loans, see 27 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 46, and for cases see 35 DIGEST 212 et seq. For the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 1 (1) (g), s. 5 (2), s. 109 (2), see 2 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 325, 333, 420; for the Moneylenders Act, 1900, s. 1, see 16 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 370, and for provisions as to bankruptcy proceedings for moneylenders' loans, see Moneylenders Act, 1927, s. 9, 16 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 390.

F

Cases referred to:

G

(1) Re Debtor, Ex parte Debtor, [1903] 1 K.B. 382; 88 L.T. 401; 51 W.R. 370; 19 T.L.R. 288; 47 Sol. Jo. 334; 10 Mans. 130, C.A.; 4 Digest (Repl.) 356, 3236.

(2) Wilton & Co. v. Osborn, [1901] 2 K.B. 110; 70 L.J.K.B. 507; 84 L.T. 694; 17 T.L.R. 431; 35 Digest 212, 375.

H

(3) Re Gentry, [1910] 1 K.B. 825; 79 L.J.K.B. 585; 102 L.T. 553; 54 Sol. Jo. 377; 17 Mans. 104; sub nom. Re Debtor, Ex parte Petitioning Creditors and Official Receiver, 26 T.L.R. 374, C.A.; 4 Digest (Repl.) 128, 1142.

(4) Re Vitoria, Ex parte Vitoria, [1894] 2 Q.B. 387; 63 L.J.Q.B. 795; 71 L.T. 48; 42 W.R. 529; 10 T.L.R. 491; 38 Sol. Jo. 532; 1 Mans. 236; 9 R. 536, C.A.; 4 Digest (Repl.) 145, 1306.

I

(5) Re Fraser, Ex parte Central Bank of London, [1892] 2 Q.B. 633; 67 L.T. 401; 36 Sol. Jo. 714; 9 Morr. 256, C.A.; 4 Digest (Repl.) 353, 3214.

(6) Re Lennor, Ex parte Lennor (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 315; 55 L.J.Q.B. 45; 54 L.T. 452; 34 W.R. 51; 2 T.L.R. 60; 2 Morr. 271, C.A.; 4 Digest (Repl.) 355, 3231.

Also referred to in argument:

Re Lowe, Ex parte Low (1830), 62 L.T. 263; 38 W.R. 560; 6 T.L.R. 201; 7 Morr. 25, D.C.; 4 Digest (Repl.) 128, 1145.

Appeal by petitioning creditor from the decision of the registrar in bankruptcy refusing to make a receiving order against the debtor and adjourning the petitioning creditor's petition. A

The facts appear from the judgment.

E. W. Hansell, for the petitioning creditor.

A. S. Comyns Carr for the debtor.

LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—This is an appeal by the petitioning creditor raising a curious and an important point of law. B

The petitioning creditor is a moneylender. He had had several transactions with the debtor which resulted in this—that there were cash advances made by the petitioning creditor to the debtor with respect to which some small sums have been paid off, but a large amount of interest was calculated. Judgment was obtained for an amount, in round figures, of £710 in December, 1915, and a bankruptcy notice was served for the amount of the judgment debt, following, in that respect, precisely the language of the Act. That bankruptcy notice was for an amount of £660, giving credit for certain sums which had been paid off. That bankruptcy notice was not complied with, and, therefore, on Dec. 23, there was an available act of bankruptcy. That has not been really questioned. A petition was presented on Dec. 27, in the usual form, based upon the act of bankruptcy—namely, the non-compliance with the bankruptcy notice. No attempt was made to impeach the validity of the bankruptcy notice. I do not mean it to be supposed by saying that, that I think in the circumstances of this case the bankruptcy notice could not have been questioned. However it was not questioned, even if it could be. But the debtor, when the application came on for a receiving order, gave notice to dispute the debt, and she said that these moneylending transactions were "harsh and unconscionable" within the meaning of the Moneylenders Act, 1900, and that is her defence. On the "harsh and unconscionable" point the learned registrar thought that it was established. But, he said, looking merely at the actual cash advances, giving credit for every payment which the debtor has made as against the capital, saying nothing today about interest at all, that he was satisfied that there was much more than £50—£440 I think was his figure, £280 of which was for principal only. But the registrar said that he thought that the debtor had been attacked by the moneylender in a manner which was not quite fair and right, because he put the debtor's judgment debt at a figure which might, in proper proceedings, be reduced. C D E F

Of course the registrar in bankruptcy cannot set aside the judgment; he cannot restrain an execution upon the judgment. But, according to the decision of this court in Re Debtor (1), he can say, and, in the view of the Court of Appeal, ought to say, that, if there is any question whether the petitioning creditor's debt will, when the Moneylenders Act, 1900, is applied to it, be below £50, that destroys the right of the petitioning creditor altogether. That case came before this court nearly fourteen years ago. It is quite true that the main point that was decided in that case was the very important one whether the view taken by RIDLEY, J., in Wilton & Co. v. Osborn (2) was right, to the effect that, under the Moneylenders Act, 1900, no transaction could be set aside unless it was such that a court of equity would have set it aside. That decision was disapproved in this court (in Re Debtor (1)) and it is now established as the settled law that a harsh and unconscionable transaction can be set aside, even if it is not such that a court of equity would have given relief. In Re Debtor (1) the petitioning creditor's debt was £60, more or less, and it was there alleged that interest had been charged on one loan at the rate of 200 per cent. per annum, and on another loan at not less than 80 per cent., and there was the strongest possible ground on the face of things for saying that a debt of £60 would, as a matter of fact, be reduced below £50. And this court held, and the decision binds us, that as to the right to combine the Bankruptcy G H I

A Act proceedings with the application under the Moneylenders Act, 1900, the Court of Bankruptcy is a court which can and ought to consider this reduction. We did not send the case back to the registrar to consider what was the amount due, but only to consider whether the amount due to the petitioning creditor amounted to £50, that being one of the statutory conditions required before the petition can be presented. The order made by this court is quit clear upon that point. That is the only order of the court.

B The specific point raised in the present case does not seem to have been argued in the Court of Appeal in Re Debtor (1). Our attention was directed to the much more important point of the general operation of the Act. But, nevertheless, in that case there seems to be a clear decision upon the point. It was not a mere dictum. It was necessary to the decision itself—namely, that, for the purpose of seeing whether the statutory requirements, without compliance with which no receiving order can be made, had in fact been complied with. We did not say, and, in my view, we could not with any propriety say, that it is the registrar's duty on the petition at this stage to find what is the amount in pounds, shillings, and pence, of the moneylender's debt in respect of which he may be ultimately entitled to prove. We simply said: Let it go back to the registrar to see whether the first of the statutory conditions has been established; namely, Is there a debt due to the petitioning creditor amounting to £50? If there is not, then, of course, the petition is dismissed; if there is, then the petition will stand. But the registrar has said that, under the circumstances, although he thought that there was more than £50 due, assuming everything else in favour of the debtor, he would not make an order now. He would let the petition stand over to be amended and re-presented, stating the true figures, and then to come on again.

E Was that an exercise of discretion, which exercise is not appealable? In my opinion, plainly it was not. It is put only upon a ground which seems to me to be quite untenable. The registrar states the right figure and that if the case comes on on an amended petition, possibly the debtor may pay the money. But the petitioning creditor is not bound to receive that money. The act of bankruptcy is not disputed. He cannot be required to receive the money from the debtor after the service of the notice of the act of bankruptcy. Then it is said that the debtor's friends may come forward. If they come forward, not as mere aliases for the debtor but really as friends, I dare say the petitioning creditor will not be indisposed to accept the money. But that is not put before us. Can it be an exercise of a judicial discretion to say that the petition must be directed to stand over in order that it may be amended because, as counsel for the debtor said, and he has argued his case with great ability, there is a distinct hope that some of the debtor's friends may come forward? That is not a ground for refusing a receiving order in the circumstances. This is not a case of fraud. It is not a case under which no debt at all exists. It is, as it seems to me, within the principle of the decision in Re Gentry (3) and I think, therefore, that the appeal succeeds, and that the order of the learned registrar must be reversed.

H WARRINGTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

I The petitioning creditor in the present case is a moneylender. He brought an action against the debtor for the amount due from the debtor to him in accordance with the bargain that they had made. He recovered judgment for the amount so due. No question was raised in that action as to the transaction being "harsh and unconscionable" within the meaning of the Moneylenders Act, 1900. The debtor paid certain sums in part discharge of the debt. The petitioning creditor then served a bankruptcy notice in respect of the balance due under the judgment. That notice was not complied with. No steps were taken with a view of disputing the validity of the notice or with a view of disputing the validity of the judgment, and it is not suggested that the judgment was obtained by fraud. Under those circumstances there was, on the bankruptcy notice not being complied with, an available act of bankruptcy and it was competent for the present petitioning creditor, or for any creditor whose debt amounted to £50 to present a petition in bankruptcy. In the present case the petitioner was the judgment creditor, who had served the bankruptcy notice and he presented his petition. In it he alleged that the debtor was indebted to him in the balance then remaining due under the judgment. The petition came on for hearing.

It seems to me that things were then in this position: Either the registrar had power, on the hearing of the petition, to re-open the transaction and say whether it was "harsh and unconscionable," and, if he thought it was, then to reduce the amount claimed by the creditor, or he had no such power. If he had no such power, then the creditor has proved his debt by putting in his judgment, by showing the amounts paid in part discharge of it and thus establishing that he is a creditor for the balance. It would have been open to the registrar, of course, to accept evidence that further sums besides those alleged by the creditor had been paid in part discharge, and, in particular, he might have found, if he had so chosen, that the £250 said to have been paid as a bonus had really been paid in part discharge of the judgment debt. Even if he had taken that course, however, the creditor would have proved a liquidated debt for a sum exceeding £50. But, taking it the other way, assuming that the registrar had power to consider whether the transaction was "harsh and unconscionable," and, if he thought it was, then to re-open it and fix the amount which ought to be paid, even in that view the petitioning creditor has still to establish a debt of £50.

It seems to me that, under those circumstances, the petitioning creditor has done all that was necessary for him to do in order to require the court to make the receiving order, which is, after all, not an order made in favour of the petitioning creditor only, but for the protection of the assets for the benefit of all the creditors, in order that they may be duly administered in bankruptcy. Notwithstanding the position, which I think was the true position, the registrar adjourned the petition, and he adjourned it for a reason which he specified in his judgment, and it is said that that was such an exercise of his discretion that this court, cannot or ought not to interfere with it. With regard to the last point, I have nothing to add to what has been said by the Master of the Rolls. I agree with what he has said as to that. I think that there was no sufficient amount of exercise of discretion by the registrar, and there being, in this case, sufficient for a good act of bankruptcy, the debt exceeding £50, he ought to have made the receiving order.

SCRUTTON, L.J.—Probably owing to my lack of familiarity with the subject. I have felt very great doubt during the hearing of this case, and my doubt has not been lessened by the fact that I entirely sympathise with the order that the registrar made, and I think that there was a great deal of sound common sense behind it. I have come to the conclusion, however, that I am bound by two decisions of the Court of Appeal to concur in the judgments which have just been given. But, as the authorities, in my view, are not in a satisfactory position I propose to state the reasons why I come to the conclusion that I have done.

The debtor, a lady, borrowed money from a moneylender, who obtained judgment against her for a sum of £710. As far as I can see, having tried a good many money-lending cases, up to the time when he got judgment there was nothing in the figures which suggested harshness or unconscionableness. At any rate, compared with many figures that I have seen, they appear to be quite reasonable. After the judgment was obtained for £710 the lady brought £300 to the moneylender and then he did what does seem to me a thoroughly outrageous thing. He took £40 off the debt and £10 for costs and he purported to appropriate the other £250—he did not quite know what it was himself, because he sometimes calls it interest and he sometimes calls it a bonus—as a consideration for giving her three months' further time for paying the debt. That does work out at something like 200 per cent., and I think that is a thoroughly oppressive and "harsh and unconscionable"

A transaction. She did not pay any more money. Thereupon, having given her a bankruptcy notice for the amount of the judgment, the moneylender applied for a receiving order by a bankruptcy petition. No objection was taken to the bankruptcy notice as such. But notice was given that, on the hearing of the petition, the debtor would raise the question of relief under the Moneylenders Act, 1900. Sub-section (3) of s. 1 of the Moneylenders Act, 1900, provides:

B "On any application relating to the admission or amount of a proof by a money-lender in any bankruptcy proceedings, the court may exercise the like powers as may be exercised under this section when proceedings are taken for the recovery of money."

C I confess that, left to myself, I should have had some difficulty in getting out of that section a power, on a bankruptcy petition, to consider the amount of the petitioning debt. But I find that the Court of Appeal have succeeded, by some benevolent construction which is rather beyond me, in arriving at the conclusion that it does apply to proceedings on a bankruptcy petition. For in Re Debtor (1) the court did send the case back to a registrar who had made a receiving order for him to consider the question whether there was a petitioning creditor's debt, having regard to the powers of the Moneylenders Act. Neither in the report in the LAW D REPORTS nor in the other report which I have looked at is there any trace that the meaning of sub-s. (3) of s. 1 of the Moneylenders Act, 1900, was argued upon. That sub-section is not mentioned in either report. But the Court of Appeal could not have made the order it did unless it had considered that that section—and I think that I am bound by that decision—did give power to the registrar, on the hearing of a petition for a receiving order, to consider the question whether having regard E to the relief which can be given under the Moneylenders Act, 1900, there is a petitioning creditor's debt.

The next question, on which I feel considerable difficulty, is, What are the powers exactly of the registrar? One thing seems quite clear, and that is that the judgment stands. The registrar cannot alter the judgment. There is still a F judgment for £710, and if the petitioning creditor proceeded to put in execution for the judgment for £710, nothing that the Bankruptcy Court did would affect the matter in the slightest. The execution would still go if there is a good judgment, and the Bankruptcy Court has no power to interfere with it. Therefore, on the authorities, the decision of the registrar whether there is or is not a good judgment is not res judicata, because the matter may be raised again by any subsequent G proceedings. One would have thought, under these circumstances, but for the decision of the Court of Appeal in Re Debtor (1) that the registrar had nothing to do with the amount of a debt. Apart from the authorities, if an unfair use is being made of a judgment, where you have a judgment which could be reduced under the Moneylenders Act, 1900, and you propose to enforce it by bankruptcy, I can understand the Court of Bankruptcy saying: "We will not give you this remedy; H take all the other remedies you can get, but we will not give you this remedy."

I But I find that, at any rate in two cases, the Court of Appeal has used language which shows that they think the registrar can, on these proceedings, find out what the amount of the debt is. Both of those authorities are judgments of LORD ESHER. In Re Vitoria, Ex parte Vitoria (4), LORD ESHER, M.R., pointed out very much what I have been saying about the position of a judgment in regard to the registrar's powers. His Lordship said ([1894] 2 Q.B. at p. 390):

"Suppose that the registrar should come to the conclusion that the judgment was obtained by fraud; he would then have power to say that he would not make a receiving order. But he would have no power to set aside the judgment or to stay execution upon it. The authority of a registrar in bankruptcy depends entirely upon the Bankruptcy Act, and he has no power to set aside or to review a judgment. But the Court of Bankruptcy can refuse to make a receiving order in respect of a judgment which it cannot set aside."

In the other case, Re Fraser, Ex parte Central Bank of London (5), LORD ESHER, M.R., said (9 Morr. at pp. 260, 261):

"The mere fact that there is a judgment in law does not prevent the registrar from considering whether there was a good petitioning creditor's debt. The Bankruptcy Court can go behind the judgment and enquire into the liability on which the debt was founded. The Bankruptcy Court does not set aside the judgment and is not called upon to do so. It goes round the judgment and enquires into the subject-matter on which the judgment is founded. It might perhaps be said that on s. 4 (1) (g) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the judgment is to govern the matter, but when we come to s. 7 it shows that even if there is a judgment the court may not be satisfied that the case is one in which it ought to make a receiving order. That was clearly decided in Re Lennor, Ex parte Lennor (6), where it was held that the Court of Bankruptcy has power to go behind a judgment and enquire into the consideration for the judgment debt, not only at the instance of the trustee in the bankruptcy of the debtor upon the question of the proof of the debt, but also at the instance of the judgment debtor himself upon the hearing of a petition by the judgment creditor for a receiving order, even though the debtor has consented to the judgment; and if on the hearing of the petition facts are alleged by the debtor, of which evidence is rendered, and which, if proved, would show that, notwithstanding the judgment, there is, by reason of fraud or otherwise, no real debt, the court ought not to make a receiving order without first enquiring into the truth of the debtor's allegations. That rule of conduct is put on the highest ground, that you are not dealing simply between a man and his creditor, but you are interfering with the rights of other creditors. Therefore it was said that the court ought not to exercise its tremendous power unless it was perfectly satisfied there is a good petitioning creditor's debt irrespective of the judgment."

I take that to be a decision of the Court of Appeal, which binds me, that although there is one debt under the judgment with which the registrar cannot interfere, he may enquire whether there is another debt—a different debt from the judgment debt—which is a good petitioning creditor's debt, by which I suppose is meant a debt amounting to £50. The effect of such a finding apparently would be only very limited. It would not interfere with the extent of the other debt under the judgment or the remedies of the other debt under the judgment. But it would say that, for the purposes of the bankruptcy, apart from the judgment, there is a debt of £50 in respect of which a remedy in bankruptcy can be given, though it cannot be given in respect of the amount for which it is being claimed. I confess that that curious limited new debt brought into existence does seem to me rather an anomaly. But I am bound by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Re Debtor (1), which clearly recognises the possibility to say that the registrar can inquire into, not the judgment debt, but whether, behind the judgment debt, there is a good debt amounting to £50. In that case which was sent back to the registrar I see that he found that there was no such debt, because the petition was dismissed. In the present case the registrar, having considered the matter, has found that there is a debt of over £50. As far as I can see, the fact that it is £440 does not bind anybody, except for the purpose of saying that it is more than £50. But he has found that there is a debt of over £50. The next stage is this. Counsel for the debtor says the registrar has a discretion to adjourn the petition, and that he was quite justified in adjourning it in order that the debtor might have an opportunity of paying. The registrar said that an excessive sum having been previously claimed against the debtor, he would give her a chance of paying the sum which he really found due. I think that the decisions to which my brothers have referred—particularly Re Gentry (3)—show that if one has got a good petitioning creditor's debt, the creditor cannot be forced to take it, and an adjournment simply for the

A purpose of allowing a tender to be made to him is not a matter which the registrar ought to allow. For those reasons, which I have endeavoured to state as fully as I could, because I do not think the matter is at all satisfactory at present, I concur in the judgment which has been given by my brothers, and I think that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

B Solicitors : A. H. Freeman; Fladgate & Co.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

WEDD v. PORTER AND OTHERS

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Pickford and Bankes, L.JJ.), March 7, 8, 9, April 11, 1916]

D

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 91; 85 L.J.K.B. 1298; 115 L.T. 243]

Landlord and Tenant—Yearly tenancy—Holding over—Agreement that no terms of expiring lease should apply to tenancy—Agreement as to yearly rent—Implication in tenancy of such terms as law implied in such a tenancy.

E

Sale of Land—Covenant running with reversion—Purchase of land subject to yearly tenancy—Tenancy subject to implied conditions—Right of purchaser to recover for breaches before date of conveyance.

F

It is a question of fact in every case whether a tenant who holds over as a yearly tenant does so upon the terms of the expired lease. If the facts do not exclude an implied agreement to hold upon the terms of the old lease, the law implies a new agreement between the parties under which the tenant holds subject to all the covenants in the lease which are applicable to a yearly tenancy.

G

On the termination of a lease for fourteen years of an agricultural property the tenant held over as a yearly tenant. The parties agreed that no term of the lease should apply to the yearly tenancy, but no terms of the tenancy were agreed save that the tenant should pay £850 a year rent. On the death of the landlord his executors conveyed the property to the plaintiff. On a claim by the plaintiff against the tenant for damages for breach of the covenants of the lease which, he alleged, were to be implied in the yearly tenancy,

H

Held: (i) the evidence showing that an implied agreement between the parties to hold over on the terms of the lease must be excluded, the additional terms to be implied in the tenancy were those which the law implied in such a tenancy, namely, that the tenant must keep the buildings wind and water tight and cultivate the land in a husbandlike manner according to the custom of the country : (ii) the plaintiff was entitled to enforce the covenants implied in the tenancy (per SWINFEN EADY, L.J.) as assignee of the reversion, and (per curiam) because the relationship of landlord and tenant had been established between him and the tenant as from the date of the conveyance of the property to him.

I

Per SWINFEN EADY, L.J. : The plaintiff was entitled to maintain a claim against the tenant for such breaches of the implied obligations as had occurred since the conveyance to him, but he could not recover for any breaches before that date as a cause of action which had accrued to the vendor did not pass to him under the conveyance.

Notes. Considered : Blanc v. Francis, [1917] 1 K.B. 252; Cole v. Kelly, [1920] All E.R. Rep. 537; Warren v. Keen, [1953] 2 All E.R. 118. Referred to : Barnes v. City of London Real Property Co., [1918] 2 Ch. 18; Rye v. Purcell, [1925] All

E.R. Rep. 448; Snowdon v. Ecclesiastical Comrs., [1934] All E.R. Rep. 779; Re United Railways of the Havana and Regla Warehouses, Ltd., [1959] 1 All E.R. 214; Rhyl U.D.C. v. Rhyl Amusements, Ltd., [1959] 1 All E.R. 257; Longmuir v. Kew, [1960] 3 All E.R. 26.

As to holding over on a yearly tenancy and covenants running with the reversion. see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 515, 516, 649, 650, and for cases see 31 Digest (Repl.) 53-56, 58-61, 149 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Hgatt v. Griffiths (1851), 17 Q.B. 505; 18 L.T.O.S. 74; 117 E.R. 1375; 31 Digest (Repl.) 59, 2158.
- (2) Oakley v. Monck (1806), L.R. 1 Exch. 159; 4 H. & C. 251; 35 L.J.Exch. 87; 14 L.T. 20; 30 J.P. 180; 12 Jur. N.S. 213; 14 W.R. 406, Ex.Ch.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 58, 2147.
- (3) Digby v. Atkinson (1815), 4 Camp. 275, N.P.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 58, 2152.
- (4) Horsefall v. Mather (1815), Holt, N.P. 7, N.P.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 349, 4798.
- (5) Powley v. Walker (1793), 5 Term. Rep. 373; 101 E.R. 208; 2 Digest (Repl.) 52, 271.
- (6) Onslow v. — (1809), 16 Ves. 173; 33 E.R. 949, L.C.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 398, 5266.
- (7) Auworth v. Johnson (1832), 5 C. & P. 239, N.P.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 395, 5227.
- (8) Leach v. Thomas (1835), 7 C. & P. 327, N.P.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 396, 5229.
- (9) Standen v. Christmas (1847), 10 Q.B. 135; 16 L.J.Q.B. 265; 9 L.T.O.S. 169; 11 Jur. 694; 116 E.R. 53; 31 Digest (Repl.) 150, 2880.
- (10) Bickford v. Parson (1848), 5 C.B. 920; 17 L.J.C.P. 192; 11 L.T.O.S. 126; 12 Jur. 377; 136 E.R. 1141; 31 Digest (Repl.) 446, 5731.
- (11) Clayton v. Illingworth (1853), 10 Hare, 451; 68 E.R. 1603; 30 Digest (Repl.) 421, 641.
- (12) Manchester Brewery Co. v. Coombs, [1901] 2 Ch. 668; 70 L.J.Ch. 814; 82 L.T. 347; 16 T.L.R. 299; 30 Digest (Repl.) 421, 643.
- (13) Lewes v. Ridge (1601), Cro. Eliz. 863; 78 E.R. 1089; 31 Digest (Repl.) 472, 5983.
- (14) Canham v. Rust (1818), 2 Moore, C.P. 164; 8 Taunt. 227; 129 E.R. 370; 31 Digest (Repl.) 151, 2897.
- (15) Johnson v. Churchwardens of St. Peter, Hereford (1836), 4 Ad. & El. 520; 1 Har. & W. 720; 6 Nev. & M.K.B. 106; 5 L.J.K.B. 116; 111 E.R. 883; 31 Digest (Repl.) 59, 2162.
- (16) Williams v. Hayward (1859), 1 E. & E. 1040; 28 L.J.Q.B. 374; 33 L.T.O.S. 344; 5 Jur. N.S. 1417; 7 W.R. 563; 120 E.R. 1200; 31 Digest (Repl.) 292, 4286.

Also referred to in argument:

- Dougal v. McCarthy*, [1893] 1 Q.B. 736; 62 L.J.Q.B. 462; 68 L.T. 699; 57 J.P. 597; 41 W.R. 484; 9 T.L.R. 419; 4 R. 402, C.A.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 59, 2156.
- Smith v. Eggington* (1874), L.R. 9 C.P. 145; 43 L.J.C.P. 140; 30 L.T. 521; 31 Digest (Repl.) 150, 2882.
- Bridgland v. Shapter* (1839), 5 M. & W. 375; 8 L.J.Ex. 246; 151 E.R. 159; 31 Digest (Repl.) 29, 1871.
- Re Negus*, [1895] 1 Ch. 73; 64 L.J.Ch. 79; 71 L.T. 716; 43 W.R. 68; 39 Sol. Jo. 29; 13 R. 85; 30 Digest (Repl.) 473, 1153.
- Rickett v. Green*, [1910] 1 K.B. 253; 79 L.J.K.B. 193; 102 L.T. 16, D.C.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 258, 3940.
- Martin v. Smith* (1874), L.R. 9 Exch. 50; 43 L.J.Ex. 42; 30 L.T. 268; 22 W.R. 336; 30 Digest (Repl.) 492, 1358.

- A Torkington v. Magee, [1902] 2 K.B. 427; 71 L.J.K.B. 712; 87 L.T. 304; 18 T.L.R. 703, D.C.; on appeal [1903] 1 K.B. 644; 72 L.J.K.B. 336; 88 L.T. 443; 19 T.L.R. 331, C.A.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 556, 98.
- Buckworth v. Simpson* (1835), 1 Ct. M. & R. 834; 1 Gale, 38; 5 Tyr. 344; 4 L.J.Exch. 104; 149 E.R. 1817; 30 Digest (Repl.) 469, 1107.
- B Cornish v. Stubbs (1870), L.R. 5 C.P. 334; 39 L.J.C.P. 202; 22 L.T. 21; 18 W.R. 547; 31 Digest (Repl.) 481, 6067.
- Martyn v. Williams* (1857), 1 H. & N. 817; 26 L.J.Ex. 117; 28 L.T.O.S. 321; 5 W.R. 351; 156 E.R. 1430; 31 Digest (Repl.) 153, 2910.

Appeal by the plaintiff from a decision of the Divisional Court (Ridley and SHEARMAN, JJ.), reported 113 L.T. 819.

C By a lease, dated Oct. 11, 1878, one William Butt demised certain farms known as the Corney Bury property in Hertfordshire to Isabella Porter, Frederick Charles Porter, and Albert Porter, for a term of fourteen years, at a rental of £1,301 7s. for the first seven years, and of £1,320 13s. 3d. for the remainder of the term. Under that lease the defendants covenanted:

D "The said lessees . . . shall and will from time to time during the said term and so often as need shall require at their . . . own costs, well and substantially paint, paper, whitewash, repair, and maintain, scour, cleanse, amend, and keep the mansion-house, farmhouses, offices, and other messuages and buildings standing upon the said demised premises (except the Corney Bury mansion-house and offices and the Corney Bury farmhouse, homestead, and buildings) and the fixtures therein and all the walls, gates, stiles, hedges, mounts, banks, bridges, fences, culverts, drains, and ditches belonging to the said farms and premises in by and with all manner of needful and proper reparations and amendments whatsoever, being allowed rough timber, brick, tiles, and lime to be furnished on or within fifteen miles of the said demised premises . . . and the same so well and substantially painted, papered, whitewashed, repaired, maintained, and scoured, cleansed, amended, and kept shall at the expiration or other sooner determination of the term hereby granted duly surrender and yield up unto the said lessor, his heirs and assigns, damage by accidental fire or tempest excepted."

G The lease further provided that the lessees would to the satisfaction of the lessor every fifth year paint all such parts of the wood, iron, and stone work of the exterior of the said messuages and buildings as had been heretofore painted, and would tar such parts as had been tarred, and also in the seventh year, and again in the last year of the said term, would paint, paper, &c., all such parts of the inside of the said messuages and buildings as were then painted, &c. The lessees were also to keep and maintain the lands and grounds . . . in good heart and condition, and well farmed and well weeded," to "cultivate and manage the same in a husband-like manner, and according to the most improved system of husbandry in that part of the country where the said demised premises are situate, used, and followed . . ." and "from time to time replant with quick plants all the vacant places in the hedges, and properly maintain and rear the same . . . open and scour out in the most effectual manner once at least in every year of the said term all the ditches on the said premises." Isabella Porter died during the term, and the two other lessees remained in occupation. On Sept. 29, 1892, the lease expired by effluxion of time. I but the surviving lessees remained in possession, and negotiations for a new tenancy which took place between the parties never came to anything. F. C. Porter died on Nov. 21, 1911, and his executors were defendants to the present action with the surviving lessee. William Butt died on Dec. 3, 1911. On Sept. 17, 1912, his executors gave the defendant, Albert Porter, notice determining the tenancy on Sept. 18, 1913. By two indentures dated Dec. 3, 1912, and Sept. 18, 1913, they conveyed the property to the plaintiff. On Sept. 18, 1913, the defendants received a notice from the executors of Mr. Butt notifying them of the fact that the plaintiff had bought the farms, &c., of which they were tenants, and requesting them to pay the rent as from Lady Day last to him "or as he may direct." The defendants paid the rent to the plaintiff, but without prejudice to any of their rights. On Sept. 19, 1913, the defendants served on the plaintiff a notice under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, s. 1, claiming compensation for improvements. Subsequently the plaintiff brought this action against the defendants claiming damages for breach of the covenants, terms, and conditions of the lease of Oct. 11, 1878, contending that the defendants were holding over under the terms of the lease in so far as they were applicable to a tenancy from year to year. The action was sent for trial before an official referee, and at the hearing it was agreed that he should try the question of liability before going into any questions as to the amount of damages. He held that the defendants were holding over as tenants from year to year under the terms of the lease of Oct. 11, 1878, so far as they were applicable to such a tenancy, and that after the notice it was impossible for the defendants to say that they did not recognise the plaintiffs as their landlord. He, accordingly, made a declaration whereby it was ordered and declared:

"That after the expiration of the lease granted by the indenture of the 11th day of Oct., 1878, the defendants or their predecessors in title held over from the 29th day of Sept., 1892, until the 29th day of Sept., 1913, as tenants from year to year of the farms and premises referred to in the pleadings upon the covenants, terms, and conditions in so far as applicable to a tenancy from year to year, and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendants damages for breach of the covenants, terms, and conditions of the said lease on the basis of such tenancy from year to year, and in particular that the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendants damages in respect of breaches of covenants, terms, and conditions dependent upon periodic occasions and happenings, in so far as such periodic occasions or happenings have taken place during the continuance of the said tenancy from year to year."

The Divisional Court held that the assignment of the reversion did not pass to the assignee the right to recover damages for breach of covenant to repair when the tenancy was by parol, the Grantees of Reversions Act, 1540 [repealed by Law of Property Act, 1925, of which see s. 141], only applying to leases under seal. The fact that the tenant had made a claim against the assignee of the reversion under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, did not amount to a recognition by the tenant of the assignee as his landlord so as to entitle the assignee to sue upon the covenant. Judgment was, accordingly, entered for the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed.

J. F. P. Rawlinson, K.C., and W. Hanbury Aggs for the plaintiff.

Disturnal, K.C., and W. Allen for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 11, 1916. The following judgments were read.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—The plaintiff claimed damages for the breach of an agreement of tenancy of certain farms, buildings, lands, and premises. The action was tried before an official referee, who made an order on April 27, 1915. [The lord justice read the order set out hereinbefore.] Upon motion by the defendants to a Divisional Court the order of the official referee was discharged, and it was ordered that the judgment be entered for the defendants. The plaintiff now appeals from this order of the Divisional Court. The plaintiff recently purchased the farms and premises in question from the representatives of the late William Butt, of Corney Bury in the county of Hertford. Part of the premises was conveyed to the plaintiff by deed dated Dec. 3, 1912, and the remainder by deed dated Sept. 18, 1913, and the defendants' yearly tenancy, whatever the conditions of it were, expired on Sept. 29, 1913, pursuant to a notice to quit given twelve months previously.

A The first question to be determined is: What were the terms and conditions of the tenancy from year to year upon which the defendants held the premises at the date of the plaintiff's purchase? The defendants and their predecessors had been in occupation of the farms and premises under Mr. Butt for many years. Mr. Butt had been an indulgent landlord, and extended liberal treatment to his old tenants. By a lease dated Oct. 11, 1878, William Butt demised to Isabella Porter, widow, B Frederick Charles Porter, and the defendant Albert Porter, Corney Bury mansion-house and lands, Corney Bury Farm, Throcking Farm, Bridgefort Farm, and certain maltings at Buntingford from Sept. 29, 1878, for the term of fourteen years, at the rent of £1,301 7s. during the first seven years and £1,330 19s. 3d. during the rest of the term. This lease expired at Michaelmas, 1892. No further document C has been signed by the parties putting into writing the terms of the tenancy subsequent to the expiration of this lease. Mrs. Isabella Porter died on Mar. 26, 1889. After her death Frederick Charles Porter and Albert Porter continued as tenants of the farms. Frederick Charles Porter died on Nov. 21, 1911, and the defendants D Eliza Porter and George Joseph Baysspool Porter are his executrix and executor. Although the rent reserved by the lease during the last seven years of the term was £1,330 19s. 3d. per annum, I gather, although the evidence is not very clear, that no such amount had been paid during the latter years of the term. After the expiration of the term the correspondence makes it clear that the tenants did not intend holding over upon the terms of the expired lease, nor did the landlord intend that they should. They agreed that the tenancy should not be on the old terms of the expired lease. There were discussions as to the terms of a new tenancy. E Mr. F. C. Porter even suggested to Mr. Butt's solicitor that perhaps it would be better for him to give up the whole of Corney Bury. He stated that he considered that the full annual value at that time did not exceed £650, and that he could not possibly find money enough to pay more than £800. There were also negotiations with regard to repairs, mode of cultivation, the shooting rights, and other matters. It is a question of fact in every case whether tenants holding over do so upon the terms of an expired lease: Hyatt v. Griffiths (1). If the true inference F of fact to be drawn is that the tenants do hold over upon the terms of an expired lease, so far as applicable to an annual tenancy, in law there is constituted a new agreement to that effect between the parties: Oakley v. Monck (2). Where tenants hold over after the expiration of a term, and the facts do not exclude an implied agreement to hold upon the terms of the old lease, then the law determines that they impliedly hold subject to all the covenants in the lease which are applicable G to the new situation: Digby v. Atkinson (3). The official referee stated in his judgment that it appeared fairly obvious that neither Mr. Butt nor the Porters were satisfied to go on upon the holding over under the lease of 1878, and, in my judgment, this was correct, and after the end of the lease neither party expressly or impliedly agreed to continue upon any of the terms contained in it. The negotiations for a new agreement proceeded a considerable way. Some of the new terms H for the proposed new tenancy were provisionally arranged, and counsel received written instructions to settle a new tenancy agreement from year to year, with proper covenants and conditions as to the proper keeping up of the farm in accordance with the custom of the country. Accordingly, a draft agreement was prepared, and was under consideration in the summer of 1894. Mr. F. C. Porter saw Mr. Butt's solicitor upon the draft, and marginal notes in the draft indicate the points I under discussion upon which they were not agreed. In August, 1894, Mr. Booty, the solicitor, again sent the draft to Mr. Porter in order that he might go through it again with his brother, and suggested a compromise with regard to two of the points in dispute—namely, that the landlord should give way on the question of taking two white crops in succession off 120 acres, and that the tenant should give way on the question of the restriction upon mowing the grass lands. It does not appear that this proposal was accepted by the tenants, or that the other outstanding questions were adjusted. No agreement was ever signed between the parties, nor was any draft agreement assented to. The result is that the parties agreed that the terms of the old lease should not apply, and never agreed upon the terms of any new arrangement, except that there should be a yearly tenancy at £850 a year, and this rent continued to be paid less voluntary abatements from time to time made by Mr. Butt. In my opinion, the official referee arrived at the right conclusion in determining that no agreement upon the terms of counsel's draft was ever arrived at. He, however, appears to have thought that, unless it was shown that this new express agreement had been come to, he was bound to hold that the terms of the old lease remained in force. This view is erroneous; the parties were agreed that the old terms were inapplicable. What actually happened was that the parties agreed upon a yearly tenancy at £850 rent, and, in default of having made any other agreement, the additional implied terms are those which the law implies on such a tenancy.

Having now stated what, in my judgment, were the terms upon which the tenancy subsisted between the parties, it remains to consider whether the plaintiff can lawfully maintain this action against the defendants upon any of the grounds alleged in the pleadings and not yet disposed of. A tenant from year to year of a farm and buildings at a fixed rent, who has not entered into any other express agreement with the landlord than as to the amount of rent, is under an obligation implied by law to use and cultivate the lands in a husbandlike manner, according to the custom of the country: Horsefall v. Mather (4), Powley v. Walker (5), Onslow v. — (6), subject to the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, and to keep the building wind and water tight: Auworth v. Johnson (7), Leach v. Thomas (8), but is not liable to "sustain and uphold the premises": Auworth v. Johnson (7). It is, however, objected that the plaintiff, as the assignee of the reversion, cannot enforce this liability against the defendants. It is said there is no lease by deed containing express covenants, and, therefore, the Act 32 Hen. 8, c. 34 [Grantees of Reversions Act, 1540: see now Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 141], does not assist the plaintiff: Standen v. Christmas (9), Bickford v. Parson (10). The plaintiff meets this objection by relying upon s. 10 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 [see Act of 1925, s. 141] and urged that now a writing not under seal would be sufficient. But this question does not really arise, as there is no writing, and no case for specific performance, and nothing to show that any instrument at all was ever intended to be executed or signed by the parties: see Clayton v. Illingworth (11); Manchester Brewery Co. v. Coombs (12).

The law, however, has always drawn a distinction between express and implied covenants and conditions. By rules of common law none but parties or privies to express covenants was bound by or could take advantage of them, and grantees of reversions were regarded in the light of strangers. If the grantee of a reversion could have maintained an action of covenant against the lessee upon his express covenant, the provision of the Act of 1540 would have been in a great degree unnecessary. But the statute refers only to express covenants, and not to covenants in law or implied covenants. The statute provides that grantees of reversions "shall and may have and enjoy all and every such like and the same advantage, benefit, and remedies by action only, for not performing of other conditions, covenants, or agreements contained and expressed in the indentures of their said leases."

The reason why the statute extended only to express covenants was that no such provision was necessary with regard to covenants in law or implied covenants. The law is thus stated in PLATT ON COVENANTS (1829), p. 532:

"Upon an implied covenant, however, an action at the suit of the assignee of the reversion was undoubtedly maintainable prior to the passing of that Act."

And so with conditions. In SHEPPARD'S TOUCHSTONES (8th Edn.), p. 140, note (y), it is thus stated:

A "It is a rule of the common law that no one can take advantage of the breach of an express condition but parties and privies in right and representation; as heirs, executors, or administrators of natural persons, and the successors of bodies politic; so that neither privies nor assignees in law, as lords by escheat, nor privies in estate, as persons in remainder, can enter for a condition broken. In the case, however, of conditions implied, or in law, privies and assignees in law may enter for breach of them. Thus LORD COKE says, if a man makes a lease for life, there is a condition in law annexed to it, that if the lessee creates a greater estate than for his own life the lessor may enter. Of this, and the like conditions in law, not only the lessor and his heirs may take the benefit, but also his assignee, as the lord by escheat."

C The reference to LORD COKE is to the first INSTITUTE (Co. Litt.), 215a, where that learned author treats of the "diversitie" or difference which existed at common law, and before the statute of Henry VIII, between conditions expressed in deeds and conditions in law or implied conditions.

D The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to maintain a claim against the defendants for such breaches (if any) of the implied obligations as have occurred since the conveyances to the plaintiff—that is to say, as to part of the property between Dec. 3, 1912, and Sept. 29, 1913, and as to the rest of the property between Sept. 18, 1913, and Sept. 29, 1913, when the tenancy expired. For any breaches which occurred before the conveyances the plaintiff cannot sue, as causes of action which had accrued to the vendor did not pass to the plaintiff by those deeds: Lewes v. Ridge (13); Canham v. Rust (14); Johnson v. Churchwardens of St. Peter, Hereford (15). The result to the parties is the same whether the benefit of the implied obligation passes to the plaintiff as assignee of the reversion, or whether he becomes entitled to it by virtue of the relationship of landlord and tenant constituted by the conveyances. Since the Administration of Justice Act, 1705, s. 9 [see now Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 151 (1)] attornment is no longer necessary, and upon conveyance the defendants became tenants to the plaintiff for the unexpired portion of the yearly tenancy, and were under the same implied obligations to the plaintiff as before conveyance they were under to his predecessor in title. These obligations spring, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, from the mere relationship of landlord and tenant. By force of the statute of Anne (Administration of Justice Act, 1705) there was the same privity between the plaintiff and the defendants, after the date of the respective conveyances, as if the defendants had actually attorned tenants to the plaintiff: Williams v. Hayward (16). The plaintiff has in his statement of claim duly claimed relief against the defendants upon this footing, and this claim has not yet been dealt with or adjudicated upon by the official referee, and the matter must go back to him to be disposed of. The proper order will be to allow the appeal and discharge the order of the Divisional Court, except so far as it discharged the order of the official referee; declare that the defendants are liable in damages to the plaintiff for breaches (if any) after the dates of the respective conveyances to the plaintiff of the implied obligations to keep the buildings wind and water-tight, and to use and cultivate the lands in a husband-like manner according to the custom of the country, subject to the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908 [see now Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948]. Each party has partly succeeded and partly failed, and the proper order as to costs will be for each side to bear his own costs in the Divisional Court and of this appeal. The costs of the former hearing before the official referee and of any further hearing pursuant to this order to be dealt with by the official referee.

I PICKFORD, L.J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgments of SWINFEN EADY and BANKES, L.JJ., in this case, and agree with them, and, therefore, I do not think it necessary to say more than a few words. I agree that on the evidence there was no tenancy from year to year on the terms of the old lease established, and that what took place was that the parties agreed that the tenancy should not be upon the old terms, but never arrived at a concluded agreement as to what the terms should be. The result is that the tenants continued to hold upon the terms of an ordinary tenancy from year to year—i.e., that they should cultivate the lands in a husbandlike manner according to the custom of the country, subject to the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, and keep the buildings wind and water-tight. These are the terms upon which the plaintiff thought that the tenants were holding, as is seen by his claim as originally framed, and the idea of a tenancy upon the terms of the original lease only arose on the lease coming to his knowledge in the course of the proceedings. The question then to be determined is whether the plaintiff is entitled to sue the defendants for a breach of those covenants implied by law. I think he is, because the defendants became his tenants by reason of the conveyance to the plaintiff of the lands occupied by them, and the terms of such tenancy were those implied by law in an ordinary yearly tenancy, no attornment being necessary since the passing of s. 9 of the Administration of Justice Act, 1705. It is not, therefore, necessary to decide the points raised upon s. 10 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and the right of an assignee of the reversion to sue upon covenants implied by law, but I agree with what has been said on the latter point. I think the judgment of the Divisional Court was wrong in so far as it entered judgment for the defendants, and that the case should go back to the official referee to assess the damages on the basis stated in the judgment of SWINFEN EADY, L.J.

BANKES, L.J., stated the facts and continued: Upon what terms must the tenants be considered to have continued in possession after the year 1894? The official referee held that as the tenants held over after the expiration of the lease, and no agreement had been established to take the place of the lease on its termination in 1892, the inference of law was that they held over as tenants from year to year upon the terms of the lease so far as they were applicable. The Divisional Court did not agree with this view. In my opinion, the Divisional Court were right. It is, I think, impossible to regard the negotiations of 1894 as absolutely without result. It is true that they did not result in complete agreement on all points, but it is, in my opinion, quite clear that they did result in complete agreement on one point, namely, that, if the tenants continued in occupation, it was to be as from Michaelmas, 1893, on terms different from those in the lease, and that the terms of the lease were no longer to apply to the tenancy. Under these circumstances, as the parties failed to agree upon any terms except the rent and the fact that the tenancy was to be a yearly one commencing at Michaelmas, 1893, the true inference, in my opinion, is that in all other respects the tenancy was one upon the terms implied by law as applicable to an agricultural tenancy of land and buildings, namely, that the tenant must keep the buildings wind and water-tight and cultivate the land in a husbandlike manner according to the custom of that country. The official referee appears to have attached importance to the fact that the course of dealing between the landlord and the tenants with regard to repairs appeared to him to have been the same, or much the same, after the year 1894 as it had been during the currency of the lease. This ceases to be of any importance when once the conclusion is arrived at that the parties did definitely agree not to continue the old relations; but in any event I do not regard the dealings of the parties in relation to repairs of any real importance, having regard to the indefinite position in which the tenants stood and to the extremely indulgent way in which the landlord appears to have treated them and the allowances he made them, in consideration of which the tenants may well have done small repairs which they were under no legal obligation to do. The conclusion at which I have arrived coincides with the view of the position originally taken by the plaintiff's advisers when the action was commenced. At that time the plaintiff's case was based upon alleged breaches of covenants implied by law, and it was only after the expired lease was discovered in the possession of the vendor's representatives that the

- A plaintiff alleged the existence of a yearly tenancy upon the terms of the lease as regards repairs. The plaintiff's claim to recover damages was rested in the statement of claim upon the relationship of landlord and tenant which was established between the plaintiff and the defendants upon and after the conveyances by the executors of the late Mr. Butt to the plaintiff of Dec. 3, 1912, and Sept. 18, 1913. This is, in my opinion, a true ground upon which the claim can be based,
- B but it entitles the plaintiff to relief only in respect of breaches of covenant committed after the relationship of landlord and tenant was established—that is to say, as to part of the premises between Dec. 3, 1912, and Sept. 29, 1913, and as to the remainder between Sept. 18 and 29, 1913. This, having regard to the nature of the covenants which are implied by law, must reduce the claim to very moderate proportions. As pointed out by SWINFEN EADY, L.J., the claim of the plaintiff
- C may be rested on the ground that covenants implied by law run with the reversion at common law. A claim so framed would not, however, extend the plaintiff's remedy, but would only leave him in the same position as he would be in under the claim as formulated in the statement of claim. In my opinion, the Divisional Court were wrong in directing judgment to be entered for the defendants, and I think the case must go back to the official referee to assess the damages on the
- D footing I have indicated. I agree with the order suggested by the lord justice.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., for G. A. Wootten, Cambridge; Farrar, Porter & Co.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

E

F

R. v. BRIGHT

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Darling, Bray and Horridge, JJ.), June 23, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 441; 85 L.J.K.B. 1638; 115 L.T. 488; 80 J.P. 407; 32 T.L.R. 600; 25 Cox, C.C. 540; 12 Cr. App. Rep. 69]

- G Criminal Law—Sentence—Plea of guilty—Evidence of motive—Aggravating circumstances—Accused liable to more severe sentence—Circumstances taken into account only if charged in indictment and proved or admitted.

H Where an accused person has pleaded guilty, the trial judge, before passing sentence, may hear evidence as to motive in order to decide on the accused's degree of culpability, but where aggravating circumstances render the accused liable to a more severe sentence under the provisions of a statute, such circumstances may not be taken into account in passing sentence unless they have been charged in the indictment and either proved to the satisfaction of the jury or admitted by the plea of guilty.

Notes. Referred to: R. v. Wheeler, [1917] 1 K.B. 283.

- I As to delivery of judgment in a criminal case, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 434, 435; and for cases see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 373, 374.

Cases referred to in argument:

R. v. Ellis (1826), 6 B. & C. 145; 9 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 174; 4 Dow. & Ry. M.C. 268; 5 L.J.O.S.M.C. 25; 108 E.R. 406; 14 Digest (Repl.) 417, 4062.

R. v. Hodgkinson and Manning (1900), 64 J.P. 808; 14 Digest (Repl.) 509, 4934.

Appeal against sentence.

The appellant pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with contraventions of reg. 18 of the Defence of the Realm (Consolidation) Regulations, 1914. In the first count, he was charged that, on certain dates in the county of York, without lawful authority, he collected, or attempted to elicit, information with respect to the manufacture of war material. In the second count, he was charged with having "in his possession, without lawful authority or excuse, certain documents containing information with respect to the description of war material." The evidence showed that the appellant had attempted to bribe a workman in the employ of Messrs. Vickers, Ltd., by offering him £100, and had obtained information and documents dealing with the description and manufacture of war material. No evidence was forthcoming to show that the appellant had parted with the information so obtained to anyone else. He pleaded guilty to the charges in the indictment, and two witnesses were called by the trial judge, AVORY, J., and examined by him. The two witnesses were soldiers who, when the appellant was arrested, were in the custody of the police, and their evidence was to the effect that, at the police station, the appellant had suggested mutiny to them and had made other statements indicating disloyalty to the Crown.

N. L. Macaskie for the appellant.

Tindal Atkinson, K.C., and G. F. L. Mortimer for the Crown.

DARLING, J., delivered the following judgment of the court. — In this case the appellant pleaded guilty to an indictment which charged him with attempting to collect information with regard to the manufacture of war materials, which is an offence under reg. 18 of the Defence of the Realm (Consolidation) Regulations, 1914. He was sentenced to penal servitude for life, and he now appeals against that sentence. At the trial, after the appellant had pleaded guilty, two witnesses were called and examined by the judge, in order to decide on the degree of culpability and the proper sentence to be passed. Objection has been taken to the course taken by the judge. The court is clearly of opinion that the judge had a right to hear the witnesses, even although the appellant had pleaded guilty. It is also objected that, before passing sentence, the judge took into account the motive of the appellant in committing the offence. A judge has a perfect right to consider whether a prisoner's motive is good or bad to enable him to consider whether he shall pass a severe or a light sentence. But if, under the circumstances of the case, the motive of the prisoner is a question which the jury have to decide, the judge must not attribute to the prisoner any motive which has been negatived by the verdict of the jury, if such motive has been submitted to them. Nor must the judge attribute to the prisoner that he is guilty of a crime with which he is not charged, nor of a statutory aggravation of a crime which might and should have been charged in the indictment if it was intended that he should be punished for such aggravation.

In the present case, we think that the judge might have passed sentence without giving any reasons, and in that case this court would not have interfered with his discretion. But AVORY, J., stated the reasons which influenced his decision, and in them he included an assumption that the appellant did the acts with which he was charged with an intention to assist the enemy. The court must, therefore, look at the whole case and see whether the sentence can be justified on other grounds than those which influenced the judge. Clearly, on the evidence, the appellant was collecting information as to the manufacture of war material which would be very valuable to the enemy, and also to other persons. That is a different matter from the use he might make of such information, and that is where the court thinks that the judge failed to act within the principles we have laid down. The offence to which the appellant pleaded guilty was a very grave offence, and one which might have had serious consequences for this country. A step further would have exposed the appellant to the sentence of death. Even in the absence of proof of an intention to assist the enemy, the offence, particularly in war time, was of a very serious

A nature, and, under all the circumstances, we think that the sentence, although it can be reduced, must be one of ten years' penal servitude.

Sentence reduced.

Solicitors: Registrar of the Court of Criminal Appeal; Director of Public Prosecutions.

[Reported by R. F. BLAKISTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

KIRKLINTON v. WOOD

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lush, J.), December 6, 7, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 332; 86 L.J.K.B. 319; 115 L.T. 920;

33 T.L.R. 108; 61 Sol. Jo. 147]

D Landlord and Tenant—Repair—Liability of tenant—Covenant to paint in particular year—Tenancy determined by lessee's notice during that year.

E A lessee covenanted, inter alia, that he would "in the year 1909 and also in the year 1916, if this lease should so long last, paint, varnish, and grain all the inside wood and iron work usually painted, varnished, or grained of the said demised premises . . ." The lessee died in 1915, and his executors, in accordance with a power contained in the lease, gave six months' notice to the lessor to determine the lease on March 1, 1916. At that date, the covenant to paint had not been performed, and the lessor claimed damages for its breach.

F Held: the obligation to perform the covenant arose as soon as the year 1916 began, and the fact that the lease was determined by the lessee's executors before the end of 1916 did not relieve them of that obligation.

Notes. As to the construction of covenants to repair, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 578 et seq.; and for cases see 31 DIGEST (Repl.) 349 et seq.

Award in the form of a Special Case stated for the opinion of the court.

G By a lease dated Mar. 24, 1904, between George Graham Kirklington and Joseph Edmund Carter Wood, certain premises were demised by Mr. Kirklington to Mr. Wood for a term of twenty-one years from Mar. 1, 1904. The lessee covenanted, inter alia:

H "And will in the year 1909 and also in the year 1916, if this lease shall so long last, paint, varnish, and grain all the inside wood and iron work usually painted, varnished, or grained of the said demised premises with three coats of good oil and white lead paint in a proper and workmanlike manner."

There was a proviso to the lease as follows:

I "Provided also and it is hereby also agreed that if the lessee shall during the continuance of the term hereby granted die and if the executors, administrators, or assigns of the lessee or the lessor respectively shall be desirous of determining the present lease, then, if the executors, administrators, or assigns of the lessee shall give to the lessor six calendar months' previous notice as aforesaid to determine this present lease on the first day of March in any year of the said term, or if the lessor shall give six calendar months' previous notice in writing to determine this present lease on the first day of March in any year of the said term to the lessee's executors, administrators, or assigns, then and in either of such cases immediately after the expiration of such six calendar months' notice this present demise and everything herein contained shall cease and be void."

The lessee died in 1915, and his executors gave six months' notice, in accordance with the power contained in the lease, to determine the lease on Mar. 1, 1916. The arbitrator found the following facts.—(a) That the lease lasted until the first day of March, 1916, on which date it was determined by six calendar months' prior notice in writing given by the lessee as executor of the original lessee pursuant to the provisions thereof. (b) That no painting, varnishing, or graining, pursuant to the covenant, was executed by the lessee during the period from the commencement of 1916 up to the date of the determination of the lease. The question for the opinion of the court was whether the lessee was liable for breach of the recited covenant to paint, varnish, and grain all the inside wood and iron work in the manner therein mentioned in 1916.

Eustace Hills for the lessor.

E. W. Lavington for the executors of the lessee.

LUSH, J.—A dispute has arisen between the lessor and the executors of the lessee as to the liability of the executors to perform a certain covenant in the lease, or to pay damages for breach of the covenant. The lease was dated Mar. 24, 1904. The parties to it were Mr. Kirklington of the one part and a Mr. Joseph Carter Wood, the lessee, of the other part. The lease provided that, if the lessee should during the continuance of the term die, and if his executors should give to the lessor six calendar months' notice to determine the lease on Mar. 1 in any year of the term, or if the lessor should give six calendar months' previous notice in writing to determine the lease on Mar. 1 in any year to the executors, then, and in either of such cases immediately after the expiration of the notice, the demise should cease. The lessee died in 1915, and his executors gave notice, pursuant to that power, to determine the lease on Mar. 1, 1916. The lease contained the usual covenants on the part of the lessee to pay the rent and keep the premises in repair, and there were other covenants with regard to the furniture; and then comes this covenant, on which this dispute has arisen:

"The lessee will in the year 1909 and also in the year 1916, if this lease shall so long last, paint, varnish, and grain all the inside work," and so on—a covenant to do certain painting and decorative work. The lease came to an end on Mar. 1, 1916; and the lessor contends that the executors of the lessee are bound by the covenant that I have just read, and, not having observed it, are liable to pay damages for its breach.

The ground of the contention on the part of the lessor is that, inasmuch as the lease has lasted into 1916, the executors came under an obligation to perform that covenant; and, inasmuch as they have not performed it, and they have gone out of possession and the lease has come to an end, they must pay damages for the breach of the covenant. The executors of the lessee, on the other hand, contend this: "True it is that the lease has lasted into 1916, but the meaning and effect of the covenant on the part of the lessee was that he should have the whole of 1916 in which to perform the covenant; that there was, therefore, no breach until 1916 came to an end; and that inasmuch as, pursuant to the power reserved to the lessee in the lease, the lease was determined before 1916 came to an end, there is no liability on the part of the executors." In my opinion the contention of the lessor is the correct one. It is quite true that, if the lease had not been determined, there would have been no breach on the part of the executors of the lessee on the date in question—namely, Mar. 1, 1916; but none the less there was an obligation on the executors of the lessee, as soon as 1916 commenced, to perform that covenant; and, inasmuch as the executors of the lessee, by giving that notice, put it out of their power to perform the covenant after Mar. 1, they cannot, having put it out of their power, contend that they were not under an obligation to perform it during the period that intervened between Jan. 1 and Mar. 1. It may be quite true to say that, although there was an obligation on them, there would be no breach; but

A the executors, by giving the notice, shortened the period during which they had the opportunity of doing the painting and performing the covenant. It seems to me quite impossible for them, having taken that course, to say that they had the whole of 1916 in which to perform it, and that, therefore, there was no breach on Mar. 1. The case was put in argument as to what would have happened if the lessor had given the notice. I do not think it is necessary for me to consider what would have been the case if that had happened. It did not happen. The lessee's executors gave the notice, and, in my opinion, the obligation having attached to them as soon as 1916 commenced, they were bound to perform it, or to show some excuse for their non-performance. They have not performed it; they have given no excuse for their non-performance. Therefore, I think the executors were bound by the covenant. The arbitrator in his award, which is stated in the form of a Case, simply left it to the court to say whether the lessor is right or wrong in his contention. My answer, therefore, is that the lessor is right, and that the executors of the lessee are liable for breach of the covenant.

Judgment for the lessor.

Solicitors: Harrison, Powell & Tuck, for E. K. Hough, Carlisle; Gray, Mounsey & Fuller, for Mounsey, Bowman & Graham, Carlisle.

[Reported by W. V. BALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

E

R. v. WATSON

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Reading, C.J., Scrutton and Shearman, JJ.), June 5, 1916]

F [Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 385; 85 L.J.K.B. 1142; 115 L.T. 159; 80 J.P. 391; 32 T.L.R. 580; 25 Cox, C.C. 470; 12 Cr. App. Rep. 62]

Criminal Law—Receiving stolen property—Need to prove possession or control of stolen property.

G Unless it is proved that a person who negotiates the sale of goods knowing them to be stolen has been in possession or control of the goods, he cannot be convicted of receiving the goods knowing them to have been stolen.

Notes. As to receiving stolen property, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 809 et seq.; and for cases see 15 DIGEST (Repl.) 1142 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- H (1) R. v. Fallon (1862), L.C. & Ca. 217; 32 L.J.M.C. 66; 7 L.T. 471; 27 J.P. 5; 8 Jur. N.S. 1217; 11 W.R. 74; 9 Cox, C.C. 242; 14 Digest (Repl.) 358, 3478.
(2) Richards v. R. (1897), 61 J.P. 389; 13 T.L.R. 254, D.C.; 14 Digest (Repl.) 358, 3479.

Also referred to in argument:

- I R. v. Whiley (1850), 2 Den. 37; T. & M. 367; 4 New Sess. Cas. 363; 20 L.J.M.C. 4; 16 L.T.O.S. 514; 14 J.P. 770; 15 Jur. 134; 4 Cox, C.C. 412, C.C.R.; 15 Digest (Repl.) 1147, 11,546.
R. v. Smith (1855), Dears C.C. 494; 24 L.J.M.C. 135; 26 L.T.O.S. 6; 19 J.P. 358; 1 Jur. N.S. 575; 3 W.R. 484; 3 C.L.R. 1154; 6 Cox, C.C. 554, C.C.A.; 15 Digest (Repl.) 1147, 11,548.

Appeal against a conviction for receiving stolen property before the recorder at Manchester City Sessions.

The appellant was charged with two other men on an indictment containing two counts, the first for breaking and entering a shop and stealing jewellery therefrom.

and the second for receiving the stolen property. There was no evidence in support of the first count, and the jury were properly so directed. The evidence against the appellant on the second count was that he was in Liverpool in the company of the other two men, who told him that they had some rings and brooches to dispose of which had been "got on the cross." The appellant crossed a ferry in the company of the other two men and went by himself to a jeweller's shop. He asked the jeweller if he would buy some stuff which had been got near London "on the cross." The jeweller declined to buy, and, later in the same day, the appellant and two other men were seen together and arrested. A large proportion of the stolen property was found on one of the other two men. The jury were directed that the appellant, although not charged as an accessory after the fact, could be convicted of receiving property knowing it to be stolen. The jury returned a verdict that the appellant was "guilty of being a negotiator and in the full knowledge that the goods were stolen," and this was accepted as a verdict of guilty on the second count of the indictment.

E. T. Nelson for the appellant.

J. B. Sandbach for the Crown.

LORD READING, C.J., delivered the following judgment of the court.—The question for this court is whether the verdict of the jury that the appellant was guilty of "being a negotiator and in the full knowledge that the goods were stolen" could be accepted as a verdict that the appellant was guilty of receiving the goods knowing them to have been stolen. If an accused person is indicted as a principal and not as an accessory, he cannot be convicted on the indictment if the evidence only goes to show that he is an accessory after the fact. This is clear from R. v. Fallon (1), which was decided in the year after the passing of the Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861, and Richards v. R. (2), which is a decision to the same effect. In the present case, the appellant could not properly be convicted as an accessory after the fact, either to stealing or receiving, as the counts in the indictment charged him with being a principal in both those offences. If that were the only question involved in the case, the authorities show what must have been the result.

But the meaning of the direction given to the jury by the recorder is not quite clear. He seems to have treated the appellant as an accessory after the fact, and, therefore, to have been guilty of aiding and abetting the other men in the commission of the crime charged against them. If the direction to the jury had been that, if they considered that the appellant was in possession of the stolen property either by himself or jointly with the other two men in such a way that he had either exclusive or joint control of it, they could legally convict him, and if they had accepted that view having regard to the facts of the case, this court might have had material on which the conviction could be supported. But this question was never left to the jury, and the direction given to them does not show that they were told to direct their attention to this point. The direction given to the jury cannot, therefore, in our opinion be supported.

Beyond this it is not clear from the verdict of the jury whether they considered that the appellant was in exclusive or joint possession of the stolen property or whether he had control equivalent to possession. They returned a verdict that he was a negotiator for the sale of property with the full knowledge that the property was stolen, but we cannot say that. This verdict does not amount to a finding that the appellant was in possession or control of the goods. In order to constitute the offence charged against the appellant, it is essential that he should have been in possession or control of the goods stolen. The direction to the jury was not sound in law, and the verdict does not affirm the charge which might have been established against the appellant on the evidence under a proper direction to the jury. The conviction cannot, therefore, be supported, although it was clearly shown

- A that the appellant knew that the other men had possession of stolen property, and that he was helping them to dispose of it. This court has no power to substitute a verdict instead of the one found where the indictment contains no count sufficient to support a substituted verdict. Nor can we say that, even on a proper direction, the jury would necessarily have found the appellant guilty of receiving the stolen property well knowing it to have been stolen. They might have done so, but that
- B would not be sufficient to warrant this court in upholding the conviction. Before we could do so we should have to be satisfied that the jury must have found such a verdict, and their present finding merely leaves us in doubt as to what verdict they would have returned on a proper direction. The conviction must be quashed, and the appeal is, therefore, allowed.

Appeal allowed.

- C Solicitors: Registrar of the Court of Criminal Appeal; Director of Public Prosecutions.

[Reported by R. F. BLAKISTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

D

HOLGATE v. BLEAZARD

- E [King's Bench Division (Ridley and Avory, JJ.), December 11, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 443; 86 L.J.K.B. 270; 115 L.T. 788;
33 T.L.R. 116]

Animal-Trespass-Tenants of adjoining fields having common landlord-One tenant under covenant to keep intervening hedge in repair-Escape of other tenant's horses through intervening hedge causing damage-Right of tenant under covenant to repair hedge to recover.

- F The plaintiff and the defendant, who occupied adjoining farms, were tenants of the same landlord. The plaintiff was under covenant with the landlord to keep in repair a hedge between two fields occupied by the plaintiff and the defendant respectively. Horses belonging to the defendant got through a hole in the hedge and injured a colt belonging to the plaintiff.

- G Held: the general principle that an owner of animals must keep them on his land at his peril applied; the mere fact that the plaintiff was in breach of the covenant to repair the hedge did not bring the case within the exception of damage caused by the plaintiff's default as laid down by BLACKBURN, J., in Fletcher v. Rylands (1) (1866), L.R. 1 Exch. 265 at p. 280; accordingly, the
- H defendant was liable for the damage caused.

Notes. Referred to: Fowler v. Lanning, [1959] 1 All E.R. 290.

As to trespass by animals, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 668 et seq.; and for cases see 2 Digest (Repl.) 309 et seq. As to the erection, maintenance and repair of fences, see 3 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 370 et seq.; and for cases see 7 Digest (Repl.) 286 et seq.

- I Cases referred to:

- (1) Fletcher v. Rylands (1866), L.R. 1 Exch. 265; 4 H. & C. 263; 35 L.J.Ex. 154; 14 L.T. 523; 30 J.P. 436; 12 Jur. N.S. 603; 14 W.R. 799, Ex.Ch.; affirmed sub nom. Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330; 37 L.J.Ex. 161; 19 L.T. 220; 33 J.P. 70, H.L.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 313, 164.
- (2) Singleton v. Williamson (1861), 7 H. & N. 410; 31 L.J.Ex. 17; 5 L.T. 644; 26 J.P. 88; 8 Jur. N.S. 60; 10 W.R. 174; 158 E.R. 533; 18 Digest (Repl.) 438, 1822.

- (3) Tenant v. Goldwin (or Golding) (1704), 1 Salk. 21, 360; Holt, K.B. 500; 2 A Ld. Raym. 1089; 6 Mod. Rep. 311; 91 E.R. 20, 314; 36 Digest (Repl.) 287, 356.
- (4) Cor v. Burbidge (1863), 13 C.B.N.S. 430; 1 New Rep. 238; 32 L.J.C.P. 89; 9
 Jur. N.S. 970; 11 W.R. 435; 143 E.R. 171; 2 Digest (Repl.) 319, 187.

Also referred to in argument :

- Boyle v. Tamlyn* (1827), 6 B. & C. 329; 9 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 430; 5 L.J.O.S.K.B. B
 134; 108 E.R. 473; 7 Digest (Repl.) 297, 186.
- Hilton v. Ankeesson* (1872), 27 L.T. 519; 7 Digest (Repl.) 297, 186.
- Ellis v. Loftus Iron Co.* (1874), L.R. 10 C.P. 10; 44 L.J.C.P. 24; 31 L.T. 483; 39 J.P. 88; 23 W.R. 246; 2 Digest (Repl.) 312, 158.
- Ricketts v. East and West India Docks, etc., Rail. Co.* (1852), 12 C.B. 160; 7 Ry.
 & Can. Cas. 295; 21 L.J.C.P. 201; 19 L.T.O.S. 109; 16 Jur. 1072; 138 E.R. C
 863; 38 Digest (Repl.) 330, 250.
- Wiseman v. Booker* (1878), 3 C.P.D. 184; 38 L.T. 292; 42 J.P. 295; 26 W.R. 634;
 2 Digest (Repl.) 312, 156.
- Rooth v. Wilson* (1817), 1 B. & Ald. 59; 106 E.R. 22; 2 Digest (Repl.) 339, 290.
- Coaker v. Willocks*, [1911] 2 K.B. 124; 80 L.J.K.B. 1026; 104 L.T. 769; 27 D
 T.L.R. 357, C.A.; 7 Digest (Repl.) 301, 217.

Appeal from Clitheroe County Court.

The plaintiff and the defendant were farmers holding adjoining farms as tenants of the same landlord. A field occupied by the plaintiff was separated from a field occupied by the defendant by a hedge, which the plaintiff was under covenant to repair and keep repaired. The terms of the covenant were :

“To keep all the premises and all hedges . . . fences . . . and leave the same at the end of the tenancy in good order and tenantable repair and to keep open the mouths of all covered drains.”

As between the plaintiff and defendant, it was admitted that there was no prescriptive right or duty to fence. Certain horses of the defendant got through a hole in the hedge and attacked a colt of the plaintiff, inflicting such injuries that it had to be destroyed. The plaintiff claimed damages. The learned county court judge found as a fact that the horses escaped through a hole in the hedge which should have been repaired by the plaintiff. He, therefore, gave judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

Langdon, K.C., and Hinde for the plaintiff.

Glover for the defendant.

RIDLEY, J.—This case raises a question of some intricacy. The plaintiff brought an action of trespass. The learned county court judge referred to the terms of the covenant, and pointed out that the plaintiff could not complain inasmuch as the damage occurred through his default. The rule which governs the case was, in my opinion, correctly stated by the learned judge; but the question is: Has it been correctly applied in this case? The owner of land may be bound by prescription or otherwise to fence and maintain fences. The question is whether he can escape liability by showing that there was a duty cast on someone else. In my opinion, however, a distinction must be observed between the duty to fence imposed by mere covenant and the duty which may be imposed by Act of Parliament. The liability is absolute, although the damage was due to the act or default of the plaintiff (as in Singleton v. Williamson (2)). That exception was recognised by BLACKBURN, J., in Fletcher v. Rylands (1), but cannot be said to extend to relieve the defendant in a case like the present. The appeal must be allowed.

AVORY, J.—I have entertained some doubt whether the facts as found by the learned county court judge bring this case within the principle laid down by BLACKBURN, J., in Fletcher v. Rylands (1), where he says (L.R. 1 Exch. at p. 280):

- A "The person whose grass or corn is eaten down by the escaping cattle of his neighbour, or whose mine is flooded by the water from his neighbour's reservoir, or whose cellar is invaded by the filth of his neighbour's privy, or whose habitation is made unhealthy by the fumes and noisome vapours of his neighbour's alkali works, is damnified without any fault of his own; and it seems but reasonable and just that the neighbour who has brought something on
- B his own property which was not naturally there, harmless to others so long as it is confined to his own property, but which he knows to be mischievous if it gets on his neighbour's, should be obliged to make good the damage which ensues if he does not succeed in confining it to his own property."

- C But the learned judge had already referred to an exception: "He can excuse himself by showing that the escape was owing to the plaintiff's default," and on the findings of fact in this case there is something to be said for the contention that the defendant's horses got on to the plaintiff's land by the plaintiff's default. But it is necessary to consider the meaning of the words "fault or default" more closely. The general principle with regard to cattle, as stated by BLACKBURN, J., is that a man must keep his cattle in at his peril. In support of that principle he says (ibid. at pp. 280, 281):

- D "As early as the Year Book, 20 Edw. 4, 11, placitum 10, BRIAN, C.J., lays down the doctrine in terms very much resembling those used by LORD HOLT in Tenant v. Goldwin (3) which will be referred to afterwards. It was trespass with cattle. Plea, that the defendant's land adjoined a place where defendant had common; that the cattle strayed from the common, and defendant drove them back as soon as he could. It was held a bad plea. BRIAN, C.J., says:
- E 'It behoves him to use his common so that he shall do no hurt to another man, and if the land in which he has common be not inclosed, it behoves him to keep the beasts in the common and out of the land of any other.' . . . In the recent case of (Or v. Burbidge (4), WILLIAMS, J., says (13 C.B.N.S. at p. 483): 'I apprehend the general rule of law to be perfectly plain. If I am the owner
- F of an animal in which by law the right of property can exist, I am bound to take care that it does not stray into the land of my neighbour, and I am liable for any trespass it may commit, and for the ordinary consequences of the trespass. Whether or not the escape of the animal is due to my negligence is altogether immaterial'."

- G The liability of the owner is the same whether the animals are on a common or not. The mere fact the plaintiff was under covenant to repair does not, in my opinion, bring this case within the exception contemplated by BLACKBURN, J. A statutory obligation to fence is a different matter. I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: R. J. Bentley, for J. J. Griggs; Ramsbottom, Clitheroe.

[Reported by W. V. BALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

HUDSON AND ANOTHER v. BRAY

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Ridley and Avory, JJ.), December 12, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 520; 86 L.J.K.B. 576; 116 L.T. 122; 81 J.P. 105;
33 T.L.R. 118; 61 Sol. Jo. 234; 15 L.G.R. 156, D.C.]

Highway—Obstruction—Tree blown down across highway—Liability of occupier of land to light and guard fallen tree Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50), s. 65, s. 72.

If a tree, which is blown down by a gale, falls across the highway and thereby causes an obstruction, the occupier of the land on which it was growing is under no obligation under either s. 65 or s. 72 of the Highway Act, 1835, to light or guard the tree.

Notes. The Highway Act, 1835, s. 65 and the relevant part of s. 72, have been replaced by the Highways Act, 1959, s. 120 (1) and (2), and s. 121 (1) respectively.

As to injury to, or obstruction of, highways, see 19 HALSURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 285 et seq.; and for cases see 26 DIGEST (Repl.) 468 et seq. For the Highways Act, 1959, ss. 120 and 121, see 39 HALSURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 541, 542.

Case referred to:

(1) Gully v. Smith (1883), 12 Q.B.D. 121; 53 L.J.M.C. 35; 48 J.P. 309;
26 Digest (Repl.) 469, 1576.

Also referred to in argument:

Butterfield v. Forrester (1809), 11 East, 60; 1 Man. & G. 571, n.; 103 E.R. 926;
26 Digest (Repl.) 514, 1918.

Davies v. Mann (1842), 10 M. & W. 546; 12 L.J.Ex. 10; 7 J.P. 53; 6 Jur. 954;
152 E.R. 588; 26 Digest (Repl.) 514, 1921.

Nichols v. Marsland (1875), L.R. 10 Exch. 255; 44 L.J.Ex. 134; 33 L.T. 265; 23
W.R. 693; affirmed (1876), 2 Ex. D. 1; 46 L.J.Q.B. 174; 35 L.T. 725; 41 J.P. 500; 25 W.R. 173, C.A.; 36 Digest (Repl.) 297, 421.

Appeal by the defendant from Bishop's Stortford County Court.

The defendant was the occupier of land adjoining a highway. A tree standing on his land was blown down by a gale on the night of Dec. 27, 1915. On the following day the defendant, on the direction of the road foreman, sent two men to cut up and remove the tree, an operation which in fact took four days. At about 4.45 p.m. the defendant's two men went to his farm, which was distant about half a mile, to fetch a lamp to light the tree. The plaintiffs were driving along the road in a motor-car about 5 p.m., at which time it was dark, and there being no light on the tree, and no one to warn them of any danger, they ran into the tree and sustained personal injuries, and the car suffered damage.

The plaintiffs claimed damages in respect of the personal injuries and damage to a motor-car, which they alleged were caused by the negligence of the defendant. The county court judge held that the defendant had been guilty of negligence, as for a short period he had left no one in charge of the tree to warn travellers on the highway of the obstruction, although he himself was aware of it, and, therefore, he was liable.

The defendant appealed.

The Highway Act, 1835, provides:

"s. 65. . . . If the surveyor shall think fit that any carriageway or pathway is prejudiced by the shade of any hedges, or by any trees . . . growing in or near such hedges or other fences, and that the sun and wind are excluded from such highway to the damage thereof, or if any obstruction is caused in any carriageway or cartway by any hedge or tree, it shall be lawful for any one justice of the peace, on the application of the said surveyor, to summon the

A owner of the land on which such hedges or trees are growing next adjoining to such carriageway or cartway to appear before the justices at a special sessions for the highways to show cause why the said hedges are not cut, pruned, or plashed, or such trees not pruned or lopped in such manner that the carriageway or cartway shall not be prejudiced by the shade thereof, and that the sun and wind may not be excluded from such carriageway or cartway to the damage thereof, or why the obstruction caused in such carriageway or cartway should not be removed; . . . and if such justices shall order and direct that such hedges shall be cut, pruned, or plashed, or such trees pruned or lopped, in manner aforesaid, or such obstruction removed, the said owner shall comply therewith within ten days after a copy of such order shall have been left at the usual place of abode of the said owner or of his steward or agent, and in default thereof shall forfeit on conviction a sum not exceeding forty shillings; and the said surveyor, if the order of the said justices is not complied with, shall and he is hereby authorised and required to cut, prune, or plash such hedges, and to prune and lop such trees for the benefit and improvement of the highway and to remove such obstruction as aforesaid to the best of his skill and judgment, and according to the true intent and meaning of this Act . . .

D "s. 72. . . . If any person . . . shall in any way wilfully obstruct the free passage of any such highway; every person so offending . . . shall for each and every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 40s. over and above the damage occasioned thereby."

R. W. Turner for the defendant.

E F. Phillips for the plaintiffs.

RIDLEY, J.—The point in this case, although small, is nevertheless of some difficulty. If the arguments of counsel for the plaintiffs are correct, the obligation of a tenant farmer would, in my opinion be increased to a point which would be intolerable. I do not think that the Highway Act, 1835, imposes on a tenant farmer the duty of removing a tree which has fallen across the highway before he has been called on to do so by the highway surveyor. That Act, by s. 72, makes the occupier of land liable for wilful obstruction of the highway if, after receiving notice calling on him to remove an obstruction on the highway coming from his land, he fails to do so. Counsel for the plaintiffs contended that s. 65 imposed an obligation on the defendant to remove the obstruction caused by the fallen tree from the highway. The marginal note to that section is "Mode of proceeding if highway is prejudiced by hedges, &c." I think that that section merely provides the procedure to be adopted if a road is prejudiced by the shade of hedges along the side of the road or of trees growing near the hedges so that the sun and wind are excluded from the highway, or by a branch of a tree overhanging the road, but that it has no application to a case where a tree has fallen across the highway. That is the only obligation imposed on the occupier of land by the Highway Act. It would be very hard if the statute were strained so that an occupier of land who has not the means of removing a fallen tree from the highway were to be held liable for an accident thereby caused to a person passing along the highway. There is nothing in the Act which imposes such an obligation on him. In Gully v. Smith (1), the occupier of the land had had the opportunity of removing the obstruction from the highway but had failed to do so, and the court, accordingly, held that he had thereby been guilty of wilful obstruction to the highway within the meaning of s. 72 of the Highway Act, 1835.

It is possible to argue that, where a tree has fallen across a highway and the occupier of the land on which the tree was growing has received a notice from the surveyor of highways calling on him to remove it, but has failed to remove it within a reasonable time and an accident happens in consequence, the occupier would be liable, notwithstanding that the tree fell through the act of God, the ground of liability being that the occupier had not obeyed the order of the surveyor of highways and had failed to remove the tree within a reasonable time. But the county court judge did not decide this case on that ground. He appears to have decided it on the ground that, inasmuch as the defendant knew that the tree which was growing on his land had fallen across the highway, he was thereafter responsible for lighting it and warning persons travelling along the highway of the existence of the obstruction, and that he was guilty of negligence because he failed to do this. I think there was no evidence on which the county court judge could properly come to that conclusion. He said that there was some slight negligence on the part of the defendant, but I am unable to see any evidence of negligence. It may be that the defendant was under a duty to furnish a lamp to light the tree when requested to do so by the highway surveyor, but it seems to me that there was no duty on the defendant in the circumstances to light the tree. The county court judge said, in delivering judgment:

"During the day the foreman of the road came, and no doubt it came to the defendant's mind that at that particular time the public authority had taken charge of the road, but, in my opinion, they had done nothing of the kind. The public authority did not take possession of the road to warn the public against the consequences until afterwards. Towards dusk the defendant sent down a man to take charge of the tree. A good deal was made of the exact time, but, at all events, I find that for a short time, and only for a short time, there was no person in charge of the tree to warn the public travelling on the highway, and, in my judgment, there was some slight negligence in that. Defendant did his best, but his best was not sufficient, and for a short time that tree was undefended, and any person passing along the road might sustain injury."

I do not think that there was any duty on the defendant to keep perpetual watch over the tree so as to warn persons passing along the highway, and that there was no evidence of failure on his part of his duty with regard to the fetching of the light which the road foreman asked him to fetch. The lamp could not be fetched in a moment, and it was during the time that the lamp was being fetched that the accident happened. In the circumstances, I fail to see any evidence at all of negligence on the part of the defendant, and this appeal must, therefore, be allowed.

AVORY, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think it is clear from the county court judge's judgment that the defendant is not in any sense answerable for the original fall of this tree across the highway. The county court judge finds that it was blown down by a gale, which was in the eye of the law an act of God. That being so, the judgment of the county court judge in favour of the plaintiffs can only be supported if we are prepared to hold that, in the case of a fallen tree causing an obstruction to the highway, a duty was by the law cast on the defendant to light the tree as it lay across the highway, or to place someone there to warn persons travelling along the highway of the existence of the obstruction. I am not satisfied on reading the county court judge's judgment that, even taking the view of the law which the county court judge took, there was any evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant. The county court judge said this:

"Towards dusk the defendant sent down a man to take charge of the tree. A good deal was made of the exact time, but at all events I find that for a short time, and only for a short time, there was no person in charge of the tree to warn the public travelling on the highway."

The county court judge, therefore, does not base the defendant's liability upon the absence of a light, but on his not putting someone there to warn the public travelling on the highway of the existence of the obstruction. The county court judge continued:

"and, in my judgment, there was some slight negligence in that. Defendant did his best, but his best was not sufficient."

A I fail to see how a man can be said to have done his best and at the same time be guilty of negligence.

But even supposing that the finding of the county court judge that the defendant was guilty of negligence be a finding of fact which is binding on us, we must then see whether there was any duty cast by law on the defendant to light the tree or to warn passers-by of the existence of the obstruction. I doubt whether s. 65 applies at all to such a case as this. I think, however, that, if the defendant, after receiving a notice from the surveyor of highways calling on him to remove the tree, had failed to remove it within a reasonable time, he would have been guilty of wilful obstruction under s. 72 as interpreted in Gully v. Smith (1). It is clear that the decision in that case did not proceed on any act of the defendant in allowing the wall to fall on to the highway; the judgment proceeded entirely on the fact that, after the landslip had taken place, the defendant failed to remove the obstruction after receiving notice calling on him to do so, and LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., held that, in the circumstances, the defendant had been guilty of wilful obstruction to the highway within s. 72 of the Act of 1835. It may be, therefore, that the defendant in the present case would have been guilty of wilful obstruction to the highway under s. 72 if he had failed to remove the tree within a reasonable time after receiving notice to remove it. But it is not sought in the present case to make him liable by reason of his failure to remove the tree, but because he failed to light it or to place someone there to warn persons travelling along the highway of the existence of the obstruction. I do not, however, think that s. 72 can be construed as imposing any obligation on an occupier of land on which a tree was growing and which has fallen across the highway to light the tree or to place someone there to warn persons passing along the highway of the existence of the obstruction during the period before it is removed.

In my opinion, therefore, the appeal ought to be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Gedge, Fiske & Gedge, for A. E. Floyd, Bishop's Stortford and Dunmow; G. H. Walker & Tree, for Wm. Gee & Sons, Bishop's Stortford.

[Reported by W. V. BALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

J. R. MUNDAY, LTD. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Reading, C.J., Warrington, L.J., and Scrutton, J.),
May 24, June 2, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 331; 85 L.J.K.B. 1509; 115 L.T. 99; 80 J.P. 403;
32 T.L.R. 559; 60 Sol. Jo. 587; 14 L.G.R. 1055]

B

County Court—Practice—Payment into court—Form of notice—Admission of negligence—Denial of damage—County Court Rules, 1903, Ord. 9, r. 12.

In an action in a county court by the plaintiffs claiming damages from the defendants for injury to a horse belonging to the plaintiffs which had been caused by the negligence of the defendants' servant, the defendants paid a sum into court under Ord. 9, r. 12, of the County Court Rules, 1903, with the following notice: "Take notice that the defendants admit that the accident was caused through their negligence, but that they deny the alleged damage, and, whilst in this manner denying liability, bring into court the sum of £40 damages and £2 9s. 10d. in respect of costs, and say that this sum is sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim."

C

Held: the notice was not a sham, and was not wrong in form, since, although it admitted negligence, it put the plaintiffs to proof of damage.

D

Decision of Divisional Court, [1916] 1 K.B. 159, affirmed.

Notes. The County Court Rules, 1903, have been revoked by the County Court Rules, 1936. For Ord. 9, r. 12, of the Rules of 1903, see now Ord. 11, r. 2, of the Rules of 1936.

E

Followed: Davies v. Scott-Lewis, [1918] W.N. 166. Referred to: East Suffolk Rivers Catchment Board v. Kent, [1940] 4 All E.R. 527; Davies v. Rustproof Metal Window Co., [1943] 1 All E.R. 248; Hultquist v. Universal Pattern and Precision Engineering Co., Ltd., [1960] 2 All E.R. 266.

As to payments into a county court, see 9 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 230 et seq.; and for cases see 13 DIGEST (Repl.) 431.

F

Case referred to:

(1) Critchell v. London and South Western Rail. Co., [1907] 1 K.B. 800; 76 L.J.K.B. 423; 96 L.T. 603, C.A.; Digest (Pleading) 87, 736.

Also referred to in argument:

Remington v. Scoles, [1897] 2 Ch. 1; 66 L.J.Ch. 526; 76 L.T. 667; 45 W.R. 580; 41 Sol. Jo. 489, C.A.; Digest (Pleading) 84, 700.

G

Howell v. Dering, [1915] 1 K.B. 54; 84 L.J.K.B. 199; 111 L.T. 790; 58 Sol. Jo. 669, C.A.; Digest (Practice) 919, 4629.

Appeal from a decision of the Divisional Court (Avory and Lush, JJ.), reversing a decision of Lambeth County Court.

H

The plaintiffs' particulars of claim alleged that, on Dec. 18, 1914, at about 6.15 p.m., a horse, the property of the plaintiffs, was being driven along Walworth Road, when, at a spot opposite Liverpool Street, a tramcar, the property of the defendants and driven by one of their servants, came up behind and collided with the plaintiffs' horse, and caused it to bolt, whereby it was injured, and that the tramcar collided with the horse owing to the negligence of the defendants' driver. The plaintiffs claimed £70 damages. The defendants, under Ord. 9, r. 12 (1), of the County Court Rules, paid the sum of £40 into court with a notice in the following form:

I

"Take notice that the defendants admit that the accident was caused through their negligence, but that they deny the alleged damage, and, whilst in this manner denying liability, bring into court the sum of £40 damages, and £2 9s. 10d. in respect of costs, and say that this sum is sufficient to satisfy the plaintiffs' claim."

- A The county court judge decided that the damage amounted to £40 and no more. The defendants claimed to have the costs of the action. The plaintiffs contended that the payment into court was invalid on the ground that the notice which admitted negligence and denied liability was contradictory and inconsistent. The learned judge held that the defendants' notice was a nullity, as it raised contradictory and inconsistent defences, and that the payment was a sham within the meaning of Critchell v. London and South Western Rail. Co. (1), and he gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the £40 with all the costs. The defendants appealed. The Divisional Court held that, the action being an action on the case, and not an action in trespass, damages could not be recovered without proof of actual damage; the defendants' notice denying liability was, therefore, a valid notice, as it put in issue one of the questions which had to be decided. They were consequently entitled to the costs after the date of the payment into court. The plaintiffs appealed.

Order 9, r. 12, of the County Court Rules, 1903, provides:

- "(1) A defendant who desires to pay money into court pursuant to s. 107 of the Act shall pay the same five clear days at least before the return day. Every such payment shall be taken to admit pro tanto the claim or cause of action or complaint in respect of which the payment is made, unless the defendant at the time of paying the money into court files with the registrar a notice according to the form in the appendix, stating his name and address, and further stating that notwithstanding such payment the defendant denies his liability . . . The defendant must also pay into court, in respect of the court fees and solicitor's costs (if any) entered on the summons, a sum proportionate to the amount paid in in respect of the claim, unless the payment into court is made under a defence of tender, in which case he may make such payment without costs."

Doughty for the plaintiffs.

Craig Henderson for the defendants.

- F LORD READING, C.J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Divisional Court, which reversed the judgment of His Honour Judge PARRY. The action was brought by the plaintiffs to recover damages for injuries to a horse belonging to them, occasioned by the negligence of the defendants or their servants. The defendants paid £40 into court under Ord. 9, r. 12, with the following notice: [His Lordship read the notice, and continued:] It is said that that is an embarrassing notice, and that, in point of form, it is wrong, because it is really an admission and at the same time a denial. The plaintiffs say that it is, in effect, a sham. When the matter came before the learned county court judge, judgment was given for the £40, which was the total sum recovered by the plaintiffs. The defendants did not contest that the plaintiffs had in fact suffered some damage, and the amount of £40 which was paid in with the denial of liability was, according to their view, the total sum.

- H The question that arose on this state of facts was what was to happen with regard to the costs. The plaintiffs' case was that the defendants had paid in this £40, not with a genuine denial of liability, but merely to prevent the plaintiffs taking the money out of court except in satisfaction of the claim, and that, in truth, the position was that the defendants knew that they were liable, both for the negligence of their servant and for some damage to the plaintiffs, which the defendants assessed at a maximum of £40, and that they ought to have paid that in with an admission of liability, in which case the plaintiffs could then have gone on to trial in order to get more damages if they insisted on it. The difference, and sometimes a very important difference, is that in the one case—that is, payment into court with an admission of liability—the plaintiff can take the money out; in the other case, where there is a denial of liability, he cannot get the money out until he has established the liability of the defendant, unless he takes it out in satisfaction. It is said that defendants very often do this, because apparently it has the effect of preserving the money paid into court if the plaintiff will not accept it in satisfaction of the claim, so that, should he proceed to trial and not get more than the money paid into court, the defendant has the advantage of having that sum either as pro tanto security or it may be in complete satisfaction of the costs which, if the defendant is successful, he recovers from the plaintiff; and it is said that this is wrong in this particular case because of the form of notice. It is not in dispute, and counsel for the plaintiff is not contending that the defendants are not entitled to pay money into court with a denial of liability, but he says a denial of this kind, which admits negligence but denies damage, is really only a sham, and the court ought so to decide.

The first ground of counsel's contention is that the defendants admit that the accident was caused through their negligence, and in an interesting argument he contended that the use of the word "accident" implies, and necessarily implies, negligence which caused some damage; it must mean negligence which caused a collision, or some event, or something which resulted in damage, even though it may be only a farthing damage; and he says that, that being so, it is really admitting the cause of action; that it is not disputed and could not be disputed that the cause of accident is negligence of the defendants. In order to make out the cause of action, the negligence of the defendants' servant must be proved and that damage resulted from such negligence. Negligence alone does not give a cause of action, damage alone does not give a cause of action, the two must coincide. Counsel says that here the defendants by the notice admit that the two coincided, but only dispute the amount, and, if counsel had made out that contention, I think that he would go a very long way to establish the point which he is arguing. But I cannot read the notice as meaning that. When the defendants in the plainest terms make clear that they are drawing a distinction between admission of the negligence and admission of the damage, I cannot come to the conclusion that they have admitted in any way that this negligence did cause damage to the plaintiffs. That being so, it really disposes of this appeal, because, unless counsel can establish that the notice in form is wrong, in the sense that it is embarrassing because it admits the cause of action and at the same time denies it, he would be out of court on this appeal.

It is unnecessary to go through either the County Courts Act, 1888, or the rules or the forms, because there is no dispute or any doubt but that a defendant is entitled to pay into court with a denial of liability in the county court. There is a form specially providing for it; there is a special order providing for it, and the only question is whether that order and form have been complied with. It is as well to observe that there is also Ord. 54, r. 22, of the County Court Rules, which shows that the forms are to be similar to the forms used in the appendix where the same are applicable; but no one would suggest, because the language is not precisely the same, that consequently the form is invalid. One must look at the substance of the matter, and, indeed, counsel for the plaintiffs, quite properly, has not contended otherwise. He agrees that one must look at the substance. I have no doubt that what the defendants did by this notice was to deny the cause of action. That being so, I can see no ground for saying the defence was a sham. There are no facts in this case which, in my opinion, would in law amount to evidence that the defence was a sham; at most, what can be said is that the defendants intended to deny the liability in order to put the plaintiffs to proof; and that they are entitled to do. The consequence is that, in my judgment, the appeal fails, and I think that the judgment of the Divisional Court was right.

WARRINGTON, L.J.—I agree.

SCRUTTON, J.—I agree.

Solicitors : Clifford, Turner & Hopton ; Edward Tanner.

Appeal dismissed.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

CARNELL v. HARRISON AND ANOTHER

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Phillimore and Warrington, L.J.J.), February 10, 1916]

B

[Reported [1916] 1 Ch. 328; 85 L.J.Ch. 321; 114 L.T. 478;
60 Sol. Jo. 290, C.A.]

Infant—Settlement—Repudiation—Reasonable time after majority—Date of commencement—Reversionary property—Right to wait until property falls into possession.

C

By a marriage settlement dated Dec. 20, 1895, the wife, then an infant, transferred property to which she was entitled in reversion to trustees to hold the same on trust for her use and after her decease for the children of the intended marriage, which duly took place immediately afterwards. The wife became twenty-one on Mar. 18, 1896. There were three children of the marriage, but differences arose between the wife and the husband, and in 1906 she left him and they had since lived apart. In September, 1914, nearly nineteen years after the execution of the settlement, the wife, who had never confirmed the settlement, brought an action asking for the settlement to be set aside, on the ground that it was voidable as having been made by her during infancy and never confirmed by her after attaining her majority.

D

E

Held: repudiation by a person of a contract entered into in his infancy must take place within a reasonable time of his coming of age; in the case of a settlement by an infant of reversionary property the infant was not entitled to wait until the falling into possession of that property before exercising the right to repudiate; in the present case the wife had allowed 18½ years to elapse before purporting to repudiate; that could not be said to be a reasonable time; and, therefore, her claim must fail.

Edwards v. Carter (1), [1893] A.C. 360, applied.

F

Re Jones, Farrington v. Forrester (2), [1893] 2 Ch. 461, disapproved.

Notes. As to contracts generally and settlements by infants, see 21 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 138–148, 180–184, and for cases see 28 DIGEST (Repl.) 496 et seq., 552 et seq.

Cases referred to:

G

- (1) Carter v. Silber, [1892] 2 Ch. 278; 66 L.T.N.S. 473; affirmed sub nom. Edwards v. Carter, [1893] A.C. 360; 63 L.J.Ch. 100; 69 L.T. 153; 58 J.P. 4; 1 R. 218, H.L.; 28 Digest (Repl.) 502, 188.
- (2) Re Jones, Farrington v. Forrester, [1893] 2 Ch. 461; 62 L.J.Ch. 996; 69 L.T. 45; 3 R. 498; 28 Digest (Repl.) 557, 730.

H

Also referred to in argument:

Viditz v. O'Hagan, [1899] 2 Ch. 569; 68 L.J.Ch. 553; 80 L.T. 794; 47 W.R. 571; 15 T.L.R. 416; reversed [1900] 2 Ch. 87; 69 L.J.Ch. 507; 82 L.T. 480; 48 W.R. 516; 16 T.L.R. 357; 44 Sol. Jo. 427; 28 Digest (Repl.) 557, 728.

I

Appeal by the plaintiff against a decision of NEVILLE, J., in an action in which the plaintiff sought a declaration that a marriage settlement, dated Dec. 20, 1895, should be set aside.

By the settlement, which was made on the marriage then intended and shortly afterwards solemnised between Francis Drake Carnell and the plaintiff, after reciting that upon her marriage the plaintiff was entitled (i) under a will therein mentioned to one fifth share or some other part of certain freehold hereditaments in reversion expectant on the decease of her mother, and (ii) under another will therein mentioned to one undivided seventh part of the real and residuary personal estate arising under such will in reversion expectant upon the decease or future marriage of her mother, it was witnessed that such property should be transferred to the trustees of the settlement when the same fell into possession, and the trustees were to hold the same upon trust to invest the same and pay the income thereof to the plaintiff during her life for her separate use and after her decease for such children or remoter issue upon obtaining the age of twenty-one as she should by will or deed appoint and in default of appointment in trust for the child or children of the marriage who should attain twenty-one and in default of a child or children in trust for the plaintiff absolutely should she survive the intended coverture, but if she should die during the intended coverture as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment for her statutory next of kin. The marriage settlement contained power to raise half the share of any child and apply the same to his or her advancement, and a power to the plaintiff to appoint a portion of the trust funds to any future husband and issue by a future marriage. At the date of the settlement and the marriage the plaintiff was under twenty-one years of age, and she did not attain her majority until Mar. 18, 1896. There were three children only of the marriage, all of whom were infants and unmarried. One, a female, was about nineteen years old. The mother of the plaintiff was still alive and had not remarried, and the whole of the property in the settlement was still in reversion. The plaintiff's husband was still alive, but she was living apart from him. The plaintiff had never confirmed the settlement since she had attained the age of twenty-one, and claimed that she was ignorant until just before the present action was begun—namely, on Sept. 10, 1914—of her right to repudiate the settlement if she so desired upon attaining twenty-one. The plaintiff claimed a declaration that the settlement had been avoided by the issue of the writ in the present action and ought to be set aside. NEVILLE, J., said that he was not free to come to any conclusion on his own judgment, but was bound by Carter v. Silber (1), and under the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff not being entitled to rely upon the ignorance of her right, which he thought she had proved, he must come to the conclusion that she had come at the expiration of that long period of years too late, and that her action must fail. From that decision the plaintiff appealed.

Gilbart-Smith for the plaintiff.

W. J. Whittaker for the defendants, trustees of the settlement, was not called on to argue.

LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—This is an appeal from a decision of NEVILLE, J. I have no doubt whatever that his decision was right.

There was a marriage settlement executed in 1895, the parties to it being the intended husband, Mr. Carnell, the plaintiff who was then a lady nearly twenty years old, and two trustees. It was a settlement arranged in the customary manner by the mother of the lady. It was drawn by the family solicitors, and it is a settlement in form obviously for the benefit of the infant wife. The husband did not take a penny of interest under it. The whole property is given to the plaintiff for life and then to the children of the marriage, with a power of appointment to the plaintiff. There have been three children of the marriage, one of whom has almost, but not quite, attained twenty-one years. One fact on which great reliance is placed is that the property comprised in the settlement is reversionary, a reversion expectant on the life interest of the mother of the plaintiff, and the reversion has not yet fallen in. There were matrimonial disputes of which we do not know the rights or the wrongs. The husband is living apart from his wife. The wife is living apart from her children, who have been taken charge of by their grandmother and maintained by her. The wife has not communicated with the children or with any members of the family. She has been living out of England during the greater part of this time, and entirely refrained from communicating with them. In September, 1914—that is to say, nineteen years after the date of the settlement—this action was commenced, seeking a declaration that the settlement is not binding on the plaintiff and is void and ought to be set aside, and for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to repudiate it. I have said already she was nearly twenty

A years of age when she executed the settlement. Therefore, it is eighteen years since she attained twenty-one.

We have been told this. Granted that it is settled that an infant's contract may be repudiated, but that it must be so within a reasonable time, that doctrine is qualified by these circumstances. First of all, it is said that the husband did not bring any property into settlement. It was all the wife's property which was dealt with, and, that being so, there is nobody with whom a bargain of this kind could be made, and nobody could be disappointed if the plaintiff did not perform her contract. That is, if I may say so with all respect to counsel, an extraordinary proposition. Marriage settlements constantly contain provisions with regard to property brought in by one of the spouses only. I never heard that in construing a contract or considering a question of repudiation of this kind it would be in any sense necessary to consider whether the husband brought in property as well as the wife. Then it is said that there is nobody disappointed. The three children of the marriage are all minors. They have not been entitled to a penny of the property hitherto, and they could not have dealt with their interests. That again is not the test. The three children are within the marriage consideration. They could sue the trustees for any breach of trust, and undoubtedly each has a contingent life interest in the settlement funds, and for all the purposes of today it seems to me that their interests must be considered in exactly the same position as the plaintiff's. The lady's daughter, who is now approaching twenty years of age, is of marriageable age, and she could, with leave of the court, settle her interest in this property. But that is of no importance whatever.

I regard this as a case which is absolutely covered by authority which we ought not in any way to depart from. Carter v. Silber (1) is a case of the highest possible authority which came before the Court of Appeal, consisting of LINDLEY, BOWEN, and KAY, L.J.J., who gave judgments which plainly cover the present case. But I do not refer to them in detail, though there are some very strong passages, because the case went to the House of Lords (sub nom. Edwards v. Carter (1)), consisting of, if I may respectfully say so, a very strong tribunal. In that case there were four years of minority before repudiation. LORD HERSCHELL, L.C., said this ([1893] A.C. at p. 364):

"It is not disputed that this contract executed and entered into by Martin Albert Silber was not absolutely void, but was voidable only [in the present case the lady's contract was voidable only], that is to say, that after he came of age it was as binding as if he had been of age at the time when he executed it, subject only to this, that the law enabled him to avoid his obligations provided he did so within a reasonable time."

That is a general proposition of law. Then he said (ibid. at p. 365):

"The first question is whether the infant was entitled to wait until an actual sum of money came to him to which this covenant could apply before he made the repudiation. I think that is a proposition which it is absolutely impossible to regard with seriousness—that this covenant being binding unless he repudiates it within a reasonable time, he is entitled to wait to see how in respect of any particular sum of money the covenant will operate, and when he has made up his mind whether with regard to that sum of money it will be beneficial to him or not, he can then, and not till then, be said to have his proper opportunity of making the determination."

LORD WATSON said in a very short judgment (ibid. at p. 366):

"If he chooses to be inactive, his opportunity passes away; if he chooses to be active, the law comes to his assistance."

LORD HALSBURY adopted (ibid. at p. 366) the language of LINDLEY, L.J., who said ([1892] 2 Ch. at p. 285):

"Whether the defendant could have repudiated the deed in five or six or nine months after he came of age I do not care to discuss; but to ask us to hold that he repudiated within a reasonable time is to ask us to hold that which no reasonable man could think of holding."

LORD MACNAGHTEN, again, said ([1893] A.C. at p. 367):

"It seems to me that everyone who is of sufficient age and intelligence to execute a deed, whether he be an infant or a man of full age, and who does execute a deed, must be treated as knowing the contents of the instrument which he executes; and therefore I think it is immaterial to inquire whether Mr. Martin Silber knew or did not know the particular covenant in question. I do not think he is entitled to any indulgence on the ground that he was not in fact aware of the obligation which he undertook."

Counsel said that there was one observation which he was entitled to make on that case, and that is that the husband's father might have altered his testamentary disposition in favour of his son if he had known that he would repudiate the settlement. The father there had brought in property. That again is not any qualification of the general principles which are laid down by the noble and learned Lords. I say deliberately that the general principles laid down by the noble and learned Lords seem to me absolutely to cover the present case.

Then counsel referred us to a decision of NORTH, J., in Re Jones, Farrington v. Forrester (2), decided in the same year as Edwards v. Carter (1), but rather before it, and not cited in the House of Lords by either counsel. He said that there the learned judge, NORTH, J., held that, in considering "reasonable time," it might be competent to say that reasonable time did not begin to run till the reversion fell into possession, or, at least, the fact that it was a reversionary interest with which you are dealing is sufficient to excuse a delay of, I think, forty years. With great respect to the learned judge I am unable to follow his judgment. He there said ([1893] 2 Ch. at p. 469):

"I think it is not an unreasonable time if she elects to repudiate the settlement when for the first time the question arises whether anything is or is not to be received by her or her trustees under it, and that question never arose, so far as I can see, until after the death of the tenant for life."

If that is to be taken to be the view of the learned judge on this point, I think that it is plainly overruled by the decision of the House of Lords in the same year in Edwards v. Carter (1), and it certainly is a principle which, so far as I am aware, has no support from any prior decision of this or any other court. For these reasons I think that the decision of the learned judge in the court below was perfectly right, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

PHILLIMORE, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I do not think that the differences between the present case and that of Edwards v. Carter (1) are sufficient to distinguish it in any material respect. I take the law as laid down in Edwards v. Carter (1) and apply it to this present case without difficulty.

There really are only three matters to be considered. The first is that in Edwards v. Carter (1), the infant, who was in that case the husband, had covenanted to settle after-acquired property, and there was a good deal of reason, in the opinion of the lords justices of the Court of Appeal in that case (sub nom. Carter v. Silber (1)), and the noble and learned Lords, for thinking that, if the father of the infant had known he was going to repudiate that covenant, he never would have devised benefits to him in the way that he did by his will. That is a topic to consider which is no doubt absent in the present case, because the lady here did not covenant to settle after-acquired property, and she cannot, therefore, in any way be supposed to be diverting to herself benefits which she otherwise would not have got, because she was dealing with property already coming to her.

A The next point is that the property comprised in the settlement in the present case is a reversionary interest and that it has not yet fallen into possession, and that one must be guided by the decision of NORTH, J., in Re Jones, Farrington v. Forrester (2). The language of NORTH, J., in that case comes perilously near to an actual contradiction of the language of LORD HERSHELL, L.C., in Edwards v. Carter (1). If it amounts to saying that a spouse who was an infant when he or she married is not bound to take action to repudiate a marriage settlement which includes reversionary property till actual sums of money are going to be handled by him or her one way or the other according as the settlement stands or not, it is in exact contradiction of the passage that I am now going to read from the opinion of LORD HERSHELL, L.C. ([1893] A.C. at p. 365):

C "The first question is whether the infant was entitled to wait until an actual sum of money came to him to which this covenant could apply before he made the repudiation. I think that is a proposition which it is absolutely impossible to regard with seriousness."

D If it is meant to say that the exigency is not quite so pressing when there is a reversionary interest to deal with and that it may be a point to consider when deliberating upon what is a reasonable time, you might prolong what would otherwise be a reasonable time by some fraction. I do not know that I am inclined to comment specially on what NORTH, J., said. But if it comes to anything more than that, I respectfully disagree with his judgment. It is quite possible, as has been pointed out in the course of the argument, that the decision was quite right in the particular circumstances of that case. But the reasons given for it, in my opinion, go too far.

E The last point is whether or not the fact that the lady here did not know her right of repudiation until quite late in point of fact justifies her waiting all this time. That was expressly dealt with by the lords justices in Edwards v. Carter (1) in the Court of Appeal, and it seems to me to be more than dealt with in the House of Lords, because the noble and learned Lords go a step further. In Edwards v. Carter (1) it was either assumed or proved for the benefit of the plaintiff that the plaintiff did not know what he had bound himself to do. The House of Lords said that that will not do, but that you must inquire. Of course if he did not know what he had bound himself to do, he was not considering whether he could repudiate and escape from doing it. The House of Lords said that the infant cannot even escape on the ground that he did not know what he had bound himself to do. It is his duty to inquire. He knows he has executed this solemn deed and speedily after he comes of age it is his duty to inquire what he has bound himself to do, and, if necessary, to inform himself whether he can take proceedings to repudiate. Therefore, I think that Edwards v. Carter (1) is really a stronger case than the present. The plaintiff here knew from the beginning that she had executed a settlement. She does not deny that she knew that she settled these reversionary interests coming under the wills of her relations, and the letter that she wrote a year and a half before she brought her action shows that she not only then knew, but must have known for some time, what the contents of the settlement were. Therefore, she is in a worse position than the plaintiff in Edwards v. Carter (1). Neither of the parties in that case knew the law. The plaintiff in Edwards v. Carter (1) did not know the facts, and yet he was not held entitled to relief. In the present case the plaintiff knew the facts and she ought not to be held entitled to relief. After this grave lapse of time, with the children growing up, naturally being educated, and very likely told that there is some little fortune awaiting them because of the mother's settlement, to allow the mother, in order to free herself from her duty to her children, to repudiate the settlement now, with no question of the husband and no question of more distant people, would, in my opinion, be very unjust and wrong. I quite agree, therefore, that this appeal should be dismissed with costs. A

WARRINGTON, L.J. I am of the same opinion. The only question that we have to determine is whether the plaintiff repudiated this settlement within a reasonable time after Mar. 18, 1896, when she came of age. She in fact attempted to repudiate it by the issue of the writ in this action on Sept. 10, 1914—that is to say, eighteen and a half years after that date. No doubt, what is a reasonable time depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. In this case the plaintiff knew that she had made a settlement. Of that there is no doubt, because she said so in her evidence in terms. She must, according to the authority of all the noble and learned Lords who decided Edwards v. Carter (1), be taken to have known and been acquainted with its provisions. Those provisions were entirely in favour of herself and her children. No other person takes any interest whatever. The plaintiff has three children, one of whom is now nearly twenty years of age, the other two being younger. In 1906 she left her husband and children. What were the circumstances we do not know, and it is immaterial, but she then left the children in the care of her mother, who has educated them ever since, and the plaintiff has had no communication with them since that date. She knew and knows now that they have nothing at all except their respective interests under this settlement. Those seem to me to be the only circumstances of any materiality except, perhaps, one—namely, that the property was in reversion at the time the settlement was executed, and has remained in reversion until the present time. But, in my judgment—in this case at all events—that fact does not affect the question, and, if the judgment of NORTH, J., in Re Jones, Farrington v. Forrester (2) is to be taken as meaning that the reasonable time is to be calculated from the time when the interest falls into possession, then I respectfully disagree with it. In that case we do not know what the affidavits were. We do not know what the facts were, and it may have been on the facts of that particular case that NORTH, J., was justified in holding that forty years was a reasonable time. It seems difficult to see how that could be so, but it may be that he was justified in so holding. But I must respectfully say that the reasons on which he founds his judgment by no means commend themselves to me. B C D E F

The plaintiff in the present case not only knew that she had executed a settlement and must be taken to have known what its provisions were, but, in my judgment, she must be taken to have known when she attained twenty-one years of age that that settlement, being a contract made by her when an infant, was one which could be repudiated by her, if she chose, on attaining her majority. That proposition is affirmed in terms by two of the learned lords justices who concurred in the decision of Carter v. Silber (1) and, although not affirmed in terms by the speeches of the noble and learned Lords in the House of Lords on appeal from the decision in that case, yet I think that the affirmation of it is involved in their decision. The observations of those two learned lords justices will not receive any greater authority from anything that I may say, and I should have said nothing about it except that NEVILLE, J., in his judgment, while following and regarding himself bound by their decision, has expressed his personal disagreement with that particular reason on which it was founded. With the greatest respect I cannot agree with the observations of NEVILLE, J. on that part of the case. It seems to me that so common and so well known a rule of law that a contract made by an infant is in a different position from a contract made by an adult, and that in a case in which it is not void it may yet be avoided by the infant, if he pleases, when he comes of age, is a rule of law the knowledge of which may well be attributed to the person in question. I think, therefore, the fact that the plaintiff in the present case was not actually advised of her rights until, as she said, about a year and a half before the trial of the present action is not a feature to which we ought to attach any weight. Excluding that, it seems to me wholly impossible to say, under the circumstances G H I

A which I have stated with regard to her family, that to repudiate the settlement at the expiration of eighteen and a half years from her minority was to do so within a reasonable time of her minority. For these reasons I think that the decision of the learned judge in the court below is perfectly right.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors : A. F. Wild ; Hardisty, Rhodes & Hardisty.

B [Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re WILLIAMS. JONES v. WILLIAMS

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Neville, J.), April 6, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 38; 85 L.J.Ch. 498; 114 L.T. 992; 60 Sol. Jo. 495]

D Trustee—Administration of estates—Accounts—Limitations—Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict., c. 59), s. 8.

In proceedings for accounts against trustees or executors, a claim by the trustees or executors that they are entitled, under the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8, to limit their liability to six years before action brought must be raised when the order directing accounts and enquiries is made.

E Notes. The Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8, has been replaced by the Limitation Act, 1939, s. 19.

As to an order for the administration of an estate, see 16 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 440 et seq.; and for cases see 24 DIGEST (Repl.) 720-722. For the Limitation Act, 1939, s. 19, see 13 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1179.

F Case referred to :

(1) Re Blow, Governors of St. Bartholomew's Hospital v. Camden, [1914] 1 Ch. 233; 83 L.J.Ch. 185; 109 L.T. 913; 30 T.L.R. 117; 58 Sol. Jo. 136, C.A.; 24 Digest (Repl.) 721, 7077.

Also referred to in argument :

G How v. Earl Winterton, [1896] 2 Ch. 626; 65 L.J.Ch. 832; 75 L.T. 40; 45 W.R. 103; 12 T.L.R. 541; 40 Sol. Jo. 684, C.A.; 32 Digest 491, 1526.

How v. Earl Winterton (1897), 79 L.T. 344, n., C.A.

Re Davies, Ellis v. Roberts, [1898] 2 Ch. 142; 67 L.J.Ch. 507; 79 L.T. 344; 32 Digest 492, 1528.

Lacons v. Warmoll, [1907] 2 K.B. 350; 76 L.J.K.B. 914; 97 L.T. 379; 23 T.L.R. 495, C.A.; 24 Digest (Repl.) 721, 7074.

H Further Consideration of an action for account brought by Ethel Winifred Jones and Florence Gwendoline Taylor, beneficiaries under the will of their father, Henry Williams, against the trustees and executors of the will.

I By his will, dated May 18, 1895, Henry Williams, the testator, after appointing the defendants his trustees and executors, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to them, including the goodwill and stock-in-trade of his business as provision merchant carried on at Albion House, Llanelly, on trust to carry on the business so long as they should think fit, and for that purpose to use such part of the residuary estate as they thought proper, keeping proper books of account so that they might be in a position to sell the business on the death of his widow if she survived him. The testator directed his trustees to convert and invest his residuary estate, and, after providing for the payment of the capital and income of certain sums to certain of his children therein specified, to pay the income from the trust investments to his widow for life, and after death in trust for his eight children (including the plaintiffs) in equal shares absolutely. The testator died on Aug. 30, 1895, and his will was duly proved by the defendants as executors. His widow was then appointed by the trustees to manage the grocery business, and she received the income of the trust estate until her death on Jan. 1, 1906. The testator's children all survived their mother, the youngest attaining twenty-one in 1907. From time to time since the death of the testator, the defendants, at the request of various beneficiaries, made unauthorised payments out of the trust estate; these payments were made honestly and without fraud. In 1910 the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants asking for accounts of their dealings with the trust estate, and eventually accounts were received from them showing various receipts and payments made since 1895. The plaintiffs alleged that these accounts were insufficient, and, on Oct. 16, 1912, they issued an originating summons claiming from the defendants the usual trust accounts and inquiries. The defendants submitted to an account, and on Feb. 13, 1913, NEVILLE, J., ordered (i) an account of the personal estate of the testator (including the business) come to the hands of the defendants; (ii) an inquiry what parts of the personal estate were outstanding or undisposed of; (iii) an account of rents or profits of the testator's real and leasehold estates and the moneys arising from the sales thereof possessed or received by the defendants; (iv) an inquiry what parts, if any, of the testator's real and leasehold estates remained unsold; and (v) an inquiry whether any and, if so, what debts of the testator remained unpaid. It was further ordered that the testator's business and leasehold estates be sold with the approbation of the court, and that the moneys to arise from the sale be lodged in court to the credit of the action, subject to further order. The defendants, in accordance with this order, proceeded to carry in their accounts. These accounts covered a period of seventeen years, commencing with the testator's death in 1895. The testator's business was eventually sold for £840, and the leasehold estates for £1,765. By his certificate, the master found that a balance of £1,080 remained due from the defendants, £815 being in respect of personal estate and £265 in respect of the business. The certificate further stated that the defendants claimed that, in respect of all payments made by them on account of the testator's estate more than six years before the issue of the summons in the action, they were entitled to relief under s. 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, and that none of such payments ought to be disallowed. On this, the master found in the alternative that, if the accounts were taken on this basis, a sum of £3,812 was due to the defendants on balance. The action now came on for hearing on further consideration.

The Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8 (1), provides :

"In any action or other proceeding against a trustee or any person claiming through him, except when the claim is founded upon any fraud or fraudulent breach of trust to which the trustee was party or privy, or is to recover trust property or the proceeds thereof still retained by the trustee, or previously received by the trustee and converted to his use, the following provisions shall apply :—(a) All rights and privileges conferred by any statute of limitations shall be enjoyed in the like manner and to the like extent as they would have been enjoyed in such action or other proceeding if the trustee or person claiming through him had not been a trustee or person claiming through him : (b) If the action or other proceeding is brought to recover money or other property, and is one to which no existing statute of limitations applies, the trustee or person claiming through him shall be entitled to the benefit of and be at liberty to plead the lapse of time as a bar to such action or other proceeding in the like manner and to the like extent as if the claim had been against him in an action of debt for money had and received . . ."

Ward Coldridge, K.C., and H. J. Mackay for the plaintiffs.

Jenkins, K.C., and R. M. Pattison for the defendants.

Rowland Rowlands and Tyldesley Jones for other parties attending.

- A NEVILLE, J.—As at present advised, I am of opinion that this is a case in which s. 8 (b) of the Trustee Act, 1888, if properly raised, would have been applicable for the benefit of the defendants. But the question is whether it has been adequately raised, or at the proper time. The proceedings were originally commenced by originating summons, and the usual accounts and inquiries were directed. The master has made his certificate, and the matter is now before the court on further consideration. The accounts directed by the order and carried in by the trustees went back to the year 1895. Having regard to the form of the order, every one of the accounts directed is inconsistent with the liability of the trustees being limited to six years before the issue of the summons. The accounts were before the master for three years, and, at some time during that period, the point was raised for the first time on behalf of the trustees that they should be allowed the benefit of the statute, and what I have to consider is a very serious question indeed, namely, whether the statute can be relied on and set up by trustees after an order for accounts, inconsistent with it, has been made. Here the trustees never suggested that they were not liable to account from the testator's death until the point was raised. It seems to me that if I were now to allow this defence, an immense amount of time and money would have been thrown away.
- D In every case that has been cited the point has been taken at the trial, or when the order was made. It appears to me that the account must depend on the form of the order at the time it is made. The order can be qualified by a reference to the statute or, as pointed out by the Master of the Rolls (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.) in Re Blow (1), a full account can be directed to be taken, the question as to s. 8 being reserved until further consideration. But in such a case I cannot see any advantage
- E in postponing the question of the liability of the trustees to further consideration. In the present case, the accounts are complete, and, the question of the statute not having been raised until the accounts had been for some time before the master, the defendants, in my opinion, cannot now set up the defence of the statute.

Solicitors: Fullilove Arnott & Co.; J. B. Somerville, for Brodie & Walton, Llanelly.

[Reported by W. J. L. AMBROSE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

COLCHESTER BREWING CO., LTD. v. TENDRING (ESSEX) LICENSING JUSTICES

[COURT OF APPEAL (SWINFEN EADY, PICKFORD AND BANKES, L.J.J.), March 24, 28, 29, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 126; 85 L.J.K.B. 1001; 114 L.T. 1017; 80 J.P. 313; 32 T.L.R. 401.]

Licensing—Compensation authority—County committee—Need to act judicially on legal evidence—Power to state Case.

A compensation authority for a county licensing district (the county confirming and compensation committee) is acting judicially when determining whether the renewal of a licence should be refused, and, therefore, can only act on legal evidence. The authority has power to state a Case for the consideration of the High Court.

Per SWINFEN EADY, L.J. : There is no obligation on the licensing authority to arrange the licensed houses in order of merit and close first the lowest house on the list, even though the house to be closed compares favourably with another house which has not been dealt with.

Court—Established procedure—New jurisdiction—Exercise in accordance with existing procedure.

If a new jurisdiction is given to a court with established and well-known rules of procedure, unless the contrary be expressed or clearly implied the new jurisdiction is to be exercised in accordance with that procedure.

Evidence—Ordnance map—Admissibility.

An ordnance map and its contents, if properly proved or admitted, is admissible in evidence.

Raven v. Southampton Justices (1), [1904] 1 K.B. 430, explained.

Notes. Referred to: R. v. Bath Compensation Authority, [1925] 1 K.B. 685.

As to compensation authorities and admissibility in evidence of maps and plans, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 577-580, and ibid., vol. 15, pp. 411-413. For cases see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 51 et seq., and 22 DIGEST (Repl.) 373-376. For Licensing Act, 1953, see 33 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 142.

Cases referred to :

- (1) Raven v. Southampton Justices, [1904] 1 K.B. 430; 73 L.J.K.B. 282; 90 L.T. 94; 68 J.P. 68; 52 W.R. 574; 20 T.L.R. 146; 48 Sol. Jo. 143, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 69, 517.
- (2) R. v. Southampton Licensing Justices, Ex parte Cardy, [1906] 1 K.B. 446; 75 L.J.K.B. 295; 94 L.T. 437; 70 J.P. 175; 54 W.R. 484; 22 T.L.R. 236; 50 Sol. Jo. 206, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 76, 583.
- (3) Dale's Case, Enright's Case (1881), 6 Q.B.D. 376; 50 L.J.Q.B. 234; 45 J.P. 284, 300; sub nom. Re Serjeant v. Dale, Ex parte Dale, Re Perkins v. Enright, Ex parte Enright, 43 L.T. 769, L.J.J.; affirmed sub nom. Enright v. Lord Penzance (1882), 51 L.J.Q.B. 506; 7 App. Cas. 240; 46 L.T. 779; 30 W.R. 753; 46 J.P. 644, H.L.; 16 Digest 271, 809.
- (4) Dartford Brewery Co., Ltd. v. London County Quarter Sessions, [1906] 1 K.B. 695; 75 L.J.K.B. 597; 94 L.T. 782; 70 J.P. 197; 22 T.L.R. 491; 50 Sol. Jo. 441, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 57, 428.
- (5) Howe v. Newington Licensing Justices, [1907] 2 K.B. 340; 76 L.J.K.B. 718; 71 J.P. 242; 96 L.T. 701; 23 T.L.R. 474; affirmed [1908] 1 K.B. 260; 77 L.J.K.B. 263; 98 L.T. 79; 72 J.P. 12; 24 T.L.R. 174; 52 Sol. Jo. 113, C.A.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 56, 422.
- (6) Re Cathcart, Ex parte Campbell (1870), 5 Ch. App. 703; 23 L.T. 289; 18 W.R. 1056, L.J.; 42 Digest 669, 795.

A Also referred to in argument :

Morgan v. Aylesford Licensing Justices, [1906] 1 K.B. 437; 75 L.J.K.B. 266; 94 L.T. 485; 70 J.P. 155; 22 T.L.R. 229, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 56, 424.

R. v. Shann, [1910] 2 K.B. 418; 79 L.J.K.B. 736; 102 L.T. 700; 74 J.P. 273; 26 T.L.R. 435; 54 Sol. Jo. 474, C.A.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 56, 423.

Mitchell v. Croydon Justices (1914), 111 L.T. 632; 78 J.P. 385; 30 T.L.R. 526, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 56, 420.

B R. v. Drinkwater, etc., Coventry Justices, Ex parte Conway (1905), 70 J.P. 1; 22 T.L.R. 12, C.A.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 56, 421.

R. v. Tolhurst, Ex parte Farrell, R. v. Cox, Ex parte West, [1905] 2 K.B. 478; 74 L.J.K.B. 652; 93 L.T. 76; 69 J.P. 308; 53 W.R. 619; 21 T.L.R. 533; 49 Sol. Jo. 515, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 16, 88.

C Appeal by a brewery company from a decision of the Divisional Court (LORD READING, C.J., COLLIERIDGE and AVORY, JJ.), reported [1915] 3 K.B. 48, on a Case Stated by the licensing committee of Essex Quarter Sessions sitting as the compensation authority under the provisions of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910.

D The Divisional Court held that when the question of the renewal of an old on-licence was referred by the licensing justices to the quarter sessions on the ground of redundancy, there was no principle of law which prohibited the licensing committee from refusing to renew the licence unless it was shown by the evidence that the house compared unfavourably with other licensed houses in the neighbourhood the licences of which were renewed, but as soon as there was evidence before the committee that the house was redundant they had a discretion to refuse the renewal, and it was no answer to say that there were other licensed houses in the neighbourhood which were equally redundant or that the particular house selected was of a higher order of merit than a neighbouring house the licence of which had been renewed. The decision of the licensing committee of quarter sessions refusing a renewal of a licence in respect of premises owned by the brewery company was, therefore, upheld. The brewing company appealed.

E Wootten and Claughton Scott for the brewers.

Hohler, K.C., and C. E. Jones for the licensing justices.

F SWINFEN EADY, L.J., read the following judgment.—This is an appeal from a decision of a Divisional Court upon a Case Stated by the licensing committee of the court of quarter sessions for the county of Essex sitting as the compensation authority under the provisions of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910.

G The appellants are the registered owners of an ante-1869 beerhouse known as the Princess Alexandra at Manningtree. They contend that the order of the Divisional Court was erroneous upon the ground that the licensing committee of the court of quarter sessions were exercising the powers committed to quarter sessions by the Licensing Act and in so doing were acting judicially, and in that capacity H could only act upon evidence on oath, and that there was no such evidence before the committee upon which they could arrive at the conclusion that the licensed house in question—the Princess Alexandra—was unnecessary for the wants of the neighbourhood and superfluous, and could on that ground refuse to renew the licence. It was contended by the licences justices, on the other hand, that the licensing committee were acting, not judicially, but in an administrative capacity, I and that they were at liberty to act without evidence on oath merely upon statements made to them, or upon facts within the knowledge of individual justices who were members of the committee. It was also further contended by the justices that, if the true position be that they were acting judicially and could only arrive at a conclusion on legal evidence that the Princess Alexandra was unnecessary for the requirements of the neighbourhood, there was such evidence in the present case.

For the purposes of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, "the compensation authority are quarter sessions": s. 2 (2) (c). By s. 6 (1), when the compensation authority are the quarter sessions of a county, they shall delegate their power of determining any question as to the refusal of the renewal of a justices' licence under the Act and matters consequential thereon to a committee [see now Licensing Act, 1953, s. 18 (1)]. The Act of 1910 repealed but incorporated and re-enacted the provisions of the Licensing Act, 1904. Shortly after the Act of 1904 came into operation it was decided by the King's Bench Division in R. v. Southampton Licensing Justices, Ex parte Cardy (2) that the jurisdiction committed to the compensation authority of a county by that Act was not given to a new statutory body created by that Act and exercising administrative functions, but that the body spoken of as quarter sessions was meant to be the court of quarter sessions of the county, and that the committee to whom the duty of exercising the powers is delegated exercise the powers of quarter sessions, and in so doing are acting judicially and have power to state a Case for the opinion of the King's Bench Division. Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., said ([1906] 1 K.B. at p. 450, 451):

"Further, the provision in the fifth section of the Act of 1904 that quarter sessions shall delegate their powers of dealing with the renewal of licences under the Act to a committee seems to me to show that the lesser body, the committee to whom the duty is delegated, are exercising the powers of quarter sessions. That being so, I come to the conclusion that, upon such an inquiry so conducted and such a decision, it is an instance of a new jurisdiction being given to a court to act through a committee of its members, and that the principle applies that where a new jurisdiction is given to a court, prima facie that court is to exercise that jurisdiction in accordance with all its ordinary powers. It seems to me that, subject to the committee of quarter sessions exercising their discretion on the application on the merits, they had the power either to state a Special Case or to frame an order stating such facts as would make it a speaking order, and would enable this court to exercise a judgment on the question whether or not the order was good or bad."

In so deciding, the court followed what was said by JAMES, L.J., in Dale's Case, Enraght's Case (3) (6 Q.B.D. at pp. 450, 451):

"If a new jurisdiction is given to an existing court—that is to say, a jurisdiction to deal with some new matters in a different mode and with a different procedure—if that jurisdiction be so given to a well-known court with well-known modes of procedure, with well-known modes of enforcing its orders, it must, unless the contrary be expressed or plainly implied, be given to that court to be exercised according to its general inherent powers of dealing with the matters which are within its cognisance."

Then followed the decision in Dartford Brewery Co., Ltd. v. London Quarter Sessions (4), that the quarter sessions, when considering the refusal of a licence, can only act upon evidence given upon oath before them. In 1907, in Howe v. Newington Licensing Justices (5), the same opinion was expressed by a Divisional Court differently constituted—namely, that the committee of quarter sessions acting as compensation authority can only act on legal evidence. The judgment in this case was affirmed on appeal. It was after this judicial exposition of the true intent and meaning of the Act of 1904 that the Act of 1910 was passed, which re-enacts the same provisions, and the language of JAMES, L.J., in Re Cathcart, Ex parte Campbell (6) is applicable (5 Ch. App. at p. 706):

"Where once certain words in an Act of Parliament have received a judicial construction in one of the superior courts, and the legislature has repeated them without any alteration in a subsequent statute, I conceive that the legislature must be taken to have used them according to the meaning which a court of competent jurisdiction had given to them. I consider, therefore, that the legislature, in repeating these words in the Act of 1861, must be taken to have adopted the meaning put upon them by the Court of Queen's Bench."

A It must now, in my judgment, be considered as settled that a county compensation authority is acting judicially when determining whether the renewal of a licence should be refused, and, accordingly, can only act upon legal evidence and may state a Case, and that the present Case has been properly stated. I may add that, even before licensing justices, where the holder of a justices' licence applies for the renewal of his licence, the justices cannot receive any evidence with respect

B to the renewal of the licence which is not given on oath: Act of 1910, s. 16 (6).

There remains the question whether there was any evidence upon which the compensation authority could refuse the renewal. The licensing justices had reported this house with three others as being in their opinion unnecessary. At the principal meeting of the compensation authority there was evidence on oath given by an inspector of police verifying the statements in the report as to the

C number of licensed houses in the district, the character and population of the locality, and the respective distances of the several licensed premises from the house in question and their respective accommodation, except the Swan, and an ordnance plan was put in without objection. Evidence was also given with regard to the situation of this particular house and, on behalf of the licensee, with regard to the trade of the house. It appeared that there was a fully licensed house, the

D Red Lion, within 166 yds. and a house licensed for the consumption of beer on the premises (the Swan) within 120 yds. Under these circumstances it cannot be maintained that there was no evidence before quarter sessions upon which they could refuse the renewal of the licence of the beerhouse in question on the ground that that particular house was unnecessary. It was pointed out that according to the evidence the present house was a better house than the Swan beerhouse,

E which had not been presented, but there is no obligation upon the licensing authority to arrange the houses in order of merit and close first the lowest house on the list. If there was evidence upon which the authority could decide that the licence of the Princess Alexandra was unnecessary, their decision is valid, even although the house to be closed compares favourably with another licensed house which has not been dealt with. It is not open to us to review the decision of the com-

F pensation authority if it was one which they could lawfully come to on the materials before them, but I share the view expressed by AVORY, J., in the Divisional Court, and I should have been more satisfied if the justices had given some reason for deciding that this particular house was not required.

PICKFORD, L.J.—I agree that this appeal fails, and I also agree that it would

G have been very much more satisfactory if we had known upon what grounds the compensation authority acted, because upon the materials before us it does seem to me somewhat difficult to understand the position. That, however, very likely arises from the fact that we have not got all the materials before us, and, at any rate, we have not to consider whether the decision, in our opinion, was right or wrong; we have only got to consider whether there was any evidence upon which

H the compensation authority could act as they have acted. I think there was evidence on which they could act.

I also think that, assuming what appears upon the ordnance sheet to have been proved or admitted before the justices, the relative positions of different houses with regard to the distribution of population is a matter which they are entitled to look at. Two objections were taken to that proposition—one that it was decided

I by Raven v. Southampton Justices (1) that the ordnance sheet could not be looked at at all; and, secondly, that there was nothing on the face of this case to show that anything more was done than to put in the ordnance sheet, which, of course, is not a document which proves itself, but has to be either proved or admitted. To deal with the second point first, I do not think that that is a fair way of reading the Case as stated. I think, although it is not stated in express words, that there was oral evidence as to the contents, if I may call it so, of the ordnance sheet; and that it must be taken that it either was proved, or else was put in in the way in which these ordnance sheets are constantly put in in licensing matters, and in other matters too, with the consent of both sides. If there had been any point that it was not proved or admitted, and, therefore, was not evidence, I think it should have been very much more clearly stated, and I do not think that to assume that would be, as I have said, fairly to read the case. I do not think that Raven v. Southampton Justices (1) does establish the point for which it is so often cited—that an ordnance sheet and its contents, if properly proved, cannot be looked at at all. It may very well be, and I should think it very likely was the case, that in that case it might show nothing at all. It was an ordnance sheet representing a densely populated part of a densely populated town—Southampton—and it may very well be that the ordnance sheet in that case showed nothing except a number of houses included in one district or in two or three districts exactly like one another. In that case no inference very likely could be drawn, and I do not think that Raven v. Southampton Justices (1) decided anything more. If it decided that the compensation authority is not entitled to look at an ordnance sheet the contents of which are properly proved or admitted to see the relative positions of houses and population, with great respect, I dissent from that decision. But I do not think it does decide that; and I think, assuming the ordnance sheet to be fairly and properly proved, the justices are entitled to look at it exactly as if the evidence which it affords had been given verbatim—which would have taken a great deal longer and would have to have been written down word for word as it came from the mouth of the witness who was giving it. It is only a shorter way of doing the same thing. The witness, instead of saying everything that appeared upon the ordnance sheet in words says: “That ordnance sheet correctly represents the state of things.” In that case in my opinion it is open to the justices to look at it. It may be, as in this case, that important qualifications ought to be made, because the ordnance sheet was not of recent date, and there may be a number of other things that ought to be considered; but I cannot agree that in no case are they entitled to look at what it shows, assuming that it is properly proved.

For these reasons I think there was evidence upon which the compensation authority could act. It is not for me or for this court to say whether, upon the materials before us, we should have come to the same conclusion. I agree that this appeal must be dismissed.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree. The Licensing Act, 1904, for the first time provided that compensation should be paid in respect of an old on-licence, the renewal of which was refused on any other ground than on those set out in the schedule to the statute. The statute also set up a tribunal, the compensation authority, who should deal with the question of compensation, and it defined the principles upon which compensation should be assessed and set up the machinery by which the compensation should be arrived at and divided. After the passing of the Act the question constantly came before the courts, raising questions as to what was the exact position and authority of the compensation authority; and, in a number of decision in which LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., took part and in some other decisions, it has been over and over again laid down that the compensation authority was a judicial authority and must act judicially. Some of the cases have already been referred to by SWINFEN EADY, L.J., and I need not mention them again. There is only one that I will mention, and that is Howe v. Newington Licensing Justices (5). In that case the question was whether the compensation authority were entitled to consider evidence outside the report of the justices which had been made to them referring the licence for compensation, and, in giving the decision in that case, LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., repeated emphatically what he had said before. He says ([1907] 2 K.B. at p. 343):

“The cases show that the committee of quarter sessions can only act on legal evidence, but they nevertheless have a very wide discretion as to the matters which they may take into consideration.”

A That decision was appealed against and it came before the Court of Appeal. The point was not directly in issue in that case, but the Court of Appeal, consisting of LORD HALSBURY, SIR GORRELL BARNES, and BIGHAM, J., dismissed the appeal without any reference to any question whether or not LORD ALVERSTONE'S view was the correct one. Therefore, I think we may take it that both in the Divisional Court, and to that extent in the Court of Appeal, the view has been adopted, since the passing of the Act of 1904, that the compensation authority is a judicial authority and must act judicially. Before us counsel for the justices argued strenuously that those decisions were wrong, and that they had been arrived at by ignoring the language of the statute (s. 19) and by paying no attention to the language of r. 37 of the Licensing Rules, 1910, which expressly provides that

C "the compensation authority may, if and to such extent as they think fit, require any evidence given before them at any meeting held under these rules to be given on oath."

He also pointed out the extraordinary result which these decisions have landed people in—viz., that the compensation authority for a county can state a Special Case, whereas the compensation authority for a borough cannot. I must say for D myself that if the question were open for decision, I think that there is a great deal in what counsel contended, but some considerable time after all those decisions had been given the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, was passed, and the material provisions of the Act of 1904 with reference to the compensation authority were expressly re-enacted in the same language as had been used in the Act of 1904. Under those circumstances, in my opinion, the case is one in which we must apply E the principles laid down by JAMES, L.J., in Re Cathcart, Ex parte Campbell (6), where he said (5 Ch.D. at p. 706):

F "Where once certain words in an Act of Parliament have received a judicial construction in one of the superior courts, and the legislature has repeated them without any alteration in a subsequent statute, I conceive that the legislature must be taken to have used them according to the meaning which a court of competent jurisdiction has given them. I consider, therefore, that the legislature, in repeating these words in the Act of 1861, must be taken to have adopted the meaning put upon them by the Court of Queen's Bench."

G Applying that doctrine, it seems to me that it is not open to this court to consider whether, if the matter were open to us, one would accept counsel's contention or not. The result, therefore, is that the compensation authority must be treated as a judicial authority, and it must act judicially, and have the right to state the Special Case, which is before us, and upon which our opinion is asked.

That being so, the only question is whether or not this compensation authority had evidence before them. The words of the Case are:

H "The question upon which the opinion of this court is desired is whether there was any evidence before the court of quarter sessions upon which they were entitled to and legally could refuse the renewal of the licence of the said beer-house, and, if not, what should be done in the premises."

I It seems to me, upon a consideration of the cases, that a great deal of confusion has arisen from not keeping distinct the position as it is presented to the licensing justices and the position as it is presented to the compensation authority. When the matter is before the licensing justices they have two things to consider and determine—first of all, whether the number of licences in the particular district with regard to which they are acting is in excess of the number required by the public; and, secondly, if they come to the conclusion that it is, which of the licences shall be referred to the compensation authority. But when the matter is before the compensation authority, the position, so far as they are concerned, is this. They have also to consider whether, upon the evidence before them, the number of licences is proved to be in excess of the number required for the district. But then the second question they have to consider is one quite different from the one before the licensing justices, because they have to consider whether there is evidence before them which in their opinion is sufficient to justify them in refusing to renew the licence of the particular house or houses which have been referred to them by the licensing justices. That being the question which they have to decide, and which this particular compensation authority had to decide, if one looks at the Case one finds that there was evidence laid before them which it is admitted was ample evidence to justify them in coming to the conclusion that the number of licensed houses in this district was in excess of the wants of the locality. They had four houses referred to them, with regard to one of which only any question arises; and with regard to that house the evidence was that there were within 200 yds. of it six other licensed houses—two full, two beer on, two beer off, one of them within 166 yds., a full licence, and a beer on within 120 yds. It is quite true that the fact that there were those six houses within 200 yds. of that house is equally evidence against any of the other five, but, the question for the compensation authority being whether there was evidence with regard to this particular house, it seems to me that the fact that there was this number of houses within that short distance of this particular house was evidence upon which they were entitled to act as they thought proper, and that this, at any rate, was a house which was in excess of the wants of the neighbourhood. In addition the justices had before them a copy of the ordnance sheet, and I quite agree with what PICKFORD, L.J., has said about it. Assuming that proper evidence is given to show that the ordnance sheet fairly represents the locality at the time when the justices or the compensation authority are asked to look to it, in my opinion, it may be very valuable evidence to assist them in coming to the conclusion whether any particular licence is or is not required for the wants of the neighbourhood. I think that the decision in Raven v. Southampton Justices (1) has been very much misunderstood. I do not think that either of the learned judges who were the majority there did decide or intend to decide that under no circumstances could an ordnance sheet be made use of, or that under no circumstances could it be of any assistance. I think the decision in that case was confined to the particular facts of the case, and that particularly LORD ALVERSTONE was pointing out that in his opinion in that particular case that particular ordnance sheet afforded the justices no assistance. If that case is to be interpreted or considered as an authority that under no circumstances can an ordnance sheet be made use of, in my opinion it is wrong; but I do not think that that is the proper construction to be put on the case, and I agree with what PICKFORD, L.J., has said about it. In my opinion, there was evidence here before the compensation authority on which they were entitled to act, and on these grounds I think the appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Borall & Borall, for Thompson, Smith & Son, Colchester; Doyle, Devonshire & Co., for Jones & Son, Colchester.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

WEINBERGER v. INGLIS

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Astbury, J.), November 13, 14, 21, 1917]

[Reported [1918] 1 Ch. 133; 87 L.J.Ch. 148; 118 L.T. 208; 34 T.L.R. 104; 62 Sol. Jo. 160]

B

Practice—Particulars—Further and better particulars of matter stated in pleading—"Matter stated"—Traverse in defence of negative allegation in statement of claim—Onus of proving allegation on plaintiff—R.S.C. Ord. 19, r. 7.

A mere traverse of a negative allegation pleaded by a plaintiff which he must establish to succeed is not a "matter stated" within R.S.C. Ord. 19, r. 7, and, accordingly, the court will not order the defendant to give particulars of such traverse.

C

Dictum of COLLINS, L.J., in Alman v. Oppert (1), [1901] 2 K.B. at p. 578, not applied.

Notes. Referred to: La Radiotechnique v. Weinbaum, [1928] Ch. 1; Liversidge v. Anderson and Morrison, [1941] 2 All E.R. 612; Pinson v. Lloyds and National Provincial Foreign Bank, Ltd., [1941] 2 All E.R. 636.

D

As to further particulars, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 30, 31. For R.S.C. Ord. 19, r. 7, see THE ANNUAL PRACTICE, 1960, p. 459.

Cases referred to:

E

(1) Alman v. Oppert, [1901] 2 K.B. 576; 70 L.J.K.B. 745; 84 L.T. 828; 17 T.L.R. 620; 45 Sol. Jo. 615; 8 Mans. 316, C.A.; 33 Digest 514, 585.

(2) Cassel v. Inglis, [1916] 2 Ch. 211; 85 L.J.Ch. 569; 114 L.T. 935; 32 T.L.R. 555; 42 Digest 790, 10.

(3) Spedding v. Fitzpatrick (1888), 38 Ch.D. 410; 58 L.J.Ch. 139; 59 L.T. 492; 37 W.R. 20; 4 T.L.R. 505, C.A.; Digest (Pleading) 186, 1579.

F

(4) Re Gresham Life Assurance Society, Ex parte Penney (1872), 8 Ch. App. 446; 42 L.J.Ch. 183; 28 L.T. 150; 21 W.R. 186, L.J.J.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 218, 1384.

(5) Roberts v. Owen (1890), 54 J.P. 295; 6 T.L.R. 172, D.C.; 33 Digest 514, 584.

Also referred to in argument:

G

Wood v. Woad (1874), L.R. 9 Exch. 190; 43 L.J.Ex. 153; 30 L.T. 815; 22 W.R. 709; 2 Asp. M.L.C. 289; 8 Digest (Repl.) 656, 35.

Re Beloved Wilke's Charity (1851), 3 Mac. & G. 440; 20 L.J.Ch. 588; 17 L.T.O.S. 101; 42 E.R. 330, L.C.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 535, 2814.

Thorp v. Holdsworth (1876), 3 Ch.D. 637; 45 L.J.Ch. 406; 3 Ch. Pr. Cas. 87; Digest (Pleading) 40, 322.

H

Re Coalport China Co., [1895] 2 Ch. 404; 64 L.J.Ch. 710; 73 L.T. 46; 2 Mans. 532; 12 R. 462; sub nom. Re Coalport China Co., Ltd., Ex parte Middleton and Bell, 44 W.R. 38, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 394, 2529.

Green v. Garbutt (1912), 28 T.L.R. 575, C.A.; Digest (Pleading) 200, 1680.

James v. Radnor County Council (1890), 6 T.L.R. 240; 54 J.P. 614; Digest (Pleading) 199, 1674.

I

Adjourned Summons.

The plaintiff, a British subject, but of enemy birth, in 1895 became a member of the Stock Exchange in London, the rules and regulations of which are fully set out in Cassel v. Inglis (2). The rules of the Stock Exchange material to this case are r. 21, which provided that the committee should on the first Monday in March proceed to re-elect such members as they should deem eligible to be members of the Stock Exchange for one year commencing Mar. 25; and r. 35, that any member might by notice in writing object to the re-election of any other member, and that any such objection should be considered by the committee. The plaintiff in 1917 applied for re-election, and on Feb. 15 received a letter from the committee stating that a notice of objection to his re-election had been lodged with them under r. 35, "on the ground of your enemy birth," and asking him to make a statement of facts in reply. On Feb. 19 the plaintiff replied by letter that he came to England in 1887 at the age of twenty, and five years later was naturalised as a British subject and denationalised in Germany; that he had been in business in London since 1887, had married an English wife, had always been a loyal British subject, and that there could not possibly be any good ground for the objection. On Mar. 18, the plaintiff received notice that he had not been re-elected. Under these circumstances he commenced this action on April 5 against the committee for general purposes of the London Stock Exchange for a declaration that their decision whereby his application for re-election was rejected was invalid, and for an order that his name should be restored to the list of members of the London Stock Exchange, and a mandatory injunction requiring the defendants to proceed to re-elect the plaintiff. The plaintiff in 1895 paid an entrance fee on his election to the Stock Exchange of £525, and became the proprietor of twenty shares of £12 each, for which he paid £4,139 10s. He was re-elected each year until 1917, and paid the annual subscription of £31 10s.

This summons was taken out in the action by the plaintiff for particulars of the defence. The material pleadings in the statement of claim were as follows. In para. 5 the plaintiff alleged (inter alia) that nothing had occurred since his election in 1895 to render him ineligible for re-election. In para. 6 he set out the committee's letter, and his reply on Feb. 19, 1917, and alleged that the statements in his own letter were true. In para. 9 he alleged that in declining to re-elect him the committee did not exercise any discretion bonâ fide, fairly, reasonably, or judicially, but had acted arbitrarily, that there were no facts or grounds on which they could exercise any discretion against his re-election, and that no reasons or facts were adduced or existed which could or did operate to induce the committee properly to decide that he was not eligible. In para. 10 he alleged that the committee's decision was against natural justice and not a proper exercise of their judicial discretion. By para. 5 of their defence the committee traversed para. 5 of the statement of claim. In para. 6 they admitted the writing and receipt of the two letters of Feb. 15 and 19, 1917, but made no admission as to any matters alleged in para. 6 of the claim. By para. 9 they alleged that in their bonâ fide discretion under r. 21 they did not re-elect the plaintiff because they did not deem him eligible, and for no other reason. In para. 10 they traversed every allegation of fact in paras. 9 and 10 of the claim. The particulars the plaintiff applied for were (inter alia) under para. 5 of the defence, any facts or circumstances that had occurred since 1895 to render him ineligible, and of any grounds on which he was now ineligible; under para. 6, as to which of the statements in his letter were untrue or incorrect, and in what respect; under para. 9, of any facts or grounds on which the committee founded their decision; and under para. 10, of any facts or grounds on which they could properly exercise any discretion against his re-election, or any reasons or facts that could induce them to decide that he was not eligible.

Order 19, r. 7, of the Rules of the Supreme Court is as follows :

"A further and better statement of the nature of the claim or defence, or further and better particulars of any matter stated in any pleading, notice, or written proceeding requiring particulars, may in all cases be ordered, upon such terms, as to costs and otherwise, as may be just."

Gore-Browne, K.C., and A. Neilson for the plaintiff.

Upjohn, K.C., Frank Russell, K.C., and Douglas M. Hogg, K.C. for the defendants.

Nov. 21, 1917. ASTBURY, J. read a judgment in which he stated facts and continued: As a general rule, the court never orders a defendant to give

A particulars of facts and matters which the plaintiff has to prove in order to succeed, and this is especially the case where a defendant has confined himself to putting the plaintiff to the proof of allegations in the statement of claim, the onus of establishing which lies upon him.

B The only affirmative plea or defence raised by the defendants in this case is in para. 9 of the defence—viz., that they, acting bonâ fide and honestly in the exercise of their duty and discretion under r. 21, did not re-elect the plaintiff last March, because they did not deem him eligible to be a member of the Stock Exchange for the year following. The plaintiff asks, in the first place, for particulars of the facts or grounds upon which they based this decision. In my judgment, he is not entitled to any such information by way of particulars. It is unnecessary to decide upon this application whether he is entitled to obtain any such information by other means. The plaintiff has alleged in para. 9 of his statement of claim that the defendants did not exercise any discretion bonâ fide, fairly, reasonably, or judiciously in coming to the conclusion which they did come to. Unless and until he establishes a case for the defendants to answer on this issue—which is the real issue in the action as the pleadings at present stand—the court has no jurisdiction to sit as a Court of Appeal from their decision, nor will the court presume that their action was not justified, if they do not choose to state their reasons and submit them to the court for decision—a proceeding which they are under no obligation to adopt, and which the court, on an application of this character, has no right or duty to compel. The object of particulars, as Cotrox, L.J., said in Spedding v. Fitzpatrick (3) (38 Ch.D. at p. 413), is to enable the applicant to know what case he has to meet at the trial, and so to save unnecessary expense and avoid allowing parties to be taken by surprise. The plaintiff here knows perfectly well what case he has to meet, and what the real issue raised by the defendants in para. 9 of their defence is—it is that they acted bonâ fide in accordance with their duty, under the rules which bind him and them alike. Prima facie the court will presume this, and the onus of disturbing this presumption lies upon the plaintiff: see Re Gresham Life Assurance Society, Ex parte Penney (4) and Cassel v. Inglis (2) and the cases therein referred to.

F This plea raised by the defendants, although in form affirmative, is in substance a traverse of the plaintiff's allegation in para. 9 of the statement of claim above referred to, which he must prove in whole or in part in order to succeed. The whole of the remaining issues raised by the defence consist chiefly in non-admissions or traverses of the plaintiff's allegations, the onus of proving all of which rests upon him. But the difficulty, if there be one, in this respect, arises from the fact that the plaintiff has pleaded a large number of negatives—such, for instance, as “nothing has occurred since his election in 1895 or now exists to render him ineligible for election”: “no reason or facts existed which could have legitimately operated in the minds of the defendants, nor did any facts or reasons operate in their minds to induce them properly to deem or decide that the plaintiff was not eligible for re-election,” the traverse of which, it is contended, amounts to the assertion of a wide and undefined position. It is submitted on behalf of the plaintiff, in the second place, that he ought not to be forced to trial without notice of any facts or circumstances known to the defendants rendering him, or believed by them to render him, ineligible for re-election, which they on these traverses, as they stand, could at the hearing affirmatively prove or raise against him. This may sound plausible, and if the plaintiff was likely to be injured by the defendants unfairly adopting any such course at the hearing, or if the pleadings disclosed any design on their part to take advantage unfairly of any such position, it might be the duty of the court to guard against it, but I do not think that this is at all the true view of the position as disclosed by the present pleadings. The defendants have informed the plaintiff of the only objection to his re-election made to them under r. 35, and he has dealt with this in his letter of Feb. 19 last. The whole of the remainder of the defence is a reliance on the part of the committee upon the discretion vested in them under r. 21, which it is their duty to safeguard, and for the rest leaving the plaintiff, as they are obviously entitled to leave him, to prove his own case; for this latter purpose a traverse of his allegations is necessary. If the defendants were to attempt at the hearing to prove some affirmative case against the plaintiff other than that pleaded by them in para. 9 of the defence, and of which no previous notice has been given to him, the court has full power to prevent any injustice being done and could, by adjournment or otherwise, prevent the plaintiff being taken by surprise or otherwise prejudiced. But if an order were made on this application, either directing the defendants to give particulars or directing that no fact or circumstance rendering the plaintiff ineligible for re-election should be proved by the defendants without previous notice thereof being given, the order would not be in accordance with the authorities that I have referred to, and the non-giving of such information might, having regard to the ingenuity displayed in the statement of claim, be used or attempted to be used to prejudice the defendants on the main issue raised by them in para. 9 of their defence.

It is further said that the denial of the contents of the letter of Feb. 19 in para. 6 of the defence is evasive, in that it does not state which of the allegations of fact made therein are intended to be disputed—the defendants have traversed the whole of such allegations, which they are entitled to do, at the risk of costs, if they are so minded—though in reality they are here again merely putting the plaintiff to the proof of his case. Under Ord. 19, r. 7, further particulars may be ordered of any matter “stated” in any pleading requiring particulars. A traverse by a defendant, even of a negative pleaded by a plaintiff, which he must establish in order to succeed, is not, in my judgment, a matter “stated” in the defence within the meaning of this rule. The rules under the Judicature Act abolishing the general issue were intended to limit and define the issues to be tried, but not to force a defendant on a traverse to undertake the burden of proving anything himself, and still less to relieve a plaintiff from any onus of proof resting solely upon him. The plaintiff has relied in support of this application for particulars on a dictum attributed to COLLINS, L.J., in Alman v. Oppert (1), the decision in which was that the defendants in an action under the Directors’ Liability Act, 1890, were liable to give particulars of the grounds of their belief, the onus of proving reasonable grounds for which is thrown upon them by the statute. The lord justice is reported to have said, after giving what was the actual decision in the case [1901] 2 K.B. at p. 578:

“There are other cases in which particulars addressed to the state of a person’s mind are ordered as a matter of course, for instance, in an action for malicious prosecution, particulars going to the question whether the defendant had reasonable and probable cause for what he did.”

In actions for malicious prosecution, where the defendant confines himself to traversing the plaintiff’s negative allegation of want of reasonable and probable cause, and where no claim is joined for false imprisonment, in which case the onus is thrown on the plaintiff, it has not been the practice to order particulars from the defendant: see BULLEN AND LEAKE’S PRECEDENTS OF PLEADINGS (6th Edn.) p. 877, and 7th Edn. p. 786; except perhaps on very special grounds (as to which see Roberts v. Owen (5)). In the present case, however, the reason for not ordering particulars of the defendants’ traverse is much stronger than in the case of malicious prosecution. Here the defendants plead that they had a discretion and a duty to act as they did, under a contract binding both upon the plaintiff and themselves, in the exercise and performance of which they cannot, at all events in the first instance, be called upon to disclose the reasons for their action, and, being in a fiduciary position, they ought not to be prejudiced in their defence, because they decline to admit a number of ingeniously pleaded negative allegations, the onus of proving which is upon the plaintiff, and the non-traverse of which by the defendants would entitle him to judgment. For these reasons I am of opinion

A that the order proposed to be made by the master refusing the plaintiff's application was right. The summons will be dismissed and the defendants' costs will be theirs in any event.

Summons dismissed.

Solicitors: Herbert Smith, Goss, King & Gregory; Travers-Smith, Braithwaite & Co.

B [Reported by G. P. LANGWORTHY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

HORWOOD v. MILLAR'S TIMBER AND TRADING CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Warrington and Scrutton, L.JJ.)
November 30, 1916]

D [Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 305; 86 L.J.K.B. 190; 115 L.T. 805; 33 T.L.R. 86;
61 Sol. Jo. 114]

Contract—Illegality—Public policy—Contract imposing servile conditions—Terms unnecessary for protection of covenantor—Severability of covenant—Assignment of salary as security for loan—Agreement containing a number of obligations involved in each other.

E By an indenture to secure repayment of a loan of £42 odd, with £31 odd for agreed interest, B. assigned to the plaintiff a policy of assurance for £100 on B.'s life, and, further, all the salary or wages then due or thenceforth to become due to him in connection with his engagement or employment with the defendant company or any other situation, post, or office that he might during the continuation of the deed hold in that company or with or in any other company, office, person, or firm whatsoever, together with all overtime, extras, increments, and remuneration and bonuses in connection with any such employment, to hold unto the plaintiffs absolutely, but subject to the proviso for redemption thereafter contained. B. further covenanted that he would diligently and faithfully devote himself to his duties, wherever he might be employed, and that he would not do or suffer anything to be done which might cause him to be dismissed or liable to be dismissed or have his salary reduced, and that he would not without the express sanction in writing of the plaintiff determine his engagement with the defendant company or other his employer for the time being and would not borrow or raise any sum of money whatsoever, whether on security or otherwise, or part with, sell, pledge, or otherwise dispose of any of his furniture in his then residence, nor obtain or endeavour to obtain credit or buy any goods on credit or in any way make himself or his property answerable for any sum or sums of money, whether legally or morally. It was also agreed that, if B. failed to perform any covenant, the whole sum then owing by him to the plaintiff would become due.

H
I Held: (i) the agreement was not reasonable in reference to the interests of the parties or of the public, nor was it necessary for the protection of the plaintiff; it imposed servile obligations on B.; and, therefore, it was illegal and unenforceable as being against public policy: (ii) the agreement containing, as it did, a number of obligations which were involved in each other, and the breach of any one of those obligations resulting in the whole of the money borrowed becoming immediately payable, the assignment by B. of his salary could not be severed from the rest of the agreement and enforced by itself.

Decision of the Divisional Court (LUSH and SANKEY, JJ.), [1916] 2 K.B. 44, affirmed.

Notes. Considered: Naylor, Benzon & Co. v. Krainische Industrie Gesellschaft, [1918] 1 K.B. 331. Distinguished: Denny's Trustee v. Denny and Warr, [1919] 1 K.B. 583. Referred to: McEllistram v. Ballmacelligott Co-operative Agricultural and Dairy Society, [1919] A.C. 548; Pratt v. British Medical Association, [1919] All E.R. Rep. 104; Hepworth Manufacturing Co. v. Ryott, [1920] 1 Ch. 1; King v. Michael Faraday and Partners, Ltd., [1939] 2 All E.R. 478.

As to agreements contrary to public policy and severability of promises in an agreement, see 8 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 120, 147, 148, and for cases see 12 DIGEST (Repl.) 269 et seq., 325-331.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Harbert Morris, Ltd. v. Steelby, ante at p. 295; [1916] A.C. 688; 85 L.J.Ch. 210; 114 L.T. 618; 32 T.L.R. 297; 60 Sol. Jo. 305, H.L.; 43 Digest 24, 151.
- (2) Mason v. Provident Clothing and Supply Co., Ltd., [1913] A.C. 724; 82 L.J.K.B. 1153; 109 L.T. 449; 29 T.L.R. 727; 57 Sol. Jo. 739, H.L.; 43 Digest 22, 143.
- (3) Eastes v. Russ, [1914] 1 Ch. 468; 83 L.J.Ch. 329; 110 L.T. 206; 30 T.L.R. 237; 58 Sol. Jo. 234, C.A.; 43 Digest 43, 432.
- (4) Davies v. Davies (1887), 36 Ch.D. 359; 56 L.J.Ch. 962; 58 L.T. 209; 36 W.R. 86; 3 T.L.R. 839, C.A.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 662, 5135.
- (5) Tailby v. Official Receiver (1888), 13 App. Cas. 523; 58 L.J.Q.B. 75; 60 L.T. 162; 37 W.R. 513; 4 T.L.R. 726, H.L.; 20 Digest 334, 770.
- (6) Mitchel v. Reynolds (1711), 1 P. Wms. 181; Fortes. Rep. 295; 10 Mod. Rep. 130; 24 E.R. 347; 43 Digest 11, 59.
- (7) Nordenfjelt v. Maxim Nordenfjelt Arms and Ammunition Co., Ltd., [1894] A.C. 535; 68 L.J.Ch. 908; 71 L.T. 489; 10 T.L.R. 636; 11 R. 1, H.L.; 43 Digest 22, 139.
- (8) A.-G. of Commonwealth of Australia v. Adelaide Steamship Co., [1913] A.C. 781; 83 L.J.P.C. 84; 109 L.T. 258; 12 Asp. M.L.C. 361; 43 Digest 12, 68.

Also referred to in argument:

- North Western Salt Co., Ltd. v. Electrolytic Alkali Co., Ltd.*, [1913] 3 K.B. 422; 107 L.T. 439; reversed [1914] A.C. 461; 83 L.J.K.B. 530; 110 L.T. 852; 30 T.L.R. 313; 58 Sol. Jo. 338, H.L.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 338, 2619.
- Re Clarke, Cooke v. Carter* (1887), 36 Ch.D. 218; 56 L.J.Ch. 981; 57 L.T. 823; 36 W.R. 293; 3 T.L.R. 818; 31 Sol. Jo. 676, C.A.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 22, 8.
- Re Mirans*, [1881] 1 Q.B. 594; 50 L.J.Q.B. 397; 64 L.T. 117; 39 W.R. 464; 7 T.L.R. 309; 8 Morr. 59; 12 Digest (Repl.) 271, 2060.
- Egerton v. Earl Browder* (1853), 4 H.L. Cas. 1; 8 State Tr. N.S. 192; 23 L.J.Ch. 348; 21 L.T.O.S. 306; 18 Jer. 71; 10 E.R. 359, H.L.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 269, 2072.

Appeal to the plaintiff from an order of the Divisional Court.

By an indenture dated July 1, 1913, and made between the plaintiff (a money-lender) and George F. V. Bunyan, a clerk employed by the defendant company at a salary of under £3 a week and in the indenture referred to as the mortgagor, as beneficial owner, in consideration of a loan of £12 Ss. 3d., and to secure the repayment of that sum, together with the sum of £31 16s. for agreed interest, a signed to the plaintiff, first, a policy of assurance for £100 on his (Bunyan's) life, and, secondly,

"All that the salary or wages now due or hereafter to become due to him, the mortgagor, in connection with his engagement or employment with Messrs. Milner's Timber and Trading Co., Ltd., or any other situation, post, or office that he may during the continuance of these presents hold in the said company, or with or in any other company, office, person, or firm whatsoever, together with all overtime, extras, increments, and remuneration in connection with any such employment receivable or to be received by him in respect thereof (including any moneys that may or might be paid to him by way of bonus or

A otherwise) should he be discharged from or leave his present employment, or that he may or might be paid or become payable to his personal representatives or estate by his firm in the event of his death, to hold unto the lender absolutely; but subject to the proviso for redemption hereinafter contained."

By cl. 3 the deed further provided :

B "(d) That during the continuance of these presents the mortgagor shall diligently and faithfully devote himself to his duties wheresoever he may be employed, and will not do or suffer anything to be done which may or might cause him to be dismissed or liable to be dismissed or have his salary reduced, but shall use his best endeavours to advance his position wheresoever employed, and shall not, without the express sanction in writing of the lender, determine his engagement with Messrs. Millar's Timber and Trading Co., Ltd., or other his employer for the time being. . . . (h) That during the continuance of these presents not to borrow, apply for, or attempt in any way to borrow or raise any sum or sums of money whatsoever, whether on security or otherwise, nor part with, give away, sell, settle, pledge, or otherwise dispose of, any of the furniture, chattels, and other goods and effects now in or about or hereafter to be brought upon his present residence (the whole of the existing household furniture, goods, and effects being and it is expressly declared by the mortgagor to be his sole and unincumbered property), and not to obtain or endeavour to obtain credit or buy any articles or goods on credit or to be paid for by deferred payments, nor to pledge the credit of the mortgagor or permit any other person to pledge his credit (save his wife in the case of ordinary tradesmen's books for weekly settlement, such books to be produced to the lender for his inspection on demand), and also not to enter into any gambling contract, bet, or wager, or become bail or surety for or on behalf of any person whatsoever, or in any other way make himself or his property answerable for any sum or sums of money, whether legally or morally. (i) Not without the consent of the lender in writing first had and obtained to remove from or take any other dwelling-house or residence."

F By cl. 5 (d) if the mortgagor died, got into financial difficulties, or failed to perform any of the covenants in the indenture the whole sum then owing under the indenture became due. Notice of the assignment was duly given by the plaintiff to the defendant company on June 24, 1915.

G The plaintiff brought this action in the City of London Court, claiming that an account should be taken of all salary or wages, and all overtime, extras, increments, remuneration, and bonuses that were due to Bunyan from the defendant company on June 24, 1915, or which had accrued due since that date, and that the defendant company should pay to the plaintiff the amount found due on the taking of such account. The learned judge of the City of London Court decided in favour of the defendants on the ground that the assignment was a conditional and not an absolute assignment within the meaning of s. 25 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873. The question whether the instrument was void as being against public policy was not raised before the learned judge. The plaintiff appealed to the Divisional Court (LUSH and SANKEY, JJ.), who decided that the assignment was absolute in form, but that the plaintiff could not recover as the covenants, which were indivisible, unduly fettered the freedom of the assignor, and that, therefore, the assignment was void as being in restraint of trade and contrary to public policy. The plaintiff appealed.

I Compston, K.C. (with him Rowand Harker), for the plaintiff.

Morten, K.C., and H. J. Richards for the defendants, were not called on to argue.

LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—This appeal is one involving questions of interest, of importance, and of difficulty. The last important case relating to these questions that went to the House of Lords is Herbert Morris, Ltd. v. Sarelbly (1). That case followed Mason v. Provident Clothing and Supply Co., Ltd. (2).

There is another case which did not go to the House of Lords but remained here—namely, Eastes v. Russ (3), in which the same principles were laid down.

It is argued that, if there is consideration for the deed the court will not measure the consideration, and the question of public policy has nothing to do with the matter. That is a proposition which in this court in Sarcelby's Case (1), I endeavoured to refute. The view taken in the House of Lords entirely concurred in that, and, if I recollect rightly, in terms approved of my judgment in the court below. What does that mean? It means that we must have regard to considerations of public policy and that it is no answer to say that an adult man, as to whom undue pressure is not shown to have been exercised, ought to be allowed to enter into any contract he thinks fit affecting his own liberty of action. That is not the law. It seems to me that if as a matter of construction I come to the conclusion that the contract is one which puts the covenantor in the position—I cannot think of a better word at the moment to express my view—of adscriptus glebæ, as the villein used to be called in mediæval times, on the ground of public policy the law will not recognise such a thing. You have no right so to deal with a man's liberty of action any more than with his property, and the law says it is contrary to public policy.

What is the deed in the present case? It is in some respects the most extraordinary deed it has ever been my fate to read. It is a deed between a clerk in the City of London and a moneylender—not so described, but he is a registered moneylender, as we have been told. It begins by reciting that the mortgagor is indebted to the various persons whose names are set out in the first schedule to the deed in sums amounting to £42 8s. 3d. When I look at the schedule I see that the name of one is Adams, a moneylender, for £8 10s., the second is a moneylender for £8 15s., and the third is a moneylender for £2 7s. 9d. Then there is a draper £3 16s. and a solicitor £5 8s. 6d. There is another man who has claimed £1 5s.; I do not know what that is for. Then there is a cash loan of £4—"Cash to yourself, £4." Then F. Borwood, expenses, £2 2s.; Barnes and Butler, for the cost of the deed, £3 3s.; and lastly, a first year's premium on life assurance policy, £3. So it is apparent that the mortgagor had become the victim of moneylenders. The money that was due was substantially due to moneylenders, including the mortgagee himself, who is apparently stated to have advanced the mortgagor £4, and for the cost of the deed and the costs of the solicitor. Made up in that way, the mortgagor was indebted to various persons in the sum of £42 8s. 3d., which, the deed recites,

"the mortgagor hereby declares to be a complete statement of all his liabilities whatsoever (which declaration is and shall be considered to be the prime factor inducing the lender to enter into this arrangement), and has requested the lender to pay and discharge the same on his behalf, which the lender has agreed to do on having the repayment of such sum of £42 8s. 3d. together with the sum of £31 16s. agreed interest thereon, making a total of £74 4s. 3d., secured to him in manner hereinafter appearing."

Secured how? By the assignment and by all the covenants which are found in the deed. That interest amounted to 60 per cent.

[His LORDSHIP read the clauses of the deed hereinbefore set out, and said that cl. 3, provided that, in further pursuance of the agreement and for the consideration aforesaid, the mortgagor covenanted to pay the principal sum of £74 4s. 3d. by instalments of £2 per month on the first day in each month, the first payment to be made on Aug. 1 next, to hand over the receipt for the premium for the policy, and not to do or suffer anything to be done whereby the policy might become annulled or voidable. There was a rather unusually stringent clause that if there was any default made in paying the premiums the mortgagee might pay them and he should be entitled to demand repayment of any moneys so expended with interest at the rate of sixty per cent. Referring to cl. 3 (d) His LORDSHIP said:]

- A That is to say by covenant the mortgagor is to be a—I again use the expression adscriptus glebæ. He is not to leave any employment in which he may be without the consent of the mortgagee. Paragraph (e) provides for default being made. The only effect of (f) is that in certain events there is sixty per cent. upon sixty per cent. charged. Paragraph (g) provides that the mortgagor is to keep insured the furniture and household goods in or about his residence, there being no assignment of that furniture and goods at all. He is also to keep himself insured against any liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act in respect of any servant or other employee of his.

Then comes (h), which is certainly the most extraordinary clause I have ever seen. [His LORDSHIP read the paragraph.] With respect to (i), which is a short clause, but not the least important, and provides that the mortgagor shall not without the consent in writing of the lender remove from or take any other dwelling-house, that seems to me to be exactly adscriptus glebæ.

- C Can it possibly be doubted that this is a deed which is contrary to public policy? Is it open for a man in consideration of a sum of cash to bind himself not to leave the house where he resides, and not to sell any of his furniture and effects in the house or in any future house he may move into, which furniture is not the subject of any charge in favour of the mortgagee. Is it open to him to say: "Whatever property I may have I will not give any kind of security upon it for any sum of money or for any debt which legally or morally I may desire to pay." It would prevent the man from employing a doctor or a surgeon in the case of illness in his family, or in respect of any children he may have. It would deter him from raising money for their maintenance or that of his wife, or for the education of his children.
- D I must say that I think this is a deed which the law must recognise as a bad deed on grounds of public policy of the most well-established kind.

E I do not propose to go through the cases which have been cited to us. But there is one passage in the judgment of BOWEN, L.J., in Davies v. Davies (4) which seems to me to be valuable (36 Ch.D. at p. 393):

- F "The law of England allows a man to contract for his labour, or allows him to place himself in the service of a master, but it does not allow him to attach to his contract of service any servile incidents."

It seems to me that that observation is just as good in a case of this kind, which relates to a contract for a loan, as it is in the case of a contract for service. It is part of the common law. The law does not allow such a contract to be made.

- G Counsel for the plaintiff objected to a word which I used at an early stage of the argument, that the effect of the deed in the present case seemed to savour of slavery. Possibly slavery is too strong a word. But it certainly seems to me to savour of serfdom to say that a mortgagor shall not leave the house in which he is living without the mortgagee's consent; that he shall not dispose of a chair or a table in his house on which the mortgagee has no charge, without his consent; and that, if the mortgagor does so, the whole amount of principal and interest secured by the mortgage will immediately become payable instead of being payable by instalments. I have no hesitation in saying that in my view this is a deed which is contrary to public policy.

- H It is said that there is no harm in the assignment of salary. I agree. Salary may be assigned on the principle of Davies v. Davies (4), not merely arrears of salary due at the date of the assignment, but future payments may also be assigned. But the argument goes further. It is said, let that be treated as good and never mind what the consideration for it was. For the consideration for it according to the deed was founded upon the terms of the covenants thereafter contained. I cannot accept that view. I think that you must consider the consideration as one and entire, and that the attempt to say that this is a case in which the doctrine of the divisibility of parts of the deed should be applied, is distinctly contrary to the passage in LORD MOULTON's judgment in Mason v. Provident Clothing and Supply Co., Ltd. (2) to which SCRUTTON, L.J., referred in the course of the argument and is contrary, I think, also to a great many other authorities that might be referred to. The consideration is one and entire. You cannot speculate and say that, if part of the consideration had been omitted, if half of the covenants were struck out, if the transaction were left simply as a mortgage of the furniture with the ordinary covenant, if the deed were treated as a covenant for the assignment of wages and a covenant to pay, the result would be good; and that, therefore, the court should strike out and disregard all the other covenants which are made part of the consideration for the deed. I decline to do that. It seems to me that it would be the worst example of allowing a moneylender to get his clutches round a clerk and to put him in a position in which he is not allowed to move to another district and become a clerk elsewhere, not allowed to leave his house however unhealthy it may be, and not allowed to deal with any part of his unincumbered furniture and other property without the leave of the moneylender. It seems to me that the view taken by the court below is perfectly right, and that it is no use for the mortgagee here to claim payment under a deed which on the face of it is bad on grounds of public policy. For these reasons I think that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

WARRINGTON, L.J. I am of the same opinion. I am happy to think that it is very seldom that so oppressive a contract as this comes before the court. I am happy also to think that it may be our decision today which will put an end to similar transaction in future.

[His Lordship stated the facts and continued:] I need not read the whole of the restrictive provisions. The first one to which I think it is necessary to refer is cl. 3 (d) which requires the mortgagor to "diligently and faithfully devote himself to his duties wheresoever he may be employed, and will not do or suffer anything to be done which may or might cause him to be dismissed or liable to be dismissed or have his salary reduced, but shall use his best endeavours to advance his position wheresoever employed."

Then comes this provision :

"And shall not, without the express sanction in writing of the lender, determine his engagement with Messrs. Millar's Timber and Trading Co., Ltd., or other his employer for the time being."

Then by cl. 3 (h) he is "not to borrow, apply for, or attempt in any way to borrow or raise any sum or sums of money whatsoever, whether on security or otherwise, nor part with, give away, sell, settle, pledge, or otherwise dispose of, any of the furniture, chattels, and other goods and effects now in or about or hereafter to be brought upon his present residence (the whole of the existing household furniture, goods, and effects being, and it is expressly declared by the mortgagor to be, his sole and unincumbered property), and not to obtain or endeavour to obtain credit or buy any articles or goods on credit or to be paid for by deferred payments, nor to pledge the credit of the mortgagor or permit any other person to pledge his credit (save his wife in the case of ordinary tradesmen's books for weekly settlement, such books to be produced to the lender for his inspection on demand), and also not to enter into any gambling contract, bet, or wager, or become bail or surety for or on behalf of any person whatsoever, or in any other way make himself or his property answerable for any sum or sums of money whether legally or morally."

Lastly there comes this clause :

"(i) Not without the consent of the lender in writing first had and obtained to remove from or take any other dwelling-house or residence."

A It comes to this. If the mortgagor for some reason thinks that he would rather not remain in the employment of the defendants, but would like to take employment somewhere else, then, unless the lender in whose power he has placed himself consents to that change, he can only make the change on the penalty of having the whole of this money become due at once and bear interest at sixty per cent. per annum. If the mortgagor has a daughter who wishes to be married and he desires to give her a part of the furniture in his house to assist her in furnishing her house he can only do it under the same penalty. If he finds that his child is ill and it is necessary to employ a doctor and not to pay his fees at once, but to obtain credit, he can only do it upon the penalty of having the whole of the money secured by this deed become due. If he finds his residence undesirable for any reason, he cannot change it except on the same penalty. Can it possibly be said that those provisions can be enforceable in any court of this kingdom?

C The mortgagor has put himself, one may say, almost body and soul in the power of this moneylender. Even in the most trivial incidents of life he cannot do as he pleases. He can only act in a way to which this moneylender will consent. It is unnecessary to read any of the passages in the judgments in the cases which have been referred to in which judges on previous occasions have expressed their view that any contract which tends to impose servile obligations upon any person in this country is void and unenforceable in these courts. If ever there was a contract which placed a man under servile obligations towards the other contracting party this contract is such a contract.

D

E It is said—and this is the only point on which, speaking for myself, I have felt the least difficulty—that you can treat the assignment of wages as a separate matter and enforce that assignment, or give effect to that assignment and neglect the other terms of the contract which are objectionable on the grounds which I have mentioned. In my opinion, the answer to that is this. The assignment is not a separate matter. The assignment with which we have to deal is not the assignment of an actual debt, not the assignment of a chose in action which is in existence, but the assignment of a chose in action, wages which a man is going to earn, which may hereafter come into existence. The effect of that is nothing more than to create a contractual obligation between the two parties. That was stated by LORD MACNAGHTEN in his speech to the House of Lords in Tailby v. Official Receiver (5) in these terms (13 App. Cas. at p. 543):

F

G "It has long been settled that future property, possibilities, and expectancies are assignable in equity for value. The mode or form of assignment is absolutely immaterial provided the intention of the parties is clear. To effectuate the intention and assignment for value in terms present and immediate has always been regarded in equity as a contract binding on the conscience of the assignor and so binding the subject-matter of the contract when it comes into existence if it is of such a nature and so described as to be capable of being ascertained and identified."

H

I In other words, the real effect of such an assignment where property is not in existence is that it is carried into effect not because it passes the property, but because it is a contractual obligation binding upon the assignor, and one which can be specifically enforced if the contract and the subject-matter of it are sufficiently definite. One has to look at this deed in the light of a contract, one term of which is that the borrower will make over to the lender his salary when it becomes due, and it may give the lender a right to require the employers to pay him that salary. For all that, it is a contract and nothing but a contract to make over that salary when it becomes due. We find that is a term of a contract which contains a number of other terms, and all those terms, including the one to which I have referred, are part of that which the lender exacts as the security for the money he is going to advance.

It is said that the court can sever some parts of those terms from the other parts of those terms. In certain cases that can be done. But in a case like the present, where a mortgagee lends money on a security which consists of a number of obligations by the person who borrows the money when those obligations are so involved in each other as they are in the present case, and in particular, where the breach of any one of those obligations causes the whole of the money which has been lent to become immediately payable instead of payable by instalments, it seems to me then that the lender has himself rendered it impossible to separate one from the other, and that the contract must be looked at as one entire thing. That being so, the assignment of the wages is just as much void as any other part of the deed. In my opinion, the judgment of the Divisional Court was perfectly right, and I think that this appeal ought to be dismissed.

SCRUTTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and desire, in view of the importance to the public of the subject-matter of this case, to express my opinion in my own words. The only thing that has made me hesitate as to whether I should do so is that I am doubtful whether I can express my judgment in language of sufficiently judicial moderation in view of the facts of this case. Any judge who has heard criminal business in the City of London knows that one of the great evils in London at present is the system by which moneylenders lend money to clerks who have small salaries in offices in London, and, under the terror of telling their employers that they have lent such money, drive clerks to crime and inflict any amount of evil on their families. When sitting as a judge of the King's Bench Division in what is called the "Saturday jurisdiction," when gentlemen bearing royal and noble names pass before one as plaintiffs lending money at very high rates of interest, I have seen a good deal of the ways of moneylenders. But it had not entered into my wildest imagination that any of them could have concocted a document of the nature that we have seen before us in the present case, and I am glad that at last the court has an opportunity of pronouncing an opinion upon it—to which from my experience of moneylenders I do not suppose they will pay any attention whatever.

[His LORDSHIP stated the facts.] The judge of the City of London Court took the view that there was not an "absolute assignment" within the meaning of s. 25 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873. The Divisional Court differed from that view, but took the view which jumps to the eyes on looking at the document that it was contrary to public policy. The moneylender now appeals to this court against that decision. What test has the court to apply? Counsel for the plaintiff began by citing Mitchel v. Reynolds (6). I think myself that we have got long past Mitchel v. Reynolds (6) in the doctrine of restraint of trade. We have now the judgment of LORD MACNAGHTEN in Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Arms and Ammunition Co., Ltd. (7), enlarged as it is—and in some respects altered as it is—by the two very luminous judgments of LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON in A.-G. of Commonwealth of Australia v. Adelaide Steamship Co. (8) and Herbert Morris, Ltd. v. Sarelby (1). LORD MACNAGHTEN said ([1894] A.C. at p. 565) that in seeing whether any restraint of trade is justified, we have to look to see whether the restraint is reasonable—"reasonable, that is, in reference to the interests of the parties concerned and reasonable in reference to the interests of the public, so framed and so guarded as to form adequate protection to the party in whose favour it is imposed while, at the same time, it is in no way injurious to the public."

LORD PARKER's valuable criticism in Herbert Morris, Ltd. v. Sarelby (1) of the language of LORD MACNAGHTEN in Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Arms and Ammunition Co., Ltd. (7) adds to it that, for the restraint to be reasonable in the interests of the parties, it must afford no more than adequate protection to the party in whose favour it is imposed, and in merely considering the interests of the

A parties, you do not take into account the effect on the public, which is a separate matter.

I look at the agreement in the present case from this point of view: Is there no more than is necessary for the protection of the moneylender? It seems to me that there is far more than is necessary for the protection of the moneylender in whose interests it is imposed. Is it reasonable in the interests of the public?

B I can conceive nothing more dangerous to the interests of the public than that a system of moneylending like this to small people in offices where they have great temptations to be dishonest if money pressure is put upon them, and great opportunities, should be allowed to exist for a single minute. Looking at the agreement as a whole, it seems to me to be quite clear that it goes far beyond what is reasonable for the purpose for which it is imposed. But then it is said:

C "Perhaps we have over-reached ourselves; perhaps this very elaborate document now brought to the court, having, no doubt, been used with oppressive effect on a number of other clerks without being brought to the court, may be severed, so that we can pick out of it some parts which may pass, leaving the number of objectionable features which have been referred to without enforcing them." I read with the greatest sympathy and delight the language of LORD MOULTON on this point in

D Mason v. Provident Clothing and Supply Co., Ltd. (2) ([1913] A.C. at p. 745):

"My Lords, I do not doubt that the court may, and in some cases will, enforce a part of a covenant in restraint of trade, even though taken as a whole the covenant exceeds what is reasonable. But, in my opinion, that ought only to be done in cases where the part so enforceable is clearly severable, and even so only in cases where the excess is of trivial importance, or merely technical, and not a part of the main purport and substance of the clause. It would, in my opinion, be pessimi exempli if, when an employer had exacted a covenant deliberately framed in unreasonably wide terms, the courts were to come to his assistance, and by applying their ingenuity and knowledge of the law, carve out of this void covenant the maximum of what he might validly have required."

E

F I strongly protest when a moneylender has thought fit to have elaborately framed an oppressive document of this sort that the court should then be astute to say "We can give you a certain part of it, although you have asked for far too much." I decline to do so unless obliged by the authorities, and I think that for the reasons given by WARRINGTON, L.J., with which I concur, that I am not bound to assist the moneylender who has framed this document in putting forward a part of it as

G enforceable. I quite agree with the judgments delivered by the other members of the court, and I have the greatest pleasure in delivering this judgment.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Barnes & Butler; White & Leonard.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

FOSTER v. FOSTER AND ANOTHER

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Peterson, J.), January 27, 28, 31, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 1 Ch. 532; 85 L.J.Ch. 305; 114 L.T. 405]

Company—Chairman—Tenure of office—Right of board to remove—Director—Remuneration—Right of company to reduce—Managing director—Power of board to appoint—Remuneration—Contract with company—Right of director to vote for own appointment as managing director—Power of board to remove.

By art. 88 of the articles of a company: "The remuneration of the directors shall from time to time be fixed . . . by the company." By art. 89: "Subject to the preceding clauses, the business of the company shall be managed by the directors who may . . . exercise all such powers of the company, and do, on behalf of the company, all such acts as may be . . . done by the company in general meeting . . ." By art. 93: "A director may contract with the company as vendor, purchaser, or otherwise, and may retain the profits of every such contract without liability to account therefor, but a director shall not vote in respect of any contract in which he is interested." By art. 95: "The office of director shall be vacated (a) if he become bankrupt . . . ; (b) if he be found lunatic . . . or go to reside permanently outside of the United Kingdom; (c) if he cease to hold the qualifying number of shares; (d) if by notice in writing he vacates his office." By art. 96: "Until otherwise determined by extraordinary resolution, the directors for the time being shall continue to hold office subject only to cl. 95 and 97 hereof." By art. 97: "The company at any general meeting . . . may . . . remove any director . . . before the expiration of his period of office, and appoint another person in his stead." By art. 99: "The directors may, subject to the preceding clauses, from time to time appoint any one or more of their body to be managing director or directors for such period, at such remuneration, and upon such terms as the directors think fit." By art. 102: "The directors may elect a chairman of their meetings, and determine the period for which he is to hold office . . ."

At an extraordinary general meeting of the company on Jan. 15, 1911, the plaintiff was appointed a director of the company with remuneration of £100 a year, and at a board meeting on the same day he was appointed chairman and managing director without remuneration for those offices. At a board meeting on July 30, 1913, resolutions were passed appointing M. E. F. chairman in place of the plaintiff and joint managing director with him. At an extraordinary general meeting of the company on Aug. 21, 1913, the plaintiff's remuneration as a director was reduced to £25. At a board meeting on Jan. 19, 1915, M. E. F. was appointed sole managing director for a period of ten years at a remuneration of £300 a year with subsequent possible increases according to the amount of profits earned. M. E. F. voted for the resolution so appointing her, and it was only carried by the use of the votes she possessed.

Held: (i) when the directors appointed a chairman without remuneration attaching to the office they appointed him for such time as they thought fit, and there was no contract between the company and the person appointed that he should remain chairman until he ceased to be a director; in the present case, although there had been no express determination within art. 102 of the period for which the plaintiff was to hold office, it was open to the directors at any time to substitute another chairman in his place;

(ii) the directors had power under art. 99 from time to time to appoint any one or more of their body to be managing director or managing directors and were able to substitute a new managing director for the managing director they had appointed if they became dissatisfied with him;

A (iii) under art. 88 the plaintiff was not entitled, so long as he remained a director, to the amount fixed for his remuneration when he was appointed a director, and, therefore, it was not out of the power of the company to reduce his remuneration and also to discriminate between directors with regard to the amount of their remuneration;

B (iv) the remuneration of directors could not be properly described as "business of the company," and, therefore, under art. 89 the powers of the company under art. 88 were not exercisable exclusively by the directors so that they were themselves to determine what their remuneration should be;

C (v) the appointment by the directors of one of their number to be chairman or managing director without remuneration did not give rise to a contract within art. 93, but was merely a delegation of their powers, and, therefore, M. E. F. was not disabled from voting in support of the resolutions passed on July 30, 1913, appointing her chairman and joint managing director; but

D (vi) when the resolution was passed at the directors' meeting on Jan. 19, 1915, appointing M. E. F. managing director at a remuneration, she being present and accepting it, there was a contract between the company and her, and under art. 93 she was not competent to vote in support of that contract; accordingly, the resolution appointing her was invalid;

E (vii) the remuneration voted by the board for M. E. F. was, however, not excessive or grossly unfair, and her appointment was neither fraudulent nor ultra vires the company; art. 99 did not preclude the company in general meeting from waiving the objection which it could take under art. 93 and confirming the resolution of Jan. 19, 1915; and, therefore, the company being capable of dealing with the matter in general meeting, the plaintiff, as representing a dissentient minority, was not able to sue.

Notes. Referred to: Kerr v. Marine Products (1928), 44 T.L.R. 292; Re Gee, Wood v. Staples, [1948] 1 All E.R. 498.

F As to appointment, removal, powers, and removal of directors and interference by the court in the management of a company, see 6 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 274 et seq., 418-420; and for cases see 9 DIGEST (Repl.) 451 et seq., 714 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Quinn and Artens, Ltd. v. Salmon, [1909] A.C. 442; 78 L.J.Ch. 506; 100 L.T. 820; 25 T.L.R. 590; 53 Sol. Jo. 575; 16 Mans. 230, H.L.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 498, 3283.
- G (2) Re New British Iron Co., Ex parte Beckwith, [1898] 1 Ch. 324; 67 L.J.Ch. 164; 78 L.T. 155; 46 W.R. 376; 14 T.L.R. 196; 42 Sol. Jo. 234; 5 Mans. 168; 9 Digest (Repl.) 478, 3124.
- (3) Burland v. Earle, [1902] A.C. 83; 71 L.J.P.C. 1; 85 L.T. 553; 50 W.R. 241; 18 T.L.R. 41; 9 Mans. 17, P.C.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 645, 4290.
- H (4) Foss v. Harbottle (1843), 2 Hare 461; 67 E.R. 189; 9 Digest (Repl.) 662, 4382.
- (5) Mozley v. Alston (1847), 1 Ph. 790; 4 Ry. & Can. Cas. 636; 16 L.J.Ch. 217; 9 L.T.O.S. 97; 11 Jur. 315; 41 E.R. 833, L.C.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 715, 4740.
- (6) Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Works (1874), 9 Ch. App. 350; 43 L.J.Ch. 330; 30 L.T. 209; 22 W.R. 396, L.J.J.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 659, 4367.
- I (7) MacDougall v. Gardiner (1875), 1 Ch.D. 13; 45 L.J.Ch. 27; 33 L.T. 521; 24 W.R. 118, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 619, 4130.
- (8) Dominion Cotton Mills, Ltd. v. Amyot, [1912] A.C. 546; 81 L.J.P.C. 233; 106 L.T. 934; 28 T.L.R. 467; 19 Mans. 363, P.C.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 659, 4368.
- (9) Normandy v. Ind, Coops & Co., Ltd. [1908] 1 Ch. 84; 77 L.J.Ch. 82; 97 L.T. 872; 24 T.L.R. 57; 15 Mans. 65; 9 Digest (Repl.) 568, 3744.
- (10) Thomas Logan, Ltd. v. Davis (1911), 104 L.T. 914; 55 Sol. Jo. 498; affirmed 105 L.T. 419, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 556, 3679.

- (11) Barron v. Potter, Potter v. Berry, [1914] 1 Ch. 895; 83 L.J.Ch. 646; 110 L.T. 929; 58 Sol. Jo. 516; 21 Mans. 260; sub nom. Re British Seagumite Co., Ltd., Barron v. Potter, Potter v. Berry, 30 T.L.R. 401; 9 Digest (Repl.) 455, 2984.

Also referred to in argument:

Re Greymouth-Point Elizabeth Railway and Coal Co., Ltd., Yuill v. Greymouth-Point Elizabeth Railway and Coal Co., Ltd., [1904] 1 Ch. 32; 73 L.J.Ch. 92; 11 Mans. 85; 9 Digest (Repl.) 546, 3591.

Russell v. Wakefield Waterworks Co. (1875), L.R. 20 Eq. 474; 44 L.J.Ch. 496; 32 L.T. 685; 23 W.R. 887; 10 Digest (Repl.) 1268, 8963.

Marshall's Valve Gear Co., Ltd. v. Manning, Wardle & Co., Ltd., [1909] 1 Ch. 267; 78 L.J.Ch. 46; 100 L.T. 65; 25 T.L.R. 69; 15 Mans. 379; 9 Digest (Repl.) 498, 3284.

Witness Action in which the plaintiff, Bernard Harvey Foster, suing on behalf of himself and in a representative capacity all other the shareholders of the defendant company, W. Foster & Son, Ltd., except the defendant Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Foster, and also in his individual capacity, claimed declarations and injunctions relating to the appointment of Mrs. Foster as chairman and managing director of the company.

The plaintiff claimed (i) a declaration that resolutions purporting to have been passed at a board meeting of the defendant company on July 30, 1913, appointing the defendant Mrs. Foster chairman of the directors and joint managing director of the defendant company, were invalid; (ii) an injunction restraining the defendant Mrs. Foster from acting or purporting to act as such chairman or such joint managing director; (iii) A declaration that a resolution purporting to have been passed at a board meeting of the defendant company on Jan. 19, 1915, appointing the defendant Mrs. Foster sole managing director was invalid; (iv) an injunction restraining the defendant Mrs. Foster from acting or purporting to act as such sole managing director; (v) a declaration that a resolution purporting to have been passed at the said board meeting on July 30, 1913, purporting to remove the plaintiff from his office as chairman of directors of the defendant company was invalid; (vi) an injunction restraining the defendant Mrs. Foster from excluding from or interfering with him in his office as such chairman; (vii) a declaration that a resolution purporting to have been passed at a general meeting of the defendant company on Aug. 21, 1913, reducing the plaintiff's remuneration as director to £25 per annum was invalid; and (viii) payment by the defendant company of the plaintiff's arrears of remuneration as director at the rate of £300 per annum.

Tomlin, K.C., and Hodge for the plaintiff.

Hughes, K.C., and W. G. Hart (J. M. Gover with him) for the defendant Mrs. Foster.

P. S. Stokes for the defendant company.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 31, 1916. PETERSON, J., read the following judgment.—This is an action in which Mr. Bernard Harvey Foster sues in his individual capacity and in a representative capacity on behalf of himself and all other the shareholders in the defendant company, except the defendant Mary Elizabeth Foster. The defendants are Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Foster and W. Foster & Son, Ltd. At an extraordinary general meeting of the company on Jan. 25, 1911, Mrs. Foster moved, and Mr. Devlin seconded, and it was carried, that the plaintiff be appointed a director of the company, and that his remuneration should be at the rate of £100 per annum. Then there was a resolution that Mrs. Foster's remuneration as a director should also be at the same rate, and then it was resolved "that the directors shall be paid all their travelling and other expenses properly and necessarily expended by them in and about the business of the company, including their travelling and other

A expenses incurred in attending the board meetings of the company." Mr. Foster, having become in this way a director, on the same day, Jan. 25, at a board meeting Mrs. Foster tendered her resignation of the office of chairman of directors, and Mr. Foster was appointed chairman. On Aug. 14, 1911, at a board meeting, Mr. Hardy, who was one of the directors, proposed and Mrs. Foster seconded: "That Mr. B. H. Foster be and he is hereby appointed managing director of the company." There
B was no remuneration attached to the office of managing director at this time, but the remuneration was in respect of the occupation of the post of director.

Matters appear to have become somewhat uneasy between Mr. and Mrs. Foster by the middle of 1913, because at a directors' meeting on July 30, 1913, Mrs. Foster asked Mr. Foster what he intended to do as to Mr. Hardy's re-appointment as a director, Mr. Hardy only having been appointed for a fixed period, and Mr. Foster
C replied that he should certainly oppose it. Mrs. Foster thereupon proposed that "she be and is hereby appointed chairman in the place of Mr. B. H. Foster," and this was seconded by Mr. Hardy. Mr. Foster asked the reason for this proposal, and Mrs. Foster explained that she had given up the chairmanship in Mr. Foster's favour in January, 1911, on Mr. Cockerton's assurance that Mr. Foster would work amicably with her—Mr. Cockerton was the solicitor acting for Mr. Foster—
D but he had failed to do so, and she, therefore, claimed to be reinstated. Mr. Foster refused to put the resolution to the meeting, and it was, therefore, put to the meeting by Mrs. Foster and carried. Mrs. Foster thereupon took the chair. Mr. Harvey proposed and Mrs. Foster seconded: "That Mrs. Foster be and is hereby appointed joint managing director of the company along with Mr. B. H. Foster." This was carried.

E That is the first of the resolutions to which exception is taken by the plaintiff. Then at the annual meeting of shareholders on Aug. 11, 1913, Mrs. Foster took the chair and Mr. Foster protested against Mrs. Foster taking the chair and asked why he had been deposed, and Mrs. Foster replied. Then a resolution was carried that the joint managing directors, who were Mr. and Mrs. Foster, be voted £150
F each as a bonus, and Mrs. Foster moved that, as the period for which Mr. Hardy was appointed a director was now expiring, "he be and is hereby appointed an ordinary director of the company at a remuneration of £150 a year inclusive of expenses." Mr. Foster contended that Mr. Hardy could not vote on the question of his own remuneration. Mrs. Foster thereupon withdrew her resolution and moved that "Mr. Hardy be and he is hereby elected an ordinary director of the company," and that was seconded and the resolution was lost on a show of hands.
G But Mrs. Foster demanded a poll, which resulted in 1,048 votes in favour of and 949 against the resolution, which was carried. Mrs. Foster then moved that Mr. Hardy be paid a remuneration of £150 a year including expenses. Mr. Myers seconded this. Mr. Foster moved as an amendment that Mr. Hardy's remuneration be £25 a year, and that was seconded. Then a poll was demanded which resulted H as follows. If Mr. Hardy was entitled to vote, there were some 1,048 votes against the amendment and 949 in favour of it, and the amendment would be lost and the original resolution would be carried, but if he was not entitled to vote there were only 948 votes against the amendment, which would then be carried. The company's solicitor was not prepared to say offhand whether Mr. Hardy was or was not entitled to vote. Then Mrs. Foster moved and Mr. Hardy seconded that Mr. Bernard
I Foster's remuneration as a director of the company be reduced from £300 to £25 a year. Mr. Foster contended that as no notice of the proposal had been given in the notice convening the meeting it could not be dealt with, and it was thereupon decided to convene an extraordinary general meeting. There were various other resolutions to which exception was taken on similar grounds that notice had not been given.

On Aug. 21, 1913, there was an extraordinary general meeting of the company. Mr. Foster protested against the meeting being held, as he alleged it had not been properly called, and then each of the following resolutions was in turn moved by Mrs. Foster, seconded by Mr. Hardy, and duly carried: "That Mr. John Myers be and is hereby elected a director of the company; that Mr. John Devlin be and is hereby elected a director of the company; that Mr. Myers' and Mr. Devlin's remuneration be at the rate of £100 a year each; that the remuneration payable to Mr. Bernard Harvey Foster as a director of the company be reduced to £25 a year." To that resolution also the plaintiff takes exception. It appears that no one voted against any of the resolutions. Of course that also involves the fact that Mr. Bernard Harvey Foster did not vote against the resolution, but that could be accounted for by the fact that he considered as he was interested in the question he ought not, therefore, to vote. At this point then Mr. Bernard Harvey Foster was a director at, according to the resolutions, a remuneration of £25 a year and one of two joint managing directors, Mrs. Foster being the other managing director.

On Jan. 19, 1915, there was a board meeting at which Mrs. Foster, Mr. Bernard Foster, and Mr. Myers were present. The chairman—that is, Mrs. Foster—said that after what had been stated at the last board meeting she would only impress upon the board that, in her opinion, it was against the best interests of the shareholders for the management of the company to remain any longer under the existing conditions. She had no hesitation in saying that Mr. B. H. Foster had failed to do his duty, through having entirely neglected to attend to the business for a considerable period. The entire management of the business had devolved upon herself, and she could not undertake the duties any longer, having regard to the responsibility of the position, unless she was made sole managing director. The business was progressing satisfactorily under her management, and she relied with confidence upon receiving the support of the majority of the directors. Mr. Myers expressed entire agreement with the views of the chairman. Mr. Devlin, who was prevented through illness from attending the meeting, wrote saying he agreed with Mrs. Foster's suggestions respecting the change of management. Mrs. Foster thereupon proposed "that the appointment of Mr. B. H. Foster as managing director of the company, and his subsequent appointment as joint managing director along with Mrs. M. E. Foster, be and are both terminated as from this date, and that notice to that effect be at once given to him by the secretary." The plaintiff objects that that resolution is invalid. Then Mr. Myers proposed, and Mrs. Foster seconded, and it was resolved that "Mrs. Foster be and she is hereby appointed sole managing director of the company for a period of ten years from this date, and that her remuneration be at the rate of £300 per annum, except that if and when the net profits earned by the company in any one year shall exceed £2,400 (representing ten per cent. on the whole of the paid-up capital of the company), but shall not exceed £2,680, her remuneration for that year shall be at the rate of £400 per annum" with a subsequent possible increase to £500 per annum. Mr. Foster demanded a poll which was taken with the following result: 1,448 in favour of the resolution, 1,148 against. The chairman declared the resolution carried. That resolution also is alleged by the plaintiff to be invalid.

So far as voting was concerned, the position was this. The capital consisted of 2,000 ordinary shares of £10 each, and 1,000 preference shares of £10 each. The preference shares were divided equally between the plaintiff and Mrs. Foster. The ordinary shares were held in this way—Mrs. Foster held 848 shares, and she had, in addition, as her supporters two directors who held 100 ordinary shares each, making 1,048. Mr. Foster, the plaintiff, held 648, and the balance of 304 shares were held by six shareholders, who, I am told, were supporting him. The result, therefore, was that, so far as the preference shares were concerned, they were divided equally between the plaintiff and Mrs. Foster, and, so far as the ordinary shares were concerned, on those figures Mrs. Foster held or had the support of 1,048 shares, while the plaintiff held or had the support of 952. The majority, therefore, was either with or supported Mrs. Foster.

The first objection which the plaintiffs makes is to the resolutions, passed at the board meeting of July 30, 1913, appointing Mrs. Foster as chairman in place of the

A plaintiff, and also appointing her joint managing director with the plaintiff. The objection is, first, that the appointment of the plaintiff as chairman was under art. 96 of the company's articles which provides that:

"Until otherwise determined by extraordinary resolution, the directors for the time being shall continue to hold office subject only to cl. 95 and 97 hereof."

B Article 95 provides that:

"The office of director shall be vacated (a) if he become bankrupt, or suspend payment, or compound with his creditors; (b) if he be found lunatic or become of unsound mind, or go to reside permanently outside of the United Kingdom; (c) if he cease to hold the qualifying number of shares; (d) if by notice in writing to the company he vacates his office."

C Article 97 provides that:

"The company at any general meeting shall fill up any vacancies in the office of directors, and may, by extraordinary resolution, remove any director other than the said George Harvey Foster [the originator of the company] before the expiration of his period of office, and appoint another person in his stead."

D The power of appointing a chairman is under art. 102, by which "the directors may elect a chairman of their meetings, and determine the period for which he is to hold office. . . ."

E It is argued that, inasmuch as there has been no express determination of the period for which he is to hold office, it follows that he is to hold office for the whole of the period during which he remains a director. I am unable to accept that argument. When the directors appoint a chairman they appoint him for such time as they think fit, and there is no contract with the person appointed as chairman that he shall remain chairman until he ceases to be a director, but it is open to the directors at any time to substitute another chairman in his place. Therefore, I think that argument cannot succeed. In the same way it is argued that the appointment of the plaintiff as sole managing director was for such time as he should be a director. Here the question depends on art. 99, under which:

"The directors may, subject to the preceding clauses, from time to time appoint any one or more of their body to be managing director or directors for such period, at such remuneration, and upon such terms as the directors think fit."

G In this case also it appears to me that the directors have power from time to time to appoint any one or more of their body to be managing director or directors, and it does not involve as a consequence that, if they are dissatisfied with the person whom they have appointed managing director or think that another of their body would fill the position more adequately, they are unable to substitute a new managing director in place of the old one.

H In opposition to both of these resolutions, it is said that Mrs. Foster was unable to vote in support of herself as chairman or as joint managing director under art. 93, which provides that:

"A director may contract with the company as vendor, purchaser, or otherwise, and may retain the profits of every such contract without liability to account therefor, but a director shall not vote in respect of any contract in which he is interested."

I In my view, however, the appointment by the directors of one of their body as chairman, or the appointment by the directors of one of their number as a managing director, without more, is not a contract within art. 93, but is merely a delegation of their powers, and is very similar to the power which they possess to appoint committees of themselves and delegate their powers to those committees. In my judgment, therefore, the appointments in question of Mrs. Foster as chairman and as joint managing director were not contracts within art. 93, and, therefore, Mrs. Foster was not disabled from voting in support of the resolution.

The next objection taken by the plaintiff is to the resolution, passed at the extraordinary general meeting of the company on Aug. 21, 1913, reducing his remuneration as a director from £300 to £25 a year. His contention is that the resolution was invalid on the ground that it was not competent for the company to reduce his remuneration as a director, and in any event, that it was not competent for the company to discriminate between the directors with regard to the amount of their remuneration. Then there is an allegation that, if the reduction was within the competence of the company, the same was effected by the preponderance of the votes of Mrs. Foster, and was not made in good faith or in the interests of the company, or with any regard to the relative values of the services of the plaintiff and Mrs. Foster.

The first contention is that when the plaintiff was appointed a director at a salary of £100, which was subsequently increased to £300, he contracted that he would act as director at that salary, and, therefore, it was not open to the company so long as he remained a director to cut down the salary which had been voted to him by the resolution passed at the extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders on Jan. 25, 1911, to which I have already referred, where it was resolved that the plaintiff be appointed a director of the company and that his remuneration should be at the rate of £100 per annum, and that the directors should be paid all their travelling and other expenses properly and necessarily expended by them in and about the business of the company, including their travelling and other expenses incurred in attending the board meetings of the company. This resolution was passed under art. 88, which provides that:

"The remuneration of the directors shall from time to time be fixed by the said George Harvey Foster during his life and membership in the company, otherwise by the company."

There is, therefore, power under the articles to fix the remuneration of the directors from time to time, and, in the events that have happened, that remuneration is to be fixed by the company. In my view, that does not involve that the plaintiff, having been appointed a director, is entitled to the amount which was fixed originally at £100 so long as he remains a director—that is to say, until he is removed by an extraordinary resolution of the company which, having regard to the way in which the shares in the company are held, is an impossibility, or until one of the events referred to in art. 95 occurs. This contention involves the result that it would be impossible for the company to alter the terms of the resolution which was passed at the same time as the plaintiff was appointed, under which the travelling and other expenses of the directors are to be borne by the company. This curious result would also happen, that if the plaintiff did absolutely nothing at all as a director, or if he was permanently invalided, as long as he was not found lunatic or of unsound mind, he would still be entitled to the same remuneration as was proposed in the first instance when he was appointed a director. I am unable to accept the argument that, the remuneration of the director having been fixed by the company when he was appointed, he was entitled to insist upon the payment of that remuneration so long as he should remain a director, or that it is now out of the power of the company to reduce the remuneration which is attached to the office of director.

Then the plaintiff makes the further allegation that it is not within the powers of the company to discriminate between directors. I am unable to follow that argument. The provision is that the remuneration of directors shall from time to time be fixed by the company. I do not find any provision, express or implied, that the remuneration of the directors when fixed by the company must be the same for each director, and, although perhaps that is not a very material circumstance, it is clear it was not the view of the plaintiff himself, who, at the early stage of the difficulties which arose between him and Mrs. Foster, proposed that Mr. Hardy's

A remuneration should be reduced from the sum of £100 to the same sum of £25.

It was suggested that it was not open to the company to reduce the remuneration of the plaintiff in consequence of the provisions of art. 89, which directs that:

B "Subject to the preceding clauses, the business of the company shall be managed by the directors, who may pay all such expenses of and preliminary and incidental to the promotion, formation, establishment, and registration of the company as they think fit, and may exercise all such powers of the company, and do, on behalf of the company, all such acts as may be exercised and done by the company in general meeting, or by the said George Harvey Foster, or the manager or managers, subject nevertheless to any regulations of these presents, to the provisions of the statutes, and to such regulations being not inconsistent with the aforesaid regulations or provisions, as may be prescribed by the company in general meeting."

C The argument is that by virtue of art. 89 the powers of the company under art. 88 are exclusively exercisable by the board of directors, with the startling result that, although under art. 97 the company is to fill any vacancies in the office of directors, the directors themselves are to determine what their remuneration is to be. On this point reliance was placed on Quin and Ardens, Ltd. v. Salmon (1), where a somewhat similar clause was considered. In that particular case there was a question of acquiring and letting of premises, and LORD LOREBURN, L.C., said, dealing with one of the arguments ([1909] A.C. at p. 444):

"In regard to the second point, I think it is really too clear for argument that the business in question was business within the meaning of the 75th article."

E Can the remuneration of directors properly be described as business of the company within the meaning of art. 89? In my view, it cannot.

F So far I have dealt with the claim of the plaintiff as a person who has been injured in his private as distinct from his representative capacity. But in the statement of claim the plaintiff complains of the resolutions passed at the board meeting of Jan. 19, 1915, when Mrs. Foster and Mr. Myers purported to pass resolutions that the appointment of the plaintiff as managing director of the company be terminated, and that Mrs. Foster be appointed sole managing director of the company for a period of ten years at a remuneration. So far as the resolution for the removal of the plaintiff from the position of joint managing director is concerned, the observations that I have already made with reference to the appointment of Mrs. Foster as chairman in his place apply, and, in my view, there is no ground of complaint. But the latter resolution stands on a different footing. In that case the complaint is that Mrs. Foster and Mr. Myers passed or purported to pass a resolution appointing Mrs. Foster managing director at a remuneration. In considering this portion of the case, regard must be had to art. 100, which provides that two directors shall be a quorum, and that any question at a meeting of directors shall be decided by the number of votes, for or against the resolution, which the directors possess as holders of shares. The complaint is that Mrs. Foster in this case, having 1,348 votes, used these votes for the purpose of appointing herself managing director at a salary, and that, as the appointment of Mrs. Foster was only carried by the use of the votes which she herself possessed, the resolution was not properly carried, inasmuch as under art. 93 she was not entitled to vote in respect of the contract. The question, therefore, is whether or not this is a contract within art. 93.

I In Re New British Iron Co., Ex parte Beckwith (2) the articles required the directors to possess a share qualification, and provided that the remuneration of the board should be an annual sum of £1,000 to be paid out of the funds, and it was held that, although those provisions in the articles were only part of the contract between the shareholders inter se, the provisions were, on the directors being employed and accepting office on the footing of them, embodied in the contract between the company and the directors. It would be a curious thing if a director was prohibited under this article from voting in support of a contract of purchase from himself for a comparatively small sum and yet was enable to vote in support of a resolution conferring upon himself a remuneration as managing director at a high salary. In my judgment, if a resolution is passed at a directors' meeting that one of the directors be appointed a managing director at a remuneration, and that director is present and accepts the appointment, there is a contract between the company and the director, and the director is not under art. 93 able to vote in support of such a contract. A B

That, however, does not determine this portion of the case. This is a matter in respect of which the plaintiff is suing for a wrong that he alleges has been done to the company, and he is suing on behalf of, as he says, the rest of the shareholders of the company, other than Mrs. Foster, though admittedly, in fact, he is suing on behalf of the minority of the shareholders. The question, therefore, is whether he is able to sue in such a case, or whether it is a case in which the matter must be dealt with by a general meeting of the company. The general principles which govern these cases are laid down in Burland v. Earle (3), where LORD DAVEY delivered the judgment of the Privy Council, and stated the law in a passage which is very well known ([1902] A.C. at pp. 93, 94): C

"It is an elementary principle of the law relating to joint stock companies that the court will not interfere with the internal management of companies acting within their powers, and in fact has no jurisdiction to do so. Again, it is clear law that in order to redress a wrong done to the company or to recover moneys or damages alleged to be due to the company, the action should, prima facie, be brought by the company itself. These cardinal principles are laid down in the well-known cases of Foss v. Harbottle (4) and Mozley v. Alston (5), and in numerous later cases which it is unnecessary to cite. But an exception is made to the second rule [that the company ought to bring the action] where the persons against whom the relief is sought themselves hold and control the majority of the shares in the company, and will not permit an action to be brought in the name of the company. In that case the courts allow the shareholders complaining to bring an action in their own names. This, however, is mere matter of procedure in order to give a remedy for a wrong which would otherwise escape redress, and it is obvious that in such an action the plaintiffs cannot have a larger right to relief than the company itself would have if it were plaintiff, and cannot complain of acts which were valid if done with the approval of the majority of the shareholders, or are capable of being confirmed by the majority. The cases in which the minority can maintain such an action are, therefore, confined to those in which the acts complained of are of a fraudulent character or beyond the powers of the company. A familiar example is where the majority are endeavouring directly or indirectly to appropriate to themselves money, property, or advantages which belong to the company, or in which the other shareholders are entitled to participate, as was alleged in the case of Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Works (6). It should be added that no mere informality or irregularity which can be remedied by the majority will entitle the minority to sue, if the act when done regularly would be within the powers of the company and the intention of the majority of the shareholders is clear. This may be illustrated by the judgment of MELLISH, L.J., in MacDougall v. Gardiner (7)." D E F G H I

That passage is approved in Dominion Cotton Mills Co., Ltd. v. Amyot (8) and applied by KEKEWICH, J., in Normandy v. Ind, Coope & Co., Ltd. (9).

It is manifest that this is not a case which is ultra vires the company. It is obvious that it is not beyond the powers of the company as defined by its memorandum of association to appoint a managing director and to vote him a remuneration. Is it of a fraudulent character? Cases like Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Works (6) are cases where the majority have been engaged in appropriating to themselves

A that which ought to be shared between themselves and the minority, but I am not aware of any case in which it has been suggested that if the majority think that one of themselves is the best person to be managing director, and proceed to appoint that person managing director at a remuneration, they appropriate to themselves the assets of the company within the meaning of LORD DAVEY's observations. The B company is in such a case obtaining the services for which it is paying, thus getting a quid pro quo, and there is, I think, no foundation for the suggestion that in such a case there is an appropriation of property, in which the minority are interested, for the benefit of the majority. I do not think such a case comes within the scope of the observations of LORD DAVEY in Burland v. Earle (3). In this case it is to be observed that there is no evidence of any kind that the remuneration
C which has been voted by the board of directors, or purported to be voted by the board of directors, is excessive or grossly unfair. I have merely the resolutions as recorded in the minutes, and from them I am unable to infer that the services which Mrs. Foster was to render as managing director were not properly remunerated by the sum which it was proposed that she should receive.

Before I come to consider one other point of law there is one matter with which I should like to deal, and that is the general meeting of the company which was D held on Aug. 5, 1915, for the purpose of confirming the resolution which had been passed by the directors in January, 1915. There were two witnesses called, Mr. Nicholson on the one side and Mr. Cockerton on the other. Mr. Nicholson was at that time acting as solicitor for the company. Mr. Cockerton was acting as E solicitor for the plaintiff. Mr. Nicholson says, and to this extent the witnesses agree, that Mr. Cockerton took exception to any business being transacted at the meeting until the requisition, which was referred to in the notice convening the meeting, had been produced. It was impossible to produce that at the time as it had been apparently mislaid. Subsequently it was found, shown to Mr. Cockerton, and there was no doubt that the requisition had been made. Mr. Cockerton, however, says that Mrs. Foster, who was the chairman of the meeting, said: "Then F I will convene another meeting for the purpose of dealing with this question," and thereupon the meeting dispersed, no resolutions having been passed. Mr. Nicholson, however, says that though Mrs. Foster originally intended to take that view, and apparently so stated, she afterwards on his advice proceeded with the meeting, called for a show of hands, and the show of hands was against the resolution, but G then she called for a poll. There was no voting in form on the poll, but the numbers of shares of those who had voted on the show of hands was calculated, and the result announced. There is a direct conflict of testimony in this case between these two gentlemen, who were the only witnesses called to give evidence on this point. In these circumstances I am unable to come to the conclusion that it has been proved that those resolutions were passed at that meeting. For myself I am unable to see that it is very relevant whether the resolutions were passed or not.
H If the plaintiff is right in the argument addressed on his behalf, the result would be that in any case the resolution, if passed at the meeting, was bad, because according to that argument the company had no power to pass any such resolution.
If, on the other hand, he is wrong in the argument, the company has power to deal with the matter at a general meeting, there is admittedly a majority opposed to the plaintiff in this matter, and, therefore, the result would be that the matter
I would have to go to the general meeting, and the plaintiff could not on behalf of the company complain of the transaction of January, 1915, before this court.

But it is said that the company in general meeting is not capable of dealing with the question, having regard to art. 99---that is, the article under which the directors may, subject to the preceding clauses, from time to time appoint any one or more of their body to be managing director or directors for such period, at such remuneration, and upon such terms as the directors think fit. Reliance was placed upon Thomas Logan, Ltd. (10), where art. 99 of a limited company gave the directors power to appoint one of their body to be managing director, and art. 113 provided that the business of the company was to be managed by the directors—in terms somewhat similar to the present case. At an extraordinary general meeting of the company a resolution was passed that L., who was then the managing director, should be re-appointed sole managing director. The directors nevertheless appointed S., another member of their body, sole managing director. It was held that the provisions of art. 113 making the powers of the directors subject to the regulations of the company related to the general management of the affairs of the company, and not to the appointment of a managing director, or other matters specially placed under the control of the directors by the articles, and that, therefore, the appointment by the board of directors of S. as sole managing director was valid. I am not satisfied that in the circumstances of this case art. 99 can be relied upon. It appears to me that the resolution in January, 1915, was, in fact, an irregularity. If a director votes in respect of a contract of sale, and there is a provision similar to art. 93, the resolution is no doubt open to objection, but I take it that the company in general meeting in such a case could waive the objection and confirm the resolution, which, owing to the irregularity, was open to objection. In other words, the company in such a case in general meeting may waive the objection which it is entitled to take under art. 93. Now, if that be the true view, as I think it is, and this was an irregularity, the result is that the company is capable of dealing with the matter in general meeting, and, therefore, the plaintiff, as representing the minority, is not able to sue in respect of it in this court.

Moreover, there is this further consideration to be observed. Here I think it must be taken on the facts that all parties agreed that a managing director ought to be appointed; there is a contest between the plaintiff and Mrs. Foster, the two persons who hold the largest block of shares, as to which of them should occupy that position. They were apparently the only persons whom any shareholder contemplated as possible managing directors of the company. First one was appointed, then the two were jointly appointed, and then Mrs. Foster insisted on the appointment of herself, and that was objected to by the plaintiff. Owing to the way in which the shareholding of the directors is distributed, neither of them can be appointed. The plaintiff holds a minority of the votes on the board; Mrs. Foster is in the position that she is unable to vote in support of her own appointment. From a business point of view it seems to me that there are only two persons who are possible managing directors, and the board has been reduced to the position that it is unable, owing to internal friction and faction, to appoint anybody as a managing director. In those circumstances I should apply the decision of WARRINGTON, J., in Barron v. Potter (11), where he says ([1914] 1 Ch. at p. 903):

“If the directors having certain powers are unable or unwilling to exercise them—are, in fact, a non-existent body for the purpose—there must be some power in the company to do itself that which under other circumstances would be otherwise done. The directors in the present case being unwilling [in the present case unable] to appoint additional directors under the power conferred on them by the articles, in my opinion the company in general meeting has power to make the appointment. The company has passed a resolution for that purpose and, though a poll has been demanded no date or place has yet been fixed for taking it. The result, therefore, is that I must grant” the relief asked. The result is that the question relating to the appointment of Mrs. Foster as managing director is one with which the general meeting of the company can deal, and recourse must be had to a general meeting, and, therefore, having regard to the authorities, I think that this part of the plaintiff's case also fails.

Solicitors: Gascolte, Wadham, Tickell & Co., for Goodwin & Cockerton, Bakewell; Ridsdale & Son, for Nicholson & Co., Wath-upon-Dearne.

[Reported by J. L. DENISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

Re CHAFER AND RANDALL'S CONTRACT

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Phillimore, L.J., and Sargant, J.), March 27, 28, April 7, 1916]

B

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 8; 85 L.J.Ch. 435; 114 L.T. 1076;
60 Sol. Jo. 444]

*Sale of Land—Proof of title—Recital in deed that legal owner of land a trustee “for A. B.”—No trust instrument mentioned—Admission against interest—Duty of purchaser to inquire whether owner trustee for someone other than
A. B.*

C

Although a recital in a deed or other instrument that an owner of the legal estate in land is trustee for A. B. under a will or under a deed affects a purchaser of the land with notice of the contents of the will or of the deed, that doctrine has no bearing upon a case where there is nothing more than a statement (e.g., in a conveyance) that the owner of the legal estate holds upon trust for A. B. Such a statement is an admission against interest by the owner, and no duty is imposed upon the purchaser to inquire whether the owner is not also trustee for someone other than A. B.

D

Malpas v. Ackland (1827) (1), 3 Russ. 273, discussed.

Re Harman and Urbridge and Rickmansworth Rail. Co. (1883) (2), 24 Ch.D. 720, applied.

E

Notes. Considered: Re Soden and Alexander's Contract, [1918] 2 Ch. 258.
Referred: Re Balen and Shepherd's Contract, [1924] All E.R.Rep. 768.

As to proof of title, see 34 HALSBERY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 278-284; and for cases see 40 DIGEST (Repl.) 169 et seq.

Cases referred to:

F

(1) Malpas v. Ackland (1827), 3 Russ. 273; 38 E.R. 578; 43 Digest 891, 3347.

(2) Re Harman and Urbridge and Rickmansworth Rail. Co. (1883), 24 Ch.D. 720; 52 L.J.Ch. 808; 49 L.T. 130; 31 W.R. 857; 40 Digest (Repl.) 173, 1369.

(3) Re Blaiberg and Abrahams' Contract, [1899] 2 Ch. 340; 68 L.J.Ch. 578; 81 L.T. 75; 47 W.R. 634; 43 Sol. Jo. 625; 40 Digest (Repl.) 171, 1346.

(4) Jones v. Smith (1841), 1 Hare, 43; 11 L.J.Ch. 83; 6 Jur. 8; 66 E.R. 943; affirmed (1843), 1 Ph. 244, L.C.; 35 Digest 528, 2605.

G

(5) Patman v. Harland (1881), 17 Ch.D. 353; 50 L.J.Ch. 642; 44 L.T. 728; 29 W.R. 707; 40 Digest (Repl.) 166, 1286.

(6) London and County Banking Co. v. Goddard, [1897] 1 Ch. 642; 66 L.J.Ch. 261; 76 L.T. 277; 45 W.R. 310; 13 T.L.R. 223; 41 Sol. Jo. 295; 43 Digest 662, 953.

H

Also referred to in argument:

Perham v. Kempster, [1907] Ch. 373; 76 L.J.Ch. 223; 96 L.T. 297; 35 Digest 449, 1895.

Carritt v. Real and Personal Advance Co., Ltd. (1889), 42 Ch.D. 263; 58 L.J.Ch. 688; 61 L.T. 163; 37 W.R. 677; 5 T.L.R. 559; 35 Digest 293, 458.

I

Appeal by the purchaser from a decision of YOUNGER, J. ([1916] 2 Ch. 8), on an adjourned summons taken out by the purchaser for a declaration that a requisition made by him in respect of the hereditaments comprised in the contract of sale had not been sufficiently answered.

By a conveyance dated Nov. 13, 1901, A. C. Corbett conveyed, together with other hereditaments, to H. B. Forbes and J. W. Neil the hereditaments comprised in the contract of sale between the present vendor and purchaser, Randall and Chafer, in consideration of a purchase price which was thereby stated to have been paid by the purchaser out of moneys belonging to them jointly. J. W. Neil died on Feb. 11, 1906. An indenture dated Nov. 11, 1913, and made between H. B. Forbes, of the one part, and the present vendor, L. Randall, of the other part, recited the death of J. W. Neil and that H. B. Forbes was then seised of the hereditaments comprised in the indenture of Nov. 13, 1901, and other hereditaments as trustee partly for himself and partly for L. Randall, as he, H. B. Forbes, did thereby admit, that it had been agreed between him and L. Randall that the hereditaments should be partitioned, and that the hereditaments thereafter described and intended thereby to be conveyed should be taken by L. Randall as his share. The same indenture further recited the agreement that the said L. Randall should pay to H. B. Forbes by way of equality of partition the sum of £20, and then witnessed that H. B. Forbes as to the whole of the hereditaments thereby conveyed as trustee, and as to all his own beneficial estate, title, and interest therein as beneficial owner, conveyed to L. Randall in fee simple, among other hereditaments, a portion of the premises comprised in a contract of sale dated July 31, 1915, and made between Randall and Chafer. On an investigation by Chafer of the title of the vendor to the premises comprised in the contract, the following requisition was made:

"How did H. B. Forbes become seised of the hereditaments as trustee partly for himself and partly for L. Randall, as recited in the indenture of Nov. 11, 1913? If by deed, such deed should be abstracted and produced."

To which the vendor returned the answer: This question has nothing to do with the title. The purchaser made the following observation upon that answer:

"This requisition is repeated. Notice of a trust is given by the recital in the deed of Nov. 11, 1913, and it appears that Mr. H. B. Forbes was then seised of the hereditaments as trustee thereof. An abstract of his title must be furnished, and the deeds produced for examination. Further requisitions may then have to be made as a title is not now complete."

To which this reply was made:

"The recital gives fully the nature of the trust of which notice is given, and we are not disposed to give any further reply hereto."

Thereupon an originating summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act was taken out by the purchaser asking that it might be declared that the requisition by himself in respect of the title to the hereditaments comprised in the contract of sale of July 31, 1915, had not been sufficiently answered by the vendor, and that a good title to the hereditaments has not been shown in accordance with the contract of sale. The summons was adjourned into court and came on to be heard before YOUNGER, J., who held that the requisition had been sufficiently answered by the vendor and the purchaser was not entitled to any further reply. From that decision the purchaser appealed.

C. A. Bennett for the purchaser.

H. C. Bischoff, for the vendor, was not called on to argue.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 7, 1916. The following judgments were read.

LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R., stated the facts and continued: The argument before us of the purchaser's counsel was that the purchaser has constructive notice of any trust there may be for any other person, and he relied upon Malpas v. Ackland (1) as supporting the proposition that a statement in the conveyance that an owner of the legal estate holds upon a trust gives notice of all the trusts affecting the property. I have examined the original decree in the Record Office, and I am satisfied that it does not bear out the point for which the case was cited. The decision was plainly correct. The recitals in that case showed that the lessor, who had granted a lease for a term of sixty-one years, had not a good title. It is plain law that a lessee, or a purchaser from a lessee, is affected with notice of and takes subject to any defect in the lessor's title. In this point of view the action was

A really undefended. But the Master of the Rolls, afterwards LORD LYNKHURST, gave, so far as the meagre report shows, a very short judgment. The report states as follows (3 Russ. at pp. 276, 277):

B "He was of opinion that the circumstances were such as to have rendered it incumbent on James Gemme to have made further inquiry that he must be considered as having had notice of the title of Mrs. Malpas' children, and therefore that the decree ought to be according to the prayer of the bill."

C If he merely held that the documents which were recited (including the will under which the plaintiff's equitable title arose) gave notice of a trust, his opinion, if I may respectfully say so, was perfectly right. If, however, he thought that a recital that an owner of the legal estate is trustee for A. B. imposes any duty upon the purchaser to inquire whether he is not also trustee for somebody else, I think there is no justification for such a view. I do not entertain any doubt that a recital that an owner of the legal estate is trustee for A. B. under a will or under a deed affects a purchaser with notice of the contents of the will or of the deed. But that doctrine has no bearing upon a case where there is nothing more than a statement that he holds upon trust for A. B. Such a statement is an admission against interest by the owner of the legal estate. So far as I can ascertain, Malpas v. Ackland (1) has not been treated as an authority on this point, and it has been questioned in DART'S VENDORS AND PURCHASERS (7th Edn.) p. 883. In my opinion, Malpas v. Ackland (1), although rightly decided, cannot be regarded as an authority for the proposition for which it was cited.

E We have had an elaborate argument as to the mode in which, where there is a change of trustees, the highly desirable and perfectly honest object of keeping the trust off the title has been or can be attained. Since Re Harman and Uxbridge and Rickmansworth Rail. Co. (2) it cannot be doubted that the mode referred to by MR. LEWIN in his LAW OF TRUSTS (12th Edn.) p. 386, is satisfactory. It was, however, suggested that that doctrine has no application except to a transfer of mortgages. I can see no foundation for this limitation. In that very case there had been a foreclosure decree, and the property transferred was therefore land and not money. Moreover, in the common case of a money settlement containing a power to invest in the purchase of land, which power has been exercised, I feel no doubt that the entire trust property, both land and money, may properly be transferred to new trustees by the method referred to by MR. LEWIN. I may add that in my opinion the passages from MR. CYPRIAN WILLIAMS' work ON VENDOR AND PURCHASER (2nd Edn.) pp. 238-240, which are referred to by YOUNGER, J. ([1916] 2 Ch. at p. 12), correctly state the law. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

I PHILLIMORE, L.J.—I agree that the judgment of YOUNGER, J., is right. I apprehend that upon the purchase of real estate it is settled law that if, in the course of deducing title, there appear upon the abstract a statement or recital of the existence of some deed or other instrument, the purchaser is fixed with constructive notice of all the contents of the instrument. If thereafter some claim arising out of the instrument be preferred, the purchaser will not be able to say that he trusted to the recitals or statements which appeared upon the abstract, and he will not be able to plead that he is a purchaser for value without notice. If, however, a good title both at law and in equity is deduced to a particular grantor A. B., and in the next assurance it is recited that A. B. is trustee of the whole or some part of the property or some defined estate or interest in favour of C. D., and C. D. joins in the assurance for the purpose of conveying or releasing his estate or interest, a subsequent purchaser is not bound to inquire into the circumstances in which C. D. acquired his estate or interest, is not bound to assume that it was created by an instrument, and is not fixed with constructive notice of the contents of the instrument if there should prove to have been one. A. B., who, according to the previous documentary title, has the absolute and unincumbered estate, has made an admission against interest, and his admission lessens his estate to the extent to which he admits, and in favour of the person or persons in whose interest he admits, but no further. This principle is well illustrated in LEWIN'S LAW OF TRUSTS, chap. 14, s. 4, para. 37. Mr. LEWIN is there dealing with the familiar case of trustees who have money to invest on mortgage, and is stating the recognised practice of conveyancers whereby the trusts of the instrument, under which they are trustees, are kept off the title to the property mortgaged. He points out that a formula, once in vogue and having the authority of JARMAN'S BYTHEWOOD, vol. 6, p. 381, that the mortgagees are trustees, is unsafe. This seems obvious. There is a declaration against interest, but nothing to show in whose favour the title is cut down, and, therefore, no release is obtained from the unknown beneficiary. Mr. LEWIS, however, proceeds to show that in the common case where new trustees are from time to time appointed, and it is necessary to get a conveyance which will not appear to be a voluntary one from the old to the new trustees, it is right and proper to express that the grantors are trustees for the grantees to whom they are now passing the legal estate. And such a declaration, while affording sufficient consideration for the conveyancer, does not bring upon the title the instrument or instruments under which, in fact, the old trustees had become trustees for the new trustees. The illustration is taken from the case of mortgages, and it is most often in the case of mortgages that the point will arise. But in Re Harman and Uxbridge and Rickmansworth Rtd. Co. (2) the point arose after foreclosure of a mortgage, and with regard to the conveyance of the foreclosed estate. It was there held that where the executrix of the mortgagee, having foreclosed the mortgage, purported by a deed reciting that her testator had held the mortgage on account of three persons named to convey the estate to them, she was, though an executrix, entitled to put this recital into the deed, and that the purchasers were "entitled to rely on it as a protection against any trusts of the property which may exist."

Some reliance was placed on the argument before us upon the use of the phrase "on account of" instead of "as trustees for." But the principle is the same. Particular admission against interest is made and then the interest so admitted is got in.

In Re Blumberg and Abrahams' Contract (3) KILKIEWICH, J., explains Re Harman and Uxbridge and Rickmansworth Rtd. Co. (2), and affirms while distinguishing its principle. I quote what he there said ([1899] 2 Ch. at p. 346):

"Perhaps I ought to say that Harman's Case (2) does not govern this case, because there the trust deed was not disclosed. All that was disclosed was that the testator was a trustee, and it did not appear that any persons other than the testator ever had anything to do with the trust."

The only decision which appears to create any difficulty is that relied upon by counsel for the purchaser namely, Malpas v. Ackland (1). In that case as reported—not altogether carefully—an argument was offered on behalf of the successful plaintiffs which, if sound, would contravene the principle which I have stated. But there are two observations to make. On the facts stated in the report, which, by inspection of the original record, we find were stated in the plaintiff's bill, the plaintiffs were bound to succeed. The defendant was the assignee of a lease for sixty-one years created by a lessor who admitted that he was a trustee. A lease of this length, and of the particular nature of which it was, was not one that would come within the ordinary powers of a trustee. It was necessary, therefore, to make the beneficiaries parties, and a recital was inserted to show who they were and what their interest was. The recital was incomplete, and excluded those beneficiaries who afterwards became the plaintiffs. This recital could not be conclusive, because a lessee just as much as a purchaser has the obligation to inquire into his lessor's title, and an investigation of the title would have shown that, only seventeen years before, the property—which

A was copyhold—had been surrendered to the uses of a will, and the will which contained the limitations in question was, therefore, upon the title. The case need not have been put on the question of notice, but on a direct infirmity of title. The lessor had not the power to make the lease which he purported to make. The argument, therefore, was unnecessary. But, further, the actual recital that the trustee was seised of the copyhold

B “upon trust for the use and behoof of William Malpas and Susannah his wife and George Colman for such estates in possession, reversion, or remainder, as they became entitled to after the decease of Mary Colman, and that the trust had devolved on Henry Hannam,”

C was a sufficiently plain indication that there was, if not an instrument creating an original interest, at least some instrument or act in law passing the interest to Malpas and his wife and George Colman, upon the decease of Mary Colman. Malpas v. Ackland (1) seems to have been mentioned with some approval, but quite incidentally, in Jones v. Smith (4) (1 Hare, at p. 58). It is rarely cited in textbooks, and has been commented on adversely. If it be merely a decision that where upon an assurance there is a recital of an instrument creating a trust,

D he who takes under that assurance has constructive notice of all the trusts created by the instrument, it is only in accordance with well-recognised law. As a decision on the particular circumstances that where enough is recited to show that there must be a deed there will then be constructive notice of the deed, though a deed be not actually mentioned, it may be of some little importance. If it goes any further, I humbly conceive that it is not good law. Upon the whole, as I

E have said, I think that this appeal fails.

SARGANT, J.—I am of the same opinion. It has not been contended by the purchaser that the recitals in the indenture of Nov. 11, 1913, indicate that the beneficial interest acknowledged in favour of the present vendor was in any way derived from James Wells Neil or that, though the latter and Henry Bracey

F Forbes were expressed in the indenture of Nov. 13, 1901, to buy and to take as joint tenants, they were in fact co-adventurers or tenant in common, so that the survivor would hold partly as trustee for the other. It is accepted that the object of reciting the indenture of Nov. 13, 1901, and the death of James Wells Neil was merely to show a complete title in fee simple in Henry Bracey Forbes, and that the statement as to the beneficial interest of the present vendor may be treated as an

G admission of a trust which is disconnected from the preceding recitals and may have arisen altogether independently of James Wells Neil and subsequently to his death. Nevertheless, it is argued that the bare statement in the indenture of Nov. 11, 1913, as to the trust in favour of the present vendor puts a purchaser upon inquiry as to the origin and nature of this trust, and would in default of inquiry render his title bad as against any other cestuis que trust of Henry Bracey

H Forbes who have not been satisfied and as to whose existence and interests the purchaser would have become informed in the course of such an inquiry.

I It is difficult to discover any sound principle on which this contention can be based. Assuming, as is admitted here, that an indenture discloses what is on the face of it an absolute legal and beneficial title in A, and that A. then proceeds to admit that either in whole or in part he holds for the benefit of or in trust for a definite named person B., I can see no sufficient reason for any inference that A. holds upon any additional or further trust than that disclosed, or that the acknowledged trust originates in any document the examination of which might disclose any such further trust. The admission or acknowledgment is one against interest, and, of course, binds the person making it to its full extent. But there is no reason for enlarging that extent. The very candour of the admission is in favour of its completeness. A trustee who is concealing a trust in favour of C. is not likely to be openly acknowledging at the same moment a trust in favour of B. It is said, however, that the contrary has been decided in Malpas v. Ackland (1).

The report of that case is unsatisfactory, but the decision may obviously be supported on either of two grounds. In the first place, any ordinary investigation of the title of the lessor must obviously have resulted in the disclosure of the trusts on which the plaintiff relied. And such an investigation can only be neglected at the peril of a lessee: Patman v. Harland (5). In the next place, the reference to the trusts on which John Hannam held was couched in such terms as obviously to suggest what was actually the fact—namely, that there was a series of successive trusts, of which those in favour of William Malpas and Susannah his wife and George Colman formed a part only. I cannot find that in any subsequent case reliance has been placed on Malpas v. Achland (1) as establishing the wide proposition contending for by counsel for the purchaser. And, if it does purport to establish that proposition, it is in conflict with later authorities, such as Re Harman and Uxbridge and Rickmansworth Rail. Co. (2) and London and County Banking Co. v. Goddard (6), and cannot, in my judgment, be any longer relied on. The first of these two cases, indeed, went very much beyond anything that is necessary here, since it not only negatived any obligation to inquire into the origin and nature of the trusts on which the deceased mortgagee had held his mortgage, but accepted as against the beneficiaries under his will the statement of the surviving trustee of that will that the deceased had not held beneficially.

Great weight ought also to be attached to the practice of conveyancers in such matters. A common but by no means solitary instance is afforded by the method adopted when on a change of trustees mortgages belonging to the trust have to be transferred from the former trustees to the new trustees. The original mortgages have, of course, been taken in the joint names of the trustees without any disclosure of the trust, and it is equally necessary or desirable that no such disclosure should be permitted on the transfer. A bare recital is accordingly used to the effect that the new trustees have become entitled to the mortgage moneys on a joint account in the place of the old trustees, or that the old trustees now hold the mortgage moneys upon trust for the new trustees or to some other effect, showing that the old trustees admit that their legal title has become subject to an equitable or beneficial title on the part of the new trustees entitling the latter to a transfer. Such a recital is universally accepted as sufficient on any subsequent investigation of title by a purchaser or mortgagee. But the validity of such a recital obviously rests upon the principle that the acknowledgment of the apparent legal owner of a limitation or negative of his legal ownership by means of a trust or its equivalent is to be accepted at its face value, and does not involve any obligation to inquire into the origin or nature of the acknowledged trust. In my view, the judgment of the learned judge was quite right and should be affirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Bennett & Ferris; Forbes & Son.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

FURNESS, WITHY & CO., LTD. v. REDERIAKTIEBOLAGET BANCO AND OTHERS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Bailhache, J.), July 30, 31, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 873; 87 L.J.K.B. 11; 117 L.T. 313;
62 Sol. Jo. 25; 14 Asp.M.L.C. 137]

B

Shipping—Charterparty—Exception clause—Restraint of princes—Restraint imposed by foreign government—Shipowner and master within foreign jurisdiction and liable to penalties.

C

The defendants who were Swedish and resident in Sweden owned a ship which they chartered to the plaintiffs for six months, the charterparty being made in England and containing a restraint of princes exception. The ship was to be used between certain ports all of which were outside Sweden. At the date of the charter decrees had been made in Sweden which prohibited ships of the tonnage of the chartered ship from carrying goods for freight between ports outside Sweden. After one voyage the plaintiffs proposed to load another cargo at Cardiff for carriage to Italy, but the defendants refused to proceed with the charter on the ground that it would contravene the Swedish decrees. The plaintiffs brought an action to restrain the defendants from using the ship otherwise than in accordance with the terms of the charterparty.

D

E

Held: although the restraint arose from a foreign law and the foreign government was not in a position to stop the performance of the contract by force, the restraint could operate—as it could only operate in the case of a ship—on the owner or master who were within the jurisdiction of the foreign government imposing the restraint and were liable to pains and penalties for disobedience, and, therefore, the defendants were entitled to rely on the exception in the charter.

F

Notes. Referred to: Manbre Saccharine Co., Ltd. v. Corn Products Co., Ltd., [1918-19] All E.R.Rep. 980.

As to charterparties in general, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.), 272 et seq.; as to restraint of princes, see ibid. 319 et seq. For cases see 41 DIGEST 409, 2545-2572.

Cases referred to:

G

(1) Sanday & Co. v. British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co., [1915] 2 K.B. 781; 84 L.J.K.B. 1625; 113 L.T. 407; 31 T.L.R. 374; 59 Sol. Jo. 456; 13 Asp.M.L.C. 116, C.A.; affirmed sub nom. British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Samuel Sanday & Co., ante p. 134; [1916] 1 A.C. 650; 85 L.J.K.B. 550; 114 L.T. 521; 32 T.L.R. 266; 60 Sol. Jo. 253; 13 Asp.M.L.C. 289; 21 Com. Cas. 154, HL.; 29 Digest 276, 2236.

H

(2) Rodocanachi v. Elliott (1874), L.R. 9 C.P. 515; 43 L.J.C.P. 255; 31 L.T. 239; 2 Asp.M.L.C. 399, Ex. Ch.; 29 Digest 218, 1747.

Action in the Commercial List tried by BAILHACHE, J., without a jury.

The defendants were Swedish subjects ordinarily resident in Sweden and were the owners of the steamship Zamora. On Nov. 13, 1916, the plaintiffs chartered the ship on a Baltic and White Sea time charter form for six months to be employed on voyages between certain ports, all of which were outside Sweden. The charterparty was made in England. At that time the King of Sweden, in the exercise of a power given to him by the Swedish emergency legislation, had made decrees prohibiting Swedish ships of more than 200 tons gross register from carrying goods for freight between ports outside Sweden. The ship, having carried a cargo of coal from Barry to Genoa, returned to Cardiff where the plaintiffs proposed to load another cargo of coal for carriage to Italy. The defendants refused to proceed with the charter on the grounds that it would contravene the Swedish decrees. The plaintiffs brought the present action to restrain the defendants from using the ship otherwise than in accordance with the charterparty.

I

Leck, K.C., and R. A. Wright for the plaintiffs.

Dunlop for the defendants.

BAILHACHE, J. On Nov. 13, 1916, the Swedish owners of a steamer called the Zamora made a six months' time charter with the plaintiffs, Messrs. Furness, Withy & Co. The steamer was then in the United Kingdom, or shortly to come into the United Kingdom, and she was to be employed during the six months on voyages within certain limits. It is sufficient for my purposes to say that all those limits were outside the kingdom of Sweden. The charter was on a Baltic and White Sea time charter form, with which by this time we are all very familiar; and in cl. 14, amongst the exceptions, there was an exception of restraint of princes.

It appears that there was existing at the date of the charter some emergency legislation in Sweden, which apparently is very similar in form to our own emergency legislation, and power is given to the King of Sweden to make certain proclamations and regulations, and then he, under the statute giving him that power, makes these proclamations. He has made proclamations and regulations—decrees I think they are called—and No. 271 and No. 273 are the material ones for this purpose. By decree No. 271 it is provided that “goods shall not be carried between places outside the kingdom by Swedish vessels of a gross tonnage of 200 tons register or more.”

The effect of that was to prevent the carriage of goods between ports neither of which is in the kingdom of Sweden. Then, by decree No. 273, there is a regulation against making time charters for a longer period than six months. If I had been left alone to read those two decrees together, I should not myself have thought that No. 271 was applicable to No. 273. I should have thought that No. 271 referred to voyage charters and No. 273 referred to time charters; and there might be a time charter for six months which kept or might keep the vessel for the whole of those six months outside Swedish waters. Mr. Schonmeyer, a Swedish advocate, has given evidence here that the effect of the Swedish law is that No. 271 and No. 273 must be read together; and, although you may in a time-chartered ship carry goods outside the kingdom of Sweden, one of the ports between which you carry the goods must be a Swedish port. It may be so; and at any rate for my purpose, as he is the only witness called before me as to the Swedish law, I must accept what he says upon that matter, having no evidence to the contrary.

The vessel was chartered in this country. The contract is an English contract, and no doubt has to be construed according to English law. She did go on one voyage to Genoa, and the owners then objected, not upon the ground that there was any restraint of princes at all, but upon the ground of the danger which the ship incurred in navigating the waters between this country and Italy. It was upon that ground that the owners at first declined to proceed with the time charter. They did not state the restraint of princes point until a later date. But, of course, if they have the restraint of princes point, and can rely upon it, they can justify their refusal to proceed with the charterparty upon any ground which existed at the time and which is in fact a good justification for their refusal.

It is conceded by the defendants, and is, I think, quite clear law that the mere fact that a contract is illegal by the law of a foreign State to which one of the contracting parties is a subject will not make the contract illegal or unenforceable if it is an English contract to be construed according to English law and to be enforced according to the law of this country. Therefore, if it were not for the exception of restraint of princes, the Swedish owners in this case could not rely upon the fact that this charterparty is illegal according to Swedish law. But they have the words “restraint of princes.” I was for some time in doubt whether a restraint arises from a foreign law when the foreign government, against whose

- A law the contract is intended to be performed, is not in a position to stop the performance of the contract by force applied to the subject-matter of the contract—that is, in this case, either to the ship or the cargo. I am not aware of any case in which there has been an instance of restraint of princes in which the foreign government has not been in a position to enforce the restraint by actual physical action upon the subject-matter of the contract—the ship or the cargo.
- B Not counsel for the defendants has referred me to a great many expressions in the well-known case of Sanday & Co. v. British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co. (1) ([1915] 2 K.B. at pp. 789, 800, 827) (decided last year in the House of Lords) in the judgments of Lord Reading, C.J., and Bray, J., in that case in the Court of Appeal—and, indeed, to my own expressions—and, in particular, to some expressions in the judgment of BRAMWELL, L.J., in Rodocanachi v. Elliott (2) (L.R. 9 C.P. at p. 523).
- C Putting all these expressions together, it seems to me that a number of judges have said that you may have a restraint of princes where the restraint can operate, and it can only operate in the case of a ship, upon the owner or the master, and it is a case of restraint of princes if the performance of the contract will render the owner or the master liable to pains and penalties—imprisonment and fine—and the owner and the master are within the jurisdiction of the sovereign government
- D by whose law the performance of a particular contract is illegal. I doubt whether this is not carrying restraint of princes further than it has ever been carried before, certainly further than it has ever been carried in any reported case of which I have any knowledge. But it seems to me to follow from the observations made by BRAMWELL, L.J., in Rodocanachi v. Elliott (2) and from the observations made by the Court of Appeal in Sanday & Co. v. British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co.
- E (1). The result, although this may be an extension of the doctrine, is that the plaintiffs' case fails, and there must be judgment for the defendants.

Judgment for defendants.

Solicitors: Downing, Handcock, Middleton & Lewis; Thain Davidson & Co.

[Reported by T. W. MORGAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

NEW RIVER CO. v. CRUMPTON

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Rowlatt, J.), February 21, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 762; 86 L.J.K.B. 614; 116 L.T. 569]

Landlord and Tenant—Repair—Breach of covenant—Statutory notice—Continuing breach—Acceptance of rent after expiration of notice—Waiver of forfeiture—Need of further notice.

The plaintiffs were the landlords and the defendant was the tenant of premises under a lease which contained covenants by the tenant to repair with a proviso for re-entry on breach. The plaintiffs served a statutory notice to repair on the defendant on Dec. 11, 1914, requiring the defendant to remedy the breaches within three months. When the notice was only partially complied with the plaintiffs accepted rent from the defendant due at Christmas, 1915. No further notice to repair was served on the defendant before the plaintiffs began an action for forfeiture.

Held: (i) acceptance of rent after a breach of covenant to repair amounted to a waiver of forfeiture, but, as the breach of the covenant to repair was a continuing breach from day to day, the acceptance of rent by the plaintiffs only waived forfeiture up to the time of acceptance; (ii) a further statutory notice was not necessary as the original notice served by the plaintiffs remained applicable to the actual state of the premises, the partial repairs carried out by the defendant before the action not rendering the notice inapplicable; and, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed.

Penton v. Barnett (1) [1898] 1 Q.B. 276, applied.

Notes. Section 14 (1) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, was replaced in identical terms by s. 146 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925.

As to forfeiture for a continuing breach of covenant, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 673. As to the statutory notice, see ibid. 674 et seq. For cases see 24 DIGEST (Repl.) 537, 6613 et seq. For the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146, see 20 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 739.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Penton v. Barnett, [1898] 1 Q.B. 276; 67 L.J.Q.B. 11; 77 L.T. 645; 46 W.R. 33; 14 T.L.R. 11; 42 Sol. Jo. 11, C.A.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 537, 6618.
- (2) Guillemond v. Silverthorne (1908), 99 L.T. 584, N.P.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 540, 6636.

Action by a landlord for forfeiture of the defendant's lease.

In 1843 the plaintiffs leased to one B. premises for a term of seventy-seven years, the lease containing covenants on the part of the lessee and his assigns to repair and a proviso for re-entry by the landlord on breach of the covenants. The lease subsequently became vested in the defendant. On Dec. 11, 1914, the plaintiffs served upon the defendant a notice under s. 14 (1) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 [now Law of Properties Act, 1925, s. 146 (1)], specifying breaches of the covenants to repair and requiring the defendant to remedy the breaches within three months. The plaintiffs in January, 1916, accepted from the defendant rent due at Christmas, 1915. No fresh notice of repairs was served after January, 1916, and the defendant had only partially complied with the notice to repair before the plaintiffs commenced this action claiming forfeiture of the lease.

Graham Mould for the plaintiffs.

Van den Berg for the defendant.

ROWLATT, J.—The question I have to decide in this case is whether, where notice has been given under s. 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and the forfeiture occasioned by non-compliance with such notice has been waived by acceptance of rent, a new notice has to be given in a case where the previous notice has been partly complied with.

- A It is, of course, clear that acceptance of rent after a breach of covenant to repair justifying re-entry constituted at common law a waiver of forfeiture. In the present case rent accrued due down to Christmas, 1915, was accepted by the plaintiffs, and therefore, there was a waiver for forfeiture down to that date, and the tenancy subsisted till then. It is also clear that at common law, where there is a covenant to repair, the breach, if not remedied, is a continuing breach from day to day.
- B Therefore, when the rent was accepted it only waived forfeiture up to that time. Then comes in s. 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which requires a notice of breaches to be given, and a question arises whether a notice has been given and then the forfeiture is waived by acceptance of rent a new notice must be given to support the right of action again. Here the notice was given in December, 1914, and rent accrued due at Christmas, 1915, was accepted by the landlords.
- C This question came up for decision in Penton v. Barnett (1), and the point is perhaps best stated in the judgment of COLLINS, L.J., who said ([1898] 1 Q.B. at pp. 281, 282):

"I think, however, that we ought to construe the words 'particular breach' in the section according to the obvious intention of the legislature, which was that the tenant should be informed of the particular condition of the premises which he was required to remedy. The expression 'breach' means the neglect to deal with the condition of the premises so pointed out, and not merely failure to comply with the covenants of the lease. The common sense of the matter is that the tenant is to have full notice of what he is required to do. He has had notice, and has failed to act on it; and with regard to that, the physical condition of the premises which he was required to make good was the same when the action was brought as when the notice was given. Under these circumstances, I agree that the requirements of the Conveyancing Act have been complied with, and that the tenant has, within the meaning of s. 14, had notice of the breach of covenant, which is the foundation of the action."

- F This case is on the same footing in point of fact except that here there has been a partial compliance with the notice to repair since it was given and before the action was brought, and it is said that that renders the decision in Penton v. Barnett (1) inapplicable. In that case the breaches of which notice was given were continuing from day to day, and continued until action was brought. In the present case it is suggested that as part of the notice has been complied with another notice before action must be given. It seems to me that what was meant
- G by the Court of Appeal in Penton v. Barnett (1) was that the notice must be still applicable to the actual state of the premises at the time when the action is brought: a new notice needed not to be given because the old notice remained applicable, and I do not think that it was meant to say that because some partial repairs have been effected, therefore a fresh notice must be given. The tenant knew what she was required to do and what she had not done, and, I think, that that is enough. I do not think that the partial repairs make the notice inapplicable, or that the Court of Appeal in Penton v. Barnett (1) meant so to hold. If the question of waiver had not arisen, no one would argue that you would have to give a fresh notice because part of the repairs had been done. I cannot see why, because the question is complicated by waiver, different considerations should apply. I am not sure whether what RIDLEY, J., decided in Guillemard v. Silverthorne (2) is quite in accordance with what I am deciding now. I am not sure that I am following his judgment, but I feel bound to follow what, in my opinion, the Court of Appeal really meant in Penton v. Barnett (1). Therefore, this point taken by the defendant fails. That disposes of the only point causing difficulty in this action, and there must be judgment for the plaintiffs.

Judgment for plaintiffs.

Solicitors: Thompson & Debenham; Engall & Crane.

[Reported by W. V. BALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WILLIAM CORY & SONS, LTD. v. LAMBTON AND HETTON COLLIERIES, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady and Bankes, L.J.J., and A. T. Lawrence, J.),
November 6, 7, 1916]

[Reported 86 L.J.K.B. 401; 115 L.T. 738; 10 B.W.C.C. 180;
13 Asp.M.L.C. 530]

Indemnity—Implied indemnity—Request by one party to another to do act gratuitously—Consequent liability of party doing act—Implication of indemnity by other party.

The plaintiffs chartered a ship from the defendants. When preparing to discharge the cargo at the dock, the plaintiffs, at the implied request of the defendants, gratuitously used their (the plaintiff's) machinery to remove the hatch beams in the ship. While doing this a servant of the plaintiffs was killed. The dependants of the deceased servant recovered compensation from the plaintiffs in proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and the plaintiffs claimed to be entitled to an implied indemnity from the defendants.

Held: as the accident to the plaintiffs' servant was not the direct or natural consequence of doing the act which was done, but was a consequence of the manner in which the act was done, and, therefore, no inference could be drawn of any agreement by the defendants to indemnify the plaintiffs.

Per BANKES, L.J., and LAWRENCE, J.: Where a person does an act gratuitously at the request of another a promise of indemnity is not necessarily implied.

Notes. The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, was repealed by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, which in turn has been almost entirely replaced by the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946 ([16 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 797]), under which compensation is made by the State for injuries sustained by workmen in the course of their employment.

As to indemnities see 18 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 529 et seq., and for cases see 26 DIGEST (Repl.) 232, 1786-1803.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Dugdale v. Lovering (1875), L.R. 10 C.P. 196; 44 L.J.C.P. 197; 32 L.T. 155; 23 W.R. 391; 26 Digest (Repl.) 232, 1787.
- (2) Toplis v. Grane (1839), 5 Bing. N.C. 636; 2 Arn. 110; 7 Scott, 620; 9 L.J.C.P. 180; 132 E.R. 1245; 26 Digest (Repl.) 232, 1786.
- (3) Betts v. Gibbins (1834), 2 Ad. & El. 57; 4 Nev. & M.K.B. 64; 4 L.J.K.B. 1; 111 E.R. 22; 26 Digest (Repl.) 233, 1797.
- (4) Groves & Son v. Webb and Kenward (1916), 85 L.J.K.B. 1533; 114 L.T. 1082; 32 T.L.R. 424; 13 Asp.M.L.C. 386, C.A.; 26 Digest (Repl.) 233, 1794.

Also referred to in argument:

- Sheffield Corpn. v. Barclay*, [1905] A.C. 392; 74 L.J.K.B. 747; 93 L.T. 83; 69 J.P. 385; 54 W.R. 49; 21 T.L.R. 642; 49 Sol. Jo. 617; 3 L.G.R. 992; 10 Com. Cas. 287; 12 Mans. 248, H.L.; 26 Digest (Repl.) 237, 1820.
- Donovan v. Laing, Wharton and Down Construction Syndicate*, [1893] 1 K.B. 629; 63 L.J.Q.B. 25; 68 L.T. 512; 57 J.P. 583; 41 W.R. 455; 9 T.L.R. 313; 37 Sol. Jo. 824; 4 R. 317, C.A.; 34 Digest 26, 49.
- Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Co.* (1877), 2 C.P.D. 205; 46 L.J.Q.B. 283; 36 L.T. 49; 41 J.P. 580; 25 W.R. 263, C.A.; 34 Digest 25, 46.
- Coggs v. Bernard* (1703), 1 Salk. 26; 1 Com. 133; Holt, K.B. 13; 2 Ld. Raym. 909; 3 Salk. 11; 91 E.R. 25; 36 Digest (Repl.) 32, 144.

A Appeal by the defendants (shipowners) from a decision of RIDLEY, J., sitting with a jury, in an action in which the plaintiffs claimed an indemnity in the circumstances stated in the headnote. The jury found: (i) that the plaintiffs in discharging the cargo from the ship were doing the work of the defendants, and (ii) that the defendants had impliedly undertaken to indemnify the plaintiffs for damage or loss occurring during the discharging of the cargo.

B The facts are set out in the headnote and in the judgment of SWINFEN EADY, L.J. Holman Gregory, K.C., and Alexander Neilson for the defendants.

Rawlinson, K.C., and M. M. Macnaghten (for Harold Morris, serving with His Majesty's forces) for the plaintiffs.

C SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—This is the appeal of the defendants, the Lambton and Hetton Collieries, Ltd., against the verdict and judgment at the trial of the action before RIDLEY, J., where, upon certain questions being left to the jury, a verdict was returned for the plaintiffs for £283. Against that verdict and judgment the defendants appeal, and they ask in the alternative, first, to have the judgment set aside and judgment entered for the defendants, upon the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury with regard to the liability to indemnify the plaintiffs in respect of which the action was brought, or, in the alternative, they ask for a new trial.

D The facts out of which this action arises are these. On April 23, 1915, the plaintiffs, William Cory & Sons, Ltd., chartered from the defendants, the Lambton and Hetton Collieries, Ltd., a steamship for the purpose of carrying a cargo of coal. The ship arrived in the Thames, and was moored at the Albert Dock coal hoists, where the plaintiffs, William Cory & Sons, Ltd., have certain machinery and hoists for quickly discharging cargoes of their coal. According to the terms of the charterparty, the time for discharging was to commence when the steamer was moored in her discharging berth ready to discharge cargo. What happened was that, on the arrival of the steamer, and after she was moored, the ship's crew removed the hatches. Then the next step, before having the hatchways cleared to discharge the coal, was the removal of the hatch beams. These hatch beams, which rest by their own weight, are heavy, and no tackle of the ship had been rigged for the purpose of removing them, and there was evidence from which I think the jury were entitled to take view which they did, that William Cory & Sons, Ltd., at the implied request of the ship, proceeded to use their powerful machinery for the purpose of lifting and removing the hatch beams. In doing so, unfortunately an accident occurred to Peacock, who was one of William Cory & Sons' men, and he was killed, or he died from the effects of the injuries that he received during the operation. After his death his dependants took proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and obtained a sum of about £283 compensation. The present action was brought by Messrs. William Cory & Sons, Ltd., to obtain from the defendants, the owners of the ship, that sum of £283 upon an implied indemnity, their case being that the plaintiffs did the work of removing the hatch beams at the request of the defendants, and in circumstances from which an indemnity can be implied against all consequences of the act they were requested to do, including in those consequences the liability of the plaintiffs to pay compensation to the dependants of a workman who was killed by the operation which they were asked to undertake.

E The accident happened in this way. After the removal of the hatches the ship lay there, and William Cory & Sons, Ltd., proceeded to remove the hatch beams. There was evidence that the ship was not ready to discharge within the meaning of the charterparty until the hatch beams had been removed. Thereupon William Cory & Sons' men proceeded to do what was necessary to remove the hatch beams. The deceased, Peacock, went into the hold, either standing on the coal, or on the hatch beam itself, but he passed into the ship, and there was a crane man working the crane. Then, according to the evidence of the crane driver, Robert Wing, Peacock, who was a fellow employee of his, in the employ of William Cory & Sons, Ltd., gave him, from the ship, the order to lower the grab. It was intended doubtless to have a chain or something fastened to the end of the grab to remove the hatch beams. In his evidence Wing said: "He gave me the order to lower the grab, and it touched the fore and aft, and the grab slipped," and then Wing tried to pull it up, but it was too late—that is to say, the grab had rested on the beam which had slipped and tipped over, and injured the deceased or pinned him to the side of the ship. Then in cross-examination Wing said: "Peacock let me [the crane man] go too far; and so it happened." That is to say, Peacock did not give Wing the sign by which he was to stop lowering the grab down, and he let the grab down too far and it tipped over, and although he tried to pull it up and tried to recover himself it was too late. It was in that way that the accident happened. The plaintiffs, being liable, and having paid £253 as compensation to the dependants of their deceased workman, brought this action, on the ground that the work was done by them for the shipowners and it was the shipowners' duty to remove these hatch beams. William Cory & Sons, Ltd., had done the work for them at their request, and they say the circumstances were such that there must be implied a promise on the part of the defendants to indemnify them from consequences of the act which the plaintiffs had performed on their behalf, including this liability to pay compensation.

The claim was put forward originally in the alternative. It was based upon a usage or custom of the Port of London. That was one part of the claim, and it was alleged by the plaintiffs that there was a usage or custom of the Port of London, in reference to colliers at the port, that when a workman employed by the dischargers is injured by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment in the work of removing the hatches and/or the hatch beams of a ship, the shipowners indemnify the dischargers against their liability to pay compensation, or the injured workman or his dependants. That was alleged to be a custom or trade usage of the Port of London. That is now out of the way in this case, because it was conceded in the court below, when the matter was before the jury, that there was no evidence on which the jury could be asked to find such a custom. Then the plaintiffs put their case in the alternative; they put it upon an implication in law from the facts of the case, and they say that where persons request work to be done they impliedly promise, as a necessary implication of law, to indemnify the party doing that work. The learned judge at the trial left three questions to the jury. The first was: "Were the dischargers"—that is, William Cory & Sons, Ltd.—"doing the working of the ship?" That is to say, were they, in removing the hatch beams, doing the work which the shipowners, as between the ship and charterers, ought to do? The jury answered that they were. The second question the learned judge put was: "Were they doing it by implied request?" and the answer was, Yes. That was having regard to the circumstances, the ship drawing up, and there being no machinery immediately available for removing the hatch beams, and the ship not making preparation for doing it, obviously waiting for William Cory & Sons, Ltd., to do it, and one of their men proceeding on to the ship for the purpose of doing it, there was evidence from which the jury were entitled to draw the conclusion that William Cory & Sons, Ltd., were doing the work of removing the hatch beams at the request of the ship. In respect of those two findings there is really no complaint.

The matter turns upon the third question which was put to the jury: "Was there an implied indemnity?" to which the jury said, Yes. The question which we have to consider is not only whether that verdict of the jury was in accordance with the evidence, but whether there was any evidence to go to the jury from which they could arrive at such a decision. The learned judge left it to the jury in this way: After dealing with the first and second questions that I have already dealt with, he said, as to the third question, "Was there an implied indemnity?" That is to say, "When they"—the plaintiffs—"were doing it at the request of the ship, if anything should happen which put a liability upon them, an unforeseen liability

A in the course of doing it, have they a right to say, 'You ought to indemnify us because we were doing this work for you?' " His Lordship says:

"[Counsel for the plaintiffs] has been able to quote a sentence which was approved by the courts some time ago on a very similar subject, and it is this,"

B and then he reads the extract, which counsel for the plaintiffs had read from Dugdale v. Lovering (1). Then the learned judge proceeds:

C "Gentlemen, it seems to fall within that principle. I do not see any fact in this case which militates against it. I do not know whether you do; but, unless you see there is any reason in the facts of this case which would make it unjust that the responsibility for the accident should fall upon those whose work it was when the accident occurred, I think it would be a proper finding on your part to say that there was an implied indemnity."

Then the jury answer that by saying there was an implied indemnity.

Was that direction of the learned judge right? The passage which counsel for the plaintiffs read was this—it is in Dugdale v. Lovering (1) (L.R. 10 C.P. at p. 200), where BRETT, J., refers to Toplis v. Grane (2):

D "In which TINDAL, C.J., one of the most careful expositors of the law ever known, laid down the proposition on the subject in these terms:

E "We think this evidence brings the case before us within the principle laid down in Betts v. Gibbins (3) that when an act has been done by the plaintiff under the express directions of the defendant which occasions an injury to the rights of third persons, yet, if such an act is not apparently illegal in itself, but is done honestly and bona fide in compliance with the defendant's directions, he shall be bound to indemnify the plaintiff against the consequences thereof.' "

F Then it said that this act was done by the plaintiffs, William Cory & Sons, Ltd., under the express directions or under the implied directions—it is immaterial whether it is express or implied if it was under the directions—of the defendants, and they say that that has occasioned an injury to the rights of a third person, the deceased workman, Peacock, so that if the act is not apparently illegal, but is done honestly and in good faith, then the defendants are bound to indemnify the plaintiffs against the consequences thereof. Counsel have urged before us that this case clearly comes within the principle as there laid down.

G In my opinion, it does not, and I am satisfied that in the present case there was no evidence to go to the jury of any implied indemnity by the defendants, the shipowners, in respect of any liability of the plaintiffs, William Cory & Sons, Ltd., to their workmen under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The statement of the law which I have just read, in which it is held that the defendant is bound to indemnify the plaintiff against the consequences thereof, must be read as meaning that the plaintiff claiming the indemnity must have acted without negligence, and that the injury to the third party, when it says "the consequences thereof," must be the direct result—that is, the natural and direct consequences—of doing the particular act which he was requested to do, and not a consequence merely arising from the manner in which the act was done. In my view there are no facts in the present case from which any inference whatever can be drawn of any agreement by the ship to indemnify William Cory & Sons, Ltd., the plaintiffs, against any liability of William Cory & Sons, Ltd., to their workmen under the Workmen's Compensation Act in doing the act complained of. It was an unfortunate injury to Peacock, but it was not the direct or natural consequence of doing the act—that is, removing these hatch beams. It was but an unfortunate consequence of the manner in which the act was done. For these reasons I am of opinion that there was no evidence to go to the jury upon the third issue which was material to the success of the plaintiffs, and, that being so, the verdict and judgment ought to be set aside and judgment entered for the defendants.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree. It seems to me that in the court below and here the doctrine, or the principle of the implied request and implied indemnity, or implied contract of indemnity arising out of the request has been attempted to be pressed too far. I think that what SWINFEN EADY, L.J., has just said is a necessary correction or addition to the statement of the law as laid down in Dugdale v. Lovering (1), and I think what I said myself in the case which has been referred to of Groves & Son v. Webb and Kenward (4) was substantially correct, and I need say nothing more upon that part of the case. But counsel for the plaintiffs has advanced another and different argument, as I understand it, and his contention is that where a request is made to a person to do an act gratuitously, and he does that act gratuitously, the law implies a contract to indemnify him against all the consequences of that act, whatever they may be. Now, there are two objections to that contention, as it seems to me, as applied to this case, and the first is this: That no such contention was raised in the court below, and no question was asked of the jury upon which they could have come to a decision with regard to that particular point, and it seems to me impossible to contend that such an implied promise could arise as a matter of law. It may be that in some cases the fact that the service is done gratuitously may be an element for consideration. I am expressing no opinion about that, but I say that, so far as my opinion goes, it is impossible to contend, and there is no authority to contend, that the law implies such a contract as counsel contends for, from the mere fact that the person performing the act is doing it gratuitously. I agree that there was no evidence fit to go to the jury.

A. T. LAWRENCE, J.—I am of the same opinion. I am assuming that there was sufficient evidence, to justify it being left to the jury, of request to the plaintiffs to do this work. I have some doubt about it myself, but I will assume it for the purpose of the argument. I think the further contention based upon it, that it implied a promise of indemnity, is unsupported by any authority, and is wrong. Counsel for the plaintiffs applies the doctrine of Dugdale v. Lovering (1), but the doctrine is applicable to different facts altogether. There the request was to do an act that was apparently quite lawful, but was in fact tortious, and it is the same thing in the case cited in that case of TINDAL, C.J. (Taplis v. Grane (2)), which is mentioned there; the act was in fact illegal, though it was not known to be so, and it was from that that the indemnity was implied. But here the request was to do a perfectly lawful act, and there was, therefore, no implied promise of indemnity. Then counsel for the plaintiffs tries to get over that difficulty by suggesting that in all cases in which the request is to do the act without reward the law imports an indemnity. I do not think that is so. There is no case that I am aware of that goes that length, and I know many instances in which there would be the most astounding results if an indemnity were imported into the law. It seems to me that here there was no evidence at all upon which the jury could find the promise to indemnify the plaintiffs for what appears upon the evidence to have been the clear negligence of one of their workmen in doing this act. I, therefore, think that the appeal succeeds, and that judgment must be entered for the defendants.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Botterell & Roche, for Botterell & Roche, Sunderland; Barlow, Barlow & Lyde.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

TAFF VALE RAIL. CO. v. CARDIFF RAIL. CO.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Warrington and Scrutton, L.JJ.), November 7, 8, 9, 20, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 Ch. 299; 86 L.J.Ch. 129; 115 L.T. 800]

B

Compulsory Purchase—Exercise of powers—No wider than needed for purpose authorised—Railway—Construction of junction of two companies' lines—Line capable of being carried by one company over another's land by embankment or bridge—Deposited plans—Effect only so far as incorporated in special Act.

C

By a special Act the defendants were authorised to purchase and take, and the plaintiffs were required to sell and grant to them, an easement or right of using a strip of land at the foot of an embankment on which ran the plaintiffs' railway lines for the purpose of effecting a junction between these lines and the defendants' lines near by. The defendants claimed the right to purchase and to compel the plaintiffs to sell to them the right to construct an embankment carrying the defendants' new line on the strip of land. The new line could be carried to the plaintiffs' embankment over the strip of land by either an embankment or a bridge. The plans deposited by the defendants for the purpose of the special Act when a Bill showed an embankment in the position in which it was sought to construct one.

D

E

F

Held: (i) where Parliament empowered a person for a specified purpose to buy a right in another person's property it did not intend that the right conferred should be more extensive than was reasonably necessary for accomplishing the particular purpose; the plaintiffs should not be required to grant the defendants a right more extensive than that demanded for the purpose of making the junction; by the construction of an embankment the plaintiffs' use of the strip of land would be virtually prohibited, whereas by the construction of a bridge it would not; (ii) the deposited plans only had effect so far as they were incorporated in the special Act: North British Rail. Co. v. Tod (1) (1846), 12 Cl. & Fin. 722, applied; and, therefore, the defendants' claim failed.

G

Notes. As to the exercise of powers of compulsory acquisition, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 20 et seq., and for cases see 11 DIGEST (Repl.) 105 et seq. For Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, see 19 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 590.

H

I

Cases referred to:

- (1) North British Rail. Co. v. Tod (1846), 12 Cl. & Fin. 722; 4 Ry. & Can. Cas. 449; 10 Jur. 975; 8 E.R. 1595, H.L.; 11 Digest (Repl.) 111, 65.
- (2) R. v. Caledonian Rail. Co. (1850), 16 Q.B. 19; 20 L.J.Q.B. 147; 16 L.T.O.S. 280; 15 Jur. 396; 117 E.R. 782; 11 Digest (Repl.) 112, 68.
- (3) A.-G. v. Great Eastern Rail. Co. (1872), L.R. 7 Ch. App. 475; 41 L.J.Ch. 505; 26 L.T. 749; 20 W.R. 599; affirmed, L.R. 6 H.L. 367; 22 W.R. 281, H.L.; 11 Digest (Repl.) 112, 69.
- (4) London Corpn. v. Riggs (1880), 13 Ch.D. 798; 49 L.J.Ch. 297; 42 L.T. 580; 44 J.P. 345; 28 W.R. 610; 19 Digest 100, 627.
- (5) Great Western Rail. Co. v. Swindon and Cheltenham Extension Rail. Co. (1884), 9 App. Cas. 787; 53 L.J.Ch. 1075; 51 L.T. 798; 48 J.P. 821; 32 W.R. 957, H.L.; 11 Digest (Repl.) 107, 37.
- (6) Escott v. Newport Corpn., [1904] 2 K.B. 369; 73 L.J.K.B. 693; 90 L.T. 348; 68 J.P. 135; 52 W.R. 543; 20 T.L.R. 158; 2 L.Q.R. 779, D.C.; 11 Digest (Repl.) 146, 246.
- (7) Chelsea Waterworks v. Bowley (1851), 17 Q.B. 358; 20 L.J.Q.B. 520; 17 L.T.O.S. 284; 15 J.P. 450; 15 Jur. 1129; 117 E.R. 1316; 30 Digest (Repl.) 838, 5.

- (8) Metropolitan Rail. Co. v. Fowler, [1892] 1 Q.B. 165; 61 L.J.Q.B. 193; 65 L.T. 772; 40 W.R. 396; 8 T.L.R. 189, C.A.; affirmed, [1893] A.C. 416; 62 L.J.Q.B. 553; 69 L.T. 390; 57 J.P. 756; 42 W.R. 270; 9 T.L.R. 610; 1 R. 264, H.L.; 11 Digest (Repl.) 120, 126.
- (9) Reilly v. Booth (1890), 44 Ch.D. 12; 62 L.T. 378; 38 W.R. 484, C.A.; 19 Digest 16, 45.
- (10) Senhouse v. Christian (1787), 1 Term. Rep. 560; 99 E.R. 1251; 19 Digest 112, 726.
- (11) Great Northern Rail. Co. v. East and West India Docks and Birmingham Junction Rail. Co. (1852), 7 Ry. & Can. Cas. 356; 38 Digest (Repl.) 335, 275.

Appeal by the plaintiff railway company from the decision of ASTBURY, J., in an action for a declaration that the defendant company were not entitled to the rights they claimed in a notice to treat, which was, accordingly, invalid.

The facts of the case and the arguments of counsel, together with the authorities cited in support thereof, appear from the judgments.

P. Ogden Laurence, K.C., and Topham for the plaintiff company.

Frank Russell, K.C., J. G. Wood, and Trevor Lewis for the defendant company.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 20, 1916. The following judgments were read.

LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—This appeal raises a question of the validity of a notice to treat served by the Cardiff Rail. Co. upon the Taff Vale Rail. Co. In order to appreciate the question it is necessary to give a short summary of the position of the two companies.

The main line of the Taff Vale Co. runs through the parish of Pontypridd to Cardiff. There are four lines of metals. The traffic, especially the mineral traffic, is very heavy. The Cardiff Co. were anxious to get a competing line, and for that purpose they required to effect a junction with the Taff Vale main line. The Cardiff Railway Act, 1897, purported to secure this. But, for reasons which I need not mention, the company found the Act of 1897 insufficient, and in 1906 a new scheme was brought forward, and to some extent sanctioned by the Cardiff Railway Act, 1906, and it is under this Act that notice to treat was given. The Taff Vale Co. had purchased under compulsory powers a strip of land about 50 ft. wide, bounded on the west by the embankment on which the metals of their main line are placed. It was required for mileage sidings. Plans for that purpose were prepared, but the work has not been begun. The authorised Cardiff line ran up to the edge of the strip which is coloured green on the deposited plans but no further. The Cardiff Co. promoted a Bill for enabling them to purchase and take the green strip and also so much of the Taff Vale embankment as was not actually occupied by the metals. The deposited plans indicated an embankment by means of which the connection with the Taff Vale line would be effected. The Bill was stoutly opposed by the Taff Vale Co. The Act as passed did not give the Cardiff Co. the right to purchase and take the strip, but entitled them to have what may be called a Parliamentary easement or right of user. No such easement or right of user could be granted at common law. The material sections are ss. 2, 3, 4 (1), 13, 14 and 15. Section 2 is:

"The Lands Clauses Acts and the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and Part 1 (construction of a railway) and Part 2 (extension of time) of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1863 (so far as they are applicable for the purposes of and are not varied by or inconsistent with this Act), are hereby incorporated with this Act."

Section 3 is:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act the company may make and maintain in the line and according to the levels shown on the deposited plans and

A sections, the railway hereinafter described, with all proper stations, sidings, approaches, works, and conveniences connected therewith, and may enter on, take, and use such of the lands delineated on the said plans and described in the deposited books of reference as may be required for those purposes (that is to say):—A railway one furlong nine chains in length (being a deviation of a portion of Railway No. 4 authorised by the Act of 1897), wholly in the parish and urban district of Pontypridd in the county of Glamorgan, near the Treforest Tin Plate Works, and terminating by a junction with the Taff Vale Railway near the point at the junction of the Barry Railway with the two westernmost lines of the Taff Vale Railway at Treforest.”

B Following that perfectly general clause, there is an exception which is introduced in s. 4, and which is very important. Section 4 (1) is :

C “The company shall not under the powers of this Act purchase or take the lands belonging to the Taff Vale Rail. Co. shown in green but the company may purchase and take and the Taff Vale Rail. Co. shall sell and grant to the company an easement or right of using the same for the purposes of the junction by this Act authorised.”

D Section 13 provides :

E “The junction of the railway by this Act authorised with the Taff Vale Railway shall be a junction of the said railway with all the four lines of the Taff Vale Railway, and in case any difference shall arise as to the mode of effecting such junction the same shall be referred on the application of the Taff Vale Rail. Co., the Barry Rail. Co. or the company to the determination of an engineer to be appointed by the president for the time being of the Institution of Civil Engineers.”

Section 14 says :

F “The company shall so far as their powers extend simultaneously with the opening for public traffic of the railway by this Act authorised provide in connection with the junction of the railway by this Act authorised with the Taff Vale Railway sidings reasonably sufficient in length and extent for the accommodation of the traffic to and from such junction. . . .”

Section 15 says :

G “The traffic of the company at and approaching the junction between the railway by this Act authorised, and the Taff Vale Railway shall be worked in such manner as to involve no shunting on the main lines of the Taff Vale Railway. . . .”

On July 6, 1914, the Cardiff Co. gave a notice to treat, the validity of which is disputed in this action. The notice to treat in substance stated that the company required to purchase and take in and over the lands coloured green an

H “easement or right for the purpose of making, constructing, maintaining, repairing, and using a junction between the Cardiff Railway and the Taff Vale Railway.”

The description of such easement or right is contained in the particulars attached to the notice, and the easement was thus described :

I “The easement and right of laying and placing and thereafter using, inspecting, and maintaining the railways, together with all convenient and necessary works and other apparatus requisite for effecting the junction between the Cardiff Railway and the Taff Vale Railway in the manner shown and delineated in large scale on the plan marked ‘B’ delivered herewith and the right or easement of depositing upon the said lands the material necessary for constructing an embankment to carry the said railway together with such rights of entry and passage as may be necessary for constructing the said railways and embankment and for effecting the said junction.”

On Sept. 11, 1914, this was followed up by a notice and subsequent proceedings under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the Cardiff Co. claimed to be entitled to enter forthwith. If the notice to treat is valid, the subsequent proceedings are regular. A

In these circumstances the Cardiff Co. contend that the deposited plans indicate an embankment, and not a bridge, and that by reason of the provisions of s. 14 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and ss. 9 to 11 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1863, they are not only entitled, but bound, to make the connection by means of an embankment. I am unable to accept this view. It has been settled by the House of Lords in North British Rail. Co. v. Tod (1) that the deposited plans and sections are not all obligatory upon the company, but only so far as they are expressly or by necessary implication made obligatory by the special Act. In the Act of 1906 the "line" and the "levels" are the only matters expressly referred to. Moreover, the deposited plans were dealing with land, inter alia, with the green strip, which the Cardiff Co. proposed and intended to purchase, and they indicated what should be done by the Cardiff Co. on the land when purchased. The conditions were changed when purchase was prohibited, and I do not think the qualified incorporation of the general Acts in s. 2 applies to land of which the Cardiff Co. are not, and cannot become, owners. In my view, Parliament has enabled the Cardiff Co. to get across the green strip on the necessary level, but has not decided the particular mode by which the crossing is to be effected. If only one mode is reasonably practicable, the Taff Vale Co. cannot object to that mode. But if there are two practicable modes—namely, an embankment and a bridge—I am not prepared to say that the Cardiff Co. can, at their own will and pleasure, select the more burdensome mode. The Taff Vale Co. ought not to be required to grant an easement or right of user for the purposes of the junction more extensive than the purposes of the junction demand. It follows that, in my opinion, the notice to treat is bad. It proposes to purchase that which, at the present moment, the Cardiff Co. have no right to compel the Taff Vale Co. to sell. This is sufficient to dispose of the appeal. I do not propose to discuss whether the Cardiff Co. can, by a new notice to treat, get over the difficulty, either by an application to Sir James Inglis, the arbitrator, under s. 13, or otherwise. With great respect to ASTBURY, J., I think the appeal must be allowed, and an order made in the terms of the notice of appeal. B C D E F

WARRINGTON, L.J.—The defendants, the Cardiff Rail Co., by their Act of 1906 were authorised to construct a short line of railway and to effect a junction thereof with the main line of the plaintiffs, the Taff Vale Rail. Co. The line of the plaintiffs at the place where the junction is to be made runs nearly north and south and is carried on an embankment. The new line of the defendants comes in on the east side of the plaintiffs' line and is also on an embankment. Immediately at the foot of the slope of the plaintiffs' embankment is a strip of land about 50 ft. wide acquired by the plaintiffs under compulsory powers in 1898 and intended by them to be used for a "mileage siding." By s. 4 of the Act of 1906 the defendants are prohibited from purchasing or taking the strip or the slope of the plaintiffs' embankment, but are authorised to purchase and take, and the plaintiffs are required to sell and grant to them, G H

"an easement or right of using the same for the purposes of the junction by this Act authorised." I

Under this provision the defendants claim the right to purchase and to compel the plaintiffs to sell the right to continue the embankment carrying their new line upon the strip of land and the slope of the plaintiffs' embankment, and have given notice to treat for the purchase of that right. The sole question for decision is whether the defendants have in fact the right they claim. If they have not, the notice to treat would be in excess of their powers and the plaintiffs would be

A entitled to a declaration accordingly and to an injunction restraining them from continuing on the land under s. 84 and s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, as they are proposing to do. ASTURRY, J., has dismissed the plaintiffs' action. Hence this appeal. The court has only to determine the question stated above. It is no part of its duty to say what right the defendants have if they have not the right they claim.

B What, then, is the meaning of "an easement or right of using the land for the purposes of the junction"? It is clearly something short of total expropriation of the land. On general principles it may, I think, be assumed that where Parliament gives one man a right for a specified purpose to buy an undefined interest in another man's property it does not intend that such interest should be larger or more extensive than is reasonably necessary for accomplishing the particular purpose.

C In this case to construct an embankment on the land would for all practical purposes be to exclude the plaintiffs altogether from the land occupied by the embankment, for, though it is true that in law the new surface thus created and the body of the embankment itself would be the property of the plaintiffs, it would be of no practical use to them. It is said they might run a tunnel through it, but I apprehend they would run some risk of letting down the defendants' line, especially having regard to the very small space there would be between the line and the roof of any tunnel, if the tunnel was to be of the slightest use to the plaintiffs. It is clear that, though, no doubt, to carry their line across the strip would be less expensive and more convenient to the defendants than the alternative plan of a bridge, it is not reasonably necessary to do so for accomplishing the purpose of making a junction with the plaintiffs' line. I am of opinion, therefore,

D that upon the true construction of s. 4 of the Act of 1906, the defendants are not entitled to purchase and take the right they claim. It is said that even if the defendants construct a bridge, this would necessitate the exclusive occupation of some parts of the land by abutments, piers, and so forth. This may be true, but if such occupation be necessary for accomplishing the purpose, then it would, in my opinion, be justified by the Act.

E But the defendants say that under the Act of 1906, read as a whole with the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and in particular with s. 14 of that Act, they are not only entitled, but are bound to construct an embankment. The deposited plans indicate an embankment at the place in question, and the defendants insist that, this being so, they are not entitled to substitute a bridge for this without the certificate of the Board of Trade. I think the answer is that the operation of s. 14 is controlled by the provisions of the special Act, and if, as I think is the case, the latter gives the defendants no right to construct an embankment, the provisions of s. 14, so far as they are inconsistent with this, are of no effect. In the view I take of the true construction of s. 14 it is unnecessary for the purposes of this case to decide whether, under s. 13 of the Act of 1906, the question as to the mode in which the railway is to be carried over the strip of land

F is to be settled in the manner thereby provided. I will only say that I am not satisfied that the words "mode of effecting the junction" ought to bear the narrow construction contended for by the defendants. It seems to me to be unnecessary to consider the earlier history of the relations of the two companies or their conduct in reference to this matter of the junction. We have to decide the question of strict right, and this depends on the true construction and effect of the Act of 1906.

I I think the appeal ought to be allowed and a declaration made substantially as asked by the statement of claim.

SCRUTTON, L.J., stated the facts and continued: After the service of the notice to treat the Taff Vale Co. started this action for a declaration that the Cardiff Co. were not entitled to the right which they claimed in their notice to treat. The Taff Vale Co. alleged that an embankment or the right to build it could not be an easement, or, at any rate, was a greater use of their property than was necessary for the purpose of the junction which could be adequately or satisfactorily effected by railway lines on a bridge, which would not completely occupy or sever their land. The Cardiff Co. replied that their deposited plans showed an embankment which was authorised by their statute, and that the effect, if any, of severance of the Taff Vale land could be dealt with afterwards on an application for increased compensation or for accommodation works. ASTBURY, J., has held that the Cardiff Co. is given by statute a right to use the Taff Vale Co.'s land "for the purpose of bringing up the level thereof necessary to make the junction of the new line with the old in accordance with the deposited plans," that is, by an embankment; and that the notice to treat is, therefore, good, as the right proposed to be purchased is conferred on the Cardiff Co. by statute. The Taff Vale Co. appeals.

It is common ground that the plans deposited in this case show a solid embankment. What, then, is the effect of deposited plans? The result of the decision of the House of Lords in North British Rail. Co. v. Tod (1) is clear. The plans can have no avail as representation must be made good. They are proposals which are only of effect "so far as their representation is incorporated and made part of the Act of Parliament" and "a plan is . . . not to be referred to for the purpose of construing the enactment as to any part of it, except so far as is referred to and incorporated in the Act" (12 Cl. & Fin. at pp. 732, 735, 736)—both passages from LORD COTTENHAM's judgment. LORD CAMPBELL says (ibid., at p. 738):

"There certainly was a representation (by the deposited plans as to surface levels). . . . That Act of Parliament must be considered as overruling and doing away with everything that has taken place prior to the time when the Act of Parliament passed, and renders the representation or proposal of the company pending the Act of Parliament of no avail."

In that case, therefore, though the deposited plans showed a deep cutting and a low bridge with train out of sight and bridge inconspicuous, and the railway company proposed a shallow cutting and high bridge, with train in full view, and bridge "a deformity," as the Act of Parliament only incorporated the plans as to "line and datum level," the complainant had no remedy. LORD CAMPBELL again repeats the same principle in R. v. Caledonian Rail. Co. (2) (16 Q.B. at p. 30).

"The mere exhibition of these plans and sections while the Bill was depending in Parliament does not make them obligatory on the promoters after the Act has passed unless there be something in the special Act when passed, or in the general Act with which it is incorporated, which requires that the plans should be followed."

In A.-G. v. Great Eastern Rail. Co. (3), MELLISH, L.J., says (L.R. 7 Ch. App. at p. 482):

"It has been settled law since the case of North-British Rail. Co. v. Tod (1) that a company is not bound by the mere fact of a representation having been made on a plan deposited by them, unless the representation is incorporated in the Act."

If the company is not bound, neither can the landowner be bound. One must see, therefore, whether the embankment shown on the plans is imposed on the landowner and the company by the special Act. Now, the special Act empowers the company "to make and maintain in the line and according to the levels shown on the deposited plans and section the railway hereinafter described, with all proper . . . works."

A This only incorporates the deposited plans in respect of "line and levels," which do not, in my opinion, include the nature of the construction by which the line or levels are maintained or carried. I do not understand that the Cardiff Co. allege that these words do have that effect, but they say that the embankment or mode of construction on the deposited plans is made binding by the incorporated provisions of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. They especially refer to s. 13, which reads thus:

B "Where in any place it is intended to carry the railway on an arch or arches or other viaduct, as marked on the said plan or section, the same shall be made accordingly."

They also refer to the preamble and third provision of s. 14, which says:

C "It shall not be lawful for the company to deviate from or alter the gradients, curves, tunnels, and other engineering works described in the said place or section, except within the following limits and under the following conditions, that is to say: It shall be lawful for the company to make a tunnel not marked on the said plan or section, instead of a cutting, or a viaduct instead of a solid embankment, if authorised by such certificate as aforesaid from the Board of Trade."

D The Cardiff Co. say that the plan did show an embankment and not a viaduct or bridge or arches, and it is, therefore, unlawful to alter this without the sanction of the Board of Trade. By the special Act these clauses are only incorporated

E "so far as they are applicable for the purposes of and are not varied or inconsistent with this Act."

In A.-G. v. Great Eastern Rail. Co. (3) the plans proposed to cross S. Street on an arch. But the special Act contained a provision that the company might stop up all streets in a particular area, which included S. Street. It was held that the special Act controlled and overruled the provisions of ss. 13 and 14 of the Railway Clauses Act as to bridges, and the company need not make the bridge shown on the plans.

F What, then, does the special Act in this case provide? Whereas the plans and Bill proposed to take the Taff Vale lands for an embankment, s. 4 of the special Act provides that the Cardiff Co. shall not take or purchase these Taff Vale lands, but the Cardiff Co. may purchase and take and the Taff Vale Co. shall sell and G grant to the Cardiff Co.

"an easement or right of using the same for the purpose of the junction by this Act authorised."

H This, in my view, is an option to the Cardiff Co. to take a Parliamentary grant of a right to use the Taff Vale lands for the purposes of the junction. The means of user is not specified, but as it is a compulsory grant not of the whole interest in the lands, but of a limited user of them, I think it is clear that this should be limited to such a right of user as is necessary for the purpose of the grant, and no more. This is the same principle which SIR GEORGE JESSEL applied to "ways of necessity," where he said in London Corpn. v. Riggs (4) (13 Ch.D. at p. 807):

"If that is the true rule, that he is not to have more than necessity requires, as distinguished from what convenience may require, it appears to me that the right of way must be limited to that which is necessary at the time of the grant."

Here the deposited plans, incorporated as to levels in the special Act clearly show that the new line is to cross above the level of the existing land. This may be by a bridge, of a single span, on one or more piers, or by a solid embankment. It is sufficient to say that a solid embankment is obviously not the least onerous use of the servient land. The embankment occupies all the surface of a strip of land, and entirely excludes the previous owner and severs his land. The bridge occupies only so much of the land as is occupied by its piers, if any, and does not sever the land except by its piers. It is impossible to say that s. 4 by itself is necessarily, or even probably, the grant of an embankment. The situation seems to be that described by LORD BRAMWELL in Great Western Rail. Co. v. Swindon and Cheltenham Extension Rail. Co. (5) (9 App. Cas. at p. 812):

"What right had the respondents [the Cardiff Co.] to act [by a notice to treat] as though these easements were granted to them before they were granted, and before the extent and limits of the right, and how it was to be enjoyed were ascertained?"

I am, therefore, of opinion that, as the special Act does not incorporate the provision in the plans for an embankment crossing the Taff Vale lands, the provisions in the general Act incorporated--namely, that it shall not be lawful for the company to deviate from the engineering works described in the plan, that is an embankment except with the authority of a certificate of the Board of Trade, is not "applicable to the purposes of this Act" as the embankment in question, though described on the plans, is not made part of the special Act, which only confers a lesser benefit on the Cardiff Rail. Co., a lesser burden on the landowner.

This would be enough to decide the case; but it was also put from the point of view of the landowner in another way, which, as it is of general importance, I desire to consider. It was said that this Act gives an easement, and that an embankment which appropriates the whole of the land and excludes beneficial ownership by the landowner could not be an easement. An easement of appropriating the whole land is not known to the law. If the exercise of any easement did appropriate the whole land it was because the part appropriated was so small and so incidental to the use of a wider easement that the law overlooked it. Thus in Escott v. Newport Corpn. (6) the space occupied in land by tramway standards was held not to be land taken within the Lands Clauses Acts, and in Chelsea Water-works v. Bowley (7) the space occupied in land by water pipes was held not to be land or an interest in land but an easement. And it was said that a solid embankment was far beyond a negligible quantity of space. It is undoubted that Parliament and Parliamentary draftsmen have used the term "easement" in relation to various rights which no lawyer would ordinarily describe as "easements." The Cardiff Railway Act, 1897, talks about the "easement or right of constituting a tunnel." In the various stages of Metropolitan Rail. Co. v. Fowler (8) the position of such a tunnel was discussed, and it was held by the House of Lords to be far more than an easement.

"There is no easement known to law which gives exclusive and unrestricted use of a piece of land" (per LORDES, L.J., in Railly v. Booth (9), 44 Ch.D. at p. 26).

But it is clear that Parliament can confer certain rights not previously known to the law, and can call them by what names it pleases, however previously inappropriate. Then KAY, L.J., says in Metropolitan Rail. Co. v. Fowler (8) ([1892] 1 Q.B. at p. 183):

"Even an Act of Parliament cannot make a freehold estate in land an easement any more than it could make two plus two equal five."

I respectfully disagree with him, and think that "for the purposes of the Act" it can effect both these statutory results. And if Parliament in this case had said "an easement or right of constructing and maintaining an embankment across the land for the purposes of a railway," the court would and could have given effect to it. Parliament would have meant that the landowner should retain the ownership, subject to the existence of the embankment and the right of running a railway over it, and with such rights of ownership as were consistent with this "easement." The landowner could walk on the embankment without being a trespasser so long as he did not interfere with the trains; he could cut the grass on the

- A embankment; he could bore holes in the arches in the embankment so long as he did not endanger its stability. He would remain owner subject to the limited right. I do not, therefore, agree with this way of putting the Taff Vale Co.'s case, and prefer to rest my judgment on the fact that the Cardiff Co. have not been granted the power to acquire a right of using the Taff Vale lands by a solid embankment. What right have they? My first answer is they have the right to use the lands
- B to the extent that is necessary to cross them by an elevated railway for the purposes of the authorised junction and no further. What this extent is would, if necessary, be decided by the court on evidence, as was done in Senhouse v. Christian (10), where the jury found what use of the land was necessary to enable the grantor of a right of way to carry coals, to exercise his right commodiously. But, in this Act, differences as to the mode of effecting the junction are to be
- C determined under s. 13 by an engineer, and as these lands are to be used, s. 4, "for the purposes of the junction," I think differences of opinion as to the way of using them come within the words "differences as to the mode of effecting the junction," and a mode of deciding these differences has been provided in the Act. The argument of Mr. Bethel and the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor thereon in Great Northern Rail. Co. v. East and West India Docks (11) (7 Ry. & Can. Cas. at pp. 366, 368, 369) seem to assist this conclusion. I think I understand, and, to some extent sympathise, with the reasons connected with the conduct of the Taff Vale Co. which assisted ASTBURY, J., to arrive at his conclusions. But I think also that if the Cardiff Co. had used reasonable diligence, and reasonable intelligence, they could have got their junction years ago, and I do not see my way to allowing the ethical merits or demerits of the parties to defeat the view I have formed as
- E to their strict legal rights. In my view, the appeal must be allowed with costs here and below, and a declaration made that the notice to treat of July 6, 1914, is invalid, the defendants not being at present entitled to the right for which they claim to treat. I say, "present" because it is conceivable that the arbitrator might say that the embankment was the necessary means of exercising the right conferred. It is now a matter for the court. I think it was in excess of the necessary
- F means.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Williamson, Hill & Co., for Ingledeu & Sons, Cardiff; Torr & Co., for Corbett, Chambers & Harris, Cardiff.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re PALMER. PALMER v. PALMER

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Pickford, L.J., and Neville, J.),
May 23, 24, 25, June 8, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 391; 85 L.J.Ch. 577; 115 L.T. 57;
60 Sol. Jo. 565]

Estate Duty—Incidence—Settled legacy—Cesser of annuity charged on residuary estate—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict., c. 30), s. 2 (1) (b), s. 5 (2), s. 7 (7)—Finance Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 10), s. 14.

By his will, a testator who died in 1913 settled his Berkshire estates, subject to his wife's life interest therein, on his nephew and the nephew's issue in strict settlement, with remainders over; and he directed that £25,000 should be provided out of the proceeds of his residuary estate, and the income thereof paid during the life of his wife to the person who would for the time being be entitled as tenant for life or tenant in tail male or in tail to his Berkshire estates if his wife were then dead. He then declared that the legacies, annuities, and bequests thereinbefore given or made should "be handed over or paid free of all duties and deductions in respect of duties (other than income tax)" to the several legatees or annuitants entitled thereto respectively. He devised and bequeathed the residue of his estate on trust that during the period of accumulation (which was defined) his trustees should out of the income of the settled residue pay an annual sum of £3,000 to the person who, under the limitations of his settled estates, would for the time being and from time to time be entitled thereto as tenant for life or tenant in tail male or in tail if his wife were then dead. The testator's nephew died in May, 1915. Thereupon estate duty became payable (a) in respect of the £25,000 fund, an exemption (which would have applied on the nephew's death) under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 5 (2), having been removed by the Finance Act, 1914, s. 14, and (b) under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (1) (b) on a notional "slice" of the testator's estate ascertained under s. 7 (7) of the Act of 1894.

Questions arose as to the incidence of the estate duty payable on the nephew's death.

Held: (i) on the true construction of the will, the estate duty payable in respect of the £25,000 fund must be borne by that fund and not by the whole of the testator's estate; (ii) the notional sum in respect of which estate duty was payable by reason of the cesser of the annuity of £3,000 had no existence in fact and could not be charged with the duty, which must, therefore, be borne by the whole of the testator's residuary estate, on which the annuity was charged.

Re Parker-Jervis, Salt v. Locker (1), [1898] 2 Ch. 643, applied.

Decision of YOUNGER, J., [1916] 1 Ch. 395, reversed.

Notes. Applied: Re Stoddart, Bird v. Granger, [1916] 2 Ch. 444; Re Hatch, Hatch v. Hatch (1917), 86 L.J.Ch. 454; Re Tinkler, Loyd v. Allen, [1917] 1 Ch. 242. Considered: Re Eve, Hall v. Eve, [1917] 1 Ch. 562; Re Parker, White v. Stewart (1917), 86 L.J.Ch. 766; Re Wedgwood, Allen v. Public Trustee, [1921] All E.R.Rep. 545; Re Cassel, Public Trustee v. Mountbatten, [1927] All E.R.Rep. 739; Re Cassel's Will Trusts, Public Trustee v. A.-G. (No. 2), [1947] Ch. 1; 13. Explained: Re Duke of Norfolk, Public Trustee v. I.R.Comrs., [1950] 1 All E.R. 664. Applied: Re Weigall's Will Trusts, [1956] 3 W.L.R. 12. Referred to: Re Sutherland, Chaplin v. Leveson-Gower, [1922] 2 Ch. 782; Re Howell, Drury v. Fletcher, [1952] 1 All E.R. 36.

As to incidence of estate duty, see 15 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 180 et seq.; and for cases see 21 DIGEST 29 et seq.

A Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Parker-Jervis, Salt v. Locker, [1898] 2 Ch. 643; 67 L.J.Ch. 682; 79 L.T. 403; 47 W.R. 147; 21 Digest 41, 261.
 (2) Re Snape, Elam v. Phillips, [1915] 2 Ch. 179; 84 L.J.Ch. 803; 113 L.T. 439; 59 Sol. Jo. 562; 21 Digest 35, 219.

Also referred to in argument:

- B Re March, Mander v. Harris (1884), 27 Ch.D. 166; 54 L.J.Ch. 143; 51 L.T. 380; 32 W.R. 941, C.A.; 44 Digest 535, 3517.
Re Bridge, Brompton Hospital for Consumption v. Lewis, [1894] 1 Ch. 297; 63 L.J.Ch. 186; 70 L.T. 204; 42 W.R. 179; 10 T.L.R. 153; 38 Sol. Jo. 111; 7 R. 78, C.A.; 44 Digest 535, 3518.
C Re Rayer, Rayer v. Rayer, [1903] 1 Ch. 685; 72 L.J.Ch. 230; 87 L.T. 712; 51 W.R. 538; 21 Digest 41, 264.
Re Countess of Orford, Cartwright v. Duc del Balzo, [1896] 1 Ch. 257; 65 L.J.Ch. 253; 44 W.R. 383; sub nom. Re Earl of Orford, Neville v. Cartwright, Cartwright v. Duc del Balzo, 72 L.T. 681; 21 Digest 41, 257.
Berry v. Gaukroger, [1903] 2 Ch. 116; 72 L.J.Ch. 435; 88 L.T. 521; 51 W.R. 449; 19 T.L.R. 445; 47 Sol. Jo. 490, C.A.; 21 Digest 27, 155.
D Lord Advocate v. Miller's Trustees (1884), 11 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1046; 21 Sc.L.R. 709; 21 Digest 78, n.
Earl Cowley v. I.R.Comrs., [1899] A.C. 198; 68 L.J.Q.B. 435; 80 L.T. 361; 63 J.P. 436; 47 W.R. 525; 15 T.L.R. 270; 43 Sol. Jo. 348, H.L.; 21 Digest 7, 27.
Re Turnbull, Skipper v. Wade, [1905] 1 Ch. 726; 74 L.J.Ch. 438; 53 W.R. 440; 49 Sol. Jo. 417; 21 Digest 48, 317.

E Appeal and Cross-Appeal from an order of YOUNGER, J., dated Feb. 1, 1916.

George William Palmer by his will settled his Berkshire estates on his wife for life, with remainder to his nephew, Ronald William Palmer, for life, with remainder to his issue in strict settlement, with remainder to his nephew, Eustace E. Palmer, for life, with remainder to his issue as he should appoint; in default of appointment to his issue in strict settlement, with divers remainders over; and with an ultimate remainder to the testator's own right heirs. For the immediate wants of the future owner of these Berkshire estates the testator provided two funds (i) a settled legacy of £25,000 payable out of the proceeds of sale and conversion of his residuary estate, and (ii) an annuity of £3,000 payable out of the income of his residuary estate. Subject to payments which he directed to be made out of that residuary estate, the testator directed it to be accumulated for twenty-one years, or during the life of his widow, or until she should determine the period of accumulation, as she was empowered to do, and he directed, putting it generally, that the accumulated residue was to be treated after the period of accumulation had come to an end as capital moneys arising from the sale of his Berkshire estates.

By cl. 11 of his will the testator bequeathed the settled legacy of £25,000 in the following terms:

H "I bequeath to the persons hereinbefore appointed to be the trustees hereof the sum of £25,000 upon trust that my trustees shall at their discretion invest the same in their names in any mode of investment hereinafter authorised, with power for my trustees at their discretion from time to time to vary such investments or any of them within the authorised range, and shall stand possessed of the said sum of £25,000 and of the investments for the time being and from time to time representing the same upon trust during the life of my said wife to pay the income arising therefrom to the person who, under the limitations of the settled hereditaments hereinafter contained, would for the time being and from time to time be entitled as tenant for life or tenant in tail male or in tail to the possession or receipt of the rents and profits of the said hereditaments if my said wife were then dead, but without regard to the provisions for cesser or shifting of estates hereinafter contained. And from and after the death of my said wife I direct that the said sum of £25,000 and the investments representing the same shall fall into and form part of the settled residue (hereafter defined) and so as to form one fund therewith for all purposes, but not so as to increase or multiply charges or powers of charging."

By cl. 13 the testator declared :

"All the legacies, annuities, and bequests whatsoever hereinbefore given or made, and all legacies, annuities, and bequests which may be given or made by any codicil hereto, shall be handed over or paid free of all duties and deductions in respect of duties (other than income tax) to the several legatees or annuitants entitled thereto respectively under the preceding clauses of this my will."

By cl. 22 the testator devised and bequeathed the residue of his estate on certain trusts and then continued as follows :

"Upon trust that during the period of accumulation (meaning by such expression, wherever the same is used in this my will, the period commencing from my death and terminating at the expiration of twenty-one years from my death or at the previous death of my said wife, or at such earlier time as my said wife shall by deed appoint and direct in this behalf) my trustees shall out of the income of the settled residue pay an annual sum of £3,000 to the person who, under the limitations of the settled hereditaments hereinbefore contained, would for the time being and from time to time be entitled as tenant for life or tenant in tail male or in tail to the possession or receipt of the rents and profits of the settled hereditaments if my said wife were then dead."

The testator died on Oct. 8, 1913. Ronald William Palmer died in May, 1915, a bachelor. Eustace E. Palmer had two sons and a daughter living at the testator's death. On the death of Ronald William Palmer estate duty was claimed and it was paid by the executors of the will in respect of the £3,000 a year, calculated on a notional sum of £75,000, which was taken to be the amount of capital represented by the annual sum of £3,000, subject to certain deductions on which no question arose.

An originating summons was taken out by the trustees of the will of the testator for the determination of the questions how as between the beneficiaries under the will estate duty ought to be borne which became payable in respect of the passing of (a) the settled legacy of £25,000, and (b) the annual sum of £3,000, or the notional sum required to produce the same, on the death of Roland William Palmer, who, until his death, was the person entitled to the income both of the settled legacy and the annual sum. The summons was adjourned into court and came on to be heard before YOUNGER, J., on Jan. 26 and 27, 1916, when his Lordship reserved judgment. On Feb. 1, the learned judge delivered judgment, in which he decided that under cl. 13 of the will the testator intended the sum of £25,000 to be free from all duties in all events and to be enjoyed intact; and that therefore the estate duty payable under s. 14 of the Finance Act, 1914, on the death of Roland William Palmer in respect of the £25,000, though imposed by an Act passed after the death of the testator, must be borne by the residue of the estate and not by the legacy itself. His Lordship distinguished Re Snape, Elam v. Phillips (2), but he decided that on the construction of the will this ruling did not apply to the annual sum of £3,000, which therefore must bear its proportion of the estate duty.

From the foregoing decisions Eustace E. Palmer and Alfred Palmer, the heir-at-law of the testator, respectively appealed and cross-appealed.

Romer, K.C., and Tyldesley Jones for Eustace E. Palmer.

H. B. Vaisey for parties in the same interest.

Grant, K.C., and A. B. Nutter for Alfred Palmer.

J. E. Harman for the trustees of the will of the testator.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 8, 1916. The following judgments were read.

A LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—This originating summons raises two questions on the will of a testator, as affected by the Finance Act, 1914. He died in October, 1913, leaving a very large fortune. His widow took an annuity of £12,000 for her life. He devised his Berkshire real estates, after his widow's death, to his nephew Ronald William Poulton and his issue in strict settlement, with remainder to his nephew Eustace Exall Palmer and his issue in strict settlement with remainder over. And he gave to his trustees the sum of £25,000, and directed the income thereof during the life of his widow or the expiration of twenty-one years from his death to be paid to the person who would be entitled as tenant for life in tail to the possession or receipt of the rents and profits of the Berkshire estates if his widow were then dead, and after her death the fund was to fall into, and form part of, the settled residue.

C The nephew Ronald died a bachelor in May, 1915. On Dec. 3, 1913, the trustees appropriated certain securities of the value of £25,000, and thenceforward the income was paid direct to Ronald, and after his death to Eustace. Estate duty and settlement estate duty were paid out of the testator's estate, and according to the Finance Act, 1894, this payment of settlement estate duty exempted the £25,000 from estate duty until some person became able to dispose of the corpus.

D This exemption was taken away by s. 14 of the Finance Act, 1914. Estate duty was paid by the testator's executors on the death of Ronald. And the first question is how, as between the beneficiaries, this estate duty ought to be borne. Eustace says it ought to be borne by the residuary estate, and YOUNGER, J., has so decided.

In my view there is no general principle which can be relied on. A testator may use language which is sufficient to cover a duty not in force at his death, and in one, at least, of the clauses of his will he has done so. His intention must be found from the language of the will.

Clause 13, which follows the gift of the £25,000, is as follows [His LORDSHIP read the clause and continued:] I think the date of payment or handing over is the critical date. When once the executors have paid all duties exigible at that date the operation of cl. 13 is ended. The £25,000 was in effect "handed over" by the executors to themselves as trustees on Dec. 3, 1913. This was a perfectly proper act, and none the less so because the beneficiaries under the trust could not have enforced payment from the executors before the end of twelve months. In my opinion the estate duty on the £25,000 must be paid out of the investments representing the £25,000, and not out of the residue.

The second question relates to a gift in cl. 22 of the will, where the testator directs the trustees out of the income of the settled residuary personal estate to pay an annual sum of £3,000 to the person who, under the limitations of the Berkshire estates, would, for the time being and from time to time, be entitled thereto as tenant for life or tenant in tail if his wife were then dead.

On Ronald's death estate duty was claimed and paid by the executors in respect of the £3,000 a year on "a notional sum" of £75,000, subject to certain deductions upon which no question arises. This proceeds plainly on s. 2 (1) (b) and not on s. 1 of the Finance Act, 1894. It is not for us to consider whether the view of the commissioners was correct. We must assume its correctness and consider how the amount ought to be borne as between beneficiaries. The commissioners treated the £3,000 payable to Ronald as an annuity, which ceased on his death, to be followed by a subsequent annuity of the like amount payable to Eustace. They then applied s. 7 (7) (b), a subsection which is so obscure as to be almost unintelligible. But I accept the method by which the figure was arrived at. £75,000 is a purely fictitious sum, or a "notional sum." The annuity was chargeable on the whole residue, and not on any particular £75,000. No charge can be given under s. 9 on a non-existing fund. It is the whole residue which has derived benefit from the cessation of the annuity, and the burthen on the income of the residue must be apportioned on the footing of cl. 14, or in accordance with general principles which lead to the same result. In my opinion there is no justification for throwing the whole duty on an imaginary £75,000, with the consequence that the annuitant would have to pay the full interest on the amount paid. The annuitant must bear its rateable proportion only, in accordance with Kekewich, J.'s rule in Re Parker-Jervis, Salt v. Locker (1). The figures will, I presume, be arranged. I should say that cl. 13 of the will has no bearing on this question. The declarations made by Younger, J., on both points must be varied.

PICKFORD, L.J.—This is an appeal from YOUNGER, J., raising questions as to the duties payable by the testator's estate consequent on the death of his nephew.

The testator died in October, 1913, and by his will left his Berkshire real estates to his wife for life, and after her death to his nephew Ronald William Poulton and his issue in strict settlement with remainder to Eustace Exall Palmer with remainders over.

With the object of providing an income during the life of his widow for the person entitled in reversion to his Berkshire property, he left a sum of £25,000 by the following clause of the will. [His LORDSHIP read cl. 11 and continued:] The first question relates to this sum of £25,000. Ronald Poulton, who had taken the name of Palmer, died in May, 1915, a bachelor, and, according to the Finance Act, 1914, estate duty became payable in respect of this sum of £25,000, credit being given for settlement estate duty which had been paid under the Finance Act, 1894. This duty was paid by the testator's executors, and the first question is whether it is to be borne by the securities representing the sum of £25,000, or by the residuary estate. This depends on the construction of cl. 13 of the will, which has already been read. It was contended on the one hand that the operation of this clause was confined to duties in existence at the time of the testator's death, and for this Re Snape, Elton v. Phillips (2) was cited. It was contended, on the other hand, that it extended to all duties which came into existence while the fund was in the hands of the trustees until on the death of the testator's widow it became part of the residue.

No general rule for the interpretation of a clause freeing legacies from duty can, in my opinion, be laid down; the decision must rest in each case on the words of the particular clause. In this case I think the time at which the duties are to be ascertained is when the bequests are handed over or paid. They are to be handed over or paid free of all duties and deductions, &c., and that must, in my opinion, mean duties existing at that time. I do not see how that can be otherwise in the case of the other bequests left by the will, and the only reason for making any difference in this case can be that it never is handed over or paid until on the widow's death it falls into the residue. I do not think that this is so. If the bequest were to other trustees it clearly would be handed over or paid to them, and I do not think it can make any difference that the bequest is to the persons hereinbefore appointed to be the trustees hereof—i.e., the same persons who were also appointed executors.

On Dec. 3, 1913, the executors appropriated certain securities to themselves as trustees in satisfaction of this bequest, and from that time the income arising from those securities was paid to Ronald Poulton during his life, and after his death to E. E. Palmer. This was done perfectly bona fide, and was a proper thing to do, and it amounted, in my opinion, to a handing over or payment just as much as if the trustees had been different persons from the executors. It was argued that as this duty came into existence before the expiration of twelve months from the testator's death, and the appropriation was made within that time, it was made prematurely, and that the rights of the parties must be ascertained at the end of the twelve months given to the executor to pay legacies. I do not agree with this contention. The executor is not bound to wait twelve months before he hands over or pays a legacy, and if, as in this case, he does so bona fide, before the expiration of that time the date of actual handing over or payment is the date to be taken in applying cl. 13. I think therefore, that this duty must be borne by the securities representing the £25,000.

A The second question arises as to a sum of £3,000 mentioned in cl. 22. That clause devises and bequeaths the residue of the testator's estate upon certain trusts, and then goes on as follows. [His LORDSHIP read the relevant part of cl. 22 and continued:] On Ronald Palmer's death estate duty was paid, calculated on a notional sum or slice of £75,000, out of the testator's estate, taken to be the amount of capital represented by the annual sum of £3,000. This evidently
B regards the duty as payable under s. 2 (1) (b) of the Finance Act, 1894, and we must on this summons take it as rightly so paid on an annuity which ceased on Ronald Palmer's death, when a different annuity payable to E. E. Palmer came into existence. The notional sum only comes into existence to ascertain under s. 2 (1) (b) and s. 7 (7) (b) the amount to which the estate has benefited by the
C cesser of Ronald Palmer's annuity, and it has no existence in fact as a separate fund, as is shown by its being called a notional sum.

It cannot, therefore, be correct, in my opinion, as was argued by the respondent, that s. 9 (1) charges the duty on this notional sum of £75,000 with the result of making the annuitant bear the whole of the interest upon the amount paid. Section 9 is for the purpose of giving the Crown the benefit of a first charge on the property liable to pay the duty, and it cannot be applied to give a charge only on something which has no separate existence at all.

D The annuity was charged on the whole estate, and the residue, the whole of which derives benefit from its cesser, must pay the duty, and it will be apportioned as described by the Master of the Rolls in accordance with Re Parker-Jervis, Salt v. Locker (1).

E NEVILLE, J.—With regard to the duties payable in respect of the legacy of £25,000 I think the question is purely one of construction of the will. To construe the will I think the right course is to read the whole will, or such parts as are material to the matter in hand, and if the words used convey an intelligible meaning to give effect to them unless prohibited by some rule of law. Dealing with the will in this manner, the meaning is, I think, fairly plain. Clause 13 declares that all legacies thereinbefore given shall be handed over or paid free of all duties and deductions in respect of duties to the legatees entitled thereto. It seems to
F me that so soon as the trustees have handed over or paid a legacy free of all the duties then charged on it, or payable in respect of it, they have exhausted their duties under cl. 13. I cannot see anything in this clause giving the legatee any further claim against the trustees in case further duty should be subsequently
G imposed. But it is said that in the present case there has been no handing over nor payment, and this is, in one sense, true, for inasmuch as the legatees of the trusts legacy were the same persons as the trustees of the will no actual handing over or payment was possible.

On Dec. 3, 1913, however, the trustees set apart and appropriated investments in satisfaction of the legacy, and from this time these investments ceased to be part of the general estate, and the risk of them fell on the persons beneficially entitled to the legacy. I think that this was equivalent to payment, and that no subsequent H imposition of duty can give the legatees any further right under the will. Indeed if appropriation is not equivalent to handing over or payment then, as it appears to me, cl. 13 does not apply to this legacy at all, and it is not exonerated from any duty.

I With regard to the annual sum of £3,000, it appears to me that the duty was assessed and paid under s. 2 (1) (b) and that all the court can do is to determine on that footing the ultimate incidence of the duty. For this purpose we must consider both s. 2 (1) (b) and s. 7 (7) (b) with the result, in my opinion, that the recipient of the annual sum will have to pay interest on such a sum as represents the proportion borne by the notional sum of £75,000 to the residuary estate of the testator. In my opinion s. 9 (1) does not apply to the present case.

Order varied as to both points.

Solicitors: Waterhouse & Co.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

GOLDREI, FOUCARD & SON v. SINCLAIR AND RUSSIAN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE IN LONDON

[COURT OF APPEAL (Pickford and Bankes, L.J.J., and Sargant, J.), October 31,
November 14, 1917]

[Reported [1918] 1 K.B. 180; 87 L.J.K.B. 261; 118 L.T. 147;
34 T.L.R. 74]

Estoppel—Estoppel by record Judgment against one joint tortfeasor—Bar to action against other joint tortfeasor—Need for cause of action against both tortfeasors to be the same—Claim for damages for fraudulent representation against both—Claim for rescission of agreement and return of money paid against one.

By their statement of claim the plaintiffs claimed damages against the defendant S. and the defendant company for fraudulent misrepresentation whereby they were induced to subscribe £105 to become founders of the defendant company, and they also claimed against the company only rescission of an agreement by the plaintiffs to become founders of the company and the repayment of £105 paid by them to that end with interest. The company did not deliver a defence, and upon motion for judgment the plaintiffs recovered final judgment against them for rescission and repayment of the £105. The company did not repay the £105, the action proceeded against the defendant S., and the jury awarded the plaintiffs £105 damages against him.

Held by PICKFORD, L.J., and SARGANT, J., BANKES, L.J., dissenting: on the claim for damages for misrepresentation the plaintiffs, to be successful, must prove fraud, but on the claim for rescission of the agreement and return of the money paid no such proof was necessary; therefore, the causes of action were different and the judgment against the company did not bar the plaintiffs from proceeding on their claim against S.

Notes. Referred to: Parr v. Snell, [1922] All E.R.Rep. 270; Lynn v. Barber, [1930] 2 K.B. 72.

As to estoppel by record, see 15 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 191-201; and for cases see 21 DIGEST 198 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) King v. Hoare (1844), 13 M. & W. 494; 2 Dow. & L. 382; 1 New Pract. Cas. 72; 14 L.J.Ex. 29; 4 L.T.O.S. 174; 8 Jur. 1127; 153 E.R. 206; 21 Digest 218, 538.
- (2) Kendall v. Hamilton (1879), 4 App. Cas. 504; 48 L.J.Q.B. 705; 41 L.T. 418; 28 W.R. 97, H.L.; 21 Digest 218, 540.
- (3) Brinsmead v. Harrison (1872), L.R. 7 C.P. 547; 41 L.J.C.P. 190; 27 L.T. 99; 20 W.R. 784, Ex. Ch.; 21 Digest 221, 556.
- (4) Redgrave v. Hurd (1881), 20 Ch.D. 1; 51 L.J.Ch. 113; 45 L.T. 485; 30 W.R. 251, C.A.; 35 Digest 47, 417.
- (5) Re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association, Karberg's Case, [1892] 3 Ch. 1; 61 L.J.Ch. 741; 66 L.T. 700; 8 T.L.R. 608, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 116, 598.
- (6) Read v. Brown (1888), 22 Q.B.D. 128; 58 L.J.Q.B. 120; 60 L.T. 250; 37 W.R. 191; 5 T.L.R. 97, C.A.; 1 Digest 13, 107.
- (7) Cooke v. Gill (1873), L.R. 8 C.P. 107; 42 L.J.C.P. 98; 28 L.T. 32; 21 W.R. 334; 1 Digest 13, 106.
- (8) Swinfen v. Lord Chelmsford (1860), 5 H. & N. 890; 29 L.J.Ex. 382; 2 L.T. 406; 6 Jur.N.S. 1035; 8 W.R. 545; 157 E.R. 1437; 35 Digest 68, 654.
- (9) Williamson v. Allison (1802), 2 East, 446; 102 E.R. 439; 39 Digest 416, 498.
- (10) Nelson v. Couch (1863), 15 C.B.N.S. 99; 2 New Rep. 395; 33 L.J.C.P. 46; 8 L.T. 577; 10 Jur.N.S. 366; 11 W.R. 964; 1 Mar.L.C. 348; 143 E.R. 721; 21 Digest 201, 443.

- A (11) Phillips v. Berryman (1783), 3 Doug.K.B. 286; 99 E.R. 658; 18 Digest (Repl.) 381, 1318.
- (12) Brunsdon v. Humphrey (1884), 14 Q.B.D. 141; 53 L.J.Q.B. 476; 51 L.T. 529; 49 J.P. 4; 82 W.R. 944, C.A.; 21 Digest 207, 480.
- (13) Jackson v. Spittall (1870), L.R. 5 C.P. 542; 39 L.J.C.P. 321; 22 L.T. 755; 18 W.R. 1162; 1 Digest 13, 104.
- B (14) Drake v. Mitchell (1803), 3 East, 251; 102 E.R. 594; 21 Digest 220, 552.
- (15) Midland Rail. Co. v. Martin & Co., [1893] 2 Q.B. 172; 62 L.J.Q.B. 517; 69 L.T. 353; 58 J.P. 39; 17 Cox, C.C. 687; 5 R. 489; sub nom. Martin & Co. v. Midland Rail. Co., 9 T.L.R. 514, D.C.; 21 Digest 228, 603.

Also referred to in argument:

- C Brown v. Wootton (1605), Cro. Jac. 73; Moore, K.B. 762; 79 E.R. 62; sub nom. Broome v. Wootton, Yelv. 67; 21 Digest 221, 555.
- Young v. Thomas*, [1892] 2 Ch. 134; 61 L.J.Ch. 496; 66 L.T. 575; 40 W.R. 468; 36 Sol. Jo. 412, C.A.; Digest (Practice) 850, 3964.
- Thurman v. Wild* (1840), 11 Ad. & El. 453; 3 Per. & Dav. 289; 113 E.R. 487; 43 Digest 414, 367.
- D Salford Corpn. v. Lever, [1891] 1 Q.B. 168; 60 L.J.Q.B. 39; 63 L.T. 658; 55 J.P. 244; 39 W.R. 85; 7 T.L.R. 18, C.A.; 1 Digest 483, 1626.
- Wegg Prosser v. Evans*, [1894] 2 Q.B. 101; 63 L.J.Q.B. 728; 70 L.T. 664; 42 W.R. 639; 10 T.L.R. 414; affirmed [1895] 1 Q.B. 108; 64 L.J.Q.B. 1; 72 L.T. 8; 43 W.R. 66; 11 T.L.R. 12; 39 Sol. Jo. 26; 9 R. 830, C.A.; 21 Digest 221, 554.

E Appeal by the defendant Sinclair from a decision of A. T. LAWRENCE, J., on further consideration of an action for damages for fraudulent misrepresentation.

Patrick Hastings for the defendant, Sinclair.

Holman Gregory, K.C., and C. Zeffertt for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 14, 1917. The following judgments were read.

F PICKFORD, L.J.—This is an appeal by the defendant Sinclair against a judgment of A. T. LAWRENCE, J., given in the following circumstances. The plaintiffs sued the defendant Sinclair and a company called the Russian Chamber of Commerce in London to recover damages for fraudulent misrepresentation made to them by the defendant Sinclair with the knowledge and authority of the defendant company, alleging that they were induced by such representations to subscribe £105 to become founders of the defendant company. A cheque for the amount was given to the defendant Sinclair and handed by him to his co-defendants. The plaintiffs also claimed as against the defendant company rescission of the agreement to take shares and a return of the money paid with interest. The defendant company made default in delivering a defence, and on motion made by the plaintiffs judgment was given against the company for rescission of the agreement and the return of the money paid with interest. This judgment is, so far as the return of the money is concerned, still unsatisfied. The action proceeded against the defendant Sinclair, and the jury found a verdict against him on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentation, and assessed the damages at £105. The defendant Sinclair, by an amendment to his defence, pleaded the fact of the judgment against the defendant company, and alleged that thereby the plaintiffs were estopped from maintaining or further proceeding with the action against him. Such a defence is entirely technical and has no substance or merits but the defendant Sinclair has a right to succeed on it if it be established.

The main ground of the contention was that the case fell within the principle of the decisions in King v. Hoare (1), Kendall v. Hamilton (2), and Brinsmead v. Harrison (3). That principle, as I understand it, is that if judgment be given against one of two joint tortfeasors the whole cause of action merges in that judgment, and, therefore, the action cannot proceed against the other tortfeasor.

Obviously this must depend upon whether the judgment is in respect of the same cause of action, for a judgment against one tortfeasor for a cause of action other than the joint tort cannot affect the cause of action on the joint tort. A. T. LAWRENCE, J., held that in this case there were two causes of action, and that the judgment was in respect of a cause of action other than that arising from the joint tort.

I think his decision was correct. A person who has been induced by misrepresentations to take shares in a company has two remedies open to him. He may bring an action against the company only for rescission of the contract and return of the money paid, or he may bring an action for fraudulent misrepresentations against both the company and its agent where the two have joined to commit the fraud. He may also take both these courses if he wish. In the former case—that is, an action for rescission and return of the money paid—the plaintiff need not prove fraud, but will succeed if he establish an innocent misrepresentation: Redgrave v. Hurd (1) and Re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association, Karberg's Case (5). He can in such an action obtain no relief against the agent of the company. If he do prove fraud, in an action solely for rescission and return of the money he is in no better position than if he had proved innocent misrepresentation. In an action for damages arising from misrepresentations made jointly by the company and its agent he cannot succeed unless he prove that the misrepresentations were made fraudulently, and the measure of damages in such an action is not necessarily the amount of the money paid to the company.

The question seems to me to be whether these two actions are founded on the same or different causes of action. A cause of action has been defined to be every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove, if traversed, in order to support his right to the judgment of the court: Read v. Brown (6), per LORD ESHER, M.R. (22 Q.B.D. at p. 131), citing Cooke v. Gill (7). In these two actions there is a fact—that is, fraud—which if traversed must be proved to support the action for damages for misrepresentation, but if disproved in an action for rescission still leaves the plaintiff entitled to a judgment if he proves misrepresentation in fact. In addition the remedy is against the company only in the latter case, and against both the company and its agent in the former, and the measure of relief is not necessarily the same. I think, therefore, that the two forms of action are founded upon different causes of action.

It remains to apply this principle to the present case. In paras. 1-15 of the statement of claim the plaintiffs allege fraudulent misrepresentations by the defendant Sinclair on behalf and with the knowledge and authority of the defendant company, and if the claim stopped there it would have been an action for damages only. But in para. 16 the plaintiffs claim rescission and return of the money paid, and allege as a ground of their claim the fraudulent representations set out in the previous paragraphs, expressly stating them to have been made fraudulently. They then in the prayer of the statement of claim ask against both defendants damages for fraud and against the company only rescission and repayment. I think para. 16 alleges a different cause of action from that alleged in the previous paragraphs. It was hardly contested that, if para. 16 had claimed rescission by reason of an innocent misrepresentation, it would have alleged a different cause of action; but it was contended that because fraud was alleged and admitted by the default of defence the whole claim was in respect of fraud and was only one cause of action. Reliance was also placed, as I understood the argument, upon the fact that the sum recovered against the defendant Sinclair was of the same amount as that which the company were ordered to repay. It seems to me that the fact that the sums recovered on the two causes of action happen in this case to be of the same amount cannot show that the causes of action are the same. If, as I have stated before, fraud is not a necessary part of the cause of action in a claim for rescission, the fact that it is alleged and admitted is immaterial. If disproved, the plaintiffs could still recover, and the allegation and admission of an immaterial fact cannot

A change the nature of the cause of action. This is in accordance with Swinfen v. Lord Chelmsford (8). That was a case of an unnecessary allegation of fraud. In Williamson v. Allison (9) LAWRENCE, J., said (2 East at p. 452):

B "If the whole of an averment may be struck out without destroying the plaintiff's right of action, it is not necessary to prove it; but otherwise, if the whole cannot be struck out without getting rid of a part essential to the cause of action."

C The judgment that was signed in this case was signed only upon the claim for rescission, and no judgment was given on the claim for fraudulent misrepresentation. If given, it could only have been an interlocutory judgment. For these reasons I think the judgment given was not in respect of the cause of action on which judgment had been given against the defendant Sinclair, and his main point fails.

I have not dealt with the question whether Ord. 27 applies to this case. I am inclined to think it does not, though I do not understand why when the doctrine of King v. Hoare (1) and Brinsmead v. Harrison (3) was abolished by the rules in some cases it was not abolished in all.

D The defendant Sinclair also contended that the fact that no judgment was signed and no further proceedings taken on the claim for fraud against the company operated as a release of that cause of action against him. This contention, as I understand it, is not on the ground of merger, but on the ground that the plaintiffs released the company from any claim of fraud by taking judgment on the claim for rescission only, and so released also their joint tortfeasor the defendant Sinclair. E I think the plaintiffs had no intention of releasing anyone, and this is shown by the fact that no judgment was given in favour of the company on the claim for fraud. It may be, though I do not say it is the fact, that the circumstances may give the company some right to object to further proceedings against them in the action, but I do not see anything in the circumstances to operate as a release of the defendant Sinclair. I think the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

F BANKES, L.J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of A. T. LAWRENCE, J. It raises the question whether the plaintiffs are entitled to proceed with their action against the defendant Sinclair after having signed judgment in default of defence against the other defendants in the action, the Russian Chamber of Commerce in London.

G It is, I think, clear that the plaintiffs cannot bring their case within any of the rules of Ord. 27 so as to be able to claim the relief afforded by those rules to a plaintiff who signs judgment against one of several joint contractors or joint tortfeasors, as the case may be. The rule of law applicable to the case is, therefore, laid down by PARKE, B., in King v. Hoare (1) (13 M. & W. at p. 504):

H "If there be a breach of contract, or wrong done, or any other cause of action by one against another, and judgment be recovered in a court of record, the judgment is a bar to the original cause of action, because it is thereby reduced to a certainty, and the object of the suit attained, so far as it can be at that stage; and it would be useless and vexatious to subject the defendant to another suit for the purpose of obtaining the same result. Hence the legal maxim, transit in rem judicatum—the cause of action is changed into matter of record, which is of a higher nature, and the inferior remedy is merged in the higher. This appears to be equally true where there is but one cause of action, whether it be against a single person or many. The judgment of a court of record changes the nature of that cause of action, and prevents its being the subject of another suit and the cause of action, being single, cannot afterwards be divided into two."

I WILLES, J., in Nelson v. Couch (10) points out what must be shown under the plea of exceptio rei judicatae; and the first instance he gives is a merger of the entire cause of action in the judgment which it alleges. The rule apparently applies also to cases where, although the cause of action may not in the sense sometimes given to the expression be the same, a second action is brought in respect of the same subject-matter: see Phillips v. Berryman (11) and the observations of BRETT, M.R., and BOWEN, L.J., in Brunsdon v. Humphrey (12) (14 Q.B.D. at pp. 146, 152), and the definition of "cause of action" in its popular sense given by BRETT, J., in Jackson v. Spittall (13) (L.R. 5 C.P. at p. 552).

It is necessary, therefore, in the present case to look closely into the statement of claim in order to ascertain what the case of the plaintiffs is. The statement of claim sets out very fully the facts. It is, I think, quite clear that the plaintiffs' claim is founded upon fraud and upon fraud only. The claim being so framed, the plaintiffs had the right, if the fraud was proved, to rescission of the agreement. This, however, was a remedy against the Chamber of Commerce only. The claim to damages was a claim against both defendants as joint tortfeasors. The statement of claim, in my opinion, discloses no grounds upon which the plaintiffs could recover any damages beyond the 100 guineas paid to the Chamber of Commerce. So far, therefore, as the claim of the plaintiffs is a claim for damages the statement of claim alleges but one cause of action. If it is permissible upon the present statement of claim to say that the plaintiffs have claimed a return of the 100 guineas with interest, as though they had alleged an inducement to enter into the contract by innocent misrepresentation, the result must, I think, be the same. The action is in respect of the same subject-matter, and having signed judgment for the 100 guineas the plaintiffs cannot now ask a jury to award them the same sum as damages in respect of the same misrepresentations. Even if it were open to the plaintiffs to say that as against the defendant Sinclair they are alleging that the misrepresentations relied on were false to his knowledge, whereas in their claim against the chamber of commerce they were content to treat them as innocent, the case is not thereby taken out of the rule laid down by BULLER, J., in Phillips v. Berryman (11), that a recovery in one personal action is a bar to all other personal actions in respect of the same subject-matter.

In my opinion, the present is a case in which, so far as the claim for damages is concerned (which is the only matter with which the defendant Sinclair is concerned), the plaintiffs had alternative remedies for the same subject-matter, but not collateral concurrent remedies, as in Drake v. Mitchell (14), or alternative remedies in respect of different subject-matters, as in Midland Rail. Co. v. Martin & Co. (15). Even if the statement of claim discloses different causes of action, namely, a claim for rescission of the agreement and a return of the money paid on the ground of innocent misrepresentation as well as a claim for rescission of the agreement and for damages on the ground of fraud, which I doubt having regard to the fact that judgment was signed by default, I consider that no sufficient distinction can be drawn between the claim to recover the 100 guineas with interest for which judgment has been signed and the claim for the £105 damages which the jury have awarded, to take the case out of the rule upon which the defendant, Sinclair, relies. Both claims appear to me to arise out of the same act on the part of that defendant, and, according to the definition of BRETT, J., in Jackson v. Spittall (13), the plaintiffs, therefore, have only one cause of action. I think that the appeal should be allowed, but as the other members of the court think otherwise it will be dismissed.

SARGANT, J.—In this case I agree with the other members of the court that the rule in Brinsmead v. Harrison (3) has not been altered as regards joint tortfeasors by any of the rules of Ord. 27. For some reason or other, very likely in view of the difficulty of obtaining final judgment in the case of unliquidated damages until the actual assessment of damages as therein mentioned, rr. 2 and 3 of that Order are carefully worded so as to apply only to the analogous cases of persons jointly liable in debt or liquidated damages. It is unnecessary for me to add anything further on this point.

A It follows, therefore, that if the plaintiffs had recovered judgment against the Russian Chamber of Commerce for an ascertained amount of damages in respect of the fraudulent misrepresentations alleged in the statement of claim, this judgment would operate to prevent their subsequently recovering damages against the defendant Sinclair. The fraudulent misrepresentations alleged against each defendant are the same, and the defendant Sinclair is alleged to have made each misrepresentation as the agent and on behalf and with the knowledge of the defendant company. In these respects the analogy with Brinsmead v. Harrison (3) is complete. But it has been pointed out by A. T. LAWRENCE, J., and is a consideration of some importance, that the plaintiffs could not under the procedure they have adopted—that is, on motion for judgment—have obtained judgment against the defendant company for any definite sum in respect of their fraudulent misrepresentations. They could only have got judgment for an amount of damages to be subsequently assessed by a jury. And in this case under Ord. 27, r. 5, these damages would normally have been assessed "at the same time with the trial of the action" against the defendant Sinclair. So that even had the plaintiffs proved their claim for damages for fraudulent misrepresentation against the defendant company, and not their claim for rescission, the difficulties pointed out in Brinsmead v. Harrison (3) would not have arisen. In fact, however, the plaintiffs have taken judgment against the defendant company on the alternative claim made against them, and against them only, in the pleadings—namely, a claim for rescission and as incidental thereto for the return of the amount paid by the plaintiffs. This alternative claim constitutes, in my judgment, a separate and distinct cause of action resting on a different foundation and involving very different remedies. To obtain rescission not only is it not necessary to prove fraud—a distinction which perhaps is not of so much importance here, since it is fraudulent misrepresentation that is alleged throughout by the statement of claim—but it is not necessary to prove damage. And rescission involves, not the ascertainment and payment of any damages, but the repayment of such a sum and the doing of such other acts as shall effect a restitutio in integrum. The fact that in the present case the measure of damages for fraudulent misrepresentation may approximate to, or even be identical with, the amount payable under a judgment for rescission is not, in my opinion, of any real importance, especially in the case of a judgment which has not been satisfied. On the whole I can see no reason for extending the highly technical rule in Brinsmead v. Harrison (3) to a case so widely different as the present. It is essential to the application of the doctrine in that case and the previous case of King v. Hoare (1) that the judgment which operates as a bar should be in respect of the same cause of action. As regards any suggested release or abandonment by the plaintiffs, I agree with LAWRENCE, J., in failing to find any intention either to release or abandon any right or remedy against the defendant Sinclair. In my opinion, therefore, the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Woodthorpe, Browne & Co.; Poole & Robinson.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re TRAVERS. HURMSON v. CARR

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Eve, J.), October 20, 1916]

[Reported 86 L.J.Ch. 123; 115 L.T. 604; 33 T.L.R. 17;
61 Sol. Jo. 56]

Will—Gift to servants—Legacies to four named servants followed by gift "to each of my servants a further sum" equalling one year's wages—Further gifted limited to servants named in will—Claim by resident nurse employed by testatrix at her death to legacy of one year's wages.

By her will, made in 1907, the testatrix gave pecuniary legacies to four named servants and the will then continued: "and to each of my servants a further sum equal to their respective wages for one year, and such mourning as my executors may consider reasonable." In January, 1916, the plaintiff, a nurse, was engaged on a permanent basis to attend the testatrix who was then bedridden at her residence. The plaintiff was paid a weekly wage, and was in the employment of the testatrix at the date of her death, some two weeks later.

Held: on the true construction of the will the legacies of one year's wages were further legacies limited to the servants named in the will to whom the original legacies were given, and, accordingly, the plaintiff, although she was a servant of the testatrix at the time of her death, was not entitled to a legacy of one year's wages.

Notes. As to gifts to servants, see 34 HALSEBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 323-325, paras. 373-374; and for cases see 44 Digest 899-903.

Cases referred to in argument:

Re Lawson, Wardley v. Bringlee, [1914] 1 Ch. 682; 83 L.J.Ch. 519; 110 L.T. 573; 30 T.L.R. 335; 58 Sol. Jo. 320; 44 Digest 900, 7593.

Re Earl of Sheffield, Ryde v. Bristow (1911), 80 L.J.Ch. 313; 104 L.T. 412; affirmed, [1911] 2 Ch. 267; 80 L.J.Ch. 521; 105 L.T. 236, C.A.; 44 Digest 903, 7634.

Re Ravensworth, Ravensworth v. Tindale, [1905] 2 Ch. 1; 74 L.J.Ch. 353; 92 L.T. 490; 21 T.L.R. 357, C.A.; 44 Digest 903, 7633.

Parker v. Marchant (1842), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 290; 11 L.J.Ch. 223; 6 Jur. 292; 62 E.R. 893; affirmed (1843), 1 Ph. 356, L.C.; 44 Digest 899, 7585.

Adjourned Summons to determine the construction of a will.

By her will, dated July 24, 1907, the testatrix, Marion T. Travers, bequeathed "to my following servants, Caroline Smith, one hundred pounds; Alice Malyon, ten pounds; Edith Poeknell, five pounds; and G. Wicks (if in my service at the time of my death) five pounds; and to each of my servants a further sum equal to their respective wages for one year, and such mourning as my executors may consider reasonable and suitable."

By a codicil to the will, dated May 18, 1911, the testatrix revoked the legacy of ten pounds given by the will to Alice Malyon "who was then but is not now in my service as cook" giving her in lieu a legacy of four guineas, and also revoked the legacy of five pounds given by the will to her gardener, George Wicks, giving him in lieu thereof, "if he shall be in my service at the time of my death," a legacy of twelve pounds. In all other respects the codicil confirmed the will. By a further codicil dated July 15, 1912, the testatrix revoked "the legacy of five pounds and all other benefits given by my said will to Edith Poeknell." In January, 1916, it was considered necessary for the testatrix to have a nurse in place of one who was leaving and on Jan. 17, her medical adviser engaged the plaintiff, Ellen Hurmson, to attend the testatrix who was bedridden at her residence as a hospital and mental nurse, from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. The plaintiff was

A engaged at a weekly wage of two guineas; nothing was said regarding the duration of her employment but she understood that she was engaged as a permanent nurse. In fact she remained in the service of the testatrix from Jan. 22, 1916, until the day after the testatrix's death on Feb. 3, 1916. The plaintiff took out this originating summons, to which the executors of the testatrix's will were made defendants, claiming that as a servant in the employ of the testatrix at the date of her death
B she was entitled on the true construction of the will to a legacy of £115 14s. representing a sum equal to her wages for one year. There was evidence that during 1907, the year in which the will was made, the only servants employed by the testatrix were the four servants mentioned in the will.

Horace Freeman for the plaintiff.

C John M. Stone for the defendants.

EVE, J.—I think that this short clause in the testatrix's will is one which might give rise to substantial questions of construction, but the only one I am called upon to decide is whether the plaintiff is or is not a legatee thereunder.

The testatrix, it is to be observed, does not in terms refer to servants in her employ at the date of her death, nor does she impose upon any legatee any length of service as a condition of participating in her bounty. But one may, of course,
D on looking at the will as a whole, come to the conclusion that the testatrix was in fact dealing with the servants in her employ at the date of her death, and the question I have to ask myself is whether, having regard to the context which immediately precedes the words I have to construe, and which rather points to the
E conclusion that the testatrix intended to refer only to those servants who were in her employ at the date of her will, the words of gift and the subsequent provisions of the will show that after all the testatrix did intend these benefits for servants in her employ at the date of her death? The testatrix bequeaths pecuniary legacies to three female servants by name and to her gardener, but in his case if in her service at the time of her death, and then proceeds, "and to each of my servants
F a further sum equal to their respective wages for one year." Counsel for the plaintiff argues that the measure by which the amount of those further legacies is to be ascertained points rather to the date of the death than of the will, and he relies also on the provision for reasonable and suitable mourning which immediately follows, and which, as he says, would seem to be more appropriate for servants
G employed at the date of the death than for those who had already ceased to be employed.

I do not think the fact that the further legacy is to be ascertained with reference to the wages really assists counsel for the plaintiff, but he is entitled to insist on the point as to the reasonable and suitable mourning, though I do not think it is of sufficient weight to outweigh the difficulty he is faced with in the terms in
H which the legacies to the servants are here given. The bequest is in substance the bequest of a further or additional sum to each servant, and this seems to me to involve the finding of an original legacy to the individual who is designated as the recipient of the additional legacy. You cannot say that you give an additional legacy to a legatee to whom at that moment of time you have given nothing, and, although it is true that in her codicils the testatrix revoked the actual pecuniary
I legacies bequeathed by her will to the servants named in her will, she only did so for the purposes of altering the amounts bequeathed, except in one case, and in that case she revoked the pecuniary legacy and "all other benefits given by my said will." I think that the result is that the legacies of one year's wages must be treated as further legacies limited to the servants named in the will, and that the plaintiff, although a servant of the testatrix at the time of her death, cannot substantiate her claim. Although the plaintiff fails, the question being one of construction raised in consequence of doubt caused by the testatrix, I think justice will be done if I make no order as to costs, except that those of the executors, to be taxed as between solicitor and client, are to be paid out of the estate of the testatrix.

Summons dismissed.

Solicitors: Morris & Bristow, for Bretherton & Merton-Neale, Tunbridge Wells;
G. F. Hudson, Matthews & Co.

[Reported by W. P. PAIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CROSSFIELD & CO. v. KYLE SHIPPING CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Phillimore and Bankes, L.J.J.), June 21, July 10, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 885; 85 L.J.K.B. 1310; 115 L.T. 285;
13 Asp.M.L.C. 410; 22 Com. Cas. 67]

Shipping—Bill of lading—Liability of shipowners. Bill to be conclusive evidence of quantity delivered to ship—Cargo checked on loading into lighters, not when brought alongside—Surveyors' figures in bill when signed by master—Short delivery at destination—Admissibility of evidence of loss from lighters while loading into ship.

By a charterparty dated May 28, 1913, the steamship K., belonging to the defendants, was chartered to proceed to a named port and there load a cargo of timber and therewith proceed to M. All responsibility of the charterers under the charter was to cease as soon as the cargo was alongside. The exceptions in the charterparty included "perils of the sea." The captain or his agent was empowered to sign bills of lading which should be "conclusive evidence against the owners as establishing the quantity delivered to the ship as stated therein." The K. was loaded from lighters, the contents of which had been checked by surveyors before they left the shore, there being no further checking or tallying when the timber was brought alongside. Owing to rough weather, a quantity of the timber fell between the lighters and the ship and was lost. The master of the vessel, however, signed a clean bill of lading in this form: "Shipped, in good order and well conditioned, on board the steamship K." the quantities of timber contained in the surveyors' reports. On arrival at M. the cargo was found to be short. In an action by the plaintiffs, who were indorsees of the bill of lading, for damages for short delivery the shipowners contended that the timber was lost through perils of the sea, since by the charterparty, the terms of which must be incorporated in the bill of lading, the responsibility of the charterers ceased as soon as the cargo was alongside, whereby the responsibility of the shipowners commenced, and the exception of "perils of the sea" came into operation.

Held: the shipowners were bound by the statement in the bill of lading that the whole of the timber had been shipped on board, and could not give evidence that certain portions of the timber had been lost after they had been put into lighters but before they had been received on board, and, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed.

Lishman v. Christie (1) (1887), 19 Q.B.D. 333, applied.

Notes. As to the liability of a shipowner under a bill of lading, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 373-381, 385-391; and for cases see 41 DIGEST 373-384.

Cases referred to:

(1) Lishman v. Christie (1887), 19 Q.B.D. 333; 56 L.J.Q.B. 538; 57 L.T. 552; 35 W.R. 744; 3 T.L.R. 710; 6 Asp.M.L.C. 186, C.A.; 41 Digest 380, 2259.

- A (2) Fisher, Renwick & Co. v. Calder & Co. (1896), 1 Com. Cas. 456; 41 Digest 380, 2260.
- (3) Pymon v. Burt (1884), Cab. & El. 207; 41 Digest 378, 2240.
- (4) J. Lohden & Co. v. C. Calder & Co. (1898), 14 T.L.R. 311; 41 Digest 381, 2266.
- B (5) Mediterranean and New York Steamship Co. v. Mackay, [1903] 1 K.B. 297; 72 L.J.K.B. 147, C.A.; 41 Digest 659, 4904.

Also referred to in argument:

Brenda Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Green, [1900] 1 Q.B. 518; 69 L.J.Q.B. 445; 82 L.T. 66; 48 W.R. 321; 16 T.L.R. 226; 44 Sol. Jo. 277; 9 Asp.M.L.C. 55; 5 Com. Cas., C.A.; 41 Digest 609, 4363.

C Appeal by defendants (shipowners) from a decision of BAILHACHE, J., in an action in the Commercial List.

On April 11, 1913, the plaintiffs, Crossfield & Co., timber merchants, of Barrow-in-Furness, entered into a contract with J. Nelson Smith, of St. John, New Brunswick, to buy a cargo of wood which was to be shipped at Grindstone Island for Manchester on c.i.f. terms. On May 28 J. Nelson Smith chartered the steamship Kylestrome to load the cargo in question. By the charterparty it was agreed that the steamship Kylestrome should, with all convenient speed, sail and proceed to Grindstone Island, New Brunswick, and there load a cargo of timber, and being so loaded should therewith proceed to a number of named ports (including Manchester) as ordered on signing bills of lading. The charterparty continued in these terms:

E "2. Freight payable on measurement of quantity delivered as and when ascertained at the port of discharge. . . . All responsibility whatsoever of the charterers hereunder ceases as soon as the cargo is alongside. 3. The act of God, perils of the sea, &c., always mutually excepted, even when occasioned by negligence, default, or error in judgment of the pilot, master, mariners, or other servants of the shipowners. . . . 12. The usual custom of the wood trade of each port is to be observed by each party on customary terms. 13. Captain or agent to sign bills of lading as per surveyors' return for the cargo, and, if required, for separate parcels and delivery accordingly. 14. Bills of lading shall be conclusive evidence against the owners as establishing the quantity delivered to ship as stated therein. The captain's or agent's signature to be accepted in all cases as binding on owners."

G On June 28 the Kylestrome arrived at Grindstone Island. On June 30 loading commenced, it being done from lighters which carried their cargo stowed athwartships. The captain's agent signed the bills of lading in these terms:

H "Shipped in good order and well conditioned by J. Nelson Smith on board the steamship called the Kylestrome . . . 177,281 pieces of deals, battens, &c., containing 3,170,555 superficial feet . . . in accordance with charterparty dated May 28, 1913, the terms, conditions, and exceptions (including negligence clause) contained in which are herewith incorporated and form part hereof. In witness whereof the master of the said vessel hath affirmed to two bills of lading all of this tenor and date, one of which being accomplished, the other to stand void.—(Signed) J. F. KNIGHT & Co., Agents.—Harvey, N.B., July 16, 1913."

I On July 17 the Kylestrome left Grindstone Island. On arrival at Manchester it was found that the cargo was short by eighty-five standards. The plaintiffs in consequence brought this action against the shipowners to recover £558 damages for non-delivery of cargo, which they alleged had been lost. The shipowners in their defence said that the cargo was lost while alongside the ship; that the loss was, therefore, due to perils of the sea; and that in consequence responsibility on their part was excluded by the exceptions clause in the charterparty. BAILHACHE, J., held that the words in the bills of lading "shipped . . . on board the steamship Kylestrom" were inconsistent with the provision in the charterparty that the cargo was only to be delivered alongside, and must prevail; that in consequence the exception of "perils of the sea" never came into operation; and that the plaintiffs were, therefor, entitled to succeed. The shipowners appealed.

A. A. Roche, K.C., and R. A. Wright for the shipowners.

F. D. MacKinnon, K.C., and W. A. Joritt for plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 10, 1916. The following judgments were read.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J., stated the facts and the terms of the charterparty and bill of lading, and continued: Having regard to the terms of this charterparty, and especially to cl. 14, the plaintiffs contend that the shipowners have bound themselves by contract to treat the bills of lading as conclusive evidence of the quantity delivered to the ship as stated therein—that is, as they contend, of the quantity "shipped on board"—and cannot now question the amount. A bill of lading is, generally speaking, prima facie evidence against the shipowner of the shipment on board of the quantity of goods thereby acknowledged by him to have been so shipped, but it is not conclusive; the parties, however, may by contract agree to make it conclusive evidence, and the question here is whether that is the true effect of the clause in the charterparty incorporated in the bill of lading. If the true meaning of cl. 14 is that the bill of lading is to be conclusive evidence against the owners that the quantity stated therein as having been "shipped . . . on board" has in fact been actually shipped and placed on board, then the appeal cannot succeed; there was the short delivery of eighty-five standards, and it is not suggested that any lumber actually shipped on board was subsequently lost by any excepted peril. The defendants, however, contend that cl. 14 only means that the bill of lading is to be conclusive evidence of the quantity "delivered to ship"; that if, in accordance with the contract, delivery of lumber by the shipper alongside the ship, in lighters or floating in the water, is delivery to the shipowner so that his responsibility for cargo then commences, and his lien for freight then attaches, the bill of lading is only conclusive evidence of such delivery; and that the words "as stated therein" refer only to quantity as stated in bill of lading and do not refer to and make conclusive the statement in the bill of lading "shipped . . . on board."

It must be assumed that the parties to the charterparty contemplated that the bill of lading would be in the form in common use in the timber trade at the port of loading. That states the quantity of timber mentioned therein as having been "shipped on board," which can only mean actually shipped on board. What is the object of such a provision in a charterparty as cl. 14? This question was put and answered by LORD ESHER, M.R., in Lishman v. Christie (1). He said (19 Q.B.D. at p. 338):

"What can be the meaning of such a provision but to get rid of the liberty of the shipowners to show that the quantity stated to have been shipped was not really put on board and to make the bill of lading an estoppel? The provision is a good business provision for the purpose of avoiding disputes as to quantity shipped where there is no dishonesty on either side."

In that case it was provided by the charterparty that the bills of lading should be conclusive evidence against the owners of the quantity of cargo "received as stated therein." Here it is "delivered to ship as stated therein." I see no distinction between delivered to ship and received by ship. They both describe the same transaction looked at from opposite points of view. The Master of the Rolls said (ibid.):

"The provision is that the bill of lading is to be conclusive evidence of the quantity of cargo received as stated therein. How is any quantity stated to have been received by a bill of lading? By the word 'shipped,' of course."

- A In that case the express terms of the contract required the cargo which was to be carried to be brought alongside the ship at merchants' risk and expense, and excluded the custom of the port of Memel, by which captains of ships took delivery of timber to be shipped at timber ponds a mile and a half away, the timber being subsequently rafted down to the ships; and it was urged that the captain had exceeded his authority in signing bills of lading with regard to goods for which the mate gave receipts a mile or more away, and which had been lost in rafting down.
- B But assuming that the shipowner was bound by the bills of lading (as the court held he was), the further question arose as to the meaning of the words "received as therein stated." Indeed, the same point was raised in that case as is raised here—that "received" did not mean more than received by the ship and did not extend to shipped on board as stated in the bill of lading, and, accordingly, as the owners were held liable for goods received by the mate at the timber ponds, the owner ought to be allowed to prove loss by an excepted peril in process of loading while being rafted down the river. It was, however, determined that the object of the clause as to conclusive evidence was to prevent that very kind of dispute and to make the statement in the bill of lading as to shipment on board an absolute estoppel as against the shipowner. As LINDLEY, J., said (ibid. at p. 340):
- C

- D "The shipowner has agreed to be bound by the statement in the bill of lading, and by that he must stand or fall."

Fisher, Renwick & Co. v. Calder & Co. (2) is to the same effect. In that case, tried before MATHEW, J., timber had been brought alongside the vessel to be shipped therein, and was then delivered into the custody of those in charge of the vessel, by whom it was properly secured alongside her by booms and ropes. Subsequently, by reason of violent weather, a quantity of that timber was lost before it could be actually shipped on board. The master signed bills of lading for the whole quantity brought alongside, without deducting so much as had never been actually shipped on board. In an action by the consignees against the shipowners for the value of the timber so lost, it was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. MATHEW, J., said:

- F "In the shipment of timber cargoes troublesome questions frequently arise as to whether timber, which is found at the time of delivery to be missing, was lost before or after shipment. With a view to disposing of all such questions, the clause in this charterparty provides that the bills of lading shall be conclusive evidence against the owners of the quantity of cargo shipped on board as stated therein. What is contemplated is that the bills of lading should pass from hand to hand, and that the consignee should have by the acknowledgment therein conclusive evidence of the quantity shipped. In this particular case the shipowners have sought to show that the timber in question was lost by reason of the excepted perils. But I must give effect to the words of the contract. These goods never were shipped, and therefore the exception of the specified perils did not operate."
- G
- H

Pyman v. Burt (3) cannot be considered an authority to the contrary, as the case was decided upon the grounds that the special circumstances were such as to prevent the conclusive evidence clause in the charterparty from being held binding.

- I I am of opinion that no encouragement should be given to a practice of signing clean bills of lading for goods which the master knows have not been put on board, and with the intention that the actual shipment shall be subsequently disputed. In SCRUTTON ON CHARTERPARTIES (7th Edn.), p. 58, the learned author states that recently

"the shipowners have met the difficulty by adding to the statement of cargo shipped in the bill of lading a marginal note 'so many timbers of above lost alongside' or similar words. This seems to make the bill of lading contain no conclusive statement of quantity shipped, and it was so treated (by BIGHAM, J.) in J. Lohden & Co. v. C. Calder & Co. (4)."

The bill of lading there stated that the full quantity of whole sleepers or half-sleepers had been shipped on board, but a note was put in the margin in these words:

"Hereof about 1,000 half pieces, and about 400 whole pieces lost through weather as per protest dated Riga, 5-17 Nov., 1897."

In that case it was held that there was no estoppel (although the charterparty contained a conclusive evidence clause), as the bill of lading did not amount to such a clear statement of the quantity taken on board as to justify the court in holding that the owners of the ship were precluded from showing that part of the goods were not shipped on board the vessel. In my opinion, the effect of the conclusive evidence clause was settled by Lishman v. Christie (1) nearly thirty years ago, and a method has since been pointed out by which, by means of a note in the margin of a bill of lading, shipowners can protect themselves if cargo is known to be lost before actual shipment on board, and it would only unsettle the law if fine distinctions were now to be drawn depending upon slight verbal differences in the language of the conclusive evidence clause.

The appeal fails and should be dismissed.

PHILLIMORE, L.J.—The plaintiffs in this case, being the receivers of a cargo of timber delivered at the port of Manchester, sought for and have obtained judgment against the defendants, the shipowners, for short delivery. Hence this appeal. [His Lordship stated the facts.] The defences raised for the shipowners are: (i) That if the bill of lading is to be construed as meaning that the quantities mentioned had been actually taken on board, the statement therein is not a statement establishing "the quantity delivered to ship as stated therein" within the meaning of cl. 14 of the charterparty, and is, therefore, a simple statement by the master which, though prima facie evidence against the shipowners, is rebuttable and was rebutted. (ii) If, on the other hand, the bill of lading means that the quantities had been delivered into the possession of the master so that the shipper's risk was ended and that of the shipowner had begun, then the loss was subsequent and was due to a peril excepted by the bill of lading—to wit, perils of the seas.

For the second question, which I propose to take first, it is necessary to ascertain at what period of the adventure the risk of the shipper ended and that of the shipowners began. For some time I was of opinion that the risk of the shipowners began at a period anterior to the actual shipment, and, indeed, I think that in the argument there was almost an agreement between the two parties as to this, except that counsel for the shippers would date back the dividing period even further than the shipowners need for the purposes of their defence. In Lishman v. Christie (1), decided in this court, and in some cases in courts of first instance, the dividing period was that which is usual in cases of shipment. The cargo had to be brought alongside at merchants' risk and expense, "alongside" meaning in ordinary cases by and level with the ship's rail, but very likely in shipments of timber or other bulky materials which must be raised by the ship's gear within reach of the ship's tackles. In these cases the short period of time spent in the act of shipping is not treated as a separate period, and the master signs or should sign for goods so brought level with the rail, or in appropriate cases within reach of the ship's tackles, as "shipped on board." Counsel for the shipowners contended that the effect of cl. 13—that the captain was to sign bills of lading as per surveyors' return—coupled with the practice by which the final surveyor's return was merely an arithmetical result of the several returns made by the surveyors who measured the timber as it was put upon the several lighters up country, made the shipowners responsible at least for the totals of cargo put on board the lighters which arrived at the ship without apparent loss by the way, and counsel for the shippers (as I understood the argument) ante-dated this liability to the times of the original shipments up country. If either of these contentions were correct, I should think that whenever the shipowners' liability began the excepted perils

A also attached. Otherwise there would be two contracts by the shipowners, one of ordinary bailment and another for carriage upon the terms of the bills of lading. But upon reflection I do not think that either of these contentions is correct. The clause by which the charterer's responsibility ceases as soon as the cargo is alongside, though in form a cesser clause, sufficiently shows what is intended. There is no reason for giving "alongside" any other meaning than the usual one, which

B was that given to it in Lishman v. Christie (1).

The clause requiring the captain to sign bills of lading "as per surveyors' return"—cl. 13—must be given a reasonable construction. By it the captain may be precluded from questioning the measurements of the original surveyors or the arithmetic of the final surveyor. But he is not compelled to sign bills of lading according to a return which neglects such an occurrence as the non-arrival of a lighter or its arrival with half its cargo. Nor is he compelled to sign clean bills of lading if after the arrival of the lighters he knows that portions of the cargo have got adrift before they were actually brought on board. He can either insist upon the proper deductions being made, or he can (as has been done in other cases) sign for the quantities specified in the final return, with a note that so many pieces of such and such a description were lost or are short. If there is a dispute, the matter must be settled by arbitration, as provided by cl. 16 of the charterparty. If this be so, then the present case is on all fours with Lishman v. Christie (1). In this case, as in that, the master was not bound to sign bills of lading which admitted without qualification that the sum of the quantities of timber collected up country had been shipped on board. Having, however, so signed and the conclusive evidence clause being in the charterparty, his owners were precluded from contesting the quantity, and could not rely upon an excepted peril as no such peril had occurred after shipment. I should say a word on the phrase in the charterparty "as stated therein." I think that the meaning is that the bill of lading is to be conclusive evidence establishing not only the quantity delivered to the ship, but also that the total quantity is made up according to the details stated therein—that is to say, that there are so many "pieces," so many "deals and battens" containing so many cubic feet, so much "scanting," so many "deal ends" and "boards," and thus conclude the shipowners from raising, or successfully raising, the point raised in Mediterranean and New York Steamship Co. v. Mackay (5). Therefore, I think that these words do not help the shippers. But, for the reasons already given, the second point taken for the defence fails.

F

As to the first point taken for the defence, that, if the words "shipped on board" are to be given their precise meaning, then the master had no authority within the conclusive evidence clause to make this admission, but had only authority to sign for what was delivered to the ship; if delivery and receipt are correlative terms, and if receipt is by shipment, then the master has, by signing the bills of lading, established the quantity delivered to the ship, and this is what he had authority to do. I think, therefore, that the appeal fails.

G

H BANKES, L.J.—This is an action in which the plaintiffs claimed as indorsees of a bill of lading for damages for short delivery of a quantity of timber. The bill of lading incorporated all the terms, conditions, and exceptions of a charterparty, and the main contest between the parties was whether, by the terms of the charterparty, the bill of lading was made conclusive evidence against the shipowner in regard to the quantity of timber short delivered at the port of discharge. I BAILLACHE, J., decided against the defendants, the shipowners, upon the ground that he considered the case was covered by the decision of this court in Lishman v. Christie (1).

[His Lordship referred to the facts.] It seems to me clear from the affidavits that in the case of wood goods dispatched from the interior, of which the present cargo consisted, the only measurements taken were those taken by the appointed surveyors when the goods are loaded on board lighters for the purpose of being conveyed alongside the ship. These measurements are taken in the first instance for the purpose of ascertaining the price to be paid for the timber as between the original vendors of the timber and their buyer or buyers, and the measurements may be (as they were in this case) taken by a number of different surveyors at a number of different places. The measurements so taken are checked by a selected surveyor who checks the same and prepares a summary, the total figures so arrived at being inserted in a bill of lading which is presented to the master for signature. Having regard to the purpose for which the measurements are taken, this checking must, I think, be a checking of the figures as relating to the quantities loaded on board the lighters, and not as relating to the quantities which arrive alongside the ship. The position created by the purchase contract, therefore, appears to be this. The invoice is made out on, and the buyer must pay for, the quantities of timber loaded into the lighters; but the seller must deliver the timber to the vessel, and is responsible for any deterioration of quality or condition until the timber is sent alongside the vessel—the seller consequently is responsible in damages for any loss or deterioration arising between the time when the goods are loaded on to the lighter and the time when they arrive alongside.

The question which has to be determined in the present appeal has reference to the position of the charterer and the shipowner, and the contract of purchase can only be material (if material at all) as explaining the course of business and the custom of the port [relating to the preparation of the complete surveyors' return: see above]. For the purpose of enabling him to fulfil his contract with the plaintiffs, Mr. Nelson Smith, the seller, chartered the steamship Kylestrom. The charterparty is dated May 28, 1912. His Lordship read cl. 2, 3, 12 and 13.

The parties in the present case appear to have expressed in their written contract the extent to which they intended to be bound by the custom of the port, so that no question arises with regard to the custom apart from the construction of the written contract. By cl. 13 the shipowners agreed that the captain or agent should sign bill of lading "as per surveyors' return." The result of this agreement is that the parties assented to the course of business [relating to the surveyors' return: see above]. The conclusive evidence clause is the one upon which the questions involved in this appeal turn. The custom of the port does not touch this clause, in the sense that the shipowner is perfectly free, so far as the custom of the port is concerned, to decide whether he will or will not agree to any form of conclusive evidence clause. The shipowner must be taken to understand what his position is when he has undertaken to sign bills of lading "as per surveyors' return," and he must protect himself by the language used in the clause itself if he decides to bind himself by a conclusive evidence clause, or by a note in the margin of the bill of lading, if the master is compellable to sign for a quantity not received. I think that the expression "delivered to ship" in cl. 14 means delivered alongside in the sense that the goods have reached the ship and are under the control of the master, so that the responsibility of the charterer under cl. 2 ceased.

The precise dispute between the parties may conveniently be stated at this point. The shipowners do not now dispute that the out-turn of the cargo at the port of discharge was some eighty-five standards short of the bill of lading quantity, nor do they dispute that the bill of lading quantity was delivered alongside the ship, but they allege that the whole of the missing timber was lost by peril of the sea whilst being loaded from alongside on to the vessel, and they claim the right to give evidence of that fact. The plaintiffs on the other hand, say, "No—you cannot do that—you are estopped by the terms of the bill of lading from disputing that the full bill of lading quantity was shipped on board your vessel." This brings me to a consideration of the terms of the bill of lading. The question of the proper construction to be put upon that document, having regard to the provisions of cl. 14 of the charterparty, is the real question in the case. The bill of lading is in the usual form "shipped in good order and well conditioned by J. Nelson Smith on board the steamship Kylestrom." Then follows a statement

- A of pieces and quantities as per surveyor's return. The concluding paragraph incorporates all the terms, conditions, and exceptions contained in the charterparty. The shipowners put their argument in two ways. Their first contention was that the bill of lading should be construed as an acknowledgment merely that the goods were delivered alongside. I cannot accept this argument. The language of the bill of lading is too clear to admit of any such construction. The expression
- B "shipped on board" means and means only, in my opinion, what it says. The alternative contention is in substance this. If the bill of lading is to be treated as an acknowledgment of the receipt of the goods on board, then it does not come within the exclusive evidence clause of the charterparty at all. If the charterer had desired to bind the shipowner by that clause he should have tendered a document which dealt with the delivery of the goods alongside, and not with the receipt of the
- C goods on board.
- At this point it becomes material to consider whether any distinction can be drawn between the present case and Lishman v. Christie (1). In that case, as in this, by the terms of the charterparty (though in different language) the cargo had to be brought to the ship at charterer's risk and expense. In that case the conclusive evidence clause was framed to cover "cargo received as stated therein."
- D In the present case it is "quantity delivered to ship as stated therein." In that case the bill of lading contained the word "shipped" only. In the present case the words are "shipped on board." The argument in that case was, as here, that the conclusive evidence clause provided that the bill of lading should be conclusive evidence only that the goods were received as therein stated, not that they were shipped on board. In that case the charterparty contained no similar provision to that contained in the charterparty under consideration requiring the master to sign bills of lading in any particular form or for any particular quantity, but, material as such a clause may be as between shipowner and the holder of the bill of lading, it does not, in my opinion, affect the liability of the charterer to bring the goods alongside. Under these circumstances I am unable to draw any sufficient distinction between the facts in Lishman v. Christie (1) and those in the
- E present case to justify the conclusion that the decision in that case does not apply also to the present. For these reasons I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.
- F

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors : Trinder, Capron & Co. ; William A. Crump & Co.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re COPAL VARNISH CO., LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Eve, J.), July 19, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 Ch. 349; 87 L.J.Ch. 182; 117 L.T. 508]

Company Shares Transfer Registration Restriction on right of transfer - Consent of directors - Director's persistent refusal to attend board to prevent necessary quorum - Registration of transfer by order of court - Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), s. 32.

In 1908 a company, incorporated in 1883, was converted into a "private company" within the meaning of the Companies Act, 1907. There were two directors, E. and P., the quorum necessary being two, and E., the chairman, having a casting vote. The articles of association gave the registered owners of shares power to transfer their shares, but it was provided that no share should be transferred to any person who was not a member of the company without the consent of the directors. E., without the consent of the board, transferred some of his shares to transferees who were not members of the company and lodged the executed transfers with the company for registration. P. purposely kept away from the board meeting summoned to consider the transfers of shares in order to prevent a quorum being formed. On a motion by the transferees for rectification of the register, Held: E. had a right of property in his shares of which he was entitled to dispose subject to the express restrictions in the articles; there was nothing in the articles of the company which required the consent of the directors before execution of the transfers, but legal transfer was not complete until the board had consented and registration had been effected; and, therefore, P.'s persistent abstention in order to prevent a quorum was unavailing and the transferees must be entered on the register.

Notes. Section 32 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, has been replaced by s. 116 of the Companies Act, 1948: see 3 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 549. Regulations 8 and 66 of Table A scheduled to the Companies Act, 1862, have been replaced by regs. 22 and 98 and 99 of Table A scheduled to the Companies Act, 1948, respectively.

Referred to: Re Keith, Prowse & Co., Ltd., [1918-19] All E.R. Rep. 946; Lyle and Scott v. Scott's Trustees, Lyle and Scott v. British Investment Trust, Ltd., [1959] 2 All E.R. 661.

As to rectification of the register of members, see 6 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 216 et seq.; and for cases see 9 DIGEST (Repl.) 215 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Bede Steam Shipping Co., Ltd., [1917] 1 Ch. 123; 86 L.J.Ch. 65; 115 L.T. 580; 33 T.L.R. 13; 61 Sol. Jo. 26, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 392, 2524.
- (2) Barrow v. Isaacs & Son, [1891] 1 Q.B. 417; 60 L.J.Q.B. 179; 64 L.T. 686; 55 J.P. 517; 39 W.R. 338; 7 T.L.R. 175, C.A.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 547, 6696.
- (3) Gilbey v. Rush, [1906] 1 Ch. 11; 75 L.J.Ch. 32; 93 L.T. 616; 54 W.R. 71; 22 T.L.R. 28; 50 Sol. Jo. 26; 40 Digest (Repl.) 815, 2940.

Originating Motion under s. 32 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, by the plaintiffs, Frederick Cradock Edwards and eleven other persons as transferees, for an order that the register of members of the company might be rectified by removing therefrom the name of Ernest Randall as the holder of twelve preference shares in the capital of the company and by entering on the register in the place of the name of Ernest Randall in respect of and as holders of the same shares the names of the plaintiffs respectively "to whom the said shares have been transferred," and that the company might be ordered to pay the costs of the motion.

The company was incorporated in 1883 under the Companies Act, 1867 to 1880,

A by T. B. Randall, the father of Ernest Randall, and his elder brother, Percy Randall, an added defendant to the motion, as a company limited by shares. The capital of the company originally consisted of ordinary shares. The issued capital of the company at the material dates consisted of 541 cumulative preference shares (held as to 105 shares by Ernest Randall and 105 shares by Percy Randall, and as to the remaining 331 by them as trustees for their two sisters) of £10 each and
B sixty ordinary shares (twenty-nine of which latter shares being registered in the names of Ernest Randall and his wife and Percy Randall and his wife respectively) of a similar nominal value. The two sisters of Ernest Randall and Percy Randall were thus beneficially entitled to a life interest in the majority of the preference shares in the company, which also constituted a majority of the share capital, and such shares were registered in the joint names of Ernest Randall and Percy
C Randall as trustees of a settlement. No chairman of the company had been formally appointed since the death of T. B. Randall. The articles of association as originally framed contained the following clauses :

“15. The person or persons for the time being registered as the owner or owners of any shares may (subject to the regulations of the company) transfer the same to any person not being an infant, a lunatic, or by marriage or otherwise under any legal disability. . . . 17. The directors may decline to register any transfer of shares made by any person who is indebted to the company for any money then due and payable, or who may be solely or jointly liable to it for any call whether payable or not, or any interest thereon, or in respect of any debt, notwithstanding that the same may not then be due, or where the proposed transferee is a person engaged in business of a similar character to the D business of the company, or who otherwise may be a competitor in trade with the company, or in any case where the directors shall consider the proposed transfer will not be conducive to the interest of the company.”

When the company was converted, by special resolution duly passed and confirmed on May 27, 1908, and June 15, 1908, into a “private company” within the E meaning of the Companies Act, 1907, the following addition was made to cl. 17 :

“No share shall be transferred to any person who is not already a member of the company without the consent of the directors.”

The minutes of the extraordinary general meeting of June 15, 1908, were signed “Ernest M. Randall, Chairman.” Clause 18 of the company’s articles of association was as follows :
G

“The company shall not be bound to register as a member the nominee of any person entitled to a share . . . if the directors shall consider . . . that the registration of such nominee will not be conducive to the interests of the company.”

H To this clause the following addition had been made by special resolution :

“The directors of the company shall not have power to register any transfer of shares which if completed would increase the number of shareholders to more than fifty.”

I The regulations contained in Table A in Sched. 1, of the Companies Act, 1862, were with specified exceptions made applicable to the company, including regs. 8 and 66. Clause 28 of the articles of association provided that “the number of directors shall not be less than two or more than seven.” Regulation 8 of Table A provided as follows :

“The instrument of transfer of any share in the company shall be executed both by the transferor and transferee, and the transferor shall be deemed to remain a holder of such share until the name of the transferee is entered in the register book thereof.”

Clause 66 of Table A provided as follows :

"The directors may meet together for the dispatch of business, adjourn, and otherwise regulate their meetings as they think fit, and determine the quorum necessary for the transaction of business; questions arising at any meeting shall be decided by a majority of votes; in case of an equality of votes the chairman shall have a second or casting vote; a director may at any time summon a meeting of the directors."

The quorum of directors was two, and the only directors were Ernest Randall and Percy Randall.

On June 7, 1917, Ernest Randall, without the consent of the board, executed transfers of twelve of his shares to the plaintiffs who were not members of the company and lodged them with the secretary for registration. On June 8, 1917, the secretary sent a written notice to Percy Randall, in which a meeting of directors was summoned and the agenda contained the item "transfers of shares." On June 12, 1917, Percy Randall replied, stating: "It will be impossible for me to attend the meeting of directors called for next Wednesday, the 13th inst." On June 12, 1917, the secretary, by letter, informed Percy Randall that the meeting had been postponed until June 20. On June 18, 1917, Percy Randall wrote to the secretary that, having regard to the addition made to art. 17 by the special resolution passed on May 27, 1908, he was advised that the transfers of shares, of which notice had been given, were invalid, as the consents of the directors had not been obtained, and as that was the only business on the agenda for the meeting he did not propose to attend.

On June 23, 1917, the notice of originating motion was served on the company, and on that day the secretary wrote to Percy Randall and invited him to attend a board meeting on June 27, 1917, to consider the notice of motion. There was some conflict of evidence as to what occurred on June 27, 1917, and whether Percy Randall opposed Ernest Randall acting as chairman, and proposed himself as chairman of the meeting, and on not being allowed to take the chair he withdrew from the meeting. At the hearing an offer was made that the motion should be adjourned to enable Percy Randall to attend a board meeting to consider the transfers, but this offer was refused.

Maugham, K.C., and Frank Evans for the plaintiffs, the transferees.

Edward Clayton, K.C., and F. Whinney for Percy Randall.

Percy Wheeler for the company.

EVE, J.—In my opinion there is no answer to this motion. [His Lordship referred to the facts and found on the evidence that Ernest Randall was and had always been recognised by Percy Randall as chairman, and that Percy Randall purposely kept away from the meeting which had been summoned in order to prevent a quorum being present for the transaction of business, and continued:] The only point which I have to consider is what are the legal rights of the persons who are now applying to have the register rectified? In order that there may be no doubt as to the standpoint from which I approach this question, I wish to say that, alike in a public and a private company, a shareholder has, in my opinion, to use the language of LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R., in Re Bede Steam Shipping Co., Ltd. (1) ([1917] 1 Ch. at p. 182):

"a property in his shares, a property which he is at liberty to dispose of, subject only to any express restriction which may be found in the articles of association of the company."

That statement is, I think, as applicable to a private company as to a public one, subject only to this observation, that, whereas in a public company it is not necessary that there should be any agreement inter socios operating as a restriction of the right of transfer, in the constitution of a private company some restriction must be found. It follows that in the present case Ernest Randall had a property in

A his shares of which he had a right to dispose, subject only to any express restrictions in the articles of association. Those express restrictions are to be found in art. 17 as amended by the special resolution passed in June, 1908.

It is not suggested that art. 17 as it stood prior to that amendment would operate in any way so as to prevent the registration of the transfers now in question, but it is said that the addition to the article that "no share shall be transferred to any person who is not already a member of the company without the consent of the directors" imposes upon an intending vendor of shares an obligation to obtain the consent of the directors to the reception into the company of the proposed purchaser before he can proceed with the transaction to the point of executing the transfer, and Barrow v. Isaacs & Son (2) and Gilbey v. Rush (3) were cited in support of that contention. I think this argument loses sight altogether of the essential difference between the nature of the transactions under consideration in those cases and the successive steps which it is necessary to take in order to bring about a final and effectual transfer of a share. The execution of the transfer of a share has no such immediate effect as was brought about by the execution of the assignment in Barrow v. Isaacs & Son (2), and the operation of legally transferring a share is, indeed, one of some complexity. In the first place, there is the contract of sale followed by the execution of an instrument of transfer containing an agreement by the purchaser to accept the shares subject to the several conditions on which the vendor held the same immediately prior to the execution of the transfer—that is to say, subject, among other things, to the conditions imposing restrictions on the vendor's right to transfer to that particular purchaser. Up to this point all that has been done is to pass an equitable interest in the shares to the transferee. There has been no legal assignment completed; indeed, the most crucial point in the transaction has not been reached—the acceptance of the transfer by the board of directors and the passing of it for registration; and even then the matter is not completed, because, until the actual entry of the name of the transferee on the register, the transferor remains the legal holder of the shares.

Such being the successive operations by which a legal transfer can be effectuated, what is there in the wording the clause to which I have referred which imposes upon an intending transferor any obligation to approach the directors and ask them if they will approve of an intended transferee before executing the document, which is only one of the series of operations and creates no title in the transferee of which the company can take any note until the directors have sanctioned its registration? I cannot see anything in the article which imposes any such obligation, and I think it would be an unreasonable construction to hold that there is any obligation to apply for the consent before the transfer is tendered for acceptance and registration. So long as prior to the completion of the transaction an opportunity is given to the directors, sitting as a board, to determine whether the proposed transferee is a person whom they are prepared to admit as a member of the company, the conditions imposed by the article are, in my opinion, complied with, and the contract into which the vendor on becoming a shareholder entered with his co-shareholders is sufficiently discharged. The argument that if the directors only give their consent after the vendor has purported to transfer the shares—that is, ratification by the directors, and not the antecedent consent on their part contemplated by the article—is based upon an exaggerated estimate of the instrument of transfer; its efficacy depends solely on the question of its registration, and it is for the directors, by giving or withholding their consent to this, to determine whether the whole transaction is to be effective or not. In my opinion, Percy Randall has taken up an attitude in this dispute which is untenable, and, bearing in mind that he was added as a party to this motion at his own request in an order directing the company to rectify the register by giving effect to these transfers, I must at the same time order him to pay the costs of the motion.

Solicitors: Francis Miller & Steele, Perowne & Co.; Lewin, Gregory & Anderson.

[Reported by W. P. PAIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

HUGHES v. LIVERPOOL VICTORIA LEGAL FRIENDLY SOCIETY AND ANOTHER

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Phillimore and Bankes, L.J.J.), May 2, 3, 19, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 482; 85 L.J.K.B. 1643; 115 L.T. 40; 32 T.L.R. 525]

Insurance—Life assurance—Assured induced to take up policy by fraudulent misrepresentation of insurers' agent—Right to recover premiums.

Where an illegal contract of life assurance is entered into, the assured being ignorant of the law and being induced to enter into the contract by a fraudulent misrepresentation of the law by the agent of the assurers, which the assured believes, the parties are not in pari delicto, and the assured may recover premiums which he has paid.

British Workman's and General Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Cunliffe (1) (1902), 18 T.L.R. 502, applied.

Harse v. Pearl Life Assurance Co. (2), [1904] 1 K.B. 558, distinguished.

Notes. Referred to: Parkinson v. College of Ambulance, Ltd., [1924] All E.R.Rep. 325.

As to return of insurance premiums, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 238-242; and for cases see 29 DIGEST 45, 46, 61-63, 370-372.

Cases referred to:

- (1) British Workman's and General Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Cunliffe (1902), 18 T.L.R. 425; affirmed 18 T.L.R. 502, C.A.; 29 Digest 61, 208.
- (2) Harse v. Pearl Life Assurance Co., Ltd., [1903] 2 K.B. 92; 72 L.J.K.B. 638; 89 L.T. 94; 19 T.L.R. 474, D.C.; on appeal [1904] 1 K.B. 558; 73 L.J.K.B. 373; 90 L.T. 245; 52 W.R. 457; 19 T.L.R. 204; 48 Sol. Jo. 275, C.A.; 29 Digest 62, 209.
- (3) Evanson v. Crooks (1911), 106 L.T. 264; 28 T.L.R. 123; 29 Digest 62, 212.
- (4) Howarth v. Pioneer Life Assurance Co., Ltd. (1912), 107 L.T. 155; 29 Digest 62, 210.
- (5) Refuge Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Kettlewell, [1909] A.C. 243; 78 L.J.K.B. 519; 100 L.T. 306; 25 T.L.R. 395; sub nom. Kettlewell v. Refuge Assurance Co., Ltd., 53 Sol. Jo. 339, H.L.; 29 Digest 63, 218.

Also referred to in argument:

Re Griffin, [1902] 1 Ch. 135; 71 L.J.Ch. 112; 86 L.T. 38; 50 W.R. 250; 18 T.L.R. 142; 46 Sol. Jo. 122, C.A.; 25 Digest 307, 148.

Appeal by the plaintiff from a decision of SCRUTTON, J., on further consideration by him of an action, tried by him with a jury, in which the plaintiff claimed from the defendants the return of the premiums which she had paid on five policies of insurance on the lives of three persons, alleging that the premiums had been obtained from her by fraud, or, alternatively, that she had paid them on a consideration which had failed. SCRUTTON, J., gave judgment for the defendants on the ground that the policies were illegal under the Assurance Companies Act, 1909.

The facts appear from the judgments.

Trevor Hunter for the plaintiff.

Gore-Browne, K.C., and Artemus Jones for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 19. The following judgments were read.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—The plaintiff claims £52 13s. 6d. by way of return of premiums on life policies, which amounts she contends were obtained from her by the fraudulent misrepresentations of the defendants' agents. At the trial the

A judge left certain questions to the jury, and, having obtained their findings of fact, he directed judgment to be entered for the defendants. The plaintiff appeals, and contends that upon the findings of the jury she is entitled to judgment against the defendant society for the amount claimed.

In the years 1908 and 1909, John Henry Thomas, a grocer, effected with the defendants in their industrial branch five policies—namely, two on the life of Mrs. Elizabeth James, one on the life of James Morgan, and two on the life of Thomas Petty. The weekly premiums varied between 4d. and 1s., and the total aggregate amount assured by the five policies was £65 8s. At the trial Thomas said that Mrs. James owed him money, but that the defendant society's local agent, the co-defendant William Evans, forced him to take out the other two policies, and added that a tradesman had to do that in many cases. Evans, who was called by the society, said that all three lives were customers of Thomas according to him. No question on this point was left to the jury. Assuming that Thomas had an insurable interest on all three lives, the policies taken out by him would be valid. Upon the face of each policy there is nothing to indicate that it is an assurance effected by one person on the life of another. Only the name of the assured is mentioned. After a short time, Thomas determined to allow the policies to drop. He stopped paying premiums, and burnt the policies. He never was asked to sell or to consent to the sale of the policies, and never asked for the issue of any duplicate policies. In December, 1910, the agent Evans approached the plaintiff, Mrs. Hughes, whose husband keeps the Railway Inn at Maesteg, with a view to her keeping up the policies. There was a question at the trial whether the arrangement come to was with Mr. Hughes, or with his wife, the plaintiff, and the jury found that it was with the plaintiff. The plaintiff's account was that Lloyd, the defendants' superintendent, and Evans, the defendants' agent, came to her; that she was told that arrears of premiums were owing upon the policies, and that if she paid the arrears, and the future premiums, everything would be all right. She believed what she was told, and then and there paid the arrears of £3 14s. 2d. Subsequently Evans came alone, bringing with him five duplicate policies, which the plaintiff noticed were not the usual policies, but duplicate copies, whereupon Evans assured her that everything would be all right, which assurance she believed, and paid the premiums on the policies which subsequently accrued. At a later date Lloyd left the society's service, a new superintendent called upon the plaintiff, and, after his visit, she took advice, refused to pay any more premiums, and brought this action. The application to the head office to issue duplicate policies is a printed form, filled up in the handwriting of Evans, and gives no reason why duplicate policies should be issued. We were told on the hearing of the appeal that the several proposals to the office to effect the original five policies had been destroyed, although these policies had been taken out so recently as 1908 and 1909. Each policy contains a provision that the policy shall become void, and the society shall not be liable to pay any sum whatsoever on account of the assurance, and all premiums paid shall be forfeited to the society, if the policy shall be in any way assigned, transferred, or otherwise parted with—nomination or will excepted. By r. 24 of the amended rules of the society, the secretary is to keep a book in which the members may nominate in writing the person to whom the insurance money shall be paid on their decease, such person being the husband, wife, father, mother, child, brother or sister, nephew or niece of such member. Any member may revoke such nomination by a written notice to that effect, signed by himself. No nomination was ever signed in respect of any of the five policies.

It appears from this short statement of the facts that the plaintiff never acquired any valid title to any of the policies, or any legal right to enforce payment by the insurance company on the death of any of the assured. No assignment of the policies was, indeed, ever agreed to be made by Thomas, who effected them, nor does it appear that he was ever aware of what Lloyd and Evans were doing with regard to them.

The learned judge left the following questions to the jury:

"(2) Was the effecting or transfer of the policies induced by any fraudulent representation of fact or law? If so, what was the representation and who made it?—Answer: Yes. Assurances to Mrs. Hughes that, by paying arrears due and keeping up the premiums, everything would be all right. Made by Lloyd. (3) Was the payment of premiums after the handing over of the duplicate policies induced by any fraudulent representation of fact or law? If so, what was the representation and who made it?—Answer: Yes. Assurances to Mrs. Hughes, when she knew that they were duplicate copies, that everything would be all right. Made by Evans."

The learned judge during the course of his summing-up, and before leaving the second and third questions to the jury, pointed out to them what would be a fraudulent statement and what would not; also what would be a statement of fact and what would be only a statement of opinion as to the future; the distinction between a statement which meant: "You may trust to the honour of the society; you cannot recover in law, but you are safe in dealing with them; they are honourable people, and will not take your money and not pay", and a statement which meant: "You can recover in law on this policy." The learned judge told the jury that he had asked them whether there was any fraudulent misrepresentation of fact or law, and they must attend to that in the sense that he explained to them. The findings of the jury, therefore, amount to this, that the society, by their agent, had made representations which led the plaintiff to believe that the policies were effectual and valid in law and that the plaintiff on paying became legally entitled to them, and that the plaintiff paid the arrears and continued to pay the future premiums relying on these representations. There is no complaint of the summing-up or of the findings of the jury, and it cannot be doubted that there was ample evidence for the jury to find fraud. Evans knew that the policies had been effected by Thomas, that Thomas had determined not to keep them up (although no notice of intention to forfeit had ever been given by the society under the Collecting Societies and Industrial Assurance Companies Act, 1896 [repealed, Industrial Assurance Act, 1923]). Thomas had never been approached with a view to his assigning the policies. Assuming in favour of the defendants that they were assignable and had been effected by a person having an insurable interest, the facts known to Evans showed that the plaintiff would acquire no title at all. The obtaining duplicate policies was a part of Evans' fraud, the personal gain to himself being that he would continue to receive a commission on the premiums which the plaintiff could be induced to pay.

In my judgment, the present is a clear case of fraud, established to the satisfaction of the jury, and a much stronger case of fraud than British Workman's and General Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Cunliffe (1). In that case the policy was issued to Cunliffe upon the life of Peter Hampson, his brother-in-law, in which he had no insurable interest. The policy contained a reference to a proposal and declaration in writing, signed by Cunliffe. No such proposal and declaration were ever put in evidence, and Cunliffe and his wife swore that they had not signed such a document. Bibby, the insurance agent, knew that Cunliffe had no insurable interest on the life. The justices arrived at the conclusion that the society, by Bibby their agent, had made representations which led Cunliffe to believe that the policy would be valid and effective in law, and that Cunliffe had effected the policy and paid the premiums, relying on these representations. The fraud there was pointed out by VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J. Bibby knew that by law it was necessary that the insurer should have an insurable interest in the life assured, and he knew that Cunliffe had no such interest in the life of his brother-in-law, yet, to induce him to insure, he made a statement of which the obvious meaning was that Cunliffe would be entitled to enforce payment of the policy money, although he had no

- A insurable interest. That was fraud. In Harse v. Pearl Life Assurance Co., Ltd. (2), COLLINS, M.R., pointed out (1904] 1 K.B. at p. 563) that the Court of Appeal in British Workman's and General Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Cunliffe (1) affirmed the decision of the Divisional Court that the money could be recovered, expressly on the ground that the statement on which the assured acted was fraudulently made. The facts of the present case afford much stronger evidence of fraud than
- B the facts in British Workman's and General Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Cunliffe (1), and the fraud is established by the verdict of the jury.

- [His LORDSHIP commented on "the extremely loose and careless manner in which the business of the defendants appeared to be conducted, and concluded:] In Harse v. Pearl Life Assurance Co., Ltd. (2) and in Evanson v. Crooks (3) there was no fraud, and the plaintiff was in pari delicto, and so failed to recover, but
- C those cases must not be regarded as deciding that where a person is induced to insure a life, in which he has no insurable interest, by an insurance agent making a misrepresentation of fact, that the parties are necessarily in pari delicto. If insurance agents were carefully instructed not to procure or accept proposals for insurances on lives where the insurers have no insurable interest, there would not be so many actions brought for the return of premiums. In this case the appeal
- D should be allowed, and judgment entered for the plaintiff for the amount claimed with the costs of the action and of this appeal.

PHILLIMORE, L.J.—The plaintiff sues for the recovery of money paid in premiums on five policies of insurance on the lives of three persons, alleging that it was money obtained by fraud, or, alternatively, paid on a consideration that

E failed. The defendant society denies her rights generally, specifically denies that it issued any policies to her, and further pleads that, if the policies were issued to her, "such policies were null and void, and were illegal for want of insurable interest under the Life Assurance Act, 1774, and the plaintiff was a party to such illegality and in pari delicto with the defendants, and moneys paid thereunder are irrecoverable in law."

- F [His LORDSHIP stated the facts and continued:] The transaction which led to the plaintiff paying the premiums on these policies can be looked at in two ways. It was either one by which she—to use the language of Evans—took the old policies on, or it was a series of insurances de novo by her on the lives which had been previously assured by Thomas. In the former case, two of the policies were good policies; the other three were taken to have been illegal and void. But they
- G might have been good if the persons, whose lives are assured, had been debtors to Thomas, and there was no reason why the plaintiff should not suppose that they were or accept the statement by the society's servants that they were all right. But the plaintiff, having no title from Thomas, would have no right to the policies or the policy moneys. It is true that by virtue of the statute governing these matters [now Industrial Assurance Act, 1923, s. 23] no lapse of a policy can be
- H effected without previous notice to the assured. But Thomas had abandoned the policies, and had destroyed them and his premium books, and it was not with his consent that the application was made to Mrs. Hughes to take them over. Unless he assigned his interests under the policies, Mrs. Hughes would never get the policy moneys, and, if the case is to be regarded from this point of view, there was a clear fraud practised upon her by Evans and Lloyd, and no case of par delictum.
- I SCRUTTON, J., however, seems rather to have taken the view that the other aspect of the transaction was the right one, and that the plaintiff was effecting these five policies de novo. There is considerable difficulty in this position. The request made to the plaintiff was to keep the policies on. The documents issued to her were copies or duplicates of the old policies with the old date, and, as I understand, with the age of the several assured at the times when they were originally effected, and with the rate of premiums appropriate to that age. It is difficult to see how the transaction can be regarded as one of the issue of new policies. But, assuming that the transaction is to be so regarded, which is looking at the case in the most favourable aspect to the defendant society, we have then to consider the effect of the findings of the jury. A

The learned judge left certain questions to the jury. These questions, with their answers, were as follows:

"(1) Were the insurances in 1910 effected by Mrs. Hughes or Mr. Hughes? — Answer: Mrs. Hughes. (2) Was the effecting or transfer of the policies induced by any fraudulent representation of fact or law? Answer: Yes. If so, what was the representation and who made it? Answer: Assurances to Mrs. Hughes that by paying arrears due and keeping up the premiums everything would be all right. Made by Lloyd. (3) Was the paying of the premiums after the handing over of the duplicate policies induced by any fraudulent representation of fact or law? Answer: Yes. If so, what was the representation and who made it? — Answer: Assurances to Mrs. Hughes, when she knew that they were duplicate policies, that everything would be all right. Made by Evans."

He then reserved the case for further consideration. Upon further consideration he entered judgment for the defendant society. Hence this appeal.

There are two cases which have a special bearing upon the present case — British Workman's and General Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Cunliffe (1) and Harse v. Pearl Life Assurance Co., Ltd. (2). The only other case which I think is necessary to mention in this connection is Howarth v. Pioneer Life Assurance Co., Ltd. (4). In the first of these three cases, which arose on appeal from a Case stated by justices, there was, in the view of LORD ALVERSTON, C.J., at any rate no suggestion of fraud. He apparently decided on the view that, though the contract was illegal and void, neither the agent nor the assured knew it, but that, nevertheless, the agent of the assurance company was not in the same position as the assured, he being a man who was, or might be believed to be, skilled in insurance matters. I am not sure that CHANNELL, J., did not take the view that there was direct misrepresentation by the agent. DARLING, J., is only reported as generally concurring. In the Court of Appeal it is again a little difficult to ascertain upon what grounds the decision of the court below was affirmed and the assured held entitled to recover his premiums back. It is unfortunate that we have only the necessarily condensed newspaper report to guide us. It is, however, possible to infer from the brief report of the judgments of VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and ROMER, L.J.J., with whom MATHEW, L.J., is said to have concurred, that the view taken was that there was fraud on the part of the agent of the assurance company. SCRUTTON, J., in his judgment in the present case, observes that this could hardly be, inasmuch as both the Divisional Court and the Court of Appeal were bound as to the facts by the findings of the justices, and the justices had not found fraud. As to this it may be remarked that no doubt the justices had not used the word "fraud," but they had found facts from which it might have seemed to the lords justices right to draw an inference of fraud. For the purposes of the case before us the decision in Cunliffe's Case (1) is an authority that, at any rate where an illegal contract of insurance is entered into and the assured is ignorant of the law and is induced to enter into it by the fraudulent misrepresentation of the law by the agent of the assurance company, the parties are not in pari delicto, and the assured may recover premiums paid. G H

In Harse's Case (2), which was an appeal from a county court, the Divisional Court held that the premiums could be recovered, but the Court of Appeal reversed that decision. In that case, which was of a son insuring against funeral expenses on the death of his mother, there had been some doubt as to the law—that is, whether a son had not to this extent an insurable interest in the life of his mother. It was ultimately decided that he had not. Later legislation—the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 36—has provided that a son shall have such an interest. There was, therefore, no improbability in the agent having made a bona fide mistake as to the law, and this in fact was found by the jury. The Divisional I

A Court thought that the assured was entitled to expect that the agent would know the law. The judges in that court held that fraud was not essential, saying that they had so held (and two of the members of the court were the same) in Cunliffe's Case (1). In the Court of Appeal it was definitely decided that, seeing that the statement by the agent was not a statement of fact, but a statement of law, and was innocently made, the plaintiff could not recover. COLLINS, M.R., said ([1904] 1 K.B. at p. 563):

B "Unless there can be introduced the element of fraud, duress, or oppression, or difference in the position of the parties which created a fiduciary relationship to the plaintiff so as to make it inequitable for the defendants to insist on the bargain that they had made with the plaintiff, he is in the position of a person who has made an illegal contract and has sustained a loss in consequence of a mis-statement of law, and must submit to that loss."

C But, at the same time, the court affirmed the view that if the element of fraud, or any of the other elements mentioned in the passage which I have just read, exist, the delictum is not par, and the premiums can be recovered back. In part support of his judgment the Master of the Rolls relies on Cunliffe's Case (1), which in his view was decided in the Court of Appeal on the ground of fraud. Again I refer to SCRUTTON, J.'s criticism only to say that, when one looks at a previous decision as an authority, one has to accept the view of the facts which was taken by the tribunal. A court is not bound by a previous decision as to the facts, but only by a previous decision so far as it lays down a principle of law. And after full consideration of these two authorities, I think there is no difficulty in ascertaining the rule of law, whatever may be the difficulties in the way of understanding how the conclusion came to be arrived at in Cunliffe's Case (1), according to the brief reports of it which we have.

E Howarth v. Pioneer Life Assurance Co. (4) seems to me to be a decision to the same effect. SCRUTTON, J., appears to have thought that, nevertheless, the plaintiff could not recover, and to have considered that at any rate the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 23 and s. 36 (3) making the offender liable to a serious penalty, outweighed all previous considerations. But if an act is illegal—that is, prohibited by law—it makes no difference whether it is prohibited under a penalty or left as an indictable misdemeanour at common law. There is as plain a prohibition in the Life Assurance Act, 1774, on which the cases of Cunliffe (1) and of Harse (2) were decided. It remains, I think, that the principles enunciated by COLLINS, M.R., and agreed to by the lords justices in Harse's Case (2) carry the plaintiff home on the second view of the transaction.

G Lastly, it was contended that the acts of the collector and superintendent were beyond the scope of their authority, and could not bind the defendant society. But if the society repudiates the bargain it cannot keep the premiums. This was settled in the House of Lords in Refuge Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Kettlewell (5). H SCRUTTON, J., pointed this out. Whichever view, therefore, may be taken of the transaction by which the plaintiff obtained these duplicate policies, I am of opinion that she is entitled to succeed, and that this appeal should be allowed.

I BANKES, L.J.—It is not necessary that I should deal with the facts of the case, as they have already been set out fully. It is sufficient for the purpose of my judgment to say that, having regard to the summing-up of the learned judge, the answers of the jury must be read as a finding that the representation made by the defendants' agents was a representation that, if the plaintiff took over the policies and paid the premiums on them, they would be valid and binding policies in her hands, and capable of being enforced by her, and that the agents, at the time that they made these representations, knew them to be untrue, but that the plaintiff did not know them to be untrue, but, on the contrary, believed them to be true. On these findings the plaintiff was, in my opinion, entitled to judgment.

SCRUTTON, J., took the opposite view. It is clear from his judgment that, though the defendants' counsel submitted that the statements by the company's agents were only expressions of their opinion, and that the plaintiff was herself well aware of the true position, he refused to accept either contention in face of the findings of the jury; and, though he expressed an opinion with regard to one of the findings, he did deal with the case on the footing that the findings of the jury meant what I have interpreted them to mean. There is no cross-appeal asking the court to set aside the findings, and this court must, therefore, dispose of this appeal on the findings as they stand. The ground on which the learned judge decided in favour of the defendants was that the entire transaction was illegal, and, that being so, the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief. The learned judge appears to have relied on the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, in support of his view that the transaction was now penalised by statute. In my opinion, this statute cannot be invoked to defeat the claim of the plaintiff. The statute applies to assurance companies, and lays down rules as to what they may do and what they may not do, and provides for penalties in cases of default, but it does not, so far as the present case is concerned, put the plaintiff in a worse position than she was in under the Life Assurance Act, 1774. This statute certainly applied to these policies if the transaction as between the plaintiff and the defendant company is to be treated as a re-issue, or a fresh issue, of the policies to her; and the effect of the illegality of the transaction as a result of that statute has been considered in several cases.

In Evanston v. Crooks (3) HAMILTON, J., held that a plea of the statute was a complete answer to a claim for the return of premiums in the absence of fraud. In a case where fraud is proved, the authorities are, in my opinion, clear that the case cannot be considered as one of par delictum, and that an innocent plaintiff is entitled to recover. SCRUTTON, J., commented on the difficulty of understanding British Workman's Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Cunliffe (1) and Harse v. Pearl Life Insurance Co., Ltd. (2). As reported, it is impossible to understand them, except on the assumption that different views were taken of the justices' findings in Cunliffe's Case (1); and this is only one of the many instances which occur of the confusion which is created by the reporting of decisions which turn only upon the particular facts of the particular case, and involve no general rule of law. It appears to me, when the judgment of VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., in Cunliffe's Case (1) is carefully looked at, that he read the findings of the justices in that case as amounting to a finding of fraud, for he says that the agent knew the law and knew that the respondent had no insurable interest, and yet he assured the respondent that the policy would be all right, which the justices interpreted as meaning "that the policy would be valid and effective in law." This, I think, must have been the view of COLLINS, M.R., in Harse v. Pearl Life Assurance Co., Ltd. (2) where he says ([1904] 1 K.B. at p. 563) that the court affirmed the decision that the money could be recovered expressly on the ground that the statement on which the assured acted was fraudulently made. Whether any reasonable explanation of the conflicting views of the justices' findings in Cunliffe's Case (1) can be given seems to me to be immaterial in the present case. Given fraud, the authorities seem to me to be all one way—namely, that an innocent plaintiff is entitled to say that he is not in pari delicto with the defendant, whose agent by a false and fraudulent representation induced him to believe that the transaction was an innocent transaction, and one which was enforceable in law. On these grounds, in my opinion, the appellant is entitled to succeed.

Another ground was mentioned during the argument which seems open to the plaintiff, though not referred to by the learned judge in his judgment. The policies were all dropped policies at the time the plaintiff was induced to take them, as the defendants' agent must have known. Even if still in force, they could not by the conditions embodied in them have been validly transferred to the plaintiff so as to give her a title to them—this also the defendants' agent must have known. The

A defendant company did not seek to justify the action of one of these agents, and, indeed, it was impossible to do so, but I cannot part with this case without expressing the hope that the defendant company will in future exercise more care in the issuing of duplicate policies than they appear to have exercised in the present case.

Appeal allowed.

B Solicitors: Smith, Rundell & Dods, for J. R. Snape, Maesteg, Glamorgan; J. Tickle & Co.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

H. O. BRANDT & CO. v. H. N. MORRIS & CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Viscount Reading, C.J., Scrutton, L.J., and Neville, J.), July 20, 1917]

D

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 784; 87 L.J.K.B. 101; 117 L.T. 196]

Agent—Personal liability—Purchase of goods—"To A from B for and on behalf of C. We have this day bought . . ."—Signature by B—Liability of B—Evidence to explain circumstances of contract—Admissibility.

Sale of Goods—Export licence—F.o.b. contract—Duty of buyers to obtain licence.

E

A bought note addressed to the sellers, H.N.M. & Co., was in the following terms: "From Messrs. H.O.B. & Co. [the buyers] for and on behalf of Messrs. S.B., Rhode Island, United States. We have this day bought from you 60 tons pure aniline oil." The note was signed: "H.O.B. & Co." The dates agreed for deliveries were all after the outbreak of war between England and Germany in 1914 and there was evidence that during war-time the destination of goods must be made known to the authorities and that export licences must be obtained. The sellers having failed to deliver some of the oil, the buyers claimed damages for breach of contract.

F

Held: (NEVILLE, J., dissenting) (i) the words in the bought note "for and on behalf of Messrs. S.B., etc." were not sufficient to displace the strong prima facie presumption that a person who signs in his own name a statement that he has bought goods is personally liable to carry out the purchase; evidence of the circumstances surrounding the contract was admissible, and in view of that evidence the words were to be treated as if they were a memorandum to the effect that the destination of the goods was the United States: (ii) (by the whole court) the contract being f.o.b., the obligation to get an export licence was on the buyers and not on the sellers.

G

H

Notes. Explained: Brightman v. Tate, [1919] 1 K.B. 463. Distinguished: M. & W. Hardy & Co., Inc. v. A. W. Pound & Co., [1955] 1 All E.R. 666. Considered: Rusholme and Bolton and Roberts Hadfield, Ltd v. S. G. Read & Co. (London), Ltd., [1955] 1 All E.R. 180. Referred to: Ariadne Steamship Co. v. McKelvie, [1922] 1 K.B. 518.

I

As to the liability of an agent on a contract, and his right of enforcement, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 228-231, 236, 237, and as to f.o.b. contracts, see ibid., vol. 34, pp. 175-178. For cases see 1 DIGEST (Repl.) 717 et seq., and 39 DIGEST 558, 559.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Gadd v. Houghton (1876), 1 Ex.D. 357; 46 L.J.Q.B. 71; 35 L.T. 222; 24 W.R. 975, C.A.; 1 Digest (Repl.) 730, 2746.
- (2) Thomson v. Davenport, Fynney v. Pontigny, Davenport v. Thomson (1829), 9 B. & C. 78; Dan. & Ll. 278; 4 Man. & Ry.K.B. 110; 7 L.J.O.S.K.B. 134; 109 E.R. 30; 1 Digest (Repl.) 669, 2352.

- (3) Cooke v. Wilson (1856), 1 C.B.N.S. 153; 26 L.J.C.P. 15; 28 L.T.O.S. 103; 2 Jur.N.S. 1094; 5 W.R. 24; 140 E.R. 65; 1 Digest (Repl.) 729, 2737.
- (4) Re Anglo-Russian Merchant Traders, Ltd., and John Batt & Co. (London), Ltd., [1917] 2 K.B. 679; 86 L.J.K.B. 1360; 116 L.T. 805; 61 Sol. Jo. 591, C.A.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 451, 3395.
- (5) Paice v. Walker (1870), L.R. 5 Exch. 173; 39 L.J.Ex. 109; 22 L.T. 547; 18 W.R. 789; 1 Digest (Repl.) 730, 2745.

Appeal by the defendants from a decision of A. T. LAWRENCE, J., in an action for damages for breach of contract.

Cyril Atkinson, K.C., and J. D. Crawford for the defendants.

Langdon, K.C., and Acton for the plaintiffs.

VISCOUNT READING, C.J.—The plaintiffs brought this action for breach of contract by the defendants to deliver the balance of a quantity of 60 tons of aniline oil. The action was tried before A. T. LAWRENCE, J., who gave judgment for the plaintiffs for £3,118 damages. The defendants ask that judgment be entered for them, and specially on three grounds: (i) that the plaintiffs were not contracting parties and cannot maintain this action; (ii) that there is no breach of the contract by the defendants, because the government prohibition of the export of aniline oil has had the effect of suspending the operation of the contract; and (iii) that the damages were assessed at the wrong period. The defendants, with two other firms, appear to be the sole manufacturers of aniline oil in this country. When the war broke out there was an undoubted desire to manufacture aniline oil for the requirements of this country to a larger extent than before, it having been found that Germany was supplying many of the requirements of British consumers for manufacturing and other purposes. There was also a demand for aniline oil from Great Britain for the United States, and a correspondence ensued between the plaintiffs, who are merchants, and the defendants, who are chemical manufacturers, and also, I understand, merchants.

The contract is contained in the documents, and the first question that arises upon it is: Who are the contracting parties? Counsel for the defendants contended, both in the court below and here, that the plaintiffs were the declared agents under the contract for Sayles Bleacheries of the United States, who became the purchasers and the contracting parties with the defendants. If that contention is right, this action fails. In my opinion, the question is by no means free from difficulty, but, on the whole, I have arrived at the conclusion that this ground of appeal fails. I think we are only entitled to look at the documents of contract and what are called the surrounding circumstances. The contract was made after war had broken out and at a period when, according to the evidence, it was required of a person entering into a contract to state the destination of the goods in order to show where the goods were to be sent. Accordingly, the plaintiffs had to declare where the goods had to go. That is the evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs. The documents consist of a sale note and a bought note and a letter correcting one exception to a printed clause, inserted by Messrs. Brandt, which I discard as immaterial for this purpose. The bought note contains the statement: "H. N. Morris & Co., Ltd., Gorton Brook Chemical Works, Manchester. From Messrs. H. O. Brandt & Co., Manchester, for and on behalf of Messrs. Sayles Bleacheries, Rhode Island, United States." Then in the body of the document: "We have this day bought from you 60 tons pure aniline oil," and it is signed "Brandt & Co." The sale note is in the same form mutatis mutandis.

The argument is that Brandt & Co. must be regarded there as if they had signed this contract for and on behalf of Sayles Bleacheries of the United States. Reliance was placed by the defendants upon Gadd v. Houghton (1) to support his view. He pressed us with this decision, and argued with great ability and force that we must conclude that this case was within the decision of Gadd v. Houghton (1). In Gadd v. Houghton (1) the words in question were: "We have this day sold to you on A account of James Morand & Co., Valencia." Then there was the signature without addition. The court held that the words "on account of James Morand & Co." showed intention to make the foreign principals and not the brokers liable, and that the brokers were not liable upon the contract. In the present case there is a difference, because the body of the contract does not contain the words. It does not follow for that reason that it must not be read as if Brandt & Co. were contracting for and on behalf of Sayles, but I think one must have regard to the principle of law which is stated by MELLISH, L.J., in Gadd v. Houghton (1). He says (1 Ex.D. at p. 360):

C "The language used must be interpreted according to its plain and natural meaning. As is said in the note to Thomson v. Davenport (2), when a man signs a contract in his own name he is primâ facie a contracting party and liable, and there must be something very strong on the face of the instrument to show that the liability does not attach to him. But if there are plain words to show that he is contracting on behalf of somebody else, why are we not to give effect to them?"

MELLISH, L.J., goes on to say that they must give effect to them.

D I base my decision in this case, and on this point, upon the language there used by MELLISH, L.J. Primâ facie when a man signs a document in his own name and states in the document: "I have this day bought of you," he is the person liable under the contract. If he is in fact making the contract on behalf of a foreign principal and that is known to the other contracting party, it is an element to be taken into consideration, but I think nothing more than that, in determining whether or not the signatory to the contract intended to bind himself or his foreign principal. I come to the conclusion that the words which are contained in the contract from Messrs. Brandt, "for and on behalf of Sayles Bleacheries of the United States," are to be treated as if they were a memorandum to the effect that this contract is for the destination of Sayles Bleacheries, of the United States. Counsel for the defendants pressed us, and at one time I was much impressed with his argument, that these are not very apt words to describe the destination of the goods, but I am not convinced. At this time what the contracting merchants had in mind was the purchaser of the goods—that they had to show to whom and to what country, and, it may be, the place, where the goods were destined. That is the evidence, and I think it is a circumstance which I am entitled to take into account, and although again and again it may be said that the statement that they are acting "for and on behalf of" shows that they are acting as agents for the American principal, it does not, to my mind, get rid of the primâ facie presumption, and, they having signed the contract in their own name, they have not taken sufficient precaution, if they did not intend to bind themselves, to exclude themselves from liability as contracting parties, and to make plain that the foreign principal was the contracting party. For this reason I come to the conclusion that the first point fails.

H As to the second and third points, it is necessary to look a little more closely into the contract. [His Lordship reviewed the evidence relating to the deliveries, and continued:] Upon the facts I feel bound to agree with the learned judge. I do not think that we ought to dissent from his findings of fact. I am, however, not able to agree with the learned judge's view that the duty was upon the defendants to apply for a licence. They had contracted to sell and put on board the vessel—not the vessel selected by them, but the vessel selected by the buyers. It was the duty of the buyers to find the ship and to give all the information which was necessary in order to get the licence. It is very noteworthy that, apart from the present case, or it may be the special circumstances such as the war and the export of oil of this character, when there is a prohibition and a licence has to be obtained, the material facts are in the possession of the buyer, not in the possession of the seller. All that the seller knows is that he has sold the goods to his buyer. What his buyer is going to do with them is immaterial to him. If he has undertaken to put them f.o.b. that has no reference to any particular vessel, and it may even be not a vessel going to any particular destination. But I have come to the conclusion that there was no such duty upon the defendants as the learned judge found, with the result, therefore, that there is no breach by them in not delivering in December and January.

The only default, therefore, is the non-delivery of the 10 tons in October and November. The time for assessing the damages according to the law would be at the date of delivery of each monthly quantity, but there is sufficient upon the documents and correspondence to warrant the inference, in my opinion, that the defendants were asking the plaintiffs for further time to make their delivery and that they were in default. That being so, I do not think it is open to them, when they are sued for damages and have been allowed a considerable period in order to make good their default, to say the damages must be assessed at the end of October or the end of November, 1914, notwithstanding that they have been allowed a very considerable time for delivery, and with the market rising very considerably against the buyer. I think the learned judge's view in regard to this was right. I cannot, however, accept the date of March, 1916, because on the correspondence I am satisfied that for several months before that the defendants had made it quite plain that they could not do anything further, and, although they were quite willing, they were not able, and would not be able, because the government would not grant licences. [His LORDSHIP said that the plaintiffs were only entitled to recover in respect of ten tons, and the appeal must be allowed by reducing the damages.] The plaintiffs were entitled to succeed in the court below, and I think that they must have their costs in the court below, but in this court the result must be that, as neither has been completely successful, there will be no costs of the appeal.

SCRUTTON, L.J.—This is one of the class of case which I think most judges, and which certainly I, always approach with considerable apprehension. It is a case of a complicated instalment contract which has not worked as the parties intended it to work when it was put on paper. Such a case can only be determined by a very careful following month by month, date by date, and delivery by delivery under the contract, and in considering the effects at each point of such principles of law as have been laid down for the consideration of such cases.

The first point taken can be dealt with shortly, but it is of importance to the case, for, if it is right, there is an end to the case. The defendants say that this action is brought by Messrs. Brandt & Co., and it should have been brought by Messrs. Sayles Bleacheries of the United States. They say that the wrong party has brought the action and there must be judgment for the defendants. The contract in question runs in this way: "We have this day bought from you . . . aniline oil, H. O. Brandt & Co.," with a heading from or to, as the case may be, on the bought or sold note, "for and on behalf of Sayles Bleacheries, Rhode Island, United States." The cases in which it has been discussed whether or not an agent is personally liable on a contract are innumerable, but there appears to me to be one careful principle to bear in mind, which has been stated for the last fifty years at least in approaching such cases. In Cooke v. Wilson (3), in 1856, CRESSWELL, J., said this (1 C.B.N.S. at p. 162):

"Prima facie when a man signs a contract in his own name he is a contracting party, and there must be something very strong on the face of the contract to prevent that liability from attaching to him."

Crowder, J., in the same case says (ibid. at p. 164):

"I have always understood the law to be that if a man signs a written contract he is to be considered as the contracting party unless it clearly appears that he executes it as agent only."

When one comes to what I dare say is the leading case of Gadd v. Houghton (1), one finds MELLISH, L.J., stating the same principle (1 Ex.D. at p. 360):

A "As is said in the note to Thomson v. Divenport (2), when a man signs a contract in his own name he is prima facie a contracting party and liable, and there must be something very strong on the face of the instrument to show that the liability does not attach to him."

B When I find in this contract the words "We have this day bought from you," and the signature "H. O. Brandt," in my view, something very strong is wanted to show that "we, H. O. Brandt," have not personally contracted. In Gadd v. Houghton (1) there was in the body of the document the statement: "We have this day sold to you on account of James Moran & Co., Valencia," and the Court of Appeal held that a contract worded in that form was enough to show that the person who signed in his own name, but said in the body of the contract that he sold on account of Moran & Co., was not making himself personally liable. In the present case there is no such statement in the body of the document. One note is addressed to Brandt & Co. for and on behalf of Sayles, and the bought note is said to come from H. O. Brandt for and on behalf of Sayles, but in the body of the document, "We have this day bought" or "sold" contains no qualification whatever. In my view, the fact that there is this heading to the effective part of the contract is not sufficient to displace the strong prima facie presumption that a man who says he has bought, and signs in his own name, is personally contracting. In coming to that conclusion I am aided by two facts—the one that it was important in time of war that it should be known what the destination of the goods was, and, if it appeared on the face of the document that the person who was ultimately going to get the goods was Sayles Bleacheries, Rhode Island, that was a fact which was important to the transactions being carried out, and explains why "for and on behalf of" a person in America should be put in the contract. The other fact which I take into account is that Sayles Bleacheries are foreigners, and, while I think that one cannot attach at the present day the importance that used to be attached forty or fifty years ago to the fact that the supposed principal was a foreigner, I think it is still a matter to be taken into account in deciding whether the person said to be an English agent has or has not made himself personally liable. For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that there is nothing in this contract to displace the strong prima facie presumption that a man who signs in his own name a statement that he has bought is personally liable to carry out the purchase, and I, therefore, think that the first point taken should be decided against the defendants.

F One next comes to the less attractive question of working out the instalment contract. There is one question of general importance which I desire to deal with first. The contract is: "We have this day bought from you 60 tons pure aniline oil, f.o.b. Manchester." At the time that contract was made there was no prohibition on the export of aniline oil. That is some distinction from the case which has already been decided in this court (Anglo-Russian Merchant Traders, Ltd. v. John Butt & Co. (London), Ltd. (4)), in which a contract was made at the time when there was an existing prohibition, and a question arose whose duty it was to provide the licences, exportation not being possible without a licence. In that case, which was a c.i.f. contract, BAILHACHE, J., had held that a man who contracted to sell at a time when there was a prohibition of export except by licence undertook to get the licence or pay damages. This court held that, as there was a finding of fact that the seller had done all in his power to get a licence, at any rate his obligation was not higher than that, and he was not liable. In the present case I think it becomes necessary to go further, and to decide whether in this f.o.b. contract the obligation to get a licence in case there should, after the making of the contract, be a prohibition against export except with a licence, lies upon the seller or the buyer. In my view it lies upon the buyer. The buyer must provide an effective ship—that is to say, a ship that can legally, and as it is bound to by contract, carry the goods. When the buyer has done that, the seller may ship the goods he has contracted to ship. If that is so, the licence to export is a buyer's matter. It is the sending of a ship out of the country after the goods are put on board, and it is not made a seller's matter by a statutory prohibition of the goods being put on the quay if their export is prohibited. Putting on the quay is only subsidiary to the exporting, which is the real matter of the licence. In my view, therefore, on the general question in a contract of this description, it is for the buyer to get the licence. It is said that in this case on the correspondence (though, as I must now assume, the buyer should by law and by contract get the licence) the seller has taken upon himself the burden of doing so. I have come to the conclusion that there is nothing in the correspondence which supports any legal way of putting such a burden upon the seller.

[HIS LORDSHIP then dealt with the evidence relating to the delivery of the various instalments, and concluded:] In the result, therefore, it appears to me that, just as the September quantities did, the December and January quantities drop out of the case, and the claim is left for October and November at the figure per pound fixed by A. T. LAWRENCE, J.

NEVILLE, J.—I have had the misfortune to differ from the other members of the court on the first point—namely, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to sue on the contract. I admit that where a man signs in his own name a document he is primâ facie liable. It is conceded, I understand, here that if the words used, "For and on behalf of Messrs. Sayles," had followed the signature there would be no question that there was not a contract with the plaintiffs as principals. As I understand Gadd v. Houghton (1), what it lays down is that the statement of the character in which a contracting party is contracting may be expressed with equal efficacy in words to be found in the body of the document as in words attached to the signature. The words in the present case, in my opinion, form part of the contract. I have considered that point as carefully as I can, and, having regard to the documents themselves, I confess I can come to no other conclusion but that they do form part of the contract. If they form part of the contract, then, in my opinion, they are to be found in the body of the contract in the sense in which these words are used in Gadd v. Houghton (1). In my opinion, there is no distinction in this regard to be made in the case of a foreign principal and a home principal. In Gadd v. Houghton (1) the alleged principal was a foreign trader. I rather gather that I should not have found myself in isolation in this case were it not for the fact that during the present war there is an obligation to disclose the destination of goods. With regard to that it seems to me that, although I agree that evidence of the fact is admissible as a surrounding circumstance in which the contract was made, there is nothing in it which entitles me to read plain words in other than their plain meaning. In my opinion, here the words used are perfectly plain. It may well be that they may serve a double purpose, both to give the required information and to show the character in which one of the parties is contracting. In my opinion, that would not justify me in depriving the words of the plain meaning which to my mind they undoubtedly bear. Before I leave the case I wish to express my surprise at finding in the books such a subtle discrimination attributed to the commercial mind as to draw distinctions between the words "as agents for," "on account of," and "on behalf of." To my less sophisticated intelligence in regard to contracts each of those phrases bears precisely the same meaning. With regard to the note in BENJAMIN ON SALES (5th Edn.) p. 257n., in which it is said that Paice v. Walker (5) is now a very doubtful authority—no doubt after the dictum of JAMES, L.J., in Gadd v. Houghton (1)—I wish to express my opinion that at the present time, in view of Gadd v. Houghton (1), it is of no authority at all. With regard to the rest of the case, I have nothing to add to what the other members of the court have said, and I agree with them.

Appeal allowed in part.

Solicitors: Pritchard, Englefield & Co., for Boote, Edgar & Co., Manchester; Grundy, Kershaw & Co.

[Reported by F. J. M. CHAPLIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re FIREPROOF DOORS, LTD. UMNEY v. FIREPROOF DOORS, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Astbury, J.), March 28, 29, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 142; 85 L.J.Ch. 444; 114 L.T. 994; 60 Sol. Jo. 513]

Company—Debenture—Stamping—Irregular stamping—Attempted ratification by shareholders—Agreement to issue debenture—Equitable debenture.

By an article of a company: "The seal of the company shall not be affixed to any instrument except by the authority of a resolution of the board of directors, and in the presence of at least two directors and of the secretary. . . ." In breach of this article debentures were sealed in the presence of only one director and the secretary. At a subsequent meeting the shareholders purported to ratify the debentures, and they were also signed by a second director and re-sealed in the presence of two directors and the secretary.

Held: while what was done could not amount to ratification of the sealing of the debentures, nor to their re-issue as new and valid debentures, it appeared that the company intended to create the debentures, as in proper circumstances they had power to do, and that the shareholders knew that they had received the debenture holder's money and had undertaken to give her security for it, and, therefore, the improperly sealed documents were evidence of an agreement to issue debentures to the debenture holder who, consequently, had equitable debentures as against the company.

Company—Directors—Quorum—Quorum of one director—Delegation of duties—Delegation to one director.

It may be that one director cannot form a quorum at a board meeting, but where a company has an article, such as reg. 102 of Table A (in Sched. I to the Companies Act, 1948) which provides that the directors may "delegate any of their powers to committees consisting of such member or members of their body as they think fit", that delegation may be to one director.

Notes. Referred to: J. C. Houghton & Co. v. Northard, Lowe and Wills, Ltd., [1927] 1 K.B. 246.

As to quorum of and delegation by directors and to debentures, see 6 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 60, 61, 296, 297, 431, 432, 457 et seq. For cases see 9 DIGEST (Repl.) 505, 506, 544–547, and 10 DIGEST (Repl.) 763 et seq. For Companies Act, 1948, see 3 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 452.

Cases referred to:

- (1) York Tramways Co. v. Willows (1882), 8 Q.B.D. 685; 51 L.J.Q.B. 257; 46 L.T. 296; 30 W.R. 624, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 453, 2973.
- (2) County of Gloucester Bank v. Rudry Merthyr Steam and House Coal Colliery Co., [1895] 1 Ch. 629; 64 L.J.Ch. 451; 72 L.T. 375; 43 W.R. 486; 39 Sol. Jo. 331; 2 Mans. 223; 12 R. 183, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 545, 3589.
- (3) Re Rotherham Alum and Chemical Co. (1883), 25 Ch.D. 103; 53 L.J.Ch. 290; 50 L.T. 219; sub nom. Re Rotherham Alum and Chemical Co., Ltd., Ex parte Peace & Co., 32 W.R. 131, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 680, 4490.
- (4) Re North Hallenbeagle Mining Co., Knight's Case (1867), 2 Ch. App. 321; 36 L.J.Ch. 317; 15 L.T. 546; 15 W.R. 294, L.J.J.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 544, 3581.
- (5) Biggerstaff v. Rowatt's Wharf, Ltd., Howard v. Rowatt's Wharf, Ltd., [1896] 2 Ch. 93; 65 L.J.Ch. 536; 74 L.T. 473; 44 W.R. 536, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 675, 4458.
- (6) Re Strand Music Hall Co. (1865), 3 De G.J. & Sm. 147; 35 Beav. 153, 163; 13 L.T. 177; 14 W.R. 6; 46 E.R. 594, L.J.J.; 10 Digest (Repl.) 751, 4886.
- (7) Ross v. Army and Navy Hotel Co. (1886), 34 Ch.D. 43; 55 L.T. 472; 35 W.R. 40; 2 T.L.R. 907, C.A.; 10 Digest (Repl.) 785, 5106.

- (8) Parker v. Taswell (1858), 2 De G. & J. 559; 27 L.J.Ch. 812; 31 L.T.O.S. 226; 22 J.P. 432; 4 Jur.N.S. 1006; 6 W.R. 608; 44 E.R. 1106, L.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 437, 800.

Also referred to in argument :

Re Queensland Land and Coal Co., Davis v. Martin, [1894] 3 Ch. 181; 63 L.J.Ch. 810; 71 L.T. 115; 42 W.R. 600; 10 T.L.R. 550; 38 Sol. Jo. 579; 1 Mans. 355; 8 R. 476; 10 Digest (Repl.) 762, 4944.

Pegge v. Neath District Tramways Co., [1898] 1 Ch. 183; 67 L.J.Ch. 17; 77 L.T. 550; 46 W.R. 243; 14 T.L.R. 62; 42 Sol. Jo. 66; 10 Digest (Repl.) 786, 5113.

Re Tilbury Portland Cement Co., Ltd. (1893), 62 L.J.Ch. 814; 69 L.T. 495; 37 Sol. Jo. 683; 3 R. 709; 10 Digest (Repl.) 751, 4890.

Zimble v. Abrahams, [1903] 1 K.B. 577; 72 L.J.K.B. 103; 88 L.T. 46; 51 W.R. 343; 19 T.L.R. 189, C.A.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 460, 1015.

Rolland v. Hart (1871), 6 Ch. App. 678; 40 L.J.Ch. 701; 25 L.T. 191; 19 W.R. 962, L.C.; 1 Digest (Repl.) 709, 2602.

Sharp v. Dawes (1876), 2 Q.B.D. 26; 46 L.J.Q.B. 104; 36 L.T. 188; 25 W.R. 66, C.A.; 10 Digest (Repl.) 1196, 8371.

Boschock Proprietary Co., Ltd. v. Fake, [1906] 1 Ch. 148; 75 L.J.Ch. 261; 94 L.T. 398; 54 W.R. 359; 22 T.L.R. 136; 50 Sol. Jo. 170; 13 Mans. 100; 9 Digest (Repl.) 465, 3042.

Re Harrogate Estates, Ltd., [1903] 1 Ch. 498; 72 L.J.Ch. 313; 88 L.T. 82; 51 W.R. 334; 19 T.L.R. 246; 47 Sol. Jo. 298; 10 Mans. 113; 10 Digest (Repl.) 813, 5274.

Re Tavistock Iron Works Co., Lyster's Case (1867), L.R. 4 Eq. 233; 36 L.J.Ch. 616; 16 L.T. 824; 31 J.P. 726; 15 W.R. 1007; 9 Digest (Repl.) 545, 3586.

Debenture Holder's Action brought by the plaintiff, Mrs. Anna Marguerite Umney, on behalf of herself and all other debenture holders against the defendant company, which was in liquidation and appeared by the liquidator, for a declaration that the debentures might be enforced, by sale or otherwise, for payment of principal, interest, and costs, and for an account.

The defendant company, Fireproof Doors, Ltd., was incorporated on Feb. 3, 1908, for the purpose (inter alia) of acquiring and working the business of manufacturers of fireproof doors and of exploiting a patent belonging to one Paul Schwarze, and other businesses described in the memorandum of association. The memorandum of association gave power to borrow or raise money on mortgages, debentures, or debenture stock, and to charge all or any of the company's property or assets, present or future, including the company's uncalled capital. No articles of association were registered, and, therefore, the regulations of the company were the regulations contained in Table A in the first schedule to the Companies Act, 1862 (see now Companies Act, 1948, Sched. 11). On Feb. 19, 1908, a meeting of the signatories to the memorandum of association of the company was held, and Herbert Williams Umney, the husband of the plaintiff, and Paul Schwarze were appointed to be directors of the company, and they were the only directors of the company from Feb. 19, 1908, until May 2, 1912, when Herbert C. Wright was appointed an additional director. This meeting of signatories determined that a quorum of directors should be one, as it was intended that H. W. Umney should act as managing director of the business in England, P. Schwarze being resident in Germany, and H. W. Umney was appointed managing director for one year. On April 30, 1908, H. W. Umney and Schwarze met in Germany, and resolutions were passed by them acting as a board with regard to altering previous arrangements as to the company's capital, but there was nothing in the minutes of such resolutions with reference to a quorum or as to H. W. Umney continuing to act as managing director of the business in London, though the evidence was that these matters were discussed and that Schwarze agreed to what had been done by H. W. Umney, and arranged with him that he should continue to be sole manager in future as in the past of the company's business in England. From that time until July, 1913,

- A when the number of directors was raised from three to seven, the business in England was carried on entirely by H. W. Umney.

The relevant articles of association were art. 76 [see now Table A, 1948, reg. 113] which provided that:

- B "The seal of the company shall not be affixed to any instrument except by the authority of a resolution of the board of directors, and in the presence of at least two directors and of the secretary or such other person as the directors may appoint for the purpose; and those two directors and secretary or other person as aforesaid shall sign every instrument to which the seal of the company is so affixed in their presence."

Article 88 [reg. 99 of 1948]:

- C "The quorum necessary for the transaction of the business of the directors may be fixed by the directors, and unless so fixed shall (when the number of directors exceeds three) be three."

Article 91 [reg. 102 of 1948]:

- D "The directors may delegate any of their powers to committees consisting of such member or members of their body as they think fit; any committee so formed shall in the exercise of the powers so delegated conform to any regulations that may be imposed on them by the directors."

Article 94 [reg. 105 of 1948] provided that:

- E "All acts done by any meeting of the directors or of a committee of directors, or by any person acting as a director, shall, notwithstanding that it be afterwards discovered that there was some defect in the appointment of any such directors or persons acting as aforesaid, or that they or any of them were disqualified, be as valid as if every such person had been duly appointed and was qualified to be a director."

- F At a general meeting held on Dec. 21, 1911, it was proposed to issue a series of debentures for £4,000. This meeting was adjourned from time to time till Feb. 19, 1912, when the shareholders in general meeting resolved:

"That the directors having reported the needs of raising money, the debentures put before the meeting be approved, but that the matter be left to the board to raise more capital on such terms as to the board might seem fitting."

- G Subsequently £4,000 was borrowed by the issue of a series of mortgage debentures, which were duly registered as a series in accordance with s. 93 (3) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 [see Companies Act, 1948, s. 95 (8)]. H. W. Umney alone acting as a committee purported to authorise at various dates the issue and the sealing of the debentures Nos. 1-20 and Nos. 22-27, which included the five debentures held by the plaintiff, and the seal was affixed to such debentures in the presence of H. W. Umney and the secretary of the company only, and they were signed by H. W. Umney and the secretary only. These mortgage debentures were each for the sum of £100 and were all in the same form, and by each of such debentures the company agreed to pay the principal sum secured thereby on July 1, 1919, and in the meantime to pay interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum by equal half-yearly payments on July 1 and Jan. 1 in every year.
- I The company charged with the payment of such principal and interest its undertaking and goodwill and all its goods, chattels, effects, and property of every description, both present and future, including its uncalled capital. Each of such debentures was described as one of a series of forty debentures for securing the principal sum of £100, and was stated to be issued upon condition (inter alia) that the debentures should rank pari passu as a first charge without any preference or priority over one another, and that the charge so created should be a floating security, but so that the company should not be at liberty to create any mortgage or charge in priority to or pari passu with the debentures. There was the further condition that if default were made in payment of interest for two months the holder of the debenture could call in the principal, and thereupon the charge should become immediately enforceable. The plaintiff was the registered holder of five of the said debentures, of which three were dated Mar. 30, 1912, and two were dated Apr. 19, 1912, for principal sums amounting to £500. In July, 1913, in pursuance of a special resolution of the company duly passed, the number of directors was raised from three to seven. On Jan. 19, 1914, a resolution was passed by the directors that two directors should form a quorum, and the remaining debentures, Nos. 28-35 and 36-41, were issued and sealed at different meetings of two or more directors, and were signed by and sealed in the presence of two directors and the secretary of the company. On Dec. 22, 1913, at a board meeting at which three directors were present, they forming a sufficient quorum, a resolution was passed that the interest which was then overdue on the debentures should be paid as soon as possible. On Jan. 27, 1914, the question having been raised in the meantime that the sealing of the debentures was insufficient and invalid by reason of one director only having been a witness thereto, at a general meeting of shareholders it was unanimously resolved that the affixing of the seal to such debentures attested by one director and the secretary only be ratified and approved, and the signature of P. Schwarze was obtained at this time to the debentures. Default was made in payment of the debenture interest due on July 1, 1914, and of every half-year's interest subsequently becoming due. The principal money was called in and payment demanded without success. On Oct. 15, 1915, a receiver and manager was appointed, and on Nov. 1, 1915, an extraordinary resolution was passed to wind-up the company.

The plaintiff alleged that at the meeting in Germany between H. W. Umney and P. Schwarze there was a proper resolution by them that at all future meetings of the board one director should constitute a quorum, and that, therefore, the issue and sealing of the twenty-six debentures were duly authorised by H. W. Umney alone, and, further, that the regulations of the company did not require that the debentures should be under seal. Alternatively, the plaintiff said that if the resolutions authorising such issue and sealing were invalid by reason of there being no proper quorum, the plaintiff and the other holders of such debentures had no knowledge or notice of the fact that no quorum was present at the meetings at which such resolutions were passed; that at the general meeting of the company duly convened on Jan. 27, 1914, a resolution was passed unanimously that the issue of all the debentures Nos. 1-20 and 22-27 should be ratified and confirmed, and that, to render such debentures regular upon the face of them the signature of an additional director should be affixed to each of them, and accordingly all such debentures were signed by P. Schwarze; and that the company agreed with the respective holders of the debentures in consideration of £100 paid by them to issue to them valid debentures and paid interest on such debentures to Jan. 1, 1914, and, therefore, was estopped from denying the validity of the same. By their defence the company pleaded that there had been no resolution of the board of directors authorising the issue of the twenty-six debentures ever passed, and that no resolution of the board of directors that the seal of the company should be affixed was ever passed. Further, that the seal of the company was not affixed to such debentures in the manner required by art. 76 of the articles of association. On Oct. 15, 1915, the plaintiff issued the writ in this action.

Frank Russell, K.C., and E. F. Spence for the plaintiff.

Cunliffe, K.C., and C. A. Bennett for the defendant company and the liquidator.

ASTBURY, J.—This is a debenture-holders' action brought by Mrs. Umney on behalf of herself and all other debenture-holders against the defendant company, which is in liquidation and appears by the liquidator. Shortly after the action was brought the plaintiff applied for the appointment of a receiver and manager, and Mr. John Baker was appointed in the presence and with the consent of the defendant company. By the defence the validity of the plaintiff's debentures is put in A issue on a number of purely technical grounds. She holds five debentures of £100 each, for which she has paid £500. Three of these debentures are dated Mar. 30, 1912, and the remaining two bear date Apr. 19, 1912, and they were duly registered as being debentures of a series on Apr. 19, 1912. Put shortly, the defence is, first, that Mrs. Umney employed her husband as her agent in connection with the taking of her debentures, that he was managing director of the company, and, therefore, through him she had notice of all irregularities. These irregularities were: (i) that no quorum was constituted when it was determined that debentures should be issued; (ii) that no quorum was present when it was determined that the debentures should be sealed; and (iii) that the debentures were not properly sealed, as they were sealed in the presence only of one director and the secretary instead of in the presence of two directors and the secretary. A number of points were raised subsidiary to those I have mentioned.

The signatories at the meeting of Feb. 19, 1908, purported to determine that a quorum of directors should consist of one although they had no power to do so. The evidence has satisfied me that at the meeting on April 30, 1908, at which Schwarze and Umney were present in Germany, Umney produced the minute book and the question of the quorum consisting of one was discussed, and the matters of the company's business were gone into, Schwarze agreeing to what had been done. Schwarze arranged with Umney that he (Umney) should continue to be sole manager in future as in the past of the company's business in England. From that time it was carried on in England entirely by Umney as either the delegate of the board or as constituting a quorum, the seal of the company being often affixed in his presence and that of the secretary only. The obligation of the issue of the debentures was recognised at the board meeting of Dec. 22, 1913, at which a sufficient quorum was present, when it was resolved that the interest which was then overdue on the debentures should be paid as soon as possible, and at the general meeting of shareholders on Jan. 27, 1914, it was resolved that the affixing of the seal to such debentures attested by one director and the secretary only be ratified and approved. As a matter of fact the signature of Schwarze was obtained at this time to the debentures, but that was obviously not sufficient to create a reissue or remedy the insufficient sealing and make the debentures valid.

Under these circumstances the question is: Was there sufficient irregularity to prevent the debentures being valid, the cash for them having been paid bona fide? The articles of association which are relevant to this issue are art. 76, which is part of the constitution of this company, and was not complied with, with the result that the sealing of these debentures was ineffectual and void, arts. 88, 91 and 94. First, as to the defence that Umney acted as agent of his wife, the plaintiff, and that, therefore, she must be taken to have had notice of the irregularities in the issue of the debentures to her. The facts as to this are very simple. Mrs. Umney had no separate banking account, but banked by her husband, and as a shareholder in this company she received a notice asking for subscriptions to an issue of debentures. She told her husband about this, and arranged with him that he should draw out of his banking account sufficient of her money to pay £500 for the debentures which she had decided to subscribe for. He paid the money into the company's bank, and, therefore, the entry in the company's books was that this money came from Mr. Umney. I hold that his knowledge as a director did not come to her just because he acted as her banker.

I The next point is that a quorum of one was not validly fixed as it was only authorised at a meeting of the signatories and not by the directors; and it is said that a resolution by the signatories is not enough. For that York Tramways Co., Ltd. v. Willows (1) was relied on as an authority. But I think that the effect of what took place at the meeting at Quelle in Germany on April 30, 1908, was that a quorum of one was sufficiently fixed by the directors, Schwarze and Umney. Umney informed Schwarze of what had been done, and there was a recognition by them both, and they assented to it as directors that in future one should act alone.

This amounted to a delegation by the two to Umney of the sole managing directorship so far as London was concerned. If I am right in that, then there was no irregularity in the authorisation of the issue of these debentures nor in the authorisation that they should be sealed. The only irregularity was the sealing in the presence of one director and the secretary, instead of two directors and the secretary. If I am wrong in this, then as far as Mrs. Umney is concerned, who had no notice of these irregularities, the point is immaterial, having regard to the decision in County of Gloucester Bank v. Rudry Merthyr Steam and House Coal Colliery Co. (2).

Next it is said that a quorum of one anyhow is illegal and invalid as it is not possible for a quorum to be constituted by one. Before dealing with that I should say that it was argued that all minutes of resolutions must be entered, and that the minutes alone are exclusive evidence of what is done or decided by a board of directors. From the decisions in Re Rotherham Alum and Chemical Co. (3) and Knight's Case (4) it is clear that a decision of directors need not necessarily appear in the minute book if the court is satisfied that the resolution was passed. Then it is said a quorum of one is impossible, and it is quite true that one shareholder cannot form a meeting of shareholders, but it is not clear that one director cannot form a quorum. However that may be, it is clear on the authorities that under art. 91 directors may delegate their powers to one of their number, and I think this power was sufficiently delegated to Umney.

Up to this point then we have debentures purporting to be issued under seal for value which are not affected by any irregularities except that they are not properly sealed. It is argued that, this company having no real estate, it is not necessary for these debentures to be sealed. But I think Umney had power as managing director or power was delegated to him to borrow money on debentures, the company having power to do so, and, as far as the plaintiff is concerned, she is not affected with notice of any irregularity. I think that a sealing was not necessary to give effect to these debentures, and under the decision in Biggerstaff v. Rowatt's Wharf, Ltd., Howard v. Rowatt's Wharf (5), a document purporting to be a debenture which is only signed by a director and not sealed by the company would have been sufficient. Further, having issued such debentures, a proper board meeting in December, 1913, recognised the debentures so issued, and on Jan. 27, 1914, a shareholders' meeting purported to ratify them and make good the insufficient sealing, which, however, they had no power to do, but I think that the conduct of the proceedings at the meeting amounted to showing that the shareholders had knowledge that they had received the plaintiff's money and had undertaken to give her security, and knowing of one irregularity tried to put it right. I think that amounts to a ratification in her favour of the fact that she was the holder of a valid security as against the company. Therefore the plaintiff has a valid unsealed debenture. But it is also contended that the debentures so issued to her, if irregular and insufficient, are, in any case, sufficient evidence of an agreement to issue to her five valid debentures, part of the series authorised, in which case she would have an equitable debenture on the authority of the rule laid down in Re Strand Music Hall Co. (6) and the money decisions which have followed that case. In that case TREXER, L.J., said (3 De G.J. & Sm. at p. 158):

"I apprehend, however, that where this court is satisfied that it was intended to create a charge, and that the parties who intended to create it had the power to do so, it will give effect to the intention, notwithstanding any mistake which may have occurred in the attempt to effect it."

In Ross v. Army and Navy Hotel Co. (7) that passage by TREXER, L.J., was cited and followed. In all these cases, however, the holder of the charge was really in possession of two documents, an agreement for a charge and the charge itself, and it was the charge itself which in each of these cases was bad; still the principle can be applied in this case. Again, a lease void under the Real Property Act, 1845,

A s. 3, may be good as an agreement: see Parker v. Taswell (8), 2 De G. & J. at p. 570; and I see no reason why debentures should not be similarly treated.

Lastly, it is contended that the debentures are not validly registered under s. 93 (1) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, which provided that every mortgage or charge created after July 1, 1908, and being a mortgage or charge for the purpose of securing any issue of debentures,

B "shall, so far as any security on the company's property or undertaking is thereby conferred, be void against the liquidator and any creditor of the company, unless the prescribed particulars of the mortgage or charge, together with the instrument (if any) by which the mortgage or charge is created or evidenced, are delivered to or received by the registrar of companies for registration in manner required by this Act within twenty-one days after the date of its creation, but without prejudice to any contract or obligation for repayment of the money thereby secured, and when a mortgage or charge becomes void under this section the money secured thereby shall immediately become payable."

C
D By sub-s. (3), on a series of debentures being issued by a company, certain particulars were required to be delivered to the registrar within twenty-one days after the execution of the deed containing the charge, or, if there be no such deed, after the execution of any debentures of the series, the particulars to be accompanied by the deed, or, if none, one of the debentures of the series. The file contained the particulars thus required by sub-s. (3), and the registrar, in accordance with sub-s. (5), issued a certificate as required that sub-s. (3) had been complied with, and a copy of such certificate was indorsed on each debenture. By sub-s. (2) of s. 93 it is provided that:

E
F "The registrar shall keep, with respect to each company, a register in the prescribed form of all the mortgages and charges created by the company after July 1, 1908, and requiring registration under this section, and shall, on payment of the prescribed fee, enter in the register, with respect to every such mortgage or charge, the date of creation, the amount secured by it, short particulars of the property mortgaged or charged, and the names of the mortgagees or persons entitled to the charge."

G
H The particulars required by this subsection are different from those required by sub-s. (3). Here there was no issue raised on the pleadings that these charges were insufficiently registered, but by a letter of Mar. 21, 1916, last the defendants' solicitors informed the plaintiff that they intended on the trial of the action, if the necessity arose, to ask for leave to deliver a rejoinder alleging that any agreement by the company to issue debentures to the plaintiff was invalid because the provisions of s. 93 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, had not been complied with with respect to any such agreement. The defendants do not put this in evidence or on the file which contained the particulars required by sub-s. (3) of s. 93, and that the registrar's certificate stated that sub-s. (3) had been complied with. I assume, without deciding it, that the defendants are entitled to go on and say because the file shows that the particulars required by sub-s. (3) were delivered, therefore, particulars required by sub-s. (2) must be assumed not to have been delivered. In the view which I take of this case, this point does not help the defendants. This sub-s. (2) was not complied with because the issue was treated as an issue of a series of debentures, and, therefore, the particulars required by sub-s. (3) were delivered.

I
I think, therefore, the plaintiff did become the holder of five unsealed debentures, part of a series, and, therefore, registration of these under sub-s. (3) was sufficient. If I am wrong in that, I think that each holder of debentures became the holder of documents which were evidence of an agreement to issue a series of debentures, and particulars given of them in accordance with the requirements of sub-s. (3) of

s. 93 were sufficient. The plaintiff's debentures are, therefore, valid against the liquidator. I should mention that the debts due at the present time have been only recently contracted and have all been incurred since the issue of these debentures.

Solicitors: Edwin E. Clark; Langford & Redfern.

[Reported by G. P. LANGWORTHY, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BOOTH STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. CARGO FLEET IRON CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Reading, C.J., Warrington, L.J., and Scrutton, J.), March 15, 16, May 23, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 570; 85 L.J.K.B. 1577; 115 L.T. 199; 32 T.L.R. 535;
13 Asp. M.L.C. 451; 22 Com. Cas. 9]

Shipping—Carriage by sea—Stoppage in transitu—Liability of vendor of goods for unpaid freight—Right of vendor to delivery to him of goods before end of voyage.

Where the unpaid vendor of goods exercises his right to stop them in transitu while they are being carried to the buyer he brings himself under a personal obligation to the shipowner to take, or give directions for, the delivery of the goods, and that involves the discharge of the shipowner's lien for unpaid freight. If he repudiates the obligation and so conducts himself as to prevent the shipowner completing his voyage and earning his freight, the shipowner can maintain an action against him for damages for the breach of the obligation. The damages may be the equivalent of the freight.

Per SCRUTTON, L.J.: An unpaid vendor, exercising his right of stoppage in transitu cannot demand actual possession during the transit against the will of the shipowner or direct the shipowner to deliver to him except at the contractual place of destination. The goods may be under other goods in the hold; the ship may have contractual engagements to carry other goods to other ports; policies of insurance may be affected by detention or delay. The shipowner may, and it is frequently convenient he should, re-deliver before the contract place of delivery to the unpaid vendor on an indemnity, but he cannot be forced to do so. It is clear that, to get the goods from the shipowner, the vendor must discharge any lien the shipowner has for particular charges or freight on the goods in question, but not any general lien by contract or usage for other sums due from the consignee, not due in respect of the particular goods. The unpaid vendor cannot prolong the shipowner's obligation to hold the goods after he [the shipowner] is ready to make delivery at the end of the voyage. It is not necessary to hold that the vendor became a party to the original contract of carriage: his obligation follows from his interfering with that contract.

Notes. As to stoppage in transitu, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 127 et seq., and for cases see 39 DIGEST 612 et seq. For Sale of Goods Act, 1893, see 22 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 985.

Cases referred to:

- (1) The Tigress (or Tigris) (1863), Brown & Lush 38; 1 New Rep. 449; 32 L.J.P.M. & A. 97; 8 L.T. 117; 9 Jur. N.S. 361; 11 W.R. 538; 1 Mar. L.C. 323; 167 E.R. 286; 39 Digest 637, 2337.
- (2) Wiseman v. Vandeputt (1690), 2 Vern. 203; 23 E.R. 732; 39 Digest 613, 2712.

- A (3) Snee v. Prescott (1743), 1 Atk. 745; 26 E.R. 157, L.C.; 39 Digest 629, 2261.
- (4) Gibson v. Carruthers (1841), 8 M. & W. 321; 11 L.J.Ex. 138; 151 E.R. 1061; 39 Digest 638, 2349.
- (5) D'Aquila v. Lambert (1761), Amb. 399; 2 Eden, 75; 27 E.R. 266, L.C.; 39 Digest 614, 2114.
- B (6) United States Steel Products Co. v. Great Western Rail. Co., [1916] 1 A.C. 189; 85 L.J.K.B. 1; 113 L.T. 886; 31 T.L.R. 561; 59 Sol. Jo. 648; 21 Com. Cas. 105, H.L.; 39 Digest 613, 2108.
- (7) Kemp v. Falk (1882), 7 App. Cas. 573; 52 L.J.Ch. 167; 47 L.T. 454; 5 Asp. M.L.C. 1; sub nom. Re Kiell, Kemp v. Falk, 31 W.R. 125, H.L.; 39 Digest 635, 2308.
- C (8) Oppenheim v. Russell (1802), 3 Bos. & P. 42; 127 E.R. 24; 39 Digest 613, 2105.
- (9) Lickbarrow v. Mason (1787), 2 Term Rep. 63; 100 E.R. 35; on appeal sub nom. Mason v. Lickbarrow (1790), 1 Hy. Bl. 357, Ex.Ch.; on appeal sub nom. Lickbarrow v. Mason (1793), 4 Bro. Parl. Cas. 57; 6 East, 22, n., H.L.; 39 Digest 614, 2115.
- D (10) Northey and Lewis, Ass. of Leyland and Cragg v. Field (1797), 2 Esp. 613; 170 E.R. 472, N.P.; 39 Digest 615, 2145.
- (11) Litt v. Cowley (1816), Holt, N.P. 338; 2 Marsh. 457; 7 Taunt. 169; 129 E.R. 68; 39 Digest 637, 2330.
- (12) Stewart v. Rogerson (1871), L.R. 6 (C.P. 424; 41 Digest 526, 3550).
- (13) Pontifar v. Midland Rail. Co. (1877), 3 Q.B.D. 23; 47 L.J.Q.B. 28; 37 L.T. 403; 26 W.R. 209, D.C.; 39 Digest 638, 2341.
- E (14) Taylor v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Rail. Co., [1895] 1 Q.B. 134; 64 L.J.Q.B. 6; 71 L.T. 596; 59 J.P. 100; 43 W.R. 120; 11 T.L.R. 27; 39 Sol. Jo. 42; 14 R. 34, C.A.; 42 Digest 970, 21.
- (15) Gibson v. Carruthers (1841), 8 M. & W. 321; 11 L.J.Ex. 138; 151 E.R. 1061; 39 Digest 638, 2349.
- F (16) Wentworth v. Oultawaite (1842), 10 M. & W. 436; 12 L.J.Ex. 172; 152 E.R. 541; 39 Digest 620, 2181.
- (17) Phelps, Stokes & Co. v. Comber (1885), 29 Ch.D. 813; 54 L.J.Ch. 1017; 52 L.T. 873; 33 W.R. 829; 5 Asp. M.L.C. 428, C.A.; 39 Digest 631, 2289.
- (18) Whitehead v. Anderson (1842), 9 M. & W. 518; 11 L.J.Ex. 157; 152 E.R. 219; 39 Digest 622, 2200.
- G (19) Somes v. British Empire Shipping Co. (1860), 8 H.L. Cas. 338; 30 L.J.Q.B. 229; 2 L.T. 547; 6 Jur. N.S. 761; 8 W.R. 707; 11 E.R. 459, H.L.; 32 Digest 253, 390.

Appeal by plaintiffs from a decision of BAILHACHE, J., in an action by ship-owners to recover freight or damages from the defendants, unpaid vendors of goods, who had stopped the goods in transitu. BAILHACHE, J., held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the defendants had prevented them carrying the goods to their destination and tendering them there. He, accordingly, gave judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed.

Maurice Hill, K.C., and M. Macnaghten for the plaintiffs.

Leck, K.C., and Raeburn for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 23, 1916. The following judgments were read.

LORD READING, C.J.—This case raises a novel and interesting point of law, of some importance to carriers and merchants—namely, whether an unpaid vendor who has stopped goods in transitu can be made liable for the freight on the goods, or for damages for having prevented the carrier earning the freight. The plaintiffs claim to recover freight or damages from the defendants, the unpaid vendors of certain goods carried by the plaintiffs and consigned to the purchasers. The defendants were not parties to the contract of carriage, but gave notice of stoppage in transitu whilst the goods were being carried by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs acted on this notice, and claim that in the circumstances the defendants are liable to them for the amount of the freight on the goods. The defendants deny that they have incurred any liability to the plaintiffs for freight or damages by the giving of this notice or otherwise. BAILHACHE, J., came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had not completed the voyage, and that they had failed to prove that the defendants had prevented them carrying the goods to their destination and tendering them there, and for these reasons he gave judgment for the defendants. The learned judge did not decide whether the defendants would have been liable to the plaintiffs if he had found in their favour on the facts, but expressed the view that he should have been disposed to grant the relief claimed. From that judgment the plaintiffs appeal.

The plaintiffs are shipowners trading from the United Kingdom to ports in Brazil. The defendants are manufacturers of steel rails and other material used in the construction of railways. They sold certain steel rails and fish-plates to the South American Railway Construction Co., Ltd., which was constructing a railway in Brazil under a concession from the Brazilian government. In the autumn of 1913 the defendants, acting under the instructions of the British Maritime Trust, Ltd., given on behalf of the Construction Co., delivered certain parcels of steel rails and fish-plates to be carried by the plaintiffs' steamships to Paranahyba in Brazil. The defendants were under obligations to deliver the goods "f.o.b. Middlesbrough" or on certain terms "f.o.b. Liverpool," payment to be made in exchange for shipping documents. Six hundred tons of rails and fifty-five tons of fish-plates were shipped at Middlesbrough in the Napo and 400 tons were shipped in the Raronia for transshipment at Liverpool into the Crispin. The Napo and the Crispin were steamships owned by the plaintiffs. Although the defendants were the actual shippers of the rails and plates on these vessels for carriage to Paranahyba, they were not parties to the contract of affreightment with the plaintiffs. Under arrangement made between the British Maritime Trust, Ltd., on behalf of the Construction Co., and the plaintiffs, the Construction Co. were the consignees of the goods, and were also treated as the shippers, and the freight was payable by them before the departure of the ship. The mates' receipts for the goods as shipped were received by the defendants and forwarded by them to the plaintiffs, who, after making out the bills of lading, cancelled the mates' receipts and returned them to the defendants. The bills of lading for the goods on the Napo and the Crispin, dated Oct. 6 and 8, 1913, respectively, were held by the plaintiffs until payment of the freight. The freight has not been paid and the bills of lading have never been issued. The rails and plates were never carried to Paranahyba, their destination under the contract, but were landed at Cajueiro, a small island owned by the plaintiffs in the Bay of Tutoya, in Brazil, Paranahyba being situate at a distance of sixty miles from Tutoya up the river. On a voyage to Paranahyba the ocean transport ends at Tutoya, and the carriage up the river to Paranahyba is made by means of lighters. This river is navigable for the lighters only when the tides serve, which occurs twice or thrice in a month. In the ordinary course and if the tide is serving, the goods are taken from the ship at Tutoya and immediately placed in the lighters for carriage to Paranahyba. If the tide does not serve, the goods are landed by the plaintiffs at Cajueiro and are left there until the lighters can carry them to Paranahyba. There is a bonded warehouse at Paranahyba capable of receiving 300 or 400 tons of cargo, but steel rails and fish-plates are never placed in the warehouse. The practice is that Custom House guards accompany the lighters to Paranahyba, and, in the case of heavy goods, such as steel rails and fish-plates, the duty is assessed and paid in the lighters, and the goods are thus "dispatched". This term is used to denote the passing of the goods through the customs and the payment of the duty leviable upon them.

- A If the rails are not sent forward at once for use, they must lie at Paranahyba in the open, as there is no warehouse accommodation for them. They cannot, however, be landed at Paranahyba unless the duty has been paid upon them.

On Oct. 14, 1913, the defendants became aware that the purchasers were in financial difficulties, and on that date wrote to the plaintiffs' agents requesting them to refrain from handing over the bills of lading until further notice from the defendants. On Oct. 27, 1913, the defendants gave notice to the plaintiffs in the following terms:

B "Please arrange to prevent any rails and fish-plates shipped per Napo and Crispin being handed over to South American Construction Co. at Paranahyba without bill of lading or our authority to release."

- C On the same day the plaintiffs' agents wrote to the defendants:

D "We may say that we have declined to part with the bills of lading for the cargo shipped by you per steamship Napo and steamship Crispin to the shippers, the South American Railway Construction Co., pending payment by them of the freight due, and we now take note that you desire us not to part with them irrespective of this condition. We are forwarding to Messrs. the Booth Steamship Co., Ltd., Liverpool, a copy of your message. They may perhaps address you direct on the subject, as we understand the steamship Napo is getting due at her destination, but, failing this, we will advise you as soon as we receive their reply. The question of lien in a Brazilian port is a difficult one. Would it simplify matters if you paid the freight and took up the bills of lading under a guarantee of indemnity to the ship-owners?"

On the next day the defendants refused to fall in with this suggestion as to the payment by them of the freight. On Oct. 29, 1913, the defendants gave the following notice to the plaintiffs:

- F "We beg to inclose copies of letters which we have exchanged with your agents, Messrs. Moxon, Salt & Co. Please note that we look to you not to hand over the material shipped per steamship Napo and steamship Crispin to the South American Railway Construction Co. or anyone else without authority from us. We give you this notice as we understand you are holding our bills of lading for freight."

- G It is not in dispute that these letters constituted an effective notice of stoppage in transitu, that the defendants, as unpaid vendors, had the right to give it, and that the plaintiffs accepted it and promised to act upon it. The plaintiffs had no alternative in the matter; they were, indeed, bound to act upon the notice, and, if they disregarded it and delivered the goods to the consignees, they would be liable to the defendants for damages for wrongful conversion: The Tigress (1).

- H On Oct. 29 the Napo arrived at Tutoya; the Crispin did not arrive until Nov. 25. On Oct. 30 the plaintiffs' agents at Middlesbrough advised the defendants of the arrival of the Napo at Tutoya, and informed them that it was necessary to take some prompt action to deal with the rails on board the vessel. They added that the plaintiffs were willing to take the defendants' instructions regarding the disposal of the rails, and in this connection would act as agents for the defendants to hold the rails under their orders, subject to the payment of any charges which might be incurred. On Oct. 31, the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants:

I "We beg to confirm our telegram of today as follows: 'Acting on your instructions we shall not surrender bills of lading to the South American Railway Co. without your authority. We shall commence landing rails forthwith for your account, holding bills of lading at your disposal.' We shall be glad to have your specific instructions without delay."

On the same day the defendants replied:

"Telegram received. Note you will not surrender bills of lading without our authority, which is in order. For the rest we cannot accept responsibility for your landing rails at Tutoya."

On Nov. 1, the plaintiffs telegraphed to defendants:

"You have instructed us not to deliver the cargo ex Napo to the bill of lading consignees, thus stopping the goods on the basis of your lien in transit. We are carrying out your instructions, and must land cargo at Paranahyba for your account, and look to you for all consequent charges."

On Nov. 1, the defendants wrote to plaintiffs:

"While we have nothing to do with the decision you have apparently arrived at for your protection to land the material at Tutoya instead of Paranahyba . . . we look to you to hold the bills of lading at our disposal, so far as they relate to the goods supplied by us, until further notice."

The plaintiffs then advised the defendants to appeal to the judicial tribunal at Paranahyba for restraint of delivery. On Nov. 4 the defendants requested the plaintiffs to make this appeal in respect of the shipment per Napo and Crispin, but later, and before effective steps had been taken, withdrew the request (Nov. 26), stating that

"our friends the South American Railway Construction Co. have given us their undertaking that they will not deal with the goods or take any steps to our detriment until our account had been paid."

A number of letters and telegrams passed thereafter between the parties and their agents which did not change the situation. The plaintiffs continued to insist that, as the defendants had given instructions to stop the goods and also not to deliver them, the plaintiffs looked to them for all attendant charges, including freight. The defendants, on the other hand, persisted in repudiating all responsibility for freight or other expenses payable by the shippers for the landing of the goods or otherwise. They would only admit responsibility for expenses incurred on their behalf by the plaintiffs after the goods had been landed. The shipowners had carried the goods to Tutoya, and were ready and willing to forward them by lighter to Paranahyba, but it was useless to send them to Paranahyba unless it was intended to pay the duty upon them, as they could not be landed at Paranahyba until the duty had been paid, and, if not paid, the goods must either be brought back to Tutoya or left indefinitely in the lighters. Who was to pay the duty? The unpaid vendors repudiated all responsibility. The consignees were insolvent and could, or in any event would not, pay the duty. They could not pay the purchase money, and had agreed with the defendants that they would not deal with the goods until it was paid. In these circumstances what were the shipowners to do? Clearly they were under no obligation to pay the duty. But the goods must be discharged; they could not remain in the ship or the lighters, and the ship could not remain indefinitely at Tutoya—neither could the lighters remain indefinitely at Paranahyba or Tutoya. The course taken by the plaintiffs was to deposit them at Cajueiro, where they lie to this day. By the freight contract the plaintiffs have a lien upon the goods for unpaid freight, and the goods are held by the plaintiffs subject to their lien. At the date of the trial the duty had not been paid upon the goods, delivery had not been made at Paranahyba, the plaintiffs had not received their freight, and the defendants had not obtained their purchase money.

Upon these facts the question arises whether the plaintiffs can recover the freight or damages from the defendants. BAILHACHE, J., thought not. In order to determine whether the learned judge's conclusion was right, it is, in my judgment, necessary to ascertain the legal position of the carrier and the vendor when a valid notice of stoppage in transitu has been given. When goods are

A stopped, there is usually no difficulty as to the payment of the freight to the shipowner; the vendor pays it in order to discharge the shipowner's lien and to regain actual possession of the goods. The present case is exceptional in that the vendors insist upon the stoppage, but refuse to pay the freight. They say to the shipowners: "The goods must not be handed to the consignee because of our notice of stoppage, and we will not take actual possession of the goods as we should have to pay the freight. You must continue to hold the goods subject to our notice of stoppage." The plaintiffs say: "You, the vendors, are the only persons to whom the actual possession of the goods can be given, and you are under obligation to take actual possession, which will involve the payment by you of the freight." In those circumstances, what are the rights and obligations of the parties? The right of stoppage in transitu was introduced into

C English law in the seventeenth century, and the first reported case on the subject is in the year 1690: Wiseman v. Vandeputt (2). As the right arises only in the case of insolvency, it came to be recognised in our courts in the first instance through the medium of the bankruptcy jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor, which was of statutory creation. The right is not peculiar to the law of England; it was part of the law merchant existing in most of the commercial

D States of Europe before it was recognised as part of our law. In 1743 LORD HARDWICKE received evidence of the custom of merchants as to stoppage in transitu and then applied the rule. He based his decree both upon the custom proved before him and upon the justice of the case: Snee v. Prescott (3). In 1841 LORD ABINGER in Gibson v. Carruthers (4) gave a full and interesting account of the history of the introduction of stoppage in transitu into our law and

E reviewed the authorities. He referred to the opinions expressed by courts of equity that the right was founded upon some principle of the common law and of the practice in courts of law to call the right a principle of equity which the common law had adopted. He pointed out the difficulty, owing, perhaps, to its foreign parentage, of reducing this right to some analogy with the principles which govern the law of contract as it prevails in this country between vendor

F and purchaser. This difficulty, in spite of decisions and legislation, has not been entirely solved. LORD ABINGER came to the conclusion that the right had been adopted as part of the law merchant and formed part of the common law of England.

What is the right? It is the right of the unpaid vendor, on discovery of the insolvency of the buyer, and notwithstanding that he has made constructive

G delivery of the goods to the buyer, to re-take them if he can before they reach the buyer's possession. It is a right founded upon the plain reason that one man's goods shall not be applied to the payment of another man's debt: D'Aquila v. Lambert (5); BENJAMIN ON SALES (5th Edn.) p. 870. It is the right not only to countermand delivery to the purchaser, but to order delivery to the vendor: The Tigress (1); United States Steel Products Co. v. Great Western Rail. Co. (6) ([1916] A.C. at p. 202, per LORD ATKINSON). DR. LUSHINGTON adds, in The Tigress (1) (32 L.J.P.M. & A. at p. 102): "Were it otherwise, the right to stop would be useless and trade would be impeded." That the vendor has the right to order delivery to himself cannot be disputed; but does the notice to the carrier place the vendor under obligation to the carrier to take delivery or to give directions for delivery of the goods? I think it does. The goods have been received

H by the carrier to be delivered to the purchaser. When the vendor has placed the goods in the actual possession of the carrier he has performed his contract of sale and has made delivery to the purchaser. The property in the goods and the right to possession have passed to the purchaser, but the notice of stoppage operates to defeat the purchaser's right to the possession of the goods and transfers it to the vendor. Although doubts existed in the past whether or not the contract of sale was rescinded by the exercise of the vendor's right of stoppage in transitu, they have long since been dispelled: Kemp v. Falk (7), 7 App. Cas. 581, per LORD BLACKBURN; and the law is now to be found in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893.

Stoppage in transitu is dealt with in the statute by ss. 44 to 48. By s. 61 (2), the rules of the common law, including the law merchant, save in so far as they are inconsistent with the express provisions of the Act, continue to be applicable to contracts for the sale of goods. By s. 48 (1) it is provided that the mere exercise by an unpaid vendor of his right to stop in transitu does not rescind the contract of sale: see also United States Steel Products Co. v. Great Western Rail. Co. (6), [1916] A.C. at p. 203, per LORD ATKINSON. The vendor may re-sell the goods, provided he has complied with certain conditions, and recover damages from his original buyer for loss occasioned by the breach of the contract: s. 48 (3). But after the notice is given by the vendor to the carrier the right to possession of the goods is resumed by the vendor; that is the effect of the notice, and the carrier is under obligation to give actual possession to the vendor only or according to his directions. To use the words of the codifying statute, the carrier "must deliver the goods to or according to the directions of the seller": s. 46 (2). The carrier cannot be under obligation to deliver the goods upon arrival to the purchaser, his consignee, and also to the vendor who has given notice of stoppage. From the giving of the notice, and so long as the notice is operative, his obligation is to deliver, not to the consignee, but to the vendor. It was argued in this case that the vendor obtained all the benefits of the notice without incurring any liabilities. As I have already said, I cannot accept this argument. The vendor by the act of giving notice of stoppage, has prevented the shipowner making delivery to his consignee, and the vendor, in my judgment, is under the correlative obligation to the shipowner to take delivery or give directions for delivery. If there is a lien for freight due in respect of the goods, the vendor's obligation to take delivery involves the further obligation upon him to pay the freight, for he cannot get actual possession until he has discharged the shipowner's lien for freight due in respect of the carriage of the goods in question, but not in respect of freight due by the consignee to the shipowner on other goods: Oppenheim v. Russell (8); United States Steel Products Co. v. Great Western Rail. Co. (6) ([1916] A.C. at p. 203). Although there is no decision to be found in the books making the vendor liable in the circumstances for the freight upon the goods stopped by him, I think the earlier cases point in the direction of such an obligation upon him.

The history of the recognition of this right of stoppage in transitu in English law is that, at first, it was thought that actual possession of the goods was necessary to constitute a valid stoppage in transitu. LORD HARDWICKE was at one time of this opinion: see Snee v. Prescott (3); but later it was held that actual possession by the vendor was not necessary. In 1787 it was held by GROSE, J., in Lickbarrow v. Mason (9) (2 Term Rep. at p. 76) that:

"it is now the clear, known, and established law that the consignor may seize the goods in transitu, if the consignee become insolvent before the delivery of them."

In 1798 LORD KENYON said in Northey and Lewis v. Field (10) (2 Esp. at p. 614):

"The courts had of late years leaned much in favour of the power of the consignor to stop his goods in transitu; it was a leaning to the furtherance of justice. LORD HARDWICKE had been of opinion, that in order to stop goods in transitu, there must be an actual possession of them obtained by the consignor before they come to the hands of the consignee; but that rule has since been relaxed; and it was now held that an actual possession was not necessary; that a claim was sufficient; and to that rule he subscribed."

In 1802 LORD ALVANLEY expressed the same view in Oppenheim v. Russell (8). He said (3 Bos. & P. at p. 46):

"This was an action brought by the plaintiff as consignor against a carrier for the recovery of goods, and it is stated upon the case that the goods were demanded by the plaintiffs, before they either actually or constructively reached the hands of the consignee. According to the general rule the

A carrier under these circumstances was bound to deliver them and was liable, as LORD KENYON very properly determined, to an action of trover if he did not deliver them. Though no act of seizure ensue, yet, if tender be made of the sum due for the carriage, the person sending the goods has the right to resume them, and that was done in this case."

In Litt v. Cowley (11) GIBBS, C.J., referring to past cases, said (7 Taunt. at p. 170):

B "It was formerly held that the only way of stoppage in transitu was by actual corporal touch of the goods. It has since been held that after notice to a carrier not to deliver, he is liable for the goods in trover against himself if he does deliver them."

By s. 44 of the statute, when the buyer becomes insolvent, the unpaid vendor has the right to resume possession of the goods so long as they are in course of transit, and he has rights of sale under s. 48. The method of effecting the right of stoppage is by taking actual possession of the goods, or by giving notice of the claim to the carrier or other bailee in whose possession the goods are: s. 46 (1). The statute thus gives two ways of effecting stoppage. The first is by taking actual possession, and the second by notice of claim, the latter, as LORD KENYON observed, being a relaxation of the old rule that required actual possession to be taken. To get actual possession of goods carried the vendor must discharge the shipowner's lien (if any) for freight. Therefore satisfaction of the lien for freight must have been and still is an integral part of the stoppage of goods in transitu by the method of taking actual possession. Actual possession can only be taken of goods in transit when the goods arrive; by s. 45 (1), they are deemed to be in transit until the buyer takes delivery—until that time there is a right in the unpaid vendor to resume the possession on arrival if he can. If the stoppage is by means of notice given, the vendor, upon arrival of the goods, is in the same position as if he had taken actual possession of the goods—that is to say, he is the sole person entitled, and, as I think, obliged, to take or order delivery of the goods. He cannot get actual possession unless he is ready and willing to discharge the lien for freight. I am, therefore, of opinion that a notice of stoppage given during the transit, and persisted in upon arrival of the goods, involves an obligation upon the vendor to discharge the shipowner's lien for freight—that is, to pay the freight due in respect of the goods carried. To get the goods he must free them from the lien.

There being, then, an obligation upon the vendor to take delivery and discharge the lien by paying the freight, it follows that, if he repudiates the obligation and so conducts himself as to prevent the shipowner completing his voyage and earning his freight, an action can be maintained by the shipowner against the vendor for damages for the breach of the obligation created by the notice to take actual possession of the goods upon arrival, and to discharge the shipowner's lien for the freight in respect of the goods. The damages may be the equivalent of the freight.

Having arrived at this conclusion, it must now be considered whether in the present case the plaintiffs' right of action is defeated by their failure to complete the voyage to Paranahyba. BAILHACHE, J., decided, without determining whether or not there would otherwise have been a right of action in the plaintiffs, that they could not recover because they had not proved that the defendants had prevented the completion of the voyage. With all respect to the learned judge I cannot arrive at the same conclusion, having regard to my view of the legal position of the defendants. In my judgment, when the goods arrived at Tutoya, the plaintiffs were ready and willing, then and at all material times, to complete the voyage and carry the goods to Paranahyba. The obstacle to the continuance of the voyage was the non-payment of the duty and the repudiation by the defendants of all responsibility for freight, charges, or expenses. For the reasons already given, I think this was a repudiation of their obligation to take delivery, and that they were bound to provide the duty, or to make arrangements for its payment, so as to enable the voyage to be completed. As they refused, the goods were landed and are still at Cajueiro. In my opinion, the plaintiffs are entitled in these circumstances to treat the voyage as completed, and to recover, as damages for the breach of obligation, the full amount of freight which they would have earned had the voyage been completed: see Stewart v. Rogerson (12). They claim, and I think rightly, to be placed in the same position as if the vendors had discharged their obligation and enabled the voyage to be continued to Paranahyba. It is immaterial that, after the repudiation by the defendants, the plaintiffs acted in their own interests and for their own protection as regards the freight.

The defendants strenuously contended that Pontifer v. Midland Rail. Co. (13) was a decision which supported their view, but upon examination of that case I do not think it has any bearing upon the problem now before the court. There the vendor had given to the defendants, a railway company, notice of stoppage in transitu of goods consigned to the purchaser, but the railway company refused to act on the notice and delivered the goods to the consignee. The vendor thereupon brought an action for damages for the wrongful conversion of the goods, and the sole question in dispute in the case was whether the plaintiff, having recovered a sum exceeding £10, was or was not to be deprived of costs. The decision turned upon the meaning of certain words in s. 5 of the County Courts Act, 1867, and the question was whether the action was "founded on tort", and not on contract, within the meaning of that section. The court held that it was founded on tort, and COCKBURN, C.J., in delivering the judgment, said (3 Q.B.D. at pp. 26, 28):

"The difficulty arises in a case like the present, where there is undoubtedly an unauthorised intermeddling with property, but the act is connected with a contract originally entered into, and there is ground for regarding it as founded on that contract, or some new contract implied from the circumstances . . . The contract of the defendants was to carry and deliver. But under the circumstances which arose, the law gave the plaintiff the right to put an end to that contract and to demand back the possession of the goods, and he did so. From that time the retention of the goods and the dealing with them by the defendants became tortious."

This agrees with the view which was always taken of such a case when the action for trover existed, for such a misdelivery after notice was always treated as a wrongful conversion. The defendants argued that this case established that the refusal of the carrier to act upon the notice, and the delivery by him of the goods to the purchaser notwithstanding the notice, was a tortious act and not the breach of a contractual obligation. The decision was that an action for wrongful conversion of the goods was an action "founded on tort" within the meaning of the section, notwithstanding that there might be ground for regarding it as an action founded on "some new contract implied from the circumstances", just as an action by a passenger against a railway company for damages for personal injuries caused by the negligence of the defendants in the conveyance of passengers has been held under similar statutes to be founded on tort notwithstanding that it might also be founded upon contract: Taylor v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Rail. Co. (14). In the present case the plaintiffs had not refused to act upon the notice, but, on the contrary, had expressly agreed with the vendors, upon receipt of the notice, that they would act upon it. I am of opinion, for the reason expressed, that this appeal should be allowed and judgment entered for the plaintiffs for £2,743 14s. 7d. with costs here and below.

WARRINGTON, L.J., stated the facts and continued: I have come to the conclusion on the facts that, as between the plaintiffs and the defendants at all events, the plaintiffs have, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, done all that was reasonably necessary to entitle them to require the defendants to take

A delivery of the goods if the latter are in law bound to do so. At Tutoya there is no Custom House or bonded warehouse of any kind. All goods have to be conveyed to Paranahyba in lighters. The bonded warehouse at Paranahyba is unsuited for the accommodation of a cargo such as that in question. Inasmuch as the defendants refused to pay the duties and thus enable the goods to be dispatched at Paranahyba, the only practical course, in my opinion, was that adopted by the plaintiffs, namely, to deposit the goods on their own island at Tutoya.

I think, therefore, the question of law avoided by the learned judge arises, and I proceed to deal with it. The question is: Does the unpaid vendor of goods, by exercising his right to stop them in transitu, bring himself under a personal obligation to the carrier to take, or give directions for, delivery of the goods, involving, of course, the discharge of the carrier's lien for unpaid freight? I think it must be answered in the affirmative. The question seems to be an entirely novel one. It can only arise in a very rare case such as the present, where, owing to the nature of the goods and the circumstances surrounding them at the end of the transit, it is not worth the vendor's while to take actual possession. There is no direct authority to be found in support of or against the plaintiff's claim, and I think a solution of the question must be found in an examination of the nature of the right of stoppage in transitu. It is a right to resume possession of the goods. The vendor, by the contract of sale, has transferred the property therein to the purchaser, and by delivery to the carrier has also transferred the possession thereof. If the vendor is unpaid and the purchaser is insolvent, the former may resume possession. He may do so either physically—in which case, of course, the lien for freight has ex hypothesi been discharged or released—or he may do so by giving notice to the carrier of his claim, and the latter must then deliver the goods to or according to the directions of the vendor. This is, in my opinion, merely an alternative mode of resuming possession, and appears to have been introduced as a relaxation of the previous stricter rule, which required physical possession in order to the effective exercise of the right of stoppage: see LORD KENYON, C.J., in Northey and Lewis v. Field (10) (2 Esp. at p. 614). Are we to say that the vendor is at liberty to give notice to the carrier of his claim and yet to refuse to take delivery himself or to give directions therefor, leaving the carrier with no person to whom the goods can be delivered? So to hold would be to impose a very serious burden on the carrier. Under the contract of carriage his obligation is to deliver to the consignee. The vendor's notice prevents him from so doing, and, if the vendor is entitled to refuse to take delivery himself, or to give directions for delivery to someone else, it is difficult to see how the carrier is to rid himself of the goods. The whole doctrine of stoppage in transitu appears to have originated in the law merchant and to have been founded on the custom of traders, and I cannot believe that it can have been part of such custom to leave the carrier in such a position that he has goods of which he can require nobody to relieve him at the end of his transit.

On the whole, seeing that the power of stopping in transitu is one of two forms of resuming possession, I think it may fairly be held that the right thereby confirmed of obtaining possession by notice is accompanied by the correlative duty of actually obtaining it, with the necessity, if freight is unpaid, of paying the freight and thus discharging the carrier's lien. The vendor's obligation seems to me to arise, not because he becomes directly liable to perform the particular part of the contract of carriage, including the payment of freight—this, in my opinion, he does not—but from the relation into which he enters with the carrier by placing him in such a position that he cannot deliver to the consignee or to anyone else but the vendor or according to his directions. I think, therefore, that the appeal ought to be allowed, and that the defendants ought to be ordered to pay to the plaintiffs the sum claimed, being that which they would have had to pay in order to obtain delivery of the goods.

SCRUTTON, J., stated the facts and continued: There the matter stops— with the rails at Cajuerio, because no one will pay the duty on them and receive them at Paranahyba, where the shipowners are quite ready to send them, subject to the lien for freight. The purchasers refuse to receive them or pay for them; the vendors, who have stopped them in transitu, will not give any instructions what to do with them; and the question now is whether in any way the vendors are liable to the shipowners for the freight on them. The rest of the history is that, the purchasers having gone into liquidation on Feb. 23, 1914, the vendors wrote to the receiver that they had stopped delivery in transitu and claimed ownership of the goods. They could not at this time have had more than possession of the goods through the shipowners, if they had that. Two days later they told the liquidator they proposed to sell the goods. The receiver would have nothing to do with the goods. The vendors persisted in their refusal to pay freight, and have by this time probably lost the goods.

The shipowners alleged in their statement of claim that in stopping in transitu it became the duty of the vendors to give directions for the delivery of the cargo, and to pay freight and expenses, and they claimed either the freight or the same amount in damages. The defendants, the vendors, denied their liability, and raised the question whether the shipowners had any right to stop the transit at Tutoya. BAILHACHE, J., states the question to be whether the completion of the voyage was prevented by the vendors' action in giving the stop notice, and finds that the plaintiffs have failed to satisfy him that they were prevented by the stop notice given by the defendants "from performing their freight contract, carrying these rails to Paranahyba, and making a tender of them there." I do not understand to whom the learned judge suggested they should be tendered. The vendors had forbidden the shipowners to tender them to the purchasers, and had refused to take them themselves. To land them at Paranahyba would risk their seizure by the government or their coming into possession of the purchasers, neither of which the vendors desired, and would involve the payment of duties which the vendors would not, and the shipowners were not bound to, pay. I do not think either the vendors or the purchasers could complain of the goods not going forward from Tutoya to Paranahyba, or, if otherwise liable, use it as an excuse for not paying freight. The judge thinks the landing at Tutoya was to protect the shipowners' lien for freight. I think he has overlooked that on Nov. 28 the shipowners were only putting an embargo for freight on the goods not stopped in transitu, and were looking to the vendors for their freight. I should, therefore, on the evidence come to a different conclusion from BAILHACHE, J., and find that in the circumstances the shipowners had done all that was necessary to claim freight from whomsoever was liable. If the judge below had found that, he states, without giving reasons, that the inclination of his opinion is that the plaintiffs would succeed in their claim. Whether this is right raises very difficult questions of great general importance on the nature and consequences of the right of stoppage in transitu, which I now proceed to consider.

The right of stoppage in transitu came into the English law in the seventeenth century from the custom of merchants, both English and foreign—a custom, therefore, which had grown up with no special reference or congruity to the English law. As it enabled an unpaid vendor whose purchaser was insolvent to exercise some control over goods in which he had no property and of which he had no possession, while in the hands of a shipowner with whom he had no contract, and to prevent that shipowner from performing a contract to which the unpaid vendor was no party, it was obvious there would be considerable difficulty in fitting in this international usage and the national law. As LORD ABINGER says, in the well-known judgment in Gibson v. Carruthers (15) (8 M. & W. at pp. 338, 339, 340):

"In courts of equity it has been a received opinion that it was founded on some principle of common law. In courts of law it is just as much the practice

- A to call it a principle of equity, which the common law has adopted . . . Many unsatisfactory and inconsistent attempts have been made to reduce it to some analogy with the principles which govern the law of contract, as it prevails in this country between vendor and vendee . . .”

Again, he refers to

- B “ the reasoning and dicta by which it has been attempted, not very successfully, to develop the principle, and make it conformable in appearance and dress . . . with the family of English law into which it has been adopted.”

- C Great difference of opinion has existed as to the nature of the right, whether or not stoppage in transitu re-vested the property and cancelled the contract. In 1761, in D'Aquila v. Lambert (5) (Amb. at p. 400), it was said that the goods of one man (i.e., the unpaid vendor) should not be applied in payment of another man's (i.e. the purchaser's) debts, and as late as 1877 COCKBURN, C.J., in Pontifex v. Midland Rail. Co. (13) (3 Q.B.D. at p. 27), said that the effect of the stoppage in transitu was “ to re-vest the property ” in the unpaid vendor. Yet it is clear now that it does not, but only enables him to resume possession. In 1842 it was quite an open question whether stoppage in transitu entirely rescinded the contract, or only replaced the vendor in the same position as if he had not parted with possession: Wentworth v. Outhwaite (16) (10 M. & W. at p. 452). As late as 1885 COTTON, L.J., in Phelps, Stokes & Co. v. Comber (17) (29 Ch.D. at p. 821), treated it as still an open question, though he preferred the latter alternative. Fortunately, in 1893, the Sale of Goods Act, purporting to codify the common law, and (see s. 61 (2)) preserving “ the rules of the common law, including the law merchant, save in so far as they are inconsistent with the express provisions of this Act,” finally settled some of the doubtful points. The right of stoppage in transitu does not by its mere exercise rescind the contract of sale: (s. 48 (1)). It is a resumption of possession, made while the goods are in course of transit, entitling the unpaid vendor to retain the goods until payment or tender of the price: s. 44. But it is more than a mere lien, for the unpaid vendor may, if the goods are perishable, or if, after notice to the buyer of intention to re-sell, the buyer does not within a reasonable time tender the price, re-sell the goods, and claim damages from the buyer for any loss occasioned by breach of contract: (s. 48 (2)). The unpaid vendor may re-take actual possession if he can get it. If the unpaid vendor

- G “ had got the goods back again by any means, provided he did not steal them, I would not blame him,” said LORD HARDWICKE in Snee v. Prescott (3) (1 Atk. at p. 250); or he may exercise his right

- H “ by giving notice to the carrier . . . in whose possession the goods are ” at such a time that by reasonable diligence the carrier may stop delivery to the buyer, which he ought to make according to his contract with the buyer: (s. 46 (1)). LORD HARDWICKE says (ibid. at p. 248), that if goods

- I “ are actually delivered to a carrier to be delivered to A. and while the carrier is upon the road, and before actual delivery to A. by the carrier, the consignor hears A. his consignee is likely to become bankrupt, or is actually one, and countermands the delivery, and gets them back into his own possession again, I am of opinion that no action of trover would lie for the assignees of A. because the goods, while they were in transitu, might be so countermanded.”

And if such notice is given to the carrier “ he must re-deliver the goods to or according to the directions of the seller. The expenses of such re-delivery must be borne by the seller ”: s. 46 (2).

In general practice the unpaid vendor is only too ready to get back the goods which he has sold to an insolvent consignee. It is clear that, to get them from the carrier, he must discharge any lien the carrier has for particular charges or freight on the goods in question, but not any general lien by contract or usage for other sums due from the consignee, but not due in respect of the particular goods. This has recently been authoritatively re-stated by the House of Lords in United States Steel Products Co. v. Great Western Rail. Co. (6) ([1916] 1 A.C. at p. 196). I notice, to show I have not overlooked it, that the shipowners' lien for freight in the case now before us is not a common law lien for freight on delivery, but a contractual lien for advance freight, but it is, in my view, "charges payable on the carriage of the particular goods" within the decision of the House of Lords. The unpaid vendor is usually quite ready to do this to get the goods; and it is not till, in this case, an unpaid vendor contents himself with the negative attitude "do not deliver bills of lading or goods to the consignees under your contract," and declines to give any further instructions as to what is to be done with the goods at the end of the transit, that the question arises: What are the duties to the carrier of the unpaid vendor who stops in transitu, the Sale of Goods Acts having only stated some of his rights against the carrier. It will be noted that the unpaid vendor goes further in this case. He not only says, "Do not deliver to the consignee," and abstains from giving instructions to whom the carrier is to deliver, but he actually gets an undertaking from the consignee that he will not take delivery under his contract: see letter of Nov. 26.

This raises the question what the unpaid vendor is bound or entitled to do when he "stops in transitu." May he during the transit, as of right, direct the carrier to deliver to him before the contractual place of destination? Must he at the end of the transit take delivery if he prevents delivery to the contractual consignee? Or can he say, as in this case: "Don't deliver to the consignee; I won't take the goods or tell you what to do with them: you must provide for the goods, but I shall sue you if you deliver to the consignee under your contract"? First, what is the effect on the transit or voyage under the contract of affreightment? The unpaid vendor may "stop"; that is, re-take possession by the carriers holding for him in transitu—that is, during the transit; but he cannot, in my view, demand actual possession during the transit against the will of the carrier, or direct the shipowner to deliver to him except at the contractual place of destination. The goods may be under other goods in the hold; the ship may have contractual engagements to carry other goods to other parts: policies of insurance may be affected by detention or delay. The contract of sale is not cancelled by stoppage in transitu; neither, in my view, is the contract of affreightment, except in so far as delivery at the port of destination to the consignee is stopped by the unpaid vendor, and other delivery there is ordered by him. It is true that in Whitchhead v. Anderson (18) (9 M. & W. at p. 534) PARKE, B., uses language like this:

"The law is clearly settled that the unpaid vendor has a right to re-take the goods before they have arrived at the destination originally contemplated by the purchaser."

But the same learned judge, in Wentworth v. Outhwaite (16) in the same year, says (10 M. & W. at p. 452):

"The vendor is entitled to retain the part actually stopped in transitu till he is paid the price of the whole, but has no right to re-take that which has arrived at its journey's end."

He is either using "retain" and "re-take" as equivalent words meaning "holding adverse possession", or is confining "re-taking" to the journey's end. In the same way, when Dr. LUSHINGTON says in The Tigress (1) (32 L.J.P.M. & A. at p. 102):

"The right to stop means the right not only to countermand delivery to the vendee, but to order delivery to the vendor," he is, I think, speaking of the place where the carrier by contract has to deliver. The carrier may, and it is frequently convenient he should, re-deliver, before

A the contract place of delivery, to the unpaid vendor on an indemnity; but he cannot, in my view, be forced to do it. The delivery of the goods may be stopped, but not their transit to the place of delivery.

The goods, then, arrive at the contract place of delivery where, if there had been no stop, they would have been delivered to the consignee, subject to the shipowner's lien for freight. If the shipowner exercises that lien against a demand B by the consignee, he will have to bear the cost of exercising the lien: Somes v. British Empire Shipping Co., Ltd. (19); and provide for the safe custody of the goods while he keeps his hand on them, and he cannot sell the goods. But supposing he is told not to deliver to the consignee by an unpaid vendor who has the right to order delivery to himself and does not, on what principle can he be compelled to retain and provide for the custody of the goods after he has arrived C at the contract place of destination, or is ready to go there, if anyone will take delivery? What is he to do with the goods? Is his ship to go sailing round the world, like the "Flying Dutchman", on an endless, hopeless voyage for ever carrying goods that no one will take? Is his ship to stay at the port of destination till it is convenient to someone to take the goods from her? Why, if he discharges the goods, must he pay duties which by the contract should be paid by the person D taking delivery, and provide for the custody of the goods, as here, for an uncertain time, on the chance that someone will some day recoup him? And does it make any difference, when he is stopped by the unpaid vendor from tendering the goods to the consignee, that, if he had been permitted to tender them, he might have been in similar difficulties if he chose to assert his lien for freight? He is prevented from having the chance of offering the goods to the consignee. It is said that both E the shipowner for his freight and the unpaid vendor for his price have to look to the goods and must take their chance. This is not quite exact, as the unpaid vendor can sell the goods, and the shipowner cannot; but, further, the unpaid vendor is claiming to exercise his lien through the shipowner, and, if he must bear the expense of exercising his own lien, cannot make the shipowner bear the expense of exercising the vendor's lien for the benefit of the vendor. It is also F suggested that the shipowner makes his contract subject to the possibility of an unpaid vendor stopping in transitu, and must put up with the consequences. But if I am right that the unpaid vendor cannot stop the transit, but only the delivery to the vendee, it follows that he cannot prolong the transit or the shipowner's obligation to hold the goods after the shipowner is ready to make delivery at the end of the transit. This question must be considered, not only from the point of G view of the shipowner's claim for freight for the transit, but from the point of view of his claim for demurrage or damages for detention at the end of the transit. Freight is now frequently paid in advance; but when the shipowner arrives at the end of the transit, and is forbidden by the unpaid vendor to deliver to the consignee, what is his position as to custody of the goods if the unpaid vendor refuses to give positive instructions as to their delivery? What is the H shipowner to do? If he keeps the goods in his ship, ought not the person who compels him to do so to pay the demurrage? If he lands the goods in a warehouse to keep the unpaid vendor's lien, ought not the person for whom the lien is exercised to bear the expense of using the lien? And why is the shipowner to be compelled to take any responsibility for the goods after his contract voyage is over? Surely it is for the person who stops the transit and desires to exercise his lien to take the I goods and exercise his lien for himself. And must he not, before he does so, satisfy any liens already existing? Further, in my view, the shipowner has fulfilled his contract when he has reached a point where the consignee or person taking delivery is bound to do something, and is not bound himself to incur further expense when no one will take delivery. He is not bound to go into a dock and incur dock dues if he is told that the consignee will not take delivery even if he goes in. He was not in this case bound to send the goods up from Tutoya, when no one would pay the duties without which the goods could not be landed, and he was not allowed by the vendor to deliver the goods to the contractual consignees.

On these events happening the shipowners had, in my view, no further obligation to provide for the goods. The unpaid vendors had the right to stop delivery to the consignee and the right to require delivery at the port of destination to themselves. In my view, this imposed on them a corresponding duty to take delivery from the shipowners, if they continued to prevent them from delivering to the consignees. The vendors are not obliged to perform this duty, for they may release the goods and withdraw the stop before the end of the transit, but if they do not withdraw the stop, but insist on it, in my opinion, they substitute themselves for the original consignees and must take delivery. They can only do so on the terms of discharging the shipowners' lien for freight, and, as these vendors are quite solvent, the damages for their failing to take delivery will be at least the amount of freight the shipowners would have received if the vendors had fulfilled their obligation and taken delivery. The question is not what the shipowners have lost by being stopped from tendering to the consignees; it is quite possible in this case that they have lost nothing, as the consignees would not or could not pay, and expenses might be incurred in asserting the lien. The question is what the shipowners have lost by the vendors refusing to take delivery at the end of the transit when they have stopped the contractual delivery. And if, as I have held, they were bound to take delivery in such a case, the shipowners have lost at least the amount of the freight which the vendors must have paid before they took delivery. It is not necessary to hold that the vendors become a party to the original contract; their obligation follows, in my view, from their interfering with that contract and persisting in their interference at the end of the transit. It is true that this point has never been determined before, but the fact that unpaid vendors have in fact always acted in accordance with the obligation that I think is imposed on them shows that it is in accordance with commercial usage and in favour of commerce. On this part of the case the conclusion I have arrived at is apparently the same as that reached by BAILLACHE, J., though, as he does not state his reasons, I do not know that we have travelled by the same road. But as I differ from him in the view I take of the documents and see nothing in those documents to destroy the vendors' obligation to take delivery at the end of the transit of the goods which they have stopped from going to their contractual destinations, I am of opinion that the appeal should succeed and that judgment should be entered for the plaintiffs for £2,743 14s. 7d. with costs here and below.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Armitage, Chapple, Macnaghten; Downing, Hancock, Middleton & Lewis, for Bolam, Middleton & Co., Sunderland.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

POWELL v. GELSTON

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Bray, J.), July 27, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 615; 85 L.J.K.B. 1783; 115 L.T. 379;
32 T.L.R. 703; 60 Sol. Jo. 696]

B

Libel—Publication—Letter read by person whom writer did not intend or expect to read it.

A. wrote to the defendant making certain inquiries regarding the plaintiff. The defendant addressed and sent a letter to A. which contained matter defamatory of the plaintiff. The defendant did not know or expect that the letter would be opened or seen by a third person other than A., but in fact, it was opened and read by B.

C

Held: there was no publication of the libel by the defendant as A. asked for an answer which he would treat as confidential and only he would see and the defendant's letter was intended for A. alone.

Notes. As to publication of a libel, see 24 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) D 33-43, and for cases see 32 DIGEST 76 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Delucroix v. Therriot (1817), 2 Stark. 63, N.P.; 32 Digest, 77, 1078.
- (2) Gomersall v. Davies (1898), 14 T.L.R. 430, C.A.; 32 Digest 77, 1079.
- (3) Sharp v. Skues (1909), 25 T.L.R. 336, C.A.; 32 Digest 78, 1080.

E

Also referred to in argument:

R. v. Burdett (1821), 1 State Tr. N.S. 1; 3 B. & Ald. 717; 4 B. & Ald. 95, 314; 106 E.R. 823, 873, 953; 32 Digest 79, 1097.

Thorley v. Lord Kerry (1812), 4 Taunt. 355; 3 Camp. 214, n.; 128 E.R. 367; 32 Digest 29, 202.

Clutterbuck v. Chaffers (1816), 1 Starke. 471, N.P.; 32 Digest 77, 1077.

F

R. v. Amphlett (1825), 4 B. & C. 35; 6 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 125; 3 Dow. & Ry. M.C. 182; 107 E.R. 972; 32 Digest 79, 1099.

Pullman v. Hill & Co., [1891] 1 Q.B. 524; 60 L.J.Q.B. 299; 64 L.T. 691; 39 W.R. 263; 7 T.L.R. 173, C.A.; 32 Digest 76, 1069.

Huth v. Huth, [1915] 3 K.B. 32; 84 L.J.K.B. 1307; 113 L.T. 145; 31 T.L.R. 350, C.A.; 32 Digest 76, 1063.

G

R. v. Lord Abingdon (1794), 1 Esp. 226, N.P.; 32 Digest 109, 1414.

Warren v. Warren (1834), 1 Cr. M. & R. 250; 4 Tyr. 850; 3 L.J.Ex. 294; 149 E.R. 1073; 32 Digest 84, 1150.

Emmens v. Pottle (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 354; 55 L.J.Q.B. 51; 53 L.T. 808; 50 J.P. 228; 34 W.R. 116; 2 T.L.R. 115, C.A.; 32 Digest 81, 1120.

H

Boissius v. Goblet Frères, [1894] 1 Q.B. 842; 63 L.J.Q.B. 401; 70 L.T. 368; 58 J.P. 670; 42 W.R. 392; 10 T.L.R. 324; 38 Sol. 311; 9 R. 224, C.A.; 32 Digest 116, 1485.

Hebditch v. MacLewaine, [1894] 2 Q.B. 54; 63 L.J.Q.B. 587; 70 L.T. 826; 58 J.P. 620; 42 W.R. 422; 10 T.L.R. 387; 9 R. 452, C.A.; 32 Digest 114, 1460.

I

R. v. Munslow, [1895] 1 Q.B. 758; 64 L.J.M.C. 138; 72 L.T. 301; 43 W.R. 495; 11 T.L.R. 213; 39 Sol. Jo. 264; 18 Cox, C.C. 112; 15 R. 192, C.C.R.; 32 Digest 198, 2464.

Edmundson v. Bird & Co., Ltd., and Horner, [1907] 1 K.B. 371; 76 L.J.K.B. 346; 96 L.T. 415; 23 T.L.R. 234; 51 Sol. Jo. 207, C.A.; 32 Digest 117, 1486.

Further Consideration of an action tried by BRAY, J., with a jury at Reading Assizes.

The facts are set out in the judgment of BRAY, J. The jury found that: (i) the defendant did not know or expect that the letter mentioned in the headnote might probably be opened or seen by a third person other than the person to whom it was addressed; (ii) the defendant did not bona fide believe that what he wrote was true; (iii) the defendant was actuated by malice in writing the letter; (iv) the plaintiff did not instigate A. to write the letter of Oct. 9; (v) the damages, if any, should be £75.

J. B. Matthews, K.C., and Ernest Walsh for the plaintiff.

F. W. Sherwood for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 27, 1916.—BRAY, J., read the following judgment.—This action was brought to recover damages in respect of four slanders and one libel. The jury found for the plaintiff on three of the slanders, and assessed the damages in respect of these slanders at £15, £20, and £5, making in all £40. They found for the defendant on the fourth slander. No question arises now as to the slanders. It was admitted for the purpose of the argument before me that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for £40 in respect of the slanders. Upon the libel the jury found for the plaintiff, damages £75, subject to one finding. The defendant contended that there had been no publication of the libel, and, to enable me to decide that point, I put this question to the jury: Did the defendant know or expect that the letter of Oct. 11 might probably be opened or seen by a third person other than the person to whom it was addressed? The jury answered "No." The facts relating to publication were not in dispute. Some time in June or July the plaintiff advertised his house, called Beech House, for sale. H. W. Pollard, the father of F. W. Pollard, answered the advertisement. In the month of October, F. W. Pollard, the son, wrote the letter of Oct. 9. That letter was written by him on the request of his father, who happened to be staying with him for the week-end. It was signed by the son in the son's own name. In answer to this the defendant wrote the letter of Oct. 11, being the alleged libel. He directed it to F. W. Pollard, Nursery Cottage, North Warnborough, which was the son's address. The letter duly arrived. It was opened by the father in his son's absence. It never was seen by the son at all. F. W. Pollard is a carpenter at North Warnborough, and his father keeps a fish shop at Farnborough. Neither father nor son was known to the defendant. The son kept no clerk, and no evidence was given to show that the defendant, when he wrote the letter of Oct. 11, knew anything about the father having requested his son to write the letter, or to show in any way that the defendant knew that the letter would be likely to be opened by the father or by anyone other than the son.

On these facts the defendant submitted that there had been no publication of the libel. It was admitted that there was no publication to the son, and it was said that the defendant was not responsible for the publication to the father. Such a publication, it was argued, was not authorised by him expressly or impliedly nor intended by him. This was the question I had to decide. I left the question to the jury, which they answered in the negative, but in fact I think there was no evidence which would have justified the answer "Yes." There is no doubt that to give a cause of action there must be a publication by the defendant. That is the foundation of the action, and publication to the plaintiff is no publication. For the plaintiff it was contended that the defendant intended that the letter should be published to someone, and it was immaterial whether it was to the father or the son. I do not think it is immaterial. The consequences and the damages may be very different. If published to A. it may cause very little damage to the plaintiff. If published to B., the consequences may be much more serious.

Several cases were cited: Delacroix v. Therenot (1), Gomersall v. Davies (2), and Sharp v. Skues (3). They show that where, to the defendant's knowledge a letter is likely to be opened by a clerk of the person to whom it is addressed, the defendant is responsible for the publication to that clerk. As LORD ELLENBOROUGH said in Delacroix v. Therenot (1), it must be taken that such a

A publication was intended by the defendant. On the other hand, in Sharp v. Skues (3) COZENS-HARDY, M.R., said (25 T.L.R. at p. 337):

B “It would be a publication if the defendant intended the letter to be opened by a clerk or some third person not the plaintiff, or if to the defendant’s knowledge it would be opened by a clerk; but the jury had negatived this in the clearest terms, and under these circumstances it was impossible to hold that some act done by a partner or a clerk of the plaintiff by his direction and for his own convenience when absent from the office could be a publication.”

C Some cases of criminal libel were cited, but in my opinion they have no application. In the present case the defendant was asked by the son to answer the questions in confidence, and the son promised that he would not let the plaintiff know that the defendant had written. The son was asking for an answer that he and he alone would see. The answer of the defendant was intended for the son alone.

D Under these circumstances I cannot hold that the defendant was responsible for the publication to the father. There was, therefore, no publication of the libel and the verdict and judgment on this part of the claim must be entered for the defendant. Of course the costs will follow the several events, and the argument before me will be part of the costs relating to the libel.

Judgment for defendant in respect of the libel.

E Solicitors: Andrew Walsh & Gray, Reading; Lamb, Brooks & Co.

[Reported by W. VALENTINE BALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

F

R. v. WEST RIDING OF YORKSHIRE JUSTICES

G [KING’S BENCH DIVISION (Earl of Reading, C.J., A. T. Lawrence and Shearman, J.J.), December 14, 1917]

[Reported [1918] 1 K.B. 362; 87 L.J.K.B. 443; 118 L.T. 307;
82 J.P. 102; 16 L.G.R. 125]

Licensing—Appeal to quarter sessions—Costs—Order to indemnify justices—Special fee for leading counsel.

H The same principle applies to a taxation of costs under s. 31 (1) of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 [now s. 36 (1) (2) of the Licensing Act, 1953] where an appeal to quarter sessions against an order of licensing justices is dismissed as under s. 32 (1) of the Act [now s. 37 (1) (2) of the Act of 1953], the question in both cases being whether the costs were properly incurred.

I Semble: there may be circumstances which would entitle the licensing justices to some costs under s. 32 (1) [s. 37 (1) (2) of the Act of 1953] which they would not be entitled to under s. 31 (1) [s. 36 (1) (2) of the Act of 1953].

Notes. The Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, was repealed and replaced by the Licensing Act, 1953.

As to the costs on appeal from licensing justices, see 22 HALSBURY’S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 610-612; and for cases see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 70-73. For the Licensing Act, 1953, see 33 HALSBURY’S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 142.

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Salford Hundred Justices, [1912] 2 K.B. 567; sub nom. R. v. Salford Hundred Justices, Ex parte Bolton Justices, 81 L.J.K.B. 952; 107 L.T. 174; 76 J.P. 395; 23 Cox, C.C. 110, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 71, 530.
- (2) R. v. Staffordshire Justices, [1898] 2 Q.B. 231; 67 L.J.Q.B. 931; 79 L.T. 142; 62 J.P. 741; sub nom. R. v. Staffordshire Justices, Ex parte Field, 14 T.L.R. 450; 42 Sol. Jo. 540, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 70, 524.

Also referred to in argument:

- R. v. Winder*, [1900] 2 Q.B. 666; 69 L.J.Q.B. 729; 64 J.P. 741; 48 W.R. 605; 44 Sol. Jo. 486; sub nom. R. v. Winder, Ex parte Bolton Corpn., 83 L.T. 171; 16 T.L.R. 400, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 72, 540.
- R. v. London and Strand Division Justices and Dalton, Ex parte L.C.C.* (1898), 78 L.T. 559; 62 J.P. 17; 46 W.R. 558; 42 Sol. Jo. 556, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 70, 523.

Rule Nisi for a writ of mandamus directed to the justices for the West Riding of Yorkshire sitting in quarter sessions to make an order under s. 32 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, for the payment by the treasurer of the city of Sheffield to the licensing justices of Sheffield of the sum of £10 15s. The facts are set out in the judgment of LORD READING, C.J.

C. F. Lowenthal for the quarter sessions.

G. C. Whiteley, for the licensing justices.

EARL OF READING, C.J.—This is an application by the chairman of the licensing justices for the city of Sheffield for a mandamus to the quarter sessions for the West Riding of Yorkshire to make an order under s. 32 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, for the payment by the treasurer of the city of Sheffield to the licensing justices of the sum of £10 15s., and the point which is involved is whether the licensing justices are entitled to recover an amount which was paid by them for counsel on an appeal against a decision which had been given by them. The facts are simple. An appeal against the licensing justices' decision to refuse the renewal of a licence was dismissed by quarter sessions, and an order was made in the terms of s. 31 (1) of the Act that the appellants should pay to the licensing justices such sum by way of costs as was in the opinion of the court sufficient to indemnify the licensing justices from all costs and charges whatsoever to which they had been put in consequence of the appellants' having served notice of intention to appeal. Thereupon the costs were taxed by agreement out of sessions by the clerk of the peace, and a question arose with regard to a special fee paid to a leading counsel. That special fee was 25 guineas, and the taxing officer thought that the proper allowance for a special fee should not exceed 15 guineas, and the result is that, if the order of quarter sessions stands, the licensing justices will be £10 15s. out of pocket in respect of a matter which they were carrying out gratuitously from a sense of public duty.

The question is one of considerable importance, as we must decide whether the view of the licensing justices is right or wrong, and whether they are right in saying that, although they cannot recover the £10 15s. under s. 31 (1), they can get it under s. 32. I understand their contention to amount to this—and it is important to bear it in mind in deciding this case—that the amount awarded by the taxing officer for the costs of an appeal may differ, although in each case the order is in exactly the same terms, according to whether the money is to be paid by the appellant or by the city fund. In this case the appellants were ordered to pay the costs under s. 31 (1), and that is the widest order known to the law for the payment of costs. It is sometimes termed an order for the payment of costs as between solicitor and own client, which is more extensive than as between solicitor and client, and it means, therefore, that under s. 31 (1), the court ordered the costs to be taxed upon the basis that the amount was to be

- A paid by the appellants to the licensing justices, which the solicitor for the licensing justices, could have recovered from the licensing justices as between solicitor and own client. That means costs properly incurred by the justices in defending the appeal. It is not for this court to say whether we should have arrived at the same conclusion as the clerk of the peace under s. 31 (1). I desire to make it clear that I am expressing no opinion on that point, and certainly
- B I am not saying that I should have come to the same conclusion as the clerk of the peace. An application was made by the licensing justices to quarter sessions under s. 32 on the ground that, as it was said, quarter sessions had power to order payment of the £10 15s. to the licensing justices by the city treasurer as being costs which the licensing justices could not recover from any other person.
- C Under s. 32 (1) the order which quarter sessions can make is, so far as material, in exactly the same terms as the order under s. 31 (1), and, therefore, it is an order that such costs should be paid to the licensing justices as would on a taxation between solicitor and own client be allowed as having been properly incurred. That means that the same order would have to be made under s. 32 (1) as under s. 31 (1), and the same principle would have to be applied to the taxation, and the only possible distinction that can be drawn is that under s. 32 (1) the amount would come out of the city fund, whereas under s. 31 (1) it would come out of the appellants' pockets. I cannot agree that the fact that the money is to come out of a public fund is any justification for allowing the payment when under exactly the same order it would not have been allowed as against a private individual. I agree that s. 32 (1) was passed for the purpose
- E of giving licensing justices a very full indemnity out of a public fund. But the test under both sections is the same. The costs must be properly incurred, and s. 32 (1) contains nothing which would justify the allowance of costs not properly incurred. It is said that the costs may be allowed out of a public fund, though not out of the pocket of a private individual, because the licensing justices are performing a public duty. But the fact that the licensing justices are performing
- F a public duty is the very reason why an order is authorised in the terms of s. 31 (1). The ordinary individual never gets such an order except by agreement, but otherwise, in the absence of a special statutory enactment, no court ever orders costs as between solicitor and own client. Here, by reason of the statute, the justices, having taken upon themselves a public duty, are entitled to be recouped the whole of the money which they have properly expended. But, as I
- G understand, the clerk of the peace has held that it was unreasonable to incur the full amount of this special fee, and, if we directed the quarter sessions to make an order under s. 32 (1) it would again be an order for costs as between solicitor and own client, and it would again be for the clerk of the peace to say whether this item was properly incurred, and I cannot see that he should come to a different conclusion merely because the money would come out of a public fund.
- H For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that the rule must be discharged. It is quite clear to me that no other decision would be proper in view of the facts and circumstances to which I have called attention. I do not decide that there may not be circumstances in which the licensing justices might be entitled to recover from the public fund some costs which they could not recover on an order that the appellant should pay the costs of the appeal. LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., did express an opinion on that in R. v. Salford Hundred Justices (1), but I do not think that that matter arises for decision in the present case, and I propose to leave it open, merely saying that, as at present advised, I can conceive circumstances which would entitle the licensing justices to some costs under s. 32 which they could not get under s. 31, but they would not be such costs as are in question in the present case.

A. T. LAWRENCE, J.—I have come very reluctantly to the same conclusion because I cannot see any difference, in the circumstances, between a taxation under s. 31 and under sect. 32 in this particular case. If this rule were made absolute, it would be a direction to quarter sessions to apply, through their officer, a different principle as against public money from that to be applied as against an appellant. I do not feel it to be possible to say that that would be a proper decision for this court to give. I am not at all satisfied with the taxation that did take place, but that has nothing to do with this court. The rule must be discharged.

SHEARMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. Before the Act of 1910 the justices' right to costs, when they became parties to licensing disputes, rested on s. 29 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, and s. 20 of the Licensing Act, 1902. Sections 31 and 32 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 extended the provisions of the earlier Acts and now form a code showing the extent to which the justices should be protected. That code is short and clear. When the court makes an order for costs under s. 31, it should obviously be guided by the principle that as the justices give their time without payment they ought to have an indemnity—i.e., the appellant is to pay a proper indemnity and prevent the justices from being out of pocket. But such an order is not without a limit. No one is entitled to be extravagant either against a litigant or against a public fund, but, subject to that, the costs should be taxed so that the justices are not out of pocket, and so that they are to have anything expended within the limits of reason and prudence. That is the highest scale known to the law. But when the justices cannot recover those costs—and this applies mainly to cases where the credit of the appellant fails—then under s. 32, which is practically in the same words as s. 31, there is power to have recourse to a public fund. Taxation under s. 31 ought to be on the highest possible scale; and the taxing officer cannot go higher under s. 32. But when certain items are taxed off under s. 31, it would be mischievous to allow the matter to be reconsidered as against the public fund.

Whiteley applied for an order that the justices should have the costs of the present proceedings paid out of the city fund, and he cited R. v. Staffordshire Justices (2), where such an order was made.

EARL OF READING, C.J.—We do not think that we have any power to make such an order.

Rule discharged.

Solicitors: Warwick, Williams & Co., for W. Vibart Dixon, Wakefield; Church, Rendell & Co., for F. B. Dingle, Sheffield.

[Reported by J. F. WALKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

HAIGH v. AERATED BREAD CO.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Ridley, Bray and Avory, JJ.), April 5, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 1 K.B. 878; 85 L.J.K.B. 880; 114 L.T. 1000; 80 J.P. 284; 32 T.L.R. 427; 14 L.G.R. 665; 25 Cox, C.C. 378]

B Food—Food injurious to health—Harmful ingredient mixed with article of food—Mixture constituting well-known commodity—Preserved cream, comprising cream mixed with boric acid—Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict., c. 63), s. 3.

C The appellant asked for and was supplied by the respondents with a shillingsworth of "preserved cream" which on analysis was found to contain boric acid. Cream containing boric acid in any quantity was injurious to health: "preserved cream", which was a mixture of cream and boric acid used as a preservative, was sold as a well-known commodity. The appellant charged the respondents with selling an article of food, viz., cream, mixed with another ingredient, boric acid, so as to render the article injurious to health, contrary to s. 3 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

D Held: an offence was committed against s. 3 even where the article sold was a mixed article of food, and, as such, a well-known commodity; to bring the case within the section it was unnecessary to prove that some further ingredient had been added to the mixed article; accordingly, the respondents were guilty of an offence under s. 3.

E Observations of DARLING, J., in Cullen v. McNair (1) (1908), 99 L.T. at p. 361, not applied.

Notes. A similar provision to that in s. 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, is contained in s. 1 (1) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, which provides: "No person shall add any substance to food, use any substance as an ingredient in the preparation of food . . . so as . . . to render the food injurious to health, with intent that the food shall be sold for human consumption."

F As to the sale of injurious foods, see 17 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 482 et seq; and for cases see 25 DIGEST 79 et seq. For the Food and Drugs Act, 1955, s. 1 (1) see 35 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 95.

Case referred to:

G (1) Cullen v. McNair (1908), 99 L.T. 358; 72 J.P. 376; 24 T.L.R. 692; 6 L.G.R. 753; 21 Cox, C.C. 682, D.C.; 25 Digest 79, 82.

Also referred to in argument:

Dyke v. Gower, [1892] 1 Q.B. 220; 61 L.J.M.C. 70; 65 L.T. 760; 56 J.P. 168; 8 T.L.R. 117; 17 Cox, C.C. 421, D.C.; 25 Digest 92, 174.

Case Stated by a metropolitan magistrate.

H The appellant, Haigh, an inspector appointed under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, 1875 to 1907, preferred an information against the respondents, well-known refreshment providers, alleging that on June 28, 1915, at 216, Piccadilly, the respondents unlawfully and wilfully sold to the appellant an article of food, to wit, cream which was mixed with '34 per cent. by weight of boric acid so as to render it injurious to health, contrary to the provisions of s. 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

I Upon the hearing of the information the following facts were proved or admitted. On June 28, 1915, the appellant visited the respondents' depot at 216, Piccadilly, and demanded one shillingsworth of preserved cream, which was supplied to him. The appellant informed the respondents' assistance from whom he made the purchase that the preserved cream was bought for the purpose of analysis. On analysis the cream was found to contain boric acid to the extent of '34 per cent. Cream containing boric acid in any quantity is injurious to health, especially in the case of children, adults who are invalids and persons suffering from kidney disease. Preserved cream—that is, a mixture of cream and boric acid used as a preservative—is sold as a well-known commodity. A

The appellant contended that the respondents had committed an offence under s. 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, having sold an article of food mixed with an ingredient which made the whole injurious to health, in spite of the fact that the cream was actually sold as preserved cream. For the respondents it was contended that the appellant had received what he had asked for—namely, preserved cream—and that as preserved cream was a mixed article of food and a well-known commodity there had been no mixing so as to contravene the provisions of s. 3 of the Act. B

The magistrate was of the opinion that no offence had been committed, and, having regard to the decision in Cullen v. McNair (1) dismissed the information.

Section 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, provided: C

“No person shall mix . . . or order or permit any other person to mix . . . any article of food with any ingredient or material so as to render the article injurious to health, with intent that the same may be sold in that state, and no person shall sell any such article so mixed . . . under a penalty in each case . . .”

McCall, K.C., and Bartley, for the appellant. D

W. E. Bousfield for the respondents.

RIDLEY, J. In my opinion, the learned magistrate arrived at an erroneous decision. He appears to have been influenced by certain observations made by DARLING, J., in Cullen v. McNair (1) (99 L.T. at p. 361) and to have acted upon them. But in reality those observations had nothing to do with the decision there arrived at. The facts here are quite simple. The appellant purchased a shillingsworth of preserved cream at one of the depots of the respondents, and upon analysis the preserved cream was found to contain 34 per cent. by weight of boric acid. It is not denied that cream containing boric acid in any quantity is injurious to health, but it has been argued before us that, as the article demanded and purchased by the appellant was preserved cream, and as preserved cream has become a well-known commodity, the thing sold was no longer a mixed, but was an unmixed article of food, and that, therefore, the respondents could not be guilty of an offence under s. 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, unless it was found that something fresh had been mixed with the preserved cream. I cannot see that there is any foundation for that argument. The section is perfectly clear, and if it is shown that an article of food has been mixed with any ingredient which renders it injurious to health, a conviction must follow. Here is a case of cream mixed with boric acid. Cream is an article of food, and the mixture with boric acid makes it injurious to health. In my view, there is but one defence open in a case like the present, and that is under s. 5 of the Act of 1875, where a person who sells an article mixed with a substance which renders the whole injurious to health is protected if he can establish that he did not know or that he could not have discovered with reasonable diligence that the article was so mixed. This defence does not arise in the present case, and nothing further need be said as to it. I should like to add that I do not think that the learned magistrate kept in mind the distinction made between sales under s. 3 and sales under s. 6 of the Act. The two things are quite different. The former prohibits the mixing of food with injurious ingredients and selling the same, while the latter prohibits the sale of food and drugs not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by the purchaser. I am of opinion, therefore, that the present appeal should be allowed and the case remitted to the learned magistrate with a direction to convict. E
F
G
H
I

BRAY, J.—I agree. To my mind s. 3 of the Act of 1875 is perfectly plain. It says, first, that no person shall mix any article of food with any ingredient so as to render the article injurious to health with the intent that the same may

A be sold in that state, and, secondly, that no person shall sell such article so mixed. Cream is an article of food, and the learned magistrate has found, as he could not help finding, that cream mixed with boric acid is injurious to health. The only defence which the respondents could have had would have been a plea of innocence under the provisions of s. 5 of the Act. That does not arise here, and the appeal must, therefore, be allowed.

B AVORY, J.—I am of the same opinion, and I only desire to add that I think that the learned magistrate treated the judgment of DARLING, J., in Cullen v. McNair (1) as though it had been the judgment of the court. That case is either a decision distinctly against the present respondents or it has no application to the present case at all. In one sense it is a decision against them, because it decided that a person who mixed cream with an injurious substance committed an offence under s. 3. As the appellant in Cullen's Case (1) had sold cream and not preserved cream, the observation of DARLING, J., were entirely obiter, and I may add that I do not agree with them.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Allen & Son; Bristows, Cooke & Carpmael.

D [Reported by J. A. SLATER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

E

ELDER v. BISHOP AUCKLAND CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Viscount Reading, C.J., Avory and Shearman, JJ.), May 22, 1917]

F [Reported 86 L.J.K.B. 1412; 117 L.T. 281; 81 J.P. 202; 33 T.L.R. 401; 61 Sol. Jo. 593; 15 L.G.R. 579; 26 Cox, C.C. 1]

G Food—Milk—Deficiency in fat—Purchase with written warranty as to quality—Delivery at railway station by producer—Subsequent collection by servant of retailer—No evidence that milk not interfered with between delivery and collection—Liability of retailer—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict., c. 63), s. 6, s. 25.

Master and Servant—Liability of master for act of servant—Misuse of authority by servant—Sale of milk—Servant authorised to sell to limited class—Sale to person outside class—Sale involving statutory offence.

H The respondents were a co-operative society who retailed to their members milk which they purchased from T., under a written contract by which T. agreed to supply a particular branch of the society with milk for a specified period on certain terms, carriage paid and warranted as to quality, but no particular railway station was mentioned as the place of delivery. A consignment of milk arrived at F. railway station at 5.13 a.m. and remained there until 8 a.m. on the same day when it was collected by S., a servant of the society. His duty was to distribute the milk to members of the society. He had no authority to sell it to any person who was not a member and had not previously ordered a supply. While on his rounds S. sold a pint of milk to an inspector and it was found to be defective in milk fat. No evidence was produced by the society to show that the milk had not been tampered with while at the railway station before it was collected by S.

I Held: (i) S. had a limited authority to sell and the sale to the inspector was a misuse of his limited authority and not completely outside the scope of his authority, and, consequently, the respondents were liable for the act of their servant; (ii) as, on construction of the contract, the place of delivery was the F. railway station, and the milk had remained there for several hours, the respondents had not discharged the burden of showing that the milk when sold was in the same state as when purchased, and consequently they could not claim the protection of the written warranty under s. 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

Notes. Section 6 and s. 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, have been substantially replaced by s. 2 and s. 115, respectively, of the Food and Drugs Act, 1955; see 35 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 97, 197.

Referred to: Buckingham v. Duck (1918), 120 L.T. 84.

As to the sale of food and drugs not of the proper nature, substance, quality; and as to a written warranty as a defence, see 17 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 484, 598; and for cases see 25 DIGEST 88 et seq., 98 et seq. As to liability of master for statutory offences, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 277; and for cases see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 46 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Lindsay v. Dempster, 1912 S.C. (J.) 110; 49 Sc.L.R. 999; 2 S.L.T. 177; 6 Adam, 707; 25 Digest 82, 108*ii*.
- (2) Boyle v. Smith, [1906] 1 K.B. 432; 75 L.J.K.B. 282; 94 L.T. 30; 70 J.P. 115; 54 W.R. 519; 22 T.L.R. 200; 21 Cox, C.C. 84, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 88, 670.
- (3) Pugh v. Williams, [1917] W.N. 174; 86 L.J.K.B. 1407; 117 L.T. 191; 81 J.P. 159; 15 L.G.R. 573; 25 Cox, C.C. 768, D.C.; 25 Digest 99, 226.
- (4) Sanders v. Sadler (1906), 95 L.T. 872; 71 J.P. 3; 23 T.L.R. 11; 5 L.G.R. 240; 21 Cox, C.C. 316, D.C.; 25 Digest 99, 225.

Also referred to in argument:

- Houghton v. Munday* (1910), 103 L.T. 60; 74 J.P. 377; 8 L.G.R. 838, D.C., 25 Digest 82, 106.
- Heilbutt v. Hickson* (1872), L.R. 7 C.P. 438; 41 L.J.C.P. 228; 27 L.T. 336; 20 W.R. 1005; 39 Digest 456, 828.
- Wilson v. Playle* (1903), 88 L.T. 554; 67 J.P. 263; 1 L.G.R. 870; 20 Cox, C.C. 433, D.C.; 25 Digest 97, 214.

Case Stated by justices of Ferryhill, in the county of Durham.

An information was preferred by the appellant, chief inspector of weights and measures for the county of Durham, against the respondents, the Bishop Auckland Co-operative Society, Ltd., for that they, on Nov. 17, 1916, at the township of Ferryhill, by their servant and agent, Ernest Stevenson, did unlawfully sell to the prejudice of the purchaser, Francis William Benson, the assistant of the appellant, a pint of new milk which was deficient in non-fatty solids as therein specified, and was not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by the purchaser, contrary to s. 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. Upon the hearing of the information the following facts were proved or admitted:

On Nov. 17, 1916, at 8.30 a.m., at Ferryhill Station, a sample of new milk was purchased by Francis William Benson, from Ernest Stevenson, which was deficient to the extent set out in the information, and was served from a tin which contained other milk. The milk from which the sample was taken was purchased by the respondents from Richard Thwaytes, of Brampton Mill, Appleby, under a contract in writing, dated Sept. 30, 1916, by which he agreed "to supply to the Bishop Auckland Co-operative Society (Shildon Branch) for twelve months from the date of the agreement thirty to forty gallons of fresh milk twice daily [at specified prices] the carriage paid. . . . and . . . warranted . . . to be pure and of the nature, substance, and quality herein described within the meaning of the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, 1875 and 1879, and all Acts amending the same. . ."

- A In pursuance of the contract Thwaytes caused a can containing fifteen gallons of milk to be put on the railway at Appleby. The can was dispatched therefrom at 7.57 p.m. on Nov. 16, 1916, via Darlington, and arrived at Ferryhill at 5.13 a.m. on Nov. 17, 1916. By the requirements of the railway company the can was not locked and sealed. Thwaytes paid the carriage for the can, which was his property. Stevenson received the can into his possession from a servant
- B of the railway company at 8 a.m. on Nov. 17, 1916, and on such receipt poured the milk contained in the can into two smaller tins, out of one of which Benson purchased the sample, and the can was thereupon returned to Appleby. The respondents purchased the milk as the same in nature, substance, and quality as that demanded by Benson, and Stevenson sold the milk to Benson in the same state as when he received it from the railway company, and neither
- C respondents nor Stevenson had any reason to believe at the time of such sale that the milk was otherwise than of the nature, substance, and quality demanded. Stevenson had no authority from the respondents to sell any of the milk to any person who was not a member of the respondent society and who had not previously ordered a supply. On Dec. 1, 1916, within seven days after the service of the summons, the respondents sent the appellant, Benson, and Thwaytes,
- D each a copy of the warranty, with a written notice under s. 20 (1) of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, that they intended to rely on the warranty under s. 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and specifying the name and address of Thwaytes.

The justices were of the opinion that the liability of the respondents only commenced when the milk came into the possession of Stevenson at Ferryhill, and that they had discharged the onus cast upon them when they proved that they sold the milk in the same state in which it was purchased by them; and that Stevenson acted outside the scope of his authority in selling to Benson, and that there was no sale by the respondents to Benson. The justices dismissed the summons but stated this Case.

E The Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, provided:

- F "Section 6. No person shall sell to the prejudice of the purchaser any article of food or any drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by such purchaser under a penalty not exceeding £20 . . . Section 25. If the defendant in any prosecution under this Act proves to the satisfaction of the justices or court that he had purchased the article in question
- G as the same in nature, substance, and quality as that demanded of him by the prosecutor, and with a written warranty to that effect, that he had no reason to believe at the time when he sold it that the article was otherwise, and that he sold it in the same state as when he purchased it, he shall be discharged from the prosecution, but shall be liable to pay the costs incurred by the prosecutor, unless he shall have given due notice to him that he will
- H rely on the above defence."

Maddocks for the appellant.

Mortimer for the respondents.

- I VISCOUNT READING, C.J. In my opinion, this appeal must be allowed. The respondents were charged with an offence under s. 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, namely, with selling an article, milk, to the prejudice of the purchaser, which was not of the nature, substance and quality demanded. The respondents put in a twofold defence. In the first place they contended that the sale was not made on their behalf, inasmuch as the person who actually sold the milk had no authority on their behalf to sell it, and in the second place they contended that there had not been delivery to them as purchasers of the milk from their vendors at the time that is material for the purposes of the present case.

First, as to the authority of the servant to sell the milk. According to the finding of fact on the part of the justices, the servant Stevenson had no authority from the co-operative society to sell milk to any person who was not a member of the respondents' society and had not previously ordered a supply. That is not a finding that Stevenson had no authority at all to sell. It is nothing more than a finding that the authority to sell which was given to him was of a limited nature; that is the only implication that I am able to draw from the case as it is stated. Counsel for the respondents argued that we ought to read it in a different manner, namely, as a finding of fact that there was no authority to sell. I quite admit that if we were to do so we should be bound to come to the conclusion that the justices would have been right in dismissing the information, because no offence would have been committed by the respondents. If a servant sells an article which he is strictly forbidden to sell, he is acting altogether outside the scope of his authority, and his principal cannot be held responsible for his action. But when this case is examined carefully I cannot agree that that is the real meaning of the finding.

The attention of the justices was called to Lindsay v. Dempster (1), and they appear to have taken too wide a view of it. In my opinion that case does not assist the respondents in the least, for all that that case decided was that where a servant had acted outside the scope of his authority, he did not bind his principal by a sale which he himself had carried out. There the court came to the conclusion that the servant had no authority to sell at all. His duties were clearly defined, and his sole task was to deliver milk to customers who had previously bought it and to receive payment for the same. He did, in fact, sell milk while he was on his rounds to certain persons, but he had no right or authority to do so. Absolute prohibition is quite a different thing from limited authority and in the present case the servant had a limited authority to sell, and it was not his business simply to deliver. Under the circumstances, therefore, Lindsay v. Dempster (1) has no bearing upon the present case.

There is another case which has been cited, Boyle v. Smith (2), which is worthy of notice, because, although the decision is not altogether in point, there are certain observations in the judgments of LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., and LAWRENCE, J., which do affect the matter which is now under discussion. Boyle v. Smith (2) was a licensing case, and there a drayman had been sent out with beer by his master, who was licensed to sell beer by retail at his brewery for consumption off the premises, with strict orders only to deliver the same to persons who had previously ordered it, and not to sell or to deliver any whatever to other persons. If there was any beer undelivered it was his duty to bring it back to the brewery. The drayman sold some beer to persons in the street who had not previously ordered the same. This was held not to be a sale by the master. LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., said in the course of his judgment ([1906] 1 K.B. at p. 436): "This is not a case of delegated authority," and he evidently intimated by his language that, if it had been a case of delegated authority, his decision would have been different. Again, LAWRENCE, J., in the course of his judgment, said (ibid.):

"It is quite true that, if the drayman was acting within the general scope of his employment in selling beer, it would be no answer for the master to say that he had expressly forbidden him to do so. In the present case, however, the drayman was employed only to deliver beer and not to sell beer, and therefore the respondent cannot be made liable for what his servant did."

These observations are, in my opinion, very pertinent to the case which is now before us, and their effect is that, if there is any authority at all given to a servant, a misuse of that authority does not enable the principal, his master, to escape upon the well-known principles of law affecting principal and agent. In my opinion, the present case falls within that principle. It is a case of the

A misuse of authority, and not of acting outside the scope of the authority, and, therefore, the respondents are liable for the act of their servant Stevenson, even though express instructions had been given to him not to sell milk to persons other than customers of the society.

The second point taken on behalf of the respondents depends entirely, in my opinion, upon the interpretation of the written contract. Where, according to B the terms of the contract, was the delivery of the milk to be made? If the meaning of the contract is that delivery was to be made to the purchaser at the railway station, and from that moment the risk as to the goods was to attach to the purchaser, then Pugh v. Williams (3) is a direct authority upon the question which is now under discussion. The defence which is set up by the respondents is a statutory defence, and s. 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs C Act, 1875, imposes a burden upon the person who calls it in aid. What such a person has to do is to satisfy the court, when relying upon a written warranty given by his vendor, that he has performed all the conditions imposed by the section of the statute so as to make the defence provided applicable. I need not go through the whole of the section; it is sufficient to mention that one of the conditions imposed, and the one which more particularly applies to this D case, is that the article in question—namely, the milk—was sold in the same state as when it was purchased. Here the respondents rely upon the written warranty given by Thwaytes, and, in order that it may avail them, they must show that the milk when it was sold by Stevenson, their servant, was sold in the same state as it was when they purchased it. In Pugh v. Williams (3) the court held that where the milk then in question had been for a substantial E period of time at a railway station where it had been delivered and become the property of the purchaser, and no evidence had been given as to what had been done to it during that period, it could not be established that the defendant had sold the milk in the same state as that in which he purchased it. The court allowed the appeal—the justices had there found as in the present case that F the respondent was protected by the written warranty—upon the ground that the respondent had failed to satisfy the burden which was imposed upon him. Now, subject to one point which has been taken and argued on behalf of the respondents, to which I will refer directly, the position here is precisely the same as in Pugh v. Williams (3). Taking the more favourable view for the respondents —namely, that the place of delivery was at Ferryhill Station, and not at Appleby G —the milk arrived there at 5.13 a.m. and delivery was not taken by Stevenson until after 8 a.m. No evidence whatever was given as to what happened to the milk after it was taken off the train and before it was taken possession of by Stevenson. But, say the respondents, the milk was indeed sold in the same state in which they received it, because the delivery was not complete until the milk actually passed into their physical possession. Is that so? Looking at the contract H —and I have already stated that this point rests upon the interpretation of the written warranty—I cannot agree with that contention. The contract does not mention any place of delivery, but I think that the true view to be taken of it is that the milk was to be supplied to the Shildon branch of the co-operative society, carriage paid, on certain terms, and subject to a guarantee which I agree continues only until actual delivery, whenever that may be. If it had been I stated in the contract that the milk was to be delivered carriage paid at Ferryhill Station, then this case would have been exactly similar to Pugh v. Williams (3). But as no station is mentioned, I think that the proper inference to be drawn is that the Shildon branch of the co-operative society directed the vendor of the milk, Thwaytes, to deliver to the account of the branch at a particular station. There is no finding in the case which is in opposition to this view, and that is, in my opinion, the proper inference which one should draw from the document. If that is so, it is just as though the words “To be delivered at Ferryhill Station” were inserted in the contract. The strength of the argument of counsel, on behalf of the respondents, rests upon the words, "I, Richard Thwaytes . . . agree to supply to the Bishop Auckland Co-operative Society (Shildon Branch)," and the absence of any mention as to the place of delivery. But I think that such a contention is placing too great a burden upon the words "agree to supply", which do not mean, as I think, to deliver into the actual physical possession of the Shildon branch, but to deliver wherever ordered by the respondents for the account of the Shildon branch of the co-operative society. As I have arrived at that conclusion as to the meaning of the contract, it seems to me that Pugh v. Williams (3) is an authority directly in point, and I do not think that it is necessary for me to add anything to what I said in that case. For the reasons which I have stated I am of opinion that this appeal must be allowed, and that the Case must be remitted to the justices with a direction to convict.

AVORY, J.—I am of the same opinion. As to the first point raised—namely, whether the man Stevenson had authority to sell—I am entirely in accord with what has been said by the Lord Chief Justice. The point is really of little practical importance, because it is clear that under s. 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Amendment Act, 1879, and the Milk and Dairies Act, 1914—a sample of the milk might have been taken at the place of delivery, and, if it had been so taken, it would not have been material, or even open, to consider whether Stevenson was authorised to sell or not. As to the second point, it is to be observed that the material part of s. 25 of the Act of 1875 for the consideration of the justices is in these words, "and that he sold it in the same state as when he purchased it." Now, taking the most favourable view for the respondents of this contract, it is clear that they purchased the milk at the time when it arrived at the railway station. If anyone had disputed their title to it after its arrival there, there can be no doubt that they would have alleged that the milk was their property, labelled and duly consigned to them. I think that the present case is entirely covered by Pugh v. Williams (3), and that the respondents have failed to discharge the burden cast upon them by s. 25 of the Act of 1875, so as to make their defence complete. The case must be sent back to the justices with a direction to convict.

SHEARMAN, J.—I agree. As to the first point argued on behalf of the respondents, I think that the servant of the co-operative society had a limited authority to sell, and that he misused it. That being so, the respondents are liable for the act of their servant unless they can bring themselves within the protection afforded by s. 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, which is their second point of defence. In order to do that, the respondents must show that the milk when sold by them was in the same state as when they purchased it. Speaking for myself, I must confess that I have some difficulty in seeing how one can construe this commercial contract differently from any other commercial contract. It seems to me that the place of purchase was Appleby Station, notwithstanding the fact that the terms of the contract obliged the vendor to add to it that he would pay the cost of carriage to some other station. Of course, as the statute is of a quasi-criminal character, it must be construed strictly. In many of these contracts—each case speaking for itself—there has been a finding that the place of purchase was the place of delivery, and the court has extended the protection. A good illustration of this is afforded by Sanders v. Sadler (4), but the protection has never extended beyond the place of delivery—that is, the railway station; and, if that is so, this case in my opinion is entirely covered by the decision in Pugh v. Williams (3). The respondents have not protected themselves by showing that the milk had not been tampered with in the interval between the time of its arrival at Ferryhill Station and the time when it was taken possession of by their servant Stevenson, and therefore the protection

A afforded by s. 25 of the Act of 1875 does not apply in this case. As the respondents have failed upon both points raised by them, I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., for Harold Jerons, Durham; Rider, Heaton, Meredith & Mills, for G. W. Jennings & Sons, Bishop Auckland.

[Reported by J. A. SLATER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re SHAW. Ex parte SHAW v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER

D [COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Bankes, and Warrington, L.JJ.), July 6, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 734; 86 L.J.K.B. 1395; 117 L.T. 425;
[1917] H.B.R. 214]

Bankruptcy—Discharge—Suspension—Impropriety of bankrupt's conduct—Agreement that trustee would not object to discharge if certain payments made and would influence creditors not to object—Purchase by bankrupt's relatives of debts without full disclosure of material facts.

E

F

G

H

I

By an agreement dated April 20, 1916, and made between a bankrupt and the trustee in bankruptcy, in consideration of specified monthly payments being made by the bankrupt no application would be made to the Court in respect of any salary then being earned by the bankrupt or any property or assets owned by him, acquired or to be acquired out of his earnings. At that time the bankrupt was in receipt of a salary of £1,200 in respect of his employment by a company, in which he owned 833 fully paid £1 shares. It was further agreed that when the monthly instalments paid should have amounted to a sum sufficient to pay the creditors 5s. in the pound no objection would be raised by the trustee, and he would use his best endeavours to prevent any objections by any creditors, to an application by the bankrupt for his discharge under or for the annulment of his bankruptcy. It appeared that relatives of the bankrupt, with his consent and privity, had on his behalf bought up a number of the claims of creditors, who were unaware of the facts above stated, at rates varying from 2s. 6d. to 10s. in the pound. In view of these matters, among others, the registrar ordered that the bankrupt's discharge be suspended for two years. On appeal, Held: it was highly improper for the trustee to bind himself, whatever might be the facts at the material future time, not to object to the bankrupt's discharge and to do his best to prevent any creditor objecting; those provisions had been inserted in the agreement for the benefit of the bankrupt, and he must be held responsible for having stipulated for them; the purchase of debts from creditors at different prices without full disclosure of every material fact was also grossly improper; and, therefore, the registrar was entitled to take those matters into consideration when making the order for suspension.

Notes. As to orders for discharge, see 2 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 515 et seq., and for cases see 4 DIGEST (Repl.) 586 et seq.

Appeal from an order made by Mr. Registrar Mellor suspending for two years the discharge of the bankrupt, Herbert William Shaw, Patrick Hastings for the bankrupt.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Gordon Hewart, K.C.) and E. W. Hansell for the official receiver.

Kingham for the trustee in bankruptcy.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J. This is an appeal by the bankrupt from an order made by the registrar upon the bankrupt's application for his discharge, suspending the discharge for two years. The order of adjudication in bankruptcy was made on May 15, 1914. The provable debts were then £3,513, and there were practically no assets. The only sum able to be collected by the trustee was £1 19s. 11d. The official receiver reported that the bankrupt's assets were not of a sufficient value to pay 10s. in the pound. He also reported that the bankrupt had omitted to keep such books of account as are usual and proper in the business carried on by him, and as would be sufficient to disclose the business transactions. He further reported that the bankrupt became aware of his insolvency in October, 1913, and thereafter continued to trade and contract debts, after knowing himself to be insolvent. Under those circumstances it is not disputed that it was open to the registrar in his discretion to suspend the discharge for a period of two years. It is said, however, that the registrar has exercised his discretion improperly and on some wrong principle, because he has taken matters into consideration to which he ought not to have had regard.

The first of those matters was this. It appears that at some date—we are not told when, and under some agreement which is not produced—the bankrupt entered into the employment of the Staines Projectile Co., Ltd., and was in receipt of a salary of £1,200 a year. It also appears that the bankrupt became possessed in some way—we are not told how, and at a time of which we are not informed—of 833 fully-paid shares of the nominal value of £1 each in the Staines Projectile Co., Ltd.

On April 20, 1916, he entered into an agreement with the trustee in bankruptcy, which provided as follows:

“In consideration of an arrangement having been made between the parties hereto that so long as the monthly payments hereinafter mentioned are duly paid no application shall be made to the court in respect of any salary now being earned or any property or assets owned or to be owned by [the bankrupt] acquired or to be acquired out of his earnings”

he agreed to pay £30 on the 21st of each calendar month until 20s. in the pound should have been paid to the creditors. In other words, the bankrupt agrees to pay £360 a year out of his salary of £1,200. We are told that he has a wife and two young children, aged about twelve and seven years. As security for the payments he deposited the certificate for the 833 fully-paid shares, and part of the arrangement was that he should be able to obtain a release of them by the trustee on paying the nominal value of the shares. Clause 8 of the agreement, to which the strongest objection is taken, is in these terms:

“It is further agreed and declared that if and then the monthly instalments to be paid by [the bankrupt] as aforesaid shall have been paid to an amount which shall, after providing for the payment of the costs, charges, remuneration fees and expenses of the trustee as aforesaid, amount to a sum sufficient to pay to the creditors who shall have proved their claims as aforesaid the sum of 5s. in the pound no objection will be raised by the trustee and that the trustee will use his best endeavours to prevent any objections by any creditors to any application by [the bankrupt] for his discharge under or for the annulment of his said bankruptcy.”

That agreement having been entered into, two brothers-in-law of the bankrupt, with his consent and with his privity, proceeded to buy up claims of the creditors. Those claims appear to have been the matter of negotiation. They were purchased at different rates. As little as 2s. 6d. in the pound was paid to some creditors,

- A notwithstanding the arrangement provided by this agreement for the payment of the creditors in full. The creditors appear to have been very unequally dealt with, because 3s. 6d., 4s. 8d., 5s., and as much as 10s. in the pound were paid to certain creditors, so that at rates varying between 2s. 6d. and 10s. in the pound the claims of various creditors were brought up. According to the report of the official receiver, some of these creditors stated that they were unaware of the
- B amount of the bankrupt's salary—namely, £1,200 a year—and were unaware of the agreement made by the trustee, to which I have referred, when they agreed to assign their debts to the brothers-in-law.

In my opinion, the agreement entered into by the trustee was a most improper agreement, and the language used by the registrar was not in the least too severe with regard to such an agreement. It is to be observed that this is what the

C effect of the agreement is. The trustee, being a trustee in bankruptcy for all the creditors and having been chosen to protect the interests of the creditors, binds himself beforehand, at the instance of the bankrupt, to "use his best endeavours to prevent any objections by any creditors" to the bankrupt's application for discharge or annulment of his bankruptcy. It was pointed out with perfect propriety by the registrar (117 L.T. at p. 426) that it was not within the rights of

D the trustee

"to bargain away the right or the duty (for it may even be said to be the duty) of a creditor in certain circumstances to attend on an application by the debtor to get rid of his bankruptcy, whether it be by annulment or whether it be by discharge."

- E For the trustee, without knowing what the facts might be on the application for annulment or for discharge, to bind himself beforehand to use his best endeavours to prevent the creditors from opposing the annulment or the discharge is a highly improper thing, and something into which, in my judgment, no trustee should ever enter. The argument addressed to us on behalf of the trustee does not improve the position. It was urged on his behalf that he was obliged to
- F assent to that stipulation because the bankrupt would not enter into the agreement without it. It will be observed that there was property belonging to the bankrupt consisting of 833 shares in this company acquired during the bankruptcy. The bankrupt was in receipt of a salary of £1,200, as to which it was open for application to be made under s. 51 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 [now Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 49]. Notwithstanding that, the trustee, in my judgment, most
- G improperly executed this agreement with the bankrupt.

This much may be said in favour of the trustee, that there is no suggestion that there was corruption on his part. He was not bribed to enter into the agreement. It is not suggested that he got any personal benefit for himself out of it. It is said that at the most it was an error of judgment on his part to do it. But, accepting that view, it was a very gross error of judgment. The agree-

H ment was one which a trustee in bankruptcy should never enter into, in any circumstances.

Again, the circumstances under which these debts were bought up were extremely unsatisfactory. With that part of the case the trustee in bankruptcy is not concerned. He was not a party to the debts being paid off, but the bankrupt was. It was with his privity that these arrangements were made whereby the

I creditors assigned their debts for the different amounts I have mentioned, and then, of course, the official receiver has the complaint made to him that some of them were not aware when they did so of the salary of £1,200 a year, or of the agreement under which the bankrupt had agreed to pay the £30 a month to the trustee until the debts were paid in full. In my opinion, the circumstances of the case are such that there was ample material upon which the registrar, in the exercise of his discretion, should suspend the discharge of the bankrupt, and there is no ground for the point raised upon the appeal that he took into consideration matters which ought not to have been taken into consideration. This appeal should be dismissed with costs, and the sum that has been deposited in court will be paid out to the official receiver on account of costs, and the balance of his costs will be paid out of the estate in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree. As I understand the complaint, it is that upon the facts before him the learned registrar ought not to have drawn any inference adverse to the bankrupt. Upon the argument before us it appears to me that there was really no attempt to maintain that position upon the facts as they appeared before the registrar. Take, first of all, the clause in the agreement as to the trustee not objecting to the bankrupt obtaining his discharge. It is not disputed that that is a clause which may be called an improper clause, and which under any ordinary circumstances a trustee ought not to enter into and a bankrupt ought not to enter into. It is said that the trustee was acting on advice. He was put in a difficult position because the bankrupt's solicitor said that the bankrupt would not sign the agreement unless the clause was agreed to. All I can say about that is that it seems to me that the trustee misconceived his position and his duty altogether in agreeing to any such clause, and, if he was acting on advice, he was acting on bad advice and he would be well advised to change his advisers. It is significant in this case that all the matters which have been relied upon as indicating that the registrar was wrong, or as justifying this appeal, are facts which are not upon evidence. I have dealt with the case of the trustee. It is not really before us, but his excuse depends upon a fact which is not in evidence—that he was acting upon advice which he thought he was justified in taking. So far as the bankrupt is concerned, his counsel really does not defend the clause in the agreement. But he says that under the circumstances the bankrupt ought not to be blamed for either allowing his solicitor to insist upon it or for his solicitor inserting it in the agreement. Again it is said that he was acting upon advice. Upon that, all that I can say is that there is no evidence of it. If I assume that he was acting upon advice and that his solicitor drafted the agreement, again it was bad advice. But from the point of view of the bankrupt, what seems to me much more serious is his conduct with regard to the buying up of the debts of these creditors, because the position, according to him, was that he had entered into an agreement with the trustee under which he was obliged to pay these creditors in full, and, having done that, he allows his brothers-in-law to purchase these debts at figures which, upon the face of them, would indicate that the creditors were wholly ignorant of the position which the bankrupt had placed himself by this agreement. On the other hand, it is said that that is a purely wrong inference, because a meeting of creditors was called and they were all fairly informed of the facts, and every one of them entered into these bargains with their eyes open, knowing what the position was and preferring to enter into this arrangement. If that were so, it would be quite easy to prove it, and if evidence were given of it, it would explain away that fact, which otherwise seems to me abundantly to justify the conclusion at which the learned registrar arrived. On these grounds I agree that this appeal fails.

WARRINGTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the matter was entirely in the discretion of the registrar. The official receiver's report disclosed facts which, under the statute, were sufficient to justify the suspension of the debtor's discharge. The ground put forward on behalf of the debtor in support of the appeal is that the registrar in dealing with that matter took into account circumstances which had no bearing on the question which he had to determine, and that he was thereby misled into exercising his discretion in the way he did.

The two points which he did take into account were, first, the agreement by the trustee, and, secondly, the purchase of the debts from individual creditors at different amounts. With regard to the first of these two circumstances, the

- A clause about which we have heard so much was obviously inserted in the agreement for the benefit of the debtor. He must, therefore, be held responsible for having stipulated for that particular provision. Let us see what that provision is. I pass over for the moment that part of it which provides that the trustee shall use his best endeavours to persuade the creditors not to object to the discharge. Looking at the position of the trustee himself, he bound himself, on the sole condition that the debtor shall have paid enough to give 5s. in the pound to the creditors, not to raise any objection to an application for discharge. Whatever circumstances may come to his knowledge, whatever he may know at the time that the application is made, he is not to disclose those facts or that knowledge to the court—facts and knowledge which it might be extremely material for the court to know in determining whether the discharge is to be granted or not.
- C How comes it that the trustee, who is appointed, not in the interests of the debtor, but in the interests of the general body of creditors, to look after the due administration of the estate, so binds himself that, whatever the circumstances may be, he is not to raise objection to the discharge of the debtor or the annulment of the bankruptcy? I need say no more about that.

- D With regard to the purchase of the debts, it was admitted by the debtor, or his counsel, before the registrar that he had been a party to the purchase of those debts. It is to be borne in mind that these creditors were negotiating with individuals, and it is obvious that the negotiations must have been so conducted (for it is impossible to suppose that one creditor would have been willing to accept 2s. 6d. in the pound while another creditor was willing to accept 10s. in the pound) that the creditors cannot have been put upon an equal footing in the negotiations resulting in the purchase of these debts. That is enough, to my mind, to show that that also was a circumstance which the registrar was justified in taking into account in exercising his discretion. For these reasons I am of opinion that the discretion was exercised properly, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.
- E

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Kenneth Brown, Baker & Baker; Solicitor to the Board of Trade; Henry Stewart-Moore.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WATSON v. WINCH

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Reading, C.J., Sankey and Low, J.J.), January 19, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 1 K.B. 688; 85 L.J.K.B. 537; 115 L.T. 1209;
80 J.P. 149; 32 T.L.R. 244; 14 L.G.R. 486]

Local Government Byelaw—Repeal of statute conferring power to make byelaw—Byelaw becoming invalid unless expressly preserved by repealing statute.
Byelaws made under a statute which is repealed cease to have effect and become invalid unless they are expressly preserved by the repealing statute.

Notes. Section 85 of the Local Government Act, 1888, except for the words therein "Bicycles, tricycles, velocipedes, and other similar machines are hereby declared to be carriages, within the meaning of the Highway Acts", was repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1908, the Road Transport Lighting Act, 1927, s. 11 and Schedule, the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 122 and Sched. 5, and the Local Government Act, 1933, s. 307, Part III.

As to the validity of byelaws, see 24 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 515 et seq.; and for cases see 13 DIGEST (Repl.) 251.

Case referred to:

(1) Surtees v. Ellison (1829), 9 B. & C. 750; 4 Man. & Ry. K.B. 586; 7 L.J.O.S. K.B. 335; 109 E.R. 278; 42 Digest 773, 2017.

Also referred to in argument:

A.-G. v. Lamplough (1878), 3 Ex.D. 214; 47 L.J.Q.B. 555; 38 L.T. 87; 42 J.P. 356; 26 W.R. 323, C.A.; 42 Digest 673, 846.

Case Stated by justices of Norwich.

On Aug. 9, 1915 the respondent, Edwin Francis Winch, the chief constable for the city of Norwich, preferred an information against the appellant, Ernest Ivens Watson, alleging that the appellant, upon a certain day in July, 1915, unlawfully offended against a certain byelaw made in 1879 by riding a bicycle upon the footway of Unthank Road, in the city of Norwich. By s. 45 of the Norwich Improvement Act, 1879, it is provided:

"The corporation may from time to time make byelaws for regulating the use in streets and public places within the city of bicycles, velocipedes, and other wheeled conveyances of a like nature."

The byelaw under which the information was laid was made in November, 1879, and was in the following terms:

"A person shall not ride or impel a machine upon any footway, pavement, or causeway made or set apart for the use or accommodation of foot passengers."

It was proved that the appellant rode a bicycle on the day referred to, at 1.25 p.m., along the side of Unthank Road, Norwich, the portion of the road so ridden on being raised from the carriageway and separated therefrom by a kerbstone and used as a footway. At the hearing of the information the appellant contended that the byelaw had been repealed, as far as bicycles were concerned, by s. 85 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which was as follows:

"(1) The provisions of s. 26 (5) of the Highways and Locomotive (Amendment) Act, 1878, and s. 23 (1) of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, in so far as it gives power to the council to make byelaws regulating the use of carriages herein referred to, and all other provisions of any public or private Acts, in so far as they give power to any local authority to make byelaws for regulating the use of bicycles, tricycles, velocipedes, and other similar

- A machines, are hereby repealed, and bicycles, tricycles, velocipedes, and other similar machines are hereby declared to be carriages within the meaning of the Highway Acts."

The justices rejected the contention of the appellant and convicted him.

D. N. Pritt (Cloughton Scott with him) for the appellant.

- B The respondent did not appear.

- LORD READING, C.J.—The appellant was convicted of an offence infringing a certain byelaw of the city of Norwich, which byelaw was validly made under the provisions of s. 45 of the Norwich Improvement Act, 1879, a section which gave the Norwich Corporation the power of making byelaws for the regulation of the use in streets of bicycles, velocipedes, and other wheeled conveyances of a like nature. But by s. 85 of the Local Government Act, 1888, all provisions of any public or private Acts, in so far as they give power to any local authority to make byelaws for regulating the use of bicycles, tricycles, velocipedes, and other similar machines, were repealed, and bicycles, tricycles, velocipedes, and other similar machines were declared to be carriages within the meaning of the Highway Acts. Of course, one of the Acts repealed by this section was the
- D Norwich Improvement Act, 1879, so far as the special provisions which I have named were concerned, and the effect of the new legislation was to apply to bicycles, tricycles, velocipedes, and the other like machines the code of law applicable to carriages as defined by the Highway Acts.

- A question has now arisen as to the effect of a repeal of this character, a question which apparently has never yet been decided by any court. The Act which enabled the corporation to make byelaws has been repealed. Obviously no further byelaws can be made under the former statute. I will assume that all the byelaws made prior to the date of the repeal were validly made. But what is their position after the repeal? Are the byelaws still in existence and enforceable, or do they come to an end? In other words, does the repeal of the statute which confers the power of making byelaws upon a subordinate body ipso facto repeal the byelaws also? The question is undoubtedly one of general importance, and the able argument put forward on behalf of the appellant has made me regret that no one has appeared on behalf of the respondent. We are of opinion that the point raised on behalf of the appellant is a good one, and that his contention is well founded. In Sutcliffe v. Ellison (1) LORD TEXTERDEN, C.J., said (9 B. & C. at p. 752):

- G "It has been long established, that, when an Act of Parliament is repealed, it must be considered (except as to transactions past and closed) as if it had never existed. That is the general rule; and we must not destroy that by indulging in conjectures as to the intention of the legislature."

- To that passage it is only necessary to make one qualification, namely, that since that case was decided Lord Brougham's Act (13 & 14 Viet., c. 21) and the Interpretation Act, 1889, have been passed, and it is necessary to bear this later Act in mind, especially s. 11. It seems to follow, then, that any byelaw made under a statute which is repealed ceases to possess any validity unless the repealing statute contains some provision or makes some enactment preserving the validity of the byelaw notwithstanding the repeal of the statute. Now let me apply that
- I principle to the present case. Here we have byelaws made validly under the Norwich Improvement Act, 1879. So long as that Act was in force the byelaws were effective. But when that Act was repealed, so far as its provisions related to bicycles, &c., by the Local Government Act, 1888, the byelaws ceased to have any validity, and were to be treated as non-existent, I think, therefore, that the justices came to a wrong decision, and the conviction must be quashed.

In this particular case there is another point which arises, though it is not of the same general application and interest. The Local Government Act, 1888, the repealing statute, has made other provisions as to bicycles. It would be an odd thing that a byelaw dealing with bicycles in streets should exist at the same time as another code possibly inconsistent with it. By the Local Government Act, 1888, bicycles are to be dealt with as "carriages" under the Highway Acts, and provisions enabling local authorities to make byelaws regulating the use of bicycles are repealed. It is quite clear then that the legislature intended to substitute the provisions of the Highway Acts for the byelaws which previously existed, and it follows that the former byelaws are repealed. This is in accordance with the well-established principle of law that when there are two statutes in existence, and the later statute contains provisions which are inconsistent with those of the earlier one, the earlier statute is repealed in so far as it is at variance with the later one. For the reasons which I have stated the appeal must be allowed.

SANKEY, J.—I am in entire agreement with my Lord's judgment. Stated quite shortly, the matter appears to stand thus, that where a statute under which byelaws are made is repealed, the byelaws cease to be effective unless they are expressly preserved by the repealing statute. If this were not so, there might easily be two codes in existence relating to the same matter altogether inconsistent with one another, and this would reduce the law to an absurdity. Moreover, it has been the usual practice whenever it has been desired by a repealing statute to preserve byelaws made under the previous statute to make special provision for keeping the byelaws alive. In the present instance this has not been done. I think, therefore, that we must take it that the Local Government Act, 1888, expressly repealed the Norwich Improvement Act, 1879, in certain particulars, and at the same time repealed all byelaws relating to bicycles, &c. which had been made under the powers conferred on the Norwich Corporation by the latter Act.

LOW, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Hatchett-Jones, Bisgood & Marshall, for Watson & Everitt, Norwich.

[Reported by J. A. SLATER, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

HURST v. EVANS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lush, J.), December 1, 4, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 352; 86 L.J.K.B. 305; 116 L.T. 252; 33 T.L.R. 96.]

Insurance—Loss—Exception—Burden of proof—Exception of loss by dishonesty of servant—Evidence not amounting to proof of criminal charge—Exclusion in criminal proceedings.

By a policy of insurance the assured was insured against loss or damage or misfortune to his jewellery "arising from any cause whatsoever, whether arising on land or water, save and except . . . loss by theft or dishonesty committed by any servant in the exclusive employment of the assured . . ."

During the currency of the policy jewellery was taken from a safe in the assured's shop during the night, and the assured claimed under the policy in respect of the loss.

Held: (i) in view of the wording of the policy the onus was on the plaintiff to prove, not only the fact of the loss, but also that the loss did not fall within one of the exceptions in the policy; (ii) evidence to prove that the loss was due to the theft or dishonesty of a servant of the assured, and so came within an exception, was admissible although it was not such as would justify a verdict of Guilty if the servant were tried on a criminal charge with respect to the loss.

Notes. The holding with regard to the onus of proof was criticised by BAILHACHE, J., in Munro, Brice & Co. v. War Risks Association (post p. 981) a case of a marine policy.

Referred to: Lake v. Simmons (1926), 95 L.J.K.B. 586.

As to insurance against loss, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 330, 331, and cases there cited.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Thurtell v. Beaumont (1823), 1 Bing. 339; 29 Digest 322, 2643.
- (2) Gorman v. Hand in Hand Insurance Co. (1877), 11 C.L. 224; 29 Digest 328, 2673iii.
- (3) Dawson v. Wrench (1849), 3 Exch. 359; 18 L.J.Ex. 229; 12 L.T.O.S. 405; 154 W.R. 883; 29 Digest 244, 1972.
- (4) Wheeler v. Bavidge (1854), 9 Exch. 668; 2 C.L.R. 1077; 23 L.J.Ex. 221; 156 E.R. 286; 41 Digest 328, 1851.
- (5) Crow v. Falk (1846), 8 Q.B. 467; 15 L.J.Q.B. 183; 10 Jur. 374; 115 E.R. 952; 41 Digest 333, 1876.
- (6) The Glendarroch, [1894] P. 226; 63 L.J.P. 89; 70 L.T. 344; 10 T.L.R. 269; 38 Sol. Jo. 362; 7 Asp. M.L.C. 420; 6 R. 686, C.A.; 41 Digest 414, 2580.

Action on a policy of insurance tried by LUSH, J., without a jury.

The facts appear in the judgment.

Heber Hart, K.C., and Gerard Sanders for the assured.

Patrick Hastings for the defendant, an underwriter.

LUSH, J.—This case raises questions of some difficulty and undoubtedly of considerable importance. The action is brought on a policy of insurance which was obviously intended mainly to cover the loss of jewellery by theft or burglary, but is not in the ordinary form of a burglary or theft policy. The policy provides that, in consideration of the premium, the assured should be insured against "loss or damage or misfortune" to the jewellery

"arising from any cause whatsoever, whether arising on land or water, save and except breakage of furniture, china, earthenware, glass, and brittle articles, and save and except loss by theft or dishonesty committed by any servant or traveller or messenger in the exclusive employment of the assured, unless when conveying goods to the post, and save and except loss by theft or dishonesty committed by any broker or customer in respect of goods intrusted to them by the assured, his servants or agents, unless such loss arises when goods are deposited for safe custody by the assured, his servants or agents, with such broker or customer."

The policy covers not only jewellery, but a quantity of other goods. The assured was a jeweller, and entered into this contract with the underwriters, the defendants.

The assured alleges that on the night of May 3, 1915, there was a burglary, or, at all events, that there was a robbery, at his premises in the Fulham Road, and that somebody that night stole a quantity of jewels valued at something between £700 and £800, and he brings an action on the policy for the purpose of being indemnified against loss. The assured's statement of claim as it was originally drawn alleged that there had been a burglary, but alleged nothing else, and, if the statement of claim had continued to be in that form and I had had to decide the case strictly on the pleadings, I must, in my view of the facts, have given judgment for the defendant, because on the facts I am satisfied that there was no burglary, no breaking in or breaking out of the premises. But the statement of claim has been amended, and the assured says in substance that he has suffered a loss within the meaning of the policy, and that is how he now puts his case. Alternatively, he raises the claim of burglary. The defence consists of a traverse of all the material facts alleged by the plaintiff, and there is a further plea to the effect that a man named Mason, who was a servant of the assured, was implicated in the crime.

The assured had his shop in the Fulham Road, in which there was a safe containing a large quantity of jewels. He had two men in his employ, one a man named Brown, who was his manager, and a man named Mason, who was under Brown, and who had been with him, I think, about ten months at the time of the loss. On the evening of May 3 something had gone wrong with the electric light, and Brown and Mason stopped longer than usual on the premises. They had arranged somewhere about ten o'clock in the morning—it is not very clear who suggested it, but certainly Mason took some part in the suggestion—that they should spend the evening together. As I say, they were late in leaving the premises. Brown wanted to finish the work of repairing the electric light, but Mason for some reason was anxious that Brown should not do so, and he suggested that Brown could finish the work in the morning. Mason, according to Brown, was very insistent that they should leave when the time arrived at which Mason wished to go. He urged Brown to hurry, and they left together about nine o'clock. They went next door to buy some cigarettes; they had rarely done that before; the man in the shop said they had done it occasionally; they then left. They went to one or two houses of call, and then spent the evening playing billiards until a very late hour. About a quarter of an hour after they left there was a very violent explosion heard upon the premises. Both neighbours—that is to say, the proprietor of the tobacconist's shop, and Mrs. Brown, who lives on the other side next door to the assured's shop—came out and looked out of their doors, wondering what had caused the explosion. Mrs. Brown continued at her shop door, standing, therefore, close to the entrance to the assured's shop, and she has sworn—and I accept her evidence—that during the few minutes that elapsed before the firemen came up, about ten minutes, no human creature either left the place or went in. The firemen came; they found the place locked up—no apparent indication of anybody having broken in; the windows were safe and the door was secured, and one of them had to kick open the door with his foot. They went in and found the place full of smoke and that the safe had been blown open by explosive. The police followed soon afterwards, and they found a very remarkable state of things. The room was covered with dust; everything was in disorder; but they found that of the four wooden trays which had been inside the safe three were now in the room outside the safe, and one was left in the safe. Two of the three were on the floor not far from the

- A safe; one stood on a table in a recess; the fourth, as I say, was in the safe. The safe-breaker had employed the method, so common in these cases, of putting a very large quantity of soap in the keyhole of the safe for the purpose of deadening the sound of the explosion, and when the police got there they found that this soap had been scattered by the explosion all over the room. The two trays that stood on the floor were covered with this soap, but there was no soap on the tray that had been left inside the safe, and the inference the experts drew, and asked me to draw—and I do draw it, because it is an irresistible one I think—is, that the trays had been taken out of the safe before the explosion ever occurred. Of course the jewels were all gone. It is quite inconceivable, it seems to me, that the thief blew the safe up in order to get at the inside, because the position of the trays outside the safe, and the fact that there were two of them covered with soap, whereas the one left in had no soap on it, leads one necessarily to the conclusion that the inference I have mentioned is the only possible one to draw. Therefore, whoever it was who stole the jewels did not get access to the safe by means of the explosion. The trays must have been taken out of the safe before the explosive was ever used. The explosion, as I have said, took place about a quarter of an hour after Brown and Mason had left. There were two keys of the door, and there were two keys of the safe. One key of the door and one of the safe was kept by the assured, and the others were kept by Brown. The place was thoroughly examined, and the result of the examination was that it was thought that nobody got in or got out by breaking and entering either at the front or at the rear. Everything was in perfect order, and the evidence was that it would be extremely difficult for anybody to get in from the rear at all. However that may be, I am quite clear that nobody got into that house and nobody broke out of it.

One must see what possible light is thrown on the occurrence by what one knows with regard to Brown and Mason. With regard to Brown, there is no suggestion that he had done anything to lead to the inference that he took any part in this robbery. With regard to Mason, evidence was tendered of his character, which I rejected. Character has no relevance at all in a civil action. Evidence of good character is admitted in a criminal proceeding, not in a civil action. I know nothing of these parties, nothing of either Brown or Mason's antecedents, but evidence was tendered that Mason was about this time an associate of two or three notorious and highly skilled safe-breakers. Counsel for the assured objected to the evidence. It is not necessary for me to say definitely whether evidence to that effect would be admitted in a criminal prosecution. I have very much doubt if it would, not because I think it is not relevant, but because in criminal proceedings evidence is often rejected which, although strictly relevant, might on the whole so tend to prejudice an accused person as to make it difficult for him to obtain that fair trial which, according to our jurisprudence, can only be secured if a jury tries him on the footing that he is an innocent person, and they are not allowed to know his previous misdeeds. That evidence, I think, probably would not be admitted in criminal proceedings, but in this action I admitted it, and I admitted it because I think that, although taken by itself, its weight is certainly slight, I cannot say it is not a relevant fact in a case like this, where the whole question depends upon whether Mason was acting dishonestly—that is the expression in the policy—or was acting in complicity with the persons who actually effected this theft, and I admitted it. The detective sergeant told me that two days before this occurrence Mason, to his surprise, was in a public-house, engaged in what the detective sergeant called heated or earnest conversation with three notorious safe-breakers. There is one other incident I must mention which came out in the cross-examination of Brown. On the Saturday night before the robbery Mason told Brown that he (Mason) had got a possible customer, either at Clapham Junction or somewhere near there, who was minded to buy some of these jewels, and he arranged that he should come on the Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, and that he and Brown should go down to the premises together. Mason in fact called two hours before the appointed time, and Brown was in bed and, therefore, could not come at once. Mason, it is quite true, Brown said, waited a little, and ultimately asked Brown to lend him the key of the door and the key of the safe in order that he (Mason) might go to the premises with these keys, unlock the door, unlock the safe, and take these jewels to this customer, who had an appointment, he said, with him at ten o'clock. Brown gave him the keys. Mason returned and gave the keys back to Brown. No customer has been called, no person has been called in this action to depose to Mason's going to see him with any jewels. The assured has called no witness; he has not even called Mason. That is how the matter stands.

Upon that evidence counsel for the assured says that the onus is upon the defendant of proving that Mason was dishonest, that he was an accomplice or the actual perpetrator of this felony, and he asks me to hold that, although the circumstances give rise to grave suspicion, there is not sufficient evidence to warrant me in coming to the conclusion of fact that Mason was dishonest and was the thief. On the other hand, counsel for the defendant urges that the onus is upon the assured. If the onus is upon the assured, and if he has to negative the loss by the dishonesty of a servant, I can have no hesitation in holding that the assured has not discharged the onus. As I say, he has not called Mason to explain these circumstances, although Mason, I am told—and it was not demurred to—was available as a witness, and, indeed, was in court. He has not called this alleged customer. It is obvious that, if the burden is upon the assured, he has not proved that this loss occurred by some cause other than the dishonesty of Mason.

Is the onus upon the assured or is it upon the defendant? Counsel for the assured has cited two authorities upon which he asked me to say that the onus is upon the defendants. The first case was Thurtell v. Beaumont (1). That was a case brought against an insurance company to recover the value of goods alleged to have been destroyed by fire in the plaintiff's warehouse. The defence set up was that the assured had wilfully set fire to the premises, or had caused them to be set fire to. Positive testimony was adduced, and inconsistencies were pointed out in the assured's evidence tending to substantiate the charge. The learned judge directed the jury that, before they gave a verdict against the assured, it was their duty to be satisfied that the crime of wilfully setting fire to the premises was as clearly brought home to him in this action as would warrant their finding him guilty of the criminal offence if he had been tried before them on a criminal charge. It was held that the direction was right. There the burden was undoubtedly put upon the defendant, but I point out that in that case the policy was not similar to the terms of this policy. It was an ordinary fire policy, and the defence pleaded there was that the assured himself had committed a crime or a fraud, or had attempted to put upon the underwriters by claiming against them for fire when he himself had feloniously caused it. One can well understand in that case that the burden would be upon the defendant. It was not a policy against loss by any cause except a particular one; it was a policy against fire, and the person implicated was the contracting party himself, the assured. I cannot treat that case as any authority at all to guide me in the present case. The next case cited was nearer to this. That was the case in the Court of Exchequer in Ireland of Gorman v. Hand in Hand Insurance Co. (2). That was a fire policy, the terms of which were:

"The society agrees (subject to the conditions indorsed, which are to be taken as part of the policy) that if the property described shall be destroyed or damaged by fire . . . they will . . . pay or make good all such loss and damage."

It was there held that the burden was upon the insurers, and the Chief Baron in his judgment says this (I.R. 11 C.L. at p. 230):

- A "When, therefore, it is once shown that the loss resulted from fire, the plaintiff has established a prima facie case, and the onus is thrown upon the defendants to prove that the act which caused the fire was within the proviso. The defence is not in any sense a traverse of an allegation included in the general averments of the plaint; it is a plea in confession and avoidance, and the proof of it is on the defendants."
- B Again, I do not consider that that case is really in point. That was not a policy in terms like this policy. It was an absolute policy of insurance against loss by fire, subject, no doubt, to conditions in the policy, and the Chief Baron pointed out that what the defendant had done was not to traverse the allegation the assured had made, but to plead avoidance, and that, having undertaken the burden, he was bound to make it good. I do not think that that case is an authority.
- C The general law on this subject in cases of actions upon policies of insurance can, I think, best be gathered by saying what it was that the assured would have to plead, according to the strict rule of pleading, before he could recover, and in BULLEN AND LEAKE (3rd Edn.) p. 182 the proposition is stated thus:
- D "In declaring on marine policies, when the nature of the claim makes it necessary to refer to the whole contents of the policy, memoranda, &c., it will frequently be found convenient to set out the document verbatim, as the commercial form of these instruments and the blanks left in them make it difficult to recite them in a satisfactory manner . . . In other cases the shortest form, of course, is to give the legal aspect of the material parts of the contract as in other declarations. Care must be taken to state the contract accurately, with all the exceptions and qualifications of the defendant's liability (see Dawson v. Wrench (3)) and the declaration must negative that the defendant comes within the exceptions."
- E Then the learned editor cites two cases [Wheeler v. Baridge (4), and Crow v. Falk (5), 8 Q.B. at p. 471] which are not cases in which the claim is made upon a policy of insurance, but cases in which the court had to construe the meaning of a charterparty. I do not, however, treat those authorities, even if they negative the accuracy of what has been stated in BULLEN AND LEAKE, as authorities in a case like the present. I do not think that the substance of the cases is the same, nor do I think the question which the court had to decide really the same. There is a case which has been cited of The Glendarroch (6), in which I think, when LORD ESHER's judgment is considered, there is nothing
- G which militates against the accuracy of that expression which I have referred to in BULLEN AND LEAKE. As far as the authorities go, I think that there is no case which precludes me from expressing my view upon the question, having regard to the terms of this policy.
- H When one looks at this policy it is almost impossible to hold that the onus is upon the defendant. It leads to an impossible and absurd result if that view is right. The insurance is not against loss caused by a specified risk; it is not an insurance against loss by fire; it is not an insurance against loss by theft; it is an insurance against loss caused by any cause excepting those specified, and the first cause specified is breakage. If counsel for the assured is right when he says that when you are dealing with an exception with regard to causes as distinguished from an exception with regard to subject-matter the onus is on
- I the defendant, the assured here need only allege "I have lost my jewellery," and the underwriter would be obliged to plead and to prove that the loss was caused by an exception, breakage, if those were the facts. The assured must, in my view, set out the facts so as to show that the losses were covered by the policy. It is not enough to say he has lost them; he must show that the loss was one against which the underwriter agreed to hold him indemnified, and in the case I put he must plead and prove, therefore, that the goods were not broken. The same reasoning must apply, it seems to me, to the second cause mentioned in the policy—namely, loss caused by the dishonesty of the servant—and, therefore, I hold that upon this policy it was for the assured to show that the loss was one of those losses against which the underwriter had to indemnify him. He has not shown it. To put the matter in the most favourable way to the assured, he has no doubt proved a loss, and he has left it a matter of the gravest suspicion who caused it, whether it was his own servant or a stranger, and, therefore, in that view of the matter I decide in favour of the defendant.

I have been asked to deal with the case on the hypothesis that the burden was on the defendant. I have considered whether I ought to do that in this case. On the whole, I have come to the conclusion that I ought. This case may go further, and I think it would be most unfortunate if another court takes a different view from that which I take with regard to the onus, and the case had to be sent down for a new trial when the defendant might not be in a position to call the witnesses he has called before me. Counsel for the assured has relied upon what was said in Thetell v. Beaumont (1) and contended that I cannot give judgment here for the defendant upon this hypothesis unless the evidence were such that, if Mason was upon his trial upon an indictment, I should treat the verdict of guilty as being the only proper one to be given on these materials. He also says that, inasmuch as the evidence in criminal cases is the same as he says it is in civil cases, I must not admit evidence with regard to Mason being an associate of notorious safe-breakers. I do not agree with that contention. I do not consider that the evidence in a criminal case is the same as the evidence in a civil case on the same subject-matter, nor do I agree that the court, in a civil case which raises the question of criminality on the part of a third person, is only justified in finding that there was that criminality if the court upon the same evidence would be prepared to hold that the person said to be implicated ought to be convicted upon an indictment. It is impossible, to my mind, first of all to say that the evidence is the same in the two cases. Take the very simple case of evidence as to character. Evidence of a man's good character is never relevant either in a criminal proceeding or in a civil proceeding, but evidence as to character is always admitted in a criminal proceeding. A man who is on trial is in peril. The court has not to adjust rights between two persons when a man is criminally prosecuted, and the object of the inquiry is altogether different from what it is in a civil action. A judge constantly tells a jury in a criminal proceeding that, although there is evidence before them, it would not be safe for them to convict; no judge could possibly tell a jury in a civil case that it would not be safe for them to find a verdict for the defendant. The mere fact that evidence is relevant is not sufficient to justify the court in allowing it to be admitted in a criminal proceeding, because, as I have already pointed out, the man in peril may be so prejudiced by that evidence being admitted that it would tend to prevent the trial being fair according to our views as to what a fair trial means in a criminal matter. During the argument I put as an illustration the case of an accused person having confessed his guilt to a police officer, evidence which is strictly relevant undoubtedly, but is always excluded in criminal proceedings if the admission or confession is obtained by a promise or by a threat by the person to whom it is made; but in a civil case like the present, if Mason had made a statement to a police officer showing that he was implicated, it would be impossible to say that evidence of that statement ought not to be admitted. It could be put to him, and he might explain it, though, of course, the jury might disbelieve his explanation. In a criminal proceeding for perjury the court cannot leave the matter to the jury unless there is corroboration; but in a civil action where the question of perjury is in issue, the court is absolutely free to find that there was perjury although there was no corroboration at all. The proceedings are entirely different.

That being so, is it right to say that, before this court can come to the conclusion that the dishonesty of Mason is proved, there must be evidence on which he would be convicted upon indictment? It does not follow. I am not dealing with the guilt or innocence of Mason; it is not before me. This piece of evidence,

- A which I think is material, as to his having been in association with notorious safe-breakers, would probably be excluded in a criminal proceeding, and therefore, if my judgment is for the defendant, it is not the same thing as saying that on a trial on the materials before me Mason would be convicted. I am not dealing with that. I am simply here to say whether the evidence before me is more consistent with the defendant's case than with that of the assured. One
- B must appreciate the gravity of the accusation made, and give full effect to that, but if the evidence is more consistent with the defendant's case than it is with the assured's case so as to lead one to the conclusion that this dishonesty is proved, in my view, one must say so, leaving to the future the question of a conviction on a criminal charge as absolutely unaffected by my judgment. I must answer from the point of view of the civil action the question whether Mason was or
- C was not implicated in this matter, or, to use the words of the policy, whether the goods were not lost through the dishonesty of Mason. I am satisfied on the evidence, Mason not having been called, that the keys were not obtained by him for a business purpose. It is idle to suggest that in an action involving this inquiry there could have been no evidence called by the assured of the supposed customer to whom Mason went with the jewels. It is a circumstance that weighs
- D with me that Mason has not been called. Brown having been examined some months ago, the assured knowing that this circumstance of Mason borrowing the keys for that supposed purpose was going to be before the court, Mason has not been called, and the supposed customer has not been called. Therefore, I find that Mason got the keys by a trick, and had the two keys in his custody for an hour. There is another circumstance—that the safe was not blown up
- E for the purpose of enabling the thief to get at the jewels; there is the circumstance of the fuse being placed in the safe; there is the circumstance of Mason finding out where Brown was that evening; there is the circumstance of Mason having made arrangements to spend the evening with him. Taking all those facts together, there being no explanation tendered to me on behalf of the plaintiff, no theory which I can make consistent with the fact that there was no
- F burglary, no breaking in, and no breaking out, I feel forced to the conclusion, regrettable as it is, that this was not a theft in which Mason took no share. That being so, there must be judgment for the defendant.

Judgment for defendant.

Solicitors: Hutchison & Cuff; Windybank, Samuel & Lawrence.

[Reported by T. W. MORGAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

NOTE

H MUNRO BRICE & CO. v. WAR RISKS ASSOCIATION, LTD. AND ANOTHER

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Bailhache, J.), March 20, 21, 25, 1918]

[Reported [1918] 2 K.B. 78; 88 L.J.K.B. 509; 118 L.T. 708;

34 T.L.R. 331; 14 Asp. M.L.C. 312]

I Insurance—Marine insurance—Perils of the sea—F. c. and s. clause—Proof by assured of loss of ship—Cause of loss not proved—Right of assured to recover under policy—Need to negative exception.

When, in an action on a policy of marine insurance containing an f. c. and s. clause, the assured has proved that his ship was sunk at sea, he has made out a prima facie case against the underwriters on the policy, and it is for them to set up the f. c. and s. exception and bring themselves within it if they can.

Where an exception merely excludes from the operation of a promise a particular matter which, but for the exception, would fall within the promise, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to bring himself prima facie within the terms of the promise and leave it to the defendant to prove that the plaintiff's case is in fact within the excluded class, but where the exception is as wide as the promise the plaintiff must bring himself within the promise as qualified. Whether a promise is a promise with an exception or exceptions or is a qualified promise is a question of the construction of the instrument.

Notes. As to perils insured against in marine policies, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 73 et seq., and for cases see 29 DIGEST 197 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Compania Maritima of Barcelona v. Wishart (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 1027; 118 L.T. 705; 34 T.L.R. 251; 14 Asp. M.L.C. 298; 23 Com. Cas. 264; 29 Digest 204, 1635.
- (2) Dawson v. Wrench (1849), 3 Exch. 359; 18 L.J.Ex. 229; 12 L.T.O.S. 405; 154 W.R. 883; 29 Digest 244, 1972.
- (3) Wheeler v. Baridge (1854), 9 Exch. 608; 2 C.L.R. 1077; 23 L.J.Ex. 221; 156 E.R. 286; 41 Digest 328, 1851.
- (4) Crow v. Falk (1846), 8 Q.B. 467; 15 L.J.Q.B. 183; 10 Jur. 374; 115 E.R. 952; 41 Digest 333, 1876.
- (5) Farasour v. Ormrod (1827), 6 B. & C. 430; 9 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 597; 5 L.J.O.S.K.B. 172; 108 E.R. 509; 17 Digest (Repl.) 404, 2099.
- (6) Latham v. Rutley (1823), 2 B. & C. 20; 3 Dow. & Ry. K.B. 211; 1 L.J.O.S. K.B. 225; 107 E.R. 290; 8 Digest 17, 89.
- (7) Ionides v. Universal Marine Insurance Co. (1863), 14 C.B.N.S. 259; 2 New Rep. 123; 32 L.J.C.P. 170; 8 L.T. 705; 10 Jur. N.S. 18; 11 W.R. 858; 1 Mar. L.C. 353; 143 E.R. 445; 29 Digest 229, 1854.
- (8) Powell v. Hyde (1855), 5 E. & B. 607; 25 L.J.Q.B. 65; 26 L.T.O.S. 74; 2 Jur. N.S. 87; 4 W.R. 51; 119 E.R. 606; 29 Digest 217, 1735.
- (9) Green v. Brown (1743), 2 Stra. 1199; 93 E.R. 1126; 29 Digest 203, 1629.
- (10) Gorman v. Hand in Hand Insurance Co. (1877), L.R. 11 C.L. 224; 29 Digest 328, 2673iii.
- (11) The Glendarroch, [1894] P. 226; 63 L.J.P. 89; 70 L.T. 344; 10 T.L.R. 269; 38 Sol. Jo. 362; 7 Asp. M.L.C. 420; 6 R. 686, C.A.; 41 Digest 414, 2580.
- (12) Hurst v. Evans, ante p. 975; [1917] 1 K.B. 352; 86 L.J.K.B. 305; 116 L.T. 252; 33 T.L.R. 96; 29 Digest 417, 3257.

Action in the Commercial List tried by BAILHACHE, J.

The plaintiffs, owners of the sailing vessel Inveramsay, claimed to recover from one or other of two defendant insurers in respect of the loss of the vessel at sea. By a policy dated Jan. 20, 1917, the War Risks Association agreed to insure the vessel for £5,450 from Jan. 1, 1917, to Jan. 1, 1918, against the risks excluded from a marine policy by the free of capture and seizure clause. By a policy dated Jan. 26, 1917, the Anchor Marine Mutual Underwriting Association, Ltd., agreed to insure the vessel for £1,500 from Jan. 1, 1917, to Jan. 1, 1918, against perils of the sea. The policy contained an f. c. and s. clause. On Mar. 21, 1917 the Inveramsay left Gulf Port, bound for Fleetwood, with a cargo of timber. Thereafter she was never heard of. It was conceded that she had sunk at sea, but it was not known whether she was lost owing to a war risk or a marine risk.

Greer, K.C., and Hyslop Maxwell for the plaintiffs.

Leck, K.C., MacKinnon, K.C., and Greaves Lord for the defendants, the War Risks Association.

R. A. Wright, K.C., and Simey for the defendants the Anchor Marine Mutual Underwriters Association, Ltd.

- A Mar. 25, 1918. BAILHACHE, J.—The plaintiffs, the owners of the sailing vessel Inveramsay, sue two sets of underwriters to recover from one or the other of them in respect of the loss of the vessel at sea. The marine risk underwriters are sued upon a policy dated Jan. 26, 1917, covering perils of the sea in the usual form and containing, as is also usual, the warranted free of capture and seizure clause. The war risks underwriters are sued upon a policy dated Jan. 20,
- B 1917, against risks excluded from the marine policy by the free of capture and seizure clause.

- So far as the Inveramsay is concerned all that is known of her is that she left Gulf Port, bound for Fleetwood, with a cargo of timber on Mar. 21, 1917. She was not overloaded; she carried a deck cargo, and she has never since been heard of. It is conceded that she has sunk at sea. The normal length of such a
- C voyage as she was upon for a sailing ship is forty days, sometimes prolonged to sixty days, but rarely longer. Three extraneous facts are also known—namely, (i) that submarines were active off the Irish coast for a distance of 250 to 300 miles, and that a number of timber-carrying ships which left Gulf Port on a similar voyage were sunk by submarines. It is inadvisable to give the precise figures, although they were proved in evidence and I have them in mind.
- D Another fact, proved from meteorological charts prepared from log-books and from actual log-books of vessels sailing on similar voyages, is (ii) the weather likely to have been met with by the Inveramsay on her voyage. From the meteorological charts it appears that there was no wind above force 9, which indicates a strong gale, in any locality in which the Inveramsay was likely to be, and that only on a few occasions and for short periods, and I am informed by seamen of
- E experience that there is nothing in the recorded weather to account for the foundering of a well-found ship as the Inveramsay appears to have been. One of these witnesses, arguing from the meteorological charts, thought there would not have been heavy seas, a view which is not borne out by the log of the Ancenis. On the other hand, it is impossible to say with any degree of certainty what the actual course of a sailing vessel is upon a voyage of that length, and the log of
- F the Olivebank, which left Gulf Port on Mar. 17, records a strong gale with squalls on April 9, and a freshening gale, whole gale, and strong gale (the two latter accompanied with heavy squalls) on April 12, 13 and 14. The Ancenis, which left Mobile on Mar. 18 and proceeded to sea on Mar. 25, met with an easterly storm on Mar. 30, and made very heavy weather of it on April 4 and 5, and from April 6 to 10. The sea especially seems to have been running very high,
- G and it must be remembered that the Inveramsay carried a deck cargo. The third fact (iii) is that in nearly all the cases in which timber vessels were torpedoed off the Irish coast the fact seems to have been definitely known. This of itself would not be of great moment, as I know from experience in this court that vessels may be sunk by submarines near the coast without any positive evidence of the fact being procurable. It has, however, a bearing upon the
- H problem presented by this case.

- [His LORDSHIP said that on the evidence he was unable to say that the probabilities of the torpedoing of the Inveramsay were so great that he ought to hold as a matter of fact that she was torpedoed; she may, or may not, have been, and, therefore, the action upon the war risks policy failed, and he continued:]
- I What is the result so far as the marine risks writers are concerned? I have on two former occasions expressed the opinion that in cases of this sort, where all that can be proved is that a vessel is lost at sea, no one knows how, the loss falls upon the marine policy. The assured having proved that his vessel foundered at sea has proved a loss by peril of the sea. The loss is then within the terms of the promise, and the question is: Must the assured go further and show that the sea peril was not induced by a cause excepted by the free of capture and seizure clause? If so, an assured, as in this case, being insured by two policies, one against marine and the other against war risks, may fail on both: on the latter because he cannot show that the loss was due to a war risk, on the former because he cannot show that it was not. The free of capture and seizure clause is an exception clause, and my view was expressed without referring to the authorities, upon what I understand to be the ordinary principles applicable to contracts containing promises qualified by exceptions. This opinion of mine has, I find, been doubted by ROCHE, J., in Compania Maritima of Barcelona v. Wishart (1). It has been challenged by the marine underwriters in this case, and the point has been fully argued and the authorities cited.

In these circumstances, and having regard to the large sums of money involved in these disputes and their frequent occurrence, I have reconsidered the matter and looked into the cases, with what result I will now state. Great stress was laid upon a passage in BULLEN AND LEAKE ON PLEADING (3rd Edn.) p. 182. The passage deals with actions upon marine insurance policies and is as follows:

"Care must be taken to state the contract accurately, with all the exceptions and qualifications of the defendants' liability (see Dawson v. Wrench (2)), and the declaration must negative that the defendant comes within the exceptions. (Ib.; but see Wheeler v. Baridge (3); Crow v. Falk (4))."

It was suggested that the learned authors intended that not only must the exceptions be negatived but that the plaintiff must prove the negative. I think that is a misunderstanding. In this passage it is to be observed that the authors rely on Dawson v. Wrench (2), but refer to two cases as seeming to point the other way—Wheeler v. Baridge (3) and Crow v. Falk (4). Dawson v. Wrench (2) was an action in which the plaintiff sued to recover a particular average loss upon a policy containing the three per cent. franchise, and in his declaration had set out the sum claimed but had not averred that it exceeded the franchise. On demurrer the court held the declaration was bad, and that the averment was necessary. That case was, if I may respectfully say so, rightly decided, and if demurrers were in vogue would, I think, be so decided to-day for reasons which will be given hereafter, but it does not, I think, for the same reasons support the wide general statement that all exceptions in a marine policy must be set out and negatived, still less that the plaintiff must prove the negative. The passage, even when understood as dealing with the form of the declaration and not with the burden of proof, is inconsistent with another passage on p. 60 of the same book, which I will read presently.

Crow v. Falk (4) is not very instructive, but Wheeler v. Baridge (3) is interesting as showing that what is now settled law was then arguable. That was an action by charterers against shipowners for failing to make six successive voyages with their ship. The declaration set out the charterparty fully, including a clause containing a number of the usual exceptions, and it was held on demurrer that the declaration was good, and that, if the defendant relied upon the exceptions, he must plead them. This decision is entirely in accord with modern practice and, as I hope to show, is not in conflict with Dawson v. Wrench (2). The passage on p. 60 dealing with the general rules applicable to contracts with exceptions is as follows:

"If the covenant or clause in an agreement is absolute in itself, without any exception or proviso or any reference to any, it may be declared on as an absolute contract, although in a distinct part of the deed or instrument there is a proviso defeating or qualifying it under certain circumstances; such a proviso is in the nature of a defeasance and must be set up, if the facts permit it, by the other side. Sometimes the covenant or clause, although it does not contain the exception or proviso, refers to it by such words as 'except as hereinafter excepted', and in this case the exception or proviso must be stated in the declaration, for verba relata inesse videntur: Vavasour v. Ormrod (5)."

There seems at one time to have been a distinction between a proviso and an exception, but this distinction was regarded, as early as 1823, as too subtle even

A for the acute minds of those days: see Latham v. Rutley (6), and I gather that by 1868, at any rate, it had fallen into disrepute.

What strikes one about this statement of the rules of pleading is its artificial character. One would think that the duty of the plaintiff to set up and negative exceptions ought to depend upon the construction of the contract as a whole, taking the promise and exceptions together, and not upon the relative positions in the contract of the promise and the exceptions. Again, the rule as stated does not seem to be reliable, for if so, the free of capture and seizure exception and the particular average franchise clause, which is in the nature of an exception need not be set out and negatived, and yet we find it stated in BULLEN AND LEAKE ON PLEADING (3rd Edn.) p. 182, that they must be so treated, and, as to the particular average franchise, there is the express decision of Dawson v. Wrench (2) to that effect. I have looked at a great many relevant declarations, and I find that the practice was to set out policies almost at full length, including the exceptions, and to negative those at any rate that bore upon the nature of the particular action. To mention only one instance, it was so done in the well-known case of Ionides v. Universal Marine Insurance Co. (7). The alternative possible practice of stating the legal effect of the contract without setting it out seems hardly ever to have been followed. The reason, no doubt, was the risk that, unless the legal effect was stated with precise accuracy, there might be a variance between the effect so stated and the contract as proved. If that happened the action failed, although the contract as proved would have supported the claim if the contract sued upon had been set out in full: see Latham v. Rutley (6). That was a risk which few pleaders would run, and it may be that the common practice of setting out the contract in full with all its exceptions led to the practice of negating the exceptions as a matter of precaution, and whether it was necessary to do so or not.

The practice of negating exceptions, even when the whole contract was set out in the declaration, was not universal, at any rate, after the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, as appears from the declaration in Powell v. Hyde (8). In that case a British ship was fired at and sunk by a Russian fort. The policy was against the usual perils, with the free of capture and seizure clause. The declaration set out the policy including the clause, and averred that the vessel was by the accidents and certain of the perils insured against sunk and foundered and the goods lost to the plaintiff. The declaration did not negative the exceptions, and I find that in giving judgment one of the judges, WIGHTMAN, J., said (5 E. & B. at p. 611):

“The declaration here does not state the precise nature of the peril causing the loss, as would have been necessary under the former rules of pleading”

—no doubt a reference to the alterations made by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852. The case is interesting, because, if ever there was a case in which one would think it necessary to negative the free of capture and seizure exceptions, that would seem to be the case.

I noticed, in looking at the forms of declaration for actions for loss or damage to goods during carriage by sea, that, of the three given, two refer in general terms to the bill of lading exceptions and negative them, while one does not. It was, of course, at all times the practice for the defendant to set up in his plea any exceptions upon which he relied. Upon the whole, I have come to the conclusion that before the Judicature Acts it was considered the safer course to set out the exceptions and to negative them in the declaration, and that, too, whether they were contained in a separate clause or not. Some bolder spirits seem to have omitted them after the Act of 1852, and I doubt whether it was necessary to refer to them after that Act and the decision in Wheeler v. Bavidge (3), except in such cases as Dawson v. Wrench (2). It by no means follows that because the practice was to negative exceptions in the declaration the plaintiff thereby undertook the burden of proving the negative. It is difficult to suppose that in an action for damage to cargo a shipper of goods under a bill of lading containing the common exceptions to act of God, King's enemies, and perils of the seas, called witnesses to prove that none of these exceptions became operative, while to turn to a different class of case—namely, libel upon a person—the declaration always alleged that the publication was false and malicious, yet I think no plaintiff, at any rate since the beginning of the last century, was called upon to prove either of these adjectives.

When one turns from the old form of pleading to the modern the change is striking. A form of statement of claim on a policy of marine insurance is given. It is quite short. The terms of the policy are not set out, still less are the exceptions. If a total loss is claimed, all one need say is "loss total", while it is noteworthy that if a particular average loss is claimed and the policy contains the three per cent. franchise, it is necessary to say "loss partial, exceeding three per cent." These forms are, I think, in accordance with the law as laid down in the decisions of both Dawson v. Wrench (2) and Wheeler v. Baridge (3). I may further remark that when the form of total loss is used no particulars will be ordered of how the peril relied on arose. A plaintiff who alleges that his vessel was lost by a peril of the sea or by sinking cannot be ordered to state how the sinking came about. These forms were prepared at a time when the older rules of pleading were well known and when it was desired to simplify them. The fact that the form for a total loss does not make any provision for setting out or negating exceptions, and merely describes the loss as due to a peril insured against, would seem to show that its framers well knew what averments were necessary. If the question under discussion is to be decided upon forms of pleading, I have come to the conclusion that the free of capture and seizure exception need not be set out and need not be negated.

I now turn to consider a few decisions upon the burden of proof in a case like the present. The only authority I have found upon the question in the precise form in which it presents itself in this case is Green v. Brown (9). That case was decided in 1743 by LEE, C.J., but it arose in 1739 when we were at war with Spain. I will read the whole report (2 Stra. at pp. 1199, 1200). It is very short.

"The ship Charming Peggy was insured in 1739, from North Carolina to London, with a warranty against captures and seizures. And in an action the loss was laid to be by sinking at sea. All the evidence given was that she sailed out of port on her intended voyage and has never since been heard of. And several witnesses proved that in such a case the presumption is that she foundered at sea, all other sort of losses being generally heard of. The underwriters insisted that as captures and seizures were excepted it lay upon the assured to prove that the loss happened in the particular manner declared on. But the Chief Justice said it would be unreasonable to expect certain evidence of such a loss as where everybody on board is presumed to be drowned; and all that can be required is the best proof the nature of the case admits of, which the plaintiff has given: he therefore left it to the jury who found the loss according to the plaintiff's declaration."

An analogous question came before the Irish courts in 1877 in Gorman v. Hand in Hand Insurance Co. (10). The action was upon a fire insurance policy, and PALLES, C.B., thus deals with the matter (I.R. 11 C.L. at p. 230):

"The policy is not in its terms limited to damage by accidental fire; 'the society agrees (subject to the conditions indorsed which are to be taken as part of the policy), that if the property described shall be destroyed or damaged by fire . . . they will . . . pay or make good all such loss and damage.' The third indorsed condition provides that the policy shall not cover, inter alia, loss or damage caused by the act of an incendiary; and reading this condition, as we are bound to do, as part of the policy, the

A contract is that the defendants shall be liable for loss by fire, provided it be not the act of an incendiary. When, therefore, it is once shown that the loss resulted from fire, the plaintiff has established a prima facie case, and the onus is thrown upon the defendants to prove that the act which caused the fire was within the proviso. The defence is not in any sense a traverse of an allegation comprised within the general averments of the plaint: it is a plea in confession and avoidance, and the proof of it is upon the defendants."

I will only give the reference to The Glendarroch (11), but the case is well worth reading.

The last case to which I need refer is a recent decision of LUSH, J., Hurst v. Evans (12). That was an action upon a policy against loss or damage to jewellery from any cause whatever save and except loss by theft or dishonesty of any servant in the exclusive employment of the assured. LUSH, J., held that it was incumbent upon the assured to prove a theft by some person other than a servant in his exclusive employment. This judgment and that of PALLES, C.B., in Gorman v. Hard in Hand Insurance Co. (10) are in conflict, unless the distinction is to be found in the fact that in the case before PALLES, C.B., the exception was contained in a separate clause, while in the case before LUSH, J., the promise and the exception are in the same clause, a distinction upon which, as already stated, I am not inclined to rely. I own it would not have occurred to me, had I been advising the plaintiff on evidence in Hurst v. Evans (12), to advise that he must call all his servants and put them into the witness-box one after the other to deny that he or she stole the jewels. The procession would be a long one if the proprietors of a large store like Messrs. Whiteley were the plaintiffs. With all respect I venture to prefer the decision of PALLES, C.B.

This review of the authorities confirms me in my view that, as the law now stands, when in an action upon a policy of marine insurance the assured has proved that his ship was sunk at sea, he has made out a prima facie case against his underwriters on that policy, and it is for them to set up the free of capture and seizure exception and to bring themselves within it if they can. The rules now applicable for determining the burden of proof in such a case as the present may, I think, be stated as follows:—(i) The plaintiff must prove such facts as bring him prima facie within the terms of the promise; (ii) when the promise is qualified by exceptions, the question whether the plaintiff need prove facts which negative their application does not depend upon whether the exceptions are to be found in a separate clause or not: the question depends upon an entirely different consideration—namely, whether the exception is as wide as the promise, and thus qualifies the whole of the promise, or whether it merely excludes from the operation of the promise particular classes of cases which but for the exception would fall within it, leaving some part of the general scope of the promise unqualified: if so, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to bring himself prima facie within the terms of the promise, leaving it to the defendant to prove that, although prima facie within the terms, the plaintiff's case is in fact within the excluded exceptional class: illustrations of this rule are actions against common carriers and the analogous cases in which a promisor undertakes to perform a given act unless excused by certain excepted events, as, for example, a vendor to deliver, strikes excepted or a charterer to load a ship in a given number of lay days, subject to the usual exceptions now found in charterparties; (iii) when a promise is qualified by an exception which covers the whole scope of the promise, a plaintiff cannot make out a prima facie case unless he brings himself within the promise as qualified: there is ex hypothesi no unqualified part of the promise for the sole of his foot to stand upon: as an instance I take a marine policy with the particular average franchise: there, reading the promise and the exception together, the promise is not a promise to pay particular average or to pay particular average except in certain events: it is a promise to pay particular average exceeding three per cent.: to bring himself within that promise a plaintiff must show more than a particular average loss, he must show a particular average loss exceeding three per cent.: this is the explanation, I think, of Dawson v. Wrench (2), and why that case is no authority for the wide general statement on BULLEN AND LEAKE ON PLEADING (3rd Edn.) p. 182, and why that case does not conflict with Wheeler v. Barville (3) or with my suggested rule (ii); (iv) whether a promise is a promise with exceptions or whether it is a qualified promise is in every case a question of construction of the instrument as a whole: see per PALLES, C.B., in Gormuth v. Hand in Hand Insurance Co. (10); (v) in construing a contract with exceptions it must be borne in mind that a promise with exceptions can generally be turned by an alteration of phraseology into a qualified promise. The form in which the contract is expressed is therefore material.

Applying these rules to the present case, I adhere to the opinion I have expressed in former cases and give judgment against the marine underwriters with costs. I should add that I have not forgotten that the particular average franchise exception generally contains an exception to itself—namely, unless stranded. I have not referred to this fact as it has no bearing upon the matters under discussion.

Orders accordingly.

Solicitors: Pritchard, Englefield & Co., for Simpson, North, Harley & Co., Liverpool; G. G. H. Walker & Tree, for Weightman, Pedder & Co., Liverpool; William A. Crump & Son.

[Reported by T. W. MORGAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRUCE MARRIOTT & CO. v. HOULDER LINE, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady and Bankes, L.J.J., and A. T. Lawrence, J.), October 30, 31, November 10, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 72; 86 L.J.K.B. 509; 115 L.T. 846;
61 Sol. Jo. 98; 22 Com. Cas. 116; 13 Asp. M.L.C. 550]

Shipping—Cargo—Re-stowage—General ship—Damage to cargo on quay during re-stowage at intermediate port—Liability of shipowners—Right to rely on exceptions clause in bill of lading.

Where a general ship loads at various ports cargo which is intended to be discharged at different places, it is necessarily incidental to the voyage that the shipowners should be at liberty to shift the cargo and this necessarily extends to placing cargo on the quay for such time as may be reasonable to enable re-stowage to be effectively done.

The plaintiffs were the shippers of certain machinery on board the defendants' ship, which was a general ship loading and discharging cargo at various places. Part of the machinery was accidentally damaged on the quay at an intermediate port during re-stowage operations. The defendants admitted the accident, but relied on an exceptions clause in the bill of lading. The plaintiffs contended that the defendants had been in breach of contract in unloading the machinery on the quay at the intermediate port, and they could not, therefore, rely on the exceptions clause.

Held: the defendants had not been in breach of contract and could rely on the exceptions clause.

Notes. Referred to: Baerger v. Cunard Steamship Co., [1925] 2 K.B. 646.

As to exceptions clauses relieving the shipowner in general, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 315 et seq.

A Case referred to:

(1) Handlyn & Co. v. Wood & Co., [1891] 2 Q.B. 488; 60 L.J.Q.B. 734; 65 L.T. 286; 40 W.R. 24; 7 T.L.R. 731, C.A.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 684, 5266.

Also referred to in argument:

Davis v. Garrett (1830), 6 Bing. 716; L. & Welsb. 276; 4 Moo. & P. 540; 8 L.J.O.S.C.P. 253; 130 E.R. 1456; 41 Digest 488, 3188.

Leduc v. Ward (1888), 2 Q.B.D. 475; 57 L.J.Q.B. 379; 58 L.T. 908; 36 W.R. 537; 4 T.L.R. 313, C.A.; 41 Digest 485, 3172.

Lilley v. Doubleday (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 510; 51 L.J.Q.B. 310; 44 L.T. 814; 46 J.P. 708; 3 Digest (Repl.) 82, 183.

Roberts v. Shaw (1863), 4 B. & S. 44; 2 New Rep. 237; 32 L.J.Q.B. 308; 8 L.T. 634; 10 Jur. N.S. 147; 11 W.R. 829; 1 Mar. L.C. 351; 122 E.R. 376; 41 Digest 662, 4943.

The Moorcock (1889), 14 P.D. 64; 58 L.J.P. 73; 60 L.T. 654; 37 W.R. 439; 5 T.L.R. 316; 6 Asp. M.L.C. 373, C.A.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 686, 5274.

Sleat v. Fugg (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 342; 106 E.R. 1216; 8 Digest (Repl.) 44, 266.

Appeal by the defendants from a decision of ROWLATT, J., in an action tried by him without a jury.

The plaintiffs' claim was for damages for breach of contract and breach of duty in and about the carriage of goods by sea by the defendants' steamship Denby Grange. The plaintiffs shipped on board the Denby Grange in London some packages of mining machinery for Buenos Aires, the bill of lading being dated Mar. 14, 1914. According to the bill of lading, the machinery was shipped in apparent good order and condition on the Denby Grange,

"Sailing from the Port of London for carriage to Buenos Aires via Newport, but with liberty to the steamer, either before or after proceeding towards that port, to proceed to and stay at any ports or places whatsoever (although in a contrary direction to or out of or beyond the route to the said port of discharge) once or oftener in any order, backwards or forwards, for loading or discharging cargo or passengers, or for any purpose whatsoever, and all such ports, places, and sailings shall be deemed included within the intended voyage."

The goods were, subject to the exceptions, to be delivered

"In the like apparent good order and condition from the ship's tackle (where the ship's responsibility shall cease) at the port of Buenos Aires or so near thereto as she may safely get and always afloat."

Clause 1 of the exceptions and stipulations provided:

"That the master, owners, or agents of the vessel, or its connections, shall not be responsible for loss, damage, or injury arising from any of the following perils, causes, or things, namely: . . . breakage . . . whether any of the perils, causes, or things above mentioned, or the loss, damage, or injury arising therefrom, be occasioned by or arise from any act or omission, negligence, default, or error in judgment of the pilot, master, mariners, engineers, stevedores, workmen, or other persons in the service of the shipowners or their agents, whether on board the said ship or any other ship belonging to or chartered by them, for whose acts they would otherwise be liable, or otherwise howsoever."

By cl. 4:

"The master, owners, or agents of the vessel have liberty to carry the said goods by the above steamer or other steamer or steamers . . . and, in so doing, without notice to shippers or consignees, to carry the goods past their port of destination, or land them at intermediate ports, and to tranship or land and store the goods, either on shore or afloat, and re-ship and forward the same by land, or by water, by craft steam, sail, or barge, whether in tow or otherwise, at the steamer's expense but merchant's risk, it being understood that all claims for loss or damage consequent upon delay or detention of the goods from the foregoing or any other cause are excluded."

The Deuby Grouge was a general ship carrying cargoes to different ports in the River Plate. She started from Antwerp, put on board the plaintiffs' machinery in London, and then proceeded to Newport, where the plaintiffs' machinery was taken out of one hold for the purpose of re-stowage in another and was damaged by accident while on the quay. Before ROWLATT, J., the facts as to the re-stowage at Newport were agreed as stated in a letter of Mar. 22, 1914, from the defendants' representative at Newport to the defendants in London, which was as follows:

"As informed you previously, we had to shift the cylinder forming portion of condensing plant on account of the Bruce Marriott & Co. shipped in London in order to make stowage for earthenware pipes here. This we landed on the quay alongside the ship for the time being, and whilst shipping underframes yesterday in the No. 3 hold a gust of wind caught one of the frames as it was being lifted on board, with the result that it swung round, breaking the sling, and the underframes fell on the quay on to the cylinder No. 2366, breaking the cast-iron flange, indenting the tube and crushing same."

ROWLATT, J., gave judgment for the plaintiffs on the ground (inter alia) that the defendants were not entitled under the bill of lading to take the cylinder out of the ship and place it on the quay for the purposes of re-stowage, and that, therefore, they were not protected by cl. 1 of the exceptions of the bill of lading. The defendants appealed.

On Feb. 8 the Court of Appeal directed the appeal to stand over for further evidence, and consequently the defendants' manager at Newport made an affidavit to the following effect: "On the steamer's arrival at Newport two cylinders for San Juan had been stowed in the wings of No. 4 'tween deck and a casting for Zarate had been stowed in the square of the hatch. These cylinders weighed 3 tons 11 cwt., but occupied very large space and were light cargo. The steamer loaded a quantity of railway material at Antwerp and also at Newport, including several heavy lifts. She was to discharge this cargo at Zarate, and I was informed that there was no crane there capable of dealing with the heavy stuff. The owners accordingly arranged that the steamer's masts should be specially strengthened to enable them to deal with it. The steamer's masts had to be lifted out, and it was therefore impossible to load any cargo in the after part of Nos. 1 and 3 'tween decks until this work was completed. No. 2 'tween deck was to be used for bunker coals as that is the only 'tween deck available for the purpose. It was for these reasons that the casting for Zarate and the cylinders were loaded in No. 4 'tween deck. The cargo to be loaded at Newport weighed 1,756 tons, and included railway material, galvanised sheets, tinplates, ironplates, and a very large quantity of earthenware pipes for Buenos Aires. These pipes were very brittle and require very careful stowage, and should not be stowed with any other heavy cargo. It is also most important that any broken stowage should be avoided, otherwise the pipes are apt to get adrift and get broken. The steamer was to discharge at several ports in the River Plate and to go up to Zarate, which was some way up the river. The cargo had therefore to be stowed so as to maintain the steamer as far as possible on an even keel after the discharge of part of it in order that she might draw as little water as possible. In order to effect this it was necessary to stow light cargo in No. 4 so that the steamer might start a little down by the head. If the cylinders and casting had been left in No. 4 'tween deck it would have been necessary to block them off with heavy cargo, which would have put the steamer down by the stern. As the bunker coal in No. 2 'tween deck was consumed on the outward passage, the steamer would get to some extent down by the stern,

A and it was for this reason that she had to start down by the head. The draft of the steamer on sailing was 22 ft. 5 in. forward and 22 ft. 2 in. aft. For those reasons I found that the only practical method of stowing the ship safely was to take the castings out of No. 4 'tween deck and put them into No. 1 'tween deck. By this means the whole of No. 4 'tween deck contained earthenware pipes. The cylinder and casting were placed in No. 1 'tween deck in the square of the hatch, where they could be safely stowed. The earthenware pipes in No. 1 hold were shut off from the rest of the cargo at the forward end by a number of cases of stonework which were well secured. It was absolutely necessary for the safe stowage of the cargo and for the trim of the ship that this method of stowage should be adopted, and this could only be done by shifting the cylinders. It is by no means unusual with liners like the Denby Grange loading cargo at various ports and discharging at various ports to find it necessary to re-stow part of the cargo at Newport, and in some cases it is necessary to take the cargo out of the ship and put it on the quay for a short time in order to enable the cargo to be safely stowed. It is not always possible to ascertain what cargo will be available for a particular ship at Newport before she commences to load her cargo at Antwerp or London, and even if this were possible sometimes it is impossible to stow the cargo at the previous ports in such a way that it does not require re-stowage at Newport when the fresh cargo is put in owing to the order in which the cargo has to be discharged. In the circumstances wherever these cylinders and casting had been stowed in London it would have been necessary to take them out and re-stow them at Newport. To shift the cargo is a source of great trouble to the shipowner and delay to the steamer, and I never shift any cargo unless it is absolutely necessary for safety."

The appeal was re-argued upon this statement of facts on Oct. 30 and 31, 1916.

Roche, K.C., and Lewis Noad, for the defendants.

MacKinnon, K.C., and L. F. C. Darby, for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

F Nov. 10, 1916. The following judgments were read.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J., stated the facts and continued: The question, therefore, resolves itself into this: Were the defendants, under the circumstances which I have stated, entitled to remove the cylinder from No. 4 to No. 1 'tween deck hold? In my opinion they were. Both parties must be presumed to have contracted with reference to the known, ordinary, usual, well-established, and every necessary course of business. The presumption is that the parties intended to contract with regard to the well-known usages of trade. When necessary to re-stow for the safety of the ship, or to obtain and preserve a proper trim, or to enable the rest of the cargo to be safely and properly stowed, a usage to do so is certainly reasonable. Where a general ship loads cargo at various ports which is intended to be discharged at various different places, it is manifest that the cargo cannot always be taken on board in such order that the last loaded shall be the first to be discharged, or that the cargo last taken on board is suitable for being overstowed on cargo already shipped. The proper stowage of the cargo and the necessary readjustment of weight to preserve the proper trim of the ship may necessitate changes in stowage from time to time, and these were necessarily incidental to the voyage of this ship. I am of opinion that in removing the cylinder from No. 4 with a view to stowing it in No. 1 and in the meantime temporarily depositing it on the quay the defendants were not committing any breach of their contract of carriage as contained in the bill of lading, and accordingly that they are exempted from liability for the damage which occurred. The appeal must be allowed and judgment entered for the defendants with costs here and below.

BANKES, L.J., stated the facts and continued: The question which has to be decided is whether, upon the facts as now disclosed, a term must be implied in the contract as contained in the bill of lading by which the appellants are entitled to move any goods after they have been placed on board, even to the extent of taking them out of the ship, if such moving is either usual in the course of loading or unloading the vessel at the authorised ports of call, or necessary for the safety or trim of the ship or the safety of the cargo. We were referred to the test applied by LORD ESHER in Hamlyn & Co. v. Wood & Co. (1), where he says ([1891] 2 Q.B. at p. 491):

"I have for a long time understood that rule to be that the court has no right to imply in a written contract any such stipulation, unless on considering the terms of the contract in a reasonable and business manner, an implication necessarily arises that the parties must have intended that the suggested stipulation should exist."

Having regard to the fact that this vessel was, under the terms of the contract, to call at a number of ports to take in cargo, and at a number of ports to discharge cargo, it appears to me a necessary implication that the parties must have intended that the shipowners should have liberty to shift the cargo, should necessity arise to do so, either for the safety of the ship or cargo, or in the usual course of loading or unloading at the port of call. I cannot see any limitation to that right to shift provided what is done comes within the limits of what is reasonable or customary. If the right to shift extends to a right to shift from one part of a hold to another part of the same hold, or from one hold to another hold, it must, I think, necessarily extend to placing the cargo on the quay for such time as may be reasonably necessary to enable this to be effectively done.

The question is necessarily a business question. The only evidence before the court is that of the appellants' manager. So far as my own experience of such matters is concerned, it appears to me that the view he presents is a reasonable one, and that the stowing and discharging of a general cargo, consisting possibly of very many parcels of goods belonging to different owners, taken in at a number of ports, and to be discharged at a number of other ports, would be practically impossible unless such a liberty existed. In this view of the contract the appellants are entitled to succeed, because it is not disputed that if what the appellants did was within the terms of the contract the exceptions are wide enough to protect them from liability. For these reasons I think that the appeal succeeds.

A. T. LAWRENCE, J. The question in this case is whether the lading of these cylinders at Newport for the purpose of re-stowing them was within the contract of carriage, that is, was the exercise of a right of the shipowner under it. I think it was. In my opinion it was incident to the voyage contemplated by this bill of lading. The ship was a general ship, intending to call at several ports, and the voyage involved going up the river, where banks and shallows make the trim and handiness of the ship of great importance. The cylinders were very light relatively to the space they occupied. It must have been obviously probable that the cargo to be taken in after the ship left London would involve some readjustment of weights to enable her to keep her trim. These considerations made it easy to accept the evidence called after the first hearing by the leave of the court. This evidence is to the effect that upon such a voyage it is the ordinary course to land and re-stow cargo where necessary.

The next question is: Does the bill of lading contain exceptions covering the shipowner against risks in so doing? I think it does. I agree with my brother ROWLATT that cl. 4 of the exceptions does not apply here. It is directed to a different set of circumstances, namely, to a case of transshipment to another ship or to some form of land carriage. But I think cl. 1 excepts the shipowner from liability for this damage to the cylinder. It excepts liability for loss or damage arising from (inter alia) "breakage," "stowage," "landing," and this even though due to negligence. The "delivery" to be made by the ship is "from the ship's tackle at . . . the port of Buenos Aires or so near thereto as she may safely

A get and always lie afloat." These exceptions seem to me to include such a "breakage" as occurred to this cylinder when landed for re-stowage at Newport. I think, therefore, that the defendants are not liable, and that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Parker, Garrett, & Co.; William A. Crump & Son.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re CITY OF GLASGOW LIFE ASSURANCE CO.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Sargant, J.), November 23, 1915, May 16, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 557; 86 L.J.Ch. 86; 115 L.T. 519]

Insurance—Life assurance—Statutory deposit—Purchase of one assurance company by another—Transfer of deposit to purchasing company—Transfer to separate account "in respect of life assurance business of vendor company now dissolved"—Assurance Companies Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 49), s. 2 (1), s. 13.

E An assurance company sold its business and assets to another assurance company. The vendor company was dissolved, but liabilities of that company remained in existence, such as fully paid-up policies in respect of which there had been no novation by the holders with the purchasing company.

F Held: the court would not direct the transfer to the purchasing company of the statutory fund of £20,000 deposited in court by the vendor company unless the fund were carried to a special account which on its face showed that it was applicable to meet the vendor company's liabilities; accordingly, the court would order the transfer of the fund to the purchasing company to be carried over to a separate account of that company "in respect of the life assurance business" of the vendor company "now dissolved."

G Re Popular Life Assurance Co. (1), [1909] 1 Ch. 80, distinguished and explained.

Notes. The Assurance Companies Act, 1909, was repealed and replaced, with amendments, by the Insurance Companies Act, 1958, Sched. 2, para. 1 (2) of which requires, in certain cases, the deposit of £20,000 in court. As to amalgamations and transfers see s. 11 of the Act of 1958.

H As to rules regarding deposits, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 424-426; and for cases see 10 DIGEST (Repl.) 1150 et seq. For the Insurance Companies Act, 1958, see 38 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 12.

Case referred to:

I (1) Re Popular Life Assurance Co., Ltd., [1909] 1 Ch. 80; 78 L.J.Ch. 37; 99 L.T. 909; sub nom. Re United Provident Assurance Co., Ltd., Re Popular Life Assurance Co., Ltd., 25 T.L.R. 58; 53 Sol. Jo. 47; 10 Digest (Repl.) 1153, 8026.

Petition originally presented by the Scottish Union and National Insurance Co., hereafter called the Scottish Union, and the City of Glasgow Life Assurance Co., hereafter called the Glasgow Co., to the High Court of Justice in England asking that the fund in court to the credit of "Ex parte the City of Glasgow Life Assurance Co. in respect of life assurance business" might be transferred to an account "Ex parte the Scottish Union and National Insurance Co. in respect of life assurance business " and for payment of the income of the fund to that company. After the petition had come on once and an order had been made on it as to the income and certain cash the Glasgow company was dissolved by proceedings in accordance with s. 195 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, and the petition was amended in several particulars, including the striking out of the Glasgow company as a petitioner. The petition was further amended by asking that the Glasgow company's fund should be carried over to a separate account " Ex parte the Scottish Union and National Insurance Co. in respect of the life assurance business of the City of Glasgow Life Assurance Co. now dissolved," and that until further order the interest on the fund should be paid to the Scottish Union.

The Glasgow company was incorporated by a special Act passed in 1861, its powers being extended by another Act passed in 1892. In 1913 the company was registered as an unlimited company under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. The Scottish Union was incorporated by a special Act passed in 1878, its powers being extended by special Acts passed in 1886, 1892, and 1906. By its Act of 1892 the Scottish Union was empowered to make and carry into effect contracts for amalgamating with or purchasing or taking over the business or property of any company authorised to carry on any similar business. Each of the two companies in 1910 lodged in court securities representing the £20,000 required by s. 2 of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, to be deposited with the Paymaster-General for and on behalf of the Supreme Court. In March, 1913, the two companies entered into a provisional agreement for the sale by the Glasgow company to the Scottish Union of all the business, goodwill, and assets of the former company, the latter company agreeing to keep separate and distinct the life assurance and annuity fund of the Glasgow company and to continue to hold that fund in trust for the protection and sole benefit of the policy-holders and annuitants of the Glasgow company subject to certain rights of the Scottish Union in part of the profits of the fund. By an order of the Court of Session in Scotland dated Oct. 16, 1913, the transfer was sanctioned in the terms of the provisional agreement and an addendum thereto. In November, 1913, the Glasgow company went into voluntary liquidation, and in December, 1913 its liquidators assigned all its assets to the Scottish Union, and in the following year this petition was presented by both companies. The Glasgow company had issued a very large number of life policies in which the premiums had after the amalgamation been paid to the Scottish Union, but the Glasgow company had also issued a large number of paid-up life policies which were still outstanding, and in respect of which there could not for a considerable time be any novation.

The material section dealing with amalgamation in the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, is s. 13.

W. R. Sheldon for the Scottish Union.

Austen-Cartmell for the Board of Trade.

SARGANT, J.—Re Popular Life Assurance Co. (1), as reported, seems to go rather further than it should.

In the present case the petitioners, who are two life assurance companies, a vendor company and a purchasing company, originally asked for the transfer out of court of the £20,000 deposit which had been paid in by the vendor company. It was shown that the vendor company, whether rightly or not, had purported to wind-up its affairs and become dissolved under the Act. It was a case in which there had been an approval of the scheme of amalgamation; but, it appeared that, although there were a very large number of policies on which annual or other periodical payments had been made to the purchasing company and although with regard to those policies it was probable or certain that there had been, by reason of that payment, a novation of the contract with the policy-holder, so that the purchasing company became liable instead of, and to the release of, the vendor company, s. 7 of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1872, being

A no longer law and a novation therefore being possible in that way, yet in this particular case the vendor company had issued a very large number of fully paid-up policies, the consequence of which was that there had not been, and probably would not be for a very long time to come, a novation of the contracts between the original policy-holders and the vendor company.

B Under those circumstances it was suggested that the decision of WARRINGTON, J., in Re Popular Life Assurance Co. (1) applied and that the vendor company having actually been dissolved and there being no personal remedy at all against the vendor company, it necessarily followed that the remedy against the sum deposited in court had also gone, and, therefore, the purchasing company was entitled to have that fund transferred to it as the assignee of the vendor company without any provision at all being made for those policies of the vendor company.

C I do not think that that view of the case is really right, or that WARRINGTON, J., meant to go to that extent. I have had the papers sent to me by the Board of Trade, and I find that, in the petition in that case, it was stated that the purchasing company there had undertaken the liabilities of the vendor company on all policies issued by such company, and that the purchasing company had become liable on the said policies in the same way as the vendor company was liable

D thereunder. I think it must have been on that basis that the order was made by WARRINGTON, J. Of course, it is familiar that the court, at any time within two years of the dissolution of the company in a voluntary winding-up, could put an end to the dissolution, and, even apart from that, it is clear again that the assets of a company voluntarily wound-up cannot be transferred to a purchaser without providing, not merely for present liabilities, but for future possible

E liabilities, such as covenants under leases and so on. Therefore, as long as there are existing liabilities of a vendor company, in such a case as this it seems to me that it would not be right for the court to direct the transfer of the assurance fund to the purchasing company free from these possible liabilities on the vendor company. Indeed, as to the fact that the vendor company has in terms been dissolved, I feel some doubt as to whether a company ought to be dissolved under

F the Act while there are liabilities of the company outstanding, and while there are assets of the company not got in such an assurance fund in court. But, however that may be, the mere fact that the company has been dissolved may be rather an additional reason for keeping that particular asset of the company, such as the fund in court here, to meet the liabilities of the creditors.

A suggestion has been made by the Board of Trade which seems to me amply

G to protect those policy holders who have not novated, namely, that the fund shall be carried to a special account which will on the face of it show that the fund is still applicable for meeting those liabilities in the possible, though perhaps very improbable, event of the policy holders having to resort to it, and I accordingly make the order which has been asked for.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Young, Jones & Co.; Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

[Reported by L. MORGAN MAY, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re NATIONAL STANDARD LIFE ASSURANCE CORPORATION.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Neville, J.), November 14, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 Ch. 193; 86 L.J.Ch. 172; 115 L.T. 751;
33 T.L.R. 65; 61 Sol. Jo. 146]

Insurance—Life assurance—Statutory deposit—Winding up of assurance company—Availability of deposit for costs of winding-up—Assurance Companies Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 49), s. 2 (3), s. 3 (2).

On the true construction of s. 3 (2) of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, the statutory deposit of £20,000 required to be made by a company carrying on life assurance business held to be available for the costs of winding-up the life assurance business of the company and not to be subject to a first charge in favour of the policy holders.

Semble, where a company carried on more than one class of insurance business, the statutory deposit would not be available for all the costs of winding up since the fund would then be applied indirectly for purposes other than those of life assurance business contrary to s. 3 (2) of the Act of 1909.

Notes. The Assurance Companies Act, 1909, was repealed and replaced, with amendments, by the Insurance Companies Act, 1958. Paragraph 1 (2) of Sched. 2 to the Act of 1958 contains provisions for a statutory deposit of £20,000 to be made by assurance companies. Section 2 (3) of the Act of 1909 is replaced by para. 1 (3) of Sched. 2 to the Act of 1958 and s. 3 (2) of the Act of 1909, by s. 3 (2) of the Act of 1958.

Referred to: Re South East Lancashire Insurance Co., [1935] Ch. 225; Re Hearts of Oak Assurance Co., [1936] Ch. 558.

As to the winding-up of assurance companies, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 434 et seq. For cases on deposits to be made by insurance companies, see 10 DIGEST (Repl.) 1150 et seq. For the Insurance Companies Act, 1958, see 38 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 127.

Case referred to in argument:

Re Nelson & Co., Ltd. (1906), 22 T.L.R. 406; 10 Digest (Repl.) 1151, 8014.

Summons taken out by the liquidator of a life assurance company asking whether securities in the hands of the Accountant-General, representing the sum of £20,000 deposited upon the registration of the company pursuant to the Life Assurance Companies Acts, 1870 and 1872, formed part of the general assets of the company so as to be available for (i) general costs of the winding-up (including getting in the general assets of the company other than the deposit of £20,000), and (ii) payment into court by way of security for costs in pending actions by the company in which the liquidator had been duly authorised by the court to proceed.

The company was incorporated in January, 1906, with the object of effecting assurances of all kinds (except marine insurance) but, in fact, the company transacted practically no business except life assurance business. On June 6, 1916, an order was made by the court for the compulsory winding-up of the company, and by order dated Aug. 21, the applicant was appointed liquidator. The assets of the company consisted of (a) a sum of £20,000 deposited in court under the Life Assurance Companies Acts, 1870 and 1872, which was now represented by securities of the approximate value of £12,500; (b) a claim for damages in an action commenced before the liquidation against the Royal Co-operative Collecting Society for having improperly induced certain agents of the company to commit breaches of their agreements of service with the company by transferring certain portions of the business of the company to the society; (c) a sum of between £200 and £300 due under an agreement with the

- A Hearts of Oak Life and General Assurance Co., Ltd.; (d) a probable claim against some of the directors personally arising from their failure to provide capital in accordance with certain contracts entered into with the company; (e) the equity of redemption in respect of certain mortgages granted by the company; and (f) balance of a sum (if any) payable under an agreement with the Royal Co-operative Collecting Society. The items (d), (e) and (f) were of small and
- B doubtful value. It appeared that the claims of creditors under policies of assurance issued by the company might exceed the amount of the statutory deposit. There were also large claims by persons other than policy holders amounting to some thousands of pounds. In the action commenced against the Royal Co-operative Collecting Society the liquidator had obtained leave to proceed, but, the company now being in liquidation, a sum of £50 was payable into court by
- C way of security for costs.

The Assurance Companies Act, 1909, which re-enacted and extended the provisions of the Acts of 1870 and 1872, provided that every assurance company which carried on any one of five classes of assurance business should pay a deposit of £20,000. By s. 2 (3) of the Act of 1909 the deposit was to be deemed part of the assets of the company. Section 3 of the Act provided:—

- D (1) In the case of an assurance company transacting other business besides that of assurance or transacting more than one class of assurance business, a separate account shall be kept of all receipts in respect of the assurance business or of each class of assurance business, and the receipts in respect of the assurance business, or, in the case of a company carrying on more than one class of assurance business, of each class of business, shall be carried to and form a separate assurance fund
- E with an appropriate name: Provided that nothing in this section shall require the investments of any such fund to be kept separate from the investments of any other fund. (2) A fund of any particular class shall be as absolutely the security of the policy holders of that class as though it belonged to a company carrying on no other business than assurance business of that class, and shall not be liable for any contracts of the company for which it would not have been liable
- F had the business of the company been only that of assurance of that class, and shall not be applied, directly or indirectly, for any purposes other than those of the class of business to which the fund is applicable."

Percy Wheeler for the liquidator.

A. F. C. Luxmoore for the policyholders.

- G NEVILLE, J.—The question here is whether the liquidator is entitled to resort to the deposit made by a life assurance company, which was engaged to some extent in carrying on other businesses, in order to satisfy the costs of the liquidation. The liquidator has only asked for a limited order, limiting his right to resort to that fund to the costs of the liquidation so far as they have been incurred in respect of the life assurance business; and that, of course, relieves me from
- H considering the position as between the life assurance business and any other business which may exist.

- What I have to decide is whether the effect of the Act of 1909, which repealed the Acts of 1870 and 1872, is to give to the life policy holders a security over the deposited fund equivalent to the security of debenture holders to whom a company has conveyed or assigned part or the whole of its property as security for their advances. In such a case the mortgagees are entitled to take possession of the assets of a company and to realise them for the purpose of satisfying the amount due upon the debentures, and until they are satisfied the costs of the liquidation cannot be thrown upon any of the assets which are subject to the security of the debenture holders. Is that the position in which the legislature intended to place policy holders in a life assurance company in regard to the £20,000 deposit which undoubtedly in one sense is a security for the payment of the amount on the life policies?
- I

The material parts of the Act of 1909 for this purpose appear to me to be precisely identical with the same provisions in the Acts of 1870 and 1872 which are now repealed. The Act of 1909 is the Act which governs the case, but it seems to me that, if the Acts of 1870 and 1872 had governed the case, I should have arrived at the same conclusion. [His LORDSHIP read s. 2 (3) of the Act of 1909, and continued:] There is explicit indication that the deposit paid under the provisions of the Act is to be part of the assets of the company, and, except so far as it is excluded from the general liabilities to which assets of the company are subject, the deposit must still remain and be treated as the assets of the company. Then there is a provision in cases where a company carries on or intends to carry on another assurance business besides that of life assurance for the maintenance of a fund which is to be part of the separate assurance fund in respect of which the moneys are received by the company. Then comes s. 3 (2) upon which I think the whole matter really turns, subject to what I have already said, that one starts with the knowledge that the deposit is part of the assets of the company. What is the position of that fund with reference to the holders of life policies? [His LORDSHIP read s. 3 (2) and continued:] If the legislature had intended to put the policy holders of a particular class with regard to their fund in the position of debenture-holders having a charge given by the company on that particular part of the assets, nothing would have been easier than to have said so; but one must find a very clear meaning in the words used, identical to the creation of a fund like the fund upon which debenture-holders go, if one is to attribute the same meaning to them. It seems to me that that is not what has been said. The fund of a particular class is to be the security of the policy holders undoubtedly, but to what extent?—"as though it belonged to a company carrying on no other business than assurance business of that class." Of course, if it belonged to a company carrying on no other business than assurance business of that class, there is nothing in that provision at all to exonerate it from bearing the costs of the winding-up of the company in case of need. Then comes a further provision, which I think is explanatory:

"and [the fund] shall not be liable for any contracts of the company for which it would not have been liable had the business of the company been only that of assurance of that class."

That is to say, as I understand it, that persons who have contracted with the company on a different basis from that of life assurance are not to be entitled to claim payment of their claims out of this fund, which is the security of the life policy holders. I cannot see anything in that to prevent the fund being applicable for the purpose of the liquidation of the company where the company is being wound-up.

It seems to me, therefore, that, generally speaking, the security given is not such a security as to exonerate the fund from the costs of the liquidation. It may well be that the incidence of the cost of liquidation may in proper cases be distributed over the different funds representing the different businesses which a particular company carries on, and it may be that some of the costs incurred in a liquidation where a company is carrying on certain assurance businesses may not fall upon the deposit in respect of the life assurance, because one has to consider the words at the end of that section,

"shall not be applied directly or indirectly for any purposes other than those of the class of business to which the fund is applicable," and I can well conceive cases in which part of the costs of the winding-up, if those costs were to be paid out of the life assurance fund, would be indirectly, if not directly, applied for purposes other than those of the class of business to which the fund is applicable. But that point is not raised in the present case, because the liquidator is willing to take an order from the court referring only

A to the costs of the liquidation so far as they represent the costs of winding-up the life assurance business. I think that with that limitation the answer to the summons must be to the effect that the deposited fund is liable in the costs of the liquidation.

Order accordingly.

B Solicitors: Close & Co.; Pontifex, Pitt & Johnson.

[Reported by R. R. FORMOY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

BONANZA CREEK GOLD MINING CO., LTD. v. REGEN, ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR QUEBEC AND OTHERS (INTER- VENERS)

D

[PRIVY COUNCIL (Lord Buckmaster, L.C., Viscount Haldane, Lord Parker of Waddington and Lord Sumner), December 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 1915. February 24, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 1 A.C. 566; 85 L.J.P.C. 114; 114 L.T. 765;
32 T.L.R. 333; 26 D.L.R. 273; 10 W.W.R. 391;
34 W.L.R. 177; 25 Que. K.B. 170]

E

Canada—Provincial legislation—Company—Incorporation under provincial statute—Mining company—Capacity to acquire mining leases and permission to mine outside province—British North America Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict., c. 3), s. 92 (11).

F

A mining company incorporated in 1904 by letters patent issued by the lieutenant-governor of Ontario under the authority of the Companies Act (R.S. Ont., 1897, c. 91), s. 9, "and of any other power or authority whatsoever vested" in him on that behalf, acquired certain mining properties as assignees of leases granted by the Crown in the Yukon. In 1905 the company obtained a licence from the commissioner of the Yukon territory, under the Foreign Companies Ordinance of the territory, permitting them to carry on business in the territory, and in 1906 the company was granted by the dominion authorities a free miner's certificate issued under the regulations governing placer mining in the Yukon. In a petition of right, presented in 1908, the company claimed damages in respect of alleged wrongful acts and omissions by the Crown and its officers in relation to the mining claims, to which the Crown delivered an answer denying that the company had any power to carry on mining business in the Yukon, and pleaded further that there was no power to grant a free miner's certificate to a company incorporated under provincial powers, and no power in that company to accept such a certificate. By s. 192 (11) of the British North America Act, 1867 (6 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 303) the legislature of a province has exclusive power to legislate in relation to the incorporation of companies with provincial objects.

G

H

I

Held: the words in s. 92 (11) "with provincial objects", while precluding the grant by a provincial legislature to a company of powers and rights in respect of objects outside the province, did not prohibit a company from accepting such powers and rights if granted ab extra, and, therefore, the appellant company had a status which enabled it to accept the licence from the commissioner of the Yukon territory and the certificate of free mining from the dominion authorities and to acquire a good title to the mining locations under the leases in question.

Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche (1) (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 653, distinguished.

Notes. Followed: A.-G. for Ontario v. A.-G. for Canada, [1916] 1 A.C. 598; Kittles v. Colonial Assurance Co. (1917), 35 D.L.R. 588. Considered: National Land and Loan Co. v. Rat Portage Lumber Co. (1917), 36 D.L.R. 97. Discussed: Re Lands and Houses of Canada (1918), 44 D.L.R. 325. Followed: Edwards v. Blackmore (1918), 42 O.L.R. 104; Honsberger v. Weyburn Townsite (1919), 59 S.C.R. 281. Distinguished: Weyburn Townsite Co., Ltd. v. Honsberger (1919), 45 O.L.R. 176; Re Mutual Investments, Ltd. (1924), 56 O.L.R. 29. Applied: Re Northwestern Trust Co. (1926), 1 D.L.R. 689. Considered: Williams v. R., [1940] D.R. 403. Distinguished: San Life Assurance Co. v. Sisters Adorers of the Precious Blood [1942] O.R. 708. Applied: Heritage v. W. D. Morris Realty, Ltd., [1943] O.R. 724. Considered: Ref. re Bowater's Paper Mills, Ltd., [1950] S.C.R. 608; C.P.R. v. Winnipeg, [1952] S.C.R. 424. Distinguished: P.E.I. Potato Board v. H. B. Willis Inc., [1952] 2 S.C.R. 392. Followed: Actna Factors Corp. v. Breau [(1959)], 15 D.L.R. (2d) 322. Referred to: A.-G. for Canada v. A.-G. for Alberta, [1916] 1 A.C. 588; Basil v. Spratt (1917), 44 O.L.R. 155; R. v. Manitoba Grain Co. (1922), 66 D.L.R. 406; Waterous Engine Co. v. Capreol (1922), 52 O.L.R. 247; Sass. v. St. Nicholas Mutual Association, [1937] 2 D.L.R. 761; Ref. re Power to Disallow Legislation, [1938] S.C.R. 71; Gatineau Pincer Co. v. Fraser Companies (1941), 15 M.P.R. 511; R. v. Globe Indemnity, [1945] O.R. 190; S.M.T. (Eastern), Ltd. v. St. John, [1946] 4 D.L.R. 209; Carroll v. R. [1947] 2 R.L. 321; Carruthers Clinic v. Herdman, 27 C.P.R. 96.

As to the legislative powers of Canadian provincial legislatures, see 5 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 495-502; and for cases see 8 DIGEST (Repl.) 722 et seq.

Cases referred to:

(1) Riche v. Ashbury Carriage and Iron Co. (1874), L.R. 9 Exch. 224; 43 L.J. Ex. 177; 31 L.T. 339; 23 W.R. 7, Exch.; reversed sub nom. Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 653; 44 L.J. Ex. 185; 33 L.T. 450; 24 W.R. 794, H.L.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 29, 6.

(2) Sutton's Hospital Case (1612), 103 Rep. 23a; Jenk. 270; 77 E.R. 960, Ex. Ch.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 502, 2223.

(3) A.-G. for Commonwealth of Australia v. Colonial Sugar Refining Co., Ltd., [1914] A.C. 237; 83 L.J.P.C. 154; 110 L.T. 707; 30 T.L.R. 203, P.C.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 752, 296.

(4) Liquidators of the Maritime Bank of Canada v. Receiver-General of New Brunswick, [1892] A.C. 437; 61 L.J.P.C. 75; 67 L.T. 126; 8 T.L.R. 677, P.C.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 687, 18.

(5) Musgrave v. Padida (1879), 5 App. Cas. 102; 49 L.J.P.C. 20; 41 L.T. 629; 28 W.R. 373, P.C.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 689, 28.

Also referred to in argument:

Comanche County v. Lewis (1889), 133 U.S. 198.

Canadian Pacific Rail. Co. v. Ottawa Fire Insurance Co. (1907), 39 S.C.R. 405; 8 Digest (Repl.) 744, *571.

Colonial Building and Investment Association v. A.-G. of Quebec (1883), 9 App. Cas. 157; 53 L.J.P.C. 27; 49 L.T. 789, P.C.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 709, 147.

Dobie v. Temporalities Board (1882), 7 App. Cas. 136; 51 L.J.P.C. 26; 45 L.T. 1, P.C.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 750, 288.

Compagnie Hydraulique de St. Francois v. Continental Heat and Light Co., [1909] A.C. 194; 78 L.J.P.C. 60; 99 L.T. 786, P.C.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 706, 131.

- A L.C.C. v. A.-G., [1902] A.C. 165; 71 L.J.Ch. 268; 86 L.T. 161; 66 J.P. 340; 50 W.R. 497; 18 T.L.R. 298, H.L.; 13 Digest (Repl.) 282, 1026.
A.-G. v. Great Eastern Rail Co. (1880), 5 App. Cas. 473; 49 L.J.Ch. 545; 42 L.T. 810; 44 J.P. 648; 28 W.R. 769, H.L.; 13 Digest (Repl.) 271, 957.
Canadian Southern Rail. Co. v. Gebhard (1883), 109 U.S. 527.
A.-G. for Ontario v. A.-G. for the Dominion, [1896] A.C. 348; 65 L.J.P.C. 26; 74 L.T. 533; 12 T.L.R. 388, P.C.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 707, 134.

B Appeal, by special leave, from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada (reported 50 S.C.R. 534) affirming the judgment of the Exchequer Court of Canada (6 W.W.R. 1056).

Hellmuth, K.C., and Moss, K.C., for the appellants.

- C Newcombe, K.C., Burrington-Ward (for Raymond Asquith, serving with His Majesty's forces), and G. W. Mason for the respondent.

Sir R. Finlay, K.C., Nesbitt, K.C., Lafleur, K.C., Geoffrion, K.C., and M. Macnaughten (for G. Lawrence, serving with His Majesty's forces) for the Attorneys-General for Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, interveners.

Lañctot, K.C., for the Attorney-General for Quebec, intervener.

- D Parlee, K.C., and H. Douglas (for Sir H. Greenwood, serving with His Majesty's forces) for the Attorney-General for Alberta, intervener.

Bayly, K.C., for the Attorney-General of Ontario, intervener.

H. Douglas for the Attorney-General for British Columbia, intervener.

Feb. 24, 1916. VISCOUNT HALDANE.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in an action which gave rise to questions of constitutional importance as to the position of joint stock companies, incorporated within the provinces, but seeking to carry on their business beyond the provincial boundaries.

- E The appellants were incorporated in Ontario by letters patent, dated Dec. 23, 1904, and issued under the authority of the Ontario Companies Act [R.S. Ont., 1897, c. 191] and by virtue of any other authority or power then existing, in the name of the Sovereign and under the Great Seal of the province, by its lieutenant-governor. The letters patent recite that this Act authorises the lieutenant-governor in council by letters patent under the Great Seal to create and constitute bodies corporate and politic for any of the purposes or objects to which the legislative authority of the province extends. They go on to incorporate the company to carry on the businesses of mining and exploration in all their branches, and to acquire real and personal property, including mining claims, with incidental powers. There are no words which limit the area of operation or prohibit the company from carrying out its objects beyond the provincial boundaries.
- F In the years 1899 and 1900 the Crown, through the Minister of the Interior of the Dominion, had granted to predecessors in title of the appellants leases of certain tracts of land, in what is now the Yukon district, for the purposes of hydraulic mining. Two of these leases contained exclusions of so much of the tracts as had been taken up and entered for placer mining claims. In the year 1900 the Crown entered into agreements with these predecessors in title to the effect that, if any of the placer mining claims within the tracts should be forfeited or surrendered, the Crown would include them in the tracts by supplementary leases. The original leases having subsequently been assigned to the appellants, and certain of the
- G placer mining claims having reverted, the Crown purported in 1907 to demise to the appellants these claims, and to agree to demise to them such other of the claims as might thereafter revert, for the same terms of years as those for which the original leases were granted. In 1906 the Minister of the Interior of the Dominion had purported to issue to the appellants a free miner's certificate. This certificate was issued in conformity with certain regulations under an Order in Council made under the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act, which gives the right to a free miner's certificate to persons of over eighteen and to joint stock companies, the latter being defined to include any company incorporated in for mining purposes under a Canadian charter or licensed by the government of Canada." When the Yukon district was, by the statute passed by the dominion Parliament in 1899, made a separate territory, power to make ordinances was conferred on the commissioner of the territory. Under this power the Foreign Companies Ordinance was passed, under which any company, incorporated otherwise than by or under the authority of an ordinance of the territory or an Act of the Parliament of Canada, was required to obtain a licence under the ordinance to carry on its business in the Yukon territory. Such a licence when issued was made sufficient evidence in the courts of the territory of the due licensing of the company. In September, 1905, the appellants obtained such a licence.

In 1908 the appellants presented a petition of right in the Exchequer Court of Canada, alleging that, in breach of the agreement entered into by the Crown, placer mining claims which had reverted to the Crown and should have been leased to the appellants had been wrongfully withheld from the appellants, and that by reason of this and of other breaches of the agreement the appellants had suffered heavy damage, for which they as suppliants prayed compensation. The respondent delivered an answer to the petition of right, the first two paragraphs of such answer being as follows:

"1. The respondent denies that the suppliant has now or ever has had the power, either under letters patent, licence, free miner's certificate, or otherwise, to carry on the business of mining in the district of the Yukon, or to acquire any mines, mining claims, or mining locations therein, or any estate or interest by way of lease or otherwise in any such mines, mining claims, or locations. 2. Should a free miner's certificate have been issued to the suppliant the respondent claims that the same is and always has been invalid and of no force or effect, that there was no power to issue a free miner's certificate to the suppliant, a company incorporated under provincial letters patent, and that there was no power vested in the suppliant to accept such a certificate."

CASSELS, J., the judge of the Exchequer Court, ordered the questions of law raised by these paragraphs of the answer to be disposed of, and pending this stayed all other proceedings. He subsequently heard arguments upon the questions thus raised. As a result he decided that he ought to follow what he conceived to be the opinions given by the majority of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada in a general reference which had been made to them in regard to companies. He thought that the majority in the Supreme Court had decided that a provincial company was confined in the exercise of its functions to the province where it was incorporated. He, therefore, dismissed the petition of right, but without costs, on the ground taken in the first of the above-quoted paragraphs of the answer. On the narrower ground taken in the second paragraph he did not enter.

There was an appeal to the Supreme Court, and the learned judges were divided in their views. The Chief Justice, DAVIS, J., and DUFF, J., were of opinion that it was ultra vires the appellants to exercise powers or to acquire rights outside the boundaries of the province of Ontario. IDINGTON, J., and ANGLIN, J., were of a different opinion. They held that, while a provincial company could exercise its powers as of right only within the province where it was incorporated, it was elsewhere in Canada like a foreign company, and had capacity to accept rights and powers conferred on it by comity by another government. The majority in the Supreme Court were, therefore, adverse to the appellants on the first question raised, that as to general capacity. On the question raised by the second paragraph of the answer, DUFF, J., expressed an opinion in favour of the appellants. On the question, which was one of construction, and arose only if he was wrong in his answer to the wider question, he thought that the condition of acquiring, under the Dominion Regulations approved by the Order in Council already referred to, the right to a mining location to be worked by hydraulic process,

A was the obtaining a free miner's certificate under the Dominion Regulations governing placer mining. Under these regulations a joint stock company might receive such a certificate if it came within the definition of being "incorporated for mining purposes under a Canadian charter or licensed by the government of Canada." Differing from the Chief Justice, who had been adverse to the appellants on this point also, DUFF, J., was of opinion that the expression "Canadian charter" meant, not a charter granted under Dominion authority, but one emanating from any lawful authority in Canada. Otherwise, as he pointed out, a company incorporated by Yukon authority, or by the Council of the North-West Territories before Yukon became a separate territory, would be excluded along with companies incorporated by the province of Canada before confederation.

C Their Lordships have come to the same conclusion on this point as DUFF, J. They think that the appellants, if they possessed legal capacity to receive such a dominion certificate, had it validly bestowed on them, and that, if so, they subsequently obtained a good title to the mining locations and also to the Yukon licence to carry on business which was granted to them. This subordinate question ought, therefore, to be answered in favour of the appellants.

D Their Lordships accordingly turn to the larger question raised by the first of the two paragraphs, a question which is of far-reaching importance. It is whether a company incorporated by provincial letters patent, issued in conformity with legislation under s. 92 of the British North America Act, can have capacity to acquire and exercise powers and rights outside the territorial boundaries of the province. In the absence of such capacity the certificates, licences, and leases E already referred to were wholly inoperative, for if the company had no legal existence or capacity for purposes outside the boundaries of the province conferred on it by the government of Ontario, by whose grant exclusively it came into being, it is not apparent how any other government could bestow on it rights and powers which enlarged that existence and capacity. The answer to this question must depend on the construction to be placed on s. 92 of the British North F America Act and on the Ontario Companies Act.

Section 92 (11) confers exclusive power upon the provincial legislature to make laws in relation to the "incorporation of companies with provincial objects." The interpretation of this provision which has been adopted by the majority of the judges in the Supreme Court is that the introduction of the words "with provincial objects" imposes a territorial limit on legislation conferring the power G of incorporation so completely that by or under provincial legislation no company can be incorporated with an existence in law that extends beyond the boundaries of the province. Neither directly by the language of a special Act, nor indirectly by bestowal through executive power, do they think that capacity can be given to operate outside the province, or to accept from an outside authority the power of so operating. For the company, it is said, is a pure creature of statute, H existing only for objects prescribed by the legislature within the area of its authority, and is, therefore, restricted, so far as legal capacity is concerned, on the principle laid down in Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche (1). Their Lordships, however, take the view that this principle amounts to no more than that the words employed to which a corporation owes its legal existence must have their natural meaning, whatever that may be. The words of the I British Companies Act [that of 1862] were construed as importing that a company incorporated by the statutory memorandum of association which the Act prescribed could have no legal existence beyond such as was required for the particular objects of incorporation to which that memorandum limited it. A similar rule has been laid down as regards companies created by special Act.

The doctrine means simply that it is wrong, in answering the question what powers the corporation possesses when incorporated exclusively by statute, to start by assuming that the legislature meant to create a company with a capacity resembling that of a natural person, such as a corporation created by charter would have at common law, and then to ask whether there are words in the statute which take away the incidents of such a corporation. This was held by the House of Lords to be the error into which BLACKBURN, J., and the judges who agreed with him had fallen when they decided in Riche v. Ashbury Carriage and Iron Co. (1) in the court below that the analogy of the status and powers of a corporation created by a charter, as expounded in the Sutton's Hospital Case (2), should in the first instance be looked to. For to look to that analogy is to assume that the legislature has had a common law corporation in view, whereas the wording may not warrant the inference that it has done more than concern itself with its own creature. Such a creature, where its entire existence is derived from the statute, will have the incidents which the common law would attach if, but only if, the statute has by its language gone on to attach them. In the absence of such language they are excluded, and, if the corporation attempts to act as though they were not, it is doing what is ultra vires and so prohibited as lying outside its existence in contemplation of law. The question is simply one of interpretation of the words used. For the statute may be so framed that executive power to incorporate by charter, independently of the statute itself, which some authority, such as a lieutenant-governor, possessed before it came into operation, has been left intact. Or the statute may be in such a form that a new power to incorporate by charter has been created, directed to be exercised with a view to the attainment of, for example, merely territorial objects, but not directed in terms which confine the legal personality which the charter creates to existence for the purpose of these objects and within territorial limits. The language may be such as to show an intention to confer on the corporation the general capacity which the common law ordinarily attaches to corporations created by charter. In such a case a construction like that adopted by BLACKBURN, J., will be the true one.

Applying the principle so understood to the interpretation of s. 92 and of the Ontario Companies Act passed by virtue of it, the conclusion which results is different from that reached by the court below. For the words of s. 92 are, in their Lordships' opinion, wide enough to enable the legislature of the province to keep the power alive, if there existed in the executive at the time of confederation a power to incorporate companies with provincial objects, but with an ambit of vitality wider than that of the geographical limits of the province. Such provincial objects would be, of course, the only objects in respect of which the province could confer actual rights. Rights outside the province would have to be derived from authorities outside the province. It is, therefore, important to ascertain what were the powers in this regard of a lieutenant-governor before the British North America Act passed and, in the second place, what the Ontario Companies Act has really done.

The Act which was passed by the Imperial Parliament in 1840, in consequence of the Report on the State of Affairs in Canada made by Lord Durham, united the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada under a governor-general, who had power to appoint deputies to whom he could delegate his authority. This Act established a single legislature for the new United Province of Canada, and shortly after it had passed responsible government was there set up. In 1867 the British North America Act modified the constitution so established. This Act contained a preamble stating that the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, had expressed their desire to be federally united into one dominion under the Crown, with a constitution similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom. In A.G. for the Commonwealth of Australia v. Colonial Sugar Refining Co., Ltd. (3), this board had occasion to comment on the contrast between the principles which underlie the distribution of powers in the constitutions of Canada and Australia respectively. They drew attention to the fact that the expression "federal" in the preamble of the British North America Act had been used in a somewhat loose fashion, and that the principle actually adopted was not that of federation in the strict sense, but one under which the

A constitutions of the provinces had been surrendered to the Imperial Parliament for the purpose of being re-fashioned. The result had been to establish wholly new dominion and provincial governments with defined powers and duties, both derived from the statute which was their legal source, the residual powers and duties being taken away from the old provinces and given to the Dominion. It is to be observed that the British North America Act has made a distribution between the dominion and the provinces which extends not only to legislative but to executive authority. The executive government and authority over Canada are primarily vested in the Sovereign. But the statute proceeds to enact, by s. 12, that all powers, authorities, and functions, which by any Imperial statute or by any statute of the provinces of Upper Canada, Lower Canada, Canada, Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick, are at the Union vested in or exercisable by the respective governors or lieutenant-governors of these provinces shall, "as far as the same continue in existence and capable of being exercised after the Union in relation to the government of Canada," be vested in and exercisable by the governor-general. Section 65, on the other hand, provides that all such powers, authorities, and functions shall,

D "as far as the same are capable of being exercised after the Union in relation to the government of Ontario and Quebec respectively, be vested in and exercisable by the lieutenant-governor of Ontario and Quebec respectively."

By s. 64 the constitution of the executive authority in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick was to continue as it existed at the Union until altered under the authority of the Act. The effect of these sections of the British North America Act is that, subject to certain express provisions in that Act and to the supreme authority of the Sovereign, who delegates to the governor-general and through his instrumentality to the lieutenant-governors the exercise of the prerogative on terms defined in their commissions, the distribution under the new grant of executive authority in substance follows the distribution under the new grant of legislative powers. In relation, for example, to the incorporation of companies in Ontario with provincial objects the powers of incorporation which the governor-general or lieutenant-governor possessed before the Union must be taken to have passed to the lieutenant-governor of Ontario, so far as concerns companies with this class of objects. Under both s. 12 and s. 65 the continuance of the powers thus delegated is made by implication to depend on the appropriate legislature not interfering.

G There can be no doubt that prior to 1867 the governor-general was for many purposes intrusted with the exercise of the prerogative power of the Sovereign to incorporate companies throughout Canada, and such prerogative power to that extent became after confederation, and so far as provincial objects required its exercise, vested in the lieutenant-governors, to whom provincial Great Seals were assigned as evidences of their authority. Whatever obscurity H may at one time have prevailed as to the position of a lieutenant-governor appointed on behalf of the Crown by the governor-general has been dispelled by the decision of this board in Liquidators of the Maritime Bank of Canada v. Receiver-General of New Brunswick (4). It was there laid down that

I "the act of the governor-general and his council in making the appointment is, within the meaning of the statute, the act of the Crown; and a lieutenant-governor, when appointed, is as much the representative of Her Majesty for all purposes of provincial government, as the governor-general himself is for all purposes of dominion government."

The form of the commission by which the governor-general appoints a lieutenant-governor to be lieutenant-governor of Ontario bears this out. For it runs in the name of the Sovereign, and is:

"To do and execute all things that shall belong to your said command and the trust we have reposed in you, according to the several provisions and directions granted or appointed you by virtue of the Act of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland passed in the thirtieth year of the reign of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, called and known as "The British North America Act, 1867," and of all other statutes in that behalf and of this our present commission, according to such instructions as are herewith given to you or which may from time to time be given to you in respect of the said province of Ontario under the sign manual of our governor-general of our said dominion of Canada, or by order of our Privy Council of Canada, and according to such laws as are or shall be in force in the said province of Ontario."

Their Lordships have now to consider the question whether legislation before or after confederation has been of such a character that any power of incorporation by charter from the Crown which formerly existed has been abrogated or interfered with to such an extent that companies so created no longer possess that capacity which the charter would otherwise have attached to them. Prior to confederation, the granting of letters patent under the Great Seal of the province of Canada for the incorporation of companies for manufacturing, mining, and certain other purposes was sanctioned and regulated by the Canadian statute of 1864. This statute authorised the governor-in-council to grant a charter of incorporation to persons who should petition for incorporation for the purposes of the enumerated kinds of business. Applicants for such a charter were to give notice in the "Canada Gazette" of, among other things, the object or purpose for which incorporation was sought. By s. 4 every company so incorporated under that Great Seal for any of the purposes mentioned in this Act was to be a body corporate capable of exercising all the functions of an incorporated company as if incorporated by a special Act of Parliament. Their Lordships construe this provision as an enabling one, and not as intended to restrict the existence of the company to what can be found in the words of the Act as distinguished from the letters patent granted in accordance with its provisions. It appears to them that the doctrine of Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche (1) does not apply where, as here, the company purports to derive its existence from the act of the Sovereign and not merely from the words of the regulating statute. No doubt the grant of a charter could not have been validly made in contravention of the provisions of the Act. But, if validly granted, it appears to their Lordships that the charter conferred on the company a status resembling that of a corporation at common law, subject to the restrictions which are imposed on its proceedings. There is nothing in the language used which, for instance, would preclude such a company from having an office or branch in England or elsewhere outside Canada.

The Dominion Companies Act (c. 79 of the Revised Statutes of 1906) is, so far as Part 1 is concerned, framed on the same principle, although the machinery set up is somewhat different. Part 2 stands on another footing. This part deals only with companies directly incorporated by special Act of the Parliament of Canada, and to these it is obvious that other considerations may apply. But the companies to which Part 1 applies are, like those under the old statute, to be incorporated by letters patent, the only material difference being that the Act enables these to be granted by the Secretary of State under his own seal of office. When granted by s. 5 they constitute the shareholders a body corporate and politic for any of the purposes or objects, with certain exceptions, to which the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada extends. The Sovereign, through the medium of the governor-general, in this way delegates the power of incorporation, subject to restrictions on its exercise, to the secretary of State, and it is by the exercise of the executive power of the Sovereign that the company is brought into existence. The Ontario Companies Act, which governs the present case, is c. 191 of the Revised Statutes of the province 1897. The principle

A is similar, save that the letters patent are to be granted directly by the lieutenant-governor of the province under the Great Seal of Ontario. Excepting in this respect, the provisions of s. 9, which corresponds to s. 5 of the dominion Act, are substantially the same as those of the latter section, so that, subject to the express restrictions in the statute, it is by the grant under the Great Seal and not by the words of the statute, which merely restrict the cases in which such a grant

B can be made, that the vitality of the corporation is to be measured. It will be observed that s. 107 enables an extra-provincial company desiring to carry on business within the province of Ontario to do so if authorised by licence from the lieutenant-governor, a provision which bears out the view indicated. It was obviously beyond the powers of the Ontario legislature to repeal the provisions of the Act of 1864, excepting in so far as the British North America Act enabled

C it to do this in matters relating to the province. If the legislature of Ontario had not interfered, the general character of an Ontario company constituted by grant would remain similar to that of a Canadian company before confederation.

The whole matter may be put thus. The limitations of the legislative powers of a province expressed in s. 92, and in particular the limitation of the power of legislation to such as relates to the incorporation of companies with provincial

D objects, confine the character of the actual powers and rights which the provincial government can bestow, either by legislation or through the executive, to powers and rights exercisable within the province. But actual powers and rights are one thing and capacity to accept extra-provincial powers and rights is quite another. In the case of a company created by charter the doctrine of ultra vires has no real application in the absence of statutory restriction added to what is

E written in the charter. Such a company has the capacity of a natural person to acquire powers and rights. If by the terms of the charter it is prohibited from doing so, a violation of this prohibition is an act not beyond its capacity, and is, therefore, not ultra vires, although such a violation may well give ground for proceedings by way of scire facias for the forfeiture of the charter. In the case of a

F company, the legal existence of which is wholly derived from the words of a statute, the company does not possess the general capacity of a natural person and the doctrine of ultra vires applies. Where, under legislation resembling that of the British Companies Act by a province of Canada in the exercise of powers which s. 92 confers, a provincial company has been incorporated by means of a memorandum of association analogous to that prescribed by the British Companies Act, the principle laid down by the House of Lords in Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche (1), of course, applies. The capacity of such a company

G may be limited to capacity within the province, either because the memorandum of association has not allowed the company to exist for the purpose of carrying on any business outside the provincial boundaries, or because the statute under which incorporation took place did not authorise, and therefore excluded, incorporation for such a purpose. Assuming, however, that the provincial

H legislation has purported to authorise a memorandum of association permitting operations outside the province if power for the purpose is obtained ab extra, and that such a memorandum has been registered, the only question is whether the legislation was competent to the province under s. 92. If the words of this section are to receive the interpretation placed on them by the majority in the Supreme Court, the question will be answered in the negative. But their Lord-

I ships are of opinion that this interpretation was too narrow. The words "legislation in relation to the incorporation of companies with provincial objects" do not preclude the province from keeping alive the power of the executive to incorporate by charter in a fashion which confers a general capacity analogous to that of a natural person. Nor do they appear to preclude the province from legislating so as to create, by or by virtue of statute, a corporation with this general capacity. What the words really do is to preclude the grant to such a corporation, whether by legislation or by executive act according with the distribution of legislative authority, of powers and rights in respect of objects outside the province, while leaving untouched the ability of the corporation, if otherwise adequately called into existence, to accept such powers and rights if granted ab extra. It is, in their Lordships' opinion, in this narrower sense alone that the restriction to provincial objects is to be interpreted. It follows, as the Ontario legislature has not thought fit to restrict the exercise by the lieutenant-governor of the prerogative power to incorporate by letters patent with the result of conferring a capacity analogous to that of a natural person, that the appellant company could accept powers and rights conferred on it by outside authorities. The conclusions at which their Lordships have thus arrived are sufficient to enable them to dispose of this appeal, for according to these conclusions the appellant company had a status which enabled it to accept from the dominion authorities the right of free mining, and to hold the leases in question and take the benefit of the agreements relating to the locations in the Yukon district, as well as of the licence from the Yukon authorities.

A yet larger view of the devolution and distribution of executive power in Canada was suggested in some of the arguments addressed to their Lordships from the Bar, and they are aware that this view has been contended for on former occasions in the dominion. It has been urged in several cases which have occurred that the governor-general and the lieutenant-governors of the provinces, excepting so far as the Royal prerogatives have been reserved expressly or by necessary implication, have the right to exercise them, as though by implication completely handed over and distributed in such a fashion as to cover the whole of the fields to which the self-government of Canada extends. The governor and the lieutenant-governors would thus be more nearly viceroys than representatives of the Sovereign under the restrictions explained in Musgrave v. Poldo (5), where it was laid down that, in the case of a Crown Colony, the commission of the governor must in each case be the measure of his executive authority, a principle which, in such a case as that of a self-governing dominion like Canada, might find its analogy in the terms not only of the commission but of the statute creating the constitution. The argument for the larger view concedes that it is the general rule in the construction of statutes that the Crown is not affected unless there be words to that effect, inasmuch as the law made by the Crown with the assent of the Lords and Commons is enacted prima facie for the subject and not for the Sovereign. But this principle of construction, it is said, cannot apply to an Act the expressed object of which is to grant a constitution with full legislative and executive powers. In the case of such an Act there is, therefore, no presumption that the general provisions it contains were not intended to include any matter of prerogative which, in the absence of the rule of construction above stated, would fall within the general words employed. For a constitution granted to a dominion for regulating its own affairs in legislation and government generally, cannot be created without dealing with the prerogative, and the British North America Act from beginning to end deals with matters of prerogative, for the most part without expressly naming the Sovereign.

If this argument were well-founded it would afford a short cut to the solution of the question which has arisen in this appeal. For under the distribution of the prerogative which it assumes it would be difficult to see how a lieutenant-governor, placed in the position of a viceroy as regards matters pertaining to the government of his province, could be excluded from the prerogative power of incorporating by charter, unless that power had been expressly taken away by legislation.

But their Lordships abstain from discussing at length the question so raised. They will only say that when, if ever, it comes to be argued, points of difficulty will have to be considered. There is no provision in the British North America Act corresponding even to s. 61 of the Australian Commonwealth Act, which, subject to the declaration of the discretionary right of delegation by the Sovereign in ch. 1, s. 2, provides that the executive power, though declared to be in the Sovereign, is yet to be exercisable by the governor-general. Moreover, in the Canadian Act there are various significant sections, such as s. 9, which

- A declares the executive government and authority over Canada to continue and be vested in the Sovereign; s. 14, which declares the power of the Sovereign to authorise the governor-general to appoint deputies; s. 15, which, differing from s. 68 of the Commonwealth Act, says that the command-in-chief of the naval and military forces in Canada is to be deemed to continue and be vested in the Sovereign; and s. 16, which says that until the Sovereign otherwise directs, the seat of the government in Canada shall be Ottawa. These and other provisions of the British North America Act appear to preserve prerogative rights of the Crown which would pass if the scheme were that contended for, and to negative the theory that the governor-general is made a viceroy in the full sense, and they point to the different conclusion that for the measure of his powers the words of his commission and of the statute itself must be looked to. In Liquidators of the Maritime Bank of Canada v. Receiver-General of New Brunswick (4) it was said by this Board that the provisions of the Act

“nowhere profess to curtail in any respect the rights and privileges of the Crown, or to disturb the relations then subsisting between the Sovereign and the provinces.”

- D Properly understood, and subject to such express provisions of the Act as transfer what would otherwise remain prerogative powers, their Lordships are disposed to agree with this interpretation. It is quite consistent with it to hold that executive power is in many situations which arise under the statutory constitution of Canada conferred by implication in the grant of legislative power, so that where such situations arise the two kinds of authority are correlative. It follows that to this extent the Crown is bound and the prerogative affected. But such a conclusion is a very different one from the far-reaching principle contended for in the argument in question.

- E For the reasons which they have assigned earlier in this judgment their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, and that the trial of the petition of right should be proceeded with. As these are proceedings arising out of a petition of right with reference to which, under the Petition of Right Act of Canada, there is discretion to award costs as against the Crown, the respondent will pay the appellants' costs here and in the courts below. There will be no order as to the costs of the interveners.

Solicitors: Blake & Redden; Charles Russell & Co.

[Reported by W. E. REID, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

EVANS v. EDINBURGH CORPORATION AND OTHERS

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Buckmaster, L.C., Viscount Haldane, Lord Kinnear, Lord Atkinson and Lord Parker of Waddington), March 28, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 A.C. 45; 85 L.J.P.C. 200; 114 L.T. 911;
32 T.L.R. 396]

Highway Negligence Adjoining premises—Door opening outwards across highway.

Where premises are in themselves and apart from their use perfectly harmless neither the owner of the premises nor the highway authority is liable to any person who suffers injury by reason of a door being opened outwards across a highway. There is no duty at common law on such an owner not to keep premises with a door opening on the highway where that door, while unopened, is a perfectly harmless thing. Nor is there any duty which he owes to a passer-by to prevent any person ever opening the door so that it would be an obstruction.

Notes. As to the liability of occupiers of premises adjoining highways, see 28 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 72; and for cases see 36 DIGEST (Repl.) 45 et seq. As to negligence in relation to highways in general, see 28 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 62 et seq.; and for cases see 36 DIGEST (Repl.) 89 et seq.

Cases referred to in argument:

Johnson v. Mitchell & Co. (1885), 22 S.L.R. 698.

Tarry v. Ashton (1876), 1 Q.B.D. 314; 45 L.J.Q.B. 260; 34 L.T. 97; 40 J.P. 439; sub nom. Terry v. Ashton, 24 W.R. 581; 26 Digest (Repl.) 495, 1793.

Innes v. Edinburgh Magistrates (1798), Mor. Dict. 13189.

Elgin County Road Trustees v. Innes (1886), 14 R. (Cl. of Sess.) 48; 26 Digest (Repl.) 525, *851.

Appeal by the pursuer from an interlocutor of the First Division of the Court of Sessions (the LORD PRESIDENT, LORD SKERRINGTON, and LORD CULLEN), reported 1915 S.C. 895, reversing an interlocutor of LORD ANDERSON which granted an issue against both set of defenders.

The facts are set out in the judgment of the Lord Chancellor. The case is only reported as to the common law liability issue.

C. Gallop for the appellant.

D. F. Clyde, and Walter Robinson (both of the Scottish Bar) for the respondents, the highway authority.

W. Watson, K.C., and F. A. Macquisten (both of the Scottish Bar) for the owners of the premises.

LORD BUCKMASTER, L.C.—In this case on July 6, 1914, as the appellant was going down Ramsay Lane, Portobello, he ran his head against a door which was suddenly opened from a house that is in the possession of two of the respondents, Messrs. Binnie and Russell. It appears that this door was a door which opened from a garden of the premises into the road, and the allegation made by the appellant with regard to its use is that it was suddenly opened on the occasion in question, that he was consequently struck violently upon the face, and, I regret to say, suffered grave, and it is suggested by his counsel, in some respects permanent injuries.

The question is, who is responsible for the results of this accident? It is alleged by the appellant that the owners of the premises are responsible, and also the Lord Provost and the magistrates of the city of Edinburgh. So far as the respondents Messrs. Binnie and Russell are concerned, the case against them rests upon this—that they were the owners of the premises, part of which consisted of a

- A door made to open outwards, and that that was the possession of a dangerous structure rendering its owners liable to any person who suffered injury by reason of the door being opened across the highway. It is not suggested anywhere in the condescendence in this case that the door on July 6, 1914, was opened by the respondents, or by anyone in their service; the claim against them begins and ends with the allegation that they were responsible for having premises which, if negligently used, might cause injury to a passer-by. In spite of the industry of counsel for the appellant, it has been impossible to find any authority for such a proposition as that. It is perfectly true that if a man has premises so constructed that they may become a danger to passers-by—as, for example, by having affixed to the premises a projecting lamp, which he negligently allows to get out of repair, so that it falls upon the head of a passenger—he is liable for the accident that results. But that case has no relation to the case where the premises in themselves and apart from their use are perfectly harmless, as in the present instance. The utmost that can be urged by the occupant might be a cause of injury to an innocent passer-by. That is insufficient, in my opinion, to establish any liability against them for the accident that arose. If that be so, the claim against the Lord Provost and magistrates of the city of Edinburgh cannot be established on the ground of their allowing premises to be in a dangerous condition at common law.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—I have very little to add. I agree with the reasons which the noble and learned Lord on the woolsack has given for the motion which he will propose. The appellant seeks to make out his case on a twofold basis. In the first place, he says that at common law he is entitled to succeed against the owners of the property on the ground of their breach of duty in so far as they have kept a door dangerously constructed in their wall, and that he has suffered from the natural and probable consequences of keeping a door in this fashion. But, my Lords, I am far from satisfied that there was any negligence or dereliction of duty at common law on the part of the owners in keeping the door in this fashion. A door so made certainly could have been rightly originally so constructed. In the absence of statutory prohibition there was no reason why the door should not be made opening out on to the highway, the owners either keeping it locked or imposing such injunctions upon those who made use of it as would secure the safe opening. But it appears that in the present case someone who is not named or specified is alleged to have opened this door with undue rashness and rapidity. There is no reason why the door should have been so opened, and, if it has been so opened, then I think the consequences arise, not from the door being of this structure, but from the use which has been made of it by somebody who is not shown to have been acting under the authority of the owners so as to make the maxim respondent superior apply. For that reason I think the case fails its common law footing.

LORD KINNEAR.—I agree entirely with both my noble and learned friends who have preceded me, and I do not think it necessary to add anything to what they have said.

LORD ATKINSON.—I also concur. As to the question of common law, negligence is a breach of duty, and to give a cause of action it must be a duty owed to the pursuer. Now what is the duty here which at common law the owners of these premises owe to the pursuer? There is no duty upon them at common law not to keep premises with a door opening on the street where that door, while unopened, is a perfectly harmless thing. Neither do I think that there is a duty cast upon them owing to a mere passer-by to prevent any person ever opening the door. The peculiarity of this case is that there is no averment that the person who did open the door was a person for whom the owners of the premises were in any way responsible. So that in order to succeed, inasmuch as this door is perfectly harmless if kept closed, the pursuer should show that the defenders owed a duty to him never to allow any person to open it on to the street so that it would be an obstruction. I do not think the common law attaches any such duty to the owner of premises. On these grounds I think there is no cause of action disclosed in these proceedings.

LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.—I agree. In my opinion the appeal fails against both sets of defenders.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: W. Drummond Milliken, for M. Graham Yooll, S.S.C., Edinburgh; Beveridge, Greig & Co., for Sir Thomas Hunter, W.S., Town Clerk, Edinburgh; Wetherfield, Son & Baines, for Hossack & Hamilton, W.S., Edinburgh.

[Reported by W. E. REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

EWING v. BUTTERCUP MARGARINE CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Bankes and Warrington, L.J.J.), April 24, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 Ch. 1; 86 L.J.Ch. 441; 117 L.T. 67; 33 T.L.R. 321; 61 Sol. Jo. 443; 34 R.P.C. 232]

Trade Name—Similarity—Injunction—New company registered under name closely resembling that of existing trader—Likelihood of confusion.

The court has jurisdiction to restrain a person from using a trade name similar to that used by an existing trader if it is calculated to deceive by causing such confusion between the two businesses as is likely to lead persons to conclude that the other trader's business is connected in some way with and is a branch of the existing trader's business, and it is not necessary for the existing trader to establish that his customers have been thereby induced to become customers of the other trader.

Notes. Followed: Albion Motor Car Co., Ltd. v. Albion Carriage and Motor Body Works, Ltd. (1917), 33 T.L.R. 346. Referred: Dutton, Massey & Co. (Liverpool), Ltd. v. Dutton, Massey & Co., Ltd. (1923), 40 R.P.C. 413; Brestian v. Try, [1958] R.P.C. 161.

As to trade names, see 32 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 614 et seq.; and for cases see 43 DIGEST 282 et seq.

Case referred to:

(1) Day v. Brownrigg (1878), 10 Ch.D. 294; 48 L.J.Ch. 173; 39 L.T. 553; 27 W.R. 217; 28 Digest (Repl.) 863, 931.

Also referred to in argument:

Levy v. Walker (1879), 10 Ch.D. 436; 48 L.J.Ch. 273; 39 L.T. 654; 27 W.R. 370; 43 Digest 282, 1122.

Powell v. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co., [1894] A.C. 8; 63 L.J.Ch. 152; 70 L.T. 1; 58 J.P. 296; 10 T.L.R. 84; 6 R. 52; sub nom. Re Powell's Trade Mark, 11 R.P.C. 4, H.L.; 43 Digest 198, 458.

Ouvah Ceylon Estates, Ltd. v. Uva Ceylon Rubber Estates, Ltd. (1910), 103 L.T. 416; 27 T.L.R. 24; 27 R.P.C. 753, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 63, 228.

Hendriks v. Montagu (1881), 17 Ch.D. 638; 50 L.J.Ch. 456; 44 L.T. 879; 30 W.R. 168, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 59, 200.

- A George Outram & Co., Ltd. v. London Evening Newspapers Co., Ltd. (1911), 27 T.L.R. 231; 55 Sol. Jo. 255; 28 R.P.C. 208; 37 Digest 547, 87.
North Cheshire and Manchester Brewery Co. v. Manchester Brewery Co., [1899] A.C. 83; 68 L.J.Ch. 74; 79 L.T. 645; 15 T.L.R. 110, H.L.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 60, 206.

- B Appeal from a decision of ASTBURY, J., in an action in which the plaintiff claimed an injunction restraining the defendants from using or carrying on business under the name of "Buttercup Margarine Co., Ltd." and from using the name "Buttercup" or any other word likely to produce confusion with the plaintiff's business. ASTBURY, J., granted the injunction, and the defendants appealed.

Cunliffe, K.C., and Owen Thompson for the defendants.

- C Frank Russell, K.C., and J. Ricardo for the plaintiff.

LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—This is an appeal from a decision of ASTBURY, J. I agree with his judgment, and, I think, with every passage in it with only one exception. He says that this is a case which is "very near the line." In my opinion, it is a perfectly plain and clear case, not very near the line, but well over the line.

- D The plaintiff has since 1904 been carrying on a business dealing with margarine, tea, and such articles, and he has upwards of 150 shops of his own in which he sells his own goods, including some 50 tons of margarine a week. The name under which he has carried on business is "Andrew Ewing, trading as the Buttercup Dairy Co." The business of the Buttercup Dairy Co. is largely carried on in Scotland, and to some extent in the North of England, but not near London or even the Midlands. It is a business which is extending southwards, and I do not in the least doubt that the Buttercup Dairy Co. will, if so minded, extend this business into the South of England. The defendants are the Buttercup Margarine Co., Ltd., and two directors of the company are added as co-defendants, though this for present purposes does not matter. The company is one which was registered in November, 1916, and, as soon as the plaintiff heard of it, he complained. The defendants have never carried on their business up to the present time; but the application to the court was made promptly and in time, with the result that the learned judge in the court below granted an injunction restraining them from carrying on business under the name of the Buttercup Margarine Co., Ltd. They were at the beginning of the year engaged in building a factory, but up to the present day, they have not made or sold an ounce of margarine.

- G In a case like that, where the plaintiff is the owner of a business which has been established since 1904 and has a turnover of half a million a year, and must be regarded as an old-established business none the less because its actual sphere of operations is mainly in Scotland and the North of England, what should I expect the defendants as honest men or honest representatives of a newly formed company to do? I should expect them to say: "We are very sorry; we were not aware of your existence in Scotland, but as you object to our name, we will change it so as not in any way to interfere with you." Instead of doing that, they assert their right to use the name and file a mass of affidavits in support of their claim to do what they have threatened and continued to do. And they seek to justify the use of their name on the ground that the arm of the court is not long enough to reach a defendant who takes a name similar to that of the plaintiff, unless it can be shown that such name is calculated to deceive in the sense that a person desiring to be a customer of the plaintiff is thereby induced to become a customer of the defendant. And they say that there can be no deception here because they are wholesale dealers while the plaintiff is a retailer; that it is true that they have the fullest possible power under the memorandum and articles of association to carry on a retail business, but that, at the present moment, they have no such intention. I should be very sorry indeed if the jurisdiction of the court should have to be regarded as so limited. No doubt mere confusion due to some acts of the defendants would not give rise to a cause of action. Day v. Brownrigg (1) is a good illustration of that. But I know of no authority, and I can see no principle, which withholds us from preventing injury to the plaintiff in his business as a trader by a confusion which will lead people to conclude that the defendants are really connected in some way with the plaintiff and are carrying on a branch of the plaintiff's business. A

The evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, the bulk of which has been read, is summed-up in the passage in which he says B

"that confusion which will be created in the manner hereinbefore suggested will undoubtedly operate to embarrass me in my business and cause serious injury, damage, and loss thereto."

I cannot bring myself to doubt that what the defendants are threatening and intending to do would affect, and in all probability seriously affect, the plaintiff's business. We can only prophesy, because the action was commenced before the defendants' business was begun. But I cannot bring myself to doubt that serious damage to the credit and prosperity of the plaintiff's business would arise from the confusion caused by the defendants deliberately and wilfully continuing to carry on business under a name so nearly resembling that under which the plaintiff is trading as to be calculated to deceive. In my opinion, this is, as I have already said, a case not on the line, but a case well over the line; and I think the judgment of ASTBURY, J., was perfectly right, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs. C D

BANKES, L.J.—I agree. The plaintiff has been carrying on business for a long time under the style of the Buttercup Dairy Co. and the distinctive feature of that trade name is "Buttercup." The defendants have recently incorporated themselves as a private limited company under the name of the Buttercup Margarine Co., Ltd., and they intend to manufacture margarine under that name and deal with it as wholesale manufacturers under that name. It is not a case in which the defendants have actually commenced manufacturing or trading, and, therefore, one is not dealing with the actual results of their trading, but with the probable or necessary results of their trading under the name which they have adopted. E F

A very large body of evidence has been filed on behalf of the plaintiff, consisting of affidavits by men connected with first-rate companies dealing in the provision trade in a very large way; and all those affidavits are, it seems to me, framed on the assumption that the defendants will manufacture margarine and put it on the market in some way identifying it as the margarine of their manufacture, and it is for that reason that they speak about a confusion in the minds of the public, and a confusion which will lead the public—by which is meant the public who purchase margarine—into the belief that the plaintiff's and the defendants' businesses are one, or that there is some connection between the two. If the court accepts the view put forward by these witnesses, and it seems to me to be the natural view, a case is plainly made out for the injunction. And it is perfectly immaterial for the defendants to say that they are wholesale dealers. What does that matter, if they intend to place their goods on the market as being of their manufacture with the intention that they shall retain their identity until they reach the retail purchasers? Or what does it matter that the business of the plaintiff at the present time is mainly confined to Scotland and parts of the North of England? All that seems to me to be perfectly immaterial. When the defendants put their case before the court, it becomes quite plain that they do intend that their manufactures shall retain their identity, because Sir Thomas Pyne, who makes the first affidavit for the defendants, says that they will sell their goods not in the retail market but in the wholesale market and under a distinctive trade mark or brand not yet determined on, but in no way resembling the defendant company's name. In making that assertion with regard to the G H I

A trade mark or brand, he appears to me to be significantly silent about the name of his company, and it seems to me perfectly impossible to associate the defendant company's name with the manufactured article without producing the impression of which the plaintiff's witnesses speak.

It seems to me, therefore, that, on those materials, the plaintiff has abundantly made out his case, and that the learned judge in the court below was quite justified in coming to the conclusion that the only reasonable anticipation was that, unless the injunction went, there would be the confusion of which the plaintiff's witnesses speak.

WARRINGTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The plaintiff carries on a large retail general provision business under the title of the Buttercup Dairy Co. The defendants were incorporated in November, 1916, and they have a cash capital of £12 10s.—250 preference shares of 1s. each—and have adopted as their registered name the title of the Buttercup Margarine Co., Ltd. Looking at these two names, it seems to me obvious that a trader or customer who had been in the habit of dealing with the plaintiff might well think that the plaintiff had adopted the name of Buttercup Margarine Co., Ltd. as his own name for the purposes of the margarine branch of his business, or for the purposes, if you will, of doing what it is said the defendants are going to do—namely, to make their own margarine instead of buying it in the market. If that be so, it seems to me that the plaintiff has proved enough. He has proved that the defendants have adopted such a name as may lead people who had been dealing with the plaintiff to believe that the defendants' business is a branch of, or associated with, the plaintiff's business. To induce the belief that my business is a branch of another man's business may do that other man damage in various ways. The quality of goods I sell, the kind of business I do, the credit or otherwise which I might enjoy, are all things which may immensely injure the other man who is assumed wrongly to be associated with me, and it is just that kind of injury that what the defendants have done here is likely to occasion. I think, therefore, that the learned judge in the court below was perfectly right.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: D. E. Bowen-Davies; Neve, Beck & Kirby.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

WEBSTER v. WEBSTER

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Rowlatt, J.), February 2, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 1 K.B. 714; 85 L.J.K.B. 691; 114 L.T. 701;
32 T.L.R. 290]Husband and Wife. Action by husband against wife. Injunction. Husband's credit pledged by wife. Claim for injunction to restrain. Competency. Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict., c. 75), s. 12.

A husband cannot obtain an injunction restraining his wife from pledging his credit, for this is an action in tort and is prohibited by s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882.

Notes. Considered: Halton v. Halton, (1916) 2 K.B. 642. Referred: Gottliffe v. Edelston, [1930] 2 K.B. 378.

As to liability for torts committed by one spouse against the other, see 19 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 876-877; and for cases see 27 DIGEST (Repl.) 260 et seq. For the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, see 11 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 799.

Case referred to:

(1) Routh v. Webster (1847), 10 Beav. 561; 9 L.T.O.S. 491; 11 Jur. 701; 50 E.R. 698; 9 Digest (Repl.) 104, 475.

Also referred to in argument:

Walter v. Ashton, [1902] 2 Ch. 282; 71 L.J.Ch. 839; 87 L.T. 196; 51 W.R. 131; 18 T.L.R. 445; 36 Digest (Repl.) 448, 200.

Phillips v. Barnett (1876), 1 Q.B.D. 436; 45 L.J.Q.B. 277; 34 L.T. 177; 40 J.P. 564; 24 W.R. 345; 27 Digest (Repl.) 261, 2110.

Butler v. Butler (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 374; 55 L.J.Q.B. 55; 54 L.T. 591; 34 W.R. 132; 2 T.L.R. 132, C.A.; 27 Digest (Repl.) 202, 1609.

Earl Cowley v. Countess Cowley, [1901] A.C. 450; 70 L.J.P. 83; 85 L.T. 254; 50 W.R. 81; 17 T.L.R. 725, H.L.; 27 Digest (Repl.) 691, 6617.

Action tried by ROWLATT, J., without a jury.

The plaintiff, who was the husband of the defendant, married the defendant in July, 1915, and the parties separated in the following September. After the separation the plaintiff paid the defendant quarterly an allowance of £150 a year. The defendant obtained articles of clothing and jewellery to the value of nearly £1,000 on credit in her husband's name at shops where the husband either had an account or was known. The plaintiff claimed an injunction to restrain the defendant,

"her servants, or agents from pledging or seeking to pledge [his credit] or from incurring any debt or liability in his name, or from doing any act or thing whereby she exposes or may expose the plaintiff to contractual liability or the risk of being sued in respect of such liability."

By s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882:

"Every woman, whether married before or after this Act, shall have in her own name against all persons whomsoever, including her husband, the same civil remedies . . . for the protection and security of her own separate property, as if such property belonged to her as a feme sole, but, except as aforesaid, no husband or wife shall be entitled to sue the other for a tort."

McCardie and R. O'Sullivan for the plaintiff.

J. B. Matthews, K.C., and H. Maddocks, for the defendant.

ROWLATT, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to restrain his wife from pledging his credit. The parties were de facto living apart at the time the matters which gave rise to this action arose, and I do not propose to say a word

A as to whose fault that was. In any view of the causes of the separation it seems to me that the articles in respect of which the wife pledged her husband's credit were out of all reason and entirely beyond any authority she might possibly have had. The question is whether this action is competent. Counsel for the plaintiff contended that the principle of Routh v. Webster (1) could be extended so as to enable a plaintiff to restrain by injunction any person who attempts to

B pledge his credit and thereby bring him into peril of being harassed by litigation. That is the ground upon which the action is put. He further contended that the action could be brought by a husband as well against his wife as against anybody else who wrongfully pledges his credit. Before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, there can be no doubt whatever that no such action as this by a husband against his wife would have been allowed at common law, and counsel for the

C plaintiff has not been able to produce to me any precedent for any action of that kind, or for any action analogous to it, even in equity. I can conceive that there must have been a large number of wives who have committed all sorts of excesses of authority in dealing with their husband's property or otherwise affecting their husband's interest, but no husband seems to have succeeded in getting his wife restrained from behaving in that way. So far as I understand the doctrines of the

D old courts of equity, I do not myself think that they would have extended their relief to cases of that kind not involving considerations of property as between husband and wife. Now we come to the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. Does this Act let in this action by a husband against his wife? It is very difficult to lay one's finger upon the precise words in the Act of 1882 which make it competent for husbands to bring those actions against their wives of which one

E sees examples every day. It is enacted by s. 12 that neither the husband nor the wife shall be entitled to sue the other in tort; but the statement that the husband can bring an action against his wife, to which the proviso as to actions of tort would be an exception, is nowhere to be found.

But it is said by counsel for the plaintiff, and he is probably right that it has always been considered that s. 1 (2), which renders a married woman liable to

F be sued as if she were a feme sole, is wide enough to confer the right of suing her on her husband also, though by s. 12 actions founded in tort were excepted. That brings me to the question whether an action founded on one person assuming to pledge the credit of another without authority is an action in tort. Tort is not a very accurate word, and perhaps it is a pity it is used in an Act of Parliament, but it seems to me that this action is one in tort within the meaning of s. 12

G of the Act of 1882. Leaving out for a moment, the fact that the defendant is the plaintiff's wife, I understand that the ground of the claim against an agent would be that he had been making false statements to other people whereby damage had been and would be caused to the plaintiff. It seems to me that, if that case were made out, damages could be recovered if they had been suffered, because what the defendant had done would be without any justification what-

H ever, and to his knowledge would injured the plaintiff— that is to say, the plaintiff would have a claim for damages in an action for tort. If that is the position in an action against an agent who had acted in this way and so caused damage to the plaintiff, it seems to me that the claim of the plaintiff, before he was damaged, would be an action, quia timet, for an injunction against the commission of an

I act which, if committed, would be a tort, and that therefore he is suing for a tort within the meaning of s. 12. That seems a short answer to the plaintiff's claim. Therefore I do not see my way to granting the claim for an injunction, and there must be judgment for the defendant.

Judgment for defendant.

Solicitors: Crossman, Prichard, Crossman & Block, for Hedley & Thompson, Sunderland; Collyer-Bristow, Curtis, Booth, Birks & Langley.

[Reported by L. H. BARNES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re MACKENZIE & CO., LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Astbury, J.), July 25, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 450; 85 L.J.Ch. 804; 115 L.T. 440; 61 Sol. Jo. 29]

Company—Reduction of capital—Preference shares—Rights fixed by memorandum and articles—No priority as to capital—Fixed preferential dividend on amount paid up—Consent of holders of two-thirds to alterations of rights—Loss of capital—Rateable reduction—Confirmation of reduction.

The memorandum of association of a company provided that the capital should consist of 6,000 preference and 4,000 ordinary shares of £20 each, with the respective rights and privileges specified in the articles of association, and that such rights could be altered with the consent in writing of two-thirds of the issued shares of the class. The articles of association gave a power to the company to reduce its capital in any manner authorised by statute, and art. 62 provided that the preference shares should be called four per cent. cumulative preference shares, and that the holders should be entitled to dividends payable out of the profits at the rate of £4 per cent. per annum on the nominal amount of capital from time to time paid up or credited as paid up, such dividends to be cumulative and to be a first charge on the profits in a winding-up. Article 64 provided that the special rights attached to any class of share should not be altered without the sanction in writing of the holders of two-thirds of the issued shares of the class. The articles required that twenty-one days notice of a meeting of the company should be given, and provided that holders of preference shares were not entitled to vote unless the company made default for six calendar months in payment of the preference dividend. The company, suffering a loss of capital, but owing to the depressed state of the trade in which it was engaged, found that it had capital in excess of its needs and proposed to reduce it. At meetings of the company, attended only by ordinary shareholders, it was resolved to reduce the capital to £83,536 by cancelling some ordinary and preference shares which had never been issued, cancelling capital which had been lost to the extent of £5 on each preference share and each ordinary share which had been issued, and by repaying £3 on each such issued share. Prior to the said meetings, a circular had been sent to preference shareholders stating what was intended and asking for their views. More than a third of the preference shareholders opposed the scheme. They contended that their special rights were affected and that they could not be altered without the sanction in writing of two-thirds of the preference shareholders. The preference shares carried no priority as to repayment of capital. The opposing preference shareholders also contended that (a) although there was no provision in the articles to that effect, the preference shareholders ought to have been summoned to the meetings at which the resolutions were passed and permitted to express their views and (b) the scheme was not just and equitable.

Held: (i) the special rights of the preference shareholders were only those specified in art. 62, and those rights were subject to the right of the company to reduce its capital; and, therefore, their special rights were not altered by the proposed reduction so as to bring art. 64 into operation although in effect the dividends of preference shareholders would be reduced.

(ii) since there was no provision in the articles requiring the preference shareholders to be summoned to the meetings at which they had no right to vote, they had no right to be present, and the scheme was just and equitable.

- A Notes. Considered: Greenhalgh v. Arderne Cinemas, Ltd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 512. Applied: White v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., [1953] 1 All E.R. 40. Referred to: Re Chatterley-Whitfield Collieries, Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 593; Re John Smith's Tadcaster Brewery Co., The Company v. Graham Life Assurance Society, [1953] 1 All E.R. 518.

As to reduction where shares of different classes, see 6 HALSBURY'S LAWS

- B (3rd Edn.) 158 et seq., and cases there cited.

Cases referred to:

(1) Bannatyne v. Direct Spanish Telegraph Co. (1886), 34 Ch.D. 287; 56 L.J.Ch. 107; 55 L.T. 716; 35 W.R. 125; 3 T.L.R. 104, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 151, 886.

- C (2) Re Barrow [Hamatite] Steel Co., [1900] 2 Ch. 846; 69 L.J.Ch. 869; 83 L.T. 397; 16 T.L.R. 569; 9 Mans. 35; affirmed [1901] 2 Ch. 746; 71 L.J.Ch. 15; 85 L.T. 493; 50 W.R. 71; 18 T.L.R. 9; 9 Mans. 35, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 161, 949.

Also referred to in argument:

- D British and American Trustee and Finance Corp'n. v. Cooper, [1894] A.C. 399; 63 L.J.Ch. 425; 70 L.T. 882; 42 W.R. 652; 10 T.L.R. 415; 1 Mans. 256; 6 R. 146, H.L.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 151, 883.

Re Welsbach Incandescent Gas Light Co., Ltd., [1904] 1 Ch. 87; 73 L.J.Ch. 104; 89 L.T. 645; 52 W.R. 327; 20 T.L.R. 122; 11 Mans. 47, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 163, 969.

- E Poole v. National Bank of China, Ltd., [1907] A.C. 229; 76 L.J.Ch. 458; 96 L.T. 889; 23 T.L.R. 567; 51 Sol. Jo. 513; 14 Mans. 218, H.L.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 151, 885.

Ashbury v. Watson (1885), 30 Ch.D. 376; 54 L.J.Ch. 985; 54 L.T. 27; 33 W.R. 882; 1 T.L.R. 639, C.A.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 616, 4101.

Petition.

- F This company was incorporated on Oct. 2, 1900, under the Companies Acts, 1862-1898. The objects of the company were to acquire and carry on the business of wine and spirit merchants carried on by Kenneth Mackenzie and Peter Grant under the firm name of Kenneth Mackenzie & Co. Since the incorporation it had carried on business in London, Jerez, and Oporto.

By cl. 5 of the company's memorandum of association:

- G "The capital of the company is £200,000 divided into 10,000 shares of £20 each, whereof 6000 are 4 per cent. preference shares and 4000 are ordinary shares with the respective rights and privileges specified in the articles of association registered herewith.

Clause 6 was as follows:

- H "Subject to any express provision to the contrary made upon the creation of any class of shares, all or any of the special rights, privileges, and advantages attached to any class may with the sanction in writing of the holders of two-thirds of the issued shares of the class (but shall not without such sanction) be altered, modified, dealt with, or affected in any manner whatsoever subject to the last preceding provision . . . and any share for the time being unissued and any new shares from time to time created may be
- I issued generally on such terms as the company may from time to time by special resolution determine.

The preference shares were original shares and therefore there was no provision in respect of them to the contrary of the provisions in cl. 6.

The following were the material articles of association:

" 59. The company may by special resolution so far modify the conditions contained in the memorandum of association as to do the following things or any of them: . . . (c) Reduce its capital in any manner and with any incident authorised by the statutes, and in particular if at any time any sum of capital paid up upon shares shall be in excess of the wants of the company on the ground that the amount thereof could be borrowed on debentures or otherwise, upon terms which in the opinion of the company or the directors are more advantageous to the company, it shall be lawful for the company to reduce its capital by the amount of such sum, and to pay off the sum to the members, either after or without extinguishing liability to calls in respect thereof and to borrow on debentures or otherwise the amount so paid off, or any part thereof, and to give the members or any of them debentures in satisfaction of the sum so to be paid off or any part thereof.

" Original Preference Shares.

" 62. The shares in the original capital of the company numbered 1 to 6000, both inclusive, shall be called 4 per cent. cumulative preference shares, and the holders thereof shall be entitled to receive out of the profits of the company available for division among the members dividends at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on the nominal amount of the capital from time to time paid up or credited as paid up on the 4 per cent. cumulative preference shares held by them respectively, such dividend to be cumulative and to be payable half-yearly on Jan. 1 and July 1 in each year, and to be a first charge on such profits upon a winding-up of the company.

" 64. All or any of the special rights, privileges, and advantages attached to any class of shares may with the sanction in writing of the holders of two-thirds of the issued shares of the class, but shall not without such sanction, be altered, or modified, dealt with, or affected in any manner whatsoever.

" 68. Twenty-one days' notice at the least (exclusive of the day on which notice is served, or deemed to be served, but inclusive of the day for which the notice is given), specifying the place, the day, and the hour of meeting. And in case of special business the general nature of such business shall be given, in manner hereinafter mentioned, to such members as are, under the provisions hereinafter contained, entitled to receive notice from the company; but the accidental omission to give such notice to, or the non-receipt of such notice by, any member shall not invalidate any resolution passed or proceeding at any such meeting.

" 79. On a show of hands every member personally present and who shall be the holder of an ordinary share or ordinary shares have one vote, and every proxy or attorney for an absent member holding ordinary shares shall (in addition to his vote, if any, as a member) have a vote for each absent member for whom he shall to the satisfaction of the chairman prove that he is the proxy. In case of a poll every member who is the holder of ordinary shares shall have one vote for every ordinary share. Holders of preference shares (other than the said Kenneth Mackenzie) shall not be entitled to vote unless the company make default for six calendar months in payment of the preference dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum. Holders of preference shares (other than the said Kenneth Mackenzie), if entitled to vote at general meetings, shall have one vote for every five preference shares held by them."

The capital of the company paid up amounted to £137,560—viz., 5,300 preference shares of £20 each and 1,578 ordinary shares of £20 each, all fully paid. The preferential dividend was regularly paid, but no dividends had been paid on the ordinary shares since 1912. On a valuation of the assets in 1915 it was found that £34,390 had been lost or was unrepresented by available assets, which was equivalent to £5 per share on the issued capital, and that, after reducing the capital by writing off the sum of £5 in each of the issued preference and ordinary shares, the capital of the company would be in excess

A of the wants of the company, owing to the depressed state of the wine trade, by at least £20,634, equivalent to £3 on each of the said issued shares.

By special resolutions passed and confirmed at extraordinary general meetings of the company by the members entitled to vote thereat respectively and present in person or by proxy, held on Oct. 8, and Nov. 5, 1915, it was resolved that the capital of the company be reduced from £200,000 (divided into 10,000 shares of £20 each, of which 6,000 were four per cent. cumulative preference shares and 4,000 were ordinary shares) to £82,536 divided into 5,300 four per cent. cumulative preference shares of £12 each and 1,578 ordinary shares of £12 each, and that such reduction be effected (i) by cancelling 700 preference shares and 2,422 ordinary shares which had respectively never been issued, and (ii) by cancelling capital which had been lost or was unrepresented by available assets to the extent of £5 per share upon each of the 5,300 preference shares and 1,578 ordinary shares which have respectively been issued, and (iii) by returning to the holders of the said 5,300 preference shares and 1,578 ordinary shares respectively paid up capital to the extent of £3 per share.

The resolutions of Oct. 8 and Nov. 5, 1915, were passed unanimously by the ordinary shareholders, but none of the preference shareholders were either present in person or represented. The confirmatory meeting was convened by the secretary one day short of the notice required by the articles of association.

Prior to the meetings at which the special resolutions were passed a circular, dated Sept. 15, was sent to every preferred shareholder stating precisely what was proposed to be done, and drawing attention to the fact that under the articles the preference shareholders were not entitled to vote at the extraordinary general meeting, but that the directors would be glad to hear whether they approved the scheme or not. Replies to that circular were received, 1,947 of such replies being in favour of the scheme and 2,210 against the scheme. On the petition presented to the court on Feb. 28, 1916, for confirmation of the reduction of capital proposed by the special resolutions of Oct. 8, and Nov. 5, 1915, 1,947 preference shareholders were represented who supported the scheme of reduction and 1,889—i.e., more than one-third of the issued preference shares—were represented who opposed it. The preference shareholders in opposition to the scheme contended they were entitled to have notice of every meeting and attend each meeting. They had no priority as to capital and, so long as their dividends were paid, no voting power under the articles. The preference dividends had been regularly paid, but no dividends had been paid on the ordinary shares since 1912.

The scheme of reduction was opposed on the ground that, having regard to the memorandum of association and to art. 64, the special rights and privileges attached to the preference shares could not be altered or modified without the written sanction of holders of two-thirds of the issued preference shares, which sanction had not been, and on the face of things could not be, obtained. Further, that the scheme was unfair and solely for the benefit of the ordinary shareholders, and that the reduction ought only to be sanctioned on the terms that the preference dividend was increased to $5\frac{1}{3}$ per cent., so that, before the £3 a share was returned, the reduced £15 shares would produce the same dividend as the original £20 shareholders had bargained for.

Frank Russell and W. R. Sheldon for the company.
I J. H. Cunliffe, K.C., and Bryan Farrer for preference shareholders opposing the scheme.

ASTBURY, J.—This is a petition to sanction a reduction of capital from £200,000 to £82,000 odd. The company was incorporated for the purpose of carrying on the business of wine and spirit merchants and shippers, and it has 6,000 four per cent. cumulative preference shares of £20 each and 4,000 ordinary shares of the same denomination as its nominal capital. Of these it has issued 5,300 preference shares and 1,578 ordinary shares, and all these issued shares are fully paid. The company is alleged to have lost capital to the amount of £34,390, and it is proposed to write off £5 from each of the preference and ordinary shares which have been issued and, having done so, to return £3 per share to each of the shareholders as being capital in excess of the present wants of the company. The petition is supported by the whole of the ordinary shareholders, and more than half the preference shareholders appearing on the petition are in favour of the sanction of the court being given to the reduction scheme, but a substantial amount of preference shareholders oppose the scheme on three grounds. First of all, they say that under the constitution of the company their rights are affected, and that, that being so, the matter cannot proceed without the sanction in writing of the holders of two-thirds of the issued preference shares, which having regard to the number who oppose, cannot be obtained. Secondly, the resolutions in favour of the reduction have been passed by the ordinary shareholders, who are the only shareholders entitled under the circumstances to vote, and it is objected that, although not entitled to vote, the preference shareholders ought to have been summoned, and had a right to attend and express their views at the meeting at which the resolutions were passed. Thirdly, it is suggested that the scheme is not a just and equitable one, that a portion of the loss which is alleged may turn out to be temporary having regard to the war, and that, if this is so, the scheme is in favour of the ordinary shareholders and to the disadvantage of the preference shareholders.

With regard to the first point, by cl. 5 of the memorandum the capital of the company is stated as being “£200,000 divided into 10,000 shares of £20 each, whereof 6000 are 4 per cent. preference shares and 4000 ordinary shares with the respective rights and privileges specified in the articles of association registered herewith.”

Clause 6 of the memorandum provides that:

“Subject to any express provision to the contrary made upon the creation of any class of shares [all the preference shares that I have to deal with were originally created] all or any of the special rights, privileges, and advantages attached to any class may with the sanction in writing of the holders of two-thirds of the issued shares of the class (but shall not without such sanction) be altered, modified, dealt with, or affected.”

That, I think refers to the rights and privileges referred to in cl. 5 of the memorandum as being defined by the articles. Under art. 64 it is again provided that “all or any of the special rights and privileges attached to any class of shares [the rights referred to in cl. 5 of the memorandum] may with the sanction in writing of the holders of two-thirds of the issued shares of that class . . . be altered or modified,” and it is necessary to turn to art. 62 to discover what are the special rights, privileges, and advantages attached to the preference shareholders as a class. That article provides that the preference shares shall be called four per cent. cumulative preference shares and the holders shall be entitled to receive out of the profits of the company available for division among the members dividends at the rate of four per cent. per annum on the nominal amount of the capital. Then the words are, “from time to time paid up or credited as paid up” thereon, “such dividend to be cumulative . . . and to be a first charge on such profits” in a winding-up. By art. 59 of the original articles it is provided that the company may by special resolution reduce its capital in any manner authorised by statute, and by art. 79 it is provided that, except under circumstances which have not arisen, the ordinary shareholders alone shall have the right of voting at the meeting of the company. Therefore the result of the memorandum and articles shortly is this: that, subject to the right of this company to reduce its capital by the votes of the ordinary shareholders in any manner sanctioned by the statute, these preference shares are to be of the denomination of £20 each, and

- A the special right, privilege, and advantage which is attached to those shares is a cumulative four per cent. preference dividend on the amount of capital from time to time paid up or credited as paid up. It is contended that the company has no power to reduce its capital, if any of the preference shares are included in the reduction without the consent of two-thirds of the issued shares of that class. I do not think that that is the right construction to place on these articles.
- B In my judgment the fair and proper construction of these articles is that the special rights, privileges, and advantages of the preference shareholders are those, and those only stated, in art. 62, which is confined to the right to a cumulative preferential dividend on the amount of capital from time to time paid up or credited as paid up, and that that is without prejudice to the rights of the company, as provided in its articles, to reduce its capital in any way
- C provided for by the Act, and provided that that reduction obtains the sanction of the court. Before leaving the first point I may mention that a number of authorities have been cited, which I do not propose to go through in detail; but where there are different classes of shares it has been held many times that the loss on a reduction in respect of loss ought to fall on those who would bear it in a winding up (see Bannatyne v. Direct Spanish Telegraph Co. (1)), and the view has been expressed by KAY, J., and, I think, by other judges, that prima facie where there are ordinary shares and preference shares having no preferential right to capital, a reduction of capital ought to fall on both sets of shares equally. Later cases, however, have shown that a scheme is not necessarily one that the court will not sanction if the loss, for good reasons, is made not to fall rateably on the different sets of shares. The fact that preference shares are by the memorandum stated to be so many pounds per share with a preference therein mentioned has never, that I know of, been relied on as a reason for refusing, on that ground simpliciter, the sanction to a reduction of capital involving the preference shares, although, as COZENS-HARDY, J., stated in Re Barrow [Hematite] Steel Co. (2), where the loss is not satisfactorily proved and no good reason is shown for a reduction of capital, the preference shareholders are entitled to object to it as being unfair to them and unduly in favour of the ordinary stockholders. In the present case I will say a word about that under the third heading.
- E
- F

The second objection taken by the respondents is that the preference shareholders have not been summoned to the meetings at which the resolutions for reduction of capital were passed, although it is admitted they had no right to vote at the meetings. Prior to the meetings which were held on Oct. 8 and

- G Nov. 5 last year, a circular dated Sept. 15 was sent to every single preference shareholder stating precisely what it was proposed to do, and drawing the shareholder's attention to the fact that under the articles the preference shareholders had no vote at the extraordinary general meeting, but that the directors would be glad to hear whether they approved this scheme or not. In answer to that circular replies were received from every single preference shareholder,
- H and those replies amounted to 1,947 in favour of the scheme and 2,210 against the scheme, whereas at this present hearing in court 1,947 are represented in favour of the scheme and 1,889 against it. Under the circumstances I think, in the first place, that there is no provision under the articles that the preference shareholders shall be summoned to a meeting at which they are not entitled to vote; and, secondly, even if they were so, in the present case each preference
- I shareholder has had a full statement laid before him of exactly what was proposed to be done at the meeting, and their views have been obtained accordingly.

Thirdly, and lastly, it is objected that this scheme is not fair on its merits for, I think, two principal reasons. There is a small sum owing from German and Austrian debtors which the directors not unnaturally think they are not likely to recover; a number of stocks have fallen in value, it is believed permanently, and those two sums together form something like one-seventh of the loss which is proposed to be taken into account in the reduction. The main loss has arisen from an obviously permanent loss of assets, and on the whole, and on the evidence that is put before me, I do not see any sufficient ground for holding that this is not a just and equitable scheme, sanctioned as it is by the whole of the ordinary shareholders and by substantially half of the preference shareholders. The reasons for and against the scheme on this head are contained in two letters, one dated Oct. 4, 1915, from Messrs. Brownlie & Co., to the secretary, the answer being on Oct. 15 of the same year from the secretary of the company to the writers of the first letter. I do not propose to read those documents through, but, taking those and the evidence into consideration as best I can, I see no sufficient reason for holding that the persons entitled to vote for a reduction of capital in this company have not arrived at a scheme which is fair and just under the circumstances.

Solicitors: Crosley & Burn; Kekewich, Smith & Kaye, for Brownlie, Watson & Co.; Walter J. Payne.

[Reported by G. P. LANGWORTHY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

JONES v. LEWIS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Viscount Reading, C.J., Ridley and Rowlatt, J.J.), April 18, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 117; 86 L.J.K.B. 782;
117 L.T. 127; 81 J.P. 131]

Coal Mine—Offence—Match found in miner's possession in mine—Miner not searched before entering mine—Competency of prosecution—Coal Mines Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 35 (1).

The Coal Mines Act, 1911, s. 35 (1), imposes an absolute prohibition on any person in a mine having in his possession a lucifer match or other apparatus for producing a light or spark, Held, therefore, in proceedings for an offence under that subsection, it was not necessary to show that the person concerned had been searched under the provisions of that section.

Notes. For s. 35 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, see now the Mines and Quarries Act, 1954, ss. 66 and 67.

As to contraband and smoking materials in a mine, see 26 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 676; and for cases see 34 Digest 742. For the Mines and Quarries Act, 1954, ss. 66, 67, see 34 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 567, 568.

Case Stated by justices for the county of Glamorgan.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Aberdare, Glamorgan, on Aug. 30, 1916, the appellant preferred an information against the respondent, charging that, on June 13, 1916, in the parish of Aberdare, in the county of Glamorgan, being a person employed in the Tower Colliery, Hirwain, he unlawfully committed a breach of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, in that he had a match in his possession in the mine. The following facts were proved or admitted:—The appellant was the manager of the Tower Colliery, Hirwain. The respondent was a haulier employed at the colliery, and was on June 13, 1916, working on the day shift which commenced at 7 a.m. On that day some time after 9 a.m., the appellant, in company with the under-manager and two workmen, commenced searching men employed below ground in the mine under the provisions of s. 35 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911. About 10 a.m. the appellant met the respondent at the double

A parting bringing out a full tram of coal, and searched his waistcoat and trousers, but found no lucifer match, cigar, pipe, or any contrivance for smoking therein. The appellant then asked the respondent where his coat was, to which the respondent replied that it was at the top of No. 3 Dip, and pointed it out hanging on a post about ten yards away. Thereupon the appellant proceeded to search the coat and found a match in the right-hand pocket thereof. Eight other
B hauliers had frequently passed the top of No. 3 Dip between 7 a.m. and 10 a.m., during which time the respondent had been going backwards and forwards with trams. The appellant himself had been searched by two workmen before meeting the respondent. On the same day, the respondent searched himself before going underground, and left his pipe at the locking station. He had found no match on his person when he left the station. After going in he took
C off his coat and hung it up in No. 3 Dip. At the colliery, ten per cent. of the workmen were searched every morning by the under-manager or the fireman. The appellant searched occasionally. The person appointed in writing to make such searches at the colliery was the fireman.

It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the search was unauthorised, inasmuch as the respondent was not searched before he commenced work,
D and the appellant was not the proper person to search. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that he, as the manager of the mine, had the right to search.

The justices found as a fact that the match was discovered by the appellant in the respondent's coat pocket at about 10 a.m. on June 13. The learned stipendiary magistrate for the Division of Miskin Higher, who sat with two of
E the justices on the hearing of the information, held as a matter of law that the appellant did not conform to the provisions and regulations of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, because (a) he did not cause the respondent to be searched before he commenced work for the purpose of ascertaining whether he had a match in his possession, nor immediately after entering the mine; and (b) the search was not made by the fireman, the person authorised in writing to search at the F colliery, and, consequently, that the respondent could not properly be convicted on the evidence before the justices of having a match in his possession. The information was dismissed, and the appellant now appealed.

By the Coal Mines Act, 1911, s. 35:

G “ (1) In any mine or part of a mine in which safety lamps are required by the Act or the regulations of the mine to be used, no person shall have in possession any lucifer match nor any apparatus of any kind for producing a light or spark except so far as may be authorised for the purpose of shot firing or relighting lamps by an order made by the Secretary of State, or any cigar, cigarette, pipe, or contrivance for smoking. (2) The manager of a mine in which, or in any part of which, safety lamps are required by this
H Act or by the regulations of the mine to be used, shall, for the purpose of ascertaining before the persons employed below ground in the mine or in the part of the mine, as the case may be, commence work whether they have in their possession any lucifer match or such apparatus as aforesaid, or cigar, cigarette, pipe, or contrivance for smoking, cause either all those persons, or such of them as may be selected on a system approved by the
I inspector of the division, to be searched in the prescribed manner after or immediately before entering the mine or that part of the mine. (3) No person shall search any workman in pursuance of this section, unless he has previously given an opportunity to some two workmen employed in the mine to search himself, and no lucifer match, or such apparatus as aforesaid, and no cigar, cigarette, pipe, or contrivance for smoking, has been found on him. (4) Any person who refuses to allow himself to be searched in accordance with the foregoing provision shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall not be allowed to enter the mine or the part of the mine, as the case may be and any person who, on being searched, is found to have in his possession any of the articles prohibited under this section, shall be guilty of an offence against this Act."

Disturnal, K.C., and Lincoln Reed for the appellant.

Compston, K.C., and Clive Lawrence for the respondent.

VISCOUNT READING, C.J.—As the Case must be remitted to the justices and there may be a question as to further evidence, I do not propose to discuss its merits. The Case is stated on the point of law that the justices came to the conclusion that, notwithstanding that a match was found in the coat pocket of the respondent who was employed in the mine, no offence had been committed for the reason that the appellant had not caused the respondent to be searched before he commenced work, and because the search was not made by the person properly authorised to conduct the search. In my view, neither of those points is relevant to the matter before the justices. The justices, apparently, have come to the conclusion that, because of the words in s. 35 (4) of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, the offence under s. 35 has not been committed unless the search has been properly made in accordance with the Act. In my view, that is not a correct reading of the section. Subsection (1) of s. 35 makes it an offence for a person in a mine to have in his possession a lucifer match or any apparatus for producing a light or spark excepting so far as may be authorised in certain circumstances. In this case, the sole question is whether, having the match in the respondent's coat pocket, which is prima facie evidence that it was in his possession, is sufficient to constitute the offence. The justices find the fact that it was in his coat pocket, but, for reasons that they have given, believing that there were conditions precedent to the commission of the offence which were not fulfilled, they refused to convict. They were wrong in that, and, therefore, the case must go back with our view as to the law. It is right to say that the section, particularly sub-s. (4), may have caused some doubt in the minds of the justices; but, on examining the whole of the Act, it is quite clear that it is an offence to infringe the provisions of sub-s. (1) without regard to the other subsections of s. 35, and, by virtue of s. 103, the offence may be charged under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts.

It has been argued that the justices have not found that the match was in the respondent's possession, although they have said that it was in his coat; and it is suggested that somebody may have put it into the respondent's coat, and that we ought to give the opportunity of having it raised if the respondent wishes to do so. We leave that point open. It will be a matter of evidence for the justices to consider. We express no opinion on it as we have not the evidence before us. Therefore, the case must go back to the justices with this intimation of our view as to the law.

RIDLEY, J.—I agree. The justices must convict if they find that in fact the respondent was in possession of a match within the mine.

ROWLATT, J.—I am of the same opinion. The point is of some importance. By s. 35 (1) of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, the possession of a match, amongst other things, in a mine is absolutely prohibited. By virtue of ss. 75, 101 and 103 of the Act, a contravention of that provision becomes an offence punishable on summary conviction. There is nothing in the Act to make it a condition precedent of such a prosecution that the discovery of the match should have been due to a search. The words in s. 35 (4),

"any person who on being searched, is found to have in his possession any of the articles prohibited under this section, shall be guilty of an offence," are introduced to show that the person is searched under that subsection before he goes into the mine. The consequences of finding the article on him are not limited to preventing him entering the mine, but he is also to be liable to

- A a conviction. It is said, and perhaps rightly—I have not gone fully into the matter—that this search was authorised. That has nothing whatever to do with it. It is a very widely held fallacy that, if evidence is obtained against an accused person by some means which might have been resisted, no conviction can follow. There is no greater fallacy. Whether a collateral wrong has been committed is another matter. If there is admissible evidence of the facts which constitutes
- B guilt, there is no difficulty about the matter at all.

Case remitted.

Solicitors: Bell, Brodrick & Gray, for C. & W. Kenshole & Prosser, Aberdare; Smith, Rundell & Dods, for Morgan, Bruce & Nicholas, Pontypridd.

[Reported by J. A. SLATER, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

D

GREAT CENTRAL RAIL. CO. v. HEWLETT

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Parker of Waddington, Lord Sumner and Lord Wrenbury), July 4, 6, 28, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 A.C. 511; 85 L.J.K.B. 1705; 115 L.T. 349; 32 T.L.R. 707; 60 Sol. Jo. 678; 14 L.G.R. 1015]

E

Negligence—Statutory powers—Exercise—Power to “maintain” obstruction in highway—Obstruction becoming dangerous owing to war-time lighting restrictions—Liability of recipient of power.

F

By a private Act a railway company was empowered to “maintain” certain posts which had been erected by them in the highway leading into a station yard and, when necessary, to renew and replace them in the site and position. No renewal or replacement had been necessary before April 13, 1915, when the respondent, while driving his cab on the highway, collided with one of the posts and suffered damage. At the time the lighting of the highway had been considerably reduced owing to the street lighting restrictions in force during the 1914–18 war.

G

Held: a person clothed with a statutory power to do an act must in doing it exercise reasonable care to prevent injury to others, but in the present case the railway company was empowered, not to do an act, but merely to maintain something which was already in the highway; their duty being merely to leave things as they were, they had done so, and, in doing so, they could not be said to be negligent; the fact that the danger arose in circumstances which excused or justified the company in not lighting the post was irrelevant.

H

Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks Co. (1) (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 462, applied.

Geddis v. Proprietors of Bann Reservoir (2) (1878), 3 App. Cas. 430, distinguished.

I

Notes. Distinguished: Morrison v. Sheffield Corpn., ante p. 393. Considered: Sheppard v. Glossop Borough Corpn., [1921] All E.R. Rep. 61; Greenwood v. Central Service Co., Ltd., [1940] 3 All E.R. 389; East Suffolk Rivers Catchment Board v. Kent, [1940] 4 All E.R. 527. Applied: Lyus v. Stepney Borough Council, [1940] 4 All E.R. 463. Considered: Fox v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne City Council, [1941] 2 All E.R. 563; Fisher v. Ruislip-Northwood U.D.C., [1945] 2 All E.R. 458; Law v. Railway Executive (1949), 65 T.L.R. 288. Referred: Polkinghorn v. Lambeth Borough Council, [1938] 1 All E.R. 339; Wodehouse v. Levy, [1940] 4 All E.R. 14; Foster v. Gillingham Corpn., [1942] 1 All E.R. 304; Knight v. Sheffield Corpn., [1942] 2 All E.R. 411; Oakes v. Minister of War

Transport (1944), 60 T.L.R. 319; Wilson v. Kingston-on-Thames Corpn., [1948] 2 All E.R. 780; Baxter v. Stockton-on-Tees Corpn., [1958] 2 All E.R. 675.

As to liability for negligence in exercising statutory powers, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 695-699, and for cases see 38 Digest (Repl.) 6 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks Co. (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 462; 55 L.J.Q.B. 304; 55 L.T. 309; 50 J.P. 756; 34 W.R. 559; 2 T.L.R. 597, C.A.; 38 Digest (Repl.) 41, 213.
- (2) Geddis v. Proprietors of Barn Reservoir (1878), 3 App. Cas. 430, H.L.; 38 Digest (Repl.) 16, 64.
- (3) Manley v. St. Helens Canal and Rail. Co. (1858), 2 H. & N. 840; 27 L.J. Ex. 159; 6 W.R. 297; 157 E.R. 346; 38 Digest (Repl.) 34, 174.
- (4) Fisher v. Prowse, Cooper v. Walker (1862), 2 B. & S. 770; 31 L.J.Q.B. 212; 6 L.T. 711; 26 J.P. 613; 8 Jur. N.S. 1208; 121 E.R. 1258; 26 Digest (Repl.) 277, 70.
- (5) R. v. Pease (1832), 4 B. & Ad. 30; 1 Nev. & [M.K.B.] 690; 1 Nev. & M.M.C. 535; 2 L.J.M.C. 26; 110 E.R. 366; 38 Digest (Repl.) 39, 205.
- (6) Vaughan v. Taff Vale Rail. Co. (1860), 5 H. & N. 679; 29 L.J.Ex. 247; 2 L.T. 394; 24 J.P. 453; 6 Jur. N.S. 899; 8 W.R. 549; 157 E.R. 1351; Ex.Ch.; 38 Digest (Repl.) 13, 54.

Appeal by the defendant company from an order of the Court of Appeal affirming an order made by DARLING, J., in an action tried by him with a special jury.

Sir John Simon, K.C., Gordon Hewart, K.C., and Barrington-Ward for the appellants.

Jowitt for the respondent.

The House took time for consideration.

July 28, 1916. The following opinions were read.

LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON. The facts of this case are simple, and the question for determination is a question of law only.

By the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire (Extension to London, &c.) Act, 1893, the railway company, now known as the Great Central Rail. Co., obtained power to construct the Marylebone railway station with the approaches thereto and certain ancillary powers with reference to the construction of new roads and some degree of interference with existing roads, but it was provided by s. 91 that the company should, unless otherwise agreed between the company and the London County Council and vestry of the parish of St. Marylebone, leave open for public use the roadways and open space between the Marylebone Road and the south front of the company's passenger station buildings as shown on the plan signed by Sir Richard Paget, the chairman of the committee of the House of Commons to whom the Bill for the Act was referred. Among the roadways shown on the signed plan was an old roadway known as Melcombe Place, the whole area of which ought, according to the provisions of s. 91, to have been left open to the public. Nevertheless, the company, without obtaining the necessary consents, at some time prior to 1901, for the more convenient management of their station, erected in Melcombe Place certain gate posts from which collapsible steel gates could, when deemed advisable, be run out across the roadway, so as to close the entrance therefrom to the station yard. In so doing the company unlawfully obstructed the roadway and created a public nuisance. Subsequently, however, by s. 31 of the Great Central Railway Act, 1902, it was (inter alia) provided that, notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in s. 91 of the earlier Act, the company might maintain the gate posts and gates in question, and might from time to time, when necessary, renew and replace the same in the same site and position, but such gates should be at all times kept open save and except in times of

A emergency, and so that the company should not close the same without giving the notices therein specified. The effect of s. 31 of the Act of 1902 was undoubtedly to convert what had theretofore been an unlawful obstruction to the highway, and, therefore, a public nuisance, into something the existence of which was perfectly legal and could in itself give rise to no right of action whether based on nuisance or otherwise.

B In the early hours of April 13, 1915, the respondent, while driving his cab from Melcombe Place into the station yard collided with one of the posts in question, and sustained damage the amount of which has been agreed at £50. In the action in which this appeal arises, the respondent sought to recover for this damage from the railway company on the ground, first, that the company had been guilty of negligence, and, secondly, that the posts amounted to a
C nuisance on the highway. It was admitted that the posts were, at the time of the collision, in precisely the same condition as when the Act of 1902 was passed. So far, therefore, as it was based on nuisance the respondent's claim was untenable and was not insisted on. The action turned on the question of negligence only. The negligence alleged was the omission of the company
D (i) to illuminate the posts to a degree sufficient to enable the respondent to avoid a collision; (ii) to paint the posts white so as to render them more visible; (iii) to board up the trellis work so that the obstacle could not be seen through; and (iv) to take precautions to warn persons using the highway of the existence of the obstacle. It was proved that the company had done none of these things. If, therefore, as held by DARLING, J., and the Court of Appeal (114 L.T. 713),
E the company were under a duty to take such steps as might from time to time be reasonable for the protection of the public against collision with the posts, it was a question for the jury whether the company ought reasonably under the circumstances to have done any of the things the omission to do which was relied on as constituting negligence, and the appeal must fail. If, on the other hand, your Lordships are of opinion that the company were under no such duty, the appeal must succeed.

F It is undoubtedly a well-settled principle of law that when statutory powers are conferred they must be exercised with reasonable care, so that if those who exercise them could by reasonable precautions have prevented an injury which has been occasioned and was likely to be occasioned by their exercise, damages for negligence may be recovered. To bring this principle into play in the present
G case the company must be shown to have been exercising a statutory power, the exercise of which was likely to occasion and did occasion the collision. The only statutory power which the company can be said to have been exercising is the power to maintain the posts conferred by s. 31 of the Act of 1902. What is the meaning of the word "maintain" as used in this section? Negatively it relieves the company from any obligation which might otherwise have existed to remove the posts. Positively it enables the company to do what is necessary to keep
H the posts there. It is only in its negative aspect that the company can be said to have been exercising this power. It has, in fact, done nothing at all.

I Is the principle relied on really applicable under these circumstances? In my opinion it is not. It seems to me that for its application the company must be doing something involving risk to others without taking reasonable precautions to obviate such risk. Here the risk arises not from what the company is doing, but from the existence of the gate posts legalised by the Act, coupled with the diminution of light necessitated by the exigencies of the war. It is reasonably certain that the legislature was, under the circumstances which prevailed when the Act was passed, satisfied that there was no appreciable risk to the public; otherwise the legalisation of the obstruction without expressly providing precautions to obviate the risk would be inexplicable. The change of circumstances cannot be relevant on any question of construction, and, in my opinion, the Act does not impose on the company any such obligation as suggested by the respondent, nor can any such obligation be based on the principle relied on.

Turning to the authorities cited in argument, your Lordships will find that two only have any bearing on the point for decision. The first is Manley v. St. Helens Canal and Rail. Co. (3). In that case a canal company having, by their special Act, power to make a canal, cutting across a public highway, and to carry the highway over the canal by means of a convenient bridge, erected for the purpose a swivel bridge which had to be opened whenever boats were passing up or down the canal, thereby causing on each occasion a dangerous gap in the highway. Subsequently, the company obtained another special Act which recited that the works authorised by the earlier Act had been completed and authorised the company to maintain the same and conferred on all persons the right to navigate the canal with boats for commercial purposes. A boatman opened the bridge to allow the passage of his boat along the canal, and the plaintiff's husband having fallen into the gap thus formed, an action was brought against the company for negligence. The action succeeded, but the reasons given by the judges differ. POLLOCK, C.B., and MARTIN, B., held that the original obligation of the company was to make and maintain a sufficient bridge, and that this obligation to maintain was not discharged by maintaining a bridge which, however sufficient 100 years ago, had, having regard to the altered circumstances, ceased to be sufficient for the public protection. The recital in the second Act did not operate to alter the company's obligations. WATSON, B., on the other hand, thought that, even admitting that the company had discharged their original obligation in making a sufficient bridge, they were liable for negligence in not taking precautions to prevent the bridge being used to the public danger. The bridge, he thought, ought to have been lighted and watched by the company. CHANNELL, B., was also of this opinion. As the bridge was liable to be opened, he assumed (he said) that the company were bound to take some precautions with reference to it. Perhaps there was no obligation to make a fixed bridge, but if the company made a swivel bridge there supervened on the statutory right a common law obligation to accompany the bridge with all necessary surrounding protection. In my opinion, apart from the diversity of opinion among the judges, this case is not really in point. The bridge erected was such that it must create danger to the public by causing a gap in the highway every time it was opened for traffic. It was not a work expressly authorised or sanctioned by the legislature. The case, therefore, cannot be used as an authority for the proposition that a mere power to maintain what the legislature has expressly sanctioned involves any obligation towards the public.

The second case to which we have been referred is Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks Co. (1). There the defendants, pursuant to a statutory power, had fixed a fire plug in a highway. The work was done without any negligence and in a proper workmanlike manner, the top being left level with the surface of the highway. By reason of the subsequent wearing away of the highway, there came a time when the fire plug projected some half inch above the surface. The plaintiff fell over the plug and was injured. It was held by the Court of Appeal, consisting of LORD ESHER and LINDLEY and LOPES, L.JJ., that, the accident not being due to any want of repair in the plug, the defendants were under no liability. The rights of the public were not greater than they would have been if the road had been dedicated with the plug already there: Fisher v. Prowse (4). This case appears to me to be directly in point, and I see no reason for dissenting from the conclusion come to by the Court of Appeal. I am of opinion, therefore, that the appeal ought to be allowed.

LORD SUMNER.—This appeal is about a post in the middle of a road outside the appellants' Marylebone terminus, into which one night the respondent managed to drive his cab. He was driving at six or seven miles an hour, though it was so dark that "he could not see the post until he hit it." The whole question is whether s. 31 of the Great Central Railway Act, 1902, impliedly obliges the railway company to make their gate posts visible to members of the public by A some reasonable means or other in spite of the extreme darkness ordained by the Lighting Reduction Orders. It is clear that no such obligation is imposed in express terms.

If the case were not governed by the statute, the inquiry would have been whether the structures therein mentioned, including, as seems to be agreed, the post in question, had or had not been erected before the thoroughfare, in which they stand, was dedicated for the use of the public as a highway. If they had, the respondent must have taken that highway as he found it: if they had not, his action was undefended. In neither event would the appellants' care or want of care have been material. The question would have been simply nuisance or no nuisance, though in the former event the plaintiff's own negligence would have afforded a defence, if he were proved to have fouled the post through his own carelessness. How, then, does a question of negligence arise on the statute which could not have arisen at common law? The area in question was virtually dedicated as a public thoroughfare by the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway (Extension to London, &c.) Act, 1893, s. 91. Thereafter the appellants erected structures there, and in 1901 they accepted the decision of BIGHAM, J., that these structures were a public nuisance. In 1902 they obtained the enactment of s. 31 in question. That section legalised their nuisance and relieved them of all obligation to abate it. It simply gave permission to maintain the gates and posts and from time to time, when necessary, to renew and replace the structures. It was admitted (rightly, I doubt not) that, if repairs or renewals become necessary, they must be executed with reasonable diligence, and that in executing them due care must be used for the protection of members of the public, but up to the time of this accident no necessity for renewal or replacement, whatever those terms may include, appears to have arisen. The railway company were not the lighting authority for this area, nor were they under any express obligation connected with the lighting. Under the Lighting Reduction Orders the lighting had been so reduced that the posts were practically invisible, and so the appellants had left them. It is not suggested that the lighting authority were in default; the case is one in which one party lawfully maintains in a highway something which is capable of becoming dangerous to the public unless another party takes steps to avert that danger, and where those steps have not been taken, and so it is analogous to Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks (1), a case which, unfortunately, was not brought to the attention of the Court of Appeal. Whether, as in that case, the danger becomes operative through negligent omission by the party who ought to have averted it, or, as here, it becomes operative under circumstances that excuse or justify that omission, cannot be material to the obligations of the party who lawfully maintains the structures in the highway. In either case he is free. I think that decisions on the liability of those who maintain structures adjoining a highway which become dangerous to those who use it are not now in point. As little are the cases where undertakers invite the public to enter and use their undertaking, whether for reward or not, and are in consequence held bound to see that it is free from traps and hidden dangers.

The analogy which led the Court of Appeal to decide for the respondent was that of R. v. Pease (5), Vaughan v. Taff Vale Rail. Co. (6), and Geddis v. Proprietors of Bann Reservoir (2). With great respect I think it was inapplicable on two grounds. In the first place, those are cases where the legislature had authorised undertakers to do overt acts which in the natural course of things were likely to prejudice members of the public. The present is a case in which, without any action at all, the respondents were authorised to leave something undone—namely, the abatement of what previously had been a nuisance. They were merely to maintain a status quo, the natural results of which could not prejudice anybody, for, if the place was lighted, no one ought to run into the place at all, since he could see it, and if, owing to fog for example, it was in darkness, no one ought to be injured by the post, since he had no business to drive so fast as to be damaged if he did run into it. In the second place, in such cases the authority in question is given in general terms; it is, for example, authority to work railways and to run railway trains in their discretion, hence it is reasonable to infer that the legislature, in using such general terms, and in authorising for the undertakers' benefit what would otherwise be a nuisance, meant them to exercise their authority with reasonable care and not without it. Here the authority is specific and precise: the thing authorised is not an activity at all: the section leaves the railway company no selection or choice. It tells them to let things alone, and I do not think that in 1902 anyone could have formulated in intelligible terms the alleged duty to use care in regard to maintaining these posts in this road, or have given a concrete instance of the danger anticipated that would not have seemed fantastic. I am, accordingly, of opinion that this appeal ought to be allowed and that the judgments of both courts below should be set aside and judgment should be entered for the defendants. The railway company, seeking a decision on this Act of Parliament, forbore to press contributory negligence at the trial and at your Lordships' Bar, and disclaimed any order in their favour either as to costs or to repayment of the damages which the plaintiff had recovered. The appeal should, therefore, be allowed without costs.

LORD WRENBURY.—The respondent has recovered against the Great Central Rail. Co. judgment for damages for negligence. The company appeal. The whole question is whether in the matter in which the respondent alleges that the appellants were negligent they owed any duty. In my opinion, they did not.

The post with which the plaintiff came in collision was erected by the appellants some time before 1900. It was an obstruction in the highway. An action was brought against the appellants in 1900, and in that action it was decided that the post was an illegal obstruction. In 1902 the appellants obtained an Act which authorised them to maintain the post and from time to time when necessary to renew and replace it in the same site and position. The authority was not an authority to do anything actively (except as regards renewal and replacement upon which nothing turns), but a mere authority to leave things alone. The word "maintain" in the section means no more than "not remove." The result is that that which theretofore was an illegal obstruction became a legal obstruction. For greater accuracy the word "obstruction" (which implies something which improperly interferes with the rights in the highway) ought to be dropped. The post was no longer an obstruction to the highway. The legal highway was a road in which there stood a post. Whoever used the highway must use it as a highway with a post in it.

On a dark rainy night the plaintiff drove his taxi-cab into the post and suffered injury. Owing to the lighting (or more accurately the darkening) regulations due to the war the street was insufficiently lighted. The appellants were not the lighting authority. They owed no duty in that character. But they were negligent, so the plaintiff contends, because in maintaining the post they were laying a trap in the highway, or because they did not take reasonable steps to disclose the presence of the post, say, by painting it white or putting a red lamp upon it.

No one disputes the general proposition that a person who is clothed with a statutory power to do an act must in doing it exercise reasonable care to prevent injury to others, but in the present case the statutory authority was not to do an act, but to leave things as they were. In 1902 the post was in the highway illegally. The statute of 1902 said the statutory authority might leave it where it was. It thus became a post in the highway legally. The authority was not an authority to be active, but to be passive. The Act merely released an obligation—namely, the obligation not to obstruct the highway. From that state of fact no duty flows. If there be duty or authority to do an act it is possible to be negligent in doing it. If there be duty or authority to do or to abstain from doing an act according to circumstances it is possible to be negligent in abstaining from doing it. But if the duty or authority be simply not to do an act—merely to leave things as they are—it is impossible to be negligent in not doing anything.

A The last is the present case. It is said, however, that "maintain" is not merely passive, but implies also something active, viz., doing acts of maintenance. This may be true—but it is not necessary to inquire whether it is or not. For the words of the statute, "renew and replace," plainly authorise affirmatively such acts to be done. I agree that in acts of renewal or replacement the appellants might be guilty of negligence. But they have done no such acts. Their only act has been

B to leave the post as it was.

I do not find it necessary to review the authorities which were cited. The respondent principally relied on Mauley v. St. Helens Canal and Rail. Co. (3). The authority there was to do an act—namely, to make a bridge. The company made a swivel bridge which was dangerous, because when opened it left a chasm in the highway. A subsequent Act empowered the company to maintain the

C bridge. It was argued that the result was a legislative declaration that this was a perfect bridge and that the company owed no duty to guard against danger when the bridge was open. CHANNELL, B., supplied the answer, namely, that, as it was a bridge liable to be opened, the company were bound to take precautions against danger when it was opened. There is no similar consideration in the case of this post. The present case is like that of the fire plug in Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks

D Co. (1), as to which LINDLEY, L.J., said (17 Q.B.D. at p. 469):

"The plug itself was not out of repair. There was nothing the matter with it. It had not grown: it had not changed in any way."

There is a passage just below that with which I entirely agree and which may well conclude this present opinion (ibid. at p. 470):

E "It is said that at common law, if anyone maintains something in a highway he must take care that it is not a nuisance and does not obstruct the traffic. I think that, as a universal proposition, that is not true, as is shown by those cases where high roads have been dedicated subject to obstruction: and I am not able to find any authority which goes the length of deciding that a

F person who is authorised or compelled by Act of Parliament to put a thing in the highway, is bound to do more than the statute requires him to do."

This becomes a fortiori when the Act did not authorise putting a thing in the highway, but authorised the retention of a thing already there. In my judgment, this appeal must be allowed and the action dismissed. The appellants do not ask for costs.

Solicitors: Dixon H. Davies; Oswald Hickson & Field.

[Reported by W. E. REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

LOVESY v. PALMER

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Younger, J.), April 7, 8, 11, 12, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 233; 85 L.J.Ch. 481; 114 L.T. 1033]

Agent—Contract negotiated on behalf of undisclosed principal—Competency of principal to sue on contract—Contract of which memorandum necessary—Agent not liable on contract—Evidence of identity of principal—Admissibility.

Where a contract the enforcement of which depends on the existence of a signed memorandum has been negotiated by an agent on behalf of an undisclosed principal parol evidence is not admissible to prove the identity of the principal and that the other party to the contract knew that he was the principal, and the principal cannot sue on the contract unless by the memorandum the agent has made himself personally liable on it, for, if he has not done so, there can be no memorandum of the agreement at all.

Notes. Section 4 of the Statute of Frauds (which imposed the need of a written memorandum before certain contracts could be enforced) has been largely repealed, but it still applies to a guarantee, and under s. 40 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, no action may be brought on a contract for the sale of land, etc., unless the agreement or a memorandum thereof is in writing.

Considered: Abdul Karim Basma v. Weekes, [1950] 2 All E.R. 146. Referred to: Keen v. Mear, [1920] All E.R. Rep. 147.

As to contracts made by an agent, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 215, and for cases see 1 DIGEST (Repl.) 717 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Potter v. Duffield (1874), L.R. 18 Eq. 4; 43 L.J.Ch. 472; 22 W.R. 585; 12 Digest (Repl.) 161, 1032.
- (2) Williams v. Byrnes (1863), 1 Moo. P.C.C. N.S. 154; 2 New Rep. 47; 8 L.T. 69; 9 Jur. N.S. 363; 11 W.R. 487; 15 E.R. 660, P.C.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 145, 911.
- (3) Jarrett v. Hunter (1886), 34 Ch.D. 182; 56 L.J.Ch. 141; 55 L.T. 727; 51 L.P. 165; 35 W.R. 132; 3 T.L.R. 117; 12 Digest (Repl.) 164, 1052.
- (4) Filby v. Hounsell, [1896] 2 Ch. 737; 65 L.J.Ch. 852; 75 L.T. 270; 45 W.R. 232; 12 T.L.R. 612; 40 Sol. Jo. 703; 12 Digest (Repl.) 162, 1044.
- (5) Southwell v. Bowditch (1876), 1 C.P.D. 374; 45 L.J.Q.B. 630; 35 L.T. 196; 24 W.R. 838, C.A.; 1 Digest (Repl.) 731, 2755.
- (6) Williams v. Jordan (1877), 6 Ch.D. 517; 46 L.J.Ch. 681, 26 W.R. 230; 12 Digest (Repl.) 162, 1039.
- (7) Warner v. Willington (1856), 3 Drew. 523; 25 L.J.Ch. 662; 27 L.T.O.S. 194; 20 J.P. 774; 2 Jur. N.S. 433; 4 W.R. 531; 61 E.R. 1002; 12 Digest (Repl.) 163, 1049.
- (8) Morris v. Wilson (1859), 33 L.T.O.S. 56; 5 Jur. N.S. 168; 1 Digest (Repl.) 335, 191.
- (9) Rossiter v. Miller (1878), 3 App. Cas. 1124; 48 L.J.Ch. 10; 39 L.T. 173; 42 J.P. 804; 26 W.R. 865, H.L.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 165, 1063.
- (10) Gadd v. Houghton (1876), 1 Ex D. 357; 46 L.J.Q.B. 71; 35 L.T. 222; 1 Digest (Repl.) 730, 2746.

Also referred to in argument:

- Calder v. Dobell* (1871), L.R. 6 C.P. 486; 40 L.J.C.P. 224; 25 L.T. 129; 19 W.R. 978, Ex.Ch.; 1 Digest (Repl.) 669, 2353.
- Hough and Co. v. Manzanos and Co.* (1879), 4 Ex.D. 104; 48 L.J.Q.B. 398; 27 W.R. 536; 1 Digest (Repl.) 731, 2749.
- Hussey v. Horne-Payne* (1879), 4 App. Cas. 311; 48 L.J.Ch. 846; 41 L.T. 1; 43 J.P. 814; 27 W.R. 585, H.L.; 12 Digest (Repl.) 80, 440.

A Action by the plaintiff, Charles Warren Lovesy, against the defendants, George Palmer and Harold Fitch Kemp, for a declaration that there was a binding contract between the defendants and the plaintiff to grant to a company to be formed by the plaintiff a lease of the Coronet Theatre, Notting Hill Gate, on the terms of an agreement for lease and a draft lease, i.e., a lease for fourteen years from Dec. 25, 1915, at a yearly rent of £1,000 for the first three years, B £1,250 for the next four years, and £1,500 for the remaining seven years, containing the covenants usual in a lease for a theatre or cinema, and specific performance of the contract. The defendants were trustees for the debenture-holders of a company called Saunders Theatres, Ltd., and as such were holders of a lease of the Coronet Theatre. By their defence they denied that they had agreed either verbally or otherwise by themselves or by any agent or agents with C the plaintiff or any person on his behalf for the grant to the company to be formed of a lease of the theatre on the terms stated, or on any terms. They admitted that they were in negotiation with the plaintiff's solicitor, Mr. Harraway, for the grant of the lease, but stated that no binding agreement resulted and that the names of the clients for whom Mr. Harraway was acting had never been disclosed.

Clauson, K.C., and W. M. Hunt for the plaintiff: We propose to call evidence D to show that the plaintiff was the principal of Mr. Harraway, and that the defendants knew this to be the case. Harraway entered into a binding contract to accept the lease, notwithstanding that he was acting on behalf of an unnamed plaintiff (Hough and Co. v. Manzanos and Co., 4 Exch. Div. 104), and therefore the plaintiff, who was his principal, may sue on the contract.

H. Terrell, K.C., and Luxmoore for the defendants: We object to the proposed E evidence. There is no memorandum satisfying the requirements of the Statute of Frauds of any binding agreement between the defendant and either Harraway or the plaintiff. Harraway was expressed to be acting on behalf of clients, and was not intended to be bound; the plaintiff is not named as a contracting party and there is no sufficient description of him as such in the correspondence and documents.

F HIS LORDSHIP admitted the evidence de bene esse.

YOUNGER, J.—This action raises many very nice questions, and one point of law which, in the present state of the authorities, is not an easy one to determine and, if it were not for the urgency of the case, I should have liked to take time to consider my judgment. In the interests, however, of both parties it is better that G I should express at once the conclusion I have formed on the whole case, even if I may not succeed in giving my reasons with all the precision I should desire. The case is peculiar in this respect, that with the exception of two trivial matters on which the defendants rely, and as I think unsuccessfully, for the purpose of showing that there was no concluded bargain, the arrangements for the proposed lease were adjusted to the last detail.

H [His LORDSHIP dealt with matters in respect of which it had been said that the negotiations had not been concluded, and continued:] But a much more serious question remains for decision. It is that on which the greater part of the argument has turned: Is there any agreement at all? If so, who are the parties to it? Is there any contract with the plaintiff? Has there ever been any contract with the plaintiff? Has the Statute of Frauds been complied with in relation to any I such contract, if contract there be? The contract alleged in the statement of claim is a very clear and specific one. It is alleged that it is a contract entered into between the defendants as the trustees of a debenture trust deed with the plaintiff to grant to a company which was to be formed by the plaintiff a lease of the theatre. The statement of claim sets out a memorandum, the product of much negotiation, which did not come into existence as a thing agreed until Jan. 7, 1916. Accordingly, the agreement alleged is an agreement in the terms of that memorandum, and its date cannot have been earlier than Jan. 7, 1916, and the allegations in the statement of claim are those of an agreement made by the plaintiff by Harraway as his solicitor or agent and by the defendants through Messrs. Oldfields as their solicitors and agents. In not one of the letters, which are set forth as constituting the memorandum of agreement, does the plaintiff's name occur. Not only so, but in these letters Harraway speaks of the persons on whose behalf he is acting as his "clients," and not as his "client." And in the letter of Jan. 7, 1916, which is one of those referred to, Harraway says:

"In order to make the matter clear, however, I would point out to you that my clients do not regard the building of the cinematograph box or alterations to the existing one, as the case may be, as a condition for obtaining the licence, but they regard this as an expense which they were obliged to make in any event which does not come within the operation of the note."

Therefore, in the memorandum relied upon not only is there no reference to the plaintiff as a contracting party, but the only reference that there is to anybody other than the defendants and Harraway is to persons in the plural, who are described as "clients" of Harraway, and not a person in the singular, a client. In the reply, however, further particulars of the memoranda are given and certain letters are referred to. If reference is made to these letters, I think I am right in saying that it is only in the letter of Dec. 1, 1915, that the name of Lovesy, the plaintiff, appears, and it is important to notice the connection in which his name does there appear. The defendant, Palmer, writing to Oldfields, says: "I inclose copy heads of agreement for proposed lease of Coronet Theatre to Mr. Lovesy, who intends, I think, to form a small company to operate a cinematograph entertainment." Included in this letter there are heads of agreement which suggest, or, if you like, require, that the intended lessee shall be, not the company which was to be the intended lessee under the memorandum as finally adjusted, but the plaintiff himself, so that the only relation in which the plaintiff's name appears in connection with the transaction is in that of lessee, a position which, according to the contract alleged, he was not to occupy, because the lease was to be taken by the company which was to be formed and not by the plaintiff at all. In the result, therefore, there is no reference either expressly or by necessary implication to the plaintiff in the whole of the documents referred to as constituting the memoranda, except in a character in which, according to the terms of the bargain as now alleged, he is not intended to figure.

In that state of things I have to see whether there is a memorandum sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. For this purpose I take the law from the statement of it in SIR GEORGE JESSEL's judgment in Potter v. Duffield (1), where, quoting from the judgment of SIR JOHN TAYLOR COLERIDGE in Williams v. Byrnes (2) he says (L.R. 18 Eq. at p. 7):

"The words [of the statute] require a written note of a bargain or contract, the statute clearly making no distinction between these two words. This language cannot be satisfied unless the existence of a bargain or contract appear evidenced in writing: and a bargain or contract cannot so appear unless the parties to it are specified, either nominally or by description or reference." I take that to mean that the statute will be satisfied if the parties are sufficiently described, so that their identity cannot be fairly disputed."

Looking at this case from the point of view on which up to the present I am regarding it, there is here no memorandum signed by the defendants or their agents which contains, either in itself or by reference to any other document, the name of the plaintiff as a contracting party or any reference to any person who without dispute could be identified as necessarily being and meaning the plaintiff. Even if in the letter of Jan. 7, 1916, or in any other letter the word used by Harraway had been "client" instead of, as it is, "clients," that would not have been a sufficient description of the plaintiff. So much I think is clear from Jarrett v. Hunter (3). It is, I think, equally clear that, even if it be the fact, and I do not think it is the fact, that the defendants knew who the client was, or

- A knew that the clients were in fact Lovesy, however inappropriate that description might be, the result would have been the same, because Jarrett v. Hunter (3) is also a clear authority for the proposition that the memorandum, being only made sufficient by means of oral evidence to show knowledge on the part of the other side, is not a memorandum in writing, and, inadmissible as such evidence must for the purpose always be, more clearly inadmissible is it where its effect
- B as here is not to supplement, but to contradict the statement in the written memorandum that the clients for whom Harraway purported to act were "clients," and to show that the so-called clients were one client only. Under these circumstances I think that counsel for the defendants was right when he suggested at the beginning of the case that evidence as to the identity of the plaintiff was not admissible. I only admitted it de bene esse in order to avoid a
- C difficulty in the event of the case going to the Court of Appeal. But I think it right to say now that the evidence has been taken that if it were admissible I should not myself conclude that the word "clients," which throughout the correspondence and on the draft lease is so frequently used by Harraway, ever meant, or ever was intended by him to mean, the plaintiff. I think the word "clients" so constantly used by him may have referred to a group of persons
- D who were ultimately to come in and find the capital for the company which was to take the theatre. The word may have referred and probably did frequently refer, to them. Often, however, the word "clients" referred to the future company itself, and especially does one find that in the marginal notes which Harraway made on the draft lease before final adjustment, where he speaks of the obligations of the lessee as being the obligations of his clients. I think, therefore, in truth that the word "clients" as used throughout the correspondence
- E was either used to mean a group of persons of whom the plaintiff was one, or to signify the company to be formed to take over the theatre. But I cannot find that by the word Harraway ever meant to refer to the plaintiff. So far as I can arrive at the true position of the plaintiff in this matter, I doubt if he was ever more than an intermediary with a genius for organising cinematograph undertakings, whose right was to obtain a fee from those who ultimately secured, as a
- F result of his assistance, a lease of this theatre adapted for cinematograph purposes. Therefore, if the contract was a contract which was made by Harraway on behalf of the plaintiff, the action fails because there is no memorandum sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. The action, however, I think also fails on the ground that there is no evidence to show that the plaintiff was in truth the principal of Harraway in the transaction.
- G

But I may be wrong on this conclusion of fact, and, accordingly, I proceed to deal with the other questions argued on that footing. It was said by counsel for the plaintiff that here in fact there was a contract with Harraway personally, sufficiently evidenced under the statute, and not the less so because it was made, and one might even go so far as to say avowedly made, by Harraway on behalf

H of someone else. Counsel contended that there was nothing to prevent the plaintiff from coming forward and suing upon that contract, provided that he established, as it was said that he had done, that he was the principal of Harraway in relation to it. Further, counsel in his reply went so far as to suggest that Harraway was personally liable on the contract, and his final contentions were mainly directed to this aspect of the case. The earlier arguments, however, proceeded

I on the footing that it made no difference whether Harraway was or was not personally liable under the contract, and great reliance was placed on the case before ROMER, J., of Filby v. Hounsell (4). But before I deal with that case I wish to say that I do not find in the statement of claim that there is any sufficient allegation that it was ever intended, either by Harraway himself or by the defendants, that there should be imposed on Harraway, who throughout was known to be acting as solicitor for clients, any personal liability in relation to this matter, and I take the law on the subject to be that, if the true construction of the documents in the case be that the agent contracts only on behalf of an undisclosed or unnamed principal and not on his own account, then he, the agent, can neither sue nor be sued on the agreement: Southwell v. Bowditch (5) and Gadd v. Houghton (10). My view is that on the true construction of the whole correspondence here Harraway contracted only on behalf of an unnamed principal or principals, or clients, and never on his own behalf, and I am of opinion as the result of the whole correspondence and of all the evidence which has been given that on such an agreement, if any agreement there was, he could at no time sue or be sued.

The only question that remains, therefore, is whether Filby v. Hounsell (4) and the decision of ROMER, J., in that case would enable Lovesy, all unnamed as he was, if he were in fact the principal, to sue on the contract, even although Harraway had never himself been liable upon it. I have read and re-read that case, and I have the greatest difficulty in understanding exactly what was the ground on which ROMER, J., as reported, rested his decision. Reading the case as reported, I cannot find that there was any moment of time at which the agent there was personally liable for anything. There was no acceptance of the offer which was addressed to him except on behalf of his principal. The only acceptance which constituted any contract was an acceptance upon which the principal alone could be sued. If the agent had accepted the contract in his own name, true it is that the principal when disclosed or discovered could, according to all authorities, both sue and be sued upon it. But the agent never did accept the contract for himself; he accepted it only on behalf of the principal, and, therefore, there was no moment of time at which that agent was, as far as I can see, responsible for any contract whatever as his own. Now, if in Filby v. Hounsell (4) the only contract was a contract made with the principal, then, as the principal's name appeared only in a document which was subsequent in point of date to the paper relied upon as constituting the memorandum under the statute, this would not satisfy the statute, for I find in Williams v. Jordan (6) that the reference to the name must be found in a document antecedent to the memorandum. SIR GEORGE JESSEL there says (6 Ch.D. at p. 520):

"In the case of Warner v. Willington (7), just as in this case, the lessor's name was not signed, and KINDERSLEY, V.-C., held that because the name of the lessor did not appear the memorandum was not sufficient to maintain an action or bill for specific performance. He said (3 Drew. at p. 530): 'But though this is the general rule, there is this exception, that if it can be ascertained who is the vendor or intended lessor from some other document which is sufficiently connected with the memorandum by clear reference' [and then SIR GEORGE JESSEL interpolates the words "of course he meant some other document previously existing"]—"that will cure the defect of the memorandum."

Accordingly, as in the case before ROMER, J., the only reference to Mrs. Filby was in a document subsequent to the memorandum relied upon, I fail to see how at any moment of time there was any memorandum within the statute of an agreement binding her.

I have looked for, but I have been unable to find, any other case where it has ever been suggested that an unnamed principal can sue or be sued on a contract to which the statute applies where he is not himself sufficiently described in the memorandum, except in a case where by the memorandum the agent is himself liable on the contract, and I should not expect to find any such authority, because it appears clear that, unless the agent is liable on the contract, you can on the hypothesis have no memorandum of any agreement at all. The case cited in the argument in Filby v. Hounsell (4)—namely, Morris v. Wilson (8)—as justifying the view there contended for and ultimately adopted is, to my mind, quite consistent with what I have said, because I think it may very well have been that WOOD, V.-C., was there of opinion that the agent made himself personally liable. Further, if it was in fact decided in Filby v. Hounsell (4)

- A that there could within the statute be a sufficient memorandum of an agreement where the principal was not named and the agent was not bound, then I do not think that the decision can stand with the other authorities, such as Rossiter v. Miller (9) and Jarrett v. Hunter (3), or with the statute as I read it. But I think, when one looks carefully at Filby v. Hounsell (4), that ROMER, J., really gave the judgment he did because he assumed that the agent was liable on the contract. I cannot myself see that the assumption was well founded, but if that was the basis of his decision, then the case presents no further difficulties, and is in entire harmony with all the authorities. If, however, he proceeded on that hypothesis, then Filby v. Hounsell (4) has, in the view I take of this case, no bearing here, and if Filby v. Hounsell (4) is to be dealt with upon the other hypothesis—namely, that the learned judge did not think it necessary that the agent should be bound—then I think it is not in accordance with Rossiter v. Miller (9), nor with principle. On either view, therefore, Filby v. Hounsell (4) cannot be allowed to affect the result of the present action which appears to me to fail.

Action dismissed.

- D Solicitors: H. V. Harraway; Oldfields.

[Reported by N. TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

E

GREEN v. ALL MOTORS, LTD.

- F [COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Bankes and Scrutton, L.J.J.), January 19, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 625; 86 L.J.K.B. 590; 116 L.T. 189]

Lien—Repairer's lien—Goods subject to hire-purchase agreement—Agreement by hirer to keep motor car in repair—Car sent for repair—Lien as against owner for cost of repairs.

G

By a hire-purchase agreement the plaintiff let a motor car to P. who agreed to keep it in good repair and working condition, the car to remain the property of the plaintiff until all the instalments under the agreement were paid. During the currency of the agreement the car was damaged and P. sent it to the defendants for repairs. P. made default in the final instalment of the purchase money, but the plaintiff did not terminate the agreement until after P. had agreed with the defendants for the repairs to the car to be carried out. The plaintiff then demanded possession of the car from the defendants, but did not tender the amount due for the cost of the repairs. The defendants refused to give the car up, claiming a lien on it for the cost of the repairs. The repairs were subsequently completed.

H

- I Held: the defendants had a lien on the car as against the plaintiff for the cost of the repairs.

Keene v. Thomas (1) [1905] 1 K.B. 136, approved.

Notes. Considered: Bowmaker, Ltd. v. Wycombe Motors, Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 113. Referred: Pennington v. Reliance Motor Works, [1922] All E.R. Rep. 466; Albemarle Supply Co., Ltd. v. Hind & Co., [1927] All E.R. Rep. 401.

As to a repairer's lien in respect of goods under a hire-purchase agreement, see 19 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 563; and for cases see 26 DIGEST (Repl.) 669.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Keene v. Thomas, [1905] 1 K.B. 136; 74 L.J.K.B. 21; 92 L.T. 19; 53 W.R. 336; 21 T.L.R. 2; 48 Sol. Jo. 815, D.C.; 26 Digest (Repl.) 669, 47.
- (2) Williams v. Allsup (1861), 10 C.B.N.S. 417; 30 L.J.C.P. 353; 4 L.T. 550; 8 Jur. N.S. 57; 1 Mar. L.C. 87; 142 E.R. 514; 41 Digest 186, 264.
- (3) Singer Manufacturing Co. v. London and South Western Rail. Co., [1894] 1 Q.B. 833; 63 L.J.Q.B. 411; 70 L.T. 172; 42 W.R. 347; 10 T.L.R. 246; 38 Sol. Jo. 238; 10 R. 152, D.C.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 161, 1034.
- (4) Cassils & Co. and Sassoon & Co. v. Holden Wool Bleaching Co., Ltd. (1914), 84 L.J.K.B. 834; 112 L.T. 373, C.A.; 32 Digest 240, 245.
- (5) Wehmer v. Dene Steam Shipping Co., [1905] 2 K.B. 92; 74 L.J.K.B. 550; 21 T.L.R. 339; 10 Com. Cas. 139; 41 Digest 402, 2496.
- (6) Lilley v. Burnesley (1844), 1 Car. & Kir. 344; 2 Mood. & R. 548, N.P.; 32 Digest 248, 326.

Appeal from a decision of Lush, J., in an action tried by him without a jury.

By an agreement dated July 28, 1915, the plaintiff, who was the owner of a motor car, let the car on hire to one Price (therein called "the hirer"), and in consideration thereof the hirer agreed:

"1. To pay to the owner on the execution hereof a rent or hire instalment of £50, another £50 on Aug. 20, and £65 on Oct. 20 next. 2. The hirer shall keep the car in good repair and working condition (damage by fire and other occurrence included, but ordinary and fair wear excepted) and shall keep the same in his own possession and shall not remove or permit to be removed the registered number or name plate affixed thereto. 3. If the hirer do not duly perform this agreement or if he commits any act of bankruptcy or if he shall suffer his effects to be distrained upon or taken in execution or allow any judgment against him to remain unsatisfied then and in any of such cases the owner may (without prejudice to his rights under this agreement) terminate the hiring and re-take possession of the car, and for that purpose leave and licence is hereby given to the owner to enter any premises occupied by the hirer or of which the hirer is tenant to re-take possession of the car. 4. If the hirer is in arrear with any instalment for more than seven days the whole balance payable under clause 1 hereof shall immediately become due."

The owner agreed:

"1. That if the hirer shall make all payments and observe all the conditions on its part hereinbefore contained the car shall become the sole and absolute property of the hirer. 2. Unless and until all moneys payable under this agreement be paid the car shall be and continue to be the sole property of the owner."

Both the instalments due on July 28 and on Aug. 20 were paid, leaving a balance due of £65, which was payable on Oct. 20. Before the date for the payment of the final instalment fell due, the car was so damaged as to cease to be in running condition. It was said that it was damaged by a collision; at any rate, the damage was not due to "ordinary and fair wear." The car in consequence was sent to Mitchells' Garage. Price then communicated with the defendants with regard to repairing the car, and, on Oct. 8, the defendants took the car away from Mitchells' Garage. The final instalment under the agreement was not paid by Price on Oct. 20. The defendants submitted to Price an estimate for the repairs, and, on Oct. 31, he accepted the estimate, and directed the defendants to proceed with the repairs. According to the evidence, the plaintiff had not established that down to that date he made any application for re-delivery of the car to him or in any way terminated the hiring. He did not learn until Nov. 16 that the car was in the possession of the defendants, and until that date he made no demand for possession of the car from them. The plaintiff

A brought an action to recover possession of the car, and damages for its detention. In pursuance of an order at chambers, the plaintiff paid £31 2s. 6d., the estimated cost of the repairs to the car, into court, and the defendants returned the car to him. LUSH, J., gave judgment for the plaintiff, and ordered that the money which the plaintiff had paid into court to release the car should be paid out to him. The defendants appealed.

B C. C. Scott, K.C., and Stutfield for the defendants.
G. W. H. Jones for the plaintiff.

C SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—This is an appeal by the defendants from the decision of LUSH, J., who tried the action without a jury. The plaintiff claimed from the defendants the return of a motor car and damages for its detention. The defendants, in answer, alleged that they had a lien on the car, for £31 2s. 6d., the cost of the repairs to the car. In pursuance of an order at chambers the plaintiff paid that sum into court, and the car was returned by the defendants to the plaintiff. The question, therefore, is whether the defendants had at the time of action brought a lien for £31 2s. 6d. for the cost of the repairs to the car. [HIS LORDSHIP stated the facts, and continued:]

D In these circumstances, the question is whether the defendants had a lien on the car. By the agreement, Price had to keep the car in good repair and working condition. As the car was not in working condition, there was an obligation on Price to repair it. The car was required to be repaired by a skilled person, and it was within the contemplation of the parties at the time that they made the contract that the car might require to be sent to a repairing establishment to be repaired. That being so, the defendants would have a lien on the car for the reasonable cost of the work of repair. It is not suggested that the sum charged is unreasonable. In Williams v. Allsup (2) there was a mortgage of a ship, and the ship remained with the sanction of the mortgagees, the plaintiffs, in the possession and under the control of the mortgagor. The ship being out of repair, the mortgagor delivered her to the defendant, a shipwright, who took possession of her and effected the repairs. The defendant then claimed a lien on the ship. WILLES, J., said (10 C.B.N.S. at p. 427):

G “By the permission of the mortgagees the mortgagor has the use of the vessel. He has, therefore, a right to use her in the way in which vessels are ordinarily used. Upon the facts which appear on this case, this vessel could not be so used unless these repairs had been done to her. The state of things, therefore, seems to involve the right of the mortgagor to get the vessel repaired, not on the credit of the mortgagees, but upon the ordinary terms, subject to the shipwright’s lien.”

H Those remarks are applicable to the present case. Price was entitled to use the car in the way in which motor cars are ordinarily used, and he could not do so unless the car was repaired. Moreover, he was under an express obligation under the agreement to get the car repaired. Therefore he had a right to get the car repaired on the ordinary terms—that is to say, not on the credit of the owner, but on the terms that the repairer should have a lien on it for the reasonable cost of the repairs. That does not press hardly on the owner, because, as ERLE, C.J., pointed out in the same case (ibid.):

I “It is to be observed that the money expended in repairs adds to the value of the ship; and, looking to the rights and interests of the parties generally, it cannot be doubted that it is much to the advantage of the mortgagee that the mortgagor should be held to have power to confer a right of lien on the ship for repairs necessary to keep her seaworthy.”

The same principle was applied in Keene v. Thomas (1), the case of a hire-purchase agreement in respect of a dogcart, where LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., said ([1905] 1 K.B. at p. 138):

"The principle laid down by COLLINS, J., in the case of Singer Manufacturing Co. v. London and South Western Rail. Co. (3) goes a long way to support the proposition that the hirer is entitled to use the hired chattel for all reasonable purposes, and in my opinion in this case the hirer of the chattel having undertaken to keep it in repair, and having at any rate a duty to take care of it, and having employed the defendant to repair it, has created a lien in respect of the proper cost of the repairs, not only against himself, but also against the plaintiff, the owner of the trap."

That is a decision of a Divisional Court, but it was referred to with approval by the Court of Appeal in Cassils & Co. and Sassoon & Co. v. Holden Wood Bleaching Co. (4). In Keene v. Thomas (1), at the time when the cart was sent to the defendant for repair, an instalment under the hire-purchase agreement was in arrear, but the agreement had not been terminated. The present is even a stronger case, because, at the time when the car was sent to the defendants to be repaired no default had been made in payment of an instalment. In these circumstances, the defendants had a valid lien on the car for the proper cost of the repairs. Judgment must, therefore, be entered for the defendants, and there must be an order for payment out to them of the sum of £31 2s. 6d. which is in court.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree. The materials which are before us are unsatisfactory, and I should have wished them more complete, especially with regard to what the learned judge actually decided. But on the materials before us, in my opinion, the decision of the learned judge was wrong. In Keene v. Thomas (1) the point, as stated by LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J. ([1905] 1 K.B. at p. 137) was "whether the man who made the bargain with the repairer had authority from the plaintiff to make such a bargain."

That is the first point to be decided. The question, therefore, is whether on Oct. 31, when Price made the bargain with the defendants for the repair of the motor car, he had authority from the plaintiff to do so. In my opinion, he clearly had authority, unless the plaintiff had determined the hire-purchase agreement before that date. So far as I can judge from the materials before us, this point was not in question in the court below. That was not the issue which the plaintiff elected to fight. The issue which, as it appears to me, he elected to fight was whether any substantial part of the repairs had been done when the hire-purchase agreement was terminated, because, if they had not the plaintiff's contention was that the defendants could not claim a lien for any substantial part of the repairs. The reason I say this is because counsel for the plaintiff cited to the learned judge Wehner v. Dene Steam Shipping Co. (5), where it was held that a shipowner is not entitled to exercise a lien on freight in the hands of the ship's agents for charterparty hire accruing due. What the ground was on which the learned judge based his decision I cannot gather, but the real question on the facts before us is whether the plaintiff has proved that he determined the hire-purchase agreement before the order for the repairs was given and accepted. Unless he established that he fails. He has not established it. In my view, the fair inference from the evidence is that the agreement was not terminated when the order for the repairs was given and accepted. The defendants are, therefore, entitled to judgment.

SCRUTTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I agree that it is not clear on what ground the learned judge based his judgment, nor is it clear what points were argued before him by the plaintiff. Counsel for the plaintiff cited to the learned judge Wehner v. Dene Steam Shipping Co. (5), but I fail to see what it has to do with this case. The materials before us are very unsatisfactory. The plaintiff is the owner of a motor car, and he sued the defendants, who are in possession of the car, in detinue. The defendants say the car was given to

- A them to repair by the person who had had it under a hire-purchase agreement, that they had a lien on it for the cost of the repairs, and that the plaintiff has never tendered to them the amount properly expended on the repairs. The law is clear. The hirer of a chattel is entitled to have it repaired so as to enable him to use it in the way in which such a chattel is ordinarily used. The hirer was, therefore, entitled, without any express authority from the owner, to have the
- B motor car repaired so as to enable him to use it as a motor car is ordinarily used. That is well put by WILLES, J., in Williams v. Allsup (2) (10 C.B.N.S. at p. 427), in the passage which has been read by SWINFEN EADY, L.J., and by COLLINS, J., in Singer Manufacturing Co. v. London and South Western Rail. Co. (3). In the present case, the hirer of the car had the express duty imposed on him of keeping the car in repair, and, therefore, of having it repaired when necessary.
- C That makes this case similar to Keene v. Thomas (1), which was a decision of a Divisional Court. Accordingly, the hirer had by contract a duty as well as a right, until the hire was terminated, to have the car repaired, with the ordinary consequence of giving the repairer a lien on the car for the proper cost of the repairs. Had the bailment been determined when the order to do the repairs was given by the hirer? On the evidence, the plaintiff has left it in doubt at
- D what date he determined the bailment. As late as Nov. 6, the hirer was giving orders for repairs to be done to the car, which he could not have done unless he had then a right to have possession of the car. The plaintiff, therefore, has failed to prove it.

- A further question suggests itself to my mind which might give rise to some difficulty. If the plaintiff had ordered the defendants before the repairs were
- E completed not to do any more repairs and had tendered to them the sum due for the work already done, could the defendants have claimed a lien for the contract price of the repairs? The point does not arise, but there is a nisi prius case of Lilley v. Barnsley (6) in which the argument of counsel and the ruling of ROLFE, B., suggest that the repairers would only have a lien for the cost of the work actually done. However, that is not what happened in this case,
- F and, therefore, the question does not arise. The plaintiff did not, on Nov. 16, tender for the cost of the work then done and tell the defendants to do no further work. The plaintiff in these circumstances was not entitled to the car on that date, and he cannot say that the defendants were wrong in going on with the repairs.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Bishop & Fenton-Jones; Lloyd, Richardson & Co.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, Barrister-at-Law.]

HALSEY AND ANOTHER v. LOWENFIELD, LEIGH, THIRD PARTY

[COURT OF APPEAL (Viscount Reading, C.J., Warrington, L.J., and Lush, J.), May 16, 17, 18, July 28, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 707; 85 L.J.K.B. 1498; 115 L.T. 617; 32 T.L.R. 709]

Landlord and Tenant—Enemy alien tenant—Lease entered into before outbreak of war—Right of landlord to recover rent.

Practice—Third party procedure—Right of enemy alien to invoke—Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 24 (3).

By a lease dated Mar. 18, 1896, the predecessor in title of the plaintiff demised to the defendant premises for a term of twenty-four years from Christmas, 1895, at a yearly rent of £6,000 to be paid by monthly instalments of £500 in advance. Subsequently, the lease was assigned to the third party, L. In August, 1914, war was declared between Great Britain and Austria, and the defendant, an Austrian living in Austria, became an enemy alien. By a Royal Proclamation dated Sept. 19, 1914, relating to trading with the enemy, payments by or on account of enemies to British subjects were permitted if they arose out of transactions entered into before the war. On a claim by the plaintiffs for the rent due for the months of June, July and August, 1915, the defendant, by a third party notice, claimed to be indemnified, if he were held to be liable, by L. as assignee of the lease.

Held: (i) the lease was not suspended or determined by the outbreak of the war, and, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to bring an action on the covenant in the lease and to recover the rent which was owing; (ii) in view of the terms of s. 24 (3) of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 [see now s. 39 (2) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925: 18 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 472] the third party claim must be regarded as a separate action by the defendant, and, as such, he being an alien enemy, not maintainable by him.

Decision of RIDLEY, J., [1916] 1 K.B. 143, affirmed.

Notes. Distinguished: Seligman v. Eagle Insurance Co., [1917] 1 Ch. 519; Tingley v. Müller, ante p. 470; Ertel Bieber & Co. v. Rio Tinto Co., Ltd., [1918-19] All E.R. Rep. 127; Orconera Iron Ore Co. v. Fried. Krupp Akt. (1918), 87 L.J.Ch. 313; Rodriguez v. Speyer Bros., [1918-19] All E.R. Rep. 884. Referred: Schering Ltd. v. Stockholms Enskilda Bank Aktiebolag, [1946] 1 All E.R. 36; Arab Bank, Ltd. v. Barclays Bank (D.C. & O.), [1953] 2 All E.R. 263; Beran v. Beran, [1955] 2 All E.R. 206.

As to the position of enemy aliens, see HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.), tit. War and Emergency, and for cases see 2 DIGEST (Repl.) 212 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) The Hoop (1799), 1 Ch. Rob. 196; 2 Digest (Repl.) 241, 435.
- (2) Esposito v. Bowden (1857), 7 E. & B. 763; 8 State Tr. N.S. 807; 27 L.J.Q.B. 17; 29 L.T.O.S. 295; 3 Jur. N.S. 1209; 5 W.R. 732; 119 E.R. 1430, Ex. Ch.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 251, 524.
- (3) Porter v. Freudenberg, Kreglinger v. S. Samuel and Rosenfeld, Re Mertens' Patents, [1915] 1 K.B. 857; 84 L.J.K.B. 1001; 112 L.T. 313; 31 T.L.R. 162; 20 Com. Cas. 189; 32 P.P.C. 109, C.A.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 242, 444.
- (4) The Parariellos (1915), 84 L.J.P. 140; 112 L.T. 777; 31 T.L.R. 326; 59 Sol. Jo. 399; 13 Asp. M.L.C. 52; affirmed (1916), 85 L.J.P. 112; 114 L.T. 670; 32 T.L.R. 459; 60 Sol. Jo. 427; 13 Asp. M.L.C. 484, P.C.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 276, 640.

- A (5) Robson v. Premier Oil and Pipe Line Co., Ltd., [1915] 2 Ch. 124; 84 L.J.Ch. 629; 113 L.T. 523; 31 T.L.R. 420; 59 Sol. Jo. 475, C.A.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 259, 577.

Also referred to in argument:

- Janson v. Drifontein Consolidated Mines, Ltd.*, [1902] A.C. 484; 71 L.J.K.B. 857; 87 L.T. 372; 51 W.R. 142; 18 T.L.R. 796; 7 Com. Cas. 268, H.L.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 218, 308.
- B Arnhold Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Co., Theodor Schneider & Co. v. Burgett and Newsam, [1915] 2 K.B. 379; 84 L.J.K.B. 1673; 113 L.T. 185; 31 T.L.R. 351; affirmed [1916] 1 K.B. 495; 85 L.J.K.B. 665; 114 L.T. 152; 32 T.L.R. 186; 60 Sol. Jo. 156; 21 Com. Cas. 174, C.A.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 280, 672.
- C Robinson & Co. v. Continental Insurance Co. of Mannheim, [1915] 1 K.B. 155; 84 L.J.K.B. 238; 112 L.T. 125; 31 T.L.R. 20; 59 Sol. Jo. 7; 12 Asp. M.L.C. 574; 20 Com. Cas. 125; 2 Digest (Repl.) 247, 483.
- Leader, Plunkett and Leader v. Direction der Discontogesellschaft*, [1915] 3 K.B. 154; 84 L.J.K.B. 1806; 113 L.T. 596; 31 T.L.R. 464, C.A.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 247, 490.
- D Distington Hermitate Iron Co., Ltd. v. Possehl & Co., [1916] 1 K.B. 811; 85 L.J.K.B. 919; 115 L.T. 412; 32 T.L.R. 349; 2 Digest (Repl.) 271, 621.
- W. Wolf & Sons v. Carr, Parker & Co.* (1915), 31 T.L.R. 407, C.A.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 241, 439.
- Kreglinger & Co. v. Cohen (Trading as Samuel and Rosenfeld)* (1915), 31 T.L.R. 592; 2 Digest (Repl.) 273, 630.
- E London and Northern Estates Co. v. Schlesinger, [1916] 1 K.B. 20; 85 L.J.K.B. 369; 114 L.T. 74; 32 T.L.R. 78; 60 Sol. Jo. 223; 2 Digest (Repl.) 274, 634.
- McVeigh v. United States* (1870), 11 Wall. 259.
- Wynne v. Tempest*, [1897] 1 Ch. 110; 66 L.J.Ch. 81; 75 L.T. 624; 45 W.R. 183; 13 T.L.R. 128; 41 Sol. Jo. 127; 26 Digest (Repl.) 231, 1784.
- F Moule v. Garrett (1872), L.R. 7 Exch. 101; 41 L.J.Ex. 62; 26 L.T. 367; 20 W.R. 416, Ex. Ch.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 458, 5846.
- Kershaw v. Kelsey* (1868), 100 Mass. 561.
- McCheane v. Gyles*, [1902] 1 Ch. 287, 301; 71 L.J.Ch. 183; 86 L.T. 1; 50 W.R. 376; 46 Sol. Jo. 175, C.A.; Digest (Practice), 447, 1358.
- G Potts v. Ball (1800), 8 Term Rep. 548; 101 E.R. 1540; 2 Digest (Repl.) 256, 562.
- R. v. Oppenheimer and Colbeck*, [1915] 2 K.B. 755; 84 L.J.K.B. 1760; 113 L.T. 383; 79 J.P. 383; 31 T.L.R. 369; 59 Sol. Jo. 442; 25 Cox, C.C. 39; 11 Cr. App. Rep. 146, C.C.A.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 259, 578.
- R. v. Kupfer*, [1915] 2 K.B. 321; 84 L.J.K.B. 1021; 112 L.T. 1138; 79 J.P. 270; 31 T.L.R. 223; 24 Cox, C.C. 705; 11 Cr. App. Rep. 91, C.C.A.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 259, 579.

H Appeal by the defendant from the decision of RIDLEY, J., in an action tried by him without a jury, reported [1916] 1 K.B. 143.

Heber Hart, K.C., and Blanco White for the defendant.

Rose-Innes, K.C., and Lilley for the plaintiff.

Graham Mould for Leigh, third party.

I

Cur. adv. vult.

July 28, 1916. The following judgments were read.

VISCOUNT READING, C.J.—The plaintiffs sued the defendant to recover £1,500 for rent due to them at the rate of £500 per month in respect of the Prince of Wales' Theatre, London, for the months of June, July, and August, 1915. Save as to part of the amount claimed it is not disputed that the plaintiffs are entitled to the rent, but it is contended that as the defendant is an alien enemy, that is, an Austrian subject residing in Austria, he is not liable to pay the rent on the ground that, owing to the state of war, the contract hitherto subsisting between him and the plaintiffs is dissolved or suspended. If found liable to the plaintiffs, the defendant, by a third party notice, claimed indemnity against John Leigh. RIDLEY, J., gave judgment for the plaintiffs, and held that the defendant could not maintain the third party claim. The defendant appeals from this decision and asks that judgment be entered for him on the plaintiffs' claim, and, if held liable, he appeals against RIDLEY, J.'s judgment on the third party claim. A B

On Mar. 18, 1896, Edgar Bruce, deceased, and predecessor in title of the plaintiffs, granted an underlease to the defendant of the Prince of Wales' Theatre, expiring on Dec. 26, 1919, at a yearly rent of £6,000, payable in advance by monthly instalments of £500. In March, 1899, the defendant assigned the lease to one Lederer. Lederer entered into the usual covenant to indemnify the defendant against his liability for rent to his lessor. In April, 1899, Lederer assigned the lease to George Edwardes. On Aug. 31, 1899, Edwardes assigned to Leigh, the third party, in whom the term was vested at the date of the trial. C

The question raised in the case is whether the plaintiffs during the war can sue an alien enemy under a lease granted before the war. It is contended on behalf of the defendant that upon the outbreak of war all intercourse, commercial or otherwise, between persons resident here and alien enemies became illegal, and consequently that a lease granted before the war to one who since the war became an alien enemy was either suspended during the war or determined, and that no action could be brought during the war to recover payment under the covenant in the lease from an alien enemy. That commercial intercourse between inhabitants of this country with alien enemies, unless permitted by the Sovereign, is prohibited and illegal is beyond question: see The Hoop (1); Esposito v. Bowden (2); and Porter v. Freudenberg (3). This prohibition at common law of intercourse between residents in this country and alien enemies is not confined to commercial or trading intercourse: see The Panariellos (4); Robson v. Premier Oil and Pipe Co. (5). The prohibition is based upon public policy, which forbids the doing of acts that will or may be to the advantage of the enemy State by increasing its capacity for prolonging hostilities and by adding to the resources available to individuals in the enemy State: see Porter v. Freudenberg (3). In the present case the contract whereby the defendant covenanted inter alia to pay rent in respect of the property known as the Prince of Wales' Theatre was a subsisting and valid and enforceable contract at the outbreak of war. Since the war no intercourse has in fact taken place with the alien enemy, unless it can be said that seeking to obtain payment by him of the rent due under the lease is within the prohibition of common law and consequently illegal. It is contended for the defendant that not only would the payment be illegal, but that the lease itself must be treated as at an end or suspended in consequence of the war. Payment by or on account of an alien enemy to persons resident in this country is not trading with the enemy and is permitted if the payment arises out of a transaction entered into before the outbreak of war. This is provided in s. 7 of the proclamation relating to trading with the enemy, dated Sept. 9, 1914, which has legislative authority, for by the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1914, s. 1 (2), it is declared that "any act permitted under any such proclamation shall not be deemed to be trading with the enemy." In order to avoid misconception, the payment is permitted only when not made under or accompanied by terms, conditions, or circumstances which would in themselves constitute a trading with the enemy. Upon this ground I hold that the plaintiffs would not commit an illegal act if they claimed and received payment from the defendant of rent due under a lease granted to him before the war, and that they are entitled to succeed in this action. D E F G H I

I have had the opportunity of reading WARRINGTON, L.J.'s judgment, and I agree with his conclusions as to the continued validity of the lease at the

- A outbreak of war and with his reasons for this conclusion. I desire to add that the contention that a lessee who has become an alien enemy is released from all obligations undertaken before the war cannot be sustained. There is no authority for such a proposition in any of the cases or text-books, and, in my judgment, it is unsound in principle. The prohibition of intercourse between persons in this country and alien enemies is based on public policy, and it would
- B indeed be a strange result if a law so founded was held to apply to relieve an alien enemy of obligations incurred before the war in respect of property of which he is not deprived by the Crown, for the property of alien enemies is at common law subject to confiscation by the Crown in virtue of the Royal prerogative: see HALE'S PLEAS OF THE CROWN, vol. 1, p. 95; and Porter v. Freudenberg (3). But if the Crown refrains from exercising the right to confiscate, and
- C allows the alien enemy to continue in ownership of the property, he holds it subject to all its obligations; it would be manifestly absurd that he should derive the advantage of holding the property without liability to perform the obligations incident to his right of ownership. For example, if a freehold is held by him subject to a restricted covenant not to build within a period of years, can it be said that the consequence of war is that the alien enemy is allowed to
- D remain the owner of the estate but is freed from the obligations of the covenant? If the contract is dissolved as contended, the estate would be freed for ever from the burden of the covenant. In my judgment, the covenant remains notwithstanding the war. If there is a breach of covenant the enemy may be sued, although no doubt there are difficulties in serving him. In the present case those difficulties have been surmounted, and the alien enemy has appeared.
- E In my view, RIDLEY, J.'s judgment in favour of the plaintiffs upon the point of liability of the defendant is correct.

It was argued that if the alien enemy's rights under the covenants are not dissolved by the war, at least they are suspended, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs' rights under the covenants are also suspended, but it is the remedy of the alien enemy which is suspended, not because the covenant has ceased to operate

F during the war, but because the alien enemy cannot have recourse to the King's courts to enforce a right until he has ceased to be an alien enemy.

- This brings me to the next point, namely, whether the defendant can enforce his claim to indemnity by a third party notice. The objection taken is that he cannot become "actor" in proceedings in the King's courts, and that he must be regarded as a plaintiff in an action seeking a remedy against a third party, who must be
- G regarded as a defendant. RIDLEY, J., has upheld this objection, and I come to the same conclusion. This point turns entirely upon the interpretation of the language of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24 (3), in reference to third party notices:

- "and every person served with any such notice shall thenceforth be deemed
- H a party to such cause or matter, with the same rights in respect of his defence against such claim, as if he had been duly sued in the ordinary way by such defendant."

- The right of the defendant to bring a third party into an action to which he was not a party was given in order to enable the defendant to pursue his remedy for indemnity in the action in which it was sought to make him liable to the plaintiff, but although the third party thus becomes a party to the cause his
- I rights in respect of his defence against a claim for indemnity are preserved to him and are to be treated as if in an action brought against him. If the alien enemy had brought a separate action against the third party one of the answers would have been, as it is now, that the alien enemy could not sue during the war. We must decide according to the words of the statute, which are plain, and, therefore, we must regard the third party claim for this purpose as a separate action by the defendant, with the inevitable result that the defendant's third party claim fails. The appeal must be dismissed, and with costs. LUSH, J., A read this judgment, and desires me to say that he agrees with it.

WARRINGTON, L.J., stated the facts and continued: The first question is whether under the circumstances of this case the outbreak of war discharged the defendant, an alien enemy, from his liability otherwise indisputable, to pay the rent under the lease of 1896. The following general propositions are, I think, clearly established: (i) By the common law of England on the outbreak of war between Great Britain and another nation it becomes unlawful for a British subject to engage in any intercourse with an enemy, whether of a commercial nature or otherwise, unless it be with the permission, express or implied, of the executive authority. (ii) It follows that any intercourse on the part of a subject of Great Britain with an enemy incidental to the performance by either party of contractual obligations is unlawful. These propositions are, I think, covered by authority: see The Panariellos (4), and the cases there cited; and Robson v. Premier Oil and Pipe Line Co. (5). It follows that, if a contract at the outbreak of war remains to be performed by both parties, it would be unlawful for that one of them who is a British subject to perform his part. The contract would be an illegal contract and both parties would be discharged. I think, moreover, that though the substantive obligation to be performed is that of the enemy only, yet if its performance necessitates the concurrence of the other party, the promisee, and that involves unlawful intercourse with the alien, the latter would be discharged from his obligation. This is really only an example of the general rule, for the concurrence of the promisee would be afforded in pursuance of a duty arising from a contractual relation.

The next question is whether the present case comes within the rule. It must first be determined what relative obligations of the plaintiffs and the defendant remained to be performed at the outbreak of war. As regards the covenants by the lessor, I think it must be taken that they would all run with the land, and that the benefit of them would pass to the assignee. It is true that among them was a covenant by the lessor to perform the lessee's covenants contained in the superior lease, and it is of course possible that that lease may have contained a covenant of an exceptional character which would not run with the land. The superior lease has not been put in evidence, but I think we are entitled to assume as against the defendant, on whom the onus rests of establishing his defence, that it did not contain such an exceptional covenant. If I am right so far, the only substantive obligations as between the parties to the present action remaining to be performed were those to be performed by the defendant. Of these the only one with which we are concerned is the covenant for payment of the rent. Did the performance of this obligation by the defendant require the concurrence of the plaintiffs, and, if so, would such concurrence be unlawful? It did require the plaintiffs' concurrence, inasmuch as payment by one party involved receipt by the other. It does not follow, however, that such receipt was unlawful, and I think the proclamation of Sept. 19, 1914, establishes that it was not, but was an act permitted by the executive authority. The proclamation, after warning people against doing certain acts and entering into certain transactions as involving trading with the enemy, contains the following provision:

"Nothing in this proclamation shall be deemed to prohibit payments by or on account of enemies to persons resident, carrying on business, or being in our Dominions, if such payments arise out of transactions entered into before the outbreak of war or otherwise permitted."

In terms the clause purports to allow payments by or on account of the enemy and says nothing about receipts: but I think it must be construed to authorise—if such authority be necessary—the receipt by a British subject of a payment so made. If this is so, the performance by the defendant of his obligation did

A not involve any unlawful act on the plaintiffs' part, and I see no reason why the defendant should be treated as released. I think the appeal from the judgment against the defendant fails and must be dismissed.

Now as to the third party notice. The question is whether the third party is entitled to be placed in the same position as he would be in if he were defendant to an action by the present defendant as plaintiff. In that case he would be entitled to judgment inasmuch as the remedy of the plaintiff, as an alien enemy, would be suspended during the war: Porter v. Freudenberg (3). The right to issue the third party notice is derived from the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873, and the rules thereunder. Subsection (3) of s. 24 is as follows:

C "The said courts respectively, and every judge thereof, shall also have power to grant to any defendant in respect of any equitable estate or right, or other matter of equity, and also in respect of any legal estate, right, or title claimed or asserted by him, all such relief against any plaintiff or petitioner as such defendant shall have properly claimed by his pleading, and as the said courts respectively, or any judge thereof, might have granted in any suit instituted for that purpose by the same defendant against the same plaintiff or petitioner; and also all such relief relating to or connected with the original subject of the cause or matter, and in like manner claimed against any other person, whether already a party to the same cause or matter or not, who shall have been duly served with notice in writing of such claim pursuant to any rule of court or any order of the court, as might properly have been granted against such person if he had been made a defendant to a cause duly instituted by the same defendant for the like purpose; and every person served with any such notice shall thenceforth be deemed a party to such cause or matter, with the same rights in respect of his defence against such claim, as if he had been duly sued in the ordinary way by such defendant."

In my opinion this deals with procedure only, and does not affect the rights of either the original defendant or the third party. If the third party had been sued in the ordinary way he would have been entitled to claim judgment on the ground that the suit could not be maintained. This is, in my opinion, a right in respect of his defence against the claim made by the third party notice, and he is, therefore, under the express words of the statute entitled to insist on such right. In this respect also the judgment is, in my opinion, correct and should be affirmed. I desire to add that I concur in the general observations of the Lord Chief Justice as to the position of alien enemies holding property in this country. Substantially the appeal fails, and I think the appellant should pay the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Hutchinson & Cuff; Valpy, Peckham & Chaplin; C. F. J. Jennings.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re YENIDJE TOBACCO CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Pickford and Warrington, L.J.J.), July 27, 28, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 Ch. 426; 86 L.J.Ch. 1; 115 L.T. 530; 32 T.L.R. 709;
60 Sol. Jo. 707; [1916] H.B.R. 140]

Company Winding-up "Just and equitable" Interpretation Not to be read ejusdem generis with specific statutory grounds—Deadlock in management of company—Application of principles of dissolution of partnership—Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), s. 129.

Section 129 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 [now s. 222 of the Companies Act, 1948 (3 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 452)] provided: "A company may be wound-up by the court" on five specific grounds, and, by para. (vi), "if the court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound-up."

Held: the words of para. (vi) were not to be read ejusdem generis with the words of the preceding specific provisions.

The two life directors of a private company each held an equal number of the class of shares which carried voting rights, and in the articles there was no provision for a casting vote by either of them. Differences arose between the two directors. They would not speak to each other and a third person had to convey communications between them, the one refused to give effect to the award of an arbitrator in favour of his co-director on a dispute between them, and one director had brought an action for fraud against the other.

Held: the company was in effect a partnership between the two directors, and the same principles should be applied as those which were applied in a case of dissolution of partnership; there existed in the management of the company a deadlock which could not have been contemplated by the parties when the company was formed; in these circumstances it was "just and equitable" that the company should be wound-up; and a winding-up order would be made.

Notes. Considered: Lock v. John Blackwood, Ltd., [1924] All E.R. Rep. 200. Applied: Re Davis and Collett, Ltd., [1935] All E.R. Rep. 315. Considered: Rayfield v. Hands, [1958] 2 All E.R. 194. Referred to: Re Cuthbert Cooper & Sons, Ltd., [1937] 2 All E.R. 466; Scottish Co-operative Society v. Meyer, [1958] 3 All E.R. 66; Re H. R. Harmer, Ltd., [1958] 3 All E.R. 689.

As to grounds of compulsory winding-up, see 6 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 531-535, and for cases see 10 Digest (Repl.) 852 et seq.

Cases referred to in argument:

Re Sailing Ship Ventmere Co., [1897] W.N. 58; 10 Digest (Repl.) 856, 5640.

Re Furriers' Alliance, Ltd. (1906), 51 Sol. Jo. 172; 10 Digest (Repl.) 863, 5682.

Re Fromm's Extract Co., Ltd. (1901), 17 T.L.R. 302, C.A.; 10 Digest (Repl.) 860, 5662.

Appeal from an order of ASTBURY, J., that the Yenidje Tobacco Co., Ltd., a private company, should be wound-up.

The winding-up petition was brought by one Marcus Weinberg, one of two directors of the company, and was resisted by Louis Rothman, the other director. ASTBURY, J., made a winding-up order against which Rothman appealed.

Frank Russell, K.C., and A. H. Richardson, for the petitioning director.

Gore-Browne, K.C., and Henriques, for the respondent director, were not called on to argue.

LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—This is an appeal from a decision of ASTBURY, J., who ordered a private company to be compulsorily wound-up.

A I think it right to consider what is the precise position of a private company such as this, and in what respects it can fairly be called a partnership in the clothes or under the guise of a private company.

In the present case two tobacco manufacturers, one Rothman and the other Weinberg, were minded to amalgamate their businesses. They formed a private limited company, under the constitution of which they are the sole shareholders. Although the holdings of the two members in "B" shares and preference shares are unequal—one having a larger holding than the other—the only shares which give the power of voting—that is, the "A" shares—carry precisely equal voting rights, because each of the two shareholders hold an equal number of shares of that class. There is a provision in the articles of association of the company that there shall be no casting vote, and that one director is to form a quorum. There is a provision that in the event of a dispute between the directors the matter in dispute shall be referred to arbitration, but there is no provision whatever in the articles, and I cannot imagine such a provision, that in the general management of the company all disputes between the directors shall go to arbitration. Certainly, having regard to the result of the one arbitration which has been held, it would be absurd to suggest that the working out of that provision costs little. The one dispute to which I have just referred was about a Mr. Litiger who was in the employment of the company as its factory manager. That dispute was referred to two arbitrators who could not agree. An umpire was appointed, and the result was that the parties were some eighteen days before the arbitrators and umpire, the costs of the arbitrators and umpire alone amounting to upwards of £1,000, to say nothing of the costs of the two parties each of whom had to pay his own costs. In those circumstances, supposing this had been an ordinary partnership between two people having equal shares, there being no provision to terminate it, what would have been the position? I think that it is quite clear that under the law of partnership, as has been asserted in this court for many years and is now laid down by the Partnership Act, 1890, that state of things might be a ground for a dissolution of the partnership, for the reasons which are stated by LORD LINDLEY in his book on PARTNERSHIP (6th Edn. 657) in the passage which I will read, and which I think it is quite unnecessary to state is justified by the authorities to which he refers:

G "Refusal to meet on matters of business, continued quarrelling, and such a state of animosity as precludes all reasonable hope of reconciliation and friendly co-operation, have been held sufficient to justify a dissolution. It is not necessary, in order to induce the court to interfere, to show personal rudeness on the part of one partner to the other, or even gross misconduct as a partner. All that is necessary is to satisfy the court that it is impossible for the partners to place that confidence in each other which each has a right to expect, and that such impossibility has not been caused by the person seeking to take advantage of it."

H Here we have this fact. Rothman has commenced an action charging Weinberg with fraud in obtaining the agreement under which he, Rothman, sold his business to the company. I ask myself the question: When one of the two partners has commenced and has not discontinued an action charging his co-partner with fraud in the inception of the partnership, is it likely, is it reasonable, is it common-sense, to suppose those two partners can work together in the manner in which they ought to work in the conduct of the partnership business? Can they do so when things have reached such a pass that after the eighteen days' arbitration which terminated in favour of Weinberg on the only point that was referred, Rothman declines to give effect to it, in the sense that, although the award decided that Litiger had not been dismissed and ought to be continued as a servant of the firm until removed, Rothman will not allow him to come and do his work, so that he, Litiger, is in the happy position now of receiving his wage of £5 a week without being allowed to do any work for the company in respect of which he is a servant. The matter does not stop there. It is sworn to that these two directors are not on speaking terms, and the so-called meetings of the board of directors have been almost a farce. They will not speak to each other on the board. Some third person has to convey communications which ought to go directly from one to the other.

Is it possible that it is not "just and equitable" [within now s. 222 (f) of the Companies Act, 1948] that that state of things should not be allowed to continue, but that the court should intervene and say: "This is not what the parties contemplated by the arrangement which they entered into?" They assumed, and it is the foundation of the whole of the agreement which was made, that the two would act as reasonable men with reasonable courtesy and reasonable conduct in every way towards each other, and that arbitration was only to deal with some particular dispute between the board which might be wanted to go to arbitration. Certainly the state of things that the only two directors will not speak to each other and no business can be conducted which deserves the name of business in the affairs of the company should not be allowed to continue.

I have treated this matter as a partnership. Under the Partnership Act, of course, the application for a dissolution would take the form of an action. This is not a partnership strictly, it is not a case in which it can be dissolved by action. But ought not the same principles precisely to apply to a case like this, where, in substance, it is a partnership. It is a partnership taking the form or the guise of a private company, and it is a private company as to which there is no way to be found out of the state of things which now exists except by means of a compulsory order. It has been urged upon us that, although it is admitted that the "just and equitable" clause in s. 129 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (s. 129 (vi)) which provides that a company may be wound-up by the court "if the court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound-up" is not to be read as being ejusdem generis with the preceding provisions of the section which afford certain specific grounds for winding-up [now s. 222 (f) of the Act of 1948], it has been held not to apply except where the substratum of the company has gone and there is a complete deadlock. Those are the two instances which are given. But I should be very sorry to suppose that they are strictly the limits of the "just and equitable" clause as found in the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. I think that in a case like the present we are bound to say that circumstances which would justify the winding-up of a partnership by action are circumstances which should induce the court to exercise its jurisdiction under the "just and equitable" clause and to wind-up the company. ASTBURY, J., dealt with this case, as it seems to me, in a most satisfactory way. At the end of his judgment he said that he tried to suggest a solution. He suggested that the two shareholders should "continue for six months to see if they can get on better, or that they should appoint one or more additional directors to assist them in the business." But this neither would do. If ever there was a case of deadlock I think that it exists here. But, whether it exists or not, I think that the circumstances are such that we ought to apply, if necessary, the analogy of the partnership law, and to say that this company is now in a state which could not have been contemplated by the parties when the company was formed and ought to be terminated as soon as possible. We are told that the court ought not to interfere because the company is prosperous, making large profits, rather larger profits than before the dispute became so acute. I think one's knowledge from what one sees in the streets can quite account for that. The number of cigarettes that are sold is enormous, and we can take judicial notice of that in judging whether the business is much larger than it was before. Whether there would be such profits made in circumstances like this or not, it does not seem to me to remove the difficulty which exists, which is contrary to the good faith and essence of this, that the parties formed the scheme of a company managed by these two directors which should be worked

A amicably, and it would not justify the continuance of the state of things which we find here. In my opinion, the appeal fails and ought to be dismissed with costs.

PICKFORD, L.J.—I agree.

WARRINGTON, L.J., stated the facts and continued: If this had been an ordinary partnership, with an action for dissolution, it seems to me quite clear that the plaintiff—the petitioner in this case is equivalent to the plaintiff—would have had sufficient ground for a dissolution of partnership according to the ordinary principle by which the court is guided in such matters. Section 129 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, which defines the grounds upon which the court can make an order for winding-up a company, includes the provision that such an order may be made if the court is of opinion that it is “just and equitable that the company should be wound-up.” At one time it was thought and there was judicial opinion in support of it, that in order to bring the case within that statutory provision it must be shown to be ejusdem generis with a number of other grounds which had been specified in a previous part of the section. But that opinion has long been abandoned, and the court has in more cases than one expressed the view that a company may be wound-up if, for example, the state of things is such that what may be called a deadlock has been arrived at in the management of the business of the company. I am prepared to say that in a case like the present, where there are only two persons interested, where there are no shareholders other than those two, where there are no means of overruling by the action of a general meeting of shareholders the trouble which is occasioned by the quarrels of the two directors and shareholders, the company ought to be wound-up if there exists such a ground as would be sufficient for the dissolution of a private partnership at the suit of one of the partners against the other of the partners. Such ground exists in the present case. I think, therefore, that it is “just and equitable that the company should be wound-up.”

There is one other point to which I ought to refer. It is said that according to the constitution of the company there is provided a means by which the quarrels of these directors can be overridden for the benefit and advantage of the company and the deadlock can be got rid of. The means suggested is the provision in art. 106 for reference to arbitration. But, in my judgment, that article does not contemplate a case such as the present, where in the daily intercourse between the two directors they are unwilling to speak to each other and discuss the affairs of the company. It relates, I think, to specific cases where a particular resolution important to the company cannot be passed because of a difference of opinion between the two directors, and it is, therefore, necessary to obtain the authority of some third person who will say what is to be done. It seems to me that that has no reference to the ordinary everyday business of the company and its conduct, and that it really does not provide the means of getting rid of the difficulties which are encountered in the present case. For these reasons I think that the order made by ASTBURY, J., was quite right and that the company must be wound-up.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Geo. & Wm. Webb; Arthur S. Joseph.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re TOD. BRADSHAW v. TURNER.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Sargant, J.), February 24, 25, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 1 Ch. 567; 85 L.J.Ch. 668; 114 L.T. 839; 32 T.L.R. 344; 60 Sol. Jo. 403]

Administration of Estates—Hotchpot—Advances during testator's lifetime to be brought in—Method of bringing into account the capital of and interest on advance.

By his will dated Jan. 18, 1892, a testator, who died in 1893, devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to the trustees of his will on the usual trusts for sale and conversion and directed that income until such conversion should be treated as income. The testator then directed his trustees to raise specified sums of money out of the proceeds of such sale and (in the case of each of his three married daughters) to add the same to the funds subject to their respective marriage settlements, and (in the case of an unmarried daughter) to hold the same on trusts for the daughter and her issue, with remainders over. The testator declared that his will was made on the assumption that his residuary estate (including the money to the income of which his wife was entitled under his marriage settlement and sums totally £7,300 which he had paid on account of his son, J.H.T., and "which sums are to be deducted from the share of my residuary estate hereinafter given in trust for his wife and family") would amount to upwards of £60,000. The testator then directed his trustees to hold his net residuary estate as to one half thereof on trust to transfer the same to three named persons to be held by them on trust to pay the income to M.T. (the wife of J.H.T.) and after her death for the benefit of J.H.T., his wife for the time being and his children and other issue; and the testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of the other moiety of his residuary estate, subject to raising £5,000 for A.M.T., on trust for A.M.T. for life, and after his death for A.M.T.'s wife and children. The will provided for the testator's children to bring into hotchpot sums advanced to them by the testator exceeding £1,000, with interest, and the trustees were given power to postpone sale. Various investments were from time to time appropriated to each of the two settled shares of residue, the appropriations to A.M.T.'s share having exceeded those to J.H.T.'s share by £3,300, so reducing to £4,000 the amount to be accounted for by J.H.T.'s share. A large proportion of the testator's residuary estate had not been realised, and it was desired to divide the remaining residuary estate between the two shares. The question arose how the income from the residuary estate (having regard to the necessity for J.H.T. to bring moneys into account) ought to have been divided, and how the division of capital ought to be made.

Held: in dividing the income, A.M.T.'s share ought first to receive interest at four per cent. per annum on the amount remaining to be equalised, and the rest should be divided equally; and in dividing the capital, A.M.T.'s share should first receive property to the value of £4,000, and an equal distribution should be made of the balance.

Re Poyser (1), [1908] 1 Ch. 828, applied.

Re Hargreaves (2) (1903), 88 L.T. 100, distinguished and explained.

Notes. Considered: Re Mansel, Smith v. Mansel, [1929] All E.R. Rep. 189. Re Wills, Dulverton v. Macleod, [1939] 2 All E.R. 775. Followed and applied: Re Hillas-Drake, National Provincial Bank v. Liddell, [1944] 1 All E.R. 375.

As to hotchpot, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 424 et seq.; and for cases see 44 DIGEST 1238 et seq.

A Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Poyser, London v. Poyser, [1908] 1 Ch. 828; 77 L.J.Ch. 482; 99 L.T. 50; 44 Digest 1248, 10768.
- (2) Re Hargreaves, Hargreaves v. Hargreaves (1903), 88 L.T. 100, C.A.; 44 Digest 1248, 10767.
- (3) Re Rees, Rees v. George (1881), 17 Ch.D. 701; 50 L.J.Ch. 328; 44 L.T. 241; 29 W.R. 301; 44 Digest 1245, 10752.

B

- (4) Re Lambert, Middleton v. Moore, [1897] 2 Ch. 169; sub nom. Re Lambert, Moore v. Middleton, 66 L.J.Ch. 624; 76 L.T. 752; 45 W.R. 661; 41 Sol. Jo. 560; 44 Digest 1247, 10763.
- (5) Re Forster-Brown, Barry v. Forster-Brown, [1914] 2 Ch. 584; 84 L.J.Ch. 361; 112 L.T. 681; 44 Digest 1249, 10771.

C

- (6) Re Craven, Watson v. Craven, [1914] 1 Ch. 358; 83 L.J.Ch. 403; 109 L.T. 846; 58 Sol. Jo. 138; 44 Digest 1248, 10770.
- (7) Re Willoughby, Willoughby v. Decies, [1911] 2 Ch. 581; 80 L.J.Ch. 562; 104 L.T. 907, C.A.; 44 Digest 1245, 10750.
- (8) Re Gilbert, Gilbert v. Gilbert, [1908] W.N. 63; 44 Digest 1247, 10764.
- (9) Re Hart, Hart v. Arnold (1912), 107 L.T. 757; 44 Digest 1248, 10769.

D Also referred to in argument:

Re Dallmeyer, Dallmeyer v. Dallmeyer, [1896] 1 Ch. 372; 65 L.J.Ch. 201; 73 L.T. 671; 40 Sol. Jo. 156; sub nom. Re Dalmeyer, 44 W.R. 375, C.A.; 44 Digest 1246, 10753.

Re Davy, Hollingsworth v. Davy, [1908] 1 Ch. 61; 77 L.J.Ch. 67; 97 L.T. 654, C.A.; 44 Digest 1246, 10760.

E

Re Cooke, Randall v. Cooke, [1916] 1 Ch. 480; 85 L.J.Ch. 452; 114 L.T. 555; 60 Sol. Jo. 403; 44 Digest 1249, 10772.

Adjourned Summons to determine on what principle income and capital should be apportioned so as to be able to carry out a scheme of division of the unappropriated part of a large estate of a testator who died in 1893. The will was dated Jan. 18, 1892. By it the testator appointed his wife Louisa Tod and his sons John Henry Tod and Alexander Maxwell Tod executors and trustees thereof, and, after giving two pecuniary legacies, he gave to his wife the use of his house at Walmer, called Walmer Lodge, rent free for a year from his death, and on her ceasing to occupy the same he directed that it should form part of his residuary estate. The only other testamentary provision for his wife was that she was to have the use of certain plate and other articles during her life. After some other dispositions of specified properties, the testator devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to the trustees of the will,

F

“upon trust at such time or times after my decease as they shall judge expedient to sell the same . . . [And he directed that] the yearly produce, until conversion of my real and personal estate, shall, as from the day of my decease, be considered as the income thereof for the purpose of the trusts and provisions of this my will, and be applied accordingly.”

H

Then followed a direction that the trustees should hold the money of which the testator died possessed and which should arise from the sales aforesaid (after payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and pecuniary legacies) as to each of three sums of £6,000 on trust for each of his married daughters, Anna G. Ogilvie, Eleanor M. Paxton, and Alice E. Christian. These sums he directed to be paid to the trustees for the time being of the same three daughters' marriage settlements, to be held by them respectively on the trusts (subject to a slight variation) of the marriage settlements. Another sum of £6,000 was directed to be held by the will trustees in favour of the testator's unmarried daughter Emily J. L. Tod during her life, and afterwards for her children and issue, and in case of the death of any such four daughters and the failure of her issue attaining a vested interest in the moneys so given, the testator directed that such moneys should be divided between J. H. Tod, A. M. Tod, and such of the testator's said daughters as should be then living (or should, whether sons or daughters, have died leaving issue who should have attained, or might live to attain, vested interests in the trust moneys bequeathed upon trust for them respectively) in equal shares, except that Alice E. Christian and Emily J. L. Tod were given a general power of appointment of part of their legacies of £5,000 each. Then the will proceeded as follows:

I

"And I direct that the sum or sums so becoming divisible to my said sons and daughters respectively shall be considered as an addition or additions to the sums hereinbefore or hereinafter given, upon trust for them respectively and be disposed of accordingly. But I declare that this my will is made on the assumption that the residuary real and personal estate disposed of hereby (including the money to the income of which my wife is entitled under the trusts of the settlement executed on our marriage, and the sums of £5,000 and £2,300, or thereabouts, which I have paid on account of my son John Henry Tod, and which sums are to be deducted from the share of my residuary estate hereinafter given in trust for his wife and family) after payment thereof of my debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the legacies hereby given (other than legacies to my said wife or any of my said children) will amount to upwards of £60,000. And I direct my said trustees to stand possessed of the residue of my said residuary estate, after payment thereof of the moneys hereinbefore mentioned, as to one-half thereof, upon trust to pay, transfer, or invest the same in the names of my said wife and my said son Alexander Maxwell Tod, to be held by them . . . upon trust to pay the income thereof to Mary Tod, wife of J. H. Tod, for her separate use for life, and after her death for the benefit of J. H. Tod, his wife for the time being, and his children and more remote issue, and, after the decease of J. H. Tod and his wife Mary," upon certain trusts in favour of their children. Then the will proceeded:

"And I direct my said first-named trustees to stand possessed of the other moiety of the said residue of my estate, upon trusts," subject to raising a sum of £5,000 for A. M. Tod, for investment, and to pay the annual produce thereof to A. M. Tod for life (subject to a forfeiture clause which is immaterial to this report). After A. M. Tod's death the investments of his share were to go as to £3,000 to his wife, Belle, for life, and after her death, as to that sum and the rest of A. M. Tod's share in residue, upon trust for his children. The will also contained the following provisions:

"Provided always, that, if I shall at any time hereafter give to any son or daughter of mine any sum of money exceeding the sum of £1,000 sterling at any one time, any sum or sums of money so advanced shall be considered as a payment by me on account of the sums hereinbefore bequeathed to or in trust for him or her or his or her children, and the amount so given (with interest from the day of the date of such advance) shall be brought into account and deducted from the sum hereinbefore bequeathed to him or her.

"And I direct that all investments to be made in pursuance of my will shall be made [in certain specified securities] with full power to continue any investments I may have at the time of my death for such time as my trustees may think proper.

"And I declare that it shall be lawful for my trustees to postpone the sale of my freehold property for as long as they may think proper, and, so long as any freehold or leasehold property hereinbefore given to them shall remain unsold, to grant leases of such unsold freehold and leasehold property for such term or terms of years, for such purposes, and such rents, and subject to such conditions as my trustees shall think expedient. I direct that the trusts and powers hereinbefore confided to my trustees herein named may be exercised

A by the trustees or trustee for the time being of this my will. And I also declare that the power to appoint new trustees of this my will shall be vested in the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee or in the executors or administrators of the last surviving trustee, and that on the occasion of any appointment of a new trustee or new trustees of this my will it shall be lawful for the person or persons making such appointment at pleasure either to increase or diminish the number of trustees; and that it shall be lawful for the person or persons making such appointment to appoint different sets of trustees of the respective moneys or shares hereinbefore bequeathed to or for the benefit of my said sons and daughters, or of the funds respectively representing the same."

C There were two codicils to the will which are not material to this report. The testator died on July 8, 1893, and, his widow having renounced probate, the will and codicils were proved by J. H. Tod and A. M. Tod.

The widow died in December, 1894 and J. H. Tod died in 1904. A. M. Tod died in July, 1914 without having obtained his discharge. Maurice E. Turner was in July, 1904 appointed a trustee of the will and codicils in the place of J. H. Tod, and Emily J. L. Tod's legacy of £6,000 was transferred to separate trustees. On June 10, 1912, Henry C. Bradshaw, Arthur B. Brown, and Henry Scott were appointed trustees of the will and codicils, in place of A. M. Tod and in addition to M. E. Turner (except as to Emily J. L. Tod's legacy of £6,000 and another legacy); Henry Scott was appointed a trustee in the place of A. M. Tod, and in addition to M. E. Turner, in respect of the property appropriated to J. H. Tod's share; and H. C. Bradshaw and A. B. Brown were appointed trustees, in the places of A. M. Tod and M. E. Turner, in respect of the property appropriated to A. M. Tod's share.

F A large part of the testator's estate remained unrealised down to the issuing of the summons mentioned below, and a considerable part of the estate consisted of house property. A number of investments were, from time to time down to 1910, appropriated to the two settled shares, the appropriations to A. M. Tod's share having exceeded those to J. H. Tod's share by £3,300, and thereby the amount remaining to be accounted for by J. H. Tod's share was reduced to £4,000.

G The income from the unappropriated property had been applied during 1909, 1910, 1911, and 1912 in accordance with the principle laid down in Re Hargreaves (2) and in 1913 and 1914 it was applied according to the principle laid down in Re Poyser (1). It was now desired to have a scheme for division, with the consent of all parties and subject to the approbation of the court as to the infants. This originating summons was accordingly taken out to ask whether the distribution of income in the years 1909–1912, on the principle of Re Hargreaves (2), was right, and whether now, in the apportionment of the capital between the two shares, the apportionment ought to be on a corresponding principle, or whether, on the other hand, the principle of Re Poyser (1) ought to have been applied, and there should have been paid to A. M. Tod's share during the years 1909–1912 interest at four per cent. on the amount remaining to be equalised, with a division of the residue of the income; and in the same way whether, on appropriation of the capital, there ought (as the scheme provided) to be first appropriated to that share property of the value of £4,000, which was the amount remaining to be equalised, and then an equal distribution should be made of the balance.

I Horace Freeman for the plaintiffs.

R. Roope Reeve for persons in the same interest as the plaintiffs.

Cecil W. Turner for the persons interested in J. H. Tod's share.

Fairfax Luxmoore for other parties.

SARGANT, J.—This case raises the question of the limits of the application of the rule or principle in Re Hargreaves (2).

In the present case the will of the testator is a comparatively simple one, and was made on Jan. 18, 1892. He died shortly afterwards, and his wife died on Dec. 25, 1894, and they had several children. His widow appears to have been amply provided for by settlements, and he makes no provision for her by his will, except that he allows her the use of his house at Walmer called Walmer Lodge, and provides that she may also have the use of the plate and so on. The material parts of the will are these: [His LORDSHIP read the facts of the case as set out above, and continued as follows:] He provided for four sums of £6,000 each, one for each of his daughters, and for the settlement of the sum left to the daughter who was unmarried at the date of the will, the other three sums being given to the trustees of the marriage settlements of the three daughters who were then already married. The will is to be construed on the assumption that the testator's estate was of the value of upwards of £60,000. The testator directs the general trustees of his will (who were different persons from the trustees of J. H. Tod's share) to hold the other moiety of the residue on trust, after raising £5,000, in trust for A. M. Tod, and then for his wife and family. There is another material clause which I ought to refer to, although it did not actually take effect, and that is the clause as to bringing into hotchpot sums of over £1,000.

What happened was as follows: A large part of the testator's estate remained unrealised down to the date of the present application, and a considerable part of it consisted of house property at Walmer. A number of investments were, from time to time down to 1910, appropriated to the two settled shares, the appropriations to A. M. Tod's share exceeding those to J. H. Tod's share by £3,300, and thus the amount remaining to be accounted for by J. H. Tod's share has been reduced to £4,000. It is now proposed, with the consent of the various parties interested (as to some who were infants, subject to the approbation of the court), to have a scheme of division of the estate still remaining unappropriated between the two moieties. The income of the unappropriated estate in 1909, 1910, 1911, and 1912 was applied on the principle of Re Hargreaves (2), and in 1913 and 1914 the income was distributed on the principle of Re Poyser (1).

The question now raised by originating summons taken out by the trustees of A. M. Tod's share relates both to capital and to income - viz., whether the distribution of income during 1909, 1910, 1911, and 1912 on the principle of Re Hargreaves (2) was right, and whether now in the apportionment of the capital between the two shares the apportionment ought to be on a corresponding principle, or whether, on the other hand, the principle of Re Poyser (1) ought to have been applied and there should have been paid to A. M. Tod's share during the years mentioned interest at four per cent. on the amount remaining to be equalised, with a division of the residue of the income equally; and in the same way whether, on appropriation of the capital, there ought (as the scheme provides) to be first appropriated to that share property of the value of £4,000, which was the amount remaining to be equalised, and then an equal distribution should be made of the balance.

I think that, for the purpose of dealing with this very simple case, I ought to look at the general principles and consider how the law stood before Re Hargreaves (2) was decided. As to that, there does not seem to be any doubt at all. Whether for the purpose of making good an advance within the language of the Statute of Distributions, or for the purpose of equalising an advancement made after the date of the will, where the will directed the distribution of the residue in equal shares between children, or, in the third case of a will giving the residue among children, with a special provision that advancements made prior to the date of the will ought to be deducted, or brought into account, or brought into hotchpot, or debited, the universal practice of the court was, I think, that which was stated by JESSEL, M.R., in Re Rees (3). There it was held that the advanced children must bring their advances into hotchpot with interest at four per cent. per annum up to the distribution of the estate. The Master of the Rolls was dealing there with a case where distribution was postponed until the

A widow's death, and he held that the sums advanced carried interest as from her death. He stated the practice of the court quite generally, and I do not think that any question as to that practice could possibly have been raised before the decision of Re Hargreaves (2). Re Lambert (4) is a decision of STIRLING, J., to the same effect, although he only allowed interest at the rate of three per cent.—a rate which has since been corrected to four per cent. Then came Re Hargreaves (2), which has been very frequently commented on, and generally distinguished. In my opinion, as I have already stated in Re Forster-Brown (5), Re Hargreaves (2) was an extremely special case, and one which depended on the particular language employed in the will, and on that language as interpreted by ROMER and COZENS-HARDY, L.J.J. I think the language of COZENS-HARDY, L.J., is the more general in its application, and, therefore, I will read that (88 L.T. at p. 101):

C “On the language of this will I cannot doubt that an actual ascertainment of the shares as from the moment of the testator's death was contemplated. The hotchpot clause contains an express provision that the securities that are to be brought into hotchpot are to be ascertained at the average price at the day of his death. It would be very singular indeed if part were to be ascer-

D tained in that way and the rest not.”

Both he and ROMER, L.J., clearly thought that there were special provisions in that case for the fractional ascertainment of the shares of the estate at the date of the death as at the then present values of the assets forming part of that estate, which mainly consisted of railway stocks and Stock Exchange securities. Since

E Re Hargreaves (2) WARRINGTON, J., has dealt with more or less similar cases in Re Poyser (1) and Re Craven (6), and in each case he has distinguished Re Hargreaves (2), and clearly indicated his opinion that it was a very special case not affecting the general practice of the court; and certainly I can find in Re Hargreaves (2), as reported, absolutely nothing whatever to suggest that it was intended there in any way to question or alter the ordinary practice of the court

F in an ordinary case of advancement with a direction for bringing that advance into account.

BUCKLEY, L.J., in Re Willoughby (7), refers to Re Hargreaves (2) as being a decision founded on the particular facts of that case and a very special case. As against that there is a note of a decision of NEVILLE, J., in Re Gilbert (8), but that note is not sufficiently full to justify me in drawing any real inference

G as to the exact provisions of the will or the exact grounds on which the learned judge proceeded. EVE, J., in Re Hart (9) seems to have come to the conclusion that the principle of Re Hargreaves (2) ought to be applied there, but I think that EVE, J., considered that the scheme of the will there was such as to render the decision in Re Hargreaves (2) more applicable than that in Re Poyser (1), and apparently those two cases were the only authorities to which he was referred.

H He was not taken back at all to the question of the general practice of the court antecedent to Re Hargreaves (2), and Re Rees (3) and Re Lambert (4) do not appear to have been cited to him at all. It appears to me that the decision is only valuable, therefore, with reference to the particular will which the learned judge had to construe there, and was not really intended to deal with the general practice of the court. In my judgment, the general practice of the court has not been

I affected by that case, and, if one considers it on principle, I do not see how a direction that an advance shall be debited against a share or shall be deducted as against a share or shall be brought into hotchpot can, when the advance has been made in money, be properly given effect to except by crediting the unadvanced shares for the purposes of the division with money advanced and distributing the estate on the basis that the money advanced should be first paid to the unadvanced shares, and that then the residue should be distributed equally.

It seems to me that it is a considerable refinement to equalise an advance of money by setting off against it the fractional share of an estate, and that, although that ought to be done where the language of the will, as interpreted by the Court of Appeal in Re Hargreaves (2), specially directs that fractional shares should be so treated, in an ordinary common form case of the kind now before the court the advance of money has to be equalised by making up to the unadvanced share of money a sum of money, and not a fractional proportion. Until Re Hargreaves (2) it would have been impossible to raise any question here at all, although, in view of that decision, the question was rightly raised in the present case. I hope that some case of this kind will shortly be taken to the Court of Appeal so that the general doctrine of the court may be settled, either by way of affirming the general practice before Re Hargreaves (2) was decided, or by laying down affirmatively that in ordinary cases the principle of that case ought to be followed. I, therefore, hold that the method adopted in 1913 (in accordance with Re Poyser (1)) was the correct method.

Solicitors: Collyer-Bristow, Curtis, Booth, Birks & Langley; E. F. Turner & Sons; Oldfields.

[Reported by L. MORGAN MAY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re WILSON. Ex Parte JONES

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Phillimore, L.J., and Sargant, J.), April 14, 17, 1916]

[Reported 85 L.J.K.B. 1408; 114 L.T. 969; [1916] H.B.R. 70]

Bankruptcy—Receiving order—Jurisdiction to make Deed of arrangement previously executed—Assent by petitioning creditor—Deed void as not satisfying statutory requirements—Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 47), s. 5 (1).

Where a deed of arrangement is void because the affidavit required by s. 5 (1) of the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914, to be made by the debtor stating the total estimated amount of property and liabilities included under the deed, the total amount of the composition (if any) payable thereunder, and the names and addresses of the creditors was made by an attorney on behalf of the debtor instead of by the debtor personally, a creditor who assented to the deed is not disentitled from presenting a petition in bankruptcy against the debtor and obtaining a receiving order, notwithstanding the circumstances of the case. PHILLIMORE, L.J., dissentiente, not being such as would justify the court, under s. 7 (3) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 [now s. 5 (3) of Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (2 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.)) 321] in holding that for sufficient cause no receiving order ought to be made.

Notes. Referred: Huddersfield Fine Worsteds v. Todd, [1925] All E.R. Rep. 475.

As to receiving orders and deeds of arrangement, see 2 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 313 et seq., 608 et seq., and for cases see 4 DIGEST (Repl.) 169 et seq., 5 DIGEST (Repl.) 1134 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Wilson, [1916] 1 K.B. 382; 85 L.J.K.B. 329; 114 L.T. 32; 32 L.T.R. 86; 60 Sol. Jo. 90; [1916] H.B.R. 17, C.A.; 5 Digest (Repl.) 1135, 9166.
- (2) Re Sedgwick, Ex parte McMurdo (1888), 60 L.T. 9; 37 W.R. 72; 5 T.L.R. 4; sub nom. Re Sedgwick, Ex parte Sedgwick, 5 Morr. 262, C.A.; 4 Digest (Repl.) 110, 481.

A Also referred to in argument:

Ponsford, Baker & Co. v. Union of London and Smith's Bank, Ltd. (1906), 94 L.T. 812; 22 T.L.R. 581; reversed, [1906] 2 Ch. 444; 75 L.J.Ch. 724; 95 L.T. 333; 22 T.L.T. 812; 13 Mans. 321; 5 Digest (Repl.) 690, 6059.
Re Bagley, [1911] 1 K.B. 317; 80 L.J.K.B. 168; 103 L.T. 470; 55 Sol. Jo. 48; 18 Mans. 1, C.A.; 5 Digest (Repl.) 1154, 9324.

B Appeal by the debtor from an order of a Divisional Court (HORRIDGE, J., and ROWLATT, J.) sitting in bankruptcy.

McCall, K.C., and Tindale Davis for the debtor.

E. W. Hansell and Graham Milward for the petitioning creditor.

C LORD COZENS-HARDY, M.R.—The bankrupt, Major Wilson, was a maltster and farmer, carrying on an old-established business which owned a good many assets. In the early part of 1915 he was serving his country abroad as an officer in the army. There were at least two writs which might be followed by executions out against him. A judgment was obtained, and in one of those actions it is said no appearance was entered for the defendant because the writ was handed over to the bank manager, he taking no notice of it. However that may be, judgment was obtained against Major Wilson by a Mr. Jones. Matters were then obviously getting rather serious. Major Wilson had executed a power of attorney in favour of his sister enabling her to carry on his business to a certain extent. Then there was correspondence by the family solicitor, who called a meeting of creditors, the result of which was that the solicitor wrote a letter to Major Wilson advising him that the best thing that could be done would be to execute a deed of arrangement under the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914, and that that could not be done without a fresh power of attorney, because the power of attorney which Major Wilson's sister then held did not go far enough to authorise execution by her of such a deed. The notice in the letter sent to Major Wilson said:

F “ You had better do this. If you do not execute it some one or more of your creditors who have obtained judgment may take proceedings against you in bankruptcy.”

G A power of attorney was sent to Major Wilson abroad—a power of attorney which authorised the sister not merely to execute a deed of arrangement on his behalf, but also to make the affidavit required by the statute. The deed was executed pursuant to that power of attorney, and an affidavit was made by the sister as was required to be done under the Act by the debtor himself. The trustee appointed by the deed proceeded to act under it. He took possession of Major Wilson's property. He sold part of it. He did this so far as a great part of it is concerned with the full approval of Major Wilson, who was over here for a short time in May, 1915, and had conversations with the trustee, approved of what he had done, and congratulated him on the price he had obtained, and, as appears from the report in the Law Reports of some previous proceedings which took place, Re Wilson (1) ([1916] 1 K.B. at p. 384),

H “ he took no exception whatever to the deed, and he asked, if possible, that no sale of his furniture should take place until he was able to return to this country. The furniture was not sold. The trustee explained to the debtor that he was about to offer all the public houses comprised in the estate for sale by auction, and that he had already instructed an auctioneer to act in the matter. The debtor did not object, and inquired what funds were in hand, and suggested that the trustee should pay a substantial dividend to the creditors. On May 12, 1915, the trustee wrote to the debtor giving him particulars of what was going on as regarded the estate, and on May 29 he wrote and informed him that the licensed properties would be offered at the Star and Garter on Wednesday, June 22.”

I

The debtor said that the trustee told him "that the farm valuations brought in something over £5,000. 'This I consider good and far above the estimate shown in my returns.' " Then follows this (ibid at p. 385):

"In October, 1915 [no dividend having been paid under the deed meantime] — the debtor applied to the county court judge for a declaration that the deed of arrangement was void upon the ground that it did not comply with the provisions of the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914, first, because under the provisions of ss. 1 to 5 of the Act the deed must be executed by the debtor personally, and the affidavit in support must be sworn by the debtor personally; secondly, because the power of attorney in itself was a deed of arrangement under s. 1 (2) (c), and, not being registered, was void; and, thirdly, because the assent of the statutory majority of the creditors to the deed required by s. 3 of the Act had not been obtained."

That application came before the county court judge and subsequently before the Divisional Court, and the Divisional Court there held on that application that the Court of Bankruptcy could declare the deed void. That decision came before this court by way of a preliminary objection, and we held that there was no jurisdiction in the Court of Bankruptcy, acting under its jurisdiction in bankruptcy, to declare the deed void, and was a matter intrusted to the High Court. We did not express any opinion on the question of the validity of the deed of arrangement in that case, because, as we had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter at all, it was not right for us to go into the merits. I myself felt no doubt whatever at that time that the deed could not be supported under the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914. I will express no opinion whether the deed was void because it was executed by the attorney under a power. I think that is probably not a good objection to take. But it was plainly void because there was no affidavit by the debtor.

The order made by the county court judge sitting in bankruptcy jurisdiction having been set aside, the major commenced two actions, one against the trustee to have the deed declared void, claiming damages and relief against him, and the second action against the bank, presumably for something done by the bank under the terms of the deed. That was in November, 1915. It was followed by a meeting of creditors, at which Mr. Jones presided. It is said that he was also a member of the committee of inspection under the deed of March, 1915. At that meeting the trustee explained the position and the creditors who assented to the deed and signed the resolution authorised the defence of the action and gave a guarantee in very wide form that the signatories would indemnify the trustee for costs, and also provide for his remuneration under the deed. Mr. Jones declined to give his consent to this. Mr. Jones then served a bankruptcy notice, and there arises the question whether the bankruptcy notice following the act of bankruptcy had been complied with. He went to the county court and the registrar made a receiving order. The case then came before the Divisional Court who affirmed the order.

The matter is confused and difficult by reason, no doubt, of the strange conduct of Major Wilson, the bankrupt. He takes up this position: "I executed this deed because you requested me to do it." What did they request him to do? To execute a valid deed? To say that they requested him to execute a deed which was a nullity is, to my mind, quite absurd. The deed that he executed he now says is a nullity, and never has been anything else but a nullity. It is said that whether the deed is good or bad is a matter which ought to be tried, and tried only in the King's Bench action. But why? The matter is ripe for decision now. There is an admitted act of bankruptcy, because of the notice requiring time and so forth, and the only answer to this part of the case is the deed which was executed. The court must, in a case of this kind when a deed of arrangement is set up in answer to a bankruptcy petition and the validity of the deed is challenged, decide at the earliest opportunity whether there is any valid deed, and

A if there is any reason why there should not be an adjudication. It is said that there is here a sort of estoppel. It is quite beyond me to see how that can arise here, how a person who has himself denied the validity of the deed can say, "You are estopped as against me from disputing that the deed is valid." The matter seems to have been put so clearly in ROWLATT, J.'s judgment, that I should like to refer to what he says (85 L.J.K.B. at pp. 1412, 1413):

B "The first point made against this petition in bankruptcy is that there is a deed of arrangement assented to by the petitioning creditor. The petitioning creditor says to that: 'There is an apparent deed, but it is a nullity.' Now, that raises an issue which it seems to me the court is bound to try. There is no question about it having jurisdiction to try it, because it does not arise under the section of the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914, which we had to construe on a former occasion; it arises in the ordinary course of bankruptcy where a deed is set up in answer to a step taken in bankruptcy, and whether it is a good deed or not is a question which has to be tried, and I think it has to be tried now. It is not necessary to say that some other court is going to try the question later on; it arises now, and this creditor puts it forward, and it does not seem to me that it would be just to postpone the trial of it by adjournment, because matters may not remain in a condition as favourable to the creditors of this estate if things drift on . . . So it has to be decided now; but, looking at the deed and the affidavit, it is apparent that there is a fatal blot upon the deed, because the affidavit did not conform to the statute."

E I am clearly of opinion that that is perfectly sound law. The deed of arrangement cannot be supported as a valid deed, and not being a valid deed it cannot be an answer to the right of the petitioning creditor to have an adjudication. Nor is it a sufficient cause why adjudication in bankruptcy should not be allowed. ROWLATT, J., then deals shortly with the question of estoppel, and says (ibid. at p. 1413):

F "Then lastly it was also said it was an abuse of the process of the court. That I am bound to say, I do not follow. What really is it? The debtor signed a deed of arrangement with which people were apparently fairly content, but then he came and said: 'It is no good deed at all.' Then one of the creditors said: 'You say the deed of arrangement is not good. I have a debt; if you do not pay it, it is an act of bankruptcy.' It seems to me if there is no deed of arrangement bankruptcy is a remedy which is very applicable to the present state of things, and I cannot see how possibly, if there is no other objection in its way, it can be said to be an abuse of the process of the court."

H In my opinion, this is a case in which we ought to say that the county court and the Divisional Court were right, a case in which, although Major Wilson has succeeded for nearly a year and a half in keeping his creditors out of their money, an end ought to be made of that, and a receiving order granted. The trustee in the bankruptcy will be enabled to recover from the trustee under the deed the money which he has in his hands, and which he has been prevented from distributing by the act of the debtor himself. The appeal fails.

I PHILLIMORE, L.J.—I agree with the Master of the Rolls as to the point taken under the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914. The affidavit not having been made by the debtor personally does not comply with the requirements of the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914. That being so, the petitioning creditor is not bound by his release, which is conditional upon its being a good deed, and he has got a good judgment debt, on which he issued properly a bankruptcy notice. All that way I go with the petitioning creditor.

Then I am bound, and there are many decisions in the Bankruptcy Court and the Court of Appeal which have made it my duty, to consider s. 7 (3) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, reproduced by s. 5 (3) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914. That sub-section provides as follows:

"If the court is not satisfied with the proof of the petitioning creditor's debt, or of the act of bankruptcy, or of the service of the petition, or is satisfied by the debtor that he is able to pay his debts, or that for other sufficient cause no order ought to be made, the court may dismiss the petition."

I have got to consider whether there is sufficient cause that no order ought to be made. In Re Sedgwick, Ex parte Sedgwick (2) the court thought that there was not sufficient cause. But they laid down fairly clearly where there might be sufficient cause—as I understand it, where the action of the petitioning creditor makes it in a business sense impossible or impracticable. I should like to use the exact words of the Master of the Rolls (5 Mor. at p. 264): "He must have made it so difficult that as a matter of business he could not pay."

In the present case there is a debt for £1,400 odd, and there is a sum outstanding in circumstances I am going to deal with in a moment belonging to Major Wilson if the deed is bad of between £8,000 and £9,000. If the creditor has anything to do with the money being removed from the major's control, it may very well be that as a matter of business the creditor has made it so difficult that as a matter of business the major cannot pay. To be quite certain about that might require some careful investigation of all the acts of the major. That discussion has not been suggested, and I assume for this purpose that which I think probably almost certain, that the outstanding fact is this £8,000 or £9,000 being outside the major's control does make him in a business sense unable to pay these creditors. That leads me to consider how it comes that this sum of money is out of the major's control, and whether or not the creditor has enough to do with it to make it improper that he should present a bankruptcy petition.

There is much in the major's conduct which one cannot entirely appreciate or understand. But, on the other hand, if we are to go into outside matters and not matters of dry law, anybody who has been worse served than Major Wilson, not by the creditors but by his own friends and business people, if his statement, uncontradicted, is correct, I cannot well imagine. As he was carrying on business under the name of Wilson & Sons writs could be served at his place of business, and not on him personally, he being abroad on His Majesty's service. He cannot protect himself, except by getting some faithful friend or agent, against the effect of writs served at his place of business. He put the matter into the hands of a bank manager, who neither entered appearance to the writs nor, as the major swore, let him know about them, or even told him that judgment had been signed under these writs. He was advised by a solicitor, who gave him advice to do that which, under the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914, anybody could see was a useless thing to do. However, that is perhaps by the way. On these writs having been issued, or judgment having been obtained, the creditors were convened at the request, it is said, of the solicitor of the debtor, and as the debtor is consulted about it, I presume that in some way he had heard that he was in trouble before the solicitor did convene that meeting. At that meeting the petitioner was present, the solicitor was in the chair, and the only record we have of the meeting is the communication by the major's solicitor to the major which seems to have been accepted as correct:

"At the adjourned meeting of your creditors held this week it was unanimously decided that you should be asked to execute a deed of assignment for the benefit of your creditors, and if this were not done in seven days some of your creditors who have obtained judgment would file a petition in bankruptcy."

I take that letter as meaning what it says: "You were unanimously"—that is, by this creditor among others—"asked to execute a deed of assignment," and

A the request was turned into a very imperative demand, because the alternative was: "If you do not, some one of them will file a petition in bankruptcy against you."

I pause for a moment to consider whether the creditors had not a considerable interest in threatening Major Wilson and getting him to sign this deed of assignment. In my view, if he had not signed this deed of assignment they would have had considerable difficulty in getting anything like prompt service of a bankruptcy petition. It is quite true that, under r. 156 of the Bankruptcy Rules, order for service out of the jurisdiction can be made against a debtor who is usually resident in England or is an English subject and is abroad, but leave has to be obtained, and I cannot conceive any court giving leave in these circumstances without a great many conditions—to give a debtor in that position an opportunity to deal with the matter, or a provision that the petition should not take effect until he had leave to enable him to come back to this country, or something of the kind. I can quite understand the creditors being extremely anxious, so to speak, to frighten Major Wilson into executing a deed of assignment. He executed a deed of assignment, which was good as a deed, but bad ultimately, because within the seven days no proper affidavit was obtained. It is not the fault of the creditor; it was the fault of his solicitor that he must bear the brunt of the circumstance that a proper affidavit was not obtained. The trustee proceeded to act under the deed of assignment, with the sanction of and at the request of this self-same creditor, who was one of the committee of inspection, and he realised a great portion of the major's assets, and has between £8,000 and £9,000 of the major's money in his hands. The major, after no doubt—which is against him—approving what had been done, finally elected to take that advantage which the courts allow a man to take of the fact that the deed was a nullity. He took proceedings and they were resisted by the trustee. The proceedings were wrongly taken in bankruptcy, and they failed. He then brought an action against the trustee to have the deed declared void in order that he might recover back the money and get damages for the trespass and mismanagement which there might have been in regard to the sale or anything else under the deed. A meeting of the creditors was held. The petitioning creditor was in the chair, and without saying that he was not committing himself, he without protest put the resolution, which was agreed to by all or the majority of the creditors, that the trustee should be invited to defend the action by Major Wilson and to support the deed. Without protest or saying he dissented in any way, he put the resolution. To my mind he was one of those who supported the trustee, or requested the trustee to defend the action. What was the result? A trustee under a deed, which is a bad deed, is holding a sum of money. I do not want again to decide more against the trustee than I can help. But it seems to me, as regards the claim to have the money back, estoppel is no answer at all. Estoppel, leave and licence, ratification, and all the rest, are excellent defences to any claim for damages. But if A. B. has got C. D.'s property under a void document, and he has received it to the use of C. D., he must hand it back to C. D. upon demand.

It, therefore, seems to me that as regards that part of the case the trustee will have to hand this money back to Major Wilson, or would have to do so if Major Wilson is not meanwhile made bankrupt. If Major Wilson had got that money now which by the action of the trustee in defending the deed he is prevented from getting he probably would have been able to pay this debt. At least there is sufficient probability to warrant our taking that view. Why has not Major Wilson got that money now? Why was that money in the trustee, and why does it remain in the trustee? It was in the trustee because Major Wilson was requested by the creditor, among others, to hand it to the trustee, to assign to the trustee the whole of his property. He said he was not requested to assign it by a valid instrument. I do not care about that. He was requested to assign it, and he has parted with it. He may be able to get it back because the instrument might turn out to be invalid; but by virtue of the instrument the trustee has taken possession, and has realised, and keeps it at the request of the petitioning creditor. Major Wilson gave the custody in fact to the trustee of his property, and the trustee, having realised the greater portion of that property at the request of the petitioning creditor, among others, declines to give it to Major Wilson. In those circumstances it does not seem to me that we ought not to make any order under s. 7 (3) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, in favour of a creditor who induced his debtor to put his property in the hands of a third person to keep that property although he has no right to keep it. In my opinion, this appeal, on that ground, should succeed.

SARGANT, J.—I am of opinion, with the Master of the Rolls, that the appeal should be dismissed.

It seems to me perfectly clear that an affidavit sworn by an attorney is not an affidavit by the debtor so as to comply with the requirements of the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914. So far, all the members of this court, and of the Divisional Court, and the judge of the county court have been of the same opinion. The main defence that has been put forward, and the defence which in the opinion of PHILLIMORE, L.J., should succeed, is that the present position of difficulty of the debtor has been brought about by the creditor, and, that being so, the creditor is debarred from attempting to enforce his debt in the ordinary way by means of a bankruptcy petition, because he has involved the debtor in having this money tied up in the hands of a trustee which might otherwise be applicable and sufficient for the payment of the creditor's debts. It seems to me that with regard to that defence two periods have to be considered—first, the execution of the deed of assignment, and, secondly, what has happened since the debtor returned home. As regards the execution of the deed of assignment, I can see no reason at all for considering that the creditors were attempting to put any undue pressure at all upon the debtor. It seems to me that they were acting in a friendly manner and, recognising that his position was such that he could not meet his engagements, were prepared to give him the less stringent alternative of executing a deed of assignment. But, of course, what they desired to have as an alternative to bankruptcy was an administration of the estate under an effective deed of assignment. When the debtor assented to that course he was left by his creditors at liberty to employ such solicitor as he might think fit, and I cannot think that in anything that was done with regard to the execution of that deed the solicitors were acting in any way on behalf of the creditors or otherwise than in the ordinary way as solicitors for the debtor. In that state of things they allowed the deed to be executed by the attorney, which I think was good, but they also allowed the affidavit in support that was to be registered with the deed to be sworn by the attorney, and that was bad.

That was a hidden defect which did not come to light for some considerable time afterwards. It seems to me that that defect was in no sense whatever due to any action on the part of the petitioning creditor, or any other of the creditors. That being so, one has to consider what has taken place since the return of the debtor which has had the effect of keeping the fund in the hands of the trustee, and, therefore, preventing it being applied in payment of the creditors. It seems that that was due primarily and principally, at any rate, to the action of the debtor himself taking steps to repudiate this deed on the ground of this hidden defect. For that purpose the original proceedings were brought on which he succeeded until the Court of Appeal decided that relief could not be given in that particular form of proceeding, and for the same purpose he has brought an action which is still pending, in which he has obtained an undertaking from the trustee which is the equivalent of an injunction that the trustee will not part with the property or the proceeds of sale of the property, pending the hearing of the action. That in itself has necessarily tied up the property and prevented its application in payment of the debtor's debts. What has the creditor done that can compare with this action on the part of the debtor? The action having been

A instituted by the debtor against the trustee, which involved not merely the declaring of this deed void, but also, I think, as the more substantial and effective part of the action so far as the trustee was concerned, which involved personal charges against the trustee, a meeting of the creditors was called by the petitioning creditor, and at that meeting a resolution was passed to support the trustee in his action. I have no doubt whatever that to a large extent that was for the purpose of relieving the trustee from the personal liability which he had incurred for the ends of the creditors. A form of guarantee was settled. That form of guarantee was not in fact signed by the petitioning creditor, but was signed by many of the creditors, and the action has since been defended by the trustee. That the petitioning creditor ever in fact authorised the trustee to defend the action in the particular way in which he did defend it I can find no ground for thinking. No doubt, there is a plea by the trustee that the deed is a good and effective deed, although there can be very little hope, I should think, of his succeeding on that particular plea. I cannot see that that which has been done in this matter by the petitioning creditor has added substantially or at all to the embarrassment of the trustee, or has really been the causa causans by virtue of which the fund has been retained in his hands and the creditors have escaped being paid.

D It is said that the hand of the court ought not to fall at present, or it ought to be stayed on the general view of the case, and particularly in view of the fact that this action is still pending, and that that is the appropriate tribunal for determining the question. I feel, however, great doubt myself that if and when this action comes to hearing that this particular question will ever necessarily have to be decided at all.

E It seems to me that the defences of leave and licence and so on are such that it might very well be that, independently altogether of any decision on this particular question, the court might acquit the trustee. If the trustee succeeded on that ground it would be necessary to decide the particular point before the court now.

F But, as regards this particular point, it seems to me that this court at the present moment is hardly the appropriate tribunal, or that it is the appropriate moment to decide this question, which affects the whole body of creditors and determines the status of the debtor. The question is ripe for decision now, and I agree entirely with the view on that point expressed by ROWLATT, J.

G I must say that, looking at the matter generally, any small inconsistency there may be, any affirmation or disaffirmation on the part of the petitioning creditor here is entirely outweighed by the vague and obvious inconsistency in the attitude of the debtor throughout this matter, an attitude which in fact resulted in the creditors being unpaid for the space of a year.

H I also feel that, unless this hidden defect had been brought to light at the instance of the debtor, it is very likely indeed that by the present time a large distribution on account would have been made among the creditors by the trustee under the deed. In any case, the whole circumstances of the case do not appear to me to be such as would justify the court, under the provisions of s. 5 (3) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, in depriving the creditor of the right to which primâ facie he is entitled ex debito justitiæ of having his bankruptcy notice given effect to in the manner appointed by the Act.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co., for Ansell & Sherwin, Birmingham; E. Flux, Leadbitter & Neighbour, for Sprott & Morris, Shrewsbury.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

JAMES MORRISON & CO., LTD. v. SHAW, SAVILL AND ALBION CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Phillimore and Bankes, L.J.J.), July 21, 24, 28, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 2 K.B. 783; 86 L.J.K.B. 97; 115 L.T. 508; 32 T.L.R. 712; 61 Sol. Jo. 9; 13 Asp. M.L.C. 504; 22 Com. Cas. 81]

Shipping—Carriage by sea—Deviation—Matters to be considered—Deviation to port off customary course—Sinking of ship by King's enemies—Liability of owners for loss of cargo.

When considering the true construction and effect of bills of lading it is important to everyone concerned, whether shipper, shipowner, or insurer, that the route by which the ship and goods are to pass should be determined so that the risks may be estimated on that basis. Where parties have agreed on a voyage and have specified that voyage in the bill of lading, the definition of the voyage must, as a matter of business, cut down the general words of the bill of lading to what is fairly applicable to the voyage which has been agreed on and defined. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule by which it may be determined whether any particular port is an "intermediate port" within the meaning of a bill of lading. In construing the document all the surrounding circumstances must be taken into consideration—the size and class of ship, the nature of the voyage, the usual and customary course, the natural or usual ports of call, the nature and position of the port in question. It is a question of fact in each case.

Bills of lading under which shipowners contracted to carry a cargo from New Zealand to London in their steamship the T. provided for "direct service between New Zealand and London," and contained the following clause: "With liberty on the way to London to call and stay at any intermediate port or ports to discharge or take on board passengers, cargo, coal, or other supplies . . ." An exception clause excepted the "King's enemies." The vessel kept a direct course from New Zealand to London until she reached the Casquets, when she turned and made for Havre, which was not a port usually and customarily visited by the shipowners' vessels on a voyage from New Zealand to London, to call at which, it being sixty-eight miles from the nearest point of the direct route to London, involved the ship going off that course 107 miles. Before reaching Havre she was sunk by a German submarine. The plaintiffs, indorsees and holders of the bills of lading, brought an action against the defendants claiming damages for the loss of the cargo.

Held: (i) in the circumstances Havre was not an intermediate port on the voyage of the T. from New Zealand to London, and in making for that port the T. was deviating from her voyage, and, therefore, the defendants were in breach of the contract contained in the bills of lading and could not avail themselves of the exception therein of the "King's enemies"; (ii) in deviating the defendants were in breach of their contract as carriers, and they were unable to show that the loss of the cargo must have occurred in any event and whether they had deviated or not, and, therefore, under the common law, they could not rely on the exception from their liability of the King's enemies; for these reasons the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed.

Decision of BAILHACHE, J., [1916] 1 K.B. 747, affirmed.

Notes. Followed: Shaw & Co. v. Symmons & Sons, [1917] 1 K.B. 799. Considered: Frenkel v. McAndrews & Co., Ltd., [1929] All E.R. Rep. 260; Hain Steamship Co. v. Tate and Lyle, Ltd., [1936] 2 All E.R. 597. Referred: Smith v. R. (1917), 86 L.J.K.B. 1147; The Cap Palos, [1921] All E.R. Rep. 249; The

- A Oscar II, The Bernisze, The Elre, [1921] P. 174; United States Shipping Board v. Bunge y Born Society (1924), 41 T.L.R. 73; Buerger v. Cunard Steamship Co., [1925] 2 K.B. 646; Akties Steam v. Arcos, Ltd., Akties Bruusgaard v. Arcos, Ltd. (1933), 39 Com. Cas. 158; A/S Rendal v. Arcos, Ltd., [1937] 3 All E.R. 577; Reardon Smith Lines, Ltd. v. Black Sea and Baltic General Insurance Co., The Indian City, [1939] 3 All E.R. 444; Vsesojuznoje Objedineni Soufracht of Moscow v. Temple Steamship Co. (1945), 173 L.T. 373.

As to deviation by a carrier, see 4 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 139-142 and ibid., 2nd Edn., vol. 30, pp. 293-298. For cases see 29 DIGEST 145 et seq., and 41 DIGEST 483 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- C (1) Leduc & Co. v. Ward (1888), 20 Q.B.D. 475; 57 L.J.Q.B. 379; 58 L.T. 908; 36 W.R. 537; 4 T.L.R. 313, C.A.; 41 Digest 485, 3172.
- (2) Margetson v. Glynn, [1892] 1 Q.B. 337; 61 L.J.Q.B. 186; 66 L.T. 142; 8 T.L.R. 244; 7 Asp. M.L.C. 148, C.A., affirmed sub nom. Glynn v. Margetson & Co., [1893] A.C. 351; 62 L.J.Q.B. 466; 69 L.T. 1; 9 T.L.R. 437; 7 Asp. M.L.C. 366; 1 R. 193, H.L.; 41 Digest 311, 1715.
- D (3) Joseph Thorley, Ltd. v. Orchis Steamship Co., Ltd., [1907] 1 K.B. 660; 76 L.J.K.B. 595; 96 L.T. 488; 23 T.L.R. 338; 51 Sol. Jo. 289; 10 Asp. M.L.C. 431; 12 Com. Cas. 51, 251, C.A.; 41 Digest 488, 3185.
- (4) Internationale Guano-en Superphosphaatwerken v. Robert Macandrew & Co., [1909] 2 K.B. 360; 78 L.J. K.B. 691; 100 L.T. 850; 25 T.L.R. 529; 53 Sol. Jo. 504; 11 Asp. M.L.C. 271; 14 Com. Bas. 194; 41 Digest 489, 3193.
- E (5) Davis v. Garrett (1830), 6 Bing. 716; L. & Welsb. 276; 4 Moo. & P. 540; 8 L.J.O.S.C.P. 253; 130 E.R. 1456; 41 Digest 488, 3188.
- (6) Parker v. James (1814), 4 Camp. 112; 171 E.R. 37, N.P.; 41 Digest 555, 3814.
- (7) Sleat v. Fagg (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 342; 106 E.R. 1216; 41 Digest 44, 266.
- (8) Lilley v. Doubleday (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 510; 51 L.J.Q.B. 310; 44 L.T. 814; 46 J.P. 708; 3 Digest (Repl.) 82, 183.
- F (9) Evans, Sons & Co. v. Cunard Steamship Co., Ltd., (1902), 18 T.L.R. 374; 41 Digest 486, 3175.

Also referred to in argument:

- White v. Oranada Steamship Co., Ltd.* (1896), 13 T.L.R. 1, C.A.; 41 Digest 486, 3174.
- G The Dunbeth, [1897] P. 133; 66 L.J.P. 66; 76 L.T. 658; 8 Asp. M.L.C. 284; 41 Digest 489, 3191.
- Balian & Sons v. Joly, Victoria, & Co., Ltd.* (1890), 6 T.L.R. 345, C.A.; 41 Digest 488, 3189.

H Appeal by the defendants from a decision of BAILHACHE, J., in an action in which the plaintiffs, consignees and owners of 158 bales of wool shipped from Wellington, New Zealand, in the steamship Tokomaru, owned by the defendants, the Shaw, Savill, and Albion Co., Ltd., claimed from the defendants £4,013 agreed damages for loss of the cargo.

The goods were shipped under bills of lading dated Nov. 19, 1914, and headed: "Direct service between New Zealand and London." The bills of lading gave the shipowners extensive liberty to load at any port in New Zealand, and contained these clauses:

"1. . . and bound (subject to the beforementioned liberties) on finally leaving New Zealand for London and with liberty on the way to London to call and stay at any intermediate port or ports to discharge or take on board passengers, cargo, coal, or other supplies, with permission, if desired, for the vessel to call at Rio de Janeiro and/or Montevideo and/or La Patta. . . 3. The owners are to be at liberty to carry the said goods to their port of destination by the above or other steamer or steamers, ship or ships, either belonging to themselves, or to other persons proceeding by any route, and whether directly or indirectly to such port, and in so doing to carry the goods beyond their port of destination, and to tranship or load and store goods either on shore or afloat and reship and forward the same at the owner's expense, but at merchant's risk."

The exceptions clause included "act of God" and the "King's enemies."

Sir Robert Finlay, K.C., Maurice Hill, K.C., and W. N. Ræburn for the defendants.

F. D. MacKinnon, K.C., and R. A. Wright for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 28, 1916. The following judgments were read.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J. The plaintiffs are holders for value of two bills of lading for a quantity of wool shipped at Napier, New Zealand, for London by the defendants' steamship Tokomaru. This ship was torpedoed on Jan. 30, 1915, by a German submarine when between seven and eight miles from Havre, and ship and cargo were an actual total loss. The plaintiffs sue for breach of the contract evidenced by the bill of lading. The defendants, while admitting the total loss of the goods, dispute their liability. They say that the loss occurred by an excepted peril, the King's enemies. The plaintiffs contend that the defendants are not entitled to rely upon the exception contained in the bill of lading, as they say the Tokomaru was deviating from the contract voyage by leaving the direct course for London and proceeding to Havre when the disaster occurred, and that the liberties contained in the bill of lading did not permit that to be done.

This raises the first question—namely, whether the Tokomaru was deviating in proceeding towards Havre. If not deviating, there is an end of the matter, and the shipowners are protected from liability by the bill of lading. If, however, the Tokomaru was deviating, the further question arises as to the liability of the defendants as carriers under the circumstances. The defendants contend that they incurred no greater liability than that of common carriers, and are, therefore, not liable for acts of the King's enemies. The bills of lading are dated in November, 1914, and are in the following form: [His LORDSHIP read the words in the margin of the bills of lading, "Direct service between New Zealand and London," and the clause set out above.] Clause 3 of the bills of lading was referred to, but seems to me to have no bearing on the present dispute. There was not any transshipment. The ordinary route for steamers of this line is, outward bound, via Cape of Good Hope to New Zealand; homeward bound, from New Zealand via Cape Horn and west of the Falkland Islands to Montevideo, then to Teneriffe or Madeira, and thence direct to London. Owing to certain instructions given by reason of the war the Tokomaru on her last voyage passed east of the Falkland Islands, and when off Pernambuco passed considerably to the east of her ordinary course. But nothing turns in this case upon any such variation, upon Admiralty instructions given by reason of the war. This ship was a cargo boat. Passenger ships of the same line going to and from New Zealand frequently call at Plymouth, but not so cargo boats. So far as appears from the evidence, this was the first time that a vessel of this line coming from New Zealand and bound for London had been instructed to call at Havre. The intended call was brought about in this way. A special arrangement was made to carry some frozen meat to France. At one time it was contemplated calling at Bordeaux to discharge this cargo, and in some of the bills of lading for part cargo of this ship liberty to call at Bordeaux was inserted, but on reaching Teneriffe the captain was instructed by the owners to proceed to Havre and discharge the meat cargo there. On leaving Teneriffe the course, whether for Havre or to London direct, is the same to a point about ten miles off the Casquets. There the routes diverge. From the point of divergence it is 107 miles to Havre and 118 miles Havre to Dover. Thus from the point of divergence to Dover via Havre it is 225

A miles; from the point of divergence to Dover direct it is 171 miles, so by proceeding to Havre the length of the voyage would be increased by fifty-four miles. From Havre to the nearest point of the ship's ordinary route to Dover is a distance of sixty-eight miles. The direct service between New Zealand and London by the Shaw, Savill, and Albion Line has been long established and is well known, and the boats always follow substantially the same route outwards or homewards, as the case may be.

B The first question is: Can it be said that the ship had liberty to go to Havre to discharge cargo by reason of the “liberty on the way to London to call and stay at any immediate port or ports to discharge or take on board passengers, cargo, coal, or other supplies?”

C It must be borne in mind when considering the true construction and effect of bills of lading that it is important to everyone concerned in the carriage of goods by sea—whether shipper, shipowner, or insurer—that the route by which the ship and goods are to pass should be determined so that the risks may be estimated on that basis. LORD ESHER said in Leduc & Co. v. Ward (1), (20 Q.B.D. at p. 481):

D “It is obviously a most important part of the contract of carriage by sea that the route by which the goods are to be brought should be determined,” and he has referred just previously to the difficulty of insuring the goods if it is not known for what voyage they were to be insured. BOWEN, L.J., in Margetson v. Glynn (2) and COZENS-HARDY, L.J., in Joseph Thorley, Ltd. v. Orchis Steamship Co., Ltd. (3), regarded the matter from the same point of view. Again, where parties have agreed upon a voyage and have specified that voyage in the bill of lading, E the definition of the voyage must, as a matter of business, cut down the general words of the bill of lading to what is fairly applicable to the voyage which has been agreed upon and defined. Any other construction would make business impossible: Margetson v. Glynn (2). In the same case in the House of Lords LORD HERSCHELL referred to the necessity of construing a bill of lading from a business point of view and in limiting general words by the main object and intent of the contract.

F He said ([1893] A.C. at pp. 355, 356):

“The ports a visit to which would be justified under this contract would, no doubt, differ according to the particular voyage stipulated for between the shipper and the shipowner; but it must, in my view, be a liberty consistent with the main object of the contract—a liberty only to proceed to and stay at the ports which are in the course of the voyage. In saying that I am, of G course, speaking in a business sense. It may be said that no port is directly in the course of the voyage (indeed that was argued by the learned counsel for the appellants) inasmuch as in merely entering a port or approaching it nearly you deviate from the direct course between the port of shipment and the ultimate port of destination. That is perfectly true; but in a business sense it would be perfectly well understood to say that there were certain H ports on the way between Malaga and Liverpool, and those are the ports at which I think the right to touch and stay is given.”

I In the bill of lading in question in this action there is given a very wide liberty to proceed backwards and forwards to ports and places in New Zealand, notwithstanding that such ports or places are out of or away from the customary or geographical route to the port of discharge. This gives the shipowners wide facilities for taking in cargo in New Zealand, but after having done so the ship is “bound (subject to the before-mentioned liberties) on finally leaving New Zealand to London.” This is the main object of the voyage. It is a voyage from New Zealand to London. Then follows the liberty “on the way to London” to call and stay at any intermediate port or ports, and then with permission to call at three named places in South America, but for a limited purpose only—taking on board coal, supplies, and/or cargo, and/or live stock. There is no liberty to call there for discharging cargo. The ships of this line habitually avail themselves of the liberty "on the way to London" to call at any intermediate port or ports by calling at Tenerife or Madeira, where they coal. That port lies on the route which they habitually take "on the way to London." But can it be said that Havre is an intermediate port in any proper sense of the term, as used in the bill of lading? It is distant sixty-eight miles from the nearest point of the route to London, and in order to reach it involves the vessel going off her course in one direction 107 miles. It is not shown to be a usual or customary port for vessels of this size and class coming from New Zealand to enter. In this particular case it was only for a special purpose, and by reason of a special bargain made after the plaintiffs' goods were shipped, that the captain was instructed to go to Havre. If the question be put, as in Leduc & Co. v. Ward (1): Is Havre substantially a port which will be passed on the named voyage, New Zealand to London?, the answer must be in the negative. If the question be put: Is Havre a port which would naturally and usually be a port of call on the named voyage?, the answer must be certainly not. If the question suggested by Lord ESHER's judgment in Margitson v. Glynn (2) be put: Is Havre a port in the course of the voyage, in the sense that it may be reached by the ship going slightly out of her course?, the answer must again be in the negative. By slightly out of her course is meant, does the ship on her course go fairly close to the port, and in order to enter the port, or call off it, would she only have to go a very short distance out of her course? Whether you take the distance in the present case as 107 miles or as sixty-eight miles only, the departure from the course of the voyage is quite substantial, and not slight. Again, the liberty is to call and stay at any intermediate port or ports, and if this liberty extends to Havre it seems to follow that almost any port in the English Channel available for a steamer of this size and draught, and on either the French or English coast, would be within the liberty, which certainly cannot have been intended or contemplated by the parties. The defendants take advantage of the liberty by calling at Tenerife or Madeira, which are intermediate ports, but, in my judgment, Havre is not such port within the meaning of this bill of lading. The defendants' letter to Mr. Findlay dated Jan. 8, 1915, shows that they themselves correctly appreciated the risk they would run in departing from their accustomed route.

I am of opinion that it is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule by which it may be determined whether any particular port is an "intermediate port" within the meaning of a bill of lading. In construing the document all the surrounding circumstances must be taken into consideration. The size and class of ship, the nature of the voyage, the usual and customary course, the natural or usual ports of call, the nature and position of the port in question. It is a question of fact in each case, and, in my judgment, BATHURNE, J., was right in deciding that Havre was not an intermediate port on the voyage of this vessel from New Zealand to London, that the Tokomaru in making for that port was deviating from her voyage, and that the defendants thereby lost the benefit of the exceptions in the bill of lading: Joseph Thorley, Ltd. v. Orchis Steamship Co., Ltd. (3); Internationale Guano-en Superphosphatwerken v. Robert MacAndrew & Co. (4).

If that be so, the remaining question is whether the defendants are protected from liability as carriers by the fact that the loss occurred through the King's enemies. If they, as carriers, were duly performing their contract of carriage, they would not be liable for loss occasioned by the King's enemies. But they are breaking their contract. They are quite unable to show that the loss must have occurred in any event, and whether they had deviated or not. True it is that there had been no previous warning of danger from submarines and that the event which occasioned the loss was wholly unexpected, but this does not assist the defendants. The answer to the argument of the defendants on this point is that given by TINDAL, C.J., in Davis v. Garrett (5) (6 Bing. at p. 724):

"But we think the real answer to the objection is that no wrongdoer can be allowed to apportion or qualify his own wrong; and that as a loss has

A actually happened whilst his wrongful act was in operation and force, and which is attributable to his wrongful act, he cannot set up as an answer to the action the bare possibility of a loss if his wrongful act had never been done. It might admit of a different construction if he could show, not only that the same loss might have happened, but that it must have happened if the act complained of had not been done; but there is no evidence to that extent in B the present case."

In Parker v. James (6) the loss occurred from capture by the King's enemies while the vessel was deviating, and LORD ELLENBOROUGH held that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the value of their goods on board the ship at the time she was captured by reason of the deviation. Sleat v. Fagg (7) and Lilley v. Doubleday (8) are also authorities against the defendants' contention. In my judgment the C appeal fails and should be dismissed.

PHILLIMORE, L.J.—The plaintiff company, owners of two parcels of goods shipped on board the Tokomaru, a vessel belonging to the defendant company, complains of the loss of these goods, which were sunk with the ship when she, being on a course for Havre and not far from that port, was torpedoed by a D German submarine. The plaintiff company complains that it had shipped the goods for a voyage from New Zealand to London, and that the ship was deviating from her course and on a deviated course when she was lost.

This makes it necessary to determine, first, what was the course of the voyage, and, secondly, if there was a departure from that course, whether it was justified by the liberties given by the bill of lading. [HIS LORDSHIP read cl. 1 of the bills of lading.] I do not think it necessary to dwell upon cl. 3, although it was relied
E on by the shipowners. The course adopted by the ships of this line (not being mail boats) is to come round the Horn, then put into one of the three named ports on the east coast of South America, then make a call at one of the coaling ports in the Atlantic islands, generally Teneriffe, and thence proceed straight to London. This is the usual course, and (except in respect of the South American ports)
F needs, I think, no use of any of the liberties or permissions to justify it. It was suggested that the call at the coaling port could only be justified under the liberty to call at intermediate ports. I do not think so. This call is one of the incidents of the voyage and is no departure. There are many similar instances, such as calling at weather stations to inquire about ice, or going to some station for a
G government pass through territorial waters, or to pick up a pilot, or calling at a preliminary port to lighten the ship in order that she may finish the voyage with a less draught. These are not, in my view, departures from the usual and customary course of the voyage. It is possible to carry the rule as to acceptance of that which is customary even further. It may be, if it is customary for the line to which the ship belongs, and of which the shipper knows, to touch at some intermediate port, not mentioned in the bill of lading, that touching at this port
H may be regarded as part of the customary course of navigation. For instance, it is possible that the practice of the mail boats of this line to call at Plymouth might be justified even without having recourse to the liberty to call at intermediate ports. Erans, Sons & Co. v. Cunard Steamship Co., Ltd. (9), seems to support this. I only mention this suggestion to show that I have not forgotten it, but I do not
I want to pronounce any opinion upon it.

I now come to the liberty clause. BAILHACHE, J., seems to give no effect to this liberty, or only to give it effect as enforcing the proposition that such departures from the direct geographical route as are incidental to the navigation may be made—that is, to justify that which I think needs no justification. In this I cannot agree with him. LORD Esher in Leduc & Co. v. Ward (1) and LORD HERSCHELL in Glyn v. Margetson & Co. (2) treat the clause as having a meaning and one to which effect must be given. I will quote the passages. LORD ESHER, in Leduc & Co. v. Ward (1) says (20 Q.B.D. at p. 482):

" Here again it is a question of the construction of a mercantile expression used in a mercantile document, and I think that as such the term can have but one meaning —namely, that the ports, liberty to call at which is intended to be given, must be ports which are substantially ports which will be passed on the named voyage. Of course such a term must entitle the vessel to go somewhat out of the ordinary track by sea of the named voyage, for going into the port of call in itself would involve that. To 'call' at a port is a well-known sea term; it means to call for the purposes of business, generally to take in or unload cargo, or to receive orders; it must mean that the vessel may stop at the port of call for a time, or else the liberty to call would be idle. I believe the term has always been interpreted to mean that the ship may call at such ports as would naturally and usually be ports of call on the voyage named."

In Glynn v. Margetson & Co. (2) LORD HERSCHELL said ([1893] A.C. at pp. 355, 356):

" There is no difficulty in construing this clause to apply to a liberty in the performance of the stipulated voyage to call at a particular port or ports in the course of the voyage. That port or those ports would differ according to what the stipulated voyage was, inasmuch as at the time when this document was framed the parties who framed it did not know what the particular voyage would be, and intended it to be equally used whatever that voyage is. The ports a visit to which would be justified under this contract would, no doubt, differ according to the particular voyage stipulated for between the shipper and the shipowner; but it must, in my view, be a liberty consistent with the main object of the contract—a liberty only to proceed to and stay at the ports which are in the course of the voyage. In saying that I am, of course, speaking in a business sense. It may be said that no port is directly in the course of the voyage (indeed that was argued by the learned counsel for the appellants) inasmuch as in merely entering a port or approaching it nearly you deviate from the direct course between the port of shipment and the ultimate port of destination. That is perfectly true; but in a business sense it would be perfectly well understood to say that there were certain ports on the way between Malaga and Liverpool, and those are the ports at which I think the right to touch and stay is given."

On the other hand, the words, however large, do not warrant more than a limited extent of departure. This is well settled.

None, however, of the cases cited comes close to this one. They are all cases where either the ship went back on her track or made an enormous change of voyage, bringing her when at the so-called intermediate port no nearer her port of destination than she had been at the beginning of her deviation. Some guide, I think, can be got from the limited permission to use the three named ports in South America. This is evidence that the parties did not contemplate an unspecified departure from the course which would be as great as that involved in touching at these ports. But the alteration of course necessary for going to Havre is less than the alteration for the nearest of those named ports. It is very difficult to draw the line, and the question is largely one of degree, but, on the whole, I think that the degree has been exceeded in this case.

There is another ground which seems to me a safer one for affirming this decision. LORD ESHER indicates—and I think rightly indicates—that there is a necessary condition which must be present to make a port an intermediate port. It must be one which "would naturally and usually be a port of call on the voyage." By this he does not mean so much as "customary." What he means is that as a matter of commerce and business ships are frequently sent upon an adventure which includes touching at these intermediate ports. If, for instance, it was common for vessels dispatched to Rouen to call at Havre, or dispatched to Malaga to call at Cadiz, to this extent Havre and Cadiz would be intermediate

A ports. Now, as BAILHACHE, J., points out, no evidence was given to show that it was usual for New Zealand vessels, or, I may add, vessels from South America, bound for London to call at Havre. It is indeed true that the Ikaria was bound from the South American coast to London via Havre, but this one instance is not enough. It is not, as far as we are informed, a known or usual voyage for vessels bound from New Zealand, or even from South America, to call at Havre on the way to London. I may add that the burden is on the shipowner to bring himself within the liberty.

As to the second point in the case, I can deal with it shortly. Davis v. Garrett (5) and Lilley v. Doubleday (6) lay down the true principle. As the accident occurred at the time and place when it did, the ship being then on her deviating course, the shipowner is responsible unless he can show that the loss or damage would have occurred if she had been on her proper course for London. There are circumstances in which conceivably this could be proved, but it could not be and was not proved in this case. Therefore, the judgment is right and must be affirmed.

BANKES, L.J. - It is well settled that where in a printed form of charterparty or bill of lading general words are found giving liberty to deviate those words must be construed in reference to the main intent and object of the contract. In Glynn v. Margetson & Co. (2) both in the Court of Appeal and in the House of Lords, and in Leduc & Co. v. Ward (1) some rules will be found indicating some necessary limitations upon such general words. In the last of these cases LORD ESHER speaks of the liberty as extending only to putting into a port which is substantially on the course of the voyage. In Glynn v. Margetson & Co. (2) in the House of Lords, LORD HERSCHELL restricts the liberty to a port which is in a business sense on the way to the port of destination. In the same case in the Court of Appeal. LORD ESHER speaks of what is permissible as a going slightly out of the sea course which the ship would take on the way to her destination. In the absence of any special considerations arising out of the terms or the subject-matter of any particular contract the question of what is or is not permissible under a general liberty to deviate must resolve itself largely into a question of fact, in which the geographical position of the port visited in relation to that of the port of destination and the additional distance to be covered as the result of departing from the direct or customary course will be material, but not necessarily the only material, matters for consideration.

There may, however, be cases where as a matter of construction of the contract it may be necessary to give a much wider limitation to the general words than those indicated above in order to give effect to the manifest object and intention of the contract: see per LORD HERSCHELL in Glynn v. Margetson. This, as I understand his decision, is the principle upon which BAILHACHE, J., has acted in the present case. The bill of lading describes the service provided by the defendants' fleet of steamers as a "Direct service between New Zealand and London." It describes the course to be taken by the steamers as "the customary or geographical route to the port of discharge." It confines the liberty to call at "intermediate ports on the way to London." BAILHACHE, J., treats the subject-matter of the agreement between the parties as a contract to carry wool from New Zealand to London by one of this regular line of steamers trading between London and New Zealand ports, and having a recognised route and recognised ports of call both out and home. To such ports the liberty to call will naturally apply; but it seems obvious that in such a contract some limitation must be placed upon the number of ports at which it is permissible to call, even though they may come within the description of being "intermediate ports on the way" to London, otherwise, from a business point of view, the manifest object and intention of shipping goods by such a line of steamers as those in question would appear to be defeated.

If some limitation is to be placed upon the number, then where is the line to be drawn? It must be a question of degree. The circumstances may be such that, from a business point of view, any exercise of the liberty, even to a single port outside the recognised ports of call, must, except in cases of emergency, be considered as beyond the contemplation of the parties, and, therefore, as defeating the object and intention of the contract. That, I take it, is the view adopted by BAILHACHE, J., who had evidence before him as to the regular route and ports of call of this line of steamers, and who had also the evidence of the owners as contained in their letter in reference to the course of business as between themselves and shippers by their line of steamers. This view is strengthened and confirmed by the special liberty inserted in the bill of lading to call at Rio de Janeiro, Montevideo, or La Plata for limited purposes only, a provision which would not have been necessary had the intention been to give full effect to the general words. The owners in their letter to which I have already referred emphasise this point when they ask that in future liberty shall be inserted in the bill of lading to call at French ports. In my opinion, BAILHACHE, J., took a view which was quite justified by the evidence before him, and I am certainly not prepared to differ from him upon it.

With regard to the defendants' second point that they can only be made responsible for such results of the deviation as could have been reasonably anticipated, I can see no ground derived either from principle or from authority in support of it. On the contrary, I think that the authorities to which reference has been already made are distinctly against it. I agree that the appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Parker, Garrett & Co.; Ince, Colt, Ince & Roscoe.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

LOUGHER v. MOLYNEUX

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Low, J.), February 8, 1916.]

[Reported [1916] 1 K.B. 718; 85 L.J.K.B. 911; 114 L.T. 696;
60 Sol. Jo. 605]

Friendly Society—Loans to members—Loan in excess of rules—Illegality—Repayment guaranteed by defendant—Right of society to recover unpaid balance from defendant—Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict., c. 25), s. 46.

The plaintiffs, trustees of a registered friendly society, lent £200 to a member of the society who gave a promissory note to secure repayment which was guaranteed by the defendant. The rules of the society provided that a loan should not be made to a member in excess of £50.

Held: the loan was illegal as being expressly prohibited by s. 46 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896; where a guaranteed debt is illegal it cannot be recovered from the surety under his guarantee; and, therefore, the loan was not recoverable by the trustees from the defendant.

Semble: if the transaction had been within s. 44 the transaction would have been valid.

Notes. An additional power to invest under s. 44 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, was given by the Friendly Societies Act, 1955, s. 2, see 35 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 247.

As to the power of Friendly Societies to lend and as to a guarantee of an illegal debt see 18 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 78, 422, and for cases, see 25 DIGEST 317-318 and 26 DIGEST (Repl.) 99, 100. For the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, see 10 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 531.

A Cases referred to:

(1) Fergusson v. Norman (1838), 5 Bing. N.C. 76; 1 Arn. 418; 6 Scott 794; 8 L.J.C.P. 3; 2 J.P. 809; 3 Jur. 10; 132 E.R. 1034; 12 Digest (Repl.) 305, 2344.

(2) Bensley v. Bignold (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 335; 106 E.R. 1214; 12 Digest (Repl.) 305, 2341.

B (3) Cope v. Rowlands (1836), 2 M. & W. 149; 2 Gale 231; 6 L.J.Ex. 63; 150 E.R. 707; 12 Digest (Repl.) 305, 2345.

(4) Victorian Daylesford Syndicate, Ltd. v. Dott, [1905] 2 Ch. 624; 74 L.J.Ch. 673; 93 L.T. 627; 54 W.R. 231; 21 T.L.R. 742; 49 Sol. Jo. 725; on appeal, [1906] 1 Ch. 747, n., C.A.; 35 Digest 204, 301.

(5) Bonnard v. Dott, [1906] 1 Ch. 740; 75 L.J.Ch. 446; 94 L.T. 656; 22 T.L.R. 399, C.A.; 35 Digest 204, 302.

C (6) Re Coltman, Coltman v. Coltman (1881), 19 Ch.D. 64; 51 L.J.Ch. 3; 45 L.T. 392; 30 W.T. 342, C.A.; 25 Digest 317, 204.

Action by the plaintiffs, trustees of a registered friendly society, in which they claimed from the defendant the sum of £130, being the balance due upon a promissory note in respect of which the defendant had acted as surety. The plaintiffs lent £200 from the society's loan fund to a member of the Society who deposited a policy of life insurance and gave the promissory note to secure the repayment of the loan. By r. 17 of the rules of the Society: "The committee shall not make any loan to a member on personal security beyond £50, nor any loan which, together with any moneys for the time being owing by a member of the Society, shall exceed £50."

E By s. 44 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896:

"(1) The trustees of a registered society or branch may, with the consent of the committee or of a majority of the members present and entitled to vote in general meeting, invest the funds of the society or branch, or any part thereof, to any amount in any of the following ways . . . (e) upon any security expressly directed by the rules of the society or branch, not being personal security, except as in this Act authorised with respect to loans."

F

By s. 46, of the Act:

"A registered society may, out of any separate loan fund to be formed by contributions or deposits of its members, make loans to members on their personal security, with or without sureties, as may be provided by the rules, subject to the following restrictions: . . . (e) A society shall not make any loan to a member on personal security beyond the amount fixed by the rules, or make any loan which, together with any money owing by a member to the society, exceeds £50."

G

By s. 84 of the Act:

"It shall be an offence under this Act if . . . (b) a registered society . . . does anything forbidden by this Act."

H

Lincoln Reed for the plaintiffs.

Rayner Goddard for the defendant.

I LOW, J.—This is an action by the trustees of a friendly society against the defendant, who as a surety was one of the makers of a joint and several promissory note. The claim is to recover the balance due upon the note. The defence set up is that the transaction is one which is prohibited by statute under a penalty and is altogether illegal, and that therefore the contract cannot be enforced. Now, the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, provides: [HIS LORDSHIP read ss. 46, 84, and 89, and continued:] All the material evidence is documentary. There are two rules regulating the investment of the society's funds. Rule 4 deals with the investment of surplus funds, and r. 17 with loans to members. There is no doubt, in my opinion, that this was a transaction under r. 17 and not under r. 4, and it was a loan far in excess of the limit of £50 allowed by the statute for loans to members on their personal security. A

It is contended for the defendants that, if the society lends more than £50 to a member, it commits an offence under the statute, and that, therefore, such a loan is irrecoverable. The authorities cited in support of that contention cover a good deal of ground. In Fergusson v. Norman (1) it was held that a pawnbroker who did not comply with the provisions of the statute 39 & 40 (Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 6, acquired no property in the article pledged and could not retain it. Then in Bensley v. Bignold (2) it was decided that a printer could not recover the cost of printing any work if he had not affixed his name to it pursuant to the statute 39 Geo. 3, c. 79, s. 27; and in Cope v. Rowlands (3) an unlicensed stockbroker was held not to be entitled to recover his commission or any reward for his work and labour. The cases, however, most relied on are the more recent ones of Victorian Daylesford Syndicate v. Dott (4) and Bonnard v. Dott (5), which arose under the Moneylenders Act, 1900. In those cases it was decided that a moneylender who had not complied with the regulations under the Act as to registration could not recover money which he had lent, nor retain securities given for the loan, because the transaction was illegal and void. In the earlier case BUCKLEY, J., said ([1905] 2 Ch. at p. 629): B C D

"The next question is whether the Act is so expressed that the contract is prohibited so as to be rendered illegal. There is no question that a contract which is prohibited, whether expressly or by implication, by a statute is illegal and cannot be enforced. I have to see whether the contract is in this case prohibited expressly or by implication," and he decided that the contract in that case was an illegal contract and could not be enforced. E

I have to apply these doctrines to the present case. It is said that I ought not to decide against the plaintiffs because the defence is not meritorious, but I have nothing to do with that. Giving the best consideration that I can to the authorities cited and to the able arguments on either side, I am unable to see anything in this transaction to take it out of the operation of the principles established by the authorities to which I have referred. In this case the lending of more than £50 to a member is expressly prohibited. The prohibition is clear and express, and though perhaps it is strengthened by the addition of a penalty, I cannot see how, even if there were no penalty, the plaintiffs could, in the face of the authorities, recover money lent in direct contravention of the statutory prohibition. The only authority which could be relied on at all for the plaintiffs was Re Coltman (6). There the transaction was within s. 16 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, corresponding with s. 44 of the present Act. That was a merely enabling section containing nothing in the nature of a prohibition. If this transaction had been within s. 44 of the present Act no difficulty would have arisen, but it is within s. 46, and, therefore, that case does not apply. Consequently there must be judgment for the defendant. F G H

Judgment for defendant.

Solicitors: Rawson & Stevens, for W. H. Davies, Cardiff; J. T. Lewis & Woods, for William Thomas, Cardiff.

[Reported by L. H. BARNES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

Re UNIONE STEARINERIE LANZA AND WEINER

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Viscount Reading, C.J., Avory and Shearman, JJ.),
May 23, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 558; 86 L.J.K.B. 1236; 117 L.T. 337;
61 Sol. Jo. 526]

B

Arbitration—Security for costs—Power of arbitrator to order—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict., c. 49), Sched. 1 (f) (i).

In the absence of express agreement between the parties to a reference the arbitrator has no power to make an order for security for costs.

C

Notes. Considered: Kursall v. Timber Operators and Contractors, [1923] 2 K.B. 202.

As to the powers of an arbitrator in the conduct of an arbitration see 2 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 31 et seq. For cases see 2 DIGEST (Repl.) 553 et seq.

Case referred to:

D

(1) Crighton v. Law Car and General Insurance Corp'n., Ltd., [1910] 2 K.B. 738; 80 L.J.K.B. 49; 103 L.T. 62; 2 Digest (Repl.) 575, 1078.

Also referred to in argument:

Re Pretoria Pietersburg Rail. Co. (No. 2), [1904] 2 Ch. 359; 73 L.J.Ch. 704; 91 L.T. 285; 53 W.R. 74; 48 Sol. Jo. 605; 10 Digest (Repl.) 1059, 7355.

Re Enoch and Zaretsky, Bock & Co., [1910] 1 K.B. 327; 79 L.J.K.B. 363; 101 L.T. 801, C.A.; 2 Digest (Repl.) 556, 910.

E

Special Case for the opinion of the court stated by an arbitrator pursuant to s. 19 of the Arbitration Act, 1889.

By an agreement made between Unione Stearinerie Lanza, of Torino and Genoa, Italy, incorporated according to the law of Italy (therein and hereafter called "the buyers"), and Robert Otto Wiener, carrying on business in the name of Robert O. Wiener & Co., in the city of London (therein and hereafter called "the seller"), disputes regarding the alleged failure of the seller to perform a contract for the sale of 400 barrels of animal fat were agreed to be referred to an arbitrator sitting alone. Points of claim on behalf of the buyers claiming £794 9s. 6d. as damages by reason of the alleged failure of the seller to deliver the fat and points of defence thereto by the seller denying all liability having been delivered, an application was made on behalf of the seller to the arbitrator to direct that the buyers should give security for the costs of the seller in the arbitration. The application was supported by a statutory declaration by the seller which stated that the buyers were a company incorporated according to the laws of Italy, and that they carried on business in Torino and Genoa in the said kingdom as candle and soap manufacturers, had no branch in this country, and did not possess any assets within the jurisdiction of the English courts. The said declaration further stated that the seller was advised and believed that he had a good defence to the claim, and that he had had and would have to incur heavy expenses in conducting his defence and obtaining evidence, and that the buyers had refused to give security for costs. The application was opposed by the buyers on the ground that the arbitrator had no power to direct them to give such security. The question of law for the opinion of the court was whether the arbitrator had power to order the buyers to give security for the costs of the seller in the arbitration.

G

H

I

By the Arbitration Act, 1889, Sched. I (i) [see now Arbitration Act, 1950, s. 18 (1)]: 29 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 89]:

"The costs of the reference and award shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators or umpire, who may direct to and by whom and in what manner those costs or any part thereof shall be paid, and may tax or settle the amount of costs to be so paid or any part thereof, and may award costs to be paid as between solicitor and client."

Greer, K.C., and Caradoc Rees for the seller.

R. A. Wright for the buyers.

VISCOUNT READING, C.J.—The sole question before the court is whether an arbitrator, under an agreement to submit the differences between parties to arbitration, has power to order a person in the position of the plaintiffs to give security for costs to the defendant.

This was a case in which the claimants were a foreign corporation, which, in the ordinary course of an action, would have been ordered, on the defendant's application, to give security for costs, and the proceedings would have been stayed until the order of the court to that effect had been complied with. The arbitrator doubted whether he had the power to make the order, and, in fact we are told that he himself thought that he had not the power. I think that he, was right, for I am of opinion that there is no such power in an arbitrator. He could always have been granted such power by express agreement between the parties, but it is not suggested that there was any agreement to that effect. It is said that this is to be gathered from the terms of s. 2 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, and from Sched. I to that Act. Under cl. (f) of that schedule [see s. 12 of Act of 1950] it is provided that the parties to the reference shall submit to be examined by the arbitrator or umpire, shall produce all documents within their power, and at the end of the clause there are these words:

"and do all other things which during the proceedings on the reference the arbitrator or umpire may require."

It has been held in Crighton v. Law Car and General Insurance Corp., Ltd. (1) that an arbitrator has a discretion to allow an amendment of pleadings delivered by the parties in compliance with a direction given to them by him, and reliance is placed upon that decision because of some words used by SCRUTTON, J., in giving judgment in that case. These are his words:

"A dispute or difference having arisen, a member of the Bar was appointed arbitrator, and he ordered the parties to define the difference by delivering to each other points of claim and defence. In my view he had a right to do that, both by his inherent powers as a judicial officer and under s. 2, coupled with the first schedule, cl. (f), of the Arbitration Act, 1889."

I merely refer to that passage because we have been pressed by counsel on behalf of the seller, with reference to the "inherent powers" of an arbitrator "as a judicial officer." I cannot think, and I do not think, that Scrutton, J., meant by those words to imply that an arbitrator under a submission by agreement was in the same position as a judge, and had all the powers of a judge. I think that what SCRUTTON, J., meant was that he had power under cl. (f) to order points of claim to be given to him, and, that being so, that he must have the power also, sitting as the person to decide the questions, to allow an amendment. I do not think that the words meant anything more than that.

The words in cl. (f) of the first schedule, upon which so much reliance has been placed in this case, do not, in my opinion, give the power to order a stay of proceedings pending the giving of security for costs. I think that they are words of general import, giving to the arbitrator the power to do anything which he may require for the purpose of ascertaining the facts or the law in order that he may decide the dispute. It would be a very wide extension of them, in my opinion, if it went further and said that he had the powers of a judge as to staying proceedings pending the giving of security for costs. I do not think that that would be a reasonable construction of the language of the clause. Obviously the words cannot mean that the arbitrator has all the powers of a judge, because otherwise he would have the power to commit for contempt of court in his presence, or he would have the power to issue a writ of attachment

A for default in compliance with an order which he had made. Counsel says that he does not contend that any such powers exist in the arbitrator. Of course, they do not. Consequently, it is apparent that these words of cl. (f) cannot be read as if they gave to the arbitrator the powers of a judge. Therefore, they must be read subject to some limitation, and that limitation, in my opinion is that the arbitrator may order the parties to do all such things as he may

B require to be done in order to assist him at arriving at a determination of the dispute before him. The dispute obviously will be, or can be, determined one way or the other, whether security for costs is given or not. The object of the application for security for costs is not to enable the proceedings to continue and for it to be determined by the reference whether there is a valid claim by the plaintiffs, but it is to put an obstacle in the way of the plaintiffs proceeding

C until they have secured the defendant, so that, should the defendant obtain an order for costs, there would be some security to him that the amount would be paid. That has nothing whatever to do with the arbitrator ascertaining the true position between the parties in order to determine the case.

The only other ground upon which it is suggested that the arbitrator possesses this power is that it is given under cl. (i) of Sched. 1, coupled with s. 2. It is

D sufficient for me to say that that clause deals with the costs which are to be paid, and gives the arbitrator full discretionary power with regard to those costs. The words relied upon on behalf of the seller are:

“The costs of the reference shall be in the discretion of the arbitrator or umpire, who may direct in what manner those costs or any part thereof shall be paid.”

E To order a stay of proceedings pending the giving of security for costs clearly is not an order directing how the costs are to be paid, but, on the contrary, it is something which precedes at the very outset of the reference the ascertainment of the facts upon which the arbitrator would exercise his discretion. I am clearly of opinion that s. 2, coupled with cl. (i), does not give the power,

F and that there is nothing in the Arbitration Act, 1889, which confers it, and that this is a power which is in the inherent jurisdiction of a judge of the High Court, but does not extend to an arbitrator. For these reasons I think that the question put by the learned arbitrator is to be answered in the negative.

AVORY, J.—I am of the same opinion. In my judgment, unless this power can be found in cl. (f) of Sched. 1, coupled with s. 2 of the Arbitration Act, 1889,

G I think that it is clear that it does not exist, and the words upon which counsel for the seller relies: “do all other things which during the proceedings or the reference the arbitrators or umpire may require,” are qualified by the words “subject to any legal objection,” which occur earlier in that paragraph. It is obviously a legal objection to the arbitrator making this requirement that he has no power to do it. I am of opinion that he has no such power, and

H therefore, that cl. (f) does not assist the seller.

SHEARMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Question answered in the negative.

Solicitors: Hyman Isaacs, Lewis & Mills; Parker, Garrett & Co.

[Reported by J. A. SLATER, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

McVITTIE v. MARSDEN

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady and Bankes, L.JJ., and Lush, J.),
February 15, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 878; 86 L.J.K.B. 653; 116 L.T. 629;
81 J.P. 109; 15 L.G.R. 249]

Justices—Protection—Conviction confirmed by quarter sessions—Distress warrants issued by justice—Conviction quashed by High Court—Action against justice for illegal distress—Justices Protection Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict., c. 44), s. 6.

By the Justices Protection Act, 1848, s. 6: "In all cases where a warrant of distress or warrant of commitment shall be granted by a justice of the peace upon any conviction or order which, either before or after the granting of such warrant, shall have been or shall be confirmed upon appeal, no action shall be brought against such justice who so granted such warrant for anything which may have been done under the same by reason of any defect in such conviction or order."

The plaintiff was summarily convicted of offences under the Cinematograph Act, 1909, and fined, and on appeal to quarter sessions, the conviction was confirmed. The defendant, a justice of the peace, then issued distress warrants in respect of the convictions. Subsequently, the High Court made absolute rules nisi for certiorari to quash the convictions on the ground that the summonses charging the offences had not been properly served on the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed damages for illegal distress against the defendant.

Held: the defendant was protected by the Justices Protection Act, 1848, s. 6, and the action did not lie.

Notes. As to protection of justices of the peace, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 714-716; and for cases see 38 DIGEST (Repl.) 89 et seq. For the Justices Protection Act, 1848, s. 6, see 14 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 804.

Appeal from a decision of Low, J., at Manchester Assizes. The plaintiff claimed special and general damages.

On the facts as stated in the headnote Low, J., said that it seemed to him that the real intention of the statute was to protect justices in circumstances in which they themselves were not the adjudicating authority, and to say that, if they acted with an actual confirmation before them by the court of quarter sessions of a conviction they should be absolutely protected. He, therefore, held that there was no case to go to the jury and gave judgment for the defendant with costs. The plaintiff appealed.

G. C. Kingsbury for the plaintiff.

Cyril Atkinson, K.C., and Barrington Ward for the defendant.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against an order made by Low, J., where the learned judge, having held that there was no case to go to the jury, gave judgment for the defendant. [His LORDSHIP stated the facts, and continued:] The first question is this: Can the plaintiff maintain the action having regard to s. 6 of the Justices Protection Act, 1848? That section provides:

"In all cases where a warrant of distress . . . shall be granted by a justice of the peace upon any conviction . . . which, either before or after the granting of such warrant, shall have been or shall be confirmed upon appeal . . ."

That is this case. The warrant of distress was granted by the justice on the conviction, which, before the granting of the warrant, had been confirmed on appeal. Then the section continues:

- A "... no action shall be brought against such justice who so granted such warrant for anything that may have been done under the same by reason of any defect in such conviction or order."

The plaintiff is complaining of the defect in the conviction before the justices, the defect being that he was not duly served, and he is complaining of that although his conviction was confirmed on appeal. That is the very matter

B that s. 6 says shall not be done. In those circumstances, I am of opinion that the case is directly covered by s. 6 of the Act of 1848, for the reasons which the learned judge below gave.

- C It is said that the conviction before the justices was quashed, and also that the order of quarter sessions was quashed for want of jurisdiction, and, therefore, it must be treated as if there was no conviction, although the conviction had been confirmed on appeal. In my opinion, that argument is not well founded; there was jurisdiction in the quarter sessions to entertain the appeal. It could have quashed the conviction. Section 2 of the same statute contemplates that there may be an appeal to quarter sessions from a conviction which may be quashed on appeal, and it uses the words:

- D "... provided, nevertheless, that no such action shall be brought for anything done under such conviction or order until after such conviction shall have been quashed, either upon appeal or upon application to Her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench."

- E So it contemplates that the appeal may be allowed and the conviction quashed; and it can hardly be argued that the plaintiff was not entitled to appeal or that having gone to the quarter sessions by way of appeal and raised this point on his appeal, he had not been duly served. It is not open to argument that the court had not full jurisdiction to deal with the matter on that footing and, if it thought fit, to say, "It is a fatal objection to conviction, and on that ground the conviction is quashed." It had full jurisdiction to entertain the matter of the appeal, and the ground on which its order was quashed was not on the
- F ground that it had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter, but merely because the conviction before the justices having been brought up to be quashed it would not be right to leave the order of quarter sessions standing, which, confirming the conviction, would appear to leave the conviction still standing. Therefore, it was thought better to bring up the order of quarter sessions to be quashed as well as to bring up the conviction itself. Therefore, the position
- G was simply this: there was a conviction by the justices, it was confirmed on appeal and, that being so, no action can be brought for anything done under it by reason of any defect in the conviction. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the appeal fails and should be dismissed.

BANKES, L.J.—I agree.

LUSH, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Hargrave, Son & Barrett; Field, Roscoe & Co., for Wrigley, Claydon & Tristram, Oldham.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ARMEMENT ADOLF DEPPE v. JOHN ROBINSON & CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Bankes and Scrutton, L.J.J.), February 9, 26, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 204; 86 L.J.K.B. 1103; 116 L.T. 664;
14 Asp. M.L.C. 84; 22 Com. Cas. 300]

Shipping—Demurrage—Delivery of cargo at named port—No stipulation for delivery at berth "as ordered"—Arrival of ship at port—No discharging berth available at quay—Ship moored to buoys—Readiness to discharge at buoys—Beginning of lay days.

A berth contract, the terms and conditions of which were incorporated in bills of lading relating to a cargo of grain to be carried to the port of A. and there delivered in accordance with the custom of the port, provided for a rate of discharge the effect of which was that the cargo should be discharged in six days. There was no express provision for delivery at a berth "as ordered". The ship reached the port of A. on Oct. 28, 1915, having passed the Customs and quarantine, and was made fast to mooring buoys, there being no discharging berth at the quay available for her. On Nov. 2 she was berthed at the quay and discharge began which was finished on Nov. 11.

Held: (i) on Oct. 28 the ship was an "arrived ship": Leonis Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Rank, Ltd. (1), [1908] 1 K.B. 499, applied; (ii) lay days began on Oct. 28 when the ship was ready to proceed to her actual discharging berth or to discharge at the buoys; and, therefore, the shipowners were entitled to eight, and not merely three, days' demurrage.

Notes. Considered: Cantiere Navale Triestina v. Russian Soviet Naphtha Export Agency, [1925] All E.R. Rep. 530; Noemifalia Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Minister of Food, [1950] 2 All E.R. 699. Referred: Societal Financiera de Bienes Raices S.A. v. Agrimper Hungarian Trading Co., [1960] 2 All E.R. 578.

As to arrival of ship for unloading, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 515-527, and for cases see 41 DIGEST 517 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Leonis Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Rank, Ltd., [1908] 1 K.B. 499; 77 L.J.K.B. 224; 24 T.L.R. 128; 52 Sol. Jo. 94; 13 Com. Cas. 136, C.A.; 41 Digest 569, 3937.
- (2) The Felix (1868), L.R. 2 A. & E. 273; 37 L.J.Adm. 48; 18 L.T. 587; 17 W.R. 102; 3 Mar. L.C. 100; 41 Digest 525, 3538.
- (3) Budgett & Co. v. Birmingham & Co. (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 320; 60 L.J.Q.B. 1; 39 W.R. 13; 6 T.L.R. 403; affirmed [1891] 1 Q.B. 35; 60 L.J.Q.B. 1; 63 L.T. 742; 39 W.R. 131; 7 T.L.R. 15; 6 Asp. M.L.C. 592, C.A.; 41 Digest 533, 3609.
- (4) Sailing Ship Lyderhorn Co., Ltd. v. Duncan Fox & Co., [1909] 2 K.B. 929; 79 L.J.K.B. 105; 101 L.T. 295; 25 T.L.R. 739; 11 Asp. M.L.C. 291; 14 Com. Cas. 293, C.A.; 41 Digest 448, 2810.
- (5) Tapscott v. Balfour (1872), L.R. 8 C.P. 46; 42 L.J.C.P. 16; 27 L.T. 710; 21 W.R. 245; 1 Asp. M.L.C. 501; 41 Digest 559, 3851.

Also referred to in argument:

- Vaughan v. Campbell, Heatley & Co.* (1885), 2 T.L.R. 33, C.A.; 41 Digest 448, 2805.
- Grampian Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Carver & Co.* (1893), 9 T.L.R. 210; 41 Digest 448, 2807.

Appeal by the plaintiffs, the shipowners, from a decision of BRAY, J., in an action tried by him without a jury.

A The plaintiffs, owners of the steamship Elizabeth van Belgie, claimed against the defendants, indorsees of bills of lading and receivers of cargo, eight days' demurrage for the detention of the ship at Avonmouth. The bills of lading incorporated the terms and conditions of a berth contract, dated Sept. 13, 1915. The cargo consisted of grain in bulk, and linseed and pollards in bags; the ship was to proceed to

B "Avonmouth and Sharpness (two ports) or as near thereunto as she can safely get, always afloat, and deliver the cargo in accordance with the custom of the port for steamers, unless otherwise provided for as per cl. 25, on being paid freight . . ."

Clause 25 dealt with the time for discharging, and provided that for grain cargoes, without fixed lay days, the rate of discharge at Avonmouth should be 600 tons a day based on bill of lading quantities, reporting day not to count. Demurrage was at rate of 3d. per gross registered ton per running day for steamers of over 4,000 tons dead weight cargo capacity. The bill of lading quantities for Avonmouth were 2,059, and at the before-mentioned rate of discharge this quantity should have been discharged in six lay days. The ship arrived at Walton Bay from Buenos Aires on Oct. 24, 1915, was entered at the Custom House on Oct. 26, and on Oct. 28 at 11 a.m. was permitted to pass into the docks at Avonmouth, where she was made fast to some mooring buoys, as there was not then any discharging berth at the quay available for her. Of this she was informed before entering the docks. On Nov. 2 she was berthed at the quay and discharge began, and it was finished on Nov. 11 at 7. p.m. C D E BRAY, J., held that the six lay days expired on Nov. 8 and allowed demurrage for the three days to Nov. 11. He did not allow the plaintiffs' claim in respect of the four days between Oct. 28 and Nov. 2 which were the subject of this appeal, on the ground that the ship, although an "arrived ship" on Oct. 28, was not "ready to discharge" her cargo until Nov. 2.

Leck, K.C., and W. N. Raeburn for the shipowners.

F MacKinnon, K.C., and R. A. Wright for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 26, 1917. The following judgments were read.

G H I SWINFEN EADY, L.J. [after stating the facts as above set out:]—Having regard to the decision in Leonis Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Rank, Ltd. (1), it is not open to dispute that on Oct. 28 the ship was an "arrived ship." Her destination was Avonmouth, and she had reached that place and entered the dock there and was safely moored at the buoys. The charterers were entitled, in accordance with the decision in The Felix (2) to indicate the discharging berth; but as the charterparty did not contain any express words empowering the charterer to name the berth, and the cargo was not for delivery "at a berth as ordered," the lay days would commence if "ready to discharge" although the vessel was not in her discharging berth. Discharge could have been effected at the buoys, although not usual, and the consignees of the cargo did not desire it. BRAY, J., states in his judgment that nobody really thought that there was going to be a discharge at the buoys, but he held that the defendants were at liberty to take advantage of what he said was a technical point, but a technical defect in the plaintiffs' case, that the plaintiffs had not proved that the ship was "ready to discharge" until Nov. 2.

The question raised by this appeal is whether on the facts not in dispute the ship was ready to discharge cargo when moored at the buoys. The hatches had not been taken off while the vessel was at the buoys, nor did the owners' stevedores bring all their discharging gear on board then. On the other hand, the receivers' stevedores did not bring any of their gear on board until the vessel arrived at the quay; they had to provide cables and weighing machines and planks, and also to provide the gear for lowering into barges any cargo so taken, and the evidence of the owners' stevedores was that as a rule they were able to get the gear which the ship had to provide on board quicker than the merchants' stevedores could get theirs. The plaintiffs' contention is that the ship was ready to discharge when at the buoys; that, if the merchants had been willing to take delivery there, the owners would have rigged up their tackle, and opened the hatches and been ready to commence actual delivery, as soon as or sooner than the merchants would have been ready to accept delivery; and that the only reason why these preparations were not made was that the merchants did not desire delivery at the buoys, but preferred to wait until the vessel was alongside the quay. It is the duty of the merchants to co-operate with the owners in the receipt of the cargo, and upon the facts I am satisfied that the only reason why the ship did not take on board the gang and rig the gear to fulfil the owners' duty in discharging was that the receivers were not desirous of receiving the cargo at the buoys, and so were not willing to co-operate in her discharge there and made no preparations for doing so. The ship was lying at a waiting berth, her voyage being ended; it would have been an idle form to take on board men and open hatches and make other preparations at the buoys when there was no desire or intention of the merchants to receive cargo until the ship was berthed at the quay. The ship was ready to discharge in a business and mercantile sense, and the idle formality of incurring useless expense was not necessary as a condition precedent to the commencement of the lay days.

Where a charterparty does not contain any express provisions to name a berth, and does not provide for delivery at a berth "as ordered" and the ship arrives at the end of the voyage specified in the charterparty, and is anchored or moored waiting for orders, and is ready to discharge in the sense that there is nothing to prevent her being made ready at once, if desired, the lay days commence to run. In my opinion this appeal should be allowed, and the plaintiffs should have judgment for the four additional days' demurrage.

BANKES, L.J. This is an appeal from a decision of BRAY, J., refusing to allow the plaintiffs' claim for demurrage in respect of any of the days during which the plaintiffs' vessel was moored to the buoys in Avonmouth Dock before she reached a berth at the quay. The vessel was in fact admitted into the dock and moored to the buoys at 11 a.m. on Oct. 28. There was at that time no berth vacant for her and she was not in fact berthed until Nov. 2. The vessel had passed the Customs before she entered the dock, and while lying at the buoys there was nothing to prevent the discharge of the cargo into lighters had the consignees and the shipowners co-operated to discharge the vessel in that manner. The point in dispute between the parties was whether the vessel was ready to discharge when she was moored to the buoys and while she remained there. For the owners it was contended that she was; for the consignees that she was not. Questions both of fact and of law were raised in the court below and in this court. For the consignees it was contended that the vessel must be actually ready to discharge in order to entitle the owners to claim demurrage, and that this vessel was not ready at any time while she lay at the buoys. For the owners it was contended that, as the obligation upon consignees was to discharge in a fixed number of days, it was not necessary for them to prove a readiness and willingness on the part of the master to discharge, but the consignees must show that they were prevented from taking delivery by some act of the master or those for whom he was responsible. For the latter contention the owners relied upon Budgett & Co. v. Binnington & Co. (3) and particularly upon the judgment of VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J. (25 Q.B.D. at p. 326) in the report of the case in the court of first instance. The defendants, on the other hand relied upon the decision in Leonis Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Rank, Ltd. (1), and particularly upon a passage in the judgment of KENNEDY, L.J. ([1908] 1 K.B.

A at pp. 517, 518). BRAY, J., accepted the contentions of the defendants both upon the facts and the law.

B It is not necessary to express any opinion upon the question of law as I do not agree with the learned judge's conclusion upon the facts, with regard to which appears to me that there was really no dispute upon the point which for the present purpose is the only material one. [HIS LORDSHIP referred to the evidence, said that it appeared to him quite clear upon the evidence that all parties concerned—namely, the dock officials, the consignees, and the representatives of the ship—were all of one mind, and that no one either desired or required the discharge to commence until the vessel arrived at her berth and it was a matter of mutual arrangement, or understanding, that the discharge should not commence at the buoys, and concluded:] Under these circumstances, whatever C the exact legal obligation of the shipowner may be with regard to the readiness of his vessel, in the present case I think that it does not lie in the defendants' mouth to say that the ship was not ready, and on these grounds I think that the appeal succeeds.

D SCRUTTON, L.J. [having stated the facts:] The phrase that the ship must be "ready to load" or "ready to discharge" before her time for loading or discharge can begin has been frequently used by the court and text-writers. In Sailing Ship Lyderhorn Co., Ltd. v. Duncan For & Co. (4) the Court of Appeal adopted as to "readiness to load" the language of MR. CARVER'S work (CARRIAGE OF GOODS BY SEA) at s. 221, that a vessel is not ready to load unless she is discharged and ready in all her holds so as to give the charterers complete E control of every portion of the ship available for cargo. But this does not give much assistance as to "readiness to discharge." In particular I cannot find that the meaning of that phrase has ever been considered in those cases where the place where time begins is a place where ships wait to go to a berth, and not a place where ships usually discharge. Up to 1908 this position would arise in cases where the ship was chartered to discharge in a dock, such as Tapscott v. Balfour (5) and where time began when she got into the dock, although owing to F the crowded state of the dock she could not get to her discharging berth. I should be surprised to find that in practice it was ever thought necessary for the ship as soon as she entered the dock to rig her discharging gear, and get men to do her part of the discharging on board, before her time could begin to run, though it was well known that, at the place where she was, discharging G would not take place. Such a requirement would be quite unbusinesslike. The question assumed a much wider aspect when in 1907 the decision of the Court of Appeal in Leonis Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Rank, Ltd. (1) introduced some certainty into a law at that time confused by a number of very contradictory decisions.

H The practical question of business was on whom should the risk of losing time, in waiting till a berth was ready, fall—on the goods owner or the shipowner. When the charter was to a dock, time began when the ship got into the dock though she had to wait for a berth, and the risk of loss of time was placed on the goods owner. When the charter was to a "berth as ordered," time did not begin till the vessel reached the berth though the goods owner ordered a berth which the shipowner could not reach at once, and the risk of I loss of time was placed on the shipowner. On whom did the risk fall when the ship was chartered to a port and the goods owner had the right to name the berth in the port to which the ship should go? The Court of Appeal in Leonis Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Rank, Ltd. (1) held that the time began when the ship had reached the port in the commercial sense, where she was at the disposal of the charterer "as a ship ready as far as she is concerned to discharge," though not at the discharging berth: per BUCKLEY, L.J., [1908] 1 K.B. at p. 511. This decision at once added largely to the number of cases where time would begin before the ship was at her discharging berth, and I cannot bring myself to hold that it was necessary for such a ship before her time would begin—that is, when the risk of loss of time is transferred to the goods owner—to make preparations for discharging at a place where on the hypothesis discharging will not take place. In Leonis Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Rank, Ltd. (1) time began while the vessel was lying in the river Parana, where ships were usually loaded when they got alongside quays and piers. I do not think any court containing judges so conversant with commercial matters, as LORD ALVERSTONE and KENNEDY, L.J., would have held the ship, when her time began in the river, was required to have her derricks rigged and men on board to do work which could not be required till she got alongside the pier. Where time begins at a usual discharging place I think it may well be that the ship must then be ready for a state of things which may at once happen. But when the ship's time begins at a place which is not a usual discharging berth (and she cannot be required to discharge at any other place) I think her obligation to be ready to discharge is fulfilled if she is free from Customs or quarantine restrictions and ready to proceed to her actual discharging berth and to be ready to discharge when she reaches it. If this is so, unless the buoys in Avonmouth dock were a usual discharging place, the ship was not bound to rig her stevedores gear and have her stevedores on board for her work while lying there in order that her time should begin. The risk of loss of time while waiting there for a discharging berth would under the decision in Leonis Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Rank, Ltd. (1) be on the goods owners.

As to the receivers of grain, I am clear that they did not intend to take delivery at the buoys, or treat the buoys as a discharging berth, however ready the ship was. They had placed their share of the discharge in the hands of the dock authorities, and those authorities, who were trying to set up a custom that time did not begin till the vessel reached the quay, wrote on Nov. 3:

"We cannot depart from the principle that the steamer's time, so far as the dock committee is concerned, commences from the time that the steamer is in berth and ready to deliver. This was not till the morning of Nov. 3."

The case of the linseed is more difficult, as the linseed was going into lighters; and the receiver of the linseed gave very contradictory evidence. "The stevedores had not put in their gear. If they had we should have taken delivery at the buoys . . . We arranged we could not work at the buoys; neither of us could . . . I did not mean we were ready to have taken delivery at the buoys." It is clear, however, that the linseed receivers never asked for delivery at the buoys, or sent to take delivery; and I am not satisfied on the evidence that the buoys were a usual place of discharge for linseed. I think, therefore, time began to run when the ship reached the buoys, and the ship was ready to discharge, in the sense explained, but as it would take half a day to rig the stevedore's gear I think the amount recovered should only be seven days' demurrage, or £371 1s. 9d., for which sum judgment should be entered for the plaintiffs with costs here and below. It was argued that the principle of Budgett & Co. v. Binnington & Co. (3) that in a fixed time charter the goods owner is not excused by the inability of the shipowner to perform his work when the time has begun to run, unless such inability arises from the default of the shipowner or his servants and prevents the goods owner from fulfilling his part of the work, applies also when the shipowner's inability is in existence at the commencement of the lay days. It is not necessary to decide this point now, though it and the effect of the decision in Budgett & Co. v. Binnington & Co. (3) may require consideration on some future occasion. The appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Holman, Fenwick & Willan; Downing, Handcock & Co.

[Reported by E. J. M. CHAPLIN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

CHAPRONIERE v. LAMBERT

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Bankes and Warrington, L.J.J.), June 27, 28, 1917]

B

[Reported [1917] 2 Ch. 356; 86 L.J.Ch. 726; 117 L.T. 353;
33 T.L.R. 485; 61 Sol. Jo. 592]

Landlord and Tenant—Lease—Agreement for—Part performance—Payment of rent in advance—Statute of Frauds (1677) (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4.

C

Payment of rent in advance under an oral agreement for a lease is not such an act of part performance as to take the case out of the operation of s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds and enable the court to enforce the contract.

Thursby v. Eccles (1) (1900), 49 W.R. 281, applied.

Notes. The relevant part of s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds has been replaced by s. 40 of the Law of Property Act, 1925.

D

As to memorandum of a contract for a lease, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 444 et seq.; and for cases see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 397 et seq. For the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 40, see 20 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 500.

Cases referred to:

E

- (1) Thursby v. Eccles (1900), 70 L.J.Q.B. 91; 49 W.R. 281; 17 T.L.R. 130; 45 Sol. Jo. 120; 30 Digest (Repl.) 408, 513.
- (2) Stubbs v. Watson (1884), 28 Ch.D. 305; 54 L.J.Ch. 626; 52 L.T. 129; 33 W.R. 118; 1 T.L.R. 83; 40 Digest (Repl.) 24, 101.
- (3) Pearce v. Garbar, [1897] 1 Q.B. 688; 66 L.J.Q.B. 457; 76 L.T. 441; 45 W.R. 518; 13 T.L.R. 349, C.A.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 25, 111.
- (4) Maddison v. Alderson (1883), 8 App. Cas. 467; 52 L.J.Q.B. 737; 49 L.T. 303; 47 J.P. 821; 31 W.R. 820, H.L.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 38, 210.
- (5) Nann v. Fabian (1865), 1 Ch. App. 35; 35 L.J.Ch. 140; 13 L.T. 343; 29 J.P. 758; 11 Jur. N.S. 868, L.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 409, 534.

F

Also referred to in argument:

Miller and Aldworth, Ltd. v. Sharp, [1899] 1 Ch. 622; 68 L.J.Ch. 322; 80 L.T. 77; 47 W.R. 268; 43 Sol. Jo. 245; 30 Digest (Repl.) 409, 535.

Appeal by the plaintiff from a decision of EVE, J.

G

By his statement of claim, the plaintiff alleged that, by an agreement made orally at an interview on or about April 22, 1916, the defendant agreed to grant to the plaintiff a lease of Limbourne Farm, Mundon, Essex, for three, seven or fourteen years (at the plaintiff's option), with the option to the plaintiff of the purchase of the fee simply of the farm at the price of £2,100, the plaintiff to take certain fixtures to be subsequently agreed. The lease was to be completed on June 24, 1916. The plaintiff also alleged that the agreement so entered into had been part performed as follows: (a) by the defendant writing a memorandum of the terms and handing the same to the plaintiff for the latter to copy; (b) by the plaintiff making and the defendant accepting payment of the rent from June 24, 1916, to Sept. 29, 1916; (c) by the defendant writing and signing a list of the fixtures and certain fittings, and by the plaintiff and the defendant going through the same and agreeing the prices therefor on or about April 26,

H

I

1916; (d) by the plaintiff making, and the defendant accepting, payment for the fixtures and fittings, and by the defendant orally undertaking to hold the same on the plaintiff's behalf pending the aforesaid completion; and (e) by the submission to the plaintiff's solicitor by the defendant's solicitor of a draft lease. The plaintiff further alleged that, by reason of the matters above set out and by his conduct in relation thereto, the defendant was estopped from denying the existence of the agreement. In these circumstances, the plaintiff claimed a declaration that he was entitled to specific performance of the agreement; an injunction restraining the defendant, his servants, and agents from selling, letting, or otherwise dealing with the farm contrary to such agreement; and that the defendant might be ordered to execute a proper lease of the farm to the plaintiff in accordance with the agreement. Further and alternatively the plaintiff claimed damages. By his defence, the defendant, while denying that he had made any agreement with the plaintiff as alleged by him, and that there had been any part performance by the plaintiff, or by the defendant of any agreement between them, and that no memorandum of any terms of agreement between the plaintiff and defendant was written by the defendant, stated that a cheque for £25 which was given by the plaintiff on April 22, 1916, to the defendant was not a payment of or on account of any agreed rent, but was paid to be held by the defendant on account of the rent of the farm in case an agreement should be come to by which the defendant would agree to let the farm to the plaintiff. The defendant alleged that no such agreement was come to or arrived at, and that he held the sum of £25 to the use of the plaintiff. The defendant admitted that, on or about April 26, 1916, he prepared a list of certain chattels, and that in such list he wrote against each item thereof the price at which he was willing to sell such chattels; and he stated that the plaintiff on that date agreed orally with the defendant that, if an agreement to take a lease from the defendant was arrived at, the plaintiff should be at liberty to purchase such of the chattels mentioned in the list as he should select at the prices therein fixed as aforesaid, and that none of the items specified in the list were fixtures. The defendant alleged that the plaintiff paid to the defendant on April 26, 1916, £30 on account of the price of such of the chattels as, if the agreement to let was arrived at, the plaintiff should select. The defendant also alleged that, on May 23, 1916, the plaintiff removed from the defendant's premises certain of the chattels mentioned in the list. The defendant submitted that the plaintiff ought to be taken as having purchased the last-mentioned chattels at the prices thereof ascertained in the list, amounting to £24 10s., or alternatively at a reasonable price, and that the defendant held the balance of the sum of £30—viz., £5 10s.—to the use of the plaintiff. The defendant denied that he was estopped either at law or in equity from denying that any agreement alleged by the plaintiff to have been entered into between them was entered into or made, and pleaded that the requirements of the Statute of Frauds had not been complied with.

EVER, J., accepted the plaintiff's account of the transaction, but held that there did not exist a memorandum of the agreement within the Statute of Frauds and that the payment of rent in advance did not constitute an act of part performance of the agreement. The plaintiff appealed.

Cox-Sinclair and William A. Wardley for the plaintiff.

Micklem, K.C., and Johnston Edwards for the defendant.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J. In my judgment this appeal fails. [His LORDSHIP stated the facts, held that there was no note or memorandum signed by the party to charge therewith, and continued:] It is said that evidence can be adduced to connect these two documents, and, as authority for that, Studds v. Watson (2) has been pressed on us. But there the two documents referred to one another sufficiently to enable them to be read together, and obviously amounted to a memorandum. Pearce v. Gardner (3) was also relied on, but the only evidence produced was to identify a letter as having been inclosed in an envelope which might then be used to supply the name of one of the parties. In this case there is no note or memorandum whatever. It is said that the payment of rent amounts to part performance of the contract, so as to take the case out of s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. But the mere payment of such rent is not such part performance to take the case out of the statute. And even the payment of the whole of the purchase money has been held not to be sufficient to take the case out of the statute. The ground on which the court enforces specific performance of contracts with respect to land is that the defendant is charged,

A not on the contract itself, but on equities arising out of the acts of the parties, which have caused a change in their positions. For instance, in Maddison v. Alderson (4) the EARL OF SELBORNE, L.C., said (8 App. Cas. at p. 475):

B “In a suit founded on such part performance the defendant is really ‘charged’ upon the equities resulting from the acts done in execution of the contract, and not (within the meaning of the statute) upon the contract itself.”

And farther on he said (ibid. at p. 478):

C “It is not enough that an act done should be a condition of, or good consideration for, a contract, unless it is, as between the parties, such a part execution as to change their relative positions as to the subject-matter of the contract.”

Mere payment of money does not so change their position. LORD BLACKBURN, though reluctantly accepting the proposition, said (ibid. at p. 489): “If it was originally an error it is now I think communis error, and so makes the law.” And farther on:

D “But I do not think this anomaly should be extended; and it is not a little remarkable that there is no case, at least none was cited, and I have found none, in which there has not been a change in the possession of the land, or, in the case where the purchaser was a tenant already in possession, a change in the nature of his tenure, which, rightly or wrongly, was held equivalent to a change in the position.”

E In this case there has, of course, been no change in the possession of this farm or anything of the sort.

Num v. Fabian (5) was relied on, but there the tenant had spent a considerable sum of money on the premises in addition to the payment of increased rent. In Thursby v. Eccles (1) BINGHAM, J., in terms decided the point that payment of rent in advance is not such a part performance as to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and said (49 W.R. at p. 282) that

F “when the Court of Chancery gives relief from the operation of the statute it does so upon the equities which have arisen out of the acts of the parties. Payment of money in such a case as this raises no equity except possibly a right to recover it back.”

G In my judgment, that case was well decided. Here there is no memorandum sufficient to comply with s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, or anything which can be relied on as part performance so as to take it out of that statute, or which gives any equity to the plaintiff by which he can charge the defendant and, therefore, the appeal must be dismissed.

H BANKES, L.J.—I agree. There is nothing in this case which in any way connects these two documents so as to enable them to be read as one document. And the contention of part performance by payment of rent is not open to the plaintiff on the authorities.

I WARRINGTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The question as to the application of the doctrine of part performance to oral agreements is of some general importance. We are here asked in effect to overrule the decision in Thursby v. Eccles (1), and also to impliedly overrule a whole series of cases by which it was settled, as was said in Maddison v. Alderson (4), that mere payment of purchase money is not such an act of part performance as to enable the court to enforce the contract. It is necessary to inquire on what the doctrine under which the court enforces oral agreements for the sale of land notwithstanding the provisions of s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds is founded. There is no question that a decree in such a case did not have the effect of charging the defendant on the contract itself, but, to use the words of the EARL OF

SELBORNE L.C. (8 App. Cas. at p. 475). "upon the equities resulting from the acts done in execution of the contract." A

The matter is well summarised in FRY ON SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (5th Edn.) p. 283, in which it is said:

"Courts of equity hold that, notwithstanding the express language of the statute, a case may be taken out of its operation by any one of the following circumstances . . ."

and there are then stated four of such circumstances, the first three of which are immaterial to the facts of this case, but the fourth is

"by a parol contract and part performance, which is, as we shall see, but a particular case of fraud."

Then, on p. 290, referring to this same fourthly stated circumstance as a reason for enforcing specific performance, the learned author says: C

"This exception seems to be based on the view that if a man have made a bargain with another, and allowed that other to act upon it, he may have created an equity against himself which he cannot resist by setting up the want of a formality in the evidence of the contract out of which the equity in part arose."

And then comes an important passage:

"In order thus to withdraw a contract from the operation of the statute, several circumstances must concur: First, the acts of part performance must be such as not only to be referable to a contract such as that alleged, but to be referable to no other title; secondly, they must be such as to render it a fraud in the defendant to take advantage of the contract not being in writing; thirdly, the contract to which they refer must be such as in its own nature is enforceable by the court; and fourthly, there must be proper parol evidence of the contract which is let in by the acts of part performance."

Every one of those four headings is essential to the act relied on, and, treated as part performance, it is not enough to show that the act is referable to the contract if that act is such as not to amount to a fraud of the defendant in taking advantage of the contract not being in writing. Therefore, the payment of purchase money is not sufficient of itself to amount to an act of part performance. If, on the other hand, the possession of the property is changed, the relation of the parties is changed, and the defendant cannot set up the want of a memorandum sufficient to satisfy the statute for the reason that he has allowed an act to be performed which he cannot reverse, and could only do so in equity by indemnifying the plaintiff against any money expended or any liability incurred by him in consequence of such act. F

In my opinion, the judgment of EYE, J., is right, and there can be no distinction between the payment of rent and the payment of purchase money. With regard to there being any connection between the two documents, I have nothing to add to what has already been said by SWINFEN EADY, L.J. G H

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Chaproniere & Co.; R. G. Harrison.

[Reported by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.] I

SHAW & CO. v. SYMMONS & SONS

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Avory, J.), February 26, March 2, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 799; 86 L.J.K.B. 549; 117 L.T. 91;
33 L.T.R. 239]Bailee—Liability—Loss of goods while bailee in breach of contract of bailment—Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (14 Geo. 3 c. 78), s. 86.

The plaintiffs, publishers, entrusted books to the defendants, book-binders, for the books to be bound, and, when bound, to be delivered to the plaintiffs as and when required by the plaintiffs. There being no time specified for delivery, the learned judge held that the defendants were bound to deliver within a reasonable time after a request by the plaintiffs for the delivery to them of all the bound books then in stock, and that a reasonable time for delivery had expired on Jan. 20, 1916, when a fire occurred accidentally and not through negligence of the defendants on the defendants' premises and resulted in the books being wholly or partially damaged or destroyed. On the defendants' invoices and letter paper there was a printed notice stating that they would not be liable for loss or damage by fire on their premises.

Held: the books not having been delivered within the time found to be a reasonable time after the request for delivery, they were lost or damaged when the defendants were in breach of contract, and, therefore, the defendants were liable to the plaintiffs as insurers and were not protected by the notice on their invoice and letter paper, nor by s. 86 of the Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774.

Per AVORY, J.: Section 86 was probably intended only to exempt the occupier of a building in the case of an accidental fire from any liability at common law to his landlord or to his neighbour in the event of the fire spreading.

Notes. As to the obligations of a bailee in custody of goods on which he has contracted to do work, see 2 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 127-133, and for cases see 3 DIGEST (Repl.) 101-104. For Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act 17-74, see 13 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 10.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Davis v. Garrett (1830), 6 Bing. 716; L. & Welsb. 276; 4 Moo. & P. 540; 8 L.J.O.S.C.P. 253; 130 E.R. 1456; 8 Digest (Repl.) 14, 65.
- (2) Lilley v. Doubleday (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 510; 51 L.J.Q.B. 310; 44 L.T. 814; 46 J.P. 708; 3 Digest (Repl.) 82, 183.
- (3) Royal Exchange Shipping Co. v. Dixon (1886), 12 App. Cas. 11; 56 L.J.Q.B. 266; 56 L.T. 206; 35 W.R. 461; 3 T.L.R. 172; 6 Asp. M.L.C. 92, H.L.; 41 Digest 468, 2995.
- (4) James Morrison & Co., Ltd. v. Shaw, Savill and Albion Co., Ltd., ante p. 1068; [1916] 2 K.B. 783; 86 L.J.K.B. 97; 115 L.T. 508; 32 T.L.R. 712; 61 Sol. Jo. 9; 13 Asp. M.L.C. 504; C.A.; 8 Digest (Repl.) 22, 123.

Also referred to in argument:

- Maving v. Todd* (1815), 1 Stark. 72; 4 Camp. 225; 3 Digest (Repl.) 84, 195.
Syred v. Carruthers (1858), E.B. & E. 469; 27 L.J.M.C. 273; 31 L.T.O.S. 178; 23 J.P. 37; 4 Jur. N.S. 949; 6 W.R. 595; 120 E.R. 584; 37 Digest 25, 200.
Sharp v. Powell (1872), L.R. 7 C.P. 253; 41 L.J.C.P. 95; 26 L.T. 436; 20 W.R. 584; 36 Digest (Repl.) 36, 173.
Walker v. Maitland (1821), 5 B. & Ald. 171; 106 E.R. 1155; 29 Digest 206, 1654.

Romney Marsh (Lords Bailiff-Jurats) v. Trinity House Corpn. (1870), L.R. 5 Exch. 204; affirmed (1872), L.R. 7 Exch. 247; 41 L.J.Ex. 106; 20 W.R. 952, Ex.Ch.; 36 Digest (Repl.) 39, 193.

Vaughan v. Taff Vale Rail. Co. (1860), 5 H. & N. 679; 29 L.J.Ex. 427; 2 L.T. 394; 24 J.P. 453; 6 Jur. N.S. 899; 8 W.R. 549; 157 E.R. 1351, Ex.Ch.; 36 Digest (Repl.) 6, 8.

Briddon v. Great Northern Rail. Co. (1858), 28 L.J.Ex. 51; 32 L.T.O.S. 94; 8 Digest (Repl.) 26, 156.

Taylor v. Great Northern Rail. Co. (1866), L.R. 1 C.P. 385; sub nom. Great Northern Rail. Co. v. Taylor, Mar. & Ruth 471; 35 L.J.C.P. 210; 14 L.T. 363; 12 Jur. N.S. 372; 14 W.R. 639; 8 Digest (Repl.) 26, 154.

Filliter v. Phippard (1847), 11 Q.B. 347; 17 L.J.Q.B. 89; 10 L.T.O.S. 225; 11 J.P. 903; 12 Jur. 202; 116 E.R. 506; 36 Digest (Repl.) 76, 407.

Nitro-Phosphate and Odan's Chemical Manure Co. v. London and St. Katherine Docks Co. (1878), 9 Ch.D. 503; 39 L.T. 433; 27 W.R. 267, C.A.; 36 Digest (Repl.) 161, 856.

Lepla v. Rogers, [1893] 1 Q.B. 31; 68 L.T. 584; 57 J.P. 55; 9 T.L.R. 23; 37 Sol. Jo. 11; 5 R. 57; 17 Digest (Repl.) 120, 313.

The Notting Hill (1884), 9 P.D. 105; 53 L.J.P. 56; 51 L.T. 66; 32 W.R. 764; 5 Asp. M.L.C. 241, C.A.; 17 Digest (Repl.) 114, 272.

Action for damages for breach of contract tried before AVORY, J., without a jury.

By s. 86 of the Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774:

"No action, suit, or process whatever shall be had, maintained, or prosecuted against any person in whose house, chamber, stable, barn, or any other building, or on whose estate any fire shall . . . accidentally begin, nor shall any recompense be made by such person for any damage suffered thereby: any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding: And in such case, if any action be brought, the defendant may plead the general issue and give this Act and the special matter in evidence at any trial thereupon to be had: And in case the plaintiff become non-suited, or discontinue his action or suit, or if a verdict pass against him, the defendant shall recover treble costs: provided that no contract or agreement made between landlord and tenant shall be hereby defeated or made void."

E. Pollock, K.C., and Wallington for the plaintiffs.

A. Powell, K.C., and A. M. Latter for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Mar. 2, 1917. AVORY, J., read the following judgment. The material facts upon which the questions in this case depend are that the plaintiffs who are publishers, entrusted to the defendants, who are bookbinders, books to be bound under contract to deliver them when bound to the plaintiffs as and when required by the plaintiffs, and it was a term of the contract that all books ordered to be bound and not delivered should be charged against the plaintiffs at the expiration of one year from the first of the month following the date of the order. No time was specified for delivery, and I hold that the defendants were bound to deliver within a reasonable time after the order for delivery of bound books. On January, 1916, the plaintiffs requested the defendants to deliver to them the whole of the books then bound in stock which the defendants had charged against the plaintiffs in accordance with the above-mentioned term of the contract, and I find as a fact that between Jan. 7 and 20 the plaintiffs on two occasions telephoned to the defendants pressing for delivery. On Jan. 20 a fire occurred on the defendant's premises, which was accidental and not due to any negligence on the part of the defendants; the plaintiffs' books included in the last-mentioned order were wholly or partially destroyed or damaged in the fire; and the defendants in consequence failed to deliver them to the plaintiffs.

A Counsel for the plaintiffs based their claim on a breach of the contract to deliver within a reasonable time. For this reason I do not deal with an alternative claim for detention or with the evidence as to a subsequent sale by auction of some of the plaintiffs' goods, which formed part of the salvage stock.

For the defendants it was contended (i) that there was no breach of the contract to deliver within a reasonable time; (ii) that, even if there was a breach, B the defendants were not insurers, and further were protected by the notice upon their invoices and letter paper that they would not be answerable for the loss or damage by fire; (iii) that the breach of contract was not the proximate cause of the loss, or that the damage did not naturally flow from the breach of contract; and (iv) that in any event the defendants were absolved from liability by the Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774. A consideration of the evidence C as to the time taken in delivery on previous occasions, particularly in September and December, 1915, and January, 1916, and taking into account the difficulties of transport and shortage of labour on which the defendants relied at the trial, but which had not previously been set up as an excuse, leads me to the conclusion, and I find as a fact, that a reasonable time for delivery had expired on Jan. 20, D and that the defendants committed a breach of contract in not delivering before that date. Upon this finding of fact I think that the decisions in Davis v. Garrett (1) and Lilley v. Doubleday (2) approved in Royal Exchange Shipping Co. v. Dixon (3), and more recently in Morrison & Co., Ltd. v. Shaw, Savill and Albion Co., Ltd. (4), are conclusive against the second and third contentions of the defendants. To quote the words of TINDAL, C.J., in Davis v. Garrett (1) (6 Bing. at p. 724), "as a loss has actually happened whilst his wrongful act was in E operation and force," they cannot set up as an answer to the action the bare possibility of a loss if their wrongful act had never been done. It is suggested that the principle of these decisions does not apply to an act of omission as in the present case, but I am unable to appreciate the distinction for this purpose between a breach of contract in not delivering and a breach of contract in delivering at another place.

F The point under the Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774, s. 86, remains to be considered. Counsel for the defendants contends that this section ought to be construed literally and without limitation, and that it applies to any case in which goods which are the subject of the action in a building are destroyed in an accidental fire. It is not necessary in this case to decide what are the exact limitations of its application; it probably is intended only to exempt the occupier G of a building, in the case of an accidental fire, from any liability at common law to his landlord or to his neighbour in the event of the fire spreading, but I am clearly of opinion that it has no application to the present case, where the breach of contract had been committed before the fire occurred. For these reasons I am of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment for damages, the amount of which will be the value of the goods included in the order of H Jan. 7 and not delivered.

Judgment for plaintiffs.

Solicitors; G. E. Hodgkinson; Danby, Brooks & Co.

[Reported by T. W. MORGAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re WIX. HARDY v. LEMON

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Younger, J.), January 20, 21, 1916]

[Reported [1916] 1 Ch. 279; 85 L.J.Ch. 192; 114 L.T. 455;
32 T.L.R. 257; 60 Sol. Jo. 291]

Settled Land—Tenant for life—Powers—Leasing—New lease granted in place of surrendered lease—New lease for longer period and at increased rent—Rent reserved by new lease not the best rent—Right of tenant for life to whole of new rent during unexpired period of surrendered lease—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict., c. 38), s. 13 (5).

Where a tenant for life accepts a surrender of an existing lease of settled land and in the proper exercise of his powers grants a new lease of the land which is for a longer period than the surrendered lease and at an increased rent, he is entitled to retain for himself, as against the remaindermen, the excess rent during the unexpired period of the surrendered lease even though the rent reserved by the new lease is less than the best rent that could have been obtained.

Cottrell v. Cottrell (1) (1885), 28 Ch.D. 628; and Re Rodes (2) [1909] 1 Ch. 815, considered.

Settled property comprising a freehold block of premises was subject to a lease to a bank for a term of sixty years from Mar. 25, 1873, at a rent of £1,100. On Nov. 13, 1913, viz. when nearly twenty years of the bank's lease remained unexpired, the tenants for life agreed to accept a surrender of the lease and to grant a new lease to assignees of the bank for a term of ninety-nine years from Mar. 25, 1914, at a rent of £2,500, viz. £1,400 more than the rent under the surrendered lease. The new lease, which was granted on condition that new buildings were erected on the demised premises at a cost of not less than £25,000, was sanctioned by the court as proper under the powers conferred on tenants for life by s. 13 of the Settled Land Act, 1882. The rent of £2,500 was less than the best rent obtainable, since the tenants for life, in accordance with their powers under s. 13 (5) of the Act, had taken into account the value of the surrendered lease in determining the rent to be reserved under the new lease. On an application by the trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts asking whether the excess rent of £1,400 should be set aside as capital money in each year until the date when the surrendered lease would have expired on Mar. 25, 1933,

Held: bearing in mind that the court had sanctioned the new lease, and, in particular, that the consideration for it should be wholly in the form of rent, the tenants for life were entitled to keep for themselves the whole of the rent reserved under the new lease until the date mentioned, and the trustees were not required to retain or capitalise any portion of it for the benefit of the remaindermen.

Notes. Section 13 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, is replaced by s. 52 of the Settled Land Act, 1925.

As to the power of a tenant for life to accept surrenders of leases, see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 571, 572. For cases on the right to income from leaseholds as between tenant for life and remainderman, see 40 DIGEST 657-659. For the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 52, see 23 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 128.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Cottrell v. Cottrell (1885), 28 Ch.D. 628; 54 L.J.Ch. 417; 52 L.T. 486; 33 W.R. 361; 40 Digest (Repl.) 712, 2070.
- (2) Re Rodes, Sanders v. Hobson, [1909] 1 Ch. 815; 78 L.J.Ch. 434; 100 L.T. 959; 40 Digest (Repl.) 713, 2076.

- A (3) Re Baring, Jeune v. Baring, [1893] 1 Ch. 61; 62 L.J.Ch. 50; 67 L.T. 702; 41 W.R. 87; 9 T.L.R. 7; 3 R. 37; 40 Digest (Repl.) 703, 1938.

Adjourned Summons taken out by trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts asking that directions might be given as to what part, if any, of the yearly rent of £2,500 reserved by a lease dated Dec. 31, 1914, ought to be set aside as capital money, and, in particular, whether the yearly sum of £1,400, being the excess of the said rent over the rent reserved by the previous lease of the premises surrendered to the life tenants, or any part thereof, and if so what part, ought to be set aside up to Mar. 25, 1933, the date when the precious lease would have expired if it had not been surrendered.

The material sections of the Settled Land Acts referred to were:

- C "Section 6 (1). A tenant for life may lease the settled land, or any part thereof, or any easement, right, or privilege of any kind, over or in relation to the same, for any purpose whatever, whether involving waste or not, for any term not exceeding (1) in case of a building lease, ninety-nine years; (2) in case of a mining lease, sixty years; (3) in case of any other lease, twenty-one years.

- D "Section 7 (1). Every lease shall be by deed, and be made to take effect in possession not later than twelve months after its date. (2) Every lease shall reserve the best rent that can reasonably be obtained, regard being had to any fine taken, and to any money laid out or to be laid out for the benefit of the settled land, and generally to the circumstances of the case.

- E "Section 8 (1). Every building lease shall be made partly in consideration of the lessee, or some person by whose direction the lease is granted, or some other person, having erected, or agreeing to erect, buildings, new or additional, or having improved or repaired, or agreeing to improve or repair, buildings, or having executed, or agreeing to execute, on the land leased, an improvement authorised by this Act, for or in connexion with building purposes.

- F "Section 13 (1). A tenant for life may accept, with or without consideration, a surrender of any lease of settled land, whether made under this Act or not, in respect of the whole land leased, or any part thereof, with or without an exception, of all or any of the mines and minerals therein, or in respect of mines and minerals, or any of them . . . (5) On a surrender, and the making of a new or other lease, whether for the same or for any extended or other term, and whether or not subject to the same or to any other covenants, provisions, or conditions, the value of the lessee's interest in the lease surrendered may be taken into account in the determination of the amount of the rent to be reserved, and of any fine to be taken, and of the nature of the covenants, provisions, and conditions to be inserted in the new or other lease."

- H Arnold Jolly for the trustees.

H. C. Bischoff for the tenants for life.

A. F. Topham (E. L. Riviere with him) for the infant remaindermen.

Cur. adv. vult.

- I Jan. 21, 1916. YOUNGER, J.—This summons raises a novel and, as I think, a difficult point under s. 13 (5) of the Settled Land Act, 1882.

The settled property in question is a valuable freehold block of premises in Bishopsgate, in the City of London, and was settled by the will of Fanny Wix, who died on Oct. 24, 1884. At the time of her death the testatrix was entitled in fee simple to the hereditaments in question, subject to a subsisting lease in favour of the Anglo-Foreign Banking Co. dated Aug. 21, 1874, for a term of sixty years from Mar. 25, 1873, at a rental of £1,100 per annum. By her will the testatrix demised the property to legal uses under which the three first-named defendants, Mrs. Lawson, Mrs. Forrester, and Mrs. Knowles, are now entitled as tenants in common in equal shares for their respective lives, and the persons at present interested in remainder and for an estate in fee simple are the three infant defendants, Norah Wyatt Lemon, Richard Cameron Knowles, and Bryan Knowles. By an order of SARGANT, J., of Dec. 17, 1913, the plaintiffs were appointed trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act of the settlement of the Bishopsgate property created by the will of the testatrix.

On Nov. 13, 1913, while nearly twenty years of the bank's lease remained unexpired, the three tenants for life entered into a conditional agreement with the Banque Belge (in whom by assignment the leasehold had become vested), and the Bishopsgate Estates, Ltd., who had acquired an interest in the adjoining premises, under which, by arrangement with the Estates Co., the bank was to surrender its existing lease, and a new lease in substitution therefor for a term of ninety-nine years from Mar. 25, 1914, and at a rent of £2,500 per annum, was to be granted to the Estates Co. who covenanted to erect on the settled property and adjoining premises new buildings at a cost of not less than £25,000. The agreement was made conditional on the sanction of the court being obtained to it, and by an order of July 27, 1914, made on a summons intitled in the matter of the Settled Land Acts, in which the tenants for life were plaintiffs and the trustees and the infant remaindermen were defendants, SARGANT, J., directed that the conditional agreement above referred to for the grant of a lease of the above-mentioned settled premises upon the terms therein appearing as modified be carried into effect, but that this order was to be without prejudice to any question as to the destination of the excess rent payable until Mar. 25, 1933, and subject to the deposit of a sum of £2,500 pending the building of the new premises. A lease in pursuance of the agreement so sanctioned was in due course granted and is dated Dec. 31, 1914, and under it the increased rent of £2,500 is now being paid, and it is in these circumstances that the present summons was taken out.

[HIS LORDSHIP read the terms of the summons and continued:] The first question I have to determine is the effect of the saving in SARGANT, J.'s order of July 27, 1914. Does that saving clause merely reserve for future determination the legal question how, on the footing that the lease then approved was properly granted by the tenants for life, the excess rent referred to was to be dealt with, or is the effect of the saving this, that the tenants for life as a term of getting the court's sanction submitted to be bound by any order the court as a matter of fairness and equity might thereafter think fit to make with reference to the retention, or the capitalisation, or the accumulation of the excess rent, or any part of it? It would perhaps be easier to answer this question satisfactorily, if one could be quite certain under which section of the Settled Land Act the application was made to SARGANT, J., or what power the court possessed under that Act to deal with it. For it does not seem that there is any section in the Act at least directly applicable to the case, and I think that the real foundation of the order was the general jurisdiction of the court in the matter of trusts to protect trustees—in this case the tenants for life—by sanctioning in the presence of the parties interested an act of administration which they desired to carry out. So regarding the order, I think the saving must be taken to mean no more than this, that the question as to the destination of the excess rent was reserved for determination purely as one arising under the Settled Land Act, but upon the footing that the lease sanctioned was in the circumstances a proper lease to be granted under the powers conferred upon the tenants for life by s. 13 of the Act of 1882.

Section 13 so far as material, is as follows [HIS LORDSHIP read s. 13 (1), (5) and (6); and also s. 6 (1); s. 7 (1) and (2); and s. 8 (1)] and the effect of these sub-sections seems to be that while the best rent is to be reserved,

“the value of the lessee's interest in the lease surrendered may be taken into account in the determination of the amount of the rent to be reserved,

A and of any fine to be taken, and of the nature of the covenants, provisions, and conditions to be inserted in the new or other lease ”

(s. 13 (5))—that is to say, the rent or the fine if there be one, may be reduced below the best rent or best fine by the amount of the lessee’s interest in the unexpired surrender term. But, further, the lessor is not required to take a fine; the section contemplates that a fine will not always be taken; the tenant for life is empowered by the section to reserve the whole of the consideration, so far as payment is concerned, in the form of rent, and I must take it to be the result of the order of July 27, 1914, that it was proper so to do in this case. The effect, however, of that is, first, that the rent of £2,500 is in every year of the whole term of ninety-nine years less than the best rent by the value of the lessee’s interest in the surrendered lease spread over that period, and, secondly, that the present tenants for life will, as a result of the transaction, if they are entitled to the whole of the reserved rent, receive for twenty years £1,400 in every year more than they were entitled to under the surrendered lease, and as against that those entitled to the reversion for the rest of the term will have to submit to receive in each year a rent which is less than the best rent and without compensation of any kind for the deficiency.

D It is, of course, obvious that the result might have been avoided by a mere re-arrangement of terms. For instance, the rent reserved under the new lease for the first twenty years might have been £1,100 only, and the rent for the rest of the term fixed at what was actually the best rent. Or, again, the present value of the difference between the £1,100 rent and £2,500 rent for twenty years might have been ascertained and taken in the form of a fine which under s. 4 of the Act of 1884 would become capital money and devolve accordingly, while the rent reserved for these twenty years would have been £1,100, the rent of £2,500 being reserved for the residue of the term only. By one or other of these modifications in detail the subsisting rights of the successive interests in the property as it existed immediately prior to the surrender would have been preserved, and the question accordingly is whether there is any power in the court to effect the same result by requiring the excess rent, or any part of it, to be capitalised or accumulated or dealt with otherwise than by payment to the tenants for life. In other words, are the rights of the tenant for life in a case like the present to be determined solely by the form of the lease which he has granted, or is it permissible for the court to adjust the successive interests in the consideration on proper principles irrespective of the form in which it is received.

G In support of the view that this power must be inherent in the court, counsel for the remaindermen, argued that the new lease was in effect the sale of a partial interest in the reversion, and he pointed to s. 34 of the Act, which empowers the trustees or the court where the whole reversion is sold to cause the purchase money

H “ to be laid out, invested, accumulated, and paid in such manner as in the judgment of the trustees or the court will give to the parties interested in the money the like benefit thereupon as they might lawfully have had from the reversion in respect whereof the money was paid,”

I and he cited Cottrell v. Cottrell (1), where KAY, J., held under that section that as between the tenant for life and the remainderman, where lands subject to a beneficial lease are sold under the Settled Land Act, 1882, the tenant for life will during the unexpired period of the term be entitled to so much only of the income of the invested purchase moneys as equals the rents under the lease, and the rest of that income must be accumulated and invested for the benefit of the inheritance until the date when the lease would have expired. Reference was also made to Re Rhodes (2), where PARKER, J., held that money paid to an equitable tenant for life by a lessee as consideration for accepting a surrender of a lease, which had been granted under the powers of the Settled Land Acts, does not belong to him as a casual profit, but must be paid by instalments to him and other persons entitled to the rent. A

I feel the force of these considerations, and I would willingly enough give effect to them if I thought it were open to me to do so. But the words of the section are, I think, too strong for me in a case like this, where no objection can be taken to the propriety of the lease as granted. Rent under a building lease seems to me, so far as the Act is concerned, to be clearly rents and profits and receivable as such unless the settlement contains some provision to the contrary. B
There is no provision in the Act for capitalising rent, so called, except a part of the rent reserved under a mining lease by virtue of s. 11. I can find no trace anywhere that the rent reserved by a proper building lease under s. 13 (5) is to go in any direction different from that reserved by a similar lease under ss. 6 and 8. Further, KAY, J.'s, decision shows that the rule of the court in such a case as the present would be not only to capitalise but to accumulate the excess rent during the term of the surrender lease. But s. 13 (5) plainly authorises a fine to be taken under such circumstances as we have to deal with here. Indeed, a fine might have been taken in this case to represent the excess rent. If it had, the tenants for life would have been entitled to the interest upon it when invested under the express provisions of s. 4 of the Act of 1884. That is to say, there D would be capitalisation, but no accumulation. So that by the express provision of the statute you find excess rent in the form of a fine dealt with on other than the equitable principles laid down by KAY, J.

Further, in a case of falling values it might well be that under s. 13 (5) a less rent would be reserved under the new lease, which would be for a longer term than was payable under the surrender lease, and there is certainly no provision E in the Act under which that deficiency could be made good to the tenant for life. And not only does the Act contain no indication of intention to reserve to the court or the trustees any power to direct any rent reserved under a new lease from its normal destination, but the legislature may well have refrained from conferring that power upon the court by reason of the difficulty of exercising it properly. The statutory provision capitalising a fine in every case is merely F a legislative method of cutting a knot; it does not solve a difficulty. The enactment applies to a fine on every lease, however long or short, but there can be no reason, on principle, why a fine reserved on the granting of a lease which does not endure beyond the life of the tenant for life who granted it should be capitalised. In such a case he is, on principle, as much entitled to the fine as G he is to the rent reserved during the whole term. And there are few cases, although the present may be one, in which a mere direction to capitalise excess rent would be really just or fair; in most cases some part at least of the rent so capitalised should in justice fall to the tenant for life on the principle applied in Re Baring (3), or to his successor. Indeed, the true principle would be not after the expiration of the original lease to hold the accumulated fund as capital H moneys, but to distribute them by equal payments over the whole term of the new lease amongst the persons for the time being entitled to the rent thereby reserved, who might be a tenant for life just as likely as a remainderman. Further, if KAY, J.'s rule is always to be applied to such a case as this, and the excess rent not only to be accumulated as well as capitalised, that would in the great majority of cases deprive the tenant for life in possession of all advantage from the transaction, and would remove the real incentive to the exercise I of a power which it might be greatly to the advantage of the settled estate should be exercised.

On the whole, there are, I think, many sound reasons for holding that in every case in which a lease such as that now under review is not open to question on the ground of impropriety or otherwise, the Act intends that it shall be operative in accordance with its tenor. Unless the lease is so improper as to amount to an improper exercise of his powers by the tenant for life, it is quite in accord with the spirit of the whole Act that the legislature intended that the tenant for life

A should keep for himself everything which under the terms of the instrument he had succeeded in retaining for himself. There must be a declaration that a portion of the rent is to be retained or capitalised.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Brighten & Lemon; Burne & Wykes.

B [Reported by M. H. TRUELOVE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

MOUSELL BROS. v. LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAIL. CO.

D [KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Viscount Reading, C.J., Ridley and Atkin, J.J.), July 24, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 836; 87 L.J.K.B. 82; 118 L.T. 25; 81 J.P. 305; 15 L.G.R. 706]

E Master and Servant—Liability of master for act of servant—Criminal act—Statutory offence—Matters to be considered—False description of goods to be carried by railway with intent to avoid tolls—Liability of master to conviction—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict., c. 20), ss. 98, 99—Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict., c. 63), s. 2.

F Although prima facie a master cannot be held criminally responsible for the acts of his servant, there are instances in which the legislature have resolved to prohibit an act or to enforce a duty in such words as to make the prohibition of the act or the enforcement of the duty absolute. In such a case the master is liable if the act is in fact done by his servant although he himself may know nothing about it. To discover whether any particular act has or has not this effect it is necessary to have regard to the object of the statute, the words used, the nature of the duty imposed, the person on whom the duty is imposed, the person by whom the duty would be performed in the ordinary course of events, and the person on whom the penalty is imposed.

G A servant of the appellant company, who was employed, inter alia, to consign goods belonging to the company by the respondents' railway, in making out, or causing to be made out, the consignment notes wrongly described the goods so as to obtain their conveyance by the respondents at a cheaper rate than that which was properly chargeable. The directors of the company knew nothing of the false description and were in no way party to it. On a prosecution of the company under s. 98 and s. 99 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, for giving a false account of the goods with intent to avoid the tolls payable in respect thereof,

H Held: (i) in view of the language and purposes of the Act of 1845 it was the intention of the legislature to fix responsibility for this quasi-criminal act on the master if the act was done by a servant while acting within the scope of his employment, as was the case here; (ii) there was nothing in the Act showing a "contrary intention" within s. 2 (1) of the Interpretation Act, 1889, and, therefore, "person" in s. 98 and s. 99 included a body corporate; accordingly, the company could be properly convicted of the offence charged.

I Notes. Applied: Warrington v. Windhill Industrial Co-operative Society (1918), 82 J.P. 149. Considered: R. v. Duke of Leinster, [1924] 1 K.B. 311;

Griffiths v. Studebakers, Ltd., [1924] 1 K.B. 102; Allen v. Whitehead, [1929] 1 All E.R. Rep. 13; Gardner v. Akeroyd, [1952] 2 All E.R. 306. Applied: Quality Dairies (York), Ltd. v. Pedley, [1952] 1 All E.R. 380. Referred: Pearks' Dairies v. Tottenham Food Control Committee (1918). 88 L.J.K.B. 623; Gaumont British Distributors, Ltd. v. Henry, [1939] 2 All E.R. 808; D.P.P. v. Kent and Sussex Contractors, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 119; R. v. I.C.R. Haulage, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 691; Brentnall and Cleland, Ltd. v. London County Council, [1944] 2 All E.R. 552; James & Son, Ltd. v. Smee, Green v. Burreit, [1954] 3 All E.R. 273; R. v. St. Margaret's Trust, Ltd., [1958] 2 All E.R. 289.

As to the responsibility of a master for the criminal act of his servant and the criminal responsibility of corporations see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 275-282, and for cases see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 41-50 and 13 DIGEST (Repl.) 327-331. For Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, see 19 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 590.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Pearks, Gunston and Tee, Ltd. v. Ward, [1902] 2 K.B. 1; 71 L.J.K.B. 656; 87 L.T. 51; 66 J.P. 774; 20 Cox, C.C. 279; 14 Digest (Repl.) 43, 115.
- (2) Copper v. Moore (No. 2), [1898] 2 Q.B. 306; 67 L.J.Q.B. 689; 78 L.T. 520; 62 J.P. 453; 46 W.R. 620; 14 T.L.R. 414; 42 Sol. Jo. 539; 19 Cox, C.C. 45; 14 Digest (Repl.) 47, 148.
- (3) Bond v. Evans (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 249; 57 L.J.M.C. 105; 59 L.T. 411; 52 J.P. 613; 36 W.R. 767; 4 T.L.R. 614; 16 Cox, C.C. 461, D.C.; 14 Digest (Repl.) 50, 164.
- (4) Chuter v. Freeth and Pocock, Ltd., [1911] 2 K.B. 832; 80 L.J.K.B. 1322; 105 L.T. 238; 75 J.P. 430; 27 T.L.R. 467; 22 Cox, C.C. 573; 9 L.G.R. 1055, D.C.; 13 Digest (Repl.) 265, 916.
- (5) R. v. Tyler and International Commercial Co., [1891] 2 Q.B. 588; 61 L.J.M.C. 38; 65 L.T. 662; 56 J.P. 118; 7 L.T.R. 720, C.A.; 14 Digest (Repl.) 30, 23.

Cases referred to in argument:

- Cundy v. Le Cocq* (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 207; 53 L.J.M.C. 125; 51 L.T. 265; 48 J.P. 599; 32 W.R. 769, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 96, 719.
- Roberts v. Woodward* (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 412; 59 L.J.M.C. 129; 63 L.T. 200; 55 J.P. 116; 38 W.R. 770; 17 Cox, C.C. 139, D.C.; 14 Digest (Repl.) 44, 122.
- Massey v. Morriss*, [1894] 2 Q.B. 412; 63 L.J.M.C. 185; 70 L.T. 873; 58 J.P. 673; 42 W.R. 638; 38 Sol. Jo. 547; 7 Asp. M.L.C. 586; 10 R. 342, D.C.; 14 Digest (Repl.) 44, 125.
- Sherras v. De Rutzen*, [1895] 1 Q.B. 918; 64 L.J.M.C. 218; 72 L.T. 834; 59 J.P. 440; 43 W.R. 526; 11 T.L.R. 369; 39 Sol. Jo. 451; 18 Cox, C.C. 157; 15 R. 388, D.C.; 14 Digest (Repl.) 39, 90.
- Citizens' Life Assurance Co. v. Brown*, [1904] A.C. 423; 73 L.J.P.C. 102; 90 L.T. 739; 53 W.R. 176; 20 T.L.R. 497, P.C.; 13 Digest (Repl.) 323, 1300.
- Hawke v. E. Hulton & Co., Ltd.*, [1909] 2 W.B. 93; 78 L.J.K.B. 633; 100 L.T. 905; 73 J.P. 295; 25 T.L.R. 474; 22 Cox, C.C. 122; 16 Mans' 164, D.C.; 13 Digest (Repl.) 266, 919.

Case Stated by the stipendiary magistrate for the city of Manchester.

On Dec. 14, 1916, two complaints were preferred by Humphrey Mansfield Dyke on behalf of the respondents, the London and North-Western Rail. Co., under the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, against the appellants, Mousell Bros., Ltd. for that they, the appellants, on Nov. 7 and 8, 1916, being the owners or having the care of certain goods passing upon and being upon the London and North-Western Railway, did on demand unlawfully give to the collector of tolls for the respondents a false account of the same with intent to avoid the payment of the tolls payable in respect thereof. Upon the hearing of

A the complaints it was proved or admitted that the appellants were removal and storage contractors, having their principal place of business in London and having a branch at Manchester, which was managed by Percy Charles Foss. On Nov. 7 and 8, 1916, men employed by the appellants took to the respondents' depot at London Road Goods Station, Manchester, lorry loads of goods belonging to the appellants which were described as "old timber and iron rods." On Dec. 6, B 1916, Percy Charles Foss told a representative of the respondents that he was responsible as manager for the consignment notes of the goods, and that the goods to which those notes referred could not properly be described as old timber or iron rods. The tolls chargeable according to the description of the goods on the consignment notes were £2 16s. 8d. for those sent on Nov. 7 and £1 17s. 1d. for those sent on Nov. 8. The tolls chargeable had the goods been correctly declared, C were £4 9s. 2d. and £2 18s. 6d. respectively. The magistrate was of opinion that the goods brought by the appellants to the respondents' station on Nov. 7 and 8, 1916, were not correctly described in the consignment notes, nor were the respective numbers or quantities of the goods liable to the payment of different tolls correctly specified in the consignment notes; that the incorrect description and specification were so made on the consignment notes on the instructions of Percy D Charles Foss in order to void the payment of the proper tolls chargeable thereon; that Percy Charles Foss had authority from the appellants to give the instructions; that the appellants were liable under the statute for the act of the said Percy Charles Foss; and, therefore were guilty of the offences charged in the said complaints.

By the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845:

E "Section 98. Every person being the owner or having the care of any carriage or goods passing or being upon the railway shall, on demand, give to the collector of tolls at the places where he attends for the purpose of receiving goods or of collecting tolls for the part of the railway on which such carriage or goods may have travelled or be about to travel, an exact account in F writing signed by him of the number or quantity of goods conveyed by any such carriage, and of the point on the railway from which such carriage or goods have set out or are about to set out, and at what point the same are intended to be unloaded or taken off the railway; and if the goods conveyed by any such carriage, or brought for conveyance as aforesaid, be G liable to the payment of different tolls, then such owner or other person shall specify the respective numbers or quantities thereof liable to each or any of such tolls. Section 99. If any such owner or other such person fail to give such account, or to produce his way-bill or bill of lading, to such collector or other officer or servant of the company demanding the same, or if he give a false account, or if he unload to take off any part of his lading or goods at any other place than shall be mentioned in such account, with H intent to avoid the payment of any tolls payable in respect thereof, he shall for ever such offence forfeit . . . a sum not exceeding ten pounds for every ton of goods, or for any parcel not exceeding one hundred weight, and so in proportion for any less quantity of goods than one ton, or for any parcel exceeding one hundred weight (as the case may be), which shall be upon any such carriage; and such penalty shall be in addition to the toll to which such I goods may be liable."

By s. 2 (1) of the Interpretation Act, 1889:

"In the construction of every enactment relating to an offence punishable on indictment or on summary conviction, whether contained in an Act passed before or after the commencement of the Act, the expression "person" shall, unless the contrary intention appears, include a body corporate."

Cyril Atkinson, K.C., and McCleary for the appellants.

Disturnal, K.C., and Wingate-Saul for the respondents.

VISCOUNT READING, C.J. — The appellants, Messrs. Mousell Bros., Ltd., carry on a business as removal and storage contractors. Their principle place of business is in London, but they have a branch house in Manchester, and this branch house is under the management of Percy Charles Foss. It was a part of the duties of Foss, as manager, to fill up or to direct the filling up of the consignment notes for goods sent by the appellants, his principals, to the respondents, the railway company, for conveyance by the respondents' railway. There are certain prescribed classifications of goods, well known to the appellants, and the rates for carriage depend upon the classification to which the goods belong. In the present case it was proved that Foss, in making out the consignment notes—or in causing them to be made out—wrongly described the goods so as to obtain their conveyance at a cheaper rate than would otherwise have been chargeable.

The question which we are called upon to decide is whether, the offence of Foss having been proved, the appellants, a limited liability company, can be convicted of the offence of having given a false account of goods intended to be carried by the respondents with the intent of avoiding the payment of the tolls properly chargeable for the same. It is not suggested for one moment that the directors of the appellant company are in any way parties to the false description of the goods. That has been made quite clear all the way through. But what is suggested is that the appellants can be made criminally responsible for the act of their servant, who was intrusted with the performance of this class of acts, and was, therefore, acting within the scope of his employment. The learned stipendiary magistrate of Manchester, who heard the complaint, came to the conclusion that the appellants could be convicted under the circumstances, and the matter now comes before us upon a Case Stated as to whether that conviction was right in law. Counsel for the appellants has argued that the conviction must be quashed, because the appellants could not be made liable for the act of their servant under the present circumstances. He has contended that a principal cannot be made liable for the act of his servant or agent unless either the principal is shown to have given instructions for the wrongful act, or to have had knowledge of it and to have allowed it to continue, or unless there are in the statute creating the offence very clear words imposing such liability upon the principal. We have to determine whether that contention is correct.

The first thing to be considered is the language of the statute. Under s. 98 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, there is imposed upon every "person" being the owner or having the care of any goods on the railway the obligation of giving an exact account in writing of the number or quantity of goods liable to each of the tolls. [Note: The section was amended by the Railways Act, 1921 (see Sched. 6), which prescribes the particulars of the goods to be supplied instead of merely the "number and quantity."] Then comes s. 99, under which it is made an offence for any such person as is referred to in s. 98 to give, among other things, a false account with intent to avoid the payment of any tolls payable in respect of such goods. In addition to these two sections of the Act of 1845 it is necessary to refer to s. 4 (1) of the Interpretation Act, 1889, which provides that in the construction of every enactment relating to an offence punishable on indictment or on summary conviction, whether passed before or after 1889, the word "person" shall, unless a contrary intention appears, include a body corporate.

In order to determine whether or not the contrary intention does appear, it is necessary to consider the broad question under what circumstances can a principal be made criminally responsible for the act of his servant, and then comes the question whether s. 99, which imposes the penalty on the owner, makes the principal liable for an act done by his servant within the scope of the servant's employment, but without the knowledge or instructions of the principal. In my view, the true principle of law applicable to the present case is laid down in the judgment of CHANNELL, J., in Pearks, Gunston and Tee, Ltd. v. Ward (1) where he says ([1902] 2 K.B. at p. 11):

A “By the general principles of the criminal law, if a matter is made a criminal offence, it is essential that there should be something in the nature of mens rea, and, therefore, in ordinary cases a corporation cannot be guilty of a criminal offence, nor can a master be liable criminally for an offence committed by his servant. But there are exceptions to this rule in the case of quasi-criminal offences, as they may be termed—that is to say, where certain acts are forbidden by law under a penalty, possibly even under a personal penalty, such as imprisonment—at any rate, in default of payment of a fine; and the reason for this is that the legislature has thought it so important to prevent the particular act from being committed that it absolutely forbids it to be done; and if it is done the offender is liable to a penalty whether he had any mens rea or not, and whether or not he intended to commit a breach of the law.”

C It follows that where the act forbidden is one of the character described by CHANNELL, J., the principal would be liable for the doing of the forbidden act by his servant, and the whole question before us is whether these sections of the Act of 1845 deal with a forbidden thing of that class for which the principal is so made liable.

D Before dealing with the exact language of the sections I should like to refer to Coppen v. Moore (No. 2) (2), which, although not directly applicable to the present case, contains a statement of LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J., of some general principles which may well be quoted. Referring to Bond v. Evans (3) the Lord Chief Justice said ([1898] 2 Q.B. at pp. 312, 314):

E “The decisions in these and in other like cases were based upon the construction of the statute in question. The court in fact came to the conclusion that, having regard to the language, scope, and objects of those Acts [i.e. the Licensing Acts] the legislature intended to fix criminal responsibilities upon the master for acts done by his servant in the course of his employment, although such acts were not authorised by the master, and might even have been expressly prohibited by him . . . In answer, then, to the question which alone is put to us—namely, whether upon the facts stated the decision of the magistrates convicting the appellant was in point of law correct—our answer is that in our judgment it was. When the scope and object of the Act are borne in mind, any other conclusion would to a large extent render the Act ineffective for its avowed purposes.”

G So that, when the language of an Act is not so clear as to leave no room whatever for doubt, the court may bear in mind the avowed purpose of the Act, and may consider whether a particular construction will or will not render the Act effective for that purpose.

H Primâ facie, no responsibility rests upon a master for criminal acts done by his servant to which he is not a party. But it may be that there is an intention on the part of the legislature, in order to guard against the happening of a forbidden thing, to impose a liability upon a principal, even though the principal is entirely innocent of the act done by the servant. There are plenty of instances of this. Thus, under the licensing laws, a licensee is in some cases liable for the acts of his servant, even though these acts are done by the servant without any knowledge at all on the part of his master. The same thing is true under the provisions of the Acts dealing with the sale of foods and drugs. The master may be held responsible and made amenable to the penalty enjoined by the law although he is absolutely ignorant of the act of his servant. In those cases it is to be gathered from the language of the statute that the legislature intended that the principal should be liable, and it may be said that the doing of an act has been absolutely forbidden, and the doing of it is made a criminal offence even though the mens rea is absent. There are other cases, again, in which it is necessary that there should be something in the nature of mens rea. A good example of this class of case is Chuter v. Freeth and Pocock, Ltd. (4). In that case the offence charged being the giving to the purchaser of food a false warranty in writing, it was held that the principal, although a limited company, could be made liable, and the court pointed out that the question really depended upon the principles laid down in Pearks, Gunston and Tee, Ltd. v. Ward (1).

Coming now to the present case, I have arrived at the conclusion that, even in the year 1845, the legislature must be taken to have known that there were many instances in which acts would be done by servants and yet it had been resolved that the penalty should be imposed on the principal. Here the penalty is imposed, under the Act of 1845, upon “every person being the owner or having the care of any carriage or goods passing or being upon the railway.”

It may be that these words are wide enough to include the manager Foss, but in any event they mean, in my opinion, the bailee who is intrusted with the goods for carriage and who is not the owner. The acts which are forbidden by the relevant sections of the Act of 1845 are such as would have to be performed by a servant. The object of the statute was to forbid the giving of false descriptions of goods carried by the railway so as to get them carried at a cheaper rate than that fixed according to the tolls leviable, and the penalty section was intended for the protection of the railway company, a fine being imposed for every ton of goods carried under the false description. In view of the language and the purposes of the Act of 1845, I am of opinion that it was the intention of the legislature to fix responsibility for this quasi-criminal act upon the principal if the forbidden act was done by the servant whilst acting within the scope of his employment. If the view which I have expressed is the true one there is nothing to distinguish a limited company from any other principal, and the appellants were properly held liable for the acts of their manager, Foss. The learned magistrate was, therefore, right in the conclusion at which he arrived, and the appeal must be dismissed.

RIDLEY, J.—I am of the same opinion.

ATKIN, J.—I agree, and I have very little to add to the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice. Upon the authorities which have been cited it appears to me to be clear that, although prima facie a principal cannot be held criminally responsible for the acts of his servants, there may be instances in which the legislature have resolved to prohibit an act or to enforce a duty in such words as to make the prohibition of the act or the enforcement of the duty absolute. In such a case the principal is liable if the act is in fact done by his servant, although he himself may know nothing whatever about it. In order to discover whether any particular act has or has not this effect it is necessary to have regard to the object of the statute, the words used, the nature of the duty imposed, the person upon whom the duty is imposed, the person by whom the duty would be performed in the ordinary course of events, and the person upon whom the penalty is imposed. R. v. Tyler and International Commercial Co. (5) is ample authority for what I have just stated, and when the two sections in question of the Act of 1845 are examined in this light, I do not think that there can be any doubt that the appellants were rightly convicted in the present case.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Grundy, Kershaw, Samson & Co., Manchester; M. C. Tait.

[Reported by J. A. SLATER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

R. v. SHEFFIELD JUSTICES. Ex Parte MORRISON

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Reading, C.J., Sankey and Low, JJ.), January 12, 13, 1916]

B

[Reported [1916] 1 K.B. 682; 85 L.J.K.B. 818; 114 L.T. 414;
80 J.P. 147; 32 T.L.R. 241]

Licensing—Compensation—Non-renewal of licence—Obligation of persons interested to submit agreement as to compensation to compensation authority—Right to have Commissioners of Inland Revenue notified by compensation authority—Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), s. 20 (2)—Licensing Rules, 1910 (S.R. & O. 1910 No. 1180), r. 31.

C

Under the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, s. 20 (2) and the Licensing Rules, 1910, there was no obligation on persons interested in licensed premises to submit to the compensation authority any agreement they had reached as to the compensation to be paid for non-renewal of an old on-licence, and, consequently, when no such agreement had been submitted to the authority by the persons interested they were entitled under r. 31 of the Licensing Rules, 1910, to call on the compensation authority to send the prescribed notice to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue so that the commissioners might determine the amount of the compensation.

D

Notes. The Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 was repealed and replaced with amendments by the Licensing Act, 1953. Section 17 (3) of the Act of 1953 contains, substantially, the same provisions as s. 20 (2) of the Act of 1910. The Licensing Rules, 1910, have effect under the Licensing Act, 1953, by virtue of s. 168 (2) of that Act.

E

As to compensation on non-renewal of a licence, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 574 et seq. For cases on payment of compensation, see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 60 et seq. For the Licensing Act, 1953, s. 17 (3), see 33 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 164.

F

Rule Nisi directed to the compensation authority for the city of Sheffield, calling upon them to show cause why a mandamus should not issue requiring them to send to the Inland Revenue Commissioners a notice pursuant to r. 31 of the Licensing Rules, 1910, in order that the commissioners might fix the amount of compensation payable in respect of the non-renewal of the licence of the Economical Hotel, Sheffield.

G

At the general annual meeting of the licensing justices of Sheffield, held in February, 1915, the question of the renewal of the licence of the Economical Hotel was referred to the compensation authority, and the latter body in April, 1915, decided to refuse the renewal. The refusal to renew was subject to the payment of compensation under s. 20 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910.

H

In order to arrive at the amount of compensation to be paid, the compensation authority required the owners and the licensee to supply them with statements as to the rent, trade, and other particulars concerning the premises. This was in accordance with the usual practice adopted by the compensation authority. The applicant, the licensee of the Economical Hotel desired to go direct to the

I

Inland Revenue Commissioners to have the amount of the compensation fixed, and refused to supply the particulars asked for, or to submit any agreement, as to compensation to the compensation authority. The applicant further requested the compensation authority to send the notice in pursuance of r. 31 of the Licensing Rules, 1910, to the Inland Revenue Commissioners. The compensation authority took the view that there was no duty incumbent upon them to send the notice under r. 31 to the Inland Revenue Commissioners before there had been an agreement submitted to them as to the amount of compensation to be paid, and, after adjourning their meetings on several occasions in order that the agreement might be submitted to them, declined to accede to the applicant's request. The issue raised, therefore, was whether the compensation authority were entitled to refuse to send the notice to the Inland Revenue Commissioners where no agreement as to compensation had been submitted to them.

Section 20 of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, provided:

"(1) Where the compensation authority refuse the renewal of an old licence, a sum equal to the difference between the value of the licensed premises . . . and the value which those premises would bear if they were not licensed premises, shall be paid as compensation to the persons interested in the licensed premises. (2) The amount to be so paid shall, if an amount is agreed upon by the persons appearing to the compensation authority to be interested in the licensed premises and is approved by that authority, be that amount, and, in default of such agreement and approval, shall be determined by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue . . ."

The Licensing Rules, 1910, provided:

"Rule 27. The compensation authority shall, after the time limited by these rules for the sending in of claims has elapsed, hold a supplemental meeting for the purpose of considering whether their approval shall be given to any sum agreed upon by the person entitled to compensation and submitted to them as the money to be paid as compensation . . . and at that meeting shall give any person entitled to compensation an opportunity of being heard with respect to those matters . . . Rule 29. Where the persons entitled to compensation agree upon a sum to be submitted to the compensation authority as the amount of compensation money, a written statement to that effect containing the sum agreed upon, signed by or on behalf of all those persons, must be lodged with the compensation authority at the meeting or previously thereto. Rule 30. (1) At the meeting the compensation authority shall, if an agreement as to the sum to be paid as compensation money is submitted to them for their approval, consider whether their approval shall be given to that sum, and, if their approval is so given, shall proceed to settle the shares of the persons entitled to be compensated in that sum. Rule 31. If the amount of the compensation money remains to be determined otherwise than by means of an agreement approved by the compensation authority, the compensation authority shall send a notice of the fact to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, Somerset House, London, W.C., accompanied by a statement of the names and addresses of the persons entitled to compensation."

E. Tindel Atkinson, K.C., and Waddy, for the compensation authority.

G. C. Whiteley, for the applicant.

LORD READING, C.J.—In this case a rule nisi has been obtained by the licensee of the Economical Hotel, Sheffield, directed to the compensation authority for the city of Sheffield, calling upon them to show cause why a mandamus should not issue requiring them to send to the Inland Revenue Commissioners a notice pursuant to r. 31 of the Licensing Rules, 1910, in order that the commissioners might fix the amount of the compensation to be paid in respect of the non-renewal of the licence of the hotel. The compensation authority have refused to send this notice, as the applicant failed to supply them with particulars for arriving at the amount of compensation money to be paid in respect of the non-renewal of the licence and to come to any agreement as to the same, and their contention is that they cannot be required to forward the notice under r. 31 until these preliminaries have taken place. The short point, therefore, for our determination is whether there is or is not in the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, and the Licensing Rules, 1910, any obligation imposed upon the claimant for compensation either to endeavour to arrive at an agreement as to the amount of

A that compensation, or, if an agreement has been arrived at, whether he is bound to submit it to the compensation authority for their approval before laying his case for compensation before the Inland Revenue Commissioners in order that the amount may be settled by them.

The applicant claims that he has a right to go direct to the Inland Revenue Commissioners, and it is contended by him that he is under no liability to submit
B any agreement to the compensation authority, or, even if an agreement has been arrived at, to present it to them for their approval. He further contends, therefore, that if he does not choose to submit any agreement to the compensation authority, this body must forward the prescribed notice to the Inland Revenue Commissioners, pursuant to r. 31, who, in the absence of an agreement approved
C by the compensation authority, are alone empowered to determine the amount of compensation to be paid. It is quite clear from the scheme of the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910, that the compensation authority has no power to fix the amount of compensation. Their power is limited to fixing the proportions payable to the various persons interested when the amount has been ascertained by the agreement of the parties. Apart from the persons interested, the Inland
D Revenue Commissioners alone can settle the amount of the compensation, and in this case the applicant, as well as several other persons who are in a similar position to himself, determined to go direct to the Inland Revenue Commissioners. Consequently no agreement was ever submitted to the compensation authority. The compensation authority evidently took the view that an agreement had been arrived at, and that the applicant was bound to submit it for their approval, and they adjourned their meeting on several occasions in order that the applicant
E might submit the agreement to them. Were the compensation authority right in taking up this attitude? We have been told that, in fact, no agreement was ever arrived at. That point is quite immaterial, as the affidavits before us simply state that no agreement was ever submitted to the compensation authority, and it is quite consistent with that statement whether an agreement had or had not been come to. The point is immaterial, because the applicant contends that even F if an agreement was made he was not bound to submit it to the compensation authority for their approval, but was entitled to have the matter dealt with directly by the Inland Revenue Commissioners.

It is not for us to say whether we think that the attitude taken up by the applicant is or is not reasonable, nor to express an opinion whether the legislature ought to have made provision that the agreement, if made, should have
G been submitted to the compensation authority. In point of fact Parliament has done no such thing. The Act of 1910, in conjunction with the rules, has provided that unless there is an agreement which is approved of, a notice must be sent to the Inland Revenue Commissioners. The duty to notify arises either when no agreement has been submitted or when an agreement has been submitted and disapproved. Here no agreement has been submitted, the amount of compensation remains to be determined, and the condition upon which r. 31 becomes H operative has happened. Under r. 27 it is provided that the compensation authority shall hold a meeting for, the purpose of considering whether their approval shall be given to the sum agreed upon by the persons entitled to compensation and submitted to them as the money to be paid as compensation, which involves that a sum has been agreed upon and that the agreement has been
I submitted to the compensation authority. Unless these two conditions are complied with there is no right on the part of the compensation authority to determine whether they shall give their approval or not to any matter connected with the compensation.

Looking at the Act and the rules, I am of opinion that there is no legal obligation imposed upon an applicant for compensation in a case like the present to submit any agreement as to the compensation to be paid to the compensation authority for approval, and consequently, when no such agreement is submitted, the applicant is entitled under r. 31 to call upon the compensation authority to send the prescribed notice to the Inland Revenue Commissioners in order that the claim as to compensation may be dealt with by them. For these reasons I think that this rule must be made absolute.

SANKEY, J.—I agree. The compensation authority are the persons who are in charge of the compensation fund. Whenever a question arises as to the payment of compensation, owing to the refusal to renew an old on-licence, there are various parties who are entitled to receive a share of the compensation fund, and these parties may, if they choose, agree amongst themselves as to the sum which is to be paid. Further, they may submit their agreement to the compensation authority for approval. It is then, and then only, that the compensation authority have any rights—namely, to give or to withhold their approval of the agreement. It will be seen, then, that the right of the compensation authority with regard to matters of this kind cannot arise unless two conditions precedent have been fulfilled. These conditions are set out in r. 27. The first condition is that an agreement must have been arrived at, and the second is that there must have been a submission of the agreement to the compensation authority. Nowhere in the rules is there to be found any obligation which imposes upon the parties to the agreement the duty of submitting the agreement as to compensation to the compensation authority. Now, when does the duty of sending the notice to the Inland Revenue Commissioners, as prescribed by r. 31, arise? Clearly it arises when there is no agreement at all, or when, if there is an agreement, it is not submitted to the compensation authority. As far as the present case is concerned, there is no evidence that any agreement was ever arrived at, and most certainly, if there was such an agreement, it was never submitted to the compensation authority. Since neither of the two conditions precedent has been fulfilled, the compensation authority were bound to send the notice to the Inland Revenue Commissioners. The rule nisi must be made absolute.

LOW, J.—I am of the same opinion. The legislature evidently left it to the parties interested in the compensation money to be paid upon the non-renewal of a licence to select the body which should fix the amount, and in the present case the applicant, as well as the other persons who are in a similar position, considered that the circumstances were such as to justify a reference to the Inland Revenue Commissioners rather than to the local compensation authority. I think that he was quite justified in taking this course under the Act and the rules. There are only two circumstances in which, as it appears to me, the compensation authority can stand between the applicant and the Inland Revenue Commissioners when the question of the compensation to be paid has to be considered. The first is where an agreement as to the amount of the compensation has been arrived at, and the second is where that agreement has been approved by the compensation authority. In the present case neither of these circumstances exists. There is no evidence that any agreement was ever arrived at, and even if there had been there is nothing which makes it legally necessary for the agreement to be submitted to the compensation authority. On this second point I am in entire accord with the judgments which have been delivered, and as a result I also think that this rule should be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

Solicitors: Church, Rendell, Bird & Co., for F. B. Dingle, Sheffield; Godden, Holme & Ward, for Chambers & Son, Sheffield.

[Reported by J. A. SLATER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. WHEELER

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Viscount Reading, C.J., Ridley and Low, J.J.), October 23, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 283; 86 L.J.K.B. 40; 116 L.T. 161; 81 J.P. 75;
33 T.L.R. 21; 61 Sol. Jo. 100; 25 Cox, C.C. 603; 12 Cr. App. Rep. 159]

Criminal Law—Perjury—False evidence by accused person after plea of Guilty Perjury Act 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6), s. 1 (1).

An accused person who gives evidence on oath in mitigation of sentence after he has pleaded Guilty to a charge is a "competent witness" within s. 1 of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, and can be "lawfully sworn" within s. 1 (1) of the Perjury Act, 1911; evidence so given is "material in that proceeding" within that section; and, therefore, if such an accused person gives false evidence he is liable to be convicted of perjury.

Notes. As to perjury in general see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 623 et seq.; and for cases see 15 DIGEST (Repl.) 813 et seq. For the Perjury Act, 1911, see 5 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 963. For the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, see 9 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 613.

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Hodgkinson and Manning (1900), 64 J.P. 808; 14 Digest (Repl.) 509, 4934.
- (2) R. v. Bright, ante p. 811; [1916] 2 K.B. 441; 85 L.J.K.B. 1638; 115 L.T. 488; 80 J.P. 407; 32 T.L.R. 600; 25 Cox, C.C. 540; 12 Cr. App. Rep. 69, C.C.A.; 14 Digest (Repl.) 373, 3635.
- (3) R. v. Tate (1871), 12 Cox, C.C. 7; 15 Digest (Repl.) 821, 7835.
- (4) R. v. Hewitt (1913), 9 Cr. App. Rep. 192; 15 Digest (Repl.) 822, 7846.

Also referred to in argument:

- R. v. Clegg* (1868), 19 L.T. 47; 15 Digest (Repl.) 813, 7766.
- R. v. Gibbon* (1862), Le. & Ca. 109; 31 L.J.M.C. 98; 5 L.T. 805; 26 J.P. 149; 8 Jur. N.S. 159; 10 W.R. 350; 9 Cox, C.C. 105, C.C.R.; 15 Digest (Repl.) 820, 7829.
- R. v. Baker*, [1895] 1 Q.B. 797; 64 L.J.M.C. 177; 72 L.T. 631; 43 W.R. 654; 11 T.L.R. 342; 39 Sol. Jo. 416; 15 R. 346, C.C.R.; 15 Digest (Repl.) 820, 7828.

Appeal against a conviction for perjury.

The appellant pleaded Guilty before a bench of magistrates to having sold milk which was deficient in fat, contrary to the sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. In the course of his statement to the court, the prosecuting inspector suggested that the deficiency of fat was due to the mixing of separated and new milk. The appellant's solicitor, when addressing the court, repudiated this suggestion, and said that the appellant had not bought any separated milk for a year. This statement was challenged, and the appellant went into the witness box and gave evidence on oath that he had not purchased any separated milk for twelve months. That statement was untrue, and the appellant was subsequently convicted at the Central Criminal Court of perjury, sentence being postponed pending the hearing of an appeal.

By the Perjury Act, 1911, s. 1 (1):

"If any person lawfully sworn as a witness . . . wilfully makes a statement material in that proceeding, which he knows to be false or does not believe to be true, he shall be guilty of perjury . . ."

Vachell, K.C., Curtis Bennett, and Keeves for the appellant.

Travers Humphreys, and Cecil Whiteley for the Crown.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

VISCOUNT READING, C.J.—This case raises the question whether a false statement made by the appellant was made upon an oath lawfully sworn in the course of judicial proceedings. Counsel for the appellant has taken two points. The first is that the appellant was called after the issue in the case had been determined by the plea of Guilty, and that any statement made by the appellant afterwards was not a statement which he was competent to make. Put shortly, it is contended that the appellant was not a competent witness when called. The second point put forward is that the statement made by the appellant was not a statement material to the issue or to the proceedings.

With regard to the first point, it is argued that under the provisions of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, a prisoner can only be called upon to give evidence at a certain time and in a certain way. The words in s. 1 of that Act, "at every stage of the proceedings," are very wide words. It is contended that they are limited to the proceedings in the different courts, but this court cannot see any reason for adopting this limitation. The words are used so as to enable an accused person to give evidence "at every stage of the proceeding" where his evidence can properly be given; for instance, such evidence could not be given in proceedings before a grand jury in which no part is taken by the defence. Whenever the defence can be heard the prisoner can give evidence on his own behalf. It has been argued that under s. 2 of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, the appellant could only be called at the close of the case for the prosecution, and that, as he was called after that time, he was not a "competent witness" within s. 1, and, therefore, could not be "lawfully sworn" within s. 1 (1) of the Perjury Act, 1911. But when the true meaning is given to s. 2 of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, the argument is without force. The argument assumes that s. 2 is exhaustive as to the time when a prisoner can be called as a witness. The object of the section is to provide that, if the prisoner is the only witness called for the defence, any statement on oath which he makes must be made before his advocate makes his speech, but nowhere outside that section, having regard to the scope of the Act and to the wide language of s. 1 can any provision be found to the effect that the prisoner can only be called at that time if the intention is to call other witnesses for the defence. It is difficult to say that in an enabling statute of this kind, the legislature wished to prevent the prisoner from giving evidence except at that particular time in all cases, or that after a prisoner has pleaded Guilty he cannot go into the witness box. It would be a hardship on the prisoner. Only one question remains—namely, whether evidence given in mitigation of punishment is evidence given in a "stage of the proceeding." Undoubtedly it is. The proceedings certainly continue until the passing of the sentence. The court also thinks that the statement made by the appellant was "material in that proceeding" because it was made with the object of influencing the minds of the justices and persuading them to inflict a lighter sentence than they might have done if the statement had not been made. The court thinks that an offence under s. 1 (1) of the Perjury Act, 1911, is established and that the appeal must be dismissed.

A number of authorities were quoted to us during the hearing of the case. It is true that in R. v. Hodykinson and Manning (1) DARLING, J., took the view that a prisoner could not give evidence on oath in mitigation of sentence after pleading Guilty, because the period between the plea of Guilty and sentence was not a "stage of the proceedings" under the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898. But on looking at that case it shows that the judge came to that conclusion on the statement of counsel appearing for the Crown, which apparently was accepted without argument. The decision was discussed in R. v. Bright (2), where DARLING, J., presiding in this court, doubted whether the former decision was sound in law. Reliance was also placed by counsel for the appellant on R. v. Tate (3). That case has already been considered by this court in R. v. Hewitt (4) where the court doubted whether the decision was right, though not expressly dissenting from it. In none of the cases cited to us to-day do we find anything which would induce

A this court to say that the evidence given by the appellant in this case was not "material in that proceeding" within s. 1 (1) of the Perjury Act, 1911, or that the appellant was not "lawfully sworn" as not being a "competent witness" to whom the oath had been properly administered. The case will be remitted for sentence.

Appeal dismissed.

B Solicitors: W. T. Ricketts & Sons; Director of Public Prosecutions.

[Reported by R. F. BLAKISTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

COHEN v. POPULAR RESTAURANTS, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Rowlatt, J.) December 7, 1916]

D [Reported [1917] 1 K.B. 480; 86 L.J.K.B. 617; 116 L.T. 477;
33 T.L.R. 107]

Landlord and Tenant—Lease—Assignment—Covenant not to assign demised premises without licence—Lease assigned to company—Voluntary liquidation of company—Assignment of lease by liquidator without licence—Breach of covenant—Damages.

E A lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to assign the demised premises without the consent in writing of the lessor, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld in the case of a responsible person being offered as tenant. The lease was assigned to a limited company which subsequently went into voluntary liquidation. The liquidator, without obtaining the consent of the lessor, assigned the lease to a person presumably of straw.

F Held: (i) the assignment by the liquidator was not an assignment by operation of law, but was a breach by the lessee of the covenant not to assign; (ii) the lessor could assess once for all and prove immediately in the liquidation for the amount lost by having as tenant instead of the company a tenant who was not a responsible person, and he need not wait and prove for the rent as it accrued due.

G Notes. Referred: Re Farrow's Bank, Ltd., [1921] All E.R. Rep. 511.

As to covenants against assignment or underletting, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 629-637, and for cases see 31 DIGEST (Repl.) 410-423.

Cases referred to:

H (1) Doe d. Goodbehere v. Bevan (1815), 3 M. & S. 353; 105 E.R. 644; 31 Digest (Repl.) 435, 5617.

(2) Re Birkbeck Permanent Benefit Building Society, Official Receiver v. Licenses Insurance Corpn., [1913] 2 Ch. 34; 6 B.W.C.C.N. 150; sub nom. Birkbeck Permanent Benefit Building Society v. Licensees' Insurance Corpn. and Guarantee Fund, Ltd., 82 L.J.Ch. 386; sub nom. Re Birkbeck Permanent Benefit Building Society, Ex parte Official Receiver, 57 Sol. Jo. 559; 31 Digest (Repl.) 434, 5608.

I (3) Re Riggs, Ex parte Lovell, [1901] 2 K.B. 16; 84 L.T. 428; sub nom. Re Riggs, Ex parte Trustees, 70 L.J.K.B. 541; 49 W.R. 624; 45 Sol. Jo. 408; 8 Mans. 233; 31 Digest (Repl.) 434, 5613.

(4) Re Moon, Ex parte Dawes (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 275; 55 L.T. 114; 34 W.R. 753; 2 T.L.R. 506, C.A.; 5 Digest (Repl.) 716, 6227.

(5) Williams v. Earle (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 739; 9 B. & S. 740; 37 L.J.Q.B. 231; 19 L.T. 238; 33 J.P. 86; 16 W.R. 1041; 31 Digest (Repl.) 410, 5399.

(6) Re Panther Lead Co., [1896] 1 Ch. 978; 65 L.J.Ch. 499; 44 W.R. 573; 12 T.L.R. 327; 40 Sol. Jo. 437; 3 Mans. 165; 31 Digest (Repl.) 570, 6910.

Also referred to in argument:

Re Haytor Granite Co. (1865), 1 Ch. App. 77; 30 J.P. 100; 12 Jur. N.S. 1; 14 W.R. 186; sub nom. Re Haytor Granite Co., Ex parte Bell, 35 L.J.Ch. 154; sub nom. Re Haytor Granite Co., Ex parte Scobell, 13 L.T. 515, L.J.J.; 10 Digest (Repl.) 984, 6774.

Re London and Colonial Co., Horsey's Claim (1868), L.R. 5 Eq. 562, n; 37 L.J.Ch. 393; 16 W.R. 535; 9 Digest (Repl.) 713, 4728.

Re New Oriental Bank Corpn. (No. 2), [1895] 1 Ch. 753; 57 L.J.Ch. 439; 43 W.R. 523; 11 T.L.R. 291; 39 Sol. Jo. 347; sub nom. Re New Oriental Bank Corpn., Ltd., Ex parte Hong Kong Land Investment and Agency Co., Ltd., 72 L.T. 419; 2 Mans. 301; 13 R. 459; 10 Digest (Repl.) 984, 6777.

Action for breach of a tenants' covenant in a lease.

On Oct. 1, 1897, a lease of the premises No. 37, High Street, Southwark, was granted for a term of twenty-one years. The lease contained a covenant by the lessees that they would not assign the premises without the lessor's previous licence and consent in writing, but that such consent was not to be unreasonably withheld in case of a respectable and responsible person being offered as tenant. On Dec. 6, 1899, the lease was assigned by the lessees to certain mesne assignees, such assignment being duly authorised by the lessor. On Feb. 1, 1912, the assignees assigned the lease to the defendant company, the lessor having previously given his consent to such assignment. On April 10, 1916, the reversion expectant on the termination of the lease became vested in the plaintiffs. A resolution was passed for the voluntary winding-up of the company, and on June 22, 1916, the liquidator of the company assigned the lease of the premises without the consent or licence of the plaintiffs to a person who was not able to pay the rent or to perform the covenants in the lease. The plaintiffs thereupon brought this action against the defendant company for breach of the covenant not to assign the lease without the previous licence or consent in writing of the lessor, claiming damages or, in the alternative, a declaration that the defendants were liable until the expiration of the lease to pay the rent reserved by the lease and to perform the covenants therein contained.

Powell, K.C., Stuart Beran, and H. Geen for the plaintiffs.

Cunliffe, K.C., and Frampton, for the defendants.

ROWLATT, J.—This action is brought against a company which is in voluntary liquidation for a breach of a covenant in a lease not to assign the premises demised. The defendants are themselves the assignees of the lease, but it has been held that the burden of the covenant not to assign runs with the land. The company went into voluntary liquidation, and the liquidator, after the July rent became due, made an assignment of the lease to a married woman, who lives in a house rented at 8s. 6d. a week, and is, I draw the conclusion, a woman of straw. The liability of the defendants is thereby terminated for all future time.

The first point taken is that no breach of the covenant not to assign has been committed, because the assignment was by the liquidator. A covenant not to assign primâ facie does not extend to prohibit an assignment by a person who takes the lease by operation of law, together with a duty to dispose of it—Doe d. Goodbehere v. Beran (1) which is referred to by NEVILLE, J., in Re Birkbeck Permanent Benefit Building Society Official Receiver v. Licenses Insurance Corpn. (2). The question raised in the latter case was whether a policy of insurance had been forfeited upon assignment by the assured, a company. Assignment by operation of law was expressly excepted from the causes of forfeiture. The company was ordered to be wound-up by the court. NEVILLE, J., at the end of his judgment said ([1913] 2 Ch. at p. 38):

A “ Doe d. Goodbehere v. Bevan (1) clearly shows that prima facie a contractual restriction of assignment does not apply to the assignment by a person on whom the property has devolved by operation of law, and who is under an obligation to assign. Of course, you may have so contracted as to include such a case, but the mere condition against assignment does not prima facie include it. And that this condition was not intended to include it is, I think, to be found not only from the general construction which ought to be placed upon such a condition, but also from the fact that we have in the conditions a direct elimination of the case of the passing of a policy by operation of law. I do not think, therefore, it was ever intended to apply to an assignment by a person in whom the policy became vested, not by a voluntary act of the insured but by the operation of law, and who then was under an obligation to assign to somebody else.”

C As the company in that case had been ordered to be wound-up by the court, and the assignment was by an officer of the court, it was held that the assignment was not the voluntary act of the assured. In the present case the facts are otherwise. The assignment was the act of a liquidator who was brought into being by the voluntary act of the company—the passing of a special resolution to wind-up the company voluntarily.

D Counsel for the defendants contended that the assignment was not the voluntary act of the defendant company, because the powers of a liquidator are conferred upon him by s. 186 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 [corresponding to Companies Act, 1948, s. 285], and the fact that the resolution by which the liquidator was brought into being was a voluntary resolution is irrelevant, and in support of that contention he referred to Re Riggs, Ex parte Lovell (3). E In that case a lease of certain premises contained a covenant not to assign without licence, and a proviso for re-entry on the bankruptcy of the lessee or breach of any covenant. The lessee having been adjudicated bankrupt on his own petition, the lessor purported to determine the lease under the proviso of re-entry, and obtained peaceable possession from the lessee without giving any notice under s. 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 [now Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 146]. F WRIGHT, J., held that the lessor's re-entry was void as against the lessee's trustee in bankruptcy, and that, the lessee being adjudicated bankrupt on his own petition, there was no breach of his covenant not to assign. He said ([1901] 2 K.B. at p. 21):

G “ On the construction of this lease, and apart from authority, I should be of opinion that in this covenant the words ‘ assign or underlet ’ are used in their ordinary or popular sense, and refer only to such assignments as are directly made by the lessee as distinguished from such assignments by law as result by the statute from a petition in bankruptcy followed by adjudication. This conclusion seems much strengthened by the fact that the proviso, which immediately follows the covenant, expressly provides for the case of bankruptcy or of the filing of a petition by the debtor. And it would be strange if, notwithstanding the express mention of bankruptcy as a ground for re-entry, and the express obligation to give notice before re-entry on that ground, the obligation can be evaded on the ground that the bankruptcy operates in law as an assignment.”

H I He expressed that opinion upon the construction of the words “ assign or underlet ” in the passage in which they occurred in that particular lease. At the end of his judgment he also pointed out that if the debtor's own petition operated as an assignment, then a forfeiture would accrue without it being necessary to serve a notice under the Conveyancing Acts before putting it into effect; but that the presentation of a petition by a debtor is not an assignment, as there is no assignment until adjudication, and it does not necessarily follow that a petition will ever result in an adjudication. Therefore an adjudication amounts to an assignment, whereas a petition does not. WRIGHT, J., referring to Ex parte Davies (4) said:

"The case seems to be an authority that the mere filing of a petition by a debtor, is not of itself an assignment. And if so, then there is in any view no assignment until adjudication, and at that stage the matter has become actual bankruptcy, and therefore s. 2 of the [Conveyancing] Act of 1892 applies . . ."

In Re Riggs, Ex parte Lovell (3), the bankruptcy had taken place, and the lessee had been adjudicated a bankrupt.

I think the position which I have to consider in the present case is wholly different. In a voluntary liquidation there is nothing equivalent to an adjudication. A company may go into voluntary liquidation when perfectly solvent merely for the purpose of reconstruction. A company in such a case could not be heard to say, when its liquidator had assigned an onerous lease to a man of straw, that the assignment had taken place by operation of law and not by its own voluntary act. There is no material difference between the assignment in such a case and the assignment in the present case. If the former assignment is tinged with a taint of voluntariness, so also is the latter. There is a great difference, I think, between an adjudication in bankruptcy and a voluntary winding-up, and therefore I think that the first point taken fails.

The second point taken for the defendants was that the damages that could be recovered must be limited to those accrued due up to the present time. The measure of damages, according to Williams v. Earle (5) is the loss which the plaintiffs have sustained by the substitution of the assignee for the assignors as tenant. Counsel contended that I cannot take into account rent accruing due or covenants falling to be performed in the future, but must only regard the rent which had already accrued and damages that had been sustained by reason of the defendants' breaches of covenant. In support of that contention he cited several cases in Chancery in which it was held that where a lessor applied in the winding-up of a company, which were his lessees under a subsisting lease, he could only prove for the rent as it became due, and could not impound the assets of the company to answer future claims. In Re Panther Lead Co. (6) it was pointed out that at the present time, when liabilities in a winding-up are proved for once for all, the earlier cases as to proof would require to be reconsidered. But, however that may be, in order to apply the contention of the defendants, it is necessary to treat the lease as being still subsisting. The claim, however, is made on the basis that the defendants' liability on the lease has ceased and determined, the action being brought for damages for breaches of a covenant in a lease which has come to an end. It is, therefore, necessary for the plaintiffs to assess their damages once for all in a lump sum, which will put them in the same position as if the defendants were still the persons liable to them instead of another person of inferior pecuniary ability. On this point also I am in favour of the plaintiffs. It is quite clear that the measure of damages so stated involves a consideration of the relative financial position of the defendants and their assignee. Assuming the assignee to be insolvent, the damages which the plaintiffs have sustained will vary according to the means of the defendants, the assignors; if the defendants are quite insolvent, the plaintiffs will not have suffered any damage. It will therefore be necessary for the liquidator to attend and inform me as to the position of the company.

[The liquidator agreed to accept a proof for £200, and a declaration was made that the plaintiffs were at liberty to put in a proof for that amount.]

Judgment for plaintiffs.

Solicitors: Harris, Chetham & Cohen; Penman & Brown.

[Reported by W. V. BALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

ARMSTRONG v. JACKSON

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (McCardie, J.), June 13, 14, 1917]

[Reported [1917] 2 K.B. 822; 86 L.J.K.B. 1375; 117 L.T. 479;
33 T.L.R. 444; 61 Sol. Jo. 631]

B

Agent—Broker and client—Broker selling own shares to client—Rescission—Restitutio in integrum—Fall in value of shares.

C

The plaintiff, a man devoid of business experience, instructed the defendant, a stockbroker who had previously carried through several transactions on his behalf, to buy six hundred shares in a company for him. The defendant sent him a contract note purporting to show that the shares had been purchased. The total amount debited to the plaintiff included a charge for the defendant's services as broker. The plaintiff did not immediately take up the shares, and the defendant purported to carry them over from account to account, charging a contango rate which was stated to include the defendant's remuneration for his services as broker in effecting the continuation. The shares gradually went down in price and the plaintiff paid the differences. Ultimately, on the defendant's advice, the plaintiff took a transfer of the shares, paid the price to the defendant, and held the shares as the only registered proprietor. Some years later, the plaintiff's suspicions were aroused as a result of rumours he had heard, and his solicitors wrote to the defendant asking for the name of the jobber from whom the shares had been bought. Failing to get a satisfactory answer, the plaintiff claimed to set aside the whole transaction. It was proved that the defendant had never purchased the shares for the plaintiff, but that they were part of an allotment made to the defendant as promoter of the company, the contract note was fictitious, the shares had not been continued for the plaintiff, and the defendant had never disclosed the true position to the plaintiff.

D

E

F

G

Held: a broker who was employed to buy shares could not sell his own shares unless he made a full and accurate disclosure of the facts to his principal and the principal, with full knowledge of the facts, gave his assent to the broker being in that position; accordingly, the plaintiff was entitled to have the whole transaction set aside notwithstanding that the value of the shares had decreased between the date of the supposed sale and the date of rescission.

Dictum of LORD CRANWORTH in Western Bank of Scotland v. Addie (1) (1867), L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. at p. 166, applied.

H

Notes. Referred to: Collins v. Hopkins, [1923] All E.R. Rep. 225.

As to the relationship between broker and client, see 31 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 583 et seq., and for cases see 42 DIGEST 793 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Western Bank of Scotland v. Addie, Addie v. Western Bank of Scotland (1867), L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. 145, H.L.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 119, 617.
- (2) Parker v. McKenna (1874), 10 Ch. App. 96; 44 L.J.Ch. 425; 31 LT. 739; 23 W.R. 271, L.C. & L.J.J.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 518, 3414.
- (3) Bentley v. Craven (1853), 17 Beav. 204; 21 L.T.O.S. 215; 1 W.R. 401; 51 E.R. 1011; 42 Digest 505, 711.
- (4) Gillett v. Peppercorne (1840), 3 Beav. 78; 49 E.R. 31; 42 Digest 810, 190.
- (5) Rothschild v. Brookman (1831), 2 Dow. & Cl. 188; 5 Bl. N.S. 165; 6 E.R. 697, H.L.; 42 Digest 810, 189.
- (6) Redgrave v. Hurd (1881), 20 Ch.D. 1; 51 L.J.Ch. 113; 45 L.T. 485; 30 W.R. 251, C.A.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 396, 3173.

I

- (7) Derry v. Peek (1889), 14 App. Cas. 337; 58 L.J.Ch. 864; 61 L.T. 265; 54 J.P. 148; 38 W.R. 33; 5 T.L.R. 625; 1 Meg. 292, H.L.; 9 Digest (Repl.) 127, 685.
- (8) Wilde v. Gibson (1848), 1 H.L. Cas. 605; 12 Jur. 527; 9 E.R. 897, H.L.; 40 Digest (Repl.) 387, 3103.
- (9) Seddon v. North Eastern Salt Co., Ltd., [1905] 1 Ch. 326; 74 L.J.Ch. 199; 91 L.T. 793; 53 W.R. 232; 21 T.L.R. 118; 49 Sol. Jo. 119; 9 Digest (Repl.) 366, 2342.
- (10) Angel v. Jay, [1911] 1 K.B. 666; 80 L.J.K.B. 458; 103 L.T. 809; 55 Sol. Jo. 140, D.C.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 504, 1451.
- (11) Aberdeen Rail Co. v. Blaikie Bros. (1854), 2 Eq. Rep. 1281; 23 L.T.O.S. 315; 1 Macq. 461, H.L.; 10 Digest (Repl.) 1267, 8948.
- (12) Oliver v. Court (1820), 8 Price, 127; Dan. 301; 146 E.R. 1152, Ex.Ch.; 43 Digest 855, 3028.
- (13) York Buildings Co. v. Mackenzie (1795), 8 Bro. Parl. Cas. 42; 3 E.R. 432, H.L.; 42 Digest 80, 721.
- (14) Re Moline, Ex parte Dyster (1816), 1 Mer. 155; 2 Rose, 349; 35 E.R. 632; 1 Digest (Repl.) 324, 111.
- (15) Polhill v. Walter (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 114; 1 L.J.K.B. 92; 110 E.R. 43; 35 Digest 40, 338.
- (16) Foster v. Charles (1830), 7 Bing. 105; 4 Moo. & P. 741; 9 L.J.O.S.C.P. 32; 131 E.R. 40; 35 Digest 36, 290.
- (17) Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co., [1912] A.C. 716; 81 L.J.K.B. 1140; 107 L.T. 531; 28 T.L.R. 547; 56 Sol. Jo. 723, H.L.; 1 Digest (Repl.) 682, 2426.
- (18) Refuge Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Kettlewell, [1909] A.C. 243; 78 L.J.K.B. 519; 100 L.T. 306; 25 T.L.R. 395; sub nom. Kettlewell v. Refuge Assurance Co., Ltd., 53 Sol. Jo. 339, H.L.; 35 Digest 71, 690.
- (19) Brady v. Todd (Tod) (1861), 9 C.B.N.S. 592; 30 L.J.C.P. 223; 4 L.T. 212; 25 J.P. 598; 7 Jur. N.S. 827; 9 W.R. 483; 142 E.R. 233; 1 Digest (Repl.) 324, 108.
- (20) Etlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. (1878), 3 App. Cas. 1218; 48 L.J.Ch. 73; 39 L.T. 269; 27 W.R. 65, H.L.; 35 Digest 77, 748.
- (21) Clough v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1871), L.R. 7 Exch. 26; 41 L.J.Ex. 17; 25 L.T. 708; 20 W.R. 189, Ex.Ch.; 35 Digest 69, 669.
- (22) Oelkers v. Ellis, [1914] 2 K.B. 139; 83 L.J.K.B. 658; 110 L.T. 332; 32 Digest 527, 1820.
- (23) Clarke v. Dickson (1858), E.B. & E. 148; 27 L.J.Q.B. 223; 31 L.T.O.S. 97; 4 Jur. N.S. 832; 120 E.R. 463; 35 Digest 76, 742.
- (24) Conkey v. Bond (1861), 34 Barbour, 276.
- (25) Blake v. Mowatt (1856), 21 Beav. 603; reversed sub nom. Mowatt v. Blake (1858), 31 L.T.O.S. 387, H.L.; 35 Digest 67, 639.
- (26) Rolfe v. Gregory (1865), 4 De. G.J. & Sm. 576; 5 New Rep. 257; 34 L.J.Ch. 274; 12 L.T. 162; 11 Jur. N.S. 98; 13 W.R. 355; 46 E.R. 1042, L.C.; 32 Digest 521, 1776.
- (27) Adam v. Newbigging (1888), 13 App. Cas. 308; 57 L.J.Ch. 1066; 59 L.T. 267, H.L.; 31 Digest (Repl.) 193, 2322.

Action tried by McCARDIE, J., without a jury.

The facts are set out in the judgment.

Schiller, K.C., and H. G. Robertson for the plaintiff.

Disturnal, K.C., and Frampton for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 14, 1917. McCARDIE, J., read the following judgment. The plaintiff is a medical man. He is wholly devoid of business experience. The defendant is a stockbroker and a member of the London Stock Exchange. Prior to April, 1910, the defendant had acted as stockbroker to the plaintiff, carrying through several transactions on his behalf. On April 12, 1910, the plaintiff, by telegram,

A instructed the defendant to buy for him six hundred shares in a company known as the Champion Gold Reefs of West Africa, Ltd. The capital of that company was £50,000 in two hundred thousand shares of 5s. each. On the evening of April 12 the defendant wrote to the plaintiff informing him that his order had been executed. In that letter, the defendant enclosed a contract note in the ordinary form. This contract note purported to show that the six hundred shares had been purchased at the price of 58s. 1½d. per share, and the total amount charged against the plaintiff was the sum of £1,758 15s. This amount included an item of £15 charged for the services of the defendant as broker. The plaintiff did not immediately take up the shares, and the defendant purported to carry them over from account to account on the plaintiff's behalf. The defendant charged a contango rate varying from seven per cent. to eight per cent., and the continuation notes stated that such rate included the defendant's remuneration for his services as broker in effecting the continuations. The shares gradually went down in price and the plaintiff had to pay the resulting differences. Consequently he became anxious, and asked the defendant for his views. The defendant advised him to take up the shares. The plaintiff, acting in pursuance of such advice, took a transfer of the shares in December, 1910, and paid the price to the defendant. The plaintiff continued to hold the shares as the only registered proprietor thereof. The years passed by, and, in the summer of 1915, the plaintiff heard rumours and his suspicions were awakened. His solicitors wrote to the defendant, asking him for the name of the jobber from whom the defendant had bought the six hundred shares on the plaintiff's behalf. No satisfactory answer was given and thereupon this action was commenced.

E Discovery of documents was obtained and interrogatories were administered, and, as a result of such proceedings, it has been established that the defendant had never purchased any of the shares for the plaintiff. The contract note of April, 1910, was wholly fictitious. It was a mere sham. Nor had the defendant continued any of the shares on behalf of the plaintiff. And the contango notes were fictitious. It is equally clear that the shares which were transferred to the plaintiff in December, 1910, were not the shares of a third party, but were the defendant's own shares. The defendant had been a promoter of the Champion Gold Reefs of West Africa, Ltd., and had received by allotment a large block of shares on the formation of the company. The shares transferred to the plaintiff in December, 1910, were a portion of such allotment shares. From first to last, the defendant made no disclosure whatever to the plaintiff as to the true facts.

G He purported to act as a broker, whereas in fact he was secretly acting as principal. The plaintiff was deceived throughout. Hence the plaintiff claims (i) that the whole transaction be set aside, or (ii), alternatively, that the defendant be ordered to pay compensation for breach of duty.

First, as to the claim to avoid the transaction. It is obvious that the defendant gravely failed in his duty to the plaintiff. He was instructed to buy shares, but he never carried out his mandate. A broker who is employed to buy shares cannot sell his own shares unless he makes a full and accurate disclosure of the fact to his principal, and the principal, with a full knowledge of such facts, gives his assent to the changed position of the broker. The rule is one not merely of law, but of obvious morality. As was said by LORD CAIRNS, L.C., in Parker v. McKenna (2) (10 Ch. App. at p. 118):

I "No man can in this court, acting as an agent, be allowed to put himself into a position in which his interest and his duty will be in conflict."

A broker who secretly sells his own shares is in a wholly false position. As vendor it is to his interest to sell shares, and, moreover, to sell at the highest price. As broker it is his clear duty to the principal to buy at the lowest price, and to give unbiased and independent advice (if such be asked) as to the time when, and the price at which, shares shall be bought, or whether they shall be bought at all. The law has ever required a high measure of good faith from an agent. He departs from good faith when he secretly sells his own property to his principal. The rule has long been the same both at law and in equity; see STORY ON AGENCY, s. 210. It matters not that the broker sells at the market price, or that he acts without intent to defraud; see Bentley v. Craven (3). The prohibition of the law is absolute. It will not allow an agent to place himself in a situation which, in ordinary circumstances, would tempt a man to do that which is not the best for his principal; see per SIR JOHN ROMILLY, M.R., in Bentley v. Craven (3). The court will not enter into discussion as to the propriety of the price charged by the broker, nor is it material to inquire whether the principal has or has not suffered a loss. If the breach of duty by the broker be shown, the court will set aside the transaction: see Gillett v. Peppercorne (4). The rule was strikingly illustrated in Rothschild v. Brookman (5). The facts of that case were not dissimilar to the facts of the present action. The House of Lords (affirming the court below) set aside transactions in which the agent had secretly acted as principal. In giving his opinion, LORD WYNFORD (formerly BEST, C.J.) used these words (5 Bli. N.S. at p. 197):

“ If any man who is to be trusted places himself in a condition in which he has an opportunity of taking advantage of his employer, by placing himself in such a situation, whether acting fairly or not, he must suffer the consequences of his situation. Such is the jealousy which the law of England entertains against any such transaction.”

It follows that, in the present case, the plaintiff is prima facie entitled to a decree setting aside the transaction in question. But counsel for the defendant vigorously contended that no such decree can be made here. In the first place, it was argued that, inasmuch as the contract between the parties was executed no rescission can be granted unless fraud can be proved against the defendant. Now, it is undoubted law that, when a vendor has procured the sale of his property by misrepresentation, the purchaser can set aside the contract of purchase, prior to completion, even though the misrepresentation be innocent: see per JESSEL, M.R., in Redgrave v. Hurd (6) (20 Ch.D. at p. 12); per LORD BRAMWELL in Derry v. Peek (7) (14 App. Cas. at p. 347); and per LORD HERSCHELL (ibid. at p. 359). But if the contract has been executed by the completion of a conveyance or lease or the formal assignment of a chattel, then rescission cannot be granted; see per LORD CAMPBELL in Wilde v. Gibson (8) (1 H.L. Cas. at p. 632); Seddon v. North Eastern Salt Co., Ltd. (9) ([1905] 1 Ch. at p. 333); and Angel v. Jay (10) ([1911] 1 K.B. at p. 666). Such is the settled rule, and it is too late to regret the limitation which has been placed on the equitable doctrine of rescission on the ground of misrepresentation. It is curious that the doctrine should cease to apply when the formal instrument of transfer has been executed or the formal delivery of a chattel has taken place. In many cases, the misrepresentation cannot, or may not, be discovered until the purchaser has secured his legal title and has, therefore, entered into possession of his newly acquired property. In my opinion, however, the rule formulated in Seddon v. North Eastern Salt Co., Ltd. (9) has no application to such a case as the present. It is to be observed that, in Seddon's Case (9), the dispute was between vendor and vendee. In Angel v. Jay (10) the dispute was between lessor and lessee. In Wilde v. Gibson (8) LORD CAMPBELL was referring, in his opinion, to a dispute between seller and purchaser. In none of these cases did the question of fiduciary relationship arise. Where such relationship exists, the rule is infinitely stricter and more severe. The position of principal and agent gives rise to particular and onerous duties on the part of the agent, and the high standard of conduct required from him springs from the fiduciary relationship between his employers and himself. His position is confidential, and readily lends itself to abuse. Hence, a strict and salutary rule is required to meet the specific situation. The rules of English law, as they now exist, spring from the original strictness of the

A requirements of equity when the fiduciary relationship exists. These requirements are superadded to the common law obligations of diligence and skill; see per LORD CRANWORTH in Aberdeen Rail. Co. v. Blaikie Bros. (11) (1 Macq. at p. 472 et seq.); and per curiam in Oliver v. Court (12) (8 Price, at p. 161).

It is, I think, immaterial that the plaintiff in the present case took a transfer of the shares and became the registered holder thereof. Such facts do not impair his right to rescission. So to hold would impair, gravely and injuriously, the powers of the court. In Gillett v. Peppercorne (4), the plaintiff had taken a transfer of shares in circumstances similar to those now before me. Yet LORD LANGDALE at once set aside the transaction and directed the defendant to repay the purchase money with interest. The contract in that case was as fully executed as in the present case. In Rothschild v. Brookman (5) the contracts were also, I think, as much executed as in the present case. Yet the House of Lords, without hesitation, set aside the transactions. I also refer to York Buildings Co. v. Mackenzie (13), decided by the House of Lords in 1795 and referred to by LORD CRANWORTH in Aberdeen Rail. Co. v. Blaikie Bros. (11) (1 Macq. at p. 474), and to Oliver v. Court (12). These decisions are clearly opposed to the contentions of counsel for the defendant. I may add that the various authorities to which I have referred are quite independent of the proof of actual fraud, as defined by Derry v. Peck (7). The ratio of such decisions is wholly different from the ratio of Derry v. Peck (7), for they rest on the fundamental basis of fiduciary relationship, and are wholly unaffected by the opinion of the House of Lords in Derry v. Peck (7). But, none the less, it is clear that the agent who secretly sells his own property to a principal is guilty of dishonesty, and it was said by LORD ELDON in Ex parte Dyster (14) (1 Mer. at p. 175) that, if a broker mixes in a transaction in which he is ostensibly the broker, but really a buyer or seller, this is a gross fraud. I decide against the first contention of counsel for the defendant.

If, however, a finding against the defendant of personal deceit be essential to the plaintiff's claim for rescission, then I regret to say that I feel no doubt that such a case has been established. A misrepresentation will be fraudulent if made with a knowledge of its falsity, even though the defendant may not actually intend to injure the plaintiff; see Polhill v. Walter (15); Foster v. Charles (16); Derry v. Peck (7). Here the contract note of April, 1910, and the whole of the subsequent continuation notes and other documents were false. They were intended to deceive the plaintiff, and they did deceive the plaintiff. I am satisfied that the defendant was aware throughout of what was taking place, and when the plaintiff paid his purchase money in December, 1910, the amount thereof went at once into the defendant's pocket. It is impossible for me to accept the defendant's statement that he was ignorant of what was taking place. He was the sole proprietor of the business. He did not allege that his clerk or manager acted without his authority. He attended regularly at his office. He supervised the correspondence and personally signed many of the letters which were given in evidence before me. He had acted towards other persons in the manner complained of in this case. Prior to April, 1910, he had encouraged the plaintiff to buy Champion Gold Reef shares. On Dec. 30, 1909, he wrote to the plaintiff that he anticipated a "big rise in prices." He sent a prospectus of a glowing nature. He knew that the plaintiff was wholly inexperienced. He wrote a letter on Feb. 18, 1910, to the plaintiff to state that the shares looked an extremely good market. His letter of Feb. 21, 1910, is to the same effect. He did not actually advise the purchase of the six hundred shares now in question, but I have no doubt that his previous statements largely influenced the plaintiff to send the telegram of April 12, 1910. In any event, I may add that the defendant would be responsible in this case for the fraud of his agents in view of the decision of the House of Lords in Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co. (17). See also Kettlewell v. Refuge Assurance Co. (18), and Brady v. Todd (19).

I now turn to the second contention put forward by counsel for the defendant with respect to the claim for rescission. He argued that no decree should be granted inasmuch as the circumstances had changed through the lapse of time, and that the plaintiff could not restore in 1917 that which he had received from the defendant in 1910. The shares in 1910 stood at nearly £3 for each 5s. share. They are now worth 5s. only or slightly less, and at such price they have been standing at and since the issue of the writ. In my view, this second contention fails also, although, of course, it is clear law that restitutio in integrum is essential to a claim for rescission. The plaintiff still holds the shares he bought in 1910. He can hand them back to the defendant. The company is the same today as in 1910. Its name only has been changed. The objects of the company have not changed, though its assets may have varied. The market valuation of the shares has dropped greatly, but the shares are the same shares. In my view, the words of LORD BLACKBURN in Etlanger v. New Sombbrero Phosphate Co. (20) (3 App. Cas. at p. 1278) have no application to the present case. Quoting from Clough v. London & North Western Rail. Co. (21) (L.R. 7 Exch. at p. 35), he says:

"We think that so long as he has made no election he retains the right to determine it either way; subject to this, that if, in the interval whilst he is deliberating, an innocent third party has acquired an interest in the property, or if, in consequence of his delay, the position even of the wrongdoer is affected, it will preclude him from exercising his right to rescind."

LORD BLACKBURN continues:

"It is, I think, clear on principles of general justice that as a condition to a rescission there must be a restitutio in integrum. The parties must be put in statu quo . . . It is a doctrine which has often been acted upon both at law and in equity."

I think that such words refer to a delay which occurs after a plaintiff has ascertained his right to rescind whereby the position of a defendant is substantially altered and prejudiced. No such delay has here occurred, inasmuch as the plaintiff acted with promptitude in issuing his writ when he became suspicious of the defendant's conduct. The phrase restitutio in integrum is somewhat vague. It must be applied with care. It must be considered with respect to the facts of each case. Deterioration of the subject-matter does not, I think, destroy the right to rescind nor prevent a restitutio in integrum. Indeed, it is only in cases where the plaintiff has sustained loss by the inferiority of the subject-matter or a substantial fall in its value that he will desire to exert his power of rescission. Such was the state of things in Rothschild v. Brookman (5). Such, I infer, was the state of things in Gillett v. Peppercorne (4), where the plaintiff alleged that he had paid extravagant prices for the shares. Such, too, I infer, was the state of things in Oelkers v. Ellis (22). If mere deterioration of the subject-matter negatived the right to rescind, the doctrine of rescission would become a vain thing. Rescission was refused in Clarke v. Dickson (23) because the plaintiff had there changed the shares in a company on the cost-book principle into shares in a joint stock corporation. On such grounds the decision in Clarke v. Dickson (23) is correct. The dicta in all these cases, so far as they go beyond such grounds, are not, I think, consistent with the various decisions already cited in this judgment. Rescission was impossible in Western Bank of Scotland v. Addie (1) inasmuch as the shares purchased by the plaintiff—namely, shares in an unincorporated company—had been changed into shares of a company registered under the then existing Company Acts. LORD CRANWORTH, in his opinion, used the following words (L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. at p. 166):

"I agree with the learned judges below, that the circumstance that the shares, from mismanagement or otherwise, had become depreciated in value subsequently to the purchase by the pursuer, would of itself have been of no importance. He might still have been able to restore that which he was fraudulently induced to purchase."

These words are directly applicable to the present case. See also the American decision of Conkey v. Bond (24), cited in STORY ON AGENCY, notes to s. 211.

The fall of the shares here is serious. Had, indeed, the plaintiff discovered the fraud at an earlier date, he could have repudiated the transaction whilst the price was still high, and the loss to the defendant would then not have been so great in view of his power to dispose of them on the market. But the plaintiff here is in no way to blame, and the considerations of hardship urged before me by counsel for the defendant were similarly urged in 1856 before SIR JOHN ROMILLY in a somewhat analogous case. Yet the plea of hardship must fail here as it failed sixty years ago. For in rejecting the plea of hardship in Blake v. Mowatt (25), SIR JOHN ROMILLY, M.R., said (21 Beav. at p. 613):

"It is the leading principle of the equity administration in this court, that truth shall govern all transactions, and that one who deludes another in a contract, or permits him to be deluded, and takes advantage of that delusion, cannot afterwards complain, that, if the contract be set aside, he will be in a worse situation than if the contract had never been entered into."

The extent to which the requirement of restitutio in integrum may be limited in its application is strikingly illustrated by the decision in Adam v. Newbigging (27). I may point out that mere lapse of time is no answer to a claim for rescission. Here, some six years elapsed before the plaintiff claimed to rescind. But in Rothschild v. Brookman (5), and in Oelkers v. Ellis (22) six years had also elapsed; in York Buildings Co. v. Mackenzie (13) eleven years had elapsed; in Gillett v. Peppercorne (4) fourteen years had elapsed; and in Oliver v. Court (12) fifteen years had elapsed before the plaintiffs in those cases commenced their proceedings to set aside the transactions complained of. In cases like the present, the right of the party defrauded is not affected by the mere lapse of time, so long as he remains in ignorance of the fraud; see per LORD WESTBURY in Rolfe v. Gregory (26) (4 De G.J. & Sm. at p. 579). If, however, he delays his claim to rescission until after the lapse of six years from his discovery of the fraud, then the court will (apart from any other point) act by analogy to the Statute of Limitations and refuse to grant relief; see Oelkers v. Ellis (22). I, therefore, decide against counsel for the defendant's second contention on the question of rescission.

The conclusion at which I have arrived with regard to rescission renders it unnecessary to deliver the further observations I had prepared on several of the points arising on the alternative claim. Such points are important and difficult, but I think it better that they should be determined in a case where they call for direct decision. It follows that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree setting aside the whole of the transactions with respect to the six hundred shares. The defendant must repay, with five per cent. interest, all sums received by him from the plaintiff, less a credit of £45 for the amount of the dividend received. The plaintiff must transfer the six hundred shares to the defendant on payment of the sum so due from the defendant to the plaintiff. There will be liberty to apply. The defendant must pay the costs of the action.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Solicitors: Lovell & White; Hays, Roughton & Dunn.

[Reported by T. W. MORGAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

DICK v. NORTON

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Eve, J.), February 11, 1916]

[Reported 85 L.J.Ch. 623; 114 L.T. 548; 32 T.L.R. 306;
60 Sol. Jo. 321]Game—Shooting rights—Lease—Covenant for quiet enjoyment—Landlord's right to cut down woods—Due management of estate—Implied covenant—Injunction.

By deed dated June 16, 1914, N. granted to D. the exclusive right to shooting over his farms. D. covenanted to permit N. to enter the coverts at any reasonable time consistent with non-disturbance of game for the purpose of thinning the plantations, felling trees, or any necessary forester's work, and N. covenanted for quiet enjoyment. The felling of the trees would have seriously interfered with if not ruined the shooting on a part of the estate. D. moved for an injunction to restrain N. from felling the trees otherwise than was consistent with the non-disturbance of game and in a due course of estate management.

Held: the demise of the shooting rights, even though there was a covenant for quiet enjoyment, did not prevent the landlord from turning his property to the best use for which it was suited; there was no implied covenant in the deed by N. not to disturb game, and, accordingly, an interlocutory injunction would not be granted.

Jeffryes v. Evans (1) (1865), 19 C.B.N.S. 246 and Gearns v. Baker (2) (1875), 10 Ch. App. 355, followed.

Notes: Considered: Peech v. Best, [1930] All E.R. Rep. 268.

As to rights over game, see 18 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 130 et seq.; and for cases see 25 DIGEST 352 et seq.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Jeffryes v. Evans (1865), 19 C.B.N.S. 246; 34 L.J.C.P. 261; 13 L.T. 72; 11 Jur. N.S. 584; 13 W.R. 864; 144 E.R. 781; 25 Digest 354, 53.
- (2) Gearns v. Baker (1875), 10 Ch. App. 355; 44 L.J.Ch. 334; 33 L.T. 86; 39 J.P. 564; 23 W.R. 543, L.J.J.; 25 Digest 358, 90.

Also referred to in argument:

Pattisson v. Gilford (1874), L.R. 18 Eq. 259; 43 L.J.Ch. 524; 22 W.R. 673; 25 Digest 358, 92.

Motion.

By a deed dated June 16, 1914, and made between the defendant, Clement William Norton (therein called the owner) of the one part and the plaintiff, Captain Quentin Dick (therein called the tenant) of the other part, the defendant demised to the plaintiff

"the full, free, and exclusive right and liberty at all times of shooting, sporting, killing, and carrying away for his own use, all manner of game wildfowl and other birds, and of exercising the owner's concurrent right to take ground game and of trapping vermin" in, over, and on the said farms and lands specified in the schedule (subject to the rights of occupiers under the Ground Game Act, 1880) for a term of five years from April 1, 1914, at a rent of £25 a year. The tenant covenanted by cl. 6, to exercise the rights and privileges thereby granted in a proper and sportsmanlike manner, not to overstock the land with game, and

"to permit the owner to enter into the coverts at any reasonable time consistent with the non-disturbance of game for the purpose of thinning the plantations, felling trees, or any necessary forester's work, the owner to make good any hedges or fences which may be damaged by the owner in consequence thereof."

The owner covenanted to give notice to the tenant when the fact should come to his knowledge of any trespass on the land in pursuit or search of game, and to use his best endeavours to preserve the game for the benefit of the tenant, and

"to permit the tenant, if he shall pay the rents and perform the covenants on his part herein contained, quietly to enjoy the rights hereby granted without interruption from the owner or any person rightfully claiming under or in trust for him."

The schedule specified two adjoining farms, Coedtrefe and Caecappin, and also an enclosed wood called Rolwyn. The property over which shooting rights were demised comprised, besides Rolwyn Wood, three woods known as Cabin Wood, Coedtrefe Wood, and Foel Wood. The acreage of the four woods together was about fifty acres. A question was raised whether Cabin Wood, Coedtrefe Wood, and Foel Wood were actually included in the words of demise, but it was admitted that they were intended to be demised, and no exception on this ground was actually taken on the motion. The four woods were situate near Gregynog Hall, and they were admitted to be good shooting coverts and to have been planted for that purpose. They had been planted from periods varying from thirty to forty years. They consisted mainly of larch and fir trees, with a number of oaks, ash, and alders. The property had been purchased by Mr. Norton shortly before the demise, and it was admitted that the woods had been much neglected in the past and that some of the larch trees were diseased, though the witnesses differed as to the extent of such disease. All the woods had suffered in a severe storm in January, 1916, when a large number of trees were blown down, and others were leaning. The plaintiff had spent a large amount of money in laying down pheasants in the woods, which were on the border of open flat country. In November, 1915, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff's agent, that he had received a tempting offer for the timber in the Pound Wood, another small wood on the property, and that he proposed to sell it, but would not cut until the end of 1915, and though the plaintiff's agent protested against the cutting, no serious objection was taken, as the wood was small and unimportant. On Dec. 28, 1915, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff that he had sold the timber in Cabin Wood, Coedtrefe Wood, Foel Wood, and Rolwyn Wood, but that the purchasers would not be allowed to come on the ground until Feb. 2 next, in order not to interfere with the then season's shooting. He stated that he had been induced to sell for the following reasons: (a) Patriotism, as the timber was wanted for Government contracts; (b) because he was offered a far larger sum than the timber would realise ten years thence; and (c) because he had had the timber examined by an expert forester, who had advised that it was getting of less value each year through bad planting and disease. The plaintiff objected strongly to the woods being cut down, which would, he said, ruin his shooting. It appeared that the timber in the woods had been sold for £2,500, and that part of it was to be used for pit props in a colliery in Shropshire, but that the greater part was to be used in Government munition works in South Wales. On Jan. 18, 1916, the plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant for an injunction to restrain him from felling or cutting down, otherwise than was consistent with the non-disturbance of game, and was in a due course of estate management, the timber and other trees in the said four woods and from otherwise interfering with the plaintiff in his quiet enjoyment of the right of sporting granted to him by the deed of June 16, 1914, and moved for an injunction.

Clayton, K.C., and J. H. Redman for the plaintiff.

C. J. Farwell for the defendant.

EVE, J. -In this case the plaintiff, the shooting tenant over a farm belonging to the defendant, seeks an injunction in terms to restrain the defendant from felling certain timber, included in some fifty acres, divided into four woods on the farm, because he says the destruction and felling of those woods will seriously interfere with, if not ruin, the shooting over the farm. This, I think, is established by the evidence—that the removal of these woods is likely to interfere with the shooting amenities of the property. I think that this further fact is probably true, that originally these woods were planted with a view to the preservation of game. The evidence seems to be all on one side as to that, and that they are so situated as to be peculiarly favourable for the nesting of game.

Apart from one clause in this agreement which is before me, I think the case is governed entirely by the two decisions on which counsel for the defendant has relied—Gearns v. Baker (2) and Jeffryes v. Evans (1). The demise of the right of shooting does not, in my opinion—even if it incorporates an express covenant for quiet enjoyment and a covenant by the lessor to use his best endeavours to preserve the game for the benefit of the tenant—prevent the lessor from turning his property to the best advantage for which it is suited. If, in the course of husbandry, it became necessary or advisable to substitute one crop for another, or to plough up grass land, or to cut down timber, it seems to me that the lessor is not prevented from so doing by the mere fact that he has leased to someone else the right to pass over these lands and to destroy such game as may be found thereon. That result, in my opinion, follows from the emphatic judgment of the Court of Appeal in Gearns v. Baker (2).

The question which really exercises my mind is this: Whether, by reason of the insertion of cl. 6 in this agreement, there has arisen an implied covenant by the lessor not to enter into these coverts, except at times when such entry would be consistent with the preservation of game. The clause which is incorporated in the covenant by the lessee is to this effect: [His LORDSHIP read the clause down to the words “or any necessary forester’s work.”] Counsel for the defendant has urged, and, I think, has convinced me, that it would not be right that I should so interpret that covenant on the part of the lessee—prima facie certainly for the benefit of the lessor—so as to extract from it a negative covenant by the lessor not to enter on his own woods for the purpose of tree felling, except at those times at which he could do so consistently with the non-disturbance of the game. Here again I am helped in a large measure by the judgment of JAMES, L.J., in Gearns v. Baker (2). If it is intended that the lessee should acquire the right of excluding the lessor from his own coverts at any particular time such right ought to be expressed in the plainest possible terms. I think, therefore, that, on the case as it stands, I should not be justified in granting an injunction. But, even had I put a different construction on the agreement in question, I do not think that this is a case in which I could have interfered by way of interlocutory injunction. The position is this: There have arisen circumstances in which the defendant has been able to sell these fifty acres of timber for an extraordinarily good price. On the evidence the sale was negotiated, and the agreement come to, many months ago. The purchaser, relying on his agreement, has entered into contracts to resell the timber to works engaged in the production of munitions, and in part, apparently, for some of the collieries for use as pit props, and it is impossible for me to foresee or to estimate at this moment the amount of damage which might accrue to the defendant, if I were to grant an injunction which would thereby restrain him from carrying out the contract which he has entered into with the timber merchant, and would, in terms, prevent the timber merchant from carrying out the other contracts he has entered into with his sub-purchasers. As I say, I have no means by which I could measure those damages. They might be extremely large. On the other hand, there is this: The plaintiff is a gentleman with whom I heartily sympathise in this matter, a gentleman who has taken the shooting, hoping to enjoy it for another three years at a rent of £25, which does

A not by any means represent its value to him, because it is an important part in a large shooting estate. These coverts are obviously from the evidence a very important part of the shooting amenities of the property of which he is tenant. Although it will be disappointing, and no doubt he will suffer a great deal of inconvenience and some loss, I think that, if it comes to a case of estimating the amount of loss he is likely to suffer, the loss will be far more easily estimated and ascertained than would be the ascertainment of the amount of damage that might follow from granting an injunction. On the whole, if I came to a different conclusion on the construction of the contractual relations of the parties than what I have done, I should not feel disposed to grant an interlocutory injunction. There will be no other order on the motion, except the costs will be costs in the action.

C Solicitors: Gibson & Weldon, for Martin Woosnam, Newtown, Montgomeryshire; Thorne, Priest & Co., for G. H. Morgan, Shrewsbury.

[Reported by E. K. CORRIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

D

MEGGESON v. GROVES

E [CHANCERY DIVISION (Peterson, J.), October 24, 25, 26, 31, 1916]

[Reported [1917] 1 Ch. 158; 86 L.J.Ch. 145; 115 L.T. 683;
61 Sol. Jo. 115]

Time—Computation—Period of years from given date—Moment of commencement.

F Landlord and Tenant—Tenancy—Commencement—Term of years “from Mar. 25”—Moment when “tenancy” began.

A landlord, by a written agreement, granted a tenancy for a term of ten years from Mar. 25, 1906.

Held: the tenancy commenced at midnight on Mar. 25.

G Agriculture—Agricultural holding—Tenancy agreement—Covenant by tenant not to sell produce—Operation only during “year before expiration of the contract”—Commencement of that year—Produce of previous year—Application of covenant to—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 28), s. 26 (1).

The tenancy agreement of an agricultural holding, for ten years from Mar. 25, 1906, contained a covenant by the tenant “not to sell or dispose of any hay . . . without the consent in writing of the landlord.” By the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, s. 26 (1) (b) [corresponding to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 11 (4) (b)] this covenant was effective only “as respects the year before the expiration of the contract of tenancy.”

H Held: the covenant applied from midnight on Mar. 25, 1915, after which it applied to any hay still on the holding, irrespective of whether it was produced before or after that date.

I Contract—Offer and acceptance—Offer by post accepted by post—Time at which contract made.

On Mar. 24, 1915 the tenant offered in writing to sell a stack of hay for £125, and W. F. on the same day posted a letter to the tenant accepting this offer. The next day W. F. posted a cheque to the tenant, which the tenant received on Mar. 26.

Held: the contract of sale was complete as soon as W.F., had posted his letter of acceptance on Mar. 24 on that day there was made a contract of sale of the hay and under it the property in the hay passed to W.F. immediately, accordingly, the hay was sold on Mar. 24, 1915, before the last year of the tenancy commenced, and so the landlord's written consent to the sale was not required.

Notes. The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, has been repealed. Provisions similar to those of s. 26 (1) of that Act are now made by the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 11.

Referred to: Ruckes v. Ogle, [1920] All E.R. Rep. 424; Brakspear v. Barton, [1924] 2 K.B. 88.

As to the commencement and duration of a term of years, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 531-534, and for cases see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 48. As to covenants to consume or not to remove produce of an agricultural holding, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 265-267, for cases see 2 DIGEST (Repl.) 63 et seq., and for the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, see 28 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 25.

As to when acceptance by post of a contractual offer is complete, see 8 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 79, para. 135, and for cases see 12 DIGEST (Repl.) 87.

As to computation of a period fixed for duration of an interest, see 32 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 139 para. 201, and for cases, see 30 DIGEST (Repl.) 462.

Cases referred to:

(1) Acland v. Lutley (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 879; 1 Per. & Dav. 636; 8 L.J.Q.B. 164; 112 E.R. 1446; 30 Digest (Repl.) 486, 1296.

(2) Salechotham v. Holland, [1895] 1 Q.B. 378; 64 L.J.Q.B. 200; 72 L.T. 62; 43 W.R. 228; 11 T.L.R. 154; 39 Sol. Jo. 165; 14 R. 135, C.A.; 30 Digest (Repl.) 385, 297.

Also referred to in argument:

Gale v. Bates (1864), 3 H. & C. 84; 4 New Rep. 66; 33 L.J.Ex. 235; 10 L.T. 304; 10 Jur. N.S. 734; 12 W.R. 715; 159 E.R. 457; 2 Digest (Repl.) 66, 372.

Witness Action.

By an agreement dated Dec. 12, 1905 the plaintiff agreed to let to the defendant an agricultural holding known as Southlands Farm from Mar. 25, 1906 for a term of ten years, determinable on either side by twelve calendar months' notice. By this agreement the defendant contracted to "Stack upon the premises all the hay and corn that shall grow thereon, and not to sell or dispose of any hay, straw, or roots without the consent in writing of the landlord, and not to mow any part of the grass lands two years in succession without well manuring the same at the proper season. To leave on the premises all the manure arising from the produce of the last year's tenancy."

On Mar. 19, 1915 the plaintiff gave the defendant notice to quit on Mar. 25, 1916. On Mar. 24, 1916 the defendant in writing offered to sell, and a Mr. Forrester in writing agreed to buy, a stack of hay for £125. The defendant received Mr. Forrester's cheque for £125 on Mar. 26. On Aug. 30, 1915 the defendant sold sixteen trusses of hay to two officers, who required them for military purposes. The officers did not comply with the conditions required before a requisition can be made, nor did they purport to exercise any compulsory powers. This hay was the produce of the previous year.

Section 26 (1) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908 [repealed, in slightly different language, by s. 11 (1), (4) (b), of the Act of 1948] provided that

"Notwithstanding any custom of the country, or the provisions of any contract of tenancy or agreement respecting the method of cropping of arable lands, or the disposal of crops, a tenant of a holding shall have full right to practise any system of cropping of the arable land on the holding and to dispose of the produce of the holding without incurring any penalty, forfeiture, or

A liability: Provided that he shall previously have made, or, as soon as may be, shall make, suitable and adequate provision to protect the holding from injury or deterioration, which provision shall in the case of disposal of the produce of the holding consist in the return to the holding of the full equivalent manurial value to the holding of all crops sold off or removed from the holding in contravention of the custom, contract, or agreement: This subsection shall not apply . . . (b) in any other case, as respects the year before the expiration of the contract of tenancy."

B In this action the plaintiff asked for an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing any further breaches of the agreement, and for damages for the breaches already committed. The tenancy having determined, an injunction could not be granted, and as, since the institution of the action, the claims of the plaintiff and the defendant had been settled and disposed of under an arbitration held under the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, there was no longer a claim for damages. The only question left was as to the costs of this action.

C Tomlin, K.C., and W. A. Peck (for A. P. Vanneck, serving with His Majesty's forces) for the plaintiff.

D Hughes, K.C., and R. Ribton for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

E Oct. 31, 1916. PETERSON, J., read the following judgment. This action is based on an alleged breach of a tenancy agreement by the defendant. The plaintiff asks for an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing further breaches, and for damages for past breaches. The tenancy has now determined, and, therefore, an injunction cannot be granted, nor is there now any claim for damages, as under an arbitration held under the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, after the institution of this action, the claims of the landlord and tenant were settled and disposed of. The only question which is left is to pay the costs of this action, but that question involves the consideration of several legal problems in addition to the determination of disputed question of fact.

F The defendant became tenant of Southlands Farm, Essex, under an agreement of Dec. 12, 1905, made between the plaintiff, who was the landlord, and the defendant, for the term of ten years from Mar. 25, 1906, determinable on either side by twelve calendar months' notice given on or before Mar. 25, 1915. Notice was duly given by the plaintiff and the term came to an end in March, 1916. Under the agreement the defendant contracted to [His LORDSHIP read the two clauses of the agreement above mentioned, and continued:] The effect of these provisions is to prohibit the defendant from selling or disposing of any hay, straw, or roots at any time during the term without the plaintiff's consent. Three sales of hay by the defendant have been established, two of which took place on Aug. 30, 1915, while the date of the third sale is in dispute. The defendant alleges that it took place on Mar. 24 or 25, 1915, while the plaintiff's case is that the sale was on a later date. In the case of all three sales it is necessary to consider the effect of s. 26 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908 on the tenancy agreement. [His LORDSHIP read s. 26, and continued:] The defendant contends that, by virtue of that section, he was enabled, during the period before the commencement of the last year of the tenancy, to sell the hay produced by the holding, subject to the obligation to return to the holding the full equivalent manurial value of the hay which he sold, and that, during the last year of the tenancy, he is, by the joint operation of the section and the agreement, only prohibited from selling or removing the hay which was produced by the holding during the last year of the tenancy, and that the sale of the stack of hay on Mar. 24 or 25, 1915 took place before the commencement of the last year of the tenancy, while sixteen trusses of hay which were sold on Aug. 30, 1915 consisted of hay produced by the holding in a previous year. In my opinion, the section clearly enables a tenant to sell the produce of the holding before the commencement of the last year of the tenancy, subject to the obligation to return as soon as may be its full equivalent manurial value, but I am unable to accept the contention that the defendant is only prevented, during the last year of the tenancy, from selling or removing the produce of that year. The argument is based on cl. (b) of sub-s. (1) of the section [now s. 11 (4) (b) of the Act of 1948], which, it was contended, refers to the produce of the year before the expiration of the tenancy. That, however, is not what the clause says. Subsection (1) gives to the tenant full right (i) to practise any system of cropping of the arable land and (ii) to dispose of the produce, and then provides that the section which gives these powers shall not apply as respects the year before the expiration of the tenancy. This provision relates to a period, and not to the produce of a period, and therefore excludes for the last twelve months of the tenancy the power conferred on the tenant by the section to sell the produce of the holding. The defendant's rights during the last year of the tenancy are consequently governed by the provisions of his tenancy agreement, which prohibit him from selling or disposing of any hay without the plaintiff's written consent.

The facts relating to the sale of the stack of hay are as follows: The purchaser, W. Forrester, was in March, 1915 informed by a Mr. Farrell that the defendant had a stack of hay for sale. He had an interview with the defendant, and offered £120 for the stack. On Mar. 24 the defendant sent Farrell, who acted as a go-between, to Mr. Forrester with a letter, in which he offered to sell the stack for £125. On the same day Mr. Forrester sent to the defendant a letter, which has been lost, accepting the offer to sell for £125. Mrs. Groves made a note of the sale in the milk book, which was subsequently lost or destroyed, under the date of Mar. 24. On Mar. 25 Mr. Forrester posted his cheque for £125, which reached the defendant on Mar. 26, and on Mar. 25 he also gave directions for the insurance of the stack. Mr. Forrester removed the stack at the end of April or the beginning of May. There is one other fact to which I ought to refer. The defendant verbally agreed that he would, if Mr. Forrester purchased, procure the consent of Mr. Horner, whose farm adjoined Southlands Farm, to the removal of the stack by Mr. Forrester across part of Mr. Horner's holding to the road. The defendant forgot to obtain this consent, but it was ultimately given by Mr. Horner.

On these facts there was a contract for sale of the stack on Mar. 24, and under ss. 17 and 18 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 the property in the stack passed to the defendant on Mar. 24. The plaintiff, however, contended that there was no sale of the stack until at least the cheque for £125 was cashed on Mar. 26 or 27, and relied for this contention on s. 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. It may be that he is right in contending that the letter of Mar. 24, written by Mr. Forrester to the defendant, did not constitute a note or commission in writing of the contract, as it did not include the provision that the defendant should procure Mr. Horner's consent to the removal of the stack over his land, and that Mr. Forrester's cheque could not be considered as a gift of "something in earnest to bind the contract or in part payment" until it was received by the defendant or cashed. But these considerations, relevant as they might be if the defendant had been trying to enforce the contract against Mr. Forrester, have no relevancy to a case in which the contract has been completed. Section 4 assumes the existence of a contract, and provides that it shall only be enforceable by action as between the parties to the contract in certain events. The section makes it necessary to produce certain evidence in support of the contract. It matters not when the memorandum is signed, or when the payment is made. The date of the contract remains the same, and as soon as the evidence required by the statute is forthcoming one party can enforce the contract against the other. The question between the plaintiff and the defendant is when the contract was made, not when it became enforceable. In my view, therefore, the property passed to Mr. Forrester on Mar. 24.

A Having regard to this conclusion it is unnecessary to consider when the last year of the tenancy commenced. But, as this question was argued, I may add that, in my view, the decision in Ackland v. Lutley (1) establishes that it began at midnight on Mar. 25, and that, as counsel for the plaintiff pointed out, the headnote in Sidebotham v. Holland (2) [1895] 1 Q.B. 378, goes beyond the judgments, which clearly do not disagree with the decision in Ackland v. Lutley (1).

B But the plaintiff says that in any case the defendant did not return to the holding the full manurial equivalent of this stack of hay. Under s. 26 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908 the return of the manurial equivalent may be either before or after the hay is disposed of, and the plaintiff is very far from having satisfied me that the manurial equivalent was not made good to the holding. It was suggested that the defendant had the burden of proving that it had been returned to the farm. In my opinion that is not so. In the reply the plaintiff alleges that the full manurial equivalent had not been returned to the holding, and it is for him to establish the truth of the allegation. In my judgment, then, the plaintiff has not shown any ground on which he can complain of the sale of the stack of hay in March, 1915.

The sales on Aug. 20 stand on a different basis. They were sales to which s. 26 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908 did not apply, and, consequently, as the plaintiff's consent to them was not obtained, they were primâ facie breaches of the tenancy agreement. The defendant, however, in his defence alleged that the sixteen trusses of hay which formed the subject-matter of the two sales were, in fact, requisitioned by the military authorities. This allegation was not supported by the evidence. An officer came to the defendant's farm and inquired whether he had any hay. The defendant showed him what he had and, as the result, eight trusses were taken. On the same day another officer came and obtained another eight trusses. The defendant was paid 32s. for the sixteen trusses. It was not contended that the military authorities had complied with the conditions which are required before a requisition can be made, nor did the officers purport to exercise any compulsory powers. It was an ordinary sale in each case. The defendant, therefore, in these two cases committed a breach of the provisions of the tenancy agreement. The value of these trusses of hay was small, and their manurial value was only 6s. 8d., and if that had been all that took place I should have hesitated before I allowed any costs to the plaintiff. But the matter does not rest there. The plaintiff had pressed the defendant for particulars of the sale of the stack of hay which he believed to have been improperly disposed of, and had received no answer to his demand. On Nov. 5, having ascertained that sixteen trusses of hay had been sold on Aug. 30 to the military authorities, and being suspicious that other hay had been sold, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant. To this letter the defendant did not vouchsafe any reply. The reason is, I think, fairly clear. According to the defendant's evidence he had been advised by Mr. Rumsey, an agricultural valuer, that he must not sell the crop of the last year of the tenancy, and he thought that he could during the last year of the tenancy sell any of the produce of the previous year. The writ which was issued on Nov. 23 asked for an injunction restraining the defendant from selling or disposing of any hay or straw, and from removing any manure arising from the produce of the last year. On Nov. 27 Messrs. Coffin and Rumsey, on behalf of the defendant, wrote that the defendant had no intention of removing any hay, straw, or manure arising from the produce of the last year of the tenancy, and in the defence it is alleged that those sixteen trusses were part of the produce of the year 1912. To my mind it is also clear that the defendant was under the impression that he could, during the last year of the tenancy, sell any hay which was part of the crop of the previous year. The defendant says that after the sales of Aug. 30, he had only a very insignificant amount of hay of previous years left on his hands. I am not convinced that this was so, but if it was the plaintiff did not know it. The fact remains that the sales on Aug. 30 were breaches of the agreement, and that the defendant would not give the plaintiff any information as to the sales which he had made.

In my opinion, therefore, the defendant must pay the costs of the action, except so far as they have been increased by the issue of the sale of the stack of hay in March and the issue whether he has retained a full manurial equivalent for the hay which he has sold, and the plaintiff must pay the defendant's costs s. far as they have been increased by these issues, and the costs will be set off in the usual way.

Solicitors: Greenwell, Higham & Co., for J. C. Pearson, Chelmsford; A. S. Maskell.

[Reported by J. L. DENISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

THE SARPEN

[COURT OF APPEAL (Swinfen Eady, Pickford and Bankes, L.J.J.). March 22, 23, May 27, June 5, 1916]

[Reported [1916] P. 306; 85 L.J.P. 209; 114 L.T. 1011; 32 T.L.R. 575; 60 Sol. Jo. 538; 13 Asp. M.L.C. 370]

Shipping—Salvage—Ship "belonging to His Majesty"—Consent of Admiralty to claim—Tug requisitioned in time of war—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 557 (1).

The plaintiffs were the owners, master and crew of a tug, which, while requisitioned by the Admiralty under proclamation rendered valuable salvage services to a ship belonging to the defendants. At that time, no agreement had been come to between the plaintiffs and the Admiralty settling the terms and conditions of the engagement of the tug, but terms were subsequently agreed whereby the plaintiffs were to pay the wages of the crew to provide all stores and necessary equipment of the vessel and to take marine risks, while the Admiralty were to accept war risks on the vessel and crew and to provide coal.

Held: neither the effect of the requisitioning of the tug nor the subsequent agreement made it a ship "belonging to His Majesty" within s. 557 (1) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to prosecute a claim for and to recover salvage without the consent of the Admiralty having been obtained.

Notes. The relevant portions of s. 557 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, were repealed by the Merchant Shipping (Salvage) Act, 1940, which in turn has been repealed and replaced by the Crown Proceedings Act, 1947, s. 8 (2), but this case is still of value as an example of what is and what is not one of H.M. ships.

Considered: The Carrie, [1917] P. 224. Referred: The Matti, [1918] P. 314; Admiralty Comrs. v. Page, [1919] 1 K.B. 299; Admiralty Comrs. v. Valverde Owners, [1938] 1 All E.R. 162; The Stealla Romana, The Oltenia, [1944] P. 43.

As to salvage, see 1 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 65 et seq.; and for cases, see 41 DIGEST 823 et seq. For the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 557, see 23 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 682.

Cases referred to:

(1) The Nile (1875), L.R. 4 A. & E. 449; 44 L.J. Adm. 38; 33 L.T. 66; 3 Asp. M.L.C. 11.

- A (2) The Bertie (1886), 55 L.T. 520; 2 T.L.R. 690; 6 Asp. M.L.C. 26.
 (3) The Lemington (1874), 32 L.T. 69; 23 W.R. 421; 2 Asp. M.L.C. 475.
 (4) The Ripon City, [1897] P. 226; 66 L.J.P. 110; 77 L.T. 98; 13 T.L.R. 378;
 8 Asp. M.L.C. 304.
 (5) Master of the Trinity House v. Clark (1815), 4 M. & S. 288.
- B (6) Weir & Co. v. Union Steamship Co., Ltd., [1900] A.C. 525; 69 L.J.Q.B. 809; 83 L.T. 91; 9 Asp. M.L.C. 111; 5 Com. Cas. 363.
 (7) The Broadmayne, [1916] P. 64; 85 L.J.P. 153; 114 L.T. 891; 32 T.L.R.
 304; 60 Sol. Jo. 367; 13 Asp. M.L.C. 356.
 (8) The Iodine (1844), 3 Notes of Cases, 140; 8 L.T. 30.
 (9) Cargo ex Woosung (1876), 1 P.D. 260; 35 L.T. 8; 25 W.R. 1; 3 Asp.
 M.L.C. 239.
- C (10) The Dalhousie (1875), 1 P.D. 271, n.; sub nom. The Azalea, 35 L.T. 9, n.;
 3 Asp. M.L.C. 240, n.

Cases referred to in argument:

- The Scout* (1872), L.R. 3 A. & E. 512; 41 L.J. (Adm.) 42; 26 L.T. 371; 20
 W.R. 617; 1 Asp. M.L.C. 258.
- D The Cybele (1878), 3 P.D. 8; 47 L.J. (P.) 86; 37 L.T. 773; 26 W.R. 345;
 3 Asp. M.L.C. 532, C.A.
Baumvoll Manufactur von Scheibler v. Gilchrest & Co., [1892] 1 Q.B. 253; affirmed [1893] A.C. 8; 62 L.J. (Q.B.) 201; 68 L.T. 1; 9 T.L.R. 71; 7 Asp. M.L.C. 263, H.L.
- E Sir John Jackson, Ltd. v. Blanche (Owners), [1908] A.C. 126; 98 L.T. 464; 24 T.L.R. 384; 52 Sol. Jo. 334; 11 Asp. M.L.C. 37.
Young v. S.S. Scotia, [1903] A.C. 501; 72 L.J. (P.C.) 115; 89 L.T. 374; 9
 Asp. M.L.C. 485.

Appeal by the plaintiffs from a decision of BARGRAVE DEANE, J.

The plaintiffs, the owners, master, and crew of the steam tug Simla, brought F an action for salvage services rendered to the Norwegian steamship Sarpen when she was ashore on Papa Stronsa, in the Orkneys, in April, 1915. The Simla had been requisitioned by the Admiralty under the Royal Proclamation of
 Aug. 3, 1914 (Transports and Auxiliaries), authorising

“ the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty . . . to requisition and take up
 . . . any British ship or British vessel as defined in the Merchant Shipping G Act, 1894, within the British Isles or the waters adjacent thereto, for such period of time as may be necessary, on condition that the owners of all ships and vessels so requisitioned shall receive payment for their use and for services rendered during their employment in the Government service . . . according to terms to be arranged as soon as possible after the said ship has been taken H up, either by mutual agreement between the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty and the owners, or, failing such agreement, by the award of a board of arbitration.”

No agreement had been come to between the Admiralty and the tug owners settling the terms of the engagement of the Simla until after the trial of the action before BARGRAVE DEANE, J., who held that, the Simla being in the same position as a King's ship, no claim for salvage services could be allowed I by s. 557 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which provides that no claim for salvage services by the commander or crew of any of Her Majesty's ships shall be adjudicated on without the consent of the Admiralty. In case there should be an appeal, he fixed the amount to be awarded for the salvage services rendered at £800. The plaintiffs appealed.

Dawson Miller, K.C., and Raeburn for the plaintiffs.
Stephens and J. B. Aspinall for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 5. The following judgments were read.

SWINFEN EADY, L.J.—The tug Simla rendered valuable salvage services to the Norwegian steamship Sarpen, a vessel laden with dry wood pulp, when the latter was on the rocks at Papa Stronsa, one of the Orkney Islands, in April, 1915. This action was brought by the owners, master, and crew of the tug against the Sarpen, her cargo and freight, to recover salvage. The judge decided that the Simla was a vessel in the service of the Crown, and in the position of a King's ship, and precluded by s. 557 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, from making any claim for salvage; and that the master and crew of the vessel were not entitled to have their claim for salvage services finally adjudicated on, unless the consent of the Admiralty to the prosecution of that claim was proved, which had not been done. He, therefore, held that the claim failed. In case there should be an appeal, the judge proceeded to consider what would be a proper amount to award for the salvage services rendered, if a claim could be maintained, and he fixed the amount at £500. The owners, master and crew of the tug appeal, and ask to have it determined that the ship was not, and ought not to be regarded as, a King's ship at the time when the services were rendered, and, accordingly, that the claim can be maintained, and that the consent of the Admiralty is not required for the due prosecution of the claim by the master and crew. The plaintiffs also contend that, if they are entitled to recover salvage, the sum of £500 determined by BARGRAVE DEANE, J., is inadequate compensation for services rendered.

In order to determine whether the tug is to be regarded as a King's ship, it is necessary to consider her position and the terms on which she had been acquired and was held by the British Admiralty when the salvage services were rendered. She was sent to Sheerness dock by her owners in response to a telegram from the dockyard authority of July 30, 1914, requesting that certain named tugs (not including the Simla) be dispatched to Sheerness forthwith, but, if not available, that tugs of similar description be dispatched; the plaintiffs in their reply admitted that the tug Simla was under requisition by the Admiralty, and, accordingly, the learned judge said that he accepted

"the position which both parties seem to agree to, that the requisition was duly effected, and when so requisitioned the Simla went to Sheerness, and then to Kirkwall Bay, and lay in the harbour there under the direction of the naval harbour master."

I treat the matter on the same footing as by agreement it was treated in the court below, and regard the tug Simla as requisitioned and taken up on the terms of the proclamation of Aug. 3, 1914. The proclamation, however, contains a recital that, owing to the urgency of the need, it is impossible to delay the employment of the vessels taken until the terms of engagement have been mutually agreed on, and it provides for terms being arranged as soon as possible after a ship has been taken up, either by mutual agreement between the Admiralty and the shipowner, or, failing such agreement, by the award of a board of arbitration. Since the trial of the action before BARGRAVE DEANE, J., an agreement has been come to between the Admiralty and the tug owners, settling the terms of the engagement of the tug Simla. By this agreement, the Admiralty are to pay an agreed sum per day for the hire of the tug; the rate is framed on the following conditions:—Owners are to pay wages and health insurance of the crew, to provide and pay for all stores and the necessary equipment for the proper and efficient working of the vessel, and to take marine risks on the vessel and crew. Admiralty to accept war risks on the vessel and crew and to provide coal. In the event of loss of time or prevention of a vessel working owing to deficiency of men or stores, defect, or damage, not due to a contingency coming under the category of war risks, payment of hire shall cease until she be again in an efficient state to resume her service, and the costs of repair of such defects or

A damage shall be an owner's charge. A charterparty to be issued later. These terms are retrospective and date back to July 30, 1914.

This court, having now before it the terms so settled, is in a much better position than BARGRAVE DEANE, J., was to determine whether the ship is to be deemed to be a ship belonging to His Majesty, within the meaning of s. 557 (1) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. By the terms of that sub-section,

B "Where salvage services are rendered by any ship belonging to Her Majesty or by the commander or crew thereof, no claim shall be allowed for any loss, damage, or risk caused to the ship or her stores, tackle, or furniture, or for the use of any stores or other articles belonging to Her Majesty, supplied in order to effect those services, or for any other expense or loss sustained by Her Majesty by reason of that service . . ."

C This provision is a re-enactment of s. 484 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. Where salvage services are rendered by a King's ship, no claim to salvage can be made in respect of the ship, but the commander and crew may prosecute a claim with the consent of the Admiralty (s. 557 (1) of the Act of 1894). Previous to this provision and the corresponding enactment in the Act of 1854, there was in force an order of the Board of Admiralty of Jan. 30, 1852, directing the officers of Her Majesty's ships not to claim reward for salvage services rendered to vessels in distress unless the service was one of real importance, or was accompanied with hazard: KENNEDY ON CIVIL SALVAGE (2nd Edn.), p. 113. The question is whether the Simla is to be considered a King's ship for the purpose of determining whether a claim for salvage can be made on behalf of the ship and her owners.

E In The Nile (1) salvage services were rendered by the Finisterre and the officers of H.M.S. Simoom and the Nile admitted liability for salvage and paid £1,000, which was accepted, and the only question actually raised was as to the apportionment of the amount, and whether Captain Peile was entitled to a share as well as the naval officers who actually assisted at the operations. In that case, the Finisterre had been chartered by the Government by a charter not demising the ship: all sea damage was at the risk of the owners of the ship, and the salvage services were outside the scope of the vessel's employment as a transport. SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE pointed out that the ship was never demised; and that there was no temporary transfer of her ownership to Her Majesty, and that her owners were, therefore, entitled to the ship's share of salvage remuneration. The inference from this is that, if there had been an actual demise of the Finisterre to the Admiralty, and if sea damage had been at the risk of the Admiralty, the ship would have been for the time being "a ship belonging to Her Majesty" within the meaning of s. 484 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854—now s. 557 of the Act of 1894. This is in accordance with the decision of the King's Bench in 1815 in Master, &c., of the Trinity House v. Clark (5), where LORD ELLENBOROUGH delivered the judgment of the court, which determined that, where the ship Britannia was under a time charter to the Crown which amounted to a demise of the ship, a temporary ownership in the vessel passed to the Crown. In Weir & Co. v. Union Steamship Co. (6) LORD DAVEY, referring to this case, said that it was decided on very special circumstances and could hardly be a precedent for any other. But the passage which follows indicates that, in his opinion, if the contract is one in which the ship is completely handed over to the charterers, to be navigated by them at their own risk and responsibility, there would be a transfer of temporary ownership. Certainly a ship may belong to a person as "owner" although such ownership may be only temporary: see The Lemington (3) (2 Asp. M.L.C. at p. 478); The Ripon City (4) ([1897] 2 P. at pp. 242, 244). In the case before us, however, it now appears that the tug Simla was taken by the Admiralty on the terms of the owners paying wages and health insurance of crew, providing and paying for all stores and the necessary equipment for the proper and efficient working of the vessel, and taking the marine risk on the vessel and crew. When, therefore, the Simla was rendering (with the permission of the naval authorities) the services for which salvage reward was claimed, it was the owners of the Simla and not the Admiralty who were incurring risks of sea damage and injury to the vessel and her crew, and the Admiralty were not at risk in the matter. A

Now that the facts have been more fully ascertained, I am of opinion that the Simla cannot be regarded as a King's ship when rendering the salvage services, and that the ship is not prevented from claiming ordinary salvage remuneration by the fact of the vessel's hiring to the Admiralty, nor do the commander and crew require the consent of the Admiralty to the prosecution of their claim. I observe that BARGRAVE DEANE, J., after holding that the vessel was in the service of the Crown, added that without the sanction of the Admiralty she could not claim any salvage reward for salvage services. But if the ship were a King's ship, no claim to salvage can be made on behalf of the ship, whether with or without the consent of the Admiralty; the claim must be limited to a claim by the commander and crew; it is this claim which requires the consent of the Admiralty for its prosecution in the case of a vessel belonging to His Majesty. B C

It may be urged that the settlement of the terms of hire between the Admiralty and the tug owners, come to since the trial of the action before BARGRAVE DEANE, J., although operating retrospectively, ought not to prejudice the defence of the Sarpen to the demand for salvage. But the terms on which the vessel was acquired by the Admiralty had been left open; prima facie a ship rendering services such as the Simla rendered to the Sarpen would be entitled to a salvage award; the burden of showing that the Simla was not so entitled was on the Sarpen; and if, at the trial, the terms of hire had not been sufficiently settled to determine the character and position of the Simla, the owners of the Sarpen might have applied for an adjournment of the hearing until either agreement or arbitration had determined whether the Simla was in the position of a King's ship. No adjournment, however, was asked for; the evidence before BARGRAVE DEANE, J., was quite insufficient to establish that the Simla was in the position of a vessel belonging to His Majesty; and the subsequent agreement shows that the Simla has not at any time since it was taken up acquired that character. It was also contended on behalf of the Sarpen that there could be no salvage award, as the services rendered were not voluntary on the part of the tug, since she had been directed by the naval officer in command at Kirkwall to proceed to the assistance of the Sarpen. But the services were rendered voluntarily as between the salvors and the saved, which is all that is material; the Simla owed no duty towards the Sarpen. In all cases of salvage by a King's ship, where the commander and crew are entitled to obtain a salvage award, they are acting under orders, given either in general instructions or by a superior officer in the particular instance. D E F G

With regard to the amount to be awarded, which BARGRAVE DEANE, J., assessed at £800, if this court should be of opinion that salvage could be recovered, I see no ground for differing from the learned judge on the question of amount. There does not appear to have been any misapprehension on his part as to the facts of the case, or any error in point of principle. In my judgment the appeal should be allowed, and £800 awarded to the salvors. H

PICKFORD, L.J.—This is an action of salvage brought by the owners, master and crew of the steam tug Simla against the owners of the steamship Sarpen, a Norwegian vessel, her cargo and freight, for services rendered while the "Sarpen was ashore on Papa Stronsa, in the Orkneys." The services are not denied, but the defendants allege that the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim salvage because they are prohibited from doing so by s. 557 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. This is not the form of the pleading, but it is the substantial question. It is also alleged that the services were not voluntary because they I

- A were rendered by the orders of the naval authorities. It may be as well to dispose of this point at once. It rests, in my opinion, on no sound basis. The test of voluntariness is only applicable as between the salvor and salvaged, and if the services be voluntary in relation to the salvaged—i.e., not rendered by reason of any obligation towards him—it is quite immaterial that the salvor has been ordered by someone who has control of his movements to render them.
- B To decide the main question, it is necessary to see in what way the Simla was employed at the time of the services. She was owned by Mr. Watkins and was placed at the disposal of the Government in consequence of two telegrams received on July 30, which requested certain named tugs or others of a similar description to be sent to Sheerness. The proclamation under which vessels were requisitioned was issued two or three days later, and it is admitted by the reply
- C that, at the time of the services, the Simla was under requisition, but it is denied that such requisition amounted to a demise of the tug or a transfer of ownership to His Majesty. So far as the facts were known at the trial and on the argument before us, they were that the owners were to be paid a monthly hire, the amount of which was not ascertained; that they provided and paid the master and crew and provided the stores and provisions, bunker coal being supplied by the
- D Admiralty. I think that the learned judge described the position correctly when he said that the tug was in sole employment of the Crown, which had actual discretion as to her use, and it was necessary to obtain the permission of the Admiralty authorities before she could go out and render salvage services. I cannot, however, agree with him when he says that under those circumstances, she could not claim any salvage reward for salvage services without the sanction
- E of the Admiralty. The sanction of the Admiralty has nothing to do with the claim of the owners of the tug; if they come within the provisions of s. 557 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, no claim can be made by them at all either with or without such sanction; if they do not come within the provisions, no such sanction is necessary. In order to defeat their claim, it must be shown that the Simla was a ship belonging to His Majesty within the meaning of that section.
- F The section is as follows: [HIS LORDSHIP read the section, and continued:] Probably the reason of the provision is that it is not considered right that risk or loss of property provided by the public should be paid for by a member of that public. It is true that this reason does not apply to risk and loss occasioned by services to foreigners, and it was contended before us that the section must be limited to services rendered to British ships or cargo, but I see no such
- G limitation in the section, and it was probably extended to foreign ships by the comity of nations. But to bring the salving vessel within the section she must belong to the Crown. It is not enough that she is chartered by the Crown, which has the sole directing power over her, and that she cannot render salvage services without the Crown's consent. She does not necessarily belong to the Crown in that case any more than a vessel under charter not by way of demise
- H to anyone else belongs to the charterer: see The Nile (1) and The Bertie (2), with which I agree. Those cases are not authorities which govern this case; the salving vessels were under charter as transports only and not hired for any purpose which the Crown required, and they were not, so far as I can tell, under requisition; but I think they are authorities, with which I agree, that the owner of a vessel is not excluded from the right to salvage because she is in the service
- I of the Crown and cannot render such services without its consent, and the services are rendered under the instructions of the naval authorities.

It is necessary to see if the fact of being under requisition makes any difference. In my opinion, it does not necessarily do so. I do not deny that there may be a requisition under such terms as to give the Crown the dominion as well as the control of the ship, and it may be that, in such a case, she may be said to belong to the Crown, although not in the ordinary sense belonging to it. But I am of the same opinion that I expressed in The Broadmayne (7) that the word "requisition" does not necessarily connote such a state of things: it means that the Crown has the right to require the services of the ship without the consent of the owner, but it does not define the terms on which the Crown may see fit to take those services. It is well known that some vessels are employed under requisition on terms of charterparties and some are not, that the terms of the charterparties are not always the same, and a case was mentioned at the Bar in which express terms were made entitling the tug so requisitioned to the benefit of salvage. The proclamation under which the ship is to be taken to be requisitioned seems to me to contemplate that all vessels will not be requisitioned on the same terms. It is as follows: [His Lordship read the proclamation.] It may very well be that the words "according to terms to be arranged" strictly and grammatically refer only to payment for services and compensation, but it is obvious that, in arranging such payment and compensation, it is necessary to look at the other terms of the hiring, e.g., whether the owner or the Crown pays the crew, on whom war and marine risks fall, and such matters, and, as I have pointed out, it is well known that the Crown does under requisition hire the services of ships on different terms as to such matters. The Crown cannot be forced by arbitration to accept any particular conditions, but it can and does agree to such conditions, and then the only question for arbitration is, given those conditions, what is the proper amount to be paid.

In my opinion, when there is a hiring under requisition as in this case, on terms to be settled after the hiring, the question of whether the requisitioned ship is a ship belonging to His Majesty cannot be ascertained until those terms are settled. I do not think in this case there was a taking over of the absolute dominion of the vessel, subject to being afterwards altered at the will of the Crown, but a taking over on terms which the Crown had not then settled, and which, when settled, might or might not confer such dominion. In this case there were not, in my opinion, materials before the court on which it could come to the conclusion that the Simla was a ship belonging to His Majesty, and I think, therefore, that the plaintiffs are entitled to an award. On Mr. Watkins' evidence the tug belonged to him and was entitled to salvage reward, and to show that the Crown was employing her under terms which were not ascertained was not sufficient to displace that prima facie case. It is to be noticed that the Admiralty have in no way interfered; in fact, so far as any intelligible meaning can be given to the communications from the Transport Department, they seem to be willing that the plaintiffs should recover salvage so long as it is not against Crown property, and the defendants have not taken the trouble to obtain any evidence from the Admiralty as to anything. I think, therefore, that on the evidence before the learned judge the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed. The defendants would, I think, have been entitled to object to judgment being given against them while the terms were unsettled and to ask for an adjournment until it was decided what they were, but they did not do so. We have, however, since the case was argued, had sent to us in substance the terms agreed between the plaintiffs and the Government. They are finally to be embodied in a charterparty, and that has not yet been done, but they have been accepted by the parties as substantially correct, and we have heard argument on them on that basis. Those terms have been read. They are, in effect, a hiring by the Government, which is not a demise of the vessel, and leave the marine risk to fall on the owners, and they take effect from July, 1914.

The result is that, when the salvage services were rendered, the tug was employed under terms which did not constitute her a ship belonging to His Majesty, and, therefore, her owners, master, and crew were entitled to recover a salvage reward. There remains to be considered the amount of the award. The learned judge assessed it at £800 in case the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, and they have appealed on the ground that the amount was insufficient. This court is always loth to interfere with the amount of salvage awarded, even where it might possibly not take exactly the same view as the court below, and I do

A not see in this case sufficient grounds for interfering with the discretion of BARGRAVE DEANE, J.

BANKES, L.J.—This is an appeal from a decision of BARGRAVE DEANE, J., who decided against the claim of the owners, master and crew of the steam tug Simla for salvage services rendered to the Norwegian steamship Sarpen.
B The decision proceeded entirely on the ground that the Simla was a “ship belonging to His Majesty”, and that the claim of the owners must, therefore, be disallowed, and that, so far as the claim of the master and crew was concerned, the consent of the Admiralty not having been obtained for the prosecution of the claim, that claim must be disallowed also.

C The rule restricting any claim for salvage by a vessel belonging to His Majesty appears to be of very old standing. It was referred to in The Iodine (8) by Mr. LUSHINGTON ((1844), 3 Notes of Cases, at p. 141), in the following terms:

“Observations have been made in the argument respecting one of Her Majesty’s vessels preferring a claim of this nature. I thought that the question had long ago been settled; for from the very earliest date of my experience as an advocate, as far back as 1808, I thought the opinion expressed by LORD STOWELL had decided this question. I apprehend that where assistance is rendered by any vessel belonging to Her Majesty, the following principles are to be applied: that where a service is done, and there is personal risk and labour, Her Majesty’s officers and seamen are entitled to be rewarded precisely in a similar manner, on the same principles, and in the same degree, as where any other persons render that service. But, with regard to the use of the vessel, a different consideration would apply, and a less remuneration would always be made, on account of the vessel being the property of the country, and the property of the owners under these circumstances never being risked.”

Ten years later the rule as extended was incorporated in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (s. 484 and s. 485), and is now to be found in s. 557 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. It has never been expressly decided what constitutes a vessel belonging to His Majesty so as to render the owners incapable of claiming for salvage services. The question can, of course, only arise in relation to vessels engaged in Government service and privately owned, or owned by the Government of some colony or dependency. The question was discussed in Cargo ex Woosung (9) and The Dalhousie (10) with reference to vessels belonging to the Bombay Government. The most instructive case on the point to which we have been referred is, I think, that of The Nile (1). That case raised the question whether the owners of the steamship Finisterre were entitled to salvage. The vessel was at the time engaged under charter in Her Majesty’s transport service. In dealing with the question SIR R. PHILLIMORE says this (L.R. 4 A. & E. at p. 455):

H “Having reference to these documents, I am of opinion that the Finisterre was never demised—indeed, it was not so contended—to Her Majesty; that there was no temporary transfer of her ownership to Her Majesty; and that her owners are entitled (a point faintly, if at all, contested) to her share of salvage remuneration. I think, however, that she was so far under the control of the senior naval officer, Captain Peile, that on the one hand she could not have acted as salvor without his permission, though, on the other hand, she could not have been ordered by him to perform this service—which was not, in my judgment, within the terms of the charter.”

I In this passage SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE clearly indicates that, in his opinion, if there had been a temporary transfer of ownership the Finisterre would have become for the time being, and for the purposes of the Merchant Shipping Act and the earning of salvage, a vessel belonging to Her Majesty. In this view I agree; and it is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the cases, to several of which we have been referred, in which it has been held that, for certain purposes, a vessel may be considered as having a dual ownership—the ownership of what I may call the actual owner, and the ownership of the temporary owner. A

In the present case, there is no question that the actual owners of the Simla are the plaintiffs in the action. The only question is whether the requisitioning of the Simla by the Government placed her for the time being in the temporary ownership of the Government so as to constitute her a vessel belonging to His Majesty, and as such disentitled to earn salvage. I should entertain no doubt at all on this subject had the requisition been a formal unqualified exercise of the Royal Prerogative. Such an exercise of the prerogative must, I think, be interpreted as a taking over of a vessel in the fullest possible sense, which would include the claim to exercise and the exercising of the rights of the owner to the full extent. The difficulty in the present case arises from the circumstances under which the Simla was taken for Government service, and the terms of the proclamation of Aug. 3, 1914. The only documents which passed between the Government and the owners before and in reference to the taking of the Simla were two telegrams, both dated July 30, in which the Admiralty requested the owners to send certain named tugs or tugs of similar description to Sheerness. In pursuance of this request, the Simla was sent with others, and she has since been continuously retained in Government employ. For the purposes of this action, the parties are agreed that the Simla must be treated as having been requisitioned under the proclamation, although no warrant was ever issued for that purpose. It becomes, therefore, very material to consider the terms of the proclamation. The proclamation confers on the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty the power to requisition and take up for the service of His Majesty any ship as defined by the proclamation for such period of time as may be necessary, but only on condition that the owner shall receive payment for the use, and for services rendered, during the employment in Government service, and compensation for loss and damage thereby occasioned according to terms to be arranged as soon as possible after the ship has been taken up, either by mutual agreement or by arbitration. This language appears to me to give the Admiralty a wide discretion in arranging terms with the owner of a requisitioned vessel. The payment to be made is to depend on the use to which the vessel is put, or the services which she is required to render, and the terms of employment may, therefore, extend from the full requisitioning of the vessel on terms at least as extensive as a demise of the vessel to the mere occasional employment of the vessel to render some specified and intermittent service. The language of the proclamation appears to me to indicate that it was intended to provide for the possibility of there being cases in which the continuous use of the vessel might not be required, but that she might be required to render certain services only at stated periods, leaving her free for her owner's purposes at other times, and that other terms might be agreed on which might affect the amount of compensation which an owner could properly claim. As an instance, I cannot think of a better illustration than the present, where conceivably it may be in the interest of everyone that the Simla should be at liberty to undertake services for reward if and when the Admiralty authorities thought it right to give her permission to undertake them. If this was permitted, the rate of payment to the owners would presumably be less than if it was not permitted, while the Admiralty would be free to give or refuse permission as it suited their purpose. This question of the right to charge for salvage services must necessarily, as it seems to me, come up for settlement if and whenever the terms of payment are discussed between the Admiralty and the owners of the requisitioned tug. In the present case, when the matter was before the Admiralty Court the question of the tug's position and the terms of payment had not come up for discussion. I certainly am not prepared to assume and I do not think that the learned judge was right in assuming either that the effect of a requisition under the proclamation was ipso facto to put the Simla into the class of a ship "belonging to His Majesty," or that the terms which would be eventually mutually agreed

- A or settled by arbitration must necessarily involve a transfer of the temporary ownership to the Crown. During the argument before this court, counsel for the plaintiffs mentioned the fact that, since the case was before the Admiralty Court, terms had been agreed between the owners and the Admiralty. We were not told the terms at the time, but the court has been furnished at its own request with a copy of the correspondence which has passed and counsel have been
- B further heard on it. It now appears that one of the terms which have been agreed is that marine risks are for the owner and war risks only for the Crown.

- In my opinion, this agreement concludes the question as to the real position of the Simla with regard to salvage while she remains under requisition, and that it is no longer possible to contend that she was at the time the salvage services were rendered a ship belonging to His Majesty. Apart from the question of the
- C agreement, however, the evidence before the learned judge was not, in my opinion, such as to justify a finding that the Simla was at the time the salvage services were rendered in the position of "a ship belonging to His Majesty." I regard her at that time as only conditionally requisitioned—that is to say that she was requisitioned on terms which might or might not place her in the position of "a ship belonging to His Majesty"; but, as the terms had not at
- D that time even come under discussion, she had not become fixed with the disabilities, so far as salvage services are concerned, of one of His Majesty's ships. Under these circumstances, I consider that the appeal on the question of liability should succeed. The amount fixed by the learned judge is, I consider, low, but not so low as to justify any interference by this court.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Clarkson & Co.; Thomas Cooper & Co.

[Reported by L. F. C. DARBY, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

